Verse no. 6/50—With bags made of emptied or hollowed out stomach hung around their shoulders, intestines used as a sling to tie them, and hollowed (scooped) out skulls used as pots (to collect blood), numerous groups of Joginis (spirits who roam battle-fields and drink blood) appear to have taken a ritualistic bath in the river of war, and are currently sitting on the banks of the river-of-blood to rest a while like so many hermitresses. They are kneading fresh flesh with blood and eating it like 'Sattu' (baked gram flour which is kneaded into dough with water and eaten as a meal with salt, spices, chillies etc.), while some spirits and ghosts dilute it with blood and drink it in a semi-fluid form.

Tulsidas says that the Lord of ghosts, phantoms and spirits called 'Bhutnath', accompanied by ghosts and phantoms, is laughing merrily hand-in-hand with his companions. [Such a horrific and blood-curdling scene of the battle-field is indeed remarkable in portrayal.]

राम सरासन तें चले तीर रहे न सरीर, हड़ावरि फूटी।
 रावन धीर न पीर गनी, लखि लै कर खप्पर जोगिनी जूटी॥
 श्रोनित-छीट छटानि जटे तुलसी प्रभु सोहैं महा छबि छूटी।
 मानो मरकत-सैल बिसालमें फैलि चलीं बर बीरबहूटी॥ 51॥

51. rāma sarāsana tēm calē tīra rahē na sarīra, haṛāvari phūṭīm.
 rāvana dhīra na pīra ganī, lakhi lai kara khappara jōginī jūṭīm..
 śrōnita-chīṭa chaṭāni jaṭē tulasī prabhu sōhaiīm mahā chabi chūṭīm.
 mānō marakkata-saila bisālamēm phaili calīm bara bīrabahūṭīm..51..

Verse no. 6/51—The arrows shot from Lord Ram's bow do not stop anywhere; they penetrate the bones of Ravana and escape from the other side of his body. Still, the brave and courageous Ravana pays no heed to the pain (caused by this severe injury).

Seeing blood sprouting from his body, the blood-drinking and thirsty Joginis gathered around him with overturned skulls as bowls to collect the blood (1).

Tulsidas says that his Lord Sri Ram, smeared with drops of blood (of the enemy) looked marvelous in the battle-field. He resembled the huge mountain known as Markat on which beautiful deep red creeping insects have spread (2).

-----**-----

Chapter 15

The First Round of Battle with Meghnad;

The Fainting of Laxman & his Subsequent Revival.

On the second day of the war, when Meghanad got the news in the morning that the monkey and bear army has once again surrounded the fort and a fierce battle between them and the defending demon forces was underway, he decided to personally lead his troops from the front to launch a fierce counter-offensive. So he descended from the fort and entered the battle-field to the accompaniment of war music, hitting at the Lord's army with extreme ferocity and anger. In the battle that followed, Meghanad showed his many skills of warfare, including use of illusions to mislead the enemy, as he dispersed his opponents and made them flee in utter despair.

Laxman too joined the battle and led his forces from the front. By-and-by, the two great warriors, Laxman and Meghanad, faced each other for a showdown. In the duel that followed between the two, Meghanad was fast losing ground and was on the verge of total rout when he shot a powerful missile at Laxman, at which the latter fainted and fell down unconscious on the ground.

It was evening time, and the two armies halted the battle for the day. As they regrouped in their respective camps for the night, it was discovered that Laxman was not there. Meanwhile, Hanuman found Laxman lying unconscious in the battle-field, so he picked him up and brought him to Lord Ram. Though the Lord initially grieved for Laxman very gravely and in a most remorseful way, but he soon recovered himself and decided to take some action in order to revive his brother, instead of just wailing fruitlessly for him like a weak-hearted person, for the Lord realized that it is, after all, a war, and in a war one cannot expect that everything would go favourably his way, for there are bound to be ups and downs during its course, they are bound to be some reverses alongside successes, and only those who have the courage, wit, perseverance, presence of mind, resilience and forbearance in the face of adversity have a chance to emerge victorious.

The elderly bear chieftain by the name of Jamvant suggested that a medicine man named Sushen be brought from the city of Lanka, for he was an expert and would be able to tell how to revive Laxman by administering some medicinal herbs. Hanuman was dispatched to bring Sushen, and he immediately brought him in. On the advice of the doctor, Hanuman was sent by Lord Ram to the northern mountains to bring the desired herb. Meanwhile, when Ravana heard that Hanuman was on his way to bring some herb that would revive Laxman, he sent one of the demons named Kalnemi to intervene and stop Hanuman, by either capturing him or killing him. Kalnemi, however, was no match against Hanuman, and when he was subsequently discovered he was immediately killed by the latter.

When finally Hanuman reached the northern mountains, he could not decide as to which was the correct herb he ought to take back; so he uprooted the part of the mountain that he determined was rich with herbs, and flew back with it to the camp of Lord Ram at Lanka.

Sushen administered the needed herb, and Laxman was brought back to life. When this news reached Ravana, he was filled with abject depression; he beat his head and thumped his chest in dejection as if he had half lost the war already. Earlier when he had learnt that his son Meghanad had done a marvelous thing by making Laxman fall, Ravana had rejoiced and felicitated his son, but this sudden and unexpected turn of events marking the revival of Laxman took him by surprise, leading to him becoming pale and gloomy as if misfortune stared right on his face.

Lord Ram loved Laxman most dearly, even more fondly than his own life. If Laxman had died, Lord Ram would have lost the war because he would have been so overcome with excess of grief and sorrow, especially in the context of his already existing grief over the loss of his wife Sita to which the loss of Laxman would have added newer wound, that he would not have been able to fight the war with the necessary enthusiasm and vigour needed to win with a mental state clouded with gloomy thoughts of sorrow, lamentation and grief at the loss of dear ones.

Ravana had hoped for it, but luckily for Lord Ram, and unluckily for Ravana, the fiat of fate and the writ of destiny had something different ordained for the demon king as was evident in Laxman's coming back to life and regaining his full vigour. Ravana felt crestfallen and undone.

To read these episodes in this Chapter no. 15, we shall divide it into the following four Sections:

Section 15.1: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 49—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 62

Section 15.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 65-86; Canto 6, verse nos. 1-63; and Canto 7, verse nos. 1-41

Section 15.3: Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 5-15

Section 15.4: Kavitawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 52-55

That said, now let us start our reading.

Section 15.1: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 49—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 62

दो०. मेघनाद सुनि श्रवन अस गढु पुनि छेंका आइ । उतर्यो बीर दुर्ग तें सन्मुख चलयो बजाइ ॥ ४९ ॥

dōhā.

mēghanāda suni śravana asa gaṛhu puni chēṅkā ā'i.
utaryō bīra durga tēm sanmukha calyō bajā'i. 49.

When Meghanad (the valiant son of Ravana) heard that the monkeys and bears have once again surrounded the fort and have laid siege to it, he got down from the fort to the accompaniment of beating war-drums (to announce to the enemy that he is coming), and went to face the enemy force formations at the front¹. (Doha no. 49)

[Note—¹Till this point of time, all earlier fighting had taken place inside the walls of the fort—because the demon warriors were so scared of the invading army of monkeys and bears that they did not dare to open the giant gates of the fort, forcing their enemy to leap over its great walls and engage in hand-to-hand battles right inside the city of Lanka. As we have read, this caused widespread panic and devastation in Lanka. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 41; Chaupai line nos. 2-4 that precede Doha no. 42; Doha no. 43 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede it; Doha no. 44 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede it; and Doha no. 45.}]

Meghanad was extremely peeved at this cowardly behaviour of his demon warriors. So now he decided to take the battle to the field opposite the fort where he would directly face his chief adversaries such as Lord Ram, his brother Laxman, and Vibhishana whom Meghanad regarded as a traitor and betrayer of his race. By taking the war to the battle-field outside the fort, any further destruction of Lanka and damage to the fort would at least be prevented.

Once the gigantic gates of the fort of Lanka were opened and the first battle was fought outside it with Meghanad leading his demon troops, the course of the war changed in as much as the rest of the bloody war was fought in the plains opposite the city.

It is also believed that the battle with Meghanad happened during 'Pushya Nakshatra', i.e. during the time when the asterism known as Pushya was dominant.]

चौ०. कहँ कोसलाधीस द्वौ भ्राता । धन्वी सकल लोक बिख्याता ॥ १ ॥
कहँ नल नील दुबिद सुग्रीवा । अंगद हनूमंत बल सींवा ॥ २ ॥
कहाँ बिभीषनु भ्राताद्रोही । आजु सबहि हठि मारउँ ओही ॥ ३ ॥

caupā'i.

kahaṁ kōsalādhīsa dvau bhrātā. dhanvī sakala lōka bikhyātā. 1.
kahaṁ nala nīla dubida sugrīvā. āṅgada hanūmanta bala sīnvā. 2.
kahāṁ bibhīṣanu bhrātādrōhī. āju sabahi haṭhi mārā'uṁ ōhī. 3.

Meghanad thundered diabolically: 'Where is the Lord of Kaushal (Lord Ram); where are the two brothers (i.e. Lord Ram and Laxman) who are famed all over the world for their skill with the bow (i.e. are known to be famous archers)? [I have come here to challenge them; where are they; why don't they come out now in the open before me?] (1)

Say, where are Nala, Neela, Dwivid, Sugriv; where is Angad and Hanuman who call themselves as extremely valiant? [Why, where are they now? Let them show their faces to me; I have come to meet them in the battle-field. Why are they hiding?] (2)

And where is the traitor Vibhishan who has betrayed his own brother (Ravana) and turned hostile towards him?

Come you, one and all; today I shall slay all of them at one go.' (3)

[Note—¹How did Meghanad know the names whom he lists now to come forward to meet the challenge? Here's the answer:

Earlier when the invading monkeys had raised war cries, they had done so in the name of Lord Ram, Laxman and Sugriv—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 39.

A little later, when the demons pushed back the monkeys with a vicious counter-attack, making them flee in terror, they had called for help, and at that time the retreating monkeys called out the names of Angad, Hanuman, Nala, Neela and Dwivid—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 43.

The name of Vibhishan, who was Meghanad's uncle, was of course already known to him.

So this is how Meghanad got to know the names of the chiefs in the enemy camp.]

अस कहि कठिन बान संधाने । अतिसय क्रोध श्रवन लगि ताने ॥ ४ ॥

सर समूह सो छाड़ै लागा । जनु सपच्छ धावहिं बहु नागा ॥ ५ ॥

जहँ तहँ परत देखिअहिं बानर । सन्मुख होइ न सके तेहि अवसर ॥ ६ ॥

asa kahi kaṭhina bāna sandhānē. atisaya krōdha śravana lagi tānē. 4.
sara samūha sō chāṛai lāgā. janu sapaccha dhāvahiṁ bahu nāgā. 5.
jahaṁ tahaṁ parata dēkhi'ahiṁ bānara. sanmukha hō'i na sakē tēhi avasara. 6.

With this formidable challenge, he (Meghanad) raised his bow and angrily pulled its string tight, stretching it right back to his ears. (4)

Then he shot a volley of abominable arrows that flew so fast and fierce, with a hissing sound, that they appeared to be winged snakes dashing forward towards their prey. (5)

Everywhere one could see there were monkeys falling to the ground, for none could face him (Meghanad)¹. (6)

[Note—¹To wit, the volley of sharp arrows shot angrily by Meghanad hit the front ranks of the monkey army, felling countless warriors. The arrows were shot so rapidly that none of the monkey warriors had the least chance to lunge at Meghanad and catch hold of him.]

जहँ तहँ भागि चले कपि रीछा । बिसरी सबहि जुद्ध कै ईछा ॥ ७ ॥
सो कपि भालु न रन महँ देखा । कीन्हैसि जेहि न प्रान अवसेषा ॥ ८ ॥ jahaṁ tahaṁ bhāgi calē kapi rīchā. bisarī sabahi jud'dha kai īchā. 7.

sō kapi bhālu na rana mahaṁ dēkhā. kīnhēsī jēhi na prāna avasēṣā. 8.

Under the fierce onslaught launched by Meghanad, the terrified monkeys and bears ran helter-skelter everywhere; they were so sore alarmed and affright, and so much scared out of their wits by the ferocity of the attack, as well as the sight of so many of their numbers falling down to the ground, either as wounded or as dead, that the fleeing warriors lost all enthusiasm and courage to get involved in the battle any further. (7)

Not a single monkey or bear warrior was seen in the battlefield who was not scared for his life due to Meghanad's brutal attack.

[To wit, all those who remained alive lost their zeal to fight as they became very concerned about their own survival after witnessing the fate of their companions, most of whom were lying wounded or dead on the ground. The result was that, for the time being, the rout of the monkeys and bears was complete.] (8)

दो०. दस दस सर सब मारेसि परे भूमि कपि बीर । सिंहनाद करि गर्जा मेघनाद बल धीर ॥ ५० ॥

dōhā.

dasa dasa sara saba mārēsi parē bhūmi kapi bīra.
simhanāda kari garjā mēghanāda bala dhīra. 50.

[The ferocity of Meghanad's attack and the rapidity with which he shot his arrows can be gauged by the fact that—] He shot and wounded every monkey and bear warrior with around ten arrows each¹, and the result was all of them fell mortally wounded in the battle-field.

Having decimated his enemy, the brave, courageous, strong and valiant Meghanad (mēghanāda bala dhīra) roared thunderously, in triumph, like a lion (who has boldly entered and fearlessly attacked a group of wild animals, killing some, and making others flee in terror). (Doha no. 50)

[Note—¹By saying that each monkey and bear warrior was hit by “ten arrows” it is meant that Meghanad shot countless arrows at them; the arrows rained down over the monkeys and bears like so many pieces of hail-stones falling upon them from the sky during a fierce hail-storm, that there was no count of how many pellets of hail hit each warrior. The arrows fell so rapidly and thickly that they resembled a large piece of blanket-of-needles descending from the sky to cover the entire ground of the battlefield, virtually suffocating every single warrior on the ground and taking the breath out of them.

Another significance of the number “ten” is that the arrows hit every single organ of the body of the monkey and bear warriors, making them grievously injured and wailing woefully in pain. It ought to be noted here that there are five organs of perception and five organs of action in the body of an individual, bringing the total to ten organs.

The five organs of perception and the five organs of action, with their corresponding objects, are the following: ‘ear’ is concerned with hearing; ‘eye’ with seeing; ‘tongue’ with tasting; ‘skin’ with touch; ‘nose’ with smelling; ‘mouth’ with speaking; ‘leg’ with walking; ‘hand’ with receiving and giving and doing deeds; ‘excretory’ with elimination of waste from the body; and ‘genitals’ with procreation.

So therefore, every pore of the body of the warriors was made to bleed; their bodies were filled with wounds.]

चौ०. देखि पवनसुत कटक बिहाला । क्रोधवंत जनु धायउ काला ॥ १ ॥

महासैल एक तुरत उपारा । अति रिस मेघनाद पर डारा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dēkhi pavanasuta kaṭaka bihālā. krōdhavanta janu dhāya'u kālā. 1.

mahāsaila ēka turata upārā. ati risa mēghanāda para ḍārā. 2.

When the son of the wind god (“pavanasuta”; Hanuman) observed that the army was in a dire strait and panicky, he immediately dashed forward angrily, as if the god of death had himself lunged forward, filled with vengeance¹. (1)

He immediately uprooted a huge mountain (i.e. a gigantic boulder or rock) and threw it on Meghanad very wrathfully, with full force (in order to crush him underneath it)². (2)

[Note—¹It is believed that Hanuman was a manifestation of Lord Shiva’s form known as ‘Rudra’. This form of the Lord is his angry form, and Shiva assumes this form at the time of conclusion of creation when, at the time of doomsday, hellfire and brimstone burns and consumes everything in this world. This form of Lord Shiva is also synonym of death, and hence represents the ‘god of death’ known as Kaal. This is why Hanuman’s angry rush at Meghanad is compared to the rush of the god of death, known as Kaal, in order to punish the demon prince.

²This is the third confrontation between Hanuman and Meghand.

The first occurred when Hanuman had come to Lanka to search for Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 20.

The second occasion was in Lanka when Meghanad was defending the western gates of the fort of Lanka and the monkey army was unable to breach it. At that time too the monkeys had fled in terror when the demons had launched a fierce counter-attack on them. Hanuman leapt on the fort and attacked Meghanad with a huge mountain-like rock, breaking the demon prince’s chariot, killing his charioteer, and kicking Meghanad in the chest, making him swoon and fall to the ground. This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 43.

This is the third occasion, and it is presently being described between Doha no. 49—to Chaupai line 4 that precedes Doha no. 51.]

आवत देखि गयउ नभ सोई । रथ सारथी तुरग सब खोई ॥ ३ ॥
बार बार पचार हनुमाना । निकट न आव मरमु सो जाना ॥ ४ ॥

āvata dēkhi gaya'u nabha sō'ī. ratha sārathī turaga saba khō'ī. 3.
bāra bāra pacāra hanumānā. nikaṭa na āva maramu sō jānā. 4.

When he (Meghanad) saw that Hanuman was coming to him with a mighty rock ready to be hurled at him, he (having had a bitter experience of such an attack by Hanuman and its serious consequences) immediately ascended to the sky, abandoning his chariot, charioteer and horses in great haste¹. (3)

Hanuman challenged him repeatedly to come down and face him like a bold warrior, but Meghanad was overcome with sore affright as he recalled the bitter experience he had had of a similar attack by Hanuman on an earlier occasion² that he durst not come near. (4)

[Note—¹Meghanad saw it coming; he had witnessed such an attack by Hanuman previously when he had managed to survive by the breadth of his hair. It happened during their second confrontation near the western gates of the fort of Lanka when Hanuman had similarly dumped a huge mountain-like rock on Meghanad, breaking his war chariot and killing his charioteer, and when Meghanad fell to the ground, kicking him viciously in the chest so furiously that he swooned and became unconscious. Another charioteer, driving a reserve chariot, had taken the seriously wounded Meghanad back into the fort of Lanka. This episode is narrated in: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 43.

²Meghanad could not forget it, and the mere sight of Hanuman furiously dashing towards him with a gigantic rock in his hand, ready to smash the light of life out of him, chilled Meghanad, and sucked the courage and the wit out of him. So he left his chariot instantly to escape from being crushed with it when the rock hit hard, with a great velocity. Meghanad managed to jump into the air in the nick of time, just at the moment the rock came down heavily upon his chariot, managing to save himself by the width of his skin.

Meghanad therefore dared not come on the ground to face Hanuman physically; so he decided instead to use the many magical tricks he knew from a distance, from the safe environ of the sky itself, so that if anything went awry, he would be able to escape quickly.]

रघुपति निकट गयउ घननादा । नाना भँति करेसि दुर्बादा ॥ ५ ॥
अज सज आयुध सब डारे । कौतुकहीं प्रभु काटि निवारे ॥ ६ ॥ raghupati nikaṭa gaya'u ghananādā. nānā bhāṁti karēsi durbādā. 5.

astra sastra āyudha saba ḍārē. kautukahīm prabhu kāṭi nivārē. 6.

[In order to divert Hanuman's attention—] He, who could thunder like a cloud ("ghananādā"; i.e. Meghanad), went to the place where Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) was, and hurled many kinds of abuses and insulting words at the Lord. (5)

After venting his verbal ire on the Lord, Meghanad shot many kinds of weapons at him¹. The Lord, who was an expert in the art of use of weaponry during warfare, easily neutralised all his weapons as if it was a mere game for him. (6)

[Note—¹The weapons used by Meghanad were of many kinds, falling under three chief categories—viz. one that was shot like a missile, e.g. an arrow, one that was thrown like a spear or a lance, and one that was hand-held and used directly, such as a battle-axe and a sword.

Meghanad used all of them simultaneously in order to overwhelm his enemy, Lord Ram. He probably was unaware that Lord Ram was a trained warrior belonging to the Kshatriya race, a race that is by birth a martial race. Meghanad also had no information how the Lord had easily neutralised such attacks, not by one or two demon warriors but by an entire army of ferocious and blood-hungry demons on earlier occasions, so an attack by an individual demon was merely a sport for Lord Ram. There are previous occasions which we recall when Lord Ram had single-handedly overcome such ferocious attacks by angry demons.

One such prominent occasion was when Lord Ram was attacked by the vicious army of Marich and Subahu while the Lord was protecting the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 210.

The other significant occasion was when Khar and Dushan attacked the Lord with their army of ferocious demons after their sister Supernakha was punished by the Lord for her pervert behaviour—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20-a.]

देखि प्रताप मूढ़ खिसिआना । करै लाग माया बिधि नाना ॥ ७ ॥

जिमि कोउ करै गरुड़ सैं खेला । डरपावै गहि स्वल्प सपेला ॥ ८ ॥

dēkhi pratāpa mūṛha khisi'ānā. karai lāga māyā bidhi nānā. 7.
jimi kō'u karai garuṛa saim khēlā. ḍarapāvai gahi svalpa sapēlā. 8.

The stupid fellow (Meghanad) felt very frustrated when he observed the immense skills of the Lord (i.e. in the way he had neutralised all the weapons and prevented any of them from harming him), and so he (Meghanad) decided to employ the many magical tricks he knew, by using which he could create various kinds of illusions. (7)

It was like the case of a foolish man trying to tease Garud (the mount of Lord Vishnu who relishes devouring serpents) by holding a small snake in his hand and showing it to the giant bird (Garud), trying to shoo him away with the snake¹. (8)

[Note—¹Garud, the legendary Eagle who is the celestial mount of Lord Vishnu, can easily snap and gobble up all species of serpents, no matter how large and poisonous the reptile is. So it is ridiculously foolish to scare away Garud by showing him a small serpent.

Similarly, it is so utterly foolish for Meghanad in showing his weapons as well as his magical tricks to Lord Ram, not knowing that the Lord was a Master of all such small and cheap tricks, as he is the Supreme Lord of this creation who has himself created all tricks in existence. To wit, what weapons and tricks Meghanad used against Lord Ram were but a small part, a very small and limited fraction, of the vast numbers of weapons and magical tricks that the maverick supreme Creator had created as a part of his vast empire that is known as the universe.]

दो०. जासु प्रबल माया बस सिव बिरंचि बड़ छोट ।

ताहि दिखावड़ निसिचर निज माया मति खोट ॥ ५१ ॥

dōhā.

jāsu prabala māyā basa siva birañci baṛa chōṭa.
tāhi dikhāva'i niscara nija māyā mati khōṭa. 51.

Forsooth, the Lord (Ram, the Supreme Being) whose Maya (powers to create illusions and delusions) is so powerful and omnipotent that all the powers and skills possessed by Lord Shiva and the creator Brahma taken together are dwarfed in its comparison, so much so that they are perpetually under the grand spell of the Lord's Maya¹, the demon prince (Meghanad) is so immensely dumb-headed that he was showing his cheap tricks to that same Lord²! (Doha no. 51)

[Note—¹A similar idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, (i) Baal Kand, Doha no. 140; (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 6; (iii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 22; and (iv) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 71.

²To wit, it was an extremely stupid thought and an ignorant behaviour of Meghanad to even imagine that he could stun Lord Ram with his magical tricks and weapons. But had he been not that foolish as he obviously was in the first place, he would not have wasted his energy and time even in attempting to fool Lord Ram with his stupid acts; on the contrary, he would have thought himself very honoured and privileged to have the chance to welcome the Lord, who had come calling right at his doorstep, and offer him his respect and tribute.

Why Meghanad alone; if his father Ravana had this kind of wisdom and knowledge, the savage war could have been avoided and the demon race could have been spared annihilation. But Destiny had destined things differently for them and their race, and no amount of preaching would bring light to this ill-fated race that was destined to doom and destruction like a twig which is involuntarily sucked up, spun and taken away to oblivion by a strong wind during a violent storm.]

चौ०. नभ चढ़ि बरष बिपुल अंगारा । महि ते प्रगट होहिं जलधारा ॥ १ ॥

नाना भाँति पिसाच पिसाची । मारु काटु धुनि बोलहिं नाची ॥ २ ॥
 बिष्टा पूय रुधिर कच हाड़ा । बरषड़ कबहुँ उपल बहु छाड़ा ॥ ३ ॥
 बरषि धूरि कीन्हेसि अँधिआरा । सूझ न आपन हाथ पसारा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

nabha caḍhi baraṣa bipula aṅgārā. mahi tē pragaṭa hōhim jaladhārā. 1.
 nānā bhānti pisāca pisācī. māru kātu dhuni bōlahim nācī. 2.
 biṣṭā pūya rudhira kaca hārā. baraṣa'i kabahuṁ upala bahu chārā. 3.
 baraṣi dhūri kīnhēsi aṁdhi'ārā. sūjha na āpana hātha pasārā. 4.

[Having failed to have any influence of his dirty tricks on Lord Ram, Meghanad changed his tactic; now he decided instead to attack the monkeys and bears spread all over the battle-field. So, what did he do?¹]

He (Meghanad) went up in the sky and employed his magical powers to create a scene of doomsday (to terrify the army of monkeys and bears) by showering a large quantity of fireballs on the ground below, and at the same time created an illusion of water gushing out in large spouts from crevices formed on the earth. (1)

Various denominations of phantoms and hobgoblins, both males and females, began their death-dance on the battle-field, with blood-curdling shrieks calling for killing and chopping of warriors. (2)

From the sky there rained down all sorts of garbage, stinking slush and other abhorable things on the ground; sometimes it was a rain of excreta, mucous, blood, hairs and bones, and at other times it was a hail of sharp stones and raining of hot ash. (3)

He created a virtual dust-storm so thick and heavy that a dark cloud covered the sky and blocked all sunlight, causing such a thick blanket of darkness to form all around the battle-field that one could not see one's own hands. (4)

[Note—¹Meghanad had earlier assured his father Ravana that he would perform such miraculous deeds in the battle-field the next day that the like of which had never been witnessed by anyone ever—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 49.

So now he was carrying out his promise.]

कपि अकुलाने माया देखें । सब कर मरन बना एहि लेखें ॥ ५ ॥
 कौतुक देखि राम मुसुकाने । भए सभीत सकल कपि जाने ॥ ६ ॥
 एक बान काटी सब माया । जिमि दिनकर हर तिमिर निकाया ॥ ७ ॥ कृपादृष्टि कपि भालु बिलोके । भए प्रबल रन रहहिं न रोके ॥ ८ ॥ kapi akulānē māyā dēkhēm. saba kara marana banā ēhi lēkhēm. 5.

 kautuka dēkhi rāma musukānē. bha'e sabhīta sakala kapi jānē. 6.
 ēka bāna kāṭī saba māyā. jimi dinakara hara timira nikāyā. 7.

krpādr̥ṣṭi kapi bhālu bilōkē. bha'e prabala rana rahahim̐ na rōkē. 8.

The monkeys and bears were utterly terrified when they witnessed this illusion similar to doomsday, and they panicked, thinking that this situation portended certain death for all of them. (5)

Meanwhile, Lord Ram smiled (as he was amused) when he saw this illusionary scene resembling the sight witnessed on doomsday, and also realised its widespread negative effect on the monkeys and bears who panicked because they believed it to be a reality. (6)

[What did the Lord do?] So the Lord shot an arrow that instantly cut through this veil of delusions to restore the situation as it existed prior to Meghanad's tricks, just like the appearance of the sun cuts through, in a moment, the veil of darkness cast by the night. (7)

Then Lord Ram looked around the ground of the battle-field, casting his benevolent glance over all the monkeys and bears to bless them. The Lord's rejuvenating glance had a magical effect as it instantly restored the confidence and vigour of the troops so much that they became all the more ferocious, formidable, and un-stoppable in the battle-field¹. (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram had done it earlier also when he shot an arrow to illuminate the battle-field which was covered by darkness during the first day of the war when his troops had become panicky, and once again when the darkness was removed the monkeys and bears fought with renewed vigour and zeal—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 47—to Doha no. 47, along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

Lord Ram's grace was so singular and divine by nature that whenever he merely looked at his troops, a sort of current passed through all its members, electrifying them and filling each monkey and bear with vigorous zeal, astounding dynamism, and a stupendous amount of energy. One example of this unique phenomenon is to be found at the time when the huge army started from Kishkindha on its way to Lanka, when a glance of Lord Ram inspired the whole army and electrified it; the monkeys and bears acquired a punch and strength of countless mountains striking at once—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 35.]

दो०. आयसु मागि राम पहिं अंगदादि कपि साथ ।

लछिमन चले क्रुद्ध होइ बान सरासन हाथ ॥ ५२ ॥

dōhā.

āyasu māgi rāma pahim̐ aṅgadādi kapi sātha.

lachimana calē krud'dha hō'i bāna sarāsana hātha. 52.

Laxman, the younger brother of Lord Ram and his constant companion, asked the Lord for permission to join the battle. Having got the Lord's nod, he moved forward angrily in the battle-field with a bow and arrows at the ready in his hands; he was accompanied by Angad and other brave monkey warriors¹. (Doha no. 52)

[Note—¹The following verses would narrate the first battle between Laxman and Meghanad. It was during this duel that Laxman fainted when he was hit by an arrow shot by the demon prince. The end of this duel would also mark the end of the third day of the war in Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 55 which we shall be reading by-and-by.

Who were the “other brave warriors” who accompanied Laxman? Naturally they were the chief commanders of the troops, and some of their names have been listed in Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 43 earlier—viz. Angad, Hanuman, Nala, Neela, Dwivida. There were others too, such as Mayanda, Dadhimukha, Gada, Vikatasa etc. as mentioned Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 54.

Then of course there were Sugriv and Jamvant, the chiefs of the monkeys and bears as a community. Perhaps these senior commanders, such as the latter two, remained with Lord Ram at their base camp. This observation is endorsed in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 75 wherein Lord Ram has himself asked Sugriv and Jamvant to remain by his side at the time he sent Laxman to fight with Meghanad for the second time during which the demon prince was killed.

There are some very significant points to note in connection with the two battles between Laxman and Meghanad, and they are as follows:-

When Laxman went out to fight Meghanad for the first time, as he is doing now, he was very angry and full of self confidence that he would be able to trounce his enemy. Because of his anger he lost his sense of propriety and wisdom that would have told him to first pay his respects to his elder brother Lord Ram and seek his blessings for victory before asking for permission to go to face Meghanad. Besides this, Laxman was raring to go alone when other monkey warriors, such as Angad etc., voluntarily offered to accompany him. For this also, no express permission was sought from the Lord, and neither did the Lord told anyone of them to accompany Laxman. These things are clear from this Doha no. 52.

Compared to this, the situation was starkly different when Laxman had gone out to engage his adversary for the second time. At that time, Laxman had done so because the Lord himself had expressly asked him to do it. Besides this, during this second time, Laxman was reliant on Lord Ram’s grace and blessings to win his adversary; he had invoked the Lord’s majesty and glory at the time of seeking permission to go. He had also bowed his head before Lord Ram just before departure. As regarding the other monkey warriors who accompanied Laxman, it was also ordered by the Lord—that Angad and others should go with Laxman. These things are explicitly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 75, and Chaupai line nos. 6-12 that precede it.

These crucial gestures empowered Laxman and made him able to slay Meghanad during his second engagement with him. During the first engagement, as we see however, Laxman had too much of self-confidence in his own abilities, in his own powers and strength by which he believed he would easily defeat Meghanad, instead of relying on the grace of the Lord in order to achieve this success. So in his haste Laxman had neither bowed his head before Lord Ram nor invoked the Lord’s grace, mystical powers and divinity as a majestic force with which to fight and win his enemy. He was also ‘angry’, and in anger his wisdom and sense of propriety abandoned him.

The result was that Laxman not only failed to overcome Meghand during the first battle, but he was seriously wounded too and fell to the ground unconscious. On the second occasion however, the situation changed as now Laxman was protected by the Lord's grace, as a result of which he successfully slayed Meghanad.

There are two important lessons we learn from these two situations: The first is that 'anger' is a bad thing; it robs a person of his ability to think and act properly. This fact is endorsed elsewhere in Ram Charit Manas also, viz. in Baal Kand, Doha no. 277 where Laxman had told sage Parashuram that 'anger is at the root of all sinful activities'. But the irony is that Laxman himself forgets this maxim now.

The second lesson is: We must always rely on the Lord God for everything in life instead of boasting of our own abilities; whatever one does, whenever he does it, he ought to first pay his respects to the Lord God and be clear in his head that success and failure are not of his own doing but they are what the Lord wishes. Sometimes it happens that what appears to be today's failure proves to be god-sent blessing in the days to come. So it is always better and useful to rely on the Lord God in order to have peace of mind and soul.]

चौ०. छतज नयन उर बाहु बिसाला । हिमगिरि निभ तनु कछु एक लाला ॥ १ ॥
 इहाँ दसानन सुभट पठाए । नाना अङ्ग सङ्ग गहि धाए ॥ २ ॥
 भूधर नख बिटपायुध धारी । धाए कपि जय राम पुकारी ॥ ३ ॥
 भिरे सकल जोरिहि सन जोरी । इत उत जय इच्छा नहिं थोरी ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

chataja nayana ura bāhu bisālā. himagiri nibha tanu kachu ēka lālā. 1.
 ihāñ dasānana subhaṭa paṭhā'ē. nānā astra sastra gahi dhā'ē. 2.
 bhūdhara nakha biṭapāyudha dhārī. dhā'ē kapi jaya rāma pukārī. 3.
 bhirē sakala jōrihi sana jōrī. ita uta jaya icchā nahim thōrī. 4.

He (Laxman) had fiery-red eyes (indicating his seething anger as he was wroth with exceeding wrath), a broad muscular chest, and long robust arms (implying that he had a muscular and well-built body of a strong, brave and powerful warrior who possesses the physical prowess by which he can defeat his opponent very easily in a hand-to-hand duel).

His body had a fair complexion like that of a snow-covered mountain, albeit it was a wee whit tanned red (with excitement and anger, as well as due to the fact that Laxman had been exposed to the elements of Nature for the past fourteen years of his forest sojourn by the side of his elder brother Lord Ram)¹. (1)

Meanwhile, the ten-headed Ravana sent reinforcement to help his son Meghanad; these formidable demon warriors grabbed all sorts of weapons they could lay their hands on, and arming themselves to the teeth they dashed forward (to aid the demon prince). (2)

The monkey and bear warriors raised a fierce war-cry praising Lord Ram and his glory as they too rushed forward to join the fray (and help Laxman); they grabbed parts of huge mountains, such as large rocks and boulders, as well as uprooted trees as their weapons. (3)

The two troops clashed head on with each other in a furious hand-to-hand battle, forming groups that engaged themselves in vicious duels, each vying with the other to have an upper hand and defeat the opponent, because both the sides had no lack of desire and the will to win². (4)

[Note—¹This verse describes how Laxman looked when he stepped out from his camp into the battle-field to take on Meghanad.

²This is the second direct face-to-face, vicious, no-holds barred and bloody clash between the warriors of the two sides, demons on one side, and monkey and bear warriors on the other side. The first such clash occurred during the assault on the fort of Lanka, and it is described in full earlier in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 39—to Doha no. 47.]

मुठिकन्ह लातन्ह दातन्ह काटहिं । कपि जयसील मारि पुनि डाटहिं ॥ ५ ॥
 मारु मारु धरु धरु धरु मारु । सीस तोरि गहि जुजा उपासु ॥ ६ ॥
 असि रव पूरि रही नव खंडा । धावहिं जहँ तहँ रुंड प्रचंडा ॥ ७ ॥
 देखहिं कौतुक नभ सुर बृन्दा । कबहुँक बिसमय कबहुँ अनंदा ॥ ८ ॥ muṭhikanha lātanha dātanha kāṭahim. kapi jayasīla māri puni ḍāṭahim. 5.

 māru māru dharu dharu dharu mārū. sīsa tōri gahi bhujā upārū. 6.
 asi rava pūri rahī nava khaṇḍā. dhāvahim jaham̐ tahaṁ ruṇḍa pracaṇḍā. 7.
 dēkxahim kautuka nabha sura bṛndā. kabahuṁka bisamaya kabahuṁ anandā. 8.

The Kapis (monkeys and bears) are motivated and so inspired by the surety of victory that nothing holds them back; they fight vigorously and enthusiastically, clobbering their opponents (the demon warriors) and hitting them hard with their clenched fists and vicious kicks, and biting them deep and ferociously with their sharp teeth. The monkeys and bears, thus, first hit the demons hard, severely wounding and demoralising them, and then the victorious Kapis sternly admonished their adversaries (lecturing them on the fruitlessness of their wasting their energy and life for a lost cause, a cause that is wrong from the beginning)¹. (5)

There was utter chaos and mayhem in the battle-field. Blood-chilling shrieks of the warriors, yelling repeatedly ‘kill, kill; catch hold and kill, break the skull and severe the head; tear apart the limbs’ [6], rent the air and reverberated all over the nine segments of the island (of Lanka)². Here and there, and everywhere else, whithersoever one could see, severed heads and fragmented skulls flew thick and wild like so many flying objects hurled all over the ground [7]. (6-7)

The gods were watching the strange spectacle from the sky; sometimes they were struck with horror at this sight of the ferocity of the war, and at other times they felt glad that the war has, at last, commenced³. (8)

[Note—¹A similar thing occurred earlier too during the first day of the war. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 44.

²The whole island of Lanka was filled with the sound of war. The island was geographically divided into nine segments for administrative purposes. The clamour and the turmoil of the war, the shrieks of warriors and the clash of weapons, was deafening, and it echoed all over the land.

³The gods sometimes became alarmed at the mismatch between the two sides, for the monkeys and bears were pitted against demons who were superior to them in all respects of warfare, for they had better weapons, were very ferocious and reckless, knew many tricks to deceive their opponents, and were seasoned warriors who were veterans of countless wars in which they had successfully conquered not only the rulers of earth but had even vanquished the all-powerful gods in heaven. So the gods sometimes feared for the safety of the army of Lord Ram as it consisted of monkeys and bears who are usually regarded as an inferior and weaker race in the hierarchy of creation.

But soon they recovered themselves and regained their confidence of victory, making them feel glad that the war has actually started, because now their long-cherished dream of getting rid of the cruel and sinful demons would be realised. After all, this is for what they had prayed to Lord Vishnu, whereat the Lord had promised them that he would come down personally to earth as Lord Ram to fulfil their wish. So now the time has come when their wish for the elimination of Ravana and his vicious horde of cruel and sinful demons was about to be fulfilled, about to be realised. Hence, it was a time to celebrate and feel happy.]

दो०. रुधिर गाड़ भरि भरि जज्जो ऊपर धूरि उड़ाइ ।
जनु अँगार रासिन्ह पर मृतक धूम रह्यो छाड़ ॥ ५३ ॥

dōhā.

rudhira gāṛa bhari bhari jamyō ūpara dhūri urā'i.
janu aṁgāra rāsinha para mṛtaka dhūma rahyāō chā'i. 53.

All the potholes, cavities and fissures of the earth were filled with blood flowing into them; this blood so collected then coagulated and formed a thick crust over which layers of dust settled. Thick clouds of dust also flew all over the battle-ground (as it was kicked up by gusts of wind).

The sight resembled a cremation ground where so many pyres could be seen with hot ash over which red-hot ambers burnt, and the sky around was filled with a cloud of dark smoke that arose from the dead bodies that were laid over this heap for the purpose of cremation. (Doha no. 53)

[Note—This imagery draws one's attention to the horrifying and repulsive sight witnessed in the battle-field. The next verse describes the horrifying sight of wounded warriors lying on the ground in the battle-field.

It is a chilling, gut-wrenching, nauseating and nightmarish sight that is visible not only in the battle-field of Lanka but also witnessed wherever bloody wars are fought between two armies. It compels a man of any sensitivity and mercy left in him to ponder over the futility and cruelty of wars; it fills any man who is conscientious, and has even a wee whit compassion left in any corner of his heart, to feel revulsive and wince at the mere thought of a war.

Say, what is gained by mass slaughter of fellow human beings? Even a victory that is attained by massacre and creating the scene described in this doha, is utterly disgraceful, totally inhuman and reprehensible, completely contemptible and outright outrageous, and worth nothing but severe shame and ignominy on the victor.]

चौ०. घायल बीर बिराजहिं कैसे । कुसुमित किंसुक के तरु जैसे ॥ १ ॥
लछिमन मेननाद द्वौ जोधा । भिरहिं परसपर करि अति क्रोधा ॥ २ ॥ एकहि एक सकड़ नहिं जीती । निसिचर छल बल करड़ अनीती ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

ghāyala bīra birājahim kaisē. kusumita kimsuka kē taru jaisē. 1.
lachimana mēghanāda dvau jōdhā. bhirahim parasapara kari ati krōdhā. 2.
ēkahi ēka saka'i nahim jīti. niscara chala bala kara'i anīti. 3.

Gravely wounded warriors adorned the battle-field much like the crimson flowers that deck up a Kinshuk tree (the “Butea frondosa” tree) at the time when they are in full bloom¹. (1)

Now the time came for a direct confrontation between Laxman and Meghanad; both of them clashed with each other very furiously. (2)

Both were equal in valour, gallantry and skills, so no matter how hard they tried to subdue their opponents, they could not succeed.

Seeing that Laxman would not be so easily overcome, the demon (Meghanad) started cheating by employing unfair means and using dirty tricks to force himself upon Laxman and vanquish him². (3)

[Note—¹This tree is also known as “Palasha”. It has beautiful deep red coloured flowers that make the tree look very charming when in full bloom.

In this imagery, the battle-field is likened to the Kinshuk tree, and the injured warriors lying on the ground, with thick dark red blood oozing from their wounds, are likened to the flower of this tree. Even as the flowers move softly on the tree when they are made to sway by the wind, the wounded warriors turn left and right, and try to rise or raise their limbs while lying on the ground.

A similar sight is also referred to in Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 89, verse no. 37.

²When Meghanad observed that he is unable to overcome Laxman by using fair means of warfare, he decided to employ foul methods and resort to cheating. Being a ‘demon’, someone who has no qualms in using dirty tricks and employing unrighteous methods to serve his goal, Meghanad had not the slightest compunctions in using unfair means to overcome his opponent Laxman.

He knew many magical tricks that he had used earlier also in the battle-field—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 51—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 52.

So he decided to use them once again. Meghanad would also employ these dirty magical tricks that create a lot of illusions, such as making him suddenly vanish and reappear again somewhere else, during the second battle with Laxman when he was finally killed—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 11-12 that precede Doha no. 76.]

क्रोधवन्त तब भयउ अनन्ता । भंजेउ रथ सारथी तुरन्ता ॥ ४ ॥

नाना बिधि प्रहार कर सेषा । राच्छस भयउ प्रान अवसेषा ॥ ५ ॥

रावन सुत निज मन अनुमाना । संकठ भयउ हरिहि मम प्राना ॥ ६ ॥

krōdhavanta taba bhaya'u anantā. bhañjē'u ratha sārathī turantā. 4.
nānā bidhi prahāra kara sēṣā. rācchasa bhaya'u prāna avasēṣā. 5.
rāvana suta nija mana anumānā. saṅkaṭha bhaya'u harihi mama prānā. 6.

Then (i.e. when Meghanad started cheating and using foul and unfair methods in the duel) Laxman (who is also known as “Anant”¹) became vehemently angry. He immediately broke Meghanad’s chariot into splinters and killed the charioteer.

[To wit, Laxman became so furious when Meghanad started using unfair means in the battle that he angrily retaliated by shooting a powerful volley of arrows that slammed into Meghanad’s chariot with such a mighty force that they smashed it smithereens and killed the charioteer.] (4)

Laxman, who is a manifestation of Sheshnath (sēṣā), launched a vicious attack on his adversary, hitting him hard and furious in a variety of ways so much so that the demon’s life was almost on the edge of being sniffed out. (5)

The son of Ravana (“rāvana suta”; Meghanad)² thought to himself that the situation was extremely alarming, and soon Laxman would snatch his life away from him (i.e. would kill him). (6)

[Note—¹“Anant” means: ‘one who has no end; one who is eternal; one who does not die’. Use of this epithet for Laxman is very significant here because soon we shall read that he is seriously wounded and on the verge of death when Meghanad shot him with a fiery arrow that usually sucked the life of its victim. This epithet mentally prepares the reader for that moment when Laxman falls unconscious on the ground; it psychologically acclimatizes the reader and assures him that when he comes to the point where Laxman is grievously wounded and falls to the ground, there should be no cause worry, as Laxman is “Anant”, i.e. he cannot die. That simply means that there is no cause of alarm, that Laxman’s fainting is part of the game, a part of the show, for he will be revived before long.

“Anant” is also the name of Lord Sheshnath, the celestial Serpent who had manifested himself as Laxman. Lord Vishnu, the macrocosmic and invisible form of Brahm, the Supreme Being, reclines on the coiled body of Sheshnath as it floats on the surface of Kshir-Sagar, the celestial ocean of milk from which the first elements of creation emerged at the time of its origin.

²Like the case of the word “Anant” for Laxman, another interesting word is used here when referring to Meghanad; it is “the son of Ravana— rāvana suta”.

What is so remarkable with the use of this term? The word “Ravana” means ‘one who makes others weep’. Since the demon king used to torment the world so much, the word ‘Ravana’ is used for him. Now, his son Meghanad would soon create a situation when Lord Ram too would weep and lament for Laxman when he is wounded by Meghanad’s powerful arrow.

Like his father Ravana, his son Meghanad was about to create a situation which would make Lord Ram weep and his companions feel sorrowful. So therefore, Meghanad is addressed as the ‘son of Ravana’; “like father, like son”.]

बीरघातिनी छाड़िसि साँगी । तेज पुंज लछिमन उर लागी ॥ ७ ॥
मुरुछा भई सक्ति के लागें । तब चलि गयउ निकट भय त्यागें ॥ ८ ॥ bīraghātinī chāḍisi sāṅgī. tēja puñja lachimana ura lāgī. 7.

muruchā bha'ī sakti kē lāgēm. taba cali gaya'u nikaṭa bhaya tyāgēm. 8.

Frustrated and extremely irritated because he felt he was in a dire strait and his life was in danger if he allowed a moment more to Laxman, Meghanad struck back at his opponent by throwing a special spear (sāṅgī) that never failed in felling (and even probably killing) the greatest of warriors¹. This powerful weapon glowed with energy, and it slammed into Laxman’s chest. (7)

Laxman fainted (and fell to the ground unconscious) when this powerful weapon, that had immense energy and dynamism inbuilt in it, hit him hard with all its punch (sakti kē lāgēm). Then Meghanad overcame his fear (of Laxman) and went near his adversary¹. (8)

[Note—¹As long as Laxman was on his legs fighting Meghanad, the latter dared not go near him; but when Laxman swooned and collapsed on the ground, Meghanad gathered enough courage to go near him.

Why did Meghanad go near Laxman? The answer is to be found in the next Doha no. 54—it was to lift and bring Laxman to Lanka. Why? It was to make Laxman a hostage if he was still alive, and use him as a bait to make a stiff bargain with Lord Ram, or as a prized trophy of war if he wasn’t alive. It would be a great victory for Meghanad and an act of unmatched valour and gallantry if he could bring Laxman to Lanka in whatever state Laxman was, and in whatever way Meghanad could.

There are two other significant reasons why Laxman was wounded and fell to the ground unconscious.

One is that at the time of asking Lord Ram to give him permission to go and face Meghanad, Laxman had not properly shown his respect to the Lord by bowing his head before the latter, which he ought to have done. It was perhaps because Laxman was very angry at the time, and in his anger he had lost his wisdom to act in a proper way. Besides this, Laxman was so confident of his own abilities that he thought that he is competent enough to tackle Meghanad on his own accord independently, and so he felt that there was no need to seek Lord Ram's full protection by way of seeking the Lord's blessings and invoking the Lord's grace and mystical powers. The result was that Laxman lacked the full backing and the complete support of Lord Ram's grace, his divine abilities and mystical powers that would have given him an impregnable shield of protection against harm when he was fighting Meghanad, and so he fell down unconscious. This event shows us that if we are to succeed in any enterprise in life, we must first seek the Lord God's blessings, and then rely on the Lord's powers to enable us to move ahead towards the goal of obtaining success in our efforts. Refer to a note appended to Doha no. 52 herein above where this aspect has been further explained.

The second reason is this: At the time when Lord Ram was preparing to leave Ayodhya to proceed to the forest, he had tried his best to dissuade Laxman from joining him. The Lord had told Laxman that it will do good if he did not accompany him to the forest, because then he would have to bear a lot of sorrows and miseries—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 70—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 71. Now, this fainting of Laxman was to prove that the Lord's words were true.

A similar situation occurred when Sita insisted on accompanying Lord Ram to the forest. In her case the Lord had been very explicit in outlining the immensity of sufferings one encounters in a forest, telling her that if she insists in going to the forest with the Lord then she will get only sufferings in return—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 63. And the Lord was proved correct once again by the developments later on—when Sita was kidnapped by Ravana and kept as a prisoner in Lanka, where she was subjected to great horrors.]

दो०. मेघनाद सम कोटि सत जोधा रहे उठाइ ।

जगदाधार सेष किमि उठै चले खिसिआइ ॥ ५४ ॥

dōhā.

mēghanāda sama kōṭi sata jōdhā rahē uṭhā'i.
jagadādhāra sēṣa kimi uṭhai calē khisi'ā'i. 54.

Countless warriors, who were truly as strong and powerful as Meghanad, tried their best to lift Laxman from the ground, but failed.

Say, how is it practically possible to lift Sheshnath who is the support of the entire world (or who supports the whole universe upon his thousand hoods)¹?

No matter how much and how hard these warriors tried, they could not lift Laxman; so at last they gave up in frustration and went away distraught, smarting with shame and feeling extremely humiliated. (Doha no. 53)

[Note—¹Laxman was a manifested form of Lord Sheshnath, the celestial serpent who is believed to hold the world aloft on his thousand hoods—Ram Charit Manas, (i) Baal Kand, Doha no. 197; and (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Chanda line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 126.

Trying to lift Laxman would be like trying to lift the earth upon which one is standing; it is like lifting the ground from below one's own foot while one is standing on it. It's impossible. One can't hold the ground underneath his own foot and lift it up along with himself.

Similarly, trying to lift Laxman was tantamount to lifting the earth on which these demon warriors were standing.

A very interesting development is about to occur now. While the demon warriors were unable to lift Laxman from the ground where he was lying unconscious, Hanuman would very easily lift him and take his limp body to place it before Lord Ram at the end of the day's war—apropos: Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 55 below.

The question is: How could Hanuman lift Laxman when the demons couldn't? Well, one reason is that the demons, being sinful, pervert and unholy, lacked any spiritual power and the special abilities that come with it, while Hanuman had an abundance of such powers and abilities.

Secondly, from the perspective of metaphysics, the demons represented 'gross' elements in creation, and such elements are always heavy themselves; their heaviness acted as a drag on their ability to lift and move Laxman because he was extremely heavy himself as he supported the whole world on his hood in his primary form as Lord Sheshnath.

On the other hand, Hanuman represented the lighter, the subtler elements of creation as he was the son of the 'wind' god, and 'wind or air' is one of the five subtle elements in creation. In this interpretation, Laxman represented the 'sky' element, because one of the names of Lord Sheshnath is 'Anant'*, which means eternal and without an end, which are the characteristics of the 'sky' element. {*Refer: Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes this Doha no. 54.}

The air and sky are almost identical in subtlety; so therefore Hanuman and Laxman made a perfect match.

The power of wind is well known; a powerful storm can cause unprecedented havoc; a fierce wind can as easily lift a humble twig as it can topple ships and carry away heavier things that falls in its path, as will be observed when a tornado or hurricane strikes. The wind turns a windmill, and the latter, with the aid of the wind, can lift water from the bowls of the earth if connected to a pump, and then use it for irrigation. The wind can move ships by filling its sails. The air lifts balloons, and the wind can steer it.

In brief, the element 'wind' that Hanuman represented enabled him to lift Laxman because he represented the 'sky' element as explained herein above, making him very light.

Earlier on in the story of the Ramayan we read that Lord Shiva's Bow had become so heavy that a large number of strong kings and princes, who had gathered during the marriage ceremony of Sita at Janakpur, could not lift it, while the same Bow became so light that Lord Ram could not only easily lift it but as easily break it into two pieces. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 250—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 251; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 261.}

In this case, every citizen present on the occasion had made a fervent plea to the deity of the Bow, i.e. to Lord Shiva, requesting that the Bow become very light. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 255.}

Similarly, it's quite probable here that Hanuman too had prayed silently to Lord Sheshnath, the primary form of Laxman, to make his manifested form, i.e.

Laxman, very light so that he can be lifted. This the third plausible reason as to why Hanuman was able to lift Laxman.

Another interesting reason, and the fourth one, is this: Lord Shiva is depicted in iconography, based on the reading and interpretation of ancient mythological texts known as the ‘Purans’, as having a number of serpents wrapped around his body; these serpents are his ornamentation. This means simply that Lord Shiva is able to carry the weight of these serpents in the same way as we wear garlands or other ornaments on our bodies. Now, Hanuman is a manifestation of ‘Rudra’, the eleventh form of Lord Shiva that is concerned with annihilation of everything, it is the angry form of Shiva that brings about the end of this creation; and Laxman is a manifestation of the celestial serpent known as Sheshnath. This means obviously that the weight of the body of Laxman poses no problem for Hanuman to carry just like the case of the weight of the serpents posing no problem for Lord Shiva when he wears them around his body.

To wit, a combination of factors came into play that enabled Hanuman to lift Laxman, whereas the demons failed.]

चौ०. सुनु गिरिजा क्रोधानल जासू । जारइ भुवन चारिदस आसू ॥ १ ॥
सक संग्राम जीति को ताही । सेवहिं सुर नर अग जग जाही ॥ २ ॥
यह कौतूहल जानइ सोई । जा पर कृपा राम कै होई ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

sunu girijā krōdhānala jāsū. jāra'i bhuvana cāridasa āsū. 1.
saka saṅgrāma jīti kō tāhī. sēvahiṁ sura nara aga jaga jāhī. 2.
yaha kautūhala jāna'i sōī. jā para krpā rāma kai hōī. 3.

[Lord Shiva continued his narration and said to his consort Uma, who is also known as Girija as she is the daughter of the Kingdom of Mountains. Shiva said:-]

‘Listen Girija. He whose anger is so fierce that its hell-like fire can burn all the fourteen divisions of this creation’ [1], ---

--- And who is served not only by the gods and the human beings but also by all other living beings in this creation, both immortal as well as mortal, both gross as well as subtle—say, who can defeat such a majestic and almighty Lord of the World in the battle-field? [2]

[Of course the answer is “no one can”. So then if that is the case, how do we explain what is happening on the ground in the war of Lanka, where we see that the monkeys and bears, who represent Lord Ram and form his army, are often times beaten back and thrashed by the demons, and we also read that Laxman has been gravely wounded and felled by their prince Meghanad. The answer to this vexing question is given below in the following verse.] (1-2)

The actual reason for what is happening on the ground in the war of Lanka, the reality behind the external deceptions created (which has presently created an impression that Laxman has been subdued and wounded by Meghanad) is known to only a few enlightened souls on whom Lord Ram (the Supreme Being and the bestower of gnosis, wisdom and knowledge) shows his grace². (3)

[Note—¹The “fourteen divisions of this creation”, known as the 14 Bhuvans or 14 abodes, are the following:

(A) The upper worlds called Urdhva Lokas (उर्ध्व लोक) are seven in number:—(i) Bhu/Bhūḥ (भूः), (ii) Bhuvaha/Bhuvah (भुवः), (iii) Swaha/Swah (स्वः), (iv) Maha/Mah (महः), (v) Janaha/Janah (जनः), (vi) Tapaha/Tapah (तपः), and (vii) Satyam/Satyam (सत्यम्).

(B) The seven nether worlds or lower worlds called Adhaha/Adhah Loka (अधः लोक):— (i) Atal/Atala (अतल), (ii) Vital/Vitala (वितल), (iii) Satal/Sutala (सुतल), (iv) Rasaatal/Rasātala (रसातल), (v) Talaatal/Talātala (तलातल), (vi) Mahaatal/Mahātala (महातल), and (vii) Paataal/Pātāla (पाताल). The total number of Lokas is, therefore, fourteen.

²Only those who know who Lord Ram and Laxman actually were, that Lord Ram was a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the invisible and all-pervading macrocosmic form of the Supreme Being, and that Laxman was a manifestation of Lord Sheshnath, the cosmic serpent who supports the whole creation on his thousand hoods and on whose coiled body Lord Vishnu reclines in the celestial ocean that fills the outer space in the form of ether, would know that all this fainting and fighting and all other things were merely for show to hide the reality of both Lord Ram as well as Laxman, because Ravana, the mighty king of demons, had a boon of immunity from death being caused by anybody except at the hands of human beings; so it had to be done that way, that a human being would one day succeed in slaying the mighty demon king, and to make it happen that way, the Lord had to take extra precautions to ensure that nothing is visibly done on the ground that would reveal his true identity, that could be construed as being reasonably beyond the powers of a human being to do, as far as possible, so that the sanctity of the boons granted to Ravana by the creator Brahma could be maintained, and the scourge of the demons could be brought to an end.

To wit, if the secret was leaked—that Lord Ram was not an ordinary human but the Supreme Being himself in the form of a prince—then most of the demons would have either run away or surrendered themselves without a fight. If this happened, the Lord would not have been able to eliminate them, and they would have lived, causing a piquant situation that would have defeated the very purpose for which Lord Vishnu came down to earth—because these cunning demons would have pretended to show remorse and promise the Lord that they would certainly change their sinful ways in order to escape death, but sooner or later, in all probability sooner rather than later, they would have invariably gone back on their words and reverted to their old bad habits of tormenting creatures and creating unfettered terror in this world.

Come to think of it: Lord Sheshnath who could turn the world upside down by merely shifting it or turning it over on his hoods or even tilting his head a little bit to one side, could have very easily make Lanka first heave and then splash and sink into the depths of the ocean that surrounded it from all the sides like a ship capsizing in rough waters of the ocean during a violent storm, so what was the great idea, except to ensure sanctity of Brahma’s boons, that Laxman had to endure so much trouble?]

संध्या भइ फिरि द्वौ बाहनी । लगे सँभारन निज निज अनी ॥ ४ ॥

व्यापक ब्रह्म अजित भुवनेस्वर । लछिमन कहाँ बूझ करुनाकर ॥ ५ ॥

तब लागि लै आयउ हनुमाना । अनुज देखि प्रभु अति दुख माना ॥ ६ ॥ sandhyā bha'i phiri dvau bāhanī. lagē saṁbhārana nija nija anī. 4.

byāpaka brahma ajita bhuvanēśvara. lachimana kahāṁ būjha karunākara. 5.
taba lagi lai āya'u hanumānā. anuja dēkhi prabhu ati dukha mānā. 6.

When it was eventide and the time of day when twilight approached, both the armies retired from the battle-field for the day (to go back to their respective camps). The commanders of the two armies (the demons as well as the monkeys and bears) surveyed their troops to take stock of the situation and review the condition of their respective forces¹. (4)

Lord Ram—who is the all-pervading and omnipresent Brahm (the Supreme Being and cosmic Consciousness) in his primary form (byāpaka brahma), who is invincible and the almighty Lord of the entire creation (ajita bhuvanēśvara), and who shows mercy to others (karunākara)—asked where Laxman was (when he could not see him around). (5)

In the meantime, Hanuman brought the unconscious Laxman (and laid him on the ground before the Lord)².

When the Lord saw his younger brother lying unconscious (and almost as if he was not alive), he became very sad and extremely sorrowful. (6)

[Note—¹This is the end of the second day of the war in general, and the end of the first duel between Laxman and Meghanad.

A head count was done by the commanders of the two armies to determine who had died, how many were wounded, and how many and who had survived.

²We have already read in Doha no. 54 herein above that Meghanad and all other strong demon warriors had failed to lift Laxman and take him to Lanka with them. And now we read that the same Laxman was lifted and brought before Lord Ram by Hanuman.

How and why could Hanuman lift Laxman when the demons couldn't? This crucial question has been answered and explained in detail in a note appended to Doha no. 54 referred to above, as well as to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 84 later on, during the narration of Ravana's battle with Lord Ram.]

जामवंत कह बैद सुषेना । लंकाँ रहइ को पठई लेना ॥ ७ ॥

धरि लघु रूप गयउ हनुमंता । आनेउ भवन समेत तुरंता ॥ ८ ॥

jā mavanta kaha baida suṣēnā. laṅkāṁ raha'i kō paṭha'ī lēnā. 7.
dhari laghu rūpa gaya'u hanumantā. ānē'u bhavana samēta turantā. 8.

Jamvant (the old bear chieftain) said that a Vaidya (a doctor who treats patients using herbal medicines) named Sushen lives in Lanka¹, and asked for advice as to who should be sent to bring him. (7)

[It was unanimously decided that Hanuman must be urgently dispatched to bring Sushen². So therefore—] Hanuman assumed a small form (like the one he had assumed earlier to enter Lanka undetected when he had gone there the first time in search of Sita), and went to Lanka.

He immediately brought the doctor, along with his house, from there³. (8)

[Note—¹How did Jamvant come to know about Sushen, the doctor? He was told about him by Vibhishan, the demon prince and brother of Ravana who had joined Lord Ram's camp.

Why did Vibhishan not himself disclose that a doctor by this name lived in Lanka, and instead confided this news to Jamvant and asked the latter to reveal this information? Well, Vibhishan was very intelligent; he thought that if he said something himself then there were chances that he would be misunderstood as if he was contriving a devise by which to invite one of his confidantes from Lanka in the garb of a doctor, who would then administer some poison to Laxman that would cause his death.

Even if not actually giving poison to Laxman, no one could be absolutely sure how a medicine would react, as the best of medicines given by the best of doctors may sometimes prove ineffective or even fatal if it causes some serious reaction in the patient's body, which would cause Laxman's death. Should it unfortunately happen, then all the monkeys and bears would definitely conclude that Vibhishan had a malefic intention in suggesting the name of Sushen, with whom he was hand-in-glove secretly to manoeuvre things in a cunning way that would lead to Laxman death by administering a poison or a wrong medicine so as to weaken Lord Ram and make him regret for his decision to attack Lanka. If that happened, if the finger of suspicion rested on Vibhishan for any ill fate that befell Laxman, then that would be his end; he will definitely be killed to avenge Laxman.

Vibhishan weighed the pros and cons and came to the conclusion that there were fair chances that Lord Ram, who would be overcome with grief by then, would begin to doubt his integrity and question why he had advised that Sushen be brought to treat Laxman, and chances were that, driven by excess of sorrow at Laxman's ill fate, and under the wrong impression that Vibhishan was to be blamed for it, the Lord would approve putting him to death as punishment for betrayal.

Vibhishan pondered over the matter seriously and deduced that the aspect of the affair was very alarming and fraught with danger for him, and one unwise step on his part would land him in a grave situation should things go wrong and something unexpected and unfortunate befalls Laxman due to his intercession in this matter. So it was prudent and advisable under the circumstances to keep mum. But at the same time, thought Vibhishan, it was his moral obligation and duty to help his benefactor Lord Ram and his brother Laxman in these trying times, and if he had some knowledge that could be of certain help to them, then he ought to put it to good use while ensuring his own safety, or even putting himself to a little risk if a greater good is attained.

It was a horrifying prospect, but Vibhishan nevertheless decided to help Lord Ram, who had warmly welcomed him and given him unconditional refuge when he was ousted from his own kingdom by his brother Ravana, as best as he could while playing it safe for himself; and so he quietly approached Jamvant to give this confidential bit of information about the availability of an expert doctor named Sushen in Lanka.

It can be argued that Hanuman may have brought this information, about the presence of a doctor by the name of Sushen in Lanka, when he had gone there in search of Sita. But he would have told this to Angad as he was his fast friend, and probably not to Jamvant as the latter was very senior in the hierarchy as well as in age. Besides, Hanuman belonged to the ‘monkey race’ while Jamvant was the chief of the ‘bear race’; hence the interaction between Hanuman and Jamvant must have been very limited and formal as compared to his interaction with Angad. Now here since Angad has kept quiet, it means he had no such knowledge of a doctor named Sushen in Lanka.

Therefore it is reasonable to conclude that this information was given by Vibhishan to Jamvant.

²Why was Hanuman chosen for the job of bringing Sushen from Lanka? The answer is given right here—it was because he could ‘assume a minute form’ that would enable him to make his ingress and egress from Lanka without being detected.

Hanuman had experience of using this trick, because he had employed it when he had gone to Lanka earlier in search of Sita; he had not only made his ingress by assuming a small form (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4) but had also explored the city throughout the night in this form, without being detected (apropos: Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 5).

How then was his bringing the doctor with his whole house kept a secret? It is because it was night time, and he had lifted the house and become air-borne immediately. Then he silently cruised in the sky to exit the boundaries of the city.

³How did Hanuman do it? Well, Hanuman scooped up the house from the ground by digging the soil from underneath it and then lifting it in his hands to bring it to where Lord Ram was sitting by the side of wounded Laxman, just like a gardener transplants a sapling by lifting it from one place in the garden to transfer it to another place.

We shall soon read that Hanuman would employ this skill to lift up a mountain and bring it to Lanka when he could not descry the desired herb on it—apropos: Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 58 herein below.]

दो०. राम पदारबिंद सिर नायउ आइ सुषेन ।

कहा नाम गिरि औषधी जाहु पवनसुत लेन ॥ ५५ ॥

dōhā.

rāma padārabinda sira nāya'u ā'i suṣēna.

kahā nāma giri auṣadhī jāhu pavanāsuta lēna. 55.

Sushen arrived and paid his obeisance to Lord Ram by bowing his head at the Lord's feet. Then he named the mountain on which the required medicine (i.e. the medicinal herb) was to be found¹, asking the son of the wind god (“pavanāsuta”; Hanuman)² to go and fetch it³. (Doha no. 55)

[Note—¹Where was this mountain that bore the herb which could revive Laxman back to life? It is mentioned in Valmiki's Ramayan, Uddha Kand (Lanka Kand), canto 74, verse nos. 29-30 that Jamvant had told Hanuman: “Fly over the surface of the ocean and reach the northern mountains known as the Himalayas. Further on you will see a golden-hued mountain known as Rishav; the famed abode of Lord Shiva, known as Kailash, is visible beyond it. In between the two you will see a mountain where medicinal herbs glow in the night like so many fire-flies.”

In Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse no. 46 it is said that this herb was located in the “Dronachal mountain”. Then in verse no. 60 it is said that: “Hanuman went to this mountain and defeated the Gandharvas who were protecting it; then he lifted it and started on his journey back.”

What were the special qualities of this unique herb? In Valmiki Ramayan we find the answer in its Lanka Kand, canto 101, verse nos. 30-31. “The herb is to be found on the southern summit of the Drona Mountain; it can heal wounds, restore the origin condition of the patient’s body, revive a person who is almost dead, and can re-join or heal broken or ruptured parts of the body such as bones, skin, muscles, veins and tissues.”

²The use of the term “son of the wind god” is very significant here. The wind is extremely swift in its movement; it can cover large distances in a short span of time. Hanuman had to travel a long distance to the mountain to bring the herb; he had to cross the ocean and the land beyond, with all the natural geographical obstacles he would have to contend with, in order to reach it. Only the wind can easily surmount all physical obstacles when traversing from one point to another on the surface of the earth.

Secondly, it was necessary to ‘fly’ in the sky all the way to the destination, and it was possible only if Hanuman’s primary form as the ‘son of the wind god’ is invoked. The wind god would surely help his son Hanuman to fly over the ocean and the land to reach his destination, and then return by the same path.

The ‘son’ of the wind god surely must possess the unique abilities of his father, the abilities to fly and move rapidly, to overcome all physical hindrances that come in the way of his path, and to be able to remain air-borne while carrying the weight of the bundle of herbs on his way back. As we will soon discover, this ability to remain air-borne while carrying a heavy weight was absolutely essential, because on his way back Hanuman had to carry the entire mountain loaded with herbs. It is because he could not decide which specific herb was needed, and so took along the whole mountain in order to avoid taking the risk of picking a wrong herb, or wasting precious time in searching for the correct herb.

³It is not clear from the reading of this verse who actually asked Hanuman to go to the mountain and bring the needed herb—was it Sushen, or was it Lord Ram?

Most probably it was the doctor himself—firstly it is because since Sushen was brought by Hanuman, he was better acquainted with the latter as compared to the rest of the ministers of Lord Ram who were standing around; and secondly it is because Lord Ram was so sad and woefully grieving for unconscious Laxman that he was not in a proper state of mind to talk about anything.

It is a common observance that when there is a patient lying in a serious condition and a doctor is called, the patient’s closest kin who love him dearly, such as his only son, parent or wife who is the most affected by grief and overcome with sorrows, is not in a proper state of mind to discuss the situation and relevant details coherently with the doctor, and it is usually done by others in the family who are in attendance; it is because the latter are able to maintain their cool and act dispassionately as compared to those who are directly affected by the shock of the serious illness of their dear one.

At the same time, it could have been Lord Ram who asked Hanuman to go and bring the required herb. The Lord was the commander-in-chief of the army, and a person who occupies this senior position in the hierarchy is expected to maintain his cool and exercise self-control during the gravest of situations and battle-field reversals. It was necessary for Lord Ram to maintain external calm to ensure that the morale of his troops is not affected negatively, at least till the time there was hope of Laxman's revival.]

चौ०. राम चरन सरसिज उर राखी । चला प्रभंजन सुत बल भाषी ॥ १ ॥

उहाँ दूत एक मरमु जनाव । रावनु कालनेमि गृह आवा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

rāma carana sarasija ura rākhī. calā prabhañjana suta bala bhāṣī. 1.
uhāñ dūta ēka maramu janāvā. rāvanu kālanēmi gṛha āvā. 2.

Enshrining Lord Ram's holy lotus-like feet in his heart (i.e. after invoking the Lord's glory and grace, and paying his due obeisance to him), and then reassuring the Lord that he will be able to successfully accomplish the mission (of bringing the requisite herb) by reiterating his own abilities, about his skills and strengths, in this regard¹, the son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) started off on his journey. (1)

Meanwhile, there (in Lanka) a spy informed Ravana about the developments (that Laxman was lying wounded and unconscious on the ground in his camp, and Hanuman was dispatched to bring an herb from the northern mountains to revive him)².

Being thus informed, Ravana went to the house of the demon named Kalnemi.
(2)

[Note—¹It is to be noted here that Hanuman commits the same mistake which Laxman had committed earlier when he had gone to engage Meghanad in the battle-field, and it is that Hanuman did not pay his full respects to Lord Ram by bowing his head before the Lord, nor did he seek the Lord's permission in express terms to proceed with the mission.

The first error, of not bowing his head before the Lord, was however compensated and made excusable to a great extent because Hanuman had 'invoked and enshrined the Lord's holy feet in his heart at the time of departure', a silent and subtle gesture that is equivalent to actually bowing the head before the Lord.

The second error can also be excused because Hanuman has been expressly requested to bring the needed medicinal herb and charged with this mission. Lord's permission was implied and implicit in this request; he was assigned this commission on an urgent basis, as there was no time left for observing formalities and courtesies.

But the third error Hanuman made, of 'speaking of his own abilities, his strength and skills' before the Lord, on his face, and in the presence of all those who had gathered around, was tantamount to boasting about himself. So what happened? Soon Hanuman would learn a bitter lesson, that his wisdom and intelligence and abilities to see things clearly were not as great and refined and sharp as he seemed to believe—for, first he fell in a trap laid by one of the demons, named Kalnami, who was sent by Ravana to deceive Hanuman and block his way, and if possible, to kill him, because he could not see through the deception initially and was virtually caught by the demon, and on the second occasion a little while later Hanuman could not recognise the herb he was expected to bring to revive Laxman when he arrived at his destination in the northern mountains. These two failures were a sort of punishment for Hanuman, reminding him that whatever he had said about his stellar qualities and unique abilities were only loud talk and bloated assumptions. Thus, Hanuman was reminded to be modest and show more humbleness the next time. We shall read about these two events shortly.

²Ravana's spies were updating him about the developments in the battle-field. They must have surely told him about Sushen being taken to the camp of Lord Ram to treat Laxman. It is remarkable that Ravana did not put Sushen in prison or to death when he was brought back by Hanuman.

What may have been the reason of Ravana's not punishing Sushen for reviving his enemy's brother?

Well, the answer is this: First, it is a sacrosanct duty and moral obligation of any doctor to save a person's life, irrespective of whose life he saves; whether the patient is an enemy or a friend is immaterial in this moral obligation and fulfilment of a doctor's duty.

Secondly, Ravana too needed the services of an expert doctor; it was not in his interest to antagonise or irritate or offend Sushen, who was the best doctor in Lanka, at a crucial time when a fierce war was raging, and countless demon warriors too needed medical help from him. So no matter how much Ravana may have liked to wreak his vengeance upon Sushen, yet he decided in his wisdom to keep quiet for the time being and punish the doctor for treason or betrayal later on when calm returns and the war ends.

Ravana approached Kalnemi because he judged in his mind that this demon was the only one in Lanka who would have the guts and the wherewithal to face Hanuman. Ravana abandoned his usual arrogance and ego by personally approaching Kalnemi and visiting him at his home, instead of summoning him to his palace. We have already seen that earlier Ravana had adopted the same method when he had personally approached another demon named Marich in order to carry out his plans to steal Sita. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 23.}

Ravana needed someone who can use the art of deception skilfully, as he intended to capture or kill Hanuman, or at least delay his journey to the northern mountains by blocking his way. Ravana, being a great king was expected to have a wide body of knowledge of virtually everything as kings usually are trained to have; so he had some basic knowledge of the science of herbal treatment, and he guessed that this herb must be administered to Laxman before day-break in order to be effective. So if he somehow managed to delay Hanuman and prevent him from bringing the herb by morning, then Laxman would not live. This fact is clearly hinted when we shall read a little later that Lord Ram lamented at the delay in Hanuman's coming back because it was past midnight and dawn was fast approaching. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 61.}

दसमुख कहा मरमु तेहिं सुना । पुनि पुनि कालनेमि सिरु धुना ॥ ३ ॥

देखत तुम्हहि नगरु जेहिं जारा । तासु पंथ को रोकन पारा ॥ ४ ॥ dasamukha kahā maramu tēhiṁ sunā. puni puni kālanēmi siru dhunā. 3.

dēkhata tumhahi nagaru jēhiṁ jārā. tāsu pantha kō rōkana pārā. 4.

The ten-headed Ravana told Kalnemi the reason for his visit, learning which the latter became exceedingly alarmed and highly distraught, repeatedly beating his head in disgust and the doomed prospect of their race (by the recklessness of one single individual, Ravana, who stubbornly refused to see the consequences of his irrational, indefensible and senseless actions)¹. (3)

Kalnemi sternly warned Ravana of the hazards he faced, and rebuked him in strong terms, saying: ‘He (Hanuman) had burnt the city right before you, while you were watching helplessly²; say then, who can successfully create a hurdle in his path and stop him? [To wit, who can stop this formidable person from progressing on his journey as you wish me to do?] (4)

[Note—¹In the story of the Ramayana we come across three such individuals whom Ravana approaches to seek help when he was in dire straits, and all the three have sternly rebuked him, saying that what he has chosen to do is totally unjustified and wrong, that yet there was time for him to make amends and prevent a catastrophe from befalling on the demon race, that he is making a grave error of judgement in thinking that Lord Ram was an ordinary human prince whom he can easily vanquish; and in all the three cases Ravana stubbornly refused to relent, threatening two with death, and putting the third in an embarrassing situation wherein if he refused to cooperate with Ravana and toe his line, then it would be tantamount to betrayal of one’s own family blood.

The first such individual was the demon named Marich; Ravana had approached him in order to employ his skills at assuming any form that he wished to have to a deception with the help of which he would abduct Sita. Marich had most politely warned Ravana of the grave and fatal error he is committing in creating animosity with Lord Ram without any reason, and had also told him about his personal experience in this regard, forewarning him of the dire consequences of his recklessness. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 23; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 26.}

The second instance is that of Kalnemi; we are reading it presently. He too advised Ravana in almost the same way as Marich had done, in no uncertain language that he is severely erring in creating animosity with Lord Ram who is no one else but the Supreme Lord himself in this form, and that he would do good to himself if he worshipped and adored the Lord instead. But again, Ravana bluntly refused, becoming aggressive and threatening Kalnemi with death. {Doha no. 56 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 directly herein below.}

The third person whom Ravana approached for help was his own brother Kumbhakaran. He too was shocked and gravely lamented to learn what Ravana had done and what he planned to do, about his sinful act of bringing Sita as a captive and unnecessarily provoking a war with Lord Ram, strongly taking him to task and admonishing him for his mad actions, for his pervert nature and wrong decisions. But on realising that his elder brother Ravana is in no mood to listen, and if he refused to enter the fray on his behalf in the war against Lord Ram, then history would accuse him of being disloyal to the king and betraying his own brother, Kumbhakaran reluctantly decided to enter the battle-field. He also saw in this a rare chance of attaining deliverance for his soul, and helping it to find liberation from the cage-like body of a demon, which was sinful, evil and gross. Besides these benefits, Kumbhakaran saw another great reward: that he would have a wonderful opportunity to see Lord Ram from very close quarters; it would be a rarest of rare privilege for him, because such a view is not available even to great sages, hermits and ascetics who spend their entire lives doing severe penances and great sacrifices and observance of vows just for a chance to have this divine glimpse even for a second. So therefore, instead of regretting, Kumbhakaran become joyous. We shall read about it shortly when we soon come to the third day of the war. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 64.}

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 25—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 26.

When Kalnemi came to know Ravana's intention, that the latter wanted him to obstruct Hanuman's way so that he fails to bring the herb to revive Laxman, Kalnemi became sore affright and saw death staring in his face. This is what he means here. He put Ravana in an embarrassing situation by asking this question: what was Ravana doing when Hanuman ran amok in the city and burnt it; couldn't Ravana himself stop him at that time? Why couldn't he ask Kalnemi at that time to stop Hanuman from having a free run in the city, burning it from street to street and house to house, if it was possible, and if Ravana thought that Kalnemi was capable of doing it? The prospects of stopping Hanuman were brighter then as compared to now, because at that time there was a whole army of demons to support Kalnemi if he was ordered to stop Hanuman, but now he has to do it all alone, prejudicing his own life and safety. This is nonsense and a virtual suicide. Ravana had no answer of course.]

भजि रघुपति करु हित आपना । छाँड़हु नाथ मृषा जल्पना ॥ ५ ॥
नील कंज तनु सुंदर स्यामा । हृदयँ राखु लोचनाभिरामा ॥ ६ ॥
मैं तैं मोर मूढ़ता त्यागू । महा मोह निसि सूतत जागू ॥ ७ ॥ काल ब्याल कर भच्छक जोई । सपनेहुँ समर कि जीतिअ सोई ॥ ८ ॥ bhaji raghupati karu hita āpanā. chāṁṛahu nātha mṛṣā jalpanā. 5.

nīla kañja tanu sundara syāmā. hṛdayaṁ rākhū lōcanābhirāmā. 6.
mairṁ tairṁ mōra mūṛhatā tyāgū. mahā mōha nisi sūtata jāgū. 7.
kāla byāla kara bhacchaka jō'ī. sapanēhuṁ samara ki jīti'a sō'ī. 8.

[I sincerely advise you to—] Worship Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) and pay your obeisance to him. To wit, by doing it you would ensure your own good and take care of your welfare.

My lord; stop useless talk, and discard all forms of worthless boast and hollow bluster (for these will not serve you any good at all). (5)

Instead of it (i.e. instead of wasting your time and energy in this futile pursuit), you ought to enshrine the beautiful image of the Lord that is dark complexioned like a blue-hued lotus flower in your heart. Verily indeed, in all sooth and without gainsay, this image of the Lord is so enchanting and beauteous that it bewitches the sight of its beholder and holds it in its thrall². (6)

Discard your stupid idea that makes you differentiate between ‘I’, ‘You’, ‘Mine (and yours)’ etc³.

Wake up from the night of ignorance that has created darkness around you, preventing you from seeing the truth and the reality. (7)

He (i.e. Lord Ram) who can devour (bring to an end; conclude) even the serpent of Time (by bringing an end to the cycle of creation and destruction, known as Kaal)⁴, say who can even imagine to conquer him in a war fought in a mortal world⁵? (8)

[Note—¹After telling Ravana of the impracticability of stopping Hanuman, Kalnemi gave him some sincere advice regarding his wrong decision of opposing Lord Ram and creating hostility with him that reflected what others too had told him in this matter: such as his wife Mandodari, his younger brother Vibhishan, and Suka, his messenger sent behind Vibhishan to spy on him, and Marich, the demon who was forced by Ravana to become a deer with a golden hide. A little later in the story, Ravana’s brother Kumbhakaran too says a similar thing.

Refer:- (a) With respect to Mandodari—Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Doha no. 36 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-10 that precede it; (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 7—to Doha no. 7; (iii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15; and (iv) Doha no. 35-b—to Doha no. 37.

(b) With respect to Vibhshah—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; and (ii) Doha no. 40 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede it.

(c) With respect to Suka—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 57.

(d) With respect to Marich—Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 26.

(e) With respect to Kumbhakaran—Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 63.

²When Ravana had forced Marich to become a golden deer and sent to deceive Sita, he (Marich) too had enshrined this image of Lord Ram in his heart to derive solace in embracing death; Marich was very happy at the prospect of his seeing Lord Ram’s captivating beauty from so close a quarter—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 26 along with Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.

A similar vision was invoked by Kumbhakaran when he had to go and fight Lord Ram, albeit most reluctantly; he had felt joyous that he will have a chance to see this enchanting image of the Lord from up so close. He minced no words in expressing his joy, and even asked Ravana to embrace him for giving him this chance of enjoying this view and attaining salvation for his soul—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 63 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.

³Kalnemi tells Ravana about the basic principle of metaphysics and spirituality: that the true identity of all living beings is their Atma, their soul, which is pure consciousness, an entity that is subtle, invisible, eternal, universal and holy, and which is the same in all creatures irrespective of whatever external form they might have. To wit, the physical gross body that the world sees and recognises as an individual person is not that individual's 'true self'; it is his Atma resides in this body. Whereas the physical body has its limitations and is specific to an individual, the Atma is not subjected to any such limitations; it is not butted and bounded by lines and physical boundaries.

Hence, who is an enemy of whom; what is the difference between 'him' and 'me' and 'you'; none whatever—because the Atma is the same in all.

So therefore, how come Lord Ram is Ravana's enemy; how and why the former should become the latter's enemy. Why does Ravana think that way; what is the cause of the animosity and its resultant war? None of course.

Truly then if Ravana thinks this way, then he is definitely under the influence of darkness caused by ignorance of the facts.

⁴The eternal coil of Time that represents a 'serpent' because of its fatal nature and coiled structure that continuously wounds and un-wounds like the spring in a clock that keeps the clock's hands moving, and which keeps the creature rotating in a continuous cycle of birth and death, even this otherwise in-conquerable and un-stoppable movement of Time can be stopped when the Supreme Being decides so; when he decides to bring to an end one cycle of creation and destruction, Time would come to a standstill.

The actual words used in this verse are "kāla, byāla, bhacchaka". 'Kaal' also means 'death'; or the god who presides over death. Since no one is immune to death, it is likened to a poisonous 'serpent' or the 'byala' that kills for sure when it bites.

Meanwhile, Lord Vishnu, the primary form of Lord Ram, has Garud, the celestial Eagle, as his mount, and this Garud has a special ability that it can easily devour serpents.

So in this verse it is said that Lord Ram can, if he so wishes, bring an end to Kaal, the god of death who kills all others, too, just like the Lord's mount known as Garud can kill and devour all sorts of serpents, who themselves can kill all those they bite. This being the case, can anyone be so powerful and strong that he would overcome Lord Ram, the killer of Death-God himself? The obvious answer is: No, there is no one who can do it.

⁵An almost similar declaration was made by others such as Mandodari, Marich, Suka, Kumbhakran on different occasions.

Refer for instance: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 25 (by Marich); (ii) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 39 (Vibhishan); (iii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 6 (Mandodari); (iv) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 63 (Kumbhakaran).]

दो०. सुनि दसकंठ रिसान अति तेहिं मन कीन्ह बिचार ।

राम दूत कर मरौं बरु यह खल रत मल भार ॥ ५६ ॥

dōhā.

suni dasakaṇṭha risāna ati tēhim mana kīnha bicāra.

rāma dūta kara maraur̥ baru yaha khala rata mala bhāra. 56.

When the ten-necked Ravana (dasakaṇṭha) heard what Kalnemi had to say, he became wroth with exceeding wrath.

Observing Ravana's angry reaction and fearing for his life, Kalnemi thought to himself that if he has to die then why should it be an ignominious death at the hands of this pervert fellow who is burdened with sins and vices (that would make his soul go to hell); why should it not be an exalted death at the hands of a messenger of Lord Ram (that would ensure that his soul goes to heaven)¹. (Doha no. 56)

[Note—¹Why dying at the hands of Lord Ram's messenger Hanuman, who was also the Lord's great devotee, so much preferred by Kalnemi? It is because such a death would bless his soul with beatitude and felicity which is equivalent to dying directly at the hands of the Lord himself.

The greatness of Hanuman, Lord Ram's devotee and messenger, is explicitly endorsed in Ram Charit Manas by those who met him personally, albeit under different situations. For instance we read in (i) Sundar Kand, Doha no. 4 alone with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it about the declaration made by Lankini; (ii) then again in Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 7 about the declaration made by Vibhishan; and (iii) finally in Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 58 about the declaration made by the alligator who found its deliverance when he was killed by Hanuman. All endorse this view—that one is very fortunate to meet Lord Ram's devotee and messenger.

We read earlier that Marich too had thought in a similar fashion when he was forced by Ravana to assume the form of a deer with a golden hide so that Sita could be abducted—that it would be better not to die at the hands of Ravana who was home to all sins and vices. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 26.}

The only difference between Marich and Kalnemi is the circumstance of their death, for while Marich was slayed by Lord Ram himself (apropos: Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 14 that precedes Doha no. 27), Kalnemi is now slayed by the Lord's favourite devotee named Hanuman (apropos: Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 58).]

चौ०. अस कहि चला रचिसि मग माया । सर मंदिर बर बाग बनाया ॥ १ ॥

मारुतसुत देखा सुभ आश्रम । मुनिहि बूझि जल पियौ जाइ श्रम ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

asa kahi calā racisi maga māyā. sara mandira bara bāga banāyā. 1.
mārutasuta dēkhā subha āśrama. munihi būjhi jala piyaum jā'i śrama. 2.

Saying this to himself (as said in Doha no. 55 herein above), Kalnemi went to intercept Hanuman. Somewhere on the way, he (Kalnemi) used his crafty ability to create deceit and illusions to generate an impression of the presence of a fresh water pond, with a shrine on its bank that was surrounded by a lush garden. (1)

When the son of the wind god ("mārutasuta"¹; Hanuman) saw this scene, he thought that it was the hermitage of a sage²; so he decided to go there to drink some fresh water to refresh himself and feel relaxed (i.e. overcome his tiredness of the long journey)³. (2)

[Note—¹The use of the word “mārutāsuta”, the ‘son of the wind god’, for Hanuman is intentional here to indicate that he was going on his way the way ‘wind goes’, i.e. by the path of the sky, by flying over land, the way wind travels from one point to another.

Hanuman had to cover an enormous distance from Lanka to the northern mountains and then come back with the required herb, all within a short span of time, during the night itself, and before daybreak the next day. So, the path of the sky, in a straight line like the bird flies, would not only be the shortest distance to be covered but it would also circumvent all obstacles that would naturally be encountered if he had gone by the land route. To wit, the flight path through the path of the sky would be free of all hindrances, and would make it possible to come back with the herb as quickly as possible.

Therefore it follows that Hanuman observed a beautiful garden with a pond and a shrine on the land below while he was cruising rapidly northwards in the sky. Remember: It was night time, so how did Hanuman see this hermitage? Surely there was some light burning in it that attracted his attention. Hence it follows that Kalnemi had played his trick to perfection; he took care to light a fire in the form of a small bonfire usually made in hermitages lying deep inside forests to ward off wild animals, or a fire-sacrifice pit where the remains of the fire lit during a religious ritual of the day was still burning.

²Another interesting point is this: In verse no. 1 herein above, it is merely said that “Kalnemi generated an impression of the presence of a pond, a shrine, and a surrounding garden”, whereas in the present verse no. 2 it is said that “Hanuman saw a hermitage”.

It clearly means that Kalnemi chose a place where a pond with an old shrine and a little garden already existed; what he actually did was to disguise himself as a hermit and went there to occupy it as its inhabitant. Then he quickly made arrangements for a fire so that its light would attract Hanuman’s attention as he passed overhead. The result of Kalnemi’s efforts was that the ancient place, which was probably un-inhabited and abandoned long ago, looked like a complete hermitage lived in by a lonely sage or a group of sages.

The next pertinent question that arises is this: Where was this artificial hermitage approximately located? The present verse clearly states that Hanuman decided to “visit the hermitage in order to refresh himself by drinking water that would also help him overcome his tiredness and fatigue of the journey”. It implies that he had been flying a very long distance till he reached the hermitage created by Kalnemi.

Surely some time must have passed between Hanuman’s departure from Lanka and the spot where he saw the hermitage—because, first, sometime must have passed while Ravana went to Kalnemi and persuaded the latter to go and intercept Hanuman, then secondly, more time must have elapsed while Kalnemi first planned what to do, and then actually carry out the cunning device that he had devised to trap Hanuman. All the while Hanuman was making rapid progress northwards towards his destination through the sky. Hence, by the time Kalnemi gave finishing touches to his deceit, Hanuman must have travelled quite a long distance from the shores of the southern ocean where Lanka was situated, making him “tired and thirsty”, and longing for some fresh water for refreshment and the need for some quick relaxation.

Kalnemi needed time, and during this time Hanuman was constantly flying to his destination in the northern mountains, nearing them as fast as he could fly, and by the passage of each hour he was feeling more and more tired. So it follows that this artificial hermitage was somewhere close to Hanuman's destination in the north of the plains, some place close to the mountains in the north.

It is said in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse nos. 46-47 that: "When asked by Ravana to go and intercept Hanuman, Kalnemi went and created a deception of a hermitage at a place near the Himwan Mountain, or the snow-covered Mountains in the northern Himalayas. This particular mountain where the herb was to be found was known as Mandrachal. Near this place Kalnemi created a false hermitage, and disguising himself as a senior sage who had a number of disciples, he sat down (to wait for Hanuman)."

Kalnemi also preferred a spot far away from Lanka and very near Hanuman's destination for three reasons:

First, because he decided that by this time Hanuman would be physically worn out by the exertion of the long journey, and would therefore need some water to drink to quench his thirst, and a place to relax a bit to recover his energy.

Secondly, with the destination in sight and being very near to it, Hanuman would think that sparing a few minutes to refresh himself and relax a wee whet to recover his energy would not affect or hinder his mission in any tangible way; rather it would be helpful to him because he has to carry a load in the form of the herb on his return journey. So the chances would be good of his falling in the trap easily.

And thirdly, it would be easier for Kalnemi to subdue Hanuman because the latter would be sufficiently fatigued out and lacking in energy by this time to put up a vigorous resistance to Kalnemi should the necessity arise for a fierce battle between the two. Kalnemi was weary of facing Hanuman when the latter was in his prime form.

{The episode of Kalnemi, his deceit, and his subsequent slaying by Hanuman, has been narrated in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse nos. 46-59½ .}

This location of Kalnemi's artificial hermitage being close to the northern mountains is also indirectly indicated in the verses herein below, because we read that soon after the events associated with Kalnemi, Hanuman had reached the mountain containing the required herb, and the gap of time between the two events seems to be apparently very small—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 58 herein below.

³Another very interesting observation is to be made here. Hanuman goes against his own declaration made earlier to Mainak that "he is determined not to rest till Lord Ram's work was done" (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 1). But now he wishes to "refresh himself by taking a break and drinking water in the pond"! So why was he overcome with thirst and weariness this time, while all through the battle, and the burning of Lanka earlier, he had never felt either thirsty or the need to take rest to recover his energy?

The answer is this: He committed the same mistake that Laxman had committed which resulted in his suffering from fainting when hit by Meghanad, and this mistake was: Hanuman did not pay his obeisance properly to Lord Ram by bowing his head and seeking the Lord's express blessings for success in the enterprise at the time of departure from Lanka to bring the herb. This is clear when we closely examine Doha no. 55 and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it, as well as the note appended to them in the case of Hanuman. In the case of Laxman, it is Doha no. 52 with the notes appended to it.

To wit, all successes that Hanuman, Laxman and the rest attained were the result of Lord Ram's grace and blessings upon them, and not due to their own abilities.

The irony of the matter is this that Hanuman 'bows his head to Kalnemi who was disguised as a hermit or a sag' as find in the next verse. It implies that Hanuman's legendary ability to perceive the truth behind the veil of deception was also compromised. And this is also proved by the fact that he could not decide which herb was needed when he saw the mountain on which the herbs grew (apropos: Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 58).

The simple lesson that is learnt from these episodes is that one must first and foremost pay one's obeisance to the Lord God, invoke his grace and pray for his blessings before embarking on any enterprise, small or big, and never to think that one would succeed in anything because one has the ability or the skill or the knowledge or the wherewithal needed for success.]

राच्छस कपट बेष तहँ सोहा । मायापति दूतहि चह मोहा ॥ ३ ॥

जाइ पवनसुत नायउ माथा । लाग सो कहै राम गुन गाथा ॥ ४ ॥

rācchasa kapaṭa bēṣa tahañ sōhā. māyāpati dūtahi caha mōhā. 3.
jā'i pavanasuta nāya'u māthā. lāga sō kahai rāma guna gāthā. 4.

The demon (Kalnemi) was present there in the hermitage in a fictitious form of a hermit or a sage. He was trying to deceive the messenger of the Lord who is the master of all tricks and deceptions (i.e. Lord Ram, the Supreme Being)! (3)

The son of the wind god (Hanuman) went to him and bowed his head¹. Seeing him, the hermit (i.e. Kalnemi) started praising Lord Ram and his glories². (4)

[Note—¹Why did Hanuman bow his head before this false hermit or sage? It is because this physical form, that of a learned sage, a hermit, a seer, an ascetic, or a saint, is deemed to be so holy and worthy of respect that it invites involuntary and automatic respect and reverence from the beholder.

We have read earlier a similar kind of thing happening when the great king named Pratapbhanu was also cheated by his enemy who was disguised as a hermit; this crooked fellow was previously defeated in a battle by the king, and he had decided to assume the form of a hermit to escape detection till he waited for his time to take revenge upon the king. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 158; and Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede Doha no. 170.}

²Kalnemi thought that if he praised Lord Ram then he will easily gain Hanuman's confidence. This ploy served him a dual purpose: first it would help him disarm Hanuman's suspicion of him, and second, it will also give him an opportunity to purify his inner self and prepare for the deliverance of his soul by making some last minute gestures of repentance for his past sinful life as a demon in the service of Ravana, by singing the glories of Lord Ram, which a true 'demon' would never do.

It was this singing of Lord Ram's glories now, and his uttering the Lord's holy name at the time of his death at the hands of Hanuman a little later, that Kalnemi attained emancipation and salvation for himself; even Hanuman lavishly praised Kalnemi for uttering the Lord's holy name at the time of his death—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 58 herein below.

It is to be noted that Kalnemi began to praise Lord Ram immediately after Hanuman bowed before him, even before Hanuman introduced himself to him or said anything about himself or his journey. This is the normal practice with saintly persons and devotees of the Lord—that they greet their guests and welcome their visitors by uttering the name of the Lord and saying his grace, or saying something else in the Lord's honour.]

होत महा रन रावन रामहिं । जितिहहिं राम न संसय या महिं ॥ ५ ॥
इहाँ भाँ मैं देखउँ भाई । ग्यान दृष्टि बल मोहि अधिकाई ॥ ६ ॥ hōta mahā rana rāvana rāmahim. jitihahim rāma na sansaya yā mahim. 5.

ihāṁ bha'eṁ maim dēkha'uṁ bhāī. gyāna dr̥ṣṭi bala mōhi adhikāī. 6.

Kalnemi said, 'A great war is underway between Ravana and Lord Ram'¹. Well, there is no doubt in the fact that Lord Ram will win in it². (5)

I have a divine vision that I have acquired on the strength of my gnosis, the special empowerment that comes to me by my spiritual practices that have granted me self-realisation and enlightenment; it entitles and enables me to see things not physically visible to others, things that occurred in the past, are underway in the present, and would eventually happen in the future³. (6)

[Note—¹How did Kalnemi know that a fierce war was raging between Ravana and Lord Ram? Answer: Ravana himself had briefed him about it—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 56 herein above.

²A similar prediction was made by Trijata, the pious female demon appointed by Ravana to guard Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 99 along with Chaupai line nos. 12-13 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede this Doha.

Even at the beginning of the war, when during the initial wave of attack by the Lord's army the demons had violently repulsed it, and it seemed that all was lost, the reader is assured by the narrator of the Story, i.e. Lord Shiva, that ultimately the monkey and bears would emerge victorious—Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 43.

³A similar boastful claim was made by another crooked person who had disguised himself as a hermit to cheat his adversary. It was a king who had been defeated by another great king named Pratapbhanu. The defeated king assumed the form of a hermit and lived in a hermitage in the forest, bidding his time to take revenge on Pratapbhanu. As destiny would have it, one day Pratapbhanu landed at his hermitage when he got lost in a hunting expedition. The impostor hermit had also made similar boastful claims of possessing exceptional spiritual powers as done by Kalnemi here, and he finally managed to trap the innocent king in his crooked design to manoeuvre things in such a way that finally Pratapbhanu was cursed by angry Brahmins to become a demon. It was Pratapbhanu who became Ravana in his next birth. For the purpose of our note, refer to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 162 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that follow it; (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 164; and (iii) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 168—all of which indicate that that crooked hermit had made similar claims of possessing some special powers others don't have like Kalnemi does here.

A question arises here: Was not Kalnemi committing treason and betrayal; was he not being disloyal and unfaithful to his own lord Ravana by predicting that the war would be won by his enemy? Well, Kalnemi's internal thoughts are abundantly clear when he had expressly told Ravana on his face that what he plans to do is wrong, that he should abandon all hostility with Lord Ram and worship him instead, and that no one can succeed by opposing the Lord—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 56.

So therefore, Kalnemi was not saying something that was new; he had always believed that Lord Ram would win as is evident from his interview with Ravana.

He had rather protected his lord Ravana's identity by saying that he knew about the war out of his own spiritual abilities. This lie served two objectives: first, it prevented Hanuman from directly knowing that he was a demon sent by Ravana to kill him, and second, it helped Kalnemi to convince Hanuman about his being a holy man so that the latter would easily fall in the trap laid out by former.

Thus, Kalnemi was duly fulfilling his duty to his lord Ravana; he was neither committing treason nor being disloyal to his master Ravana or the demon race.

How did Kalnemi planned to kill Hanuman? He wanted to poison him by making him drink poisoned water. It will be clear in the next verse below.]

मागा जल तेहिं दीन्ह कमंडल । कह कपि नहिं अघाउँ थोरें जल ॥ ७ ॥
सर मज्जन करि आतुर आवहु । दिच्छा देउँ ग्यान जेहिं पावहु ॥ ८ ॥ māgā jala tēhiṁ dīnha kamaṇḍala. kaha kapi nahim aghā'uṁ thōrēm jala. 7.

sara majjana kari ātura āvahu. dicchā dē'uṁ gyāna jēhiṁ pāvahu. 8.

Hanuman asked for some water to drink (as it was the main reason why he had come to this hermitage in the first place), at which request Kalnemi gave him a water-pot called a Kamandal (which is normally kept by all hermits)¹.

The Kapi (Hanuman; literally the 'monkey') said that a little water would not satisfy him (for he felt very thirsty and needed some larger source of water not only to quench his thirst but also that he could sprinkle some water on his body to wash and feel relaxed). (7)

Kalnemi replied, 'There is a pond in the yonder. Go there and wash yourself; then come here at the earliest so that I can bless you with Gyan (gnosis; some form of spiritual knowledge) after doing some formal rituals to prepare you for that purpose that would make you eligible to receive this great knowledge². (8)

[Note—¹It is very much evident what Kalnemi's intention was: he had come to get rid of Hanuman, and not to help him in any way. So obviously, the water-pot contained poisoned water.

Hanuman was on Lord Ram's mission; so he had the invisible shield of the Lord's protection. Say, how can any harm come to someone who is an ardent devotee of Lord Ram? The lesson we learn from this episode is that if we put ourselves in the Lord's charge, then even if we do not expressly ask the Lord for protection, the Lord would do it on his own; the Lord would never let his devotee come to harm as he always takes care of the latter's welfare.

²Kalnemi found to his dismay that his planning was about to crumble; he feared that after drinking water and refreshing himself, Hanuman would proceed on his way. Kalnemi thought quickly how to prevent this from happening; so he threw a bait of granting knowledge. How stupid it was for Kalnemi to think of this device; Hanuman had not asked for any spiritual knowledge or for being initiated. Kalnemi was in such a hurry that he did not even think that this offer, without it being sought, must surely ring an alarm bell in Hanuman's mind.

Hanuman too was so overcome with anxiety about the job to be done, that of searching the herb and taking it back to Lanka within the stipulated time, that this unusual offer of Kalnemi could not rouse any suspicion of foul play in his mind.

This also shows that the pond was not poisoned—for otherwise there was no question of Kalnemi asking Hanuman to come back for knowledge. Rather, he would have wished to escape forthwith from the spot in order to avoid the risk of incurring Hanuman's wrath in case he had become suspicious of this hermit and just tasted the water of the pond, and did not gulp it down in sufficient quantity to have any fatal effect. Then it was certain that Hanuman would come back and trash Kalnemi's light out of him.

Another proof of the pond not being poisoned is that an alligator, who was a cursed Apsara, a heavenly damsel, whom Hanuman would soon kill and grant freedom from the curse, lived in the same pond. Had it been poisoned, this Apsara would have died first.]

दो०. सर पैठत कपि पद गहा मकरीं तब अकुलान ।

मारी सो धरि दिव्य तनु चली गगन चढ़ि जान ॥ ५७ ॥

dōhā.

sara paiṭhata kapi pada gahā makarīm taba akulāna.
mārī sō dhari dibya tanu calī gagana caḍhi jāna. 57.

When the Kapi (i.e. Hanuman) entered the pond (to drink water, and to wash and refresh himself), a deadly alligator, that lived in it, immediately caught hold of his legs.

Hanuman instantly slayed the attacker¹ who left its mortal gross body to revert back to its original form that looked divine. In this ethereal form, its soul mounted an aerial vehicle and ascended to the sky (to go to heaven). (Doha no. 57)

[Note—¹Hanuman went inside the water of the pond and closed his eyes to wash his face and drink water. At that moment the alligator caught hold of his one leg and tried to drag him inside the pond. Hanuman grabbed the attacker and ripped apart its mouth. {Refer: (i) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse nos. 54-55; (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 21-23.}

Who was this alligator? An Apsara, who is a beautiful damsel who lives in heaven, usually as a heavenly courtesan in the court of Indra, the king of gods, named ‘Dhaanya-Maali’ was cursed to become an alligator. After Hanuman liberated her from this curse by slaying her form as an alligator, she resumed her original heavenly form and went back to her place. {Refer: (i) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse no. 57; and (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 24-25.}

In the following verses we read that this Apsara, who was in the cursed form of an alligator, tells Hanuman why she became so, and also alerts him about the reality of the hermit living in the hermitage, that he was actually a fierce demon contriving ways to kill him at the behest of Ravana.]

चौ०. कपि तव दरस भइउं निष्पापा । मिटा तात मुनिबर कर सापा ॥ १ ॥

मुनि न होइ यह निसिचर घोरा । मानहु सत्य बचन कपि मोरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāṭi.

kapi tava darasa bha'i'uṁ niṣpāpā. miṭā tāta munibara kara sāpā. 1.
muni na hō'i yaha niscara ghōrā. mānahu satya bacana kapi mōrā. 2.

Assuming a divine form, the alligator’s soul spoke to Hanuman from the sky, ‘Oh Kapi! I have been cleansed of the negative effects of my sins by the good circumstance of having had the good fortune of seeing you.

My dear (tāta)! As a reward of meeting you, I have now been absolved of the consequences of the curse cast upon me by a learned sage in some past time¹. (1)

Be warned that this fellow (who has sent you to this pond) is not a hermit as you think him to be; on the contrary, he is a fierce demon. Oh Kapi, have faith in my words; I am telling you the truth.², (2)

[Note—¹Why was the Apsara cursed to become an alligator, and what was her name?

The answer is this: Though seeming to be incredulous because what happened does not behove good for the character of a so-called spiritual man, but the story goes that one sage, whose name is not disclosed by her, asked her for sexual favour, which the Apsara refused. This enraged the sage who cursed her to become an alligator; but soon realising that she was being unjustly punished for no fault of hers, the sage blessed her that some time in the future Hanuman would free her from this curse while he would be on his way to the northern mountains on Lord Ram’s errand, and then she would resume her original form and go back to heaven. The name of this Apsara was ‘Dhānya-Māli’. {Refer: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse nos. 56-57.}

²What would make Hanuman believe in the truthfulness of the words of this ethereal form that emerged from the dead gross body of the alligator he had just killed? The very fact that the Apsara emerged in this ethereal body which had a divine aura around it, and the fact that she boarded a plane coming to fetch her to heaven, left no doubt in the mind of Hanuman that she was not a demon at least, for otherwise this remarkable heavenly form would not have appeared before him and neither would a plane come to fetch a sinful dead demon to take him to heaven, for sinful souls are destined to hell and not to heaven.

He had made one major mistake, of not being able to see through the deceit of Kalnemi and falling a prey to his sweet words, and now he should not make a second mistake, and definitely a fatal one, of not heeding an alert given to him.

The transmuting of an alligator into an Apsara jolted Hanuman and roused him from his stupor which was caused perhaps in part by the fatigue incurred by the stress of the long-haul journey from Lanka, and also due to the accompanying anxiety and worry concerning the success of the mission of finding the right herb, and then taking it back to Laxman in the allotted time.]

अस कहि गई अपछरा जबहीं । निसिचर निकट गयउ कपि तबहीं ॥ ३ ॥

कह कपि मुनि गुरदछिना लेहू । पाछें हमहि मंत्र तुम्ह देहू ॥ ४ ॥

asa kahi ga'ī apacharā jabahīm. nīsicara nikaṭa gaya'u kapi tabahīm. 3.
kaha kapi muni guradachinā lēhū. pāchēm hamahi mantra tumha dēhū. 4.

When the Apsara went on her way after alerting Hanuman, he went near the demon (disguised as a hermit). (3)

The Kapi told him that he wished to make his offerings and pay his obeisance to him first, and after that he would accept the Mantra (spiritual initiation) that he (the false hermit) wished to grant him¹. (4)

[Note—¹The usual procedure for such initiation is that first the spiritual teacher, a Guru, gives a Mantra, a blessed spiritual formula, to his disciple, and then the latter offers his offerings to the former as a tribute. But Hanuman turns the table around full circle; he offers to pay his dues first and then accept the blessing.

Hanuman was responding to Kalnemi's advise that he should go to the pond and come back to accept the initiation—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 57.

Hanuman did not wish to give Kalnemi a chance to either escape or play some other dirty trick; so he acted swiftly, without wasting a moment as is evident in the next verse.]

सिर लंगूर लपेटि पछारा । निज तनु प्रगटेसि मरती बारा ॥ ५ ॥

राम राम कहि छाड़ेसि प्राणा । सुनि मन हरषि चलेउ हनुमाना ॥ ६ ॥ sira laṅgūra lapēṭi pachārā. nija tanu pragatēsi maratī bārā. 5.

rāma rāma kahi chāṛēsī prānā. suni mana haraṣi calē'u hanumānā. 6.

Hanuman wrapped his long tail around Kalnemi's neck, tightened the grip like a hangman's noose, lifted his victim off his seat, and then dashed him violently on the ground, causing his instant death.

At the time of his death, Kalnemi reverted back to his original form (of a demon). (5)

He (Kalnemi) uttered the holy name of Lord Ram repeatedly while his soul left his mortal gross body of a demon¹.

When Hanuman heard it, he felt very glad internally in his Mana (heart and mind; inner-self)². After that he resumed his journey and moved ahead (in search of the required herb). (6)

[Note—¹Upon close examination of the story of the Ramayan we discover that there were a few more souls who had remembered or uttered or invoked Lord Ram's holy name at the time of their death, and each one of them got their due spiritual reward irrespective of the physical form of the body their soul had assumed while living in this mortal world. It is because the holy name of Lord Ram is called the 'Tarak Mantra', i.e. it is a divine spiritual formula which when used would invariably have its effect, which is to grant liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the soul of the dying creature; it bestows beatitude and felicity and eternal bliss to the person, no matter who he or she is, or what sort of body the concerned creature possesses in this mortal world. {Refer: Ram Uttar Tapini Upanishad, Canto 2, verse no. 1; Canto 4, verse no. 7; and Canto 6, verse nos. 1-29. It tells us that Lord Ram's holy and divine name "Rām" is a Tarak Mantra, a spiritual formula empowered to deliver the soul of a creature and grant it emancipation and salvation which bestows eternal beatitude and felicity.}

The first instance is of course that of king Dasrath; he had uttered Lord Ram's name at the time of his death which was brought about by the deep grief from which Dasrath suffered at the separation of his beloved son Ram. The reward was that Dasrath went to the abode of the Gods in heaven. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 155.}

The demon Marich, who was compelled by Ravana to assume the form of a deer with a golden hide so that Sita could be stolen, had uttered Lord Ram's holy name and remembered the Lord's grace and blessings at the time of his death; he was granted an exalted destination that is difficult even for great sages to attain. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 16-17 that precede Doha no. 27.}

The next example is that of Khar and Dushan along with their army of demons who had attacked Lord Ram in the forest at the behest of Supernakha. These demon warriors had uttered the Lord's holy name "Ram-Ram" at the time of their death, and every one of them attained emancipation and salvation. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 20-a.}

Then we come to the unique case of the vulture king named Jatayu. He had laid down his life in an attempt to save Sita while she was being taken away by Ravana. Jatayu's case is unique in the whole of the Ramayan as Lord Ram performed his last rites himself as he would do for his own father, thereby granting the vulture a rare honour and privilege that was denied even to Dasrath. Jatayu too had invoked Lord Ram's holy name during the last moments of his life, entitling his soul to attain an exalted destination of eternal beatitude and felicity. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 31; and Doha no. 32.}

A similar destination of the soul was obtained by Sabari, the old tribal woman whose last rites too were performed by Lord Ram even as she burnt her mortal body in a fire lit for the purpose, repeating Lord Ram's holy name, invoking his grace, and enshrining the Lord's divine form in her heart. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 36 along with Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.}

The next example is that of Baali, the king of Kishkindha and the father of Angad, the monkey prince. Baali too had fixed his mind on the holy lotus-like feet of Lord Ram at the time of his death, and was rewarded with heaven as his destination. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishindha Kand, Doha no. 10.}

As we move along with the telling of this magnificent and enthralling Story, we shall see by-and-by that Kumbhakaran and the much reviled Ravana too were exceptionally fortunate like no one else was in the whole story, in as much as their soul had emerged from their bodies and entered directly into the holy body of Lord Ram in the form of a blazing shaft of splendourous energy; it was a visible proof of the fact that the destination of the soul has nothing to do with the body in which it has lived in this world as long as the soul has a burning and sincere desire to repent for its past sins and seek emancipation and salvation for its self. The way the soul of these two great demon warriors entered the body of Lord Ram was a vivid example of the merger of the creature's 'individual soul' with the 'universal supreme Soul of creation' represented by Lord Ram if the creature has an honest internal desire for this fate for himself, no matter what he pretends to be on the outside. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 71 in case of Kumbhakaran; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103 in case of Ravana.}

This establishes another important point: Lord Ram never distinguished between two individuals based on the sort of the physical body they have; Dasrath was his worldly father; Jatau was a vulture; Sabari was an out-caste tribal woman; Baali was a monkey by body; the rest of them, such as Marich, Khar, Dushan, Kalnemi, Kumbhakaran and Ravana, were all demons. What the Lord sees is the purity of the creature's soul, and the earnestness of his desire to attain him, to repent for his sins and past evil deeds in order to get liberation and deliverance from his present body, as well as a wish to attain emancipation and salvation for his soul that would grant him eternal bliss, beatitude and felicity—and all this must be sincere and without deceit, conceit and pretensions.

²“Hanuman felt glad when he heard Kalnemi utter Lord Ram's name”—why? Remember: Hanuman was a great devotee of Lord Ram; he himself constantly and consistently kept on muttering the Lord's holy name, and kept his mind and heart focused on the remembrance of the Lord. He had no personal grudge against or any animosity with Kalnemi, as a true devotee of Lord Ram ought not to have. He slayed Kalnemi only because the latter was trying to cheat him and obstruct him in his mission to fulfil the Lord's mandate, which was not acceptable.

So Hanuman felt elated that at last Kalnemi's soul would find deliverance; he felt happy that he became an instrument in providing liberation to one more soul which had become trapped in the evil body of a demon; he felt comforted that he had heard another creature utter his beloved Lord Ram's name, bringing him within the circle of the Lord's devotees. Hanuman also rejoiced that history would not accuse him for killing a hermit, but rather would praise him for providing emancipation and salvation to a creature who was suffering in a mortal, gross, and evil body of a demon.

Kalnemi's death was a matter of celebration for Hanuman for another reason also: it subtly made him realise about the invisible protection that he had of Lord Ram who ensures, constantly, consistently and invariably, that no harm comes to Hanuman from any quarter, even if he makes an inadvertent slip here and there in life. What a great assurance indeed for a creature; who is a more benevolent and gracious Lord than Lord Ram indeed is!]

देखा सैल न औषध चीन्हा । सहसा कपि उपारि गिरि लीन्हा ॥ ७ ॥

गहि गिरि निसि नभ धावत भयऊ । अवधपुरी ऊपर कपि गयऊ ॥ ८ ॥

dēkhā saila na auṣadha cīnhā. sahasā kapi upāri giri līnhā. 7.
gahi giri nisi nabha dhāvata bhaya'ū. avadhapurī ūpara kapi gaya'ū. 8.

When Hanuman saw the mountain, he could not recognize the needed medicinal herb. So (deciding not to waste any time) he immediately, and swiftly, lifted the mountain by uprooting it from the ground¹. (7)

Holding the mountain aloft on his hand, he cruised through the night sky as fast as he could.

On his way back, the Kapi passed over the city of Ayodhya². (8)

[Note—¹As has been noted earlier in a note to Doha no. 55, the mountain where the required herb was located was called 'Dronachal'. It was situated in the upper reaches of the mighty Himalayan range on the north of the Indian land mass, between Mt. Kailash and a mountain that had a golden hue. {Reference: (a) Valmiki's Ramayan, Uddha Kand (Lanka Kand), canto 74, verse nos. 29-30; and (b) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse no. 46.}

Now we learn here that unable to descry the correct herb from the countless similar herbs growing on the mountain's side, Hanuman decided to lift the whole mountain, which was, in all probability, a huge hill large enough to be called a 'mountain', and take it to Lanka in order not to waste any time in searching for the needed herb, and also to avoid the risk of picking up the wrong one by an error of judgment, which would not only be fatal for Laxman but would also mean complete failure of his own effort.

The interesting point to note here is this: We read that the monkeys and bears were using huge rocks and boulders as their missiles by which they attacked the demon warriors during the course of the war. The answer to the question 'from where did they get so many rocks and boulders' is found here—they used this mountain brought by Hanuman as a source for their crude forms of attack weapons, such as rocks and boulders and stones of all shapes and sizes, in the battle-field of Lanka.

Meanwhile, why couldn't Hanuman see and recognise the necessary herb? One answer is that in the darkness of the night all of them looked alike. There was not one or two or twenty herbs, but countless numbers of them, and all grew closely in large clusters all along the side of the mountain. In peaceful times one would have the patience to carefully examine which herbal plant he needed, but in this case it was an emergency of life and death, time was quickly running out, and a great distance was to be travelled on the way back to Lanka. All these factors played out simultaneously in Hanuman's mind; so there was no time for him to demure and examine each herb and plant like a scholar doing research work for his university thesis. He had to be quick and determined in his decision.

The other reason is that from a distance these herbal plants appeared to glow like a glow-worm, but when Hanuman came closer, this light disappeared. {Refer: Valmiki's Ramayana, Lanka Kand, Canto 74, verse no. 64.}

To better understand this phenomenon, we can take the example of the moon's disc in the sky. From a great distance, from the surface of the earth, the moon appears to shine with a silvery glow, but upon getting closer and landing on its surface it is as ordinary, as full of potholes, as strewn with rocks, and has a landscape that is as wildly naked and foreboding as any other celestial body in the earth's neighbourhood. To wit, the moon shines only from a distance; up close it has a dark body consisting nothing but soil and rock.

So was the case with these herbs. From a distance they seemed to glow with a vague diffused light, but when looked closer they were like ordinary plants. This glow might have been caused by some natural trace element present in them; or probably it was caused by reflection of the refracted light falling upon them from the surrounding snow-clad mountain peaks, or some kind of reflection from heavenly lights resembling the Northern Lights that are seen in the sky near the arctic circle up in the northern hemisphere. But by the time Hanuman approached the plants, this reflection vanished.

Actually Hanuman was directed towards the mountain with the help of the diffused light on its side as he saw it from the sky, for it acted as a beacon for him to help navigate his way. When he landed, he was at sea; he was dumbfounded as now he could not see anything in the all-pervading darkness around him.

²A crucial fact emerges from a careful reading of this verse. Hanuman had gone by a different route on his way to the mountain as nowhere a mention of his flying over Ayodhya is found. But on his return journey he decided to take a detour, a diversion, which took him over the city of Ayodhya.

Why did Hanuman take a different route on his way back? Well, the answer is this: He has had a very close shave on his outward journey when he escaped from the trap laid by Kalnemi literally by the width of his skin. He felt that by this time, Ravana would surely have cooked up something new to trap him, and this time it would be a problem for him as he was burdened with a heavy mountain that he was carrying. There was no point in showing unnecessary dare devilry during such emergency times, and it would be wiser to avoid a difficult and dangerous situation. So he took a new route on his flight way back to Lanka to play it safe, and this detour brought him over Ayodhya.]

दो०. देखा भरत बिसाल अति निसिचर मन अनुमानि ।

बिनु फर सायक मारेउ चाप श्रवन लगि तानि ॥ ५८ ॥

dōhā.

dēkhā bharata bisāla ati nīsicara mana anumāni.

binu phara sāyaka mārē'u cāpa śravana lagi tāni. 58.

When Bharat (the younger brother of Lord Ram) saw a huge form flying in the sky over the city, he thought that it was some kind of nocturnal creature (nīsicara), probably a demon.

So he stringed his bow and pulled it taught to shoot an arrow that had no pointed tip on it at the figure flying overhead¹. (Doha no. 58)

[Note—¹Bharat spent the entire period of fourteen years, during which Lord Ram was in exile in the forest, at a place close to the city of Ayodhya, in its suburbs, living like a hermit, and spending his time in meditation and other spiritual practices. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 323—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 326.}]

But at the same time Bharat was very conscious of his duties and obligations and responsibilities. He kept strict vigil at night to watch for any ominous sign in the sky, to look out for any spy drone hovering over the sky over Ayodhya. When he saw a huge figure coursing through the night sky, a sort of a flying saucer, an Unidentified Flying Object known as an UFO in modern parlance, he became suspicious. What was it, he wondered; is it something dangerous, such as a heavy rock or an explosive device, carried by someone sent by one of the many enemies of his kingdom, who may have dispatched his spy to drop it over the unsuspecting and sleeping city to cause extensive damage to it? Could it be a missile or an asteroid or a meteor or something else like a rocket or some explosive projectile that may prove to be dangerous for the city?

Bharat wished to examine it; he wished to abort a catastrophe before it happened. So he shot a blunt arrow, one without a sharp tip, which would only bring this thing down, and not blast it off the face of the firmament all together. So much the lucky it was for Hanuman, for otherwise the consequences for him are too obvious to be stated in explicit terms.

Now let us visualise this scenario more closely, and make some intelligent guess to arrive at a plausible sequence of events as to what actually might have happened during those crucial moments when Hanuman was cruising in the night sky over the sprawling city of Ayodhya down below.

It appears that some sort of system existed in those ancient times that would be like a radar system of our modern world; it was an integrated system that kept an eye over the city's skyline to detect and intercept any suspicious object flying over it. This vigilance was heightened during night time when chances of an aerial attack by one of the enemies of the kingdom of Ayodhya were great, as compared to daylight hours. This radar system was monitored by Bharat himself who, as the care-taking ruler of Ayodhya in the absence of its rightful king Lord Ram, wanted to ensure foolproof security of the city. Hanuman's bleep on this ancient system of vigilance and defence of the airspace immediately alerted Bharat, as this flying object was most unconventional and odd. It was of a huge size, was cruising at great speed, and its flight trajectory gave an impression that it was a star streaking from the northern borders of the kingdom towards its south, and flying right over the city of Ayodhya.

Deciding to examine what this suspicious-looking UFO was, Bharat shot a sort of an intercepting-missile that would only stop this mysterious object from progressing ahead, instead of destroying it in space. His arrow, in all probability, was like a modern-day missile and other weapon systems that work on computer-based data fed into the projectile at the time of its launch, giving it an ability to self-navigate and hit the desired object with the required force and impact it according to the data pre-fed into its on-board computers.

So, with some fine-tuning and skilful maneuvering, Bharat was able to manipulate his arrow in such a way that instead of blasting the target hit by it and reducing it into small fragments that would disperse in the void of the vast space of the firmament and burning themselves up without harming the city below, it simply stopped its flight and brought it down.

This arrow interrupted the flight of Hanuman and disturbed the dynamics of his flight, navigation and trajectory so much that the target of its strike suddenly lost speed and went into a tailspin, falling to the ground either following a curved parabolic path due to its speed, or it fell as a wild out-of-control tumble because it was suddenly stopped, spinning right and left and making somersaults to make a virtual nose dive and land on the ground below.

And how did Hanuman land on the ground; what happened to him? Was he gravely injured as would naturally happen when struck by a projectile at high speed in the air, and then by the impact of the fall? If not, then what could have possibly happened that saved him? What happened also to the mountain he was carrying?

These questions are answered as a note appended to Chaupai line nos. 1-2 herein below.]

चौ०. परेउ मुरुछि महि लागत सायक । सुमिरत राम राम रघुनायक ॥ १ ॥

सुनि प्रिय बचन भरत तब धाए । कपि समीप अति आतुर आए ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

parē'u muruchi mahi lāgata sāyaka. sumirata rāma rāma raghunāyaka. 1.
suni priya bacana bharata taba dhā'ē. kapi samīpa ati ātura ā'ē. 2.

He (Hanuman) fell down unconscious on the ground after being hit by the arrow, all the while remembering and uttering the holy name of Lord Ram, 'Ram-Ram', repeatedly¹. (1)

When Bharat heard² this name, which was very dear to him, he instantly rushed forward to investigate, and eagerly came near the Kapi (Hanuman) in great haste. (2)

[Note—¹Hanuman landed on the ground and fell 'unconscious'. He lost his consciousness because he had not expected being hit by a projectile while speeding in the sky; the jolt of the sudden strike that stopped his flight midway had caught him unawares and disoriented him; he lost his mental balance and bearing. The fall from a great height added to his mental confusion, and the worry of securing the safety of the herb-bearing mountain exacerbated his anxieties.

This sequence of events indicates that the arrow had hit Hanuman softly, and only with a force that was sufficient enough to stop his further progress and bring him down. Bharat had not intended to destroy the target as noted earlier in Doha no. 57 herein above; his intention was to neutralise it, bring it down to earth, and examine it. It is a natural deduction at which we arrive at because no where it is said that Hanuman had suffered any grave injury from the strike. He was merely 'unconscious'; he just 'fainted'; and that is a natural thing to happen to any person who is suddenly jolted by a close strike and stopped in his path, making him lose control of himself, swoon and fall to the ground.

One important factor appears to have certainly contributed to Hanuman escaping from any major injury to his person. He must have landed on soft soil cushioned by green grass, leafy plants, or some other soft vegetation, such as found in a farmland or a grassy meadow or a lawn of a garden that formed a green belt surrounding the hermitage where Bharat lived on the outskirts of Ayodhya. This is very much possible, because Bharat may have certainly created such an environment around his hermitage to replicate the aura of the surroundings of the forest, with its serenity and greenery and beauty where his beloved brother Lord Ram was spending his time of exile. This soft earth must have acted as a buffer for Hanuman, cushioning the impact of the fall and preventing any serious injury to him.

Another important reason why Hanuman escaped being injured was this: He was continuously chanting the name of Lord Ram. The Lord's divine name has mystical powers, and when a creature invokes it in distress, it extends its natural protection to the caller. It was this invisible protective shield of Lord Ram's holy name that cast its protective cover over Hanuman as he fell; it was his sure protection from any or all harm. In all sooth and without gainsay, this is why he suffered no grave injury except some momentary fainting.

Now, how can we say with certainty that Hanuman was not injured? Well, the answer is simple and straightforward: He would resume his journey shortly, after a little break and a short interview with Bharat.

Another proof of Hanuman not incurring any injury to his person is this: When he met Lord Ram at his camp near the battle-field of Lanka, the Lord did not find any mark of a wound on his body, for if the Lord had observed any he was sure to ask Hanuman about its cause.

And thereafter, after a little while, the battle resumed with its full ferocity the next day, and Hanuman played a leading role in it. It also goes to show that he was fit and fine to face the enemy the very next day of his adventure of bringing the mountain, meaning that he was not bodily injured, as that would have adversely affected his fighting abilities. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 65 where Hanuman strikes a vicious cuff to Kumbhkaran with his clenched fists.}

But what about the 'mountain' he was carrying? Nothing is said anywhere in the text concerning it; so we have to make an intelligent surmise. Hanuman was carrying the herb-bearing mountain aloft on one of his hands as he was cruising through the night sky. He was gripping the mountain from below, perhaps by firmly clasping some sturdy creeper or a protruding outcrop of its rock. When hit by Bharat's arrow, he instinctively intensified his grip over it so that he doesn't lose his charge. When he landed on the ground, this mountain did not break up—because it was made of solid rock that had hardened over time. Some of its surface soil and plants may have shaken off by the force of the impact of the fall to the ground, but no major damage was done to it.

²Bharat heard Hanuman saying Lord Ram's name. It clearly implies that Hanuman was saying it loudly, and not silently, as he fell through the sky, and even after landing on the ground he called out this holy name aloud during the intervening moments of landing and losing consciousness. His call was loud enough for Bharat to hear and pay attention; it was loud enough to be heard over the noise of the fall.

Bharat was already on high alert; as soon as he heard someone calling out Lord Ram's name, he became amazed and sorely alarmed at the same time even as he rushed out to see who has been shot by him by mistake. He had thought that some nocturnal creature, probably a demon, was flying over Ayodhya, but such creatures won't call out the holy name of Lord Ram. So surely something was seriously amiss, thought Bharat as his hairs stood on their ends while he dashed forward to investigate, keeping his fingers crossed, hoping for the best, and praying to the Lord God for mercy and grace.]

बिकल बिलोकि कीस उर लावा । जागत नहिं बहु भाँति जगावा ॥ ३ ॥
मुख मलीन मन भए दुखारी । कहत बचन भरि लोचन बारी ॥ ४ ॥ bikala bilōki kīsa ura lāvā. jāgata nahim̐ bahu bhāṁti jagāvā. 3.

mukha malīna mana bha'e dukhārī. kahata bacana bhari lōcana bārī. 4.

[By the time Bharat came to Hanuman lying unconscious on the ground, he had become certain that the creature whom he had hit was not an enemy but was someone who, in some or the other way, was related to Lord Ram, for otherwise he wouldn't have uttered the Lord's name when in distress and on the threshold of death. This realisation dismayed Bharat extremely, and sorrow and regret and despondency and deep sadness overwhelmed him.]

Bharat observed that the fallen creature was very agitated and seems to be suffering much¹. So Bharat embraced him, but no matter how much he tried to revive him from his unconscious state, he could not. (3)

Bharat was overcome with sadness, sorrow and grief so much so that his face became pale, and his Mana (mind and heart) was shrouded with darkness that intuitively precedes some bad news (because he feared for the worst).

However, he gathered his wits together and said with tears filling his eyes (4) -
--,

[Note—¹Hanuman's suffering was not so much at the physical level of his body as it was at the mental level—for even while he lay unconscious physically, yet his sub-conscious mind continued to work overtime, pricking him and cursing him that he has failed to carry out Lord Ram's mission. He also worried that if he could not reach Lanka in time, and the designated time frame during which the herb would revive Laxman expired, then everything would be lost. These and such like thoughts kept swirling wildly in his mind as he lay unconscious on the ground, making him very uneasy. He was filled with regret and remorse and despondency and hopelessness; he felt helpless and hapless. He silently cursed himself and his life.]

जेहिं बिधि राम बिमुख मोहि कीन्हा । तेहिं पुनि यह दारुन दुख दीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥
जौ मोरें मन बच अरु काया । प्रीति राम पद कमल अमाया ॥ ६ ॥
तौ कपि होउ बिगत श्रम सूला । जौ मो पर रघुपति अनुकूला ॥ ७ ॥ सुनत बचन उठि बैठ कपीसा । कहि जय जयति कोसलाधीसा ॥ ८ ॥

jēhim̐ bidhi rāma bimukha mōhi kīnhā. tēhim̐ puni yaha dārūna dukha dīnhā.
5.

jaur̐ mōrēm̐ mana baca aru kāyā. prīti rāma pada kamala amāyā. 6.

tau kapi hō'u bigata śrama sūlā. jaum mō para raghupati anukūlā. 7.
sunata bacana uṭhi baiṭha kapīsā. kahi jaya jayati kōsalādhīsā. 8.

Bharat sadly observed, ‘Why, it is the same malevolent Creator who had earlier devised my separation from Lord Ram, who has now once again shown his harsh and un-emotional character by giving you this great suffering! (5)

[Staking the gain accruing to him for all the spiritual practices done by him, and invoking their combined rewards to bear on him right now in order to make Hanuman regain consciousness, Bharat implored most earnestly and pleadingly—] If I have true affection for Lord Ram and true devotion for his holy feet, if my affection and devotion is unpretentious, selfless, honest and without deceit, if it involves my whole being that includes my heart and mind, my words and my actions, as well as my body, and added to it if Lord Ram (Raghupati) is indeed pleased with me and favourable towards me (and has not held me guilty for all the pain and suffering he had to undergo when my cursed and unfortunate mother Kaikeyi sent him to forest)—then I invoke the combined good effects of all these blessings to pray that let it so happen that the Kapi (Hanuman) is freed from his weariness caused by the stress of the journey, as well as any other form of suffering and misery caused to him, so that he is revived; whatever be the cause of his fainting should be nullified.¹’ (6-7)

No sooner had Bharat said these words, than Hanuman, the chief amongst the monkeys (kapīsā), got up with a spring, raising a cry of applause for the glory of Lord Ram and the majestic powers of his holy name, proclaiming ‘Hail the glory of the king of Kaushal (“kōsalādhīsā”; Lord Ram), Glory to him, again and again repeatedly².’ (8)

[Note—¹We note here that Bharat assumes Hanuman has fainted because he was tired due to the stress of the journey, especially when he was carrying a weighty mountain on his hand, and so when the arrow hit him he was dazed and numbed by its impact, because whatever energy that was left in him was sapped by this sudden jolt, causing him to lose his bearing, swoon, and fall down.

Then Bharat thought that may be there was some other reason for Hanuman’s experiencing excess of stress that led to his exhaustion and his consequent inability to resist the arrow’s impact and continue with his journey.

Therefore, while staking the blessings and all the good rewards that accrued to him for his meritorious deeds and spiritual practices to bear directly upon Hanuman now and facilitate in his quick recovery, he uses an all-inclusive caveat by saying that “whatever be the cause of his fainting” should be nullified.

Let us examine this development of Hanuman’s fainting more closely, and see what the precarious condition in which Lord Ram was during that night, and what subtle spiritual message is intended in this episode.

It was the second calamitous set-back to Lord Ram during the short period of one single night. Back near the battle-field Lanka, his dear brother Laxman, who had shared his pains and grief arm-in-arm, being his constant companion and comrade and soul-mate and aide in thick and thin, was also lying on the ground unconscious and on the verge of death. And the Lord’s other trusted aide Hanuman, his other constant companion and comrade-in-arm during the fateful war, was lying in a similar condition far away in Ayodhya.

Laxman had Lord Ram himself by his side, and Hanuman had the Lord's representative in the person of Bharat by his side. In effect and for all practical purposes, Bharat was an image of Lord Ram and his love for the creature. Bharat was extremely dear to Lord Ram more than anyone else, and Lord Ram was dear to Bharat more than anyone else. Here is the proof: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 169 (these are the words of mother Kaushalya); (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184 (these are the words of all the citizens of Ayodhya, including sage Vasistha, the chief minister of the kingdom, and of the queen mother); (iii) Chaupai line nos. 3 and 8 that precede Doha no. 208 (these are the words of sage Bharadwaj); (iv) Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 210 (these are also the words of sage Bharadwaj); (v) Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 266 (these are also the words of the guru of the gods, sage Vrihaspati, who explicitly calls Bharat a "shadow" or an "image" of Lord Ram); (vi) Chaupai line nos. 2 and 5 that precede Doha no. 289 (these are also the words of king Janak); and finally, (vii) Doha no. 326 (these are concluding verses of Ayodhya Kand). Say, what more proof is needed when it is proclaimed that "Bharat and Ram are reflections of each other".

Well then, coming back to our narrative, Lord Ram was by the side of unconscious Laxman, and Bharat was by the side of unconscious Hanuman. Now the difference arises, a difference that has a profound spiritual importance and a message for all of us. It is to be noted here that inspite of the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram himself being by his side, wishing most earnestly for his recovery, Laxman could not be revived. But Hanuman was instantly revived when an image and ardent devotee of the same Supreme Being in the form of Bharat invoked the holy name of the Lord and prayed for his recovery!

How wonderful and fantastic it is when we compare the two events, and how clear is the implied message—for it unambiguously and irrefutably shows that the Lord's devotee is more powerful and more empowered with spiritual powers that he possesses by the virtue of his devotion for the Lord than the Lord himself is, and that the Lord's holy name is also singularly more powerful and profoundly more majestic than the principle to whom this name belongs, i.e. the Lord himself. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Doha no. 265 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that follow it; and (ii) Baal Kand, from Doha no. 23—Doha no. 25.}

This is why Laxman could not be revived while Hanuman could be—for Bharat had prayed for Hanuman's recovery, and his prayer and request cannot go in vain no matter what happens, because Bharat was a devotee of Lord Ram, he had the Lord enshrined in his heart like a deity is in a temple, and was constantly repeating the holy name of the Lord every single moment of his existence.

These two closely related incidences are intended to motivate and inspire a creature to realise and understand the fact for his own sake that he will be the wiser if he becomes a devotee of the Lord, if he remembers the Lord and his holy name in his life, because then there is no fear for him, because he is assured of constant protection and solace.

The creature must realise and understand that relying on the Lord's grace and blessings and benevolence and munificence is a sure-shot formula for happiness and joy in his life; it's a magical wand, a charm that would help him tide over all his secret worries, his concealed fears and his hidden consternations in life. It would give him strength, courage and support to face all adversities in life; it will make life so much the easier for him to live; it would help him to confidently face the vagaries and uncertainties life; it will give him stability and a rock-like foundation to stand upon; it will make him feel that he is not alone in this world, but has a powerful, albeit an invisible, hand to support and protect him.

And last but not the least is this resounding message: “that at the end of every dark night there is the dawn of a day”; “that no matter how doomed the present is, the tomorrow is going to be bright and cheerful for those who have faith in the Lord God”. The Lord God will take upon himself the suffering of his devotee, he himself would sacrifice his own happiness but ensure that his devotee is happy. In the episode concerning Laxman and Hanuman fainting, we observe that Lord Ram has suffered and lamented gravely; perhaps worse was in store for both Laxman and Hanuman if one were to leave the Creator, whom Bharat calls stone-hearted and harsh, to have his own way, but their destined suffering was suffered by Lord Ram instead, thereby reducing its gravity and intensity, and the malevolent Creator could not harm them as he would have otherwise liked it to happen—because he is “harsh and emotionless and stone-hearted”.

It was both Bharat’s and Hanuman’s unwavering faith in Lord Ram’s holy name and devotion to him that saved the day for everyone, for first Bharat’s faith saved Hanuman as we have read in the present verse, and this subsequently paved the way for Laxman’s revival because a little while later Hanuman arrived at Lanka within the designated time for the administration of the herb brought by him that saved Laxman’s life, as we shall soon read in Doha no. 61 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that follow it herein below.

²Now, let us close our eyes for some moments and apply a basic knowledge of science to examine closely the event of Hanuman being hit by Bharat’s arrow and the physical forces that came into play: what might have happened during the crucial moments when the arrow struck him, and what might have been the cause of his quick revival in such a fit state of mind and body as if nothing had happened.

Hanuman was constantly chanting, constantly humming Lord Ram’s holy name as he cruised through the sky. This chanting and humming produced vibrations that radiated out from his body in the form of sound waves that covered his whole body as a blanket. It was virtually like a moving dynamo which produced electromagnetic energy that moved along with its source, i.e. Hanuman as he cruised through the firmament. Added to it was his speed, which created kinetic energy. And then there was heat energy and static electric energy produced by friction with the air as he and his mountain moved with great speed across the atmosphere, rubbing its layers of air and gases.

All these physical forces interacted with each other in a complex way, and the pocket of hot air that was created around Hanuman as he zoomed through the sky, helped to trap these energies tightly around so that when he moved ahead he dragged these energies along with him.

To wit, Hanuman was surrounded by a shield of stupendous energy created by many physical forces acting simultaneously and trapped around his body in the air pocket thus created, and this shield moved along with him as a shimmering glow of incandescent light. Therefore, from a distance, from the perspective of an observer on the ground, he appeared like a fast moving comet, or meteor streaking across the night sky.

It has been established that even earth produces a humming sound heard from space, and it is caused by a combined effect of the earth’s magnetic field and its rotation on its axis. The earth also has charged particles in its outer atmosphere that help to protect it from many harmful radiations hitting it from outer space. So it was something similar with Hanuman.

Bharat's arrow was fully charged with energy too; it was meant to strike and bring down the object it hit. In today's modern world we are aware of heat-seeking cruise missiles, and we also know that in the darkness of the night their path appears to be like a fire-ball moving rapidly in a particular direction. So was the case with Bharat's arrow too.

It rapidly closed in on Hanuman and rammed into him. What would one expect? There was an exceptionally bright flash of light as the two phenomenal energy sources, moving in opposite directions, clashed with each other. It was like two high-tension overhead electric cables touching each other over farmland due to some cause: there would be a sudden burst of dazzling light, for a fleeting moment, and then everything would be dark again as the electric circuit snaps.

This above scenario would give us an idea what might have actually occurred during those crucial moments when Bharat's arrow hit Hanuman: There was a mighty flash of lightening; the energy crippled the arrow and reduced it to a mangled and twisted piece of metal that either vaporized in air due to the heat generated by the impact, or it fell to the ground in bits and pieces like debris of an exploded object falling on earth from the sky. It is also possible that Bharat had visualized this scenario beforehand, and since his objective was to investigate this mysterious object flying over the night sky of Ayodhya rather than blow it out, the arrow he shot was a special one which could withstand the impact and its consequences in that it would not disintegrate, but instead cling to the object it hit and bring it down. So this arrow clung to Hanuman and pulled him down in such a way that he glided softly to the ground.

How come this was made possible? Yes, it was made possible because of the upward thrust that the arrow provided from below to the weighty body of Hanuman as it plummeted down towards the earth, much like choppers or reusable rockets used for space missions of the modern world use the upward thrust of their in-built rocket-engines to make a soft landing after finishing their mission. These modern machines don't dash to the ground as this would break them to pieces; they make a soft and delicate landing.

But at the moment when the arrow struck Hanuman, the protective shield of energy trapped around his body was short-circuited; the arrow punched a hole through them and ruptured the air pocket that trapped these energies. As a result, the energies began hissing out of this fissure; they began to dissipate and depressurize the protective shield. The violent impact of the arrow deflected Hanuman from his chosen flight path and pushed him in the direction the arrow pointed. This change of course was aided by the thrust exerted by the escaping spout of energies through the hole punched by the arrow; the thrust thus created by them was in the direction opposite to the point where the arrow struck. The combined effect was that Hanuman went on an uncontrolled spin, spiraling down towards earth in a sort of vortex with its base resting somewhere close to the ground.

Though the shock of the arrow's strike dazed Hanuman, yet he continued to chant Lord Ram's name—apropos: Chaupai line no. 1 that follows Doha no. 58 herein above. And this saved him from a worse fate.

When Bharat realized he had committed some grave mistake (apropos: Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that follow Doha no. 58), he immediately used his skills to 'repair the damage caused by his arrow to the protective shield around Hanuman' much like a modern-day mechanic would repair the unintended damage caused to a flying drone, or some other thing that is very important and has to be urgently retrieved, in order to make it functional once again. So Bharat plugged the hole and sealed it once again. How did he do it? He invoked the holy name of Lord Ram because he knew of its majestic mystical powers to heal and repair, as well as all the benefits that accrued to him by his meritorious deeds, and his other spiritual and religious practices. He focused them all at one point like a welder focuses his welding-torch to weld broken joints.

Once the hole was sealed, once the repair was done, the energy that was being continuously generated by Hanuman by his incessant chanting of Lord Ram's holy name, but was leaking out till that moment, began accumulating once again within the 'healed' or 'repaired' shield surrounding him, and sooner rather than later, he came to himself; he was revived back to life.

And when he did come to, when he did regain consciousness, it was as if nothing had happened. It was like the case of a creature living in hibernation mode for some time when all his physical activities cease and his metabolism stops for the period, but when he wakes up he is up and going with the same energy and enthusiasm as when he had first entered into hibernation mode. This is also the way Yogis (those ascetics who practice meditation) manage to live for long periods in a suspended mode when all the physical activities of the body are put on hold.

So in this way Hanuman also lived in a suspended animation mode for the period between the moment the arrow first struck him and when he was revived. Remember: Hanuman was an incarnation of Lord Shiva's eleventh form known as Rudra, and Shiva is the patron deity of all Yogis; there is no one more proficient in practicing Yoga than Lord Shiva. So it was quite natural for Hanuman to do something to which he was accustomed, and survive the ordeal.

The bubbling energy and great enthusiasm for doing Lord Ram's work, which was so characteristic of Hanuman, was there in its prime form once again as it was prior to the time when he was hit by the arrow. Rather, it was made more vigorous and forceful as he discovered that it was this one factor—that he was on the Lord's mission and that he was continuously chanting his holy name—that had saved his life that day. It renewed his commitment; it renewed his devotion and faith, making them more robust; it invigorated him; and it made him raring to go instantly with a burning zeal and confidence in Lord Ram.]

सो०. लीन्ह कपिहि उर लाइ पुलकित तनु लोचन सजल ।

प्रीति न हृदयं समाइ सुमिरि राम रघुकुल तिलक ॥ ५९ ॥

sōraṭhā.

līnha kapihi ura lā'i pulakita tanu lōcana sajala.

prīti na hr̥dayaṁ samā'i sumiri rāma raghukula tilaka. 59.

As soon as the Kapi (Hanuman) regained consciousness, Bharat eagerly embraced him most affectionately¹; his body was thrilled and his eyes welled up with tears (of happiness and for thanksgiving).

Emotions of affection and love for Lord Ram swelled so much in Bharat's inner-self when he remembered the Lord that he could not contain them in his heart (as a result of which they overflowed to cause excess of thrill in his body, as well as to make tears ooze out of their glands and fill his eyes). (Doha no. 59)

[Note—¹Really indeed, Hanuman comes out as being the single most fortunate, privileged and lucky character in the whole Story of the Ramayan in as much as he was blessed with the honour of receiving an embrace from Lord Ram more than once*, and as if still something was wanting, he is now being embraced by the Lord's "image" and his own devotee-brother Bharat himself to complete the picture of his exceptional good luck and unique blessedness. {*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, (ii) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 30; (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 33; and (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 62.

And, how does it feel to embrace a great devotee of Lord Ram? The answer is here—one feels thrilled, and tears well up in eyes. Since Hanuman is a great and blessed devotee of Lord Ram, what embracing such a devotee feels like is being experienced by Bharat here, and was experienced by both Vibhishan and Hanuman earlier when they met while Hanuman was in Lanka during the latter's expedition to search Sita (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 6). In this latter instance we find that 'both' felt exhilarated because 'both' were ardent devotees of Lord Ram.]

चौ०. तात कुसल कहु सुखनिधान की । सहित अनुज अरु मातु जानकी ॥ १ ॥

कपि सब चरित समास बखाने । भए दुखी मन महुँ पछिताने ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tāta kusala kahu sukhanidhāna kī. sahita anuja aru mātu jānakī. 1.

kapi saba carita samāsa bakhānē. bha'e dukhī mana mahuṁ pachitānē. 2.

After the exchange of initial greetings and introductions, Bharat asked Hanuman about the welfare of Lord Ram: 'My dear (tāta)! Tell me about the well-being of Lord Ram, who is an embodiment of joy and happiness, along with the good news of the younger brother (Laxman; "anuja")¹ and mother Sita (Janki; "mātu jānakī")².' (1)

The Kapi (Hanuman) briefed Bharat about everything, and this tidings filled the latter with extreme sorrow, sadness and gloom; he felt very despondent and lamented gravely³. (2)

[Note—¹While enquiring about Laxman Bharat simply uses the word "anuja", meaning 'younger brother'. It therefore assumes a dual meaning; it refers to Laxman as Lord Ram's younger brother, as well as Bharat's younger brother.

²Laxman's mother Sumitra had also advised him to treat Sita as his 'mother' and Lord Ram as his 'father' at the time of granting her permission to him to accompany them to the forest—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 75.

Hanuman too calls Sita his mother repeatedly and in quick succession during their first interaction in the Ashok grove of Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Doha no. 14 along with Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede it; (ii)

Doha no. 16 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede it; and (iii) Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 17.

Did Sita acknowledge that Hanuman was her 'son'? Surely she did so—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 16; and Chaupai line nos. 2, 9 that precede Doha no. 17.

³Bharat sorely regretted and intensely lamented that he could not help his beloved brother Lord Ram in his time of need; that it was he who had been the cause of the Lord having had to face such hardship and trouble in the forest. The bad news of Sita's abduction and its attendant sufferings for Lord Ram, the bad tidings of Laxman's fainting and the horrors of the war that was underway in Lanka—all cast a pall of deep gloom on Bharat's mind. He became pale and forlorn; he was dismayed and distressed beyond description. But what could he do; he had no choices left at that time but to pray and hope for the best.

A very pertinent question that comes to the mind is this: Why did Bharat not decide to send his well-trained and equipped army of the kingdom of Ayodhya to Lanka to help Lord Ram? Well, the answer is simple and easy to guess: no time was left for it to be actually implemented in practice.

The reason is this: Lanka was very far away, and the army would take a lot of time to reach it by first marching across the huge distance from Ayodhya to the shore of the southern ocean, and then crossing it to land on the shores of Lanka. This was impossible to achieve in a short frame of time because the war was already raging.

So, Bharat drew a deep breath in utter frustration and regret even as he lamented and grieved most woefully. But he recovered himself quickly, for it was a waste of time allowing emotions to take control over wisdom and prudence. Hence, Bharat decided to give some practical help instead, and in the present circumstances it was that all haste must be made to ensure Hanuman reaches Lanka in time with the mountain to save Laxman. Bharat also knew that if Laxman is saved, no harm would come to his beloved brother Lord Ram, for he knew well the abilities of Laxman.

Therefore, he devised a method to send Hanuman extremely fast, and it was to ask the latter to sit on his arrow which will move so fast through the sky that it would make up for the time that has been lost till now, enabling Hanuman to land in Lanka well in time.

All these things are narrated in the verses that follow herein below.]

अहह दैव मैं कत जग जायउँ । प्रभु के एकहु काज न आयउँ ॥ ३ ॥

जानि कुअवसरु मन धरि धीरा । पुनि कपि सन बोले बलबीरा ॥ ४ ॥

तात गहरु होइहि तोहि जाता । काजु नसाइहि होत प्रभाता ॥ ५ ॥

चढु मम सायक सैल समेता । पठवौं तोहि जहँ कृपानिकेता ॥ ६ ॥

ahaha daiva mairṁ kata jaga jāya'uṁ. prabhu kē ēkahu kāja na āya'uṁ. 3.

jāni ku'avasaru mana dhari dhīrā. puni kapi sana bōlē balabīrā. 4.

tāta gaharu hō'ihi tōhi jātā. kāju nasā'ihī hōta prabhātā. 5.

caṛhu mama sāyaka saila samētā. paṭhavaum tōhi jaham̐ kṛpānikētā. 6.

Bharat lamented sorely, cursing himself that he could not be of any help or service to Lord Ram. He said with a sad and distressed voice with genuine grief and despondency in his expressions, ‘Alas oh God; why was I born in this world as a cursed one who could not even be of a single service to the Lord, nor could extend any kind of help to him?’¹ (3)

Bharat paused for a while as he pondered over the situation and its gravity, and realising that the time was not favourable for yielding to negative thoughts and emotions as they would be of no help, the brave and courageous Bharat gathered his wits together and said to Hanuman after a while, (4) ---

‘My dear, you may be late in your journey back, and everything would be ruined if the night ends and dawn appears’². (5)

[Therefore, not much time is to be wasted, and all haste is to be made.]

Hence, I suggest that you mount my arrow with your mountain, and I shall shoot it to send you back speedily to where Lord Ram, who is a treasury of mercy and grace, is present. [Well, I will send you virtually with the speed of sound as the arrow thunders across the sky towards Lanka. You can rest assured of that.]³ (6)

[Note—¹Bharat has lamented very gravely in a similar fashion when he came back to Ayodhya from his maternal uncle’s home to learn about Lord Ram’s exile to forest. He had cursed his birth then too for being the cause of Lord Ram’s exile. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Doha no. 160; (ii) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 161; (iii) Doha no. 162; (iv) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 167—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 168; (v) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 178; (vi) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 179; and etc.}

²This shows that either Bharat was briefed by Hanuman of the urgency of reaching Lanka before dawn to make the herb effective, or this technical detail was already known to Bharat.

Bharat thought to himself: “Hanuman must be exhausted by the journey and the hit by the arrow. He may be feeling sore in his muscles, and there is no time for rest. It would be very hard for him to travel a long distance with a sore body which has to carry this heavy mountain under the prevailing situation. Even if wishes to travel on his own strength, it will be slow progress as he would be bogged down by the weight of this great mountain. Besides this, he has already lost some crucial moments during this sad episode, and any further delay would jeopardise Laxman’s chances of survival. So I must help him. If I send him riding my arrow then it would be very helpful, as, one, he would have time to relax, two, he would arrive in time, and three, when Lord Ram sees the arrow and enquires him about it, the Lord will know that I had sent him astride this arrow, and this bit of information would tell the Lord though I was so unfortunate that I could not extend any help to him but at least I could offer this small service as a token of my unflinching love and constant remembrance of him. I’ll be glad if the Lord comes to know how much I miss him.”

To wit, Bharat devised this device of offering to send Hanuman astride his arrow to help him overcome his guilty conscious that “he was of no help or service to Lord Ram”—apropos: verse no. 3 herein above.

So Bharat said to Hanuman: ‘If you are not able to reach before dawn then it would not be possible to revive Laxman as the herb would lose its effectiveness. Already so much time has been wasted while you were unconscious. I understand that you must be fatigued and must be having some muscular soreness due to your falling down to the ground as well as the stress incurred by carrying the heavy mountain in your hand. This mountain would act as a drag on you, slowing you down considerably and sapping your energy further. The result would be that you might be late in arriving in time. So I suggest you ride piggy-back on my arrow which I shall shoot in the direction of Lanka. This will make your journey comfortable and easy, and when you land there you will be in the proper frame of mind and body to enter the battle refreshed the next day.’]

सुनि कपि मन उपजा अभिमाना । मोरें भार चलिहि किमि बाना ॥ ७ ॥
राम प्रभाव बिचारि बहोरी । बंदि चरन कह कपि कर जोरी ॥ ८ ॥

suni kapi mana upajā abhimānā. mōrēm bhāra calihi kimi bānā. 7.
rāma prabhāva bicāri bahōrī. bandi carana kaha kapi kara jōrī. 8.

When Bharat made this offer (that he would like to send Hanuman back to Lanka astride his arrow if he would ride it with the mountain in his hand), Hanuman wondered how an arrow would be able to move speedily while carrying the weight of his body (along with that of the mountain). (7)

But he soon recovered his senses and concluded that it would be made possible by the virtue of Lord Ram’s glory and grace, so he should not doubt it nor wonder at it².

Then he bowed at the feet of Bharat and said humbly: --- (8)

[Note—¹Another reason why Hanuman overcame his doubt that Bharat would be able to actually shoot an arrow that would be strong and powerful enough to carry the combined weight of his own body and that of the mountain all the way to Lanka is that just a while ago he had witnessed the stupendous abilities and astounding powers of Bharat when an arrow shot by him brought Hanuman down. Not only that, Bharat had quickly revived him back to his former energetic self in such a miraculous way that he did not feel the after-effects of the deadly blow of the arrow or of the fall to the ground.]

दो०. तव प्रताप उर राखि प्रभु जैहउँ नाथ तुरंत ।
अस कहि आयसु पाइ पद बंदि चलेउ हनुमंत ॥ ६० (क) ॥
भरत बाहु बल सील गुन प्रभु पद प्रीति अपार । मन महुँ जात सराहत पुनि पुनि पवनकुमार ॥ ६० (ख) ॥

dōhā.

tava pratāpa ura rākhi prabhu jaiha'uṁ nātha turanta.
asa kahi āyasu pā'i pada bandi calē'u hanumanta. 60 (a).
bharata bāhu bala sīla guna prabhu pada prīti apāra.
mana mahum̐ jāta sarāhata puni puni pavanakumāra. 60 (b).

[Hanuman replied to Bharat—] ‘Oh Lord! I shall enshrine your majesty’s glory in my heart, and proceed speedily (to reach Lord Ram)¹.

[To wit, you need not worry; I am hale and hearty. Please don't feel afraid about my safety. No one could have stopped me except you, as you are an image of Lord Ram himself. By bowing to you I am symbolically bowing to my beloved Lord Ram. So have no fears; I will reach there in time.]'

Saying this and obtaining Bharat's permission, Hanuman bowed his head at his feet and started on his journey once again, with great firmness of purpose, strength of resolution, and vigour of action. (Doha no. 60-a)

The son of the wind god (Hanuman) was so exceptionally impressed by Bharat and his exemplary character that on his way back to Lord Ram, he kept on thinking of Bharat most reverentially all along the way, about the strength and might of his arms, about his polite, friendly and courteous nature, about his virtues and glories, and about the depth and intensity of his love for Lord Ram.

Hanuman repeatedly praised Bharat for these stellar virtues. (Doha no. 60-b)

[Note—¹One practical reason why Hanuman chose to go alone without the aid of riding Bharat's arrow, and probably it is also the reason why Bharat granted him permission though it would mean a bit difficult journey for Hanuman, is this:

When Lord Ram, who would be eagerly waiting for Hanuman's return, and in all probability would be watching the sky for signs of him, finds that he was riding an arrow, the Lord would be alarmed. He would think that some enemy had captured Hanuman and tied him to the arrow to force him to take this missile to where the Lord and his army were, and then explode the weapon in an attempt to wipe them out.

Or the Lord would think that Hanuman was gravely wounded and devised this contraption to come there, and this would cause immense pain to the heart of the Lord as he would lament that Hanuman had to suffer injury for him.

The Lord's confidence in Hanuman's valour and ability would be shaken, and also out of pity for his sufferings and weakness, or exhaustion caused by the arduous task of bringing the heavy mountain from afar, the Lord would henceforth feel reluctant to employ Hanuman in any combat, preferring to give him some rest. As a result, Hanuman's skills during the war would not be fully used. That would be disastrous for everyone, as a powerful warrior would be inadvertently side-lined or neglected, and his martial skills would be not fully exploited.

Even if none of the above possibilities actually happened, still there was a certain chance that Lord Ram may at least enquire about the arrow, and then when Hanuman tells him about Bharat, the Lord would be plunged in a new bout of grief and sorrows as he remembers his dear and loving brother.

The situation on the ground at Lanka was very delicate and serious; no newer emotions ought to be aroused in the bosom of Lord Ram that would negatively impact his mind and disturb him, even in the least. The episode of Laxman's fainting must have already sapped Lord Ram's energy and hurt his emotions enough, so nothing should be done again to worsen things further by making him plunge in a new vortex of sorrow generated by the memory of Bharat.

The wisest thing then would be not to remind Lord Ram of Bharat or his native Ayodhya while the ferocious war rages, so that he can concentrate all his energies on the battle-front and the war that he has to fight with zeal; it had to be ensured that he remains un-encumbered by negative emotions of remembering his far-away land, his family members, his loving brothers Bharat and Shatrughan etc. as they are bound to disturb his mind, making him feel sad and overcome with regret and grief, as they would be counter-productive at this juncture.]

चौ०. उहाँ राम लछिमनहि निहारी । बोले बचन मनुज अनुसारी ॥ १ ॥

अर्ध राति गइ कपि नहिं आयउ । राम उठाइ अनुज उर लायउ ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

uhāṁ rāma lachimanahi nihārī. bōlē bacana manuḥa anusārī. 1.

ardha rāti ga'i kapi nahirṁ āya'u. rāma uṭhā'i anuja ura lāya'u. 2.

* In the meantime, there (in Lanka) Lord Ram watched Laxman gloomily (as he lay unconscious and critically wounded before him), with great sadness and despondency reflecting in his countenance. The Lord, behaving like an ordinary human being¹, lamented gravely for him, and in his sorrows he said the following remorseful words - -- (1)

‘It is past midnight, and the Kapi (Hanuman) has not come back (with the herb which could revive Laxman).’

Saying these woeful words expressing extreme sadness and grief, the Lord lifted Laxman and clasped his body to his own bosom². (2)

* {Let us—the narrator of this fantastic and wondrous Story, as well as its listener, the author and his reader—imagine that we are travelling in some sort of a Time Machine that makes us travel through time and space, back in an age long past, extremely rapidly, almost in the time taken to blink an eye. This Machine has some special and distinguishing qualities—it transports us over long distances of space in a very short span of time of a few hours; it accelerates and decelerates very speedily; it can move forward and backward at stupendous speed and also stand still in the air to monitor developments on the ground below; and it can take the travellers to their destinations at their own pace and convenience.

What proof do we have for the above observations concerning the Time Machine, and that we are travelling in it? Well, there are very obvious and ample proofs if we just pause a while to look at things more closely.

First let us see about the ability of this Time Machine to traverse great distances in a short time. A short while ago we find ourselves in Lanka, witnessing that moment in the night when the wounded Laxman was lying unconscious before Lord Ram, and the medicine man named Sushen, who was brought from inside the city, prescribed the herb which could revive Laxman, but it was located far-away in the northern mountains. Hanuman was ordered to bring it. Now, it was a huge distance that had to be covered in a small time slot; this mountain was located thousands of miles away from the land of Lanka, far away in the north of the mainland. First going to that place and then coming back from there doubled the distance needed to be covered, and everything had to be done within a few hours of darkness, between the hours of the early night after sunset and the hours late in the night that preceded dawn of the next day when the sky was still dark and the sun was yet far away below the horizon.

So, we have first become a witness of the events on the battle-field of Lanka and watch Laxman being injured, and then Hanuman being commissioned to bring the herb from the northern mountains. Then we leave Lanka at this point of time to travel alongside Hanuman all along to the northern mountain, deep inside the range of lofty mountains to somewhere near its northern fringes, somewhere near Mt. Kailash, where the mountain with the needed herb was located. And let us remember that in the meantime we have witnessed the incident of the demon Kalnemi trying to trap and kill Hanuman. Some time is lost in Kalnemi's fictitious hermitage, and some more time is wasted in searching for the herb in vain. Finally, realising that the time was fast running out, Hanuman plucks the mighty mountain from the ground and starts his long journey back to Lanka.

We accompany him as he takes a detour and flies over the city of Ayodhya where we see him being shot by Bharat's arrow, and we record what transpired there and how he was revived back to life by Bharat's intercession, we witness Hanuman's interaction with Bharat, and then we resume our journey back to Lanka by the side of Hanuman who was cruising through the night sky in great haste like a streaking star.

Since we are accompanying Hanuman and observing the developments as scribes and witnesses, it will now be easy for us to understand why this present verse starts with the following phrase: "In the meantime, there (in Lanka) Lord Ram watched Laxman gloomily, with great sadness reflecting in his countenance ---". It is because we will now be describing what is happening at a place that is far away in Lanka while we are still in the midst of the journey with Hanuman who is sailing through the firmament of the night. Remember: Hanuman is still on his way and we are with him, and not with Lord Ram and Laxman at Lanka. So we have to use words and phrases that convey the idea that we are then, at that moment, talking about something happening far away, at some distant place.

This indicates that this Time Machine of ours is equipped with some wondrous instruments that keep us updated with news from the battle-field: These equipments now tell us about how Lord Ram is grieving for Laxman while Hanuman is fast approaching him with the herb still rooted in the mountain, and a while ago they made us aware of Ravana approaching Kalnemi and forcing him to become a false hermit in an attempt to get rid of Hanuman.

An important clarification is needed here regarding the way we travel to record the events, and the way Hanuman travels to bring the herb. We are travelling in our Time Machine, while Hanuman is travelling independently on his own power; to wit, Hanuman and we, the scribes and witnesses, are travelling independently. This is why Hanuman could not be warned of the impending danger from Kalnemi because he was travelling separately from us!

Then we come to the next point about this Time Machine, that it has the ability to stand still in the air like a hover-craft or a drone to record the events on the land below from a safe distance up in the sky in such a way that its presence remains secret. From its perch high up in the sky, this Time Machine can record sound and videos of what's being said and done down on the ground below, made possible with the help of special devices having sensitive sensors. Don't we have geo-stationary satellite today that aren't seen by us but which can map even small areas with great clarity, and eavesdrop on private conversation by means of special microphones equipped with secret sensors. These spying activities are standard practice employed world-wide in espionage.

Therefore we conclude that this Time Machine had some remote sensing and recording device that did the trick for the scribe, the narrator or the author of this wonderful Story, and the witnesses, the listeners and the readers, who were aboard it.

Hence, when we narrate about the incidents concerning Kalnemi and Bharat, as well as the uprooting of the mountain by Hanuman, we can say with positive authority that they are trust-worthy accounts as to what had actually happened then, and not something cooked-up as an imaginary cock-and-bull story, for they are a first-hand account that was recorded for posterity by the scribe in such a way that none of the parties concerned with the Story, either the hero Hanuman or Kalnemi and Bharat, could get the wind of the proceedings being recorded.

The next point about this miraculous Time Machine is this: “it can take the travellers to their destinations at their own pace”. Well, it is easy to understand what is meant here. The ‘traveller’ is the reader of this fascinating Story. The incidents that are covered by the ‘scribe’, who happens to be the narrator or the author of this Story, are recorded in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 54—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 62. It is the period between Meghanad hitting Laxman with his powerful spear when the latter fell down on the ground unconscious, and the time when Laxman was revived back to life and Sushen, the doctor, was safely put back in Lanka by Hanuman.

Now, different readers would read these verses at different speeds, at their own paces. Some will finish reading them in one sitting, and the time taken in this read also depends upon an individual’s reading speed; some others would read them in pieces in a day or two; and still there are some others who would spread this reading over many days or weeks. So therefore, the same set of incidents are virtually being made known to different individuals at different speeds, which symbolically means that these individuals are travelling in the Time Machine at different speeds!

In our modern world we are used to hearing about ‘Artificial Intelligence’ and ‘Virtual Reality’, so why wonder about the existence of this fantastic ‘Time Machine’ during an age when air-planes could travel without the help of a physical pilot, directed by the mere wish of the chief passenger aboard, as is evident in the case of the self-driven air-plane known as the ‘Pushpak Viman’ that was used by Lord Ram and his entire entourage to return to Ayodhya directly from Lanka after the Lord’s victory. The scribes of yore used some variation of such Time Machines, in existence at the time of the period of their writing, to record for posterity great wars and singularly important epoch-changing developments in a truthful manner, in the actual way they happened, without any kind of tampering with facts, or manipulating details to suit their own whims and fancies.

Thus, the account of the great Story of the Ramayan that has come down to us from Tulsidas in the form of ‘Ram Charit Manas’, or from Veda Vyas as ‘Adhyatma Ramayan, is true and correct. As for some variations in their details, it is because the cycle of creation—right from its origin, through its development and ending with its conclusion—runs in an endless rotation like a gigantic wheel set in slow motion by its cosmic creator known by the name of Brahm, the Supreme Being. As the Wheel turns and completes one cycle, to go on to its next cycle of rotation, it is quite possible that at a particular point of its rotation, at a specific point of time when it reaches a specific point in its rotation, the incident that occurred in its second rotation may vary in its details of happening and take some different shade of colour than what it looked like during the previous cycle. This results in variations in some finer details, some minor aspects, within the general framework of the Story of the Ramayan; but these slight differences do not affect the general structure and the outline of the Story. This fact has been recorded by Tulsidas himself in ‘Ram Charit Manas’—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 33 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 114; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 122; and (iv) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 124.

Another reason for variation in finer details of the Story is that each bard or poet who decided to record it did it according to how he understood and saw it, so that one aspect was highlighted by one scribe, and another aspect by another scribe, giving rise to different versions of the same Story. This fact is explicitly said in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 33 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 124.

Coming back to our narrative, till this point of time we have read (from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 54—to Doha no. 55) that Laxman was lying unconscious on the ground after being hit by a powerful spear used by Meghanad against him, and Hanuman was ordered to go to the northern mountains to bring a herb that could neutralise the deadly effect of Meghanad's weapon and revive Laxman. Then we have read how Hanuman was shot by Bharat on the suspicion that he was some unknown intruder who may pose a danger to Ayodhya, and how Hanuman recovered and resumed his journey to Lanka with the mountain and the herb—apropos: Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 56—to Doha no. 60 herein above.

Hence, from this present verse no. 1 we resume our narrative from where we had left it last, at Lord Ram's camp near the battle-field of Lanka where Laxman is lying unconscious before him.

To wit, what a wondrous and fantastic Time Machine is this indeed!}

[Note—¹Why did Lord Ram behave “like an ordinary human being”? Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this Story, explains this himself in Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Sortha/Doha no. 61 herein below.

Lord Shiva says that “though Lord Ram is always steady and unchanging, yet he showed how a human being would ordinarily respond for someone who is totally devoted to him when that faithful follower is somehow harmed.”

Well, Lord Ram had to wail and lament like an ordinary man so as to conform to and fulfil a boon given by Brahma, the Creator, to Ravana that he would die at the hands of a human being. This is the primary reason why Lord Ram, who otherwise could do everything in this world by his mere wish as he was in incarnation of the Supreme Being, acted and behaved like an ordinary man. The Lord is an expert in everything in this creation, so he was also an expert actor. As such, he acted his role of a human being to such perfection and finesse that inspite of the many miraculous things happening, no one could doubt that he was not.

Hence, here also the Lord took special care not to do anything that would reveal his true identity; so he lamented and grieved for his wounded brother like any other man would ordinarily do.

²So, what was so alarming that made Lord Ram become so worried and desperate with despair when Hanuman could not come back by midnight?

The answer is this: The herb would lose its ability to revive an injured person if it was not administered in the night itself, much before dawn. Besides this, Lord Ram's anxiety increased by each passing moment as he thought, in his worries and nervousness, that he could perceive that life was slowly ebbing out of Laxman. So he was worried that if the herb was used late there were chances that its effectiveness would be lost, as by that time Laxman's life would be irretrievably lost.

When one is overcome with grief, small frames of time appear to look like ages. Each passing hour seemed to be one lost era of life to Lord Ram; he was on an edge, and uncertainties added to his nervousness which made the matters worse for him.]

सकहु न दुखित देखि मोहि काऊ । बंधु सदा तव मृदुल सुभाऊ ॥ ३ ॥
 मम हित लागि तजेहु पितु माता । सहेहु बिपिन हिम आतप बाता ॥ ४ ॥
 सो अनुराग कहाँ अब भाई । उठहु न सुनि मम बच बिकलाई ॥ ५ ॥ sakahu na dukhita dēkhi mōhi kā'ū. bandhu sadā tava mṛdula subhā'ū. 3.

 mama hita lāgi tajēhu pitu mātā. sahēhu bipina hima ātapa bātā. 4.
 sō anurāga kahāṁ aba bhā'ī. uṭhahu na suni mama baca bikalā'ī. 5.

Lord Ram wailed sorrowfully, 'My dear brother. You had never tolerated if you had seen me sad in any manner¹. It has been your nature always to be kind, soft, amiable and gracious. (3)

It is for my sake that you abandoned your parents², and then suffered gravely, but graciously endured, for my sake, all the sufferings, pains and inconveniences that you had to encounter in the forest, such as extremes of cold and heat, of hailstorms and hot scorching winds (because of your decision to accompany me)³. (4)

My Brother! Where is that affection for me now; how and why do you now tolerate my intense grief and sadness without responding? Say, why don't you rise even after hearing my earnest pleas and words soaked in abject grief and despair; why don't you respond when you see me so agitated and full of anxiety?⁴ (5)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 198 where this fact is clearly hinted. Now Lord Ram has acknowledged it expressly himself.

Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 227—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 233 where Laxman became very agitated on seeing worry on the face of Lord Ram at the time when news arrived that Bharat was headed towards their hermitage with a large retinue that also included a huge detachment of the kingdom's army.

Earlier, at the time of the Bow-Breaking ceremony at Janakpur, when sage Parashuram came angrily to the venue and threatened Lord Ram to punish him for breaking Lord Shiva's bow, Laxman had interceded on behalf of the Lord and had fearlessly as well as sternly rebuked the sage, even going to the extent of teasing him repeatedly that amounted to insult. This verbal spat between Laxman and Parashuram is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 271—to Doha no. 278. {The whole episode, however, is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 268—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.}

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 70—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 76 where we read about Laxman's resolve to accompany Lord Ram to the forest.

³The horrors and sufferings of the forest are outlined in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 63.

⁴Lord Ram wailed for Laxman: “Tell me, why are you lying unmoving; why have you suddenly developed a sternness of heart and indifference of countenance that you seem not to be moved by my plight, whereas you had always acted to the contrary in the past, and whenever you saw me worried or upset, you were up in arms to protect me. Had you not done that when news arrived that Bharat was coming to our hermitage at Chitrakoot with an entourage that consisted all the main members of the royal court of Ayodhya as well as large detachment of the army? You had seen me worried then, and you had thought that I was worried that Bharat was coming to fight with me and get rid of me so that he could permanently usurp the throne of the kingdom, whereas that was not the case as Bharat was actually coming to take me back home. Had I not told you this that time that there was no fear from Bharat. Nevertheless, you had picked up arms and got ready to face Bharat and kill him if I was harmed; does it not prove that you could not imagine any harm or pain coming to me from any quarter, even if it meant killing our brother and all the rest who were accompanying him? It was only after my assuring you that there was no fear of any danger that you had relented and calmed down. {This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 227—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 233.}

You had kept awake to keep guard while I slept—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 90.

You had been serving me most diligently and faithfully in the forest. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 139; (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 142.}

Whenever you found that I am in a sad and despondent mood, you too reflected my emotions by being overcome with equal sadness and despondency. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precedes Doha no. 141.}

At the time when Sita was stolen and I had all but lost the will to live, it was you who had supported me at that critical moment of my life; it was you who had helped me tide over my mental state of abject dejection and utter hopelessness by encouraging me to make efforts to search for her. Had it not been for you, I would have fallen then and there; it was this advice of yours that motivated me to look ahead with hope of finding her. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8, 16 that precede Doha no. 30.}

Well then, where is now that unflinching devotion and sturdy commitment of yours; why do you not get up and assure me that you are alright and you will not allow any harm to come to me. Listen dear: If you do not rise, if you are revived, then I too will die with you, because I can't live without you. {Refer: Chaupai line nos. 9-10 herein below.}]

जौं जनतेउँ बन बंधु बिछोहू । पिता बचन मनतेउँ नहिं ओहू ॥ ६ ॥

सुत बित नारि भवन परिवारा । होहिं जाहिं जग बारहिं बारा ॥ ७ ॥

अस बिचारि जियँ जागहु ताता । मिलइ न जगत सहोदर भ्राता ॥ ८ ॥

jaum janatē'um̃ bana bandhu bichōhū. pitā bacana manatē'um̃ nahim̃ ōhū. 6.
suta bita nāri bhavana parivārā. hōhim̃ jāhim̃ jaga bārahim̃ bārā. 7.
asa bicāri jiyam̃ jāgahu tātā. mila'i na jagata sahōdara bhrātā. 8.

Had I been aware that I would have to suffer separation from my dear brother in the forest, then surely I would not have obeyed the words of my father¹. (6)

In this world, one can have more than one chance to have a son, money, wife, home and a family [7], ---

--- But one cannot have another chance to be fortunate enough to have a dearest-of-dear brother, someone for whom no one and no thing ever matters more in this world than the former to whom the latter is totally devoted, and whom the latter adores like no one else would ever do². Think over this thing and wake up (you're your slumber, because I am feeling very distressed and extremely distraught by seeing you lying in this condition) [8]. (7-8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram had to keep his father Dasrath's words that the latter gave to Kaikeyi, the step-mother of the Lord, according to which she had demanded that Lord Ram be sent to forest for fourteen years so that her own son Bharat could be anointed as a prince-regent who would become the future king. {This event is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, specifically in (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 29; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 41.}]

²Here, the phrase “dearest-of-dear brother” that Lord Ram uses refers to Laxman who was totally devoted to him. For Laxman, there was no one and no thing that ever mattered more than the Lord. The next verse endorses this view with emphasis.]

जथा पंख बिनु खग अति दीना । मनि बिनु फनि करिबर कर हीना ॥ ९ ॥
अस मम जिवन बंधु बिनु तोही । जौं जड़ दैव जिआवै मोही ॥ १० ॥

jathā paṅkha binu khaga ati dīnā. mani binu phani karibara kara hīnā. 9.
asa mama jivana bandhu binu tōhī. jaum̃ jaṛa daiva ji'āvai mōhī. 10.

My woefully precarious condition is as miserable and grief-stricken as a poor bird that has lost its wings¹, or a serpent that has lost the gem-like luminescent globule of condensed sap present on its hood², or an unfortunate elephant that has lost its trunk³. (9)

Oh my dear brother! This is the gloomy way my life would be if unfortunately the malefic Creator, who is so opposed to me, forces me to live, compelling me to survive even after you are separated from me⁴. (10)

[Note—¹The bird's wing is the most important part of its body because it is the wing that enables the bird to fly and live a happy life. If the wing is lost, then the poor bird would be forced to live a life which would be as good as being dead for it.

The importance of the wing for a bird and how a person suffering from some grave misfortune when something without which he can't live is compared to a bird losing its wings is given elsewhere also in Ram Charit Manas.

For instance, in Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 76 we read that the citizens of Ayodhya were sore overcome with grief when they learnt that Lord Ram was being sent to forest exile, and their condition is being compared to 'a bird who has lost its wings'.

Again, in Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 148 we read that the condition of king Dasrath was also like a bird who has lost its wings. This was the time when Dasrath was lying on his death bed lamenting for Lord Ram, and his minister Sumantra returned to tell him the bad news that Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman have refused to return.

²There are some special species of serpents on whose hoods, according to legends, a small luminescent sac resembling a small globule is seen. It contains a sap that has oozed out of the serpent's hood and has solidified there. The reptile emerges out of its hole in the darkness of the night, and it is believed that the light emanating from this sac enables the serpent to see its way. If the sac is lost, the serpent becomes blind. In this grief, the serpent repeatedly dashes its hood on the hard ground to express its sadness, and this causes it to die.

This phenomenon is cited as a metaphor to indicate that Lord Ram would be blind and helpless without Laxman by his side.

Other instance is found in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 154 where the condition of king Dasrath is compared to it just prior to his death after he learnt that Lord Ram would not return.

³The elephant depends upon its trunk for food; without the trunk this poor creature won't be able to gather its natural food such as branches and leaves of trees etc. and would consequently die. The trunk is also the elephant's defence; it is used to catch hold of an attacking enemy and thrash it to ground. The trunk is used by it to drink water, to forage for food, to fend off its enemies, to defend itself, to sound the trumpet to establish its majesty amongst other animals in the forest, to shoo away flies from its body, and so on and so forth. In fact, the trunk is a pride of the elephant like a tail is for all other animals. The trunk is one muscular organ that is most valued by the elephant in its body.

Here Lord Ram says that his personal glory and the most valuable part of his identity was Laxman, and if the latter is lost then a good part of himself, which is the better part of him, will also be lost. So what's the good in living a lustreless life thereafter; what's the point in living without any glory and identity?

⁴Verily indeed, forsooth and without gainsay, Laxman was like high pole over which the flag of Lord Ram's fame and glory fluttered majestically—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 17.

Then say, what would be the fate of this 'flag' if the 'flag-post' was lost?]

जैहउँ अवध कवन मुहु लाई । नारि हेतु प्रिय भाइ गँवाई ॥ ११ ॥

बरु अपजस सहतेउँ जग माहीं । नारि हानि बिसेष छति नाहीं ॥ १२ ॥

अब अपलोकु सोकु सुत तोरा । सहिहि निठुर कठोर उर मोरा ॥ १३ ॥

jaiha'uṃ avadha kavaṇa muhu lā'ī. nāri hētu priya bhā'i gaṃvā'ī. 11.
 baru apajasa sahatē'uṃ jaga māhīm. nāri hāni bisēṣa chati nāhīm. 12.
 aba apalōku sōku suta tōrā. sahihi niṭhura kaṭhōra ura mōrā. 13.

Alas! With what face would I go back to Ayodhya (in case I survive this ordeal of my separation from you) with the ignominy dogging me all the way back—that I lost my dear brother for the sake of my wife¹? (11)

In any case, I could have coped somehow with the infamy of losing my wife and being unable to retrieve her from the clutches of her captor because I was incompetent and incapable of giving her protection in the first place, and then being able to free her from her captors because I did not have the valour, the strength and the power to do so.

Aside of the infamy, the ignominy, the shame, the sneer and the scorn that I would have inevitably invited throughout my remaining life on this account, it would not be of an insurmountable cause of grief for me, as losing one's wife (or a woman) is not much of a great misfortune and an irreparable loss for a wise man² (as it is of losing you, my dearest of dear brother, for this loss is in-compensable, this damage is irreparable, this vacancy cannot be filled). (12)

But my dear son (suta)³, my loss and its associated grief is much more profound and deeper. Woe to me that now my stern, emotionless and merciless heart (that did not burst with sorrow when it first saw you lying unconscious) will force me to suffer intensely and immensely from combined agony arising from the infamy and shame at having lost my dear brother for the sake of my wife, as well as the grief and sorrow arising directly due to your loss itself. Verily, it will compound the misery and grief for me; it will be misery and grief compounded for me! (13)

[Note—¹Lord Ram woefully lamented for Laxman. He despondently said with great sadness in his voice and profound regret effusing from his words: “What a shameful thing would it be; what face I would have to show to my kin and the citizens of Ayodhya when they ask me about you? I will be forced to tell them that I lost Laxman in the war to retrieve Sita, my wife. I have just now told you that “one may have a chance to have another wife in one's life should he lose one and decides to remarry, but never a second chance to have a loving brother who is faithful and devoted to him”—apropos: verse no. 7 herein above.

²A wise, self-realised and enlightened man is expected to adopt the path of renouncing all his worldly attachments—and this includes his wife and home—after a certain age to spend the rest of his life in pursuing his spiritual objectives; doing meditation, contemplation and introspection, going on pilgrimage, and generally living away from the turmoil and worries of a householder's life to prepare himself for a peaceful final exit from this mortal world.

To wit, a self-realised man who wishes to pursue spiritual calm and peacefully prepare for deliverance of his soul at the time of his death would renounce the world, and this entails his voluntarily severing all his ties with his wife one day. Even if a man wishes to continue to live as a householder and for some unfortunate reason has lost his wife, he can always remarry. So therefore, losing a wife is no big deal; it's not a loss that can't be compensated for.

³Remarkable: Lord Ram calls Laxman his “son—suta”. Truly it was so; even Laxman’s mother Sumitra had advised him to treat Lord Ram and Sita as his parents in the forest, and serve them accordingly with due diligence—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 74; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 6-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 75.

And of course it goes without saying that Laxman obeyed his mother’s instructions in letter and spirit—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Doha no. 139 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 142.]

निज जननी के एक कुमारा । तात तासु तुम्ह प्रान अधारा ॥ १४ ॥
 सौंपेसि मोहि तुम्हहि गहि पानी । सब बिधि सुखद परम हित जानी ॥ १५ ॥
 उतरु काह दैहउँ तेहि जाई । उठि किन मोहि सिखावहु भाई ॥ १६ ॥

nija janani kē ēka kumārā. tāta tāsū tumha prāna adhārā. 14.
 saumpēsī mōhi tumhahi gahi pānī. saba bidhi sukhada parama hita jānī. 15.
 utaru kāha daiha'um̐ tēhi jāī. uṭhi kina mōhi sikhāvahu bhāī. 16.

Oh Son (tāta)! You are the only son of your mother (Sumitra); for her you are a source of succour and solace that supports her during her lifetime*¹. (14)

She had held your hand and put you my safe custody thinking that you will be very happy and safe with me (at the time of our leaving Ayodhya)².

[Woe to me! How miserably I have betrayed her faith and trust in me! What face will I show her when she finds I have returned to her without you? Brother, let me die with you.] (15)

Say, what answer would I give her when I return? Oh my brother; arise and tell me this.’ (16)

[Note—*This verse can be read as follows also: “You are your mother’s only son; you are the one who gives her life meaning and for whom she would like to live.”

This interpretation is also correct because the word “tāta” meaning a ‘son’ has been strategically placed in the centre of the verse, serving both its first and second halves simultaneously. So this word can mean either that Lord Ram calls Laxman his son, or that he calls Laxman as the son of Sumitra.

¹Sumitra had two sons: One was Laxman, and the other was his younger brother named Shatrughan. What Lord Ram means here is that Sumitra loved Laxman more because he was her elder son, and his long separation from her must have made her long for him very intensely. Shatrughan, on the other hand, was by her side at Ayodhya, so since she could see and talk with him as often as she wished, this longing was not there. She must be always thinking of Laxman, always remembering him, and always praying for his safety and quick return. It is an age-old adage that “distance creates a stronger bond of love between two individuals”.

Sumitra herself has acknowledged that she loved Laxman more because he was devoted to Lord Ram when she tells him that “a woman who bears a son who is devoted to Lord Ram is a most fortunate mother; otherwise it is better to remain childless and barren”—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 74 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede it, and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.

²At the time when Laxman told Lord Ram that he has decided to accompany him to the forest, the Lord sent him to take his mother Sumitra’s permission. Sumitra was overcome with sadness and grief upon learning what had happened, but she had no reservations in granting her permission to Laxman to go with Lord Ram. She was unambiguous and very emphatic in giving her consent, saying that there would be nothing better for Laxman to do than to go with the Lord and serve him in the forest. She also told Laxman that he was safer with the Lord than if he would chose to live in Ayodhya. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 73—to Doha no. 75.}]

बहु बिधि सोचत सोच बिमोचन । स्रवत सलिल राजिव दल लोचन ॥ १७ ॥
उमा एक अखंड रघुराई । नर गति भगत कृपाल देखाई ॥ १८ ॥

bahu bidhi sōcata sōca bimōcana. sravata salila rājiva dala lōcana. 17.
umā ēka akhaṇḍa raghurāī. nara gati bhagata kṛpāla dēkhāī. 18.

What a wonder it is that Lord Ram who is a remover of all sorts of sorrows and grief tormenting a creature would himself be overcome with sorrow and grief!

He shed tears from his lotus-like eyes that rolled down their lids which resembled dew drops dripping down from the petals of the lotus flower¹. (17)

[Lord Shiva tells goddess Uma, his divine consort, why Lord Ram shed the tears. He said—] ‘Oh Uma! Lord Ram (“raghurāī”; the Lord of the Raghu line of kings of Ayodhya) is steady and unchanging, one who remains the same under all circumstances.

So therefore, he is shedding tears and expressing grief here just to act his role of a human being to perfection (in order to conform to Brahma’s boon given to Ravana that he would only be killed by a human being, and it was necessary for Lord Ram to behave like a human being to achieve this objective)².

To wit, Lord Ram is also acting in the way he does to show how a human being is expected to respond when someone who is totally devoted to him is harmed in anyway; or how a wise lord ought to treat his servant and dependant who has offered to serve the lord with everything in his command, even to the extent of sacrificing his personal comforts and happiness if it makes the lord happy and contented like Laxman had done for Lord Ram.’³ (18)

[Note—¹What an excellent and wonderful example of poetic imagery we find here. Lord Ram’s eyes are likened to the lotus flower, and the tears that are falling from the edges of the eye-lids are compared to dew-drops falling from the tips of the petals of that lotus.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 177.

Lord Ram has no worldly emotions; normally he should not have cried. But he had to act like an ordinary man to fulfil the condition of the boon given to Ravana by Brahma—that only a human being would be able to kill the demon.

Lord Shiva is the first and the primary narrator of the Story of the Ramayan which he had narrated to his wife Uma, also known as Parvati. During the course of the reading of Ram Charit Manas we observe that on many an occasion, Shiva is quoted as saying something to Parvati or Uma to clarify certain points that may arouse some kind of doubt in her mind. She was listening attentively, without interfering in the narrative by way of asking questions. But Lord Shiva was an expert narrator; he could guess that his wife wanted to ask a question but was hesitant to disturb his flow. So the Lord himself would pause to clarify a particular point before moving on.

Here, when the narrative came to the point where it is said that “Lord Ram shed tears”, Uma raised an eyebrow, as it seemed incredulous to her that the Supreme Being should cry. Hence, Shiva paused to explain the reason to her, the circumstances surrounding the episode that compelled Lord Ram to weep like an ordinary man.

³Lord Ram here shows not only how Laxman was important for him, but by Laxman’s example the Lord also wishes to show the world how any one who is his ardent devotee—one who has vested all his trust and faith in the Lord, one who trusts the Lord for his security and welfare, one for whom there is no other creature dearer than the Lord, one who serves the Lord with all the diligence, efforts and sincerity in his command, one would sacrifice his own life and its pleasures in order to serve the Lord—is loved most dearly by the Lord and is close to the Lord’s heart.

Lord Ram is extremely merciful and obliging; he showers all the love and grace he has on his devotee as he has done for Laxman here. The Lord says that for him a wife, son, wealth, home and family are of no consequence if his devotee is suffering—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 7-10 herein above that we have just read a while ago.]

सो०. प्रभु प्रलाप सुनि कान बिकल भए बानर निकर ।

आइ गयउ हनुमान जिमि करुना महँ बीर रस ॥ ६१ ॥

sōraṭhā.

prabhu pralāpa suni kāna bikala bha'e bānara nikara.

ā'i gaya'u hanumāna jimi karunā maham̐ bīra rasa. 61.

Hearing the woeful wailings and lamentations of Lord Ram, the entire horde of monkeys¹ forming the Lord’s army, its rank and file, was overcome with sadness; sorrow, despondency and despair cast a pall of gloom over all of them.

Just at that critical juncture² (when everything seemed to be lost, when everyone was distraught and overcome with the dread of what untold misfortunes were in store for them, that would suddenly upset everything and sink the boat midstream), Hanuman came back³ as if the dynamic energy associated with the glorious virtues of heroism, bravery, gallantry and valour suddenly interposes to lift the sagging spirits of those who are burdened by and are on the verge of collapsing under the mighty weight of loss of hope, the feeling of helplessness, of sadness, despondency, grief and dejection. (Sortha no. 60)

[Note—¹An interesting observation can be made here. ‘Monkeys’ are specifically mentioned as being overcome with gloom reflecting the general sad mood of the hour. But Lord Ram’s army had a large number of ‘bears’ too; what about them?

Well, the chief of the bears was Jamvant, the aged bear who is believed to be an incarnation of Brahma, the creator, himself. Jamvant was well aware of Hanuman’s abilities; it was he who, being privy to the greatness of Hanuman, had motivated the latter to show his true form and fulfil Lord Ram’s mission when the monkeys and bears were in a similar situation of hopelessness and despair on the shore of the ocean while on a mission to search for Sita. At that time, it was Jamvant whom Hanuman asked for instruction as to what he is supposed to do in Lanka. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 30 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-12 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.}

In the present case also, it was Jamvant who had advised that Sushen be brought from Lanka, and had sent Hanuman to fetch him. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 55.}

So therefore, Jamvant was absolutely clear that nothing would stop Hanuman from coming back. This confidence was lacking in the monkey group; none of their leaders, such as Sugriv and Angad, had this secret knowledge about Hanuman. Hence, Jamvant collected his troops and told them to remain calm, as there was nothing to worry or panic.

²Everything seemed to be lost at that point of time. A deep sense of sadness, gloom, helplessness, haplessness and dejection permeated everywhere, and had a sway over everyone present. Just at that time, during those critical moments, a sudden ray of hope emerged like the sun’s brilliant rays that pierce through the veil of dark clouds that shroud the firmament to shine its splendorous light on the world below, eliminating darkness and despondency, and replacing it with cheer and energy.

Before midnight everyone waited patiently for Hanuman’s return, as they were aware that he has to go and back from afar, a distance of thousands of miles; so ample time must be given to him. Besides this, ample time was left before dawn as it was still before midnight, and hence sufficient time was available during which the herb, once brought, could be immediately administered to Laxman to revive him.

But once midnight passed and yet there was no sign of Hanuman, the situation changed and things became alarming, so much so that even Lord Ram seemed to lose hope and started wailing for Laxman—apropos: Chaupai no. 2 that follows Doha no. 60 herein above.

When the commander-in-chief of the army, or for that matter any leader who is supposed to lead others by being an example of courage, strength, resilience and steely nerves at times of adversities and down-tides, begins to lament and wail himself in the way the Lord behaved then, one can easily visualise the negative reaction it would produce on those who depend upon him, who look up to him for guidance, courage and support for themselves.

What lesson one learns from this episode is this: A leader ought always to be extremely careful with how he behaves and responds to emergencies and adversities if he wishes others who are under his wings and who he commands to stand firm against the onslaught of misfortunes in order to be able to finally turn the tide in their favour. For, if the leader fails to control his emotions, if he shows signs of losing hope and the will to fight back, then no matter how powerful and resourceful his followers are, the battle will be lost even before it is fully fought to the end.

This is why Lord Shiva paused for a while and explained to Uma, his listener, why Lord Ram behaved in the way he did. It was not because the Lord was ‘weak’ in any sense, but it was because he had other things of greater import in his mind that Lord Shiva has himself hinted in verse no. 18 that precedes this Sortha no. 61 herein above.

³My dear readers; do you recall the Time Machine we referred to earlier while reading Chaupai line no. 1 that followed Doha no. 60 herein above, in which we were following Hanuman and recording the events unfolding at a fast pace?

Well, during the time when Lord Ram wailed for unconscious Laxman before him on the ground, back at Lanka, Hanuman was making rapid progress through the night sky, holding the mountain, with the required herb, in his hand. He was in all haste as he wanted to make up for the precious time that was lost during his encounters with Kalnemi and Bharat. So he zoomed past the firmament like a streaking star. And of course, the ‘scribe and the witnesses’, travelling in the Time Machine, followed him closely!

We will observe here that normally a Doha or a Sortha is preceded by eight lines of a standard Chaupai. But here we find that there are ‘eighteen lines’ in the Chaupai. It is done with a purpose: to indicate that some length of time had elapsed between midnight and the moment when Hanuman actually arrived. To wit, the ‘elongated Chuapai’ symbolised a stretching of the time frame for this particular event.

Meanwhile, all those present on the ground were huddled together, in small and large groups, in eager anticipation of Hanuman’s return, and all had their eyes fixed on the northern sky because it was from this direction Hanuman was expected to come back, as it was in this direction he had gone on his mission of bringing the herb.

Suddenly they could descry a streaking star heading straight towards their camp. Lo and behold—there came their dear Hanuman, dashing like lightening that pierced through the dark cover of the overhead firmament.

At this wonderful and most welcome sight, there was a spontaneous burst of thunderous applause. Everyone was elated and on his feet instantly; cheering and dancing in mad abandon.

Hanuman glided down to land before Lord Ram; he was rushed upon by his waiting companions who embraced and kissed him, and who shed tears now once again, but these tears were of joy and happiness and rejoicing and hope.]

चौ०. हरषि राम भेंटेउ हनुमाना । अति कृतग्य प्रभु परम सुजाना ॥ १ ॥

तुरत बैद तब कीन्हि उपाई । उठि बैठे लछिमन हरषाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

haraṣi rāma bhēṇṭē'u hanumānā. ati kṛtagya prabhu parama sujānā. 1.

turata baida taba kīnhi upāī. uṭhi baiṭhē lachimana haraṣāī. 2.

Lord Ram affectionately embraced Hanuman by clasping the latter to his bosom¹. The Lord felt highly obliged to Hanuman because it is the nature of the gracious and kind

Lord to feel obliged for even a small service that is rendered to him by his devotees.
(1)

The doctor (baida) wasted no time in applying the herb and doing whatever that was needed to revive Laxman. His efforts were successful as Laxman immediately arose and sat up cheerfully (as if nothing had happened to him)². (2)

[Note—¹How fortunate was Hanuman indeed, for it is the second time Lord Ram has thus embraced him. The first opportunity was when he had brought back the news of Sita from Lanka, and at that time the Lord had explicitly said that he will forever remain indebted to Hanuman—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 32—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 33.

No other character in the Story of the Ramayan has had this honour and privilege.

²We must acknowledge the expertise of the doctors of that time who were so skilled in their art and craft of using medicinal herbs and plants to cure patients. Laxman woke up fresh and energetic, as if he was fast asleep and was now woken up.

Even as a man feels rested and rejuvenated and fresh after sound sleep, with all his fatigue and weariness of the previous day removed after a restful sleep, Laxman too was revived as if he was fast asleep a while ago, and now was ready to face the challenges of the war.

During the intervening period between being hit by Meghanad's weapon when he fell down unconscious, and when he was revived back to consciousness, Laxman had lain like a Yogi or an ascetic doing deep meditation. During such meditative trance, the practitioner holds his breath and goes into a virtual hibernation mode, when all the activities of his body and metabolism cease. When he ends his trance, he is back to normal. Laxman too knew this trick; so he practiced Yoga by holding his breath for the time he appeared to lie unconscious.

This served an important medical function also—for it helped to contain the spread of the poison that was injected into Laxman by the tip of the spear that struck him. The doctor, Sushen, applied the herb that sucked out the clotted blood and neutralised the poison. So when Laxman was prodded to get up, he was fit and fine.

Credit must be surely given to Sushen who lived up to his profession of a 'doctor' for whom a patient is a patient first and foremost, irrespective of whether he is a friend or a foe, and therefore the doctor is obliged to give his best to his patient even if it means treating his arch enemy.

Sushen was playing with fire, for he was in the pay-roll of Ravana, the arch enemy of Laxman and Lord Ram; Ravana could have roasted him alive for helping revive Laxman.

Now this brings us to another fascinating observation—it is that Ravana should also be given equal credit for not punishing Sushen for reviving Laxman. Ravana accepted and acknowledged the fact that Sushen was merely doing his professional duty of treating a patient to whom he is called to attend. This shows the greatness of Ravana's soul and the high standard of his thinking even though he unfortunately had become a 'demon'. Surely Lord Ram acknowledged the greatness of Ravana's soul, because the Lord, who was actually the Supreme Being in his form, allowed Ravana's soul to enter his own body at the time of his death, so that the soul of this unfortunate creature could find eternal rest and beatitude—apropos: Ram

Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103; and (ii) Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 104.]

हृदयँ लाइ प्रभु भेटेउ भ्राता । हरषे सकल भालु कपि ब्राता ॥ ३ ॥
 कपि पुनि बैद तहाँ पहुँचावा । जेहि बिधि तबहिं ताहि लइ आवा ॥ ४ ॥
 यह बृतांत दसानन सुनेऊ । अति बिषाद पुनि पुनि सिर धुनेऊ ॥ ५ ॥ hr̥dayaṃ lā'i prabhu bhēṭē'u bhrātā. haraṣē sakala bhālu kapi brātā. 3.

 kapi puni baida tahāṃ pahuṃcāvā. jēhi bidhi tabahiṃ tāhi la'i āvā. 4.
 yaha br̥ttānta dasānana sunē'ū. ati biṣāda puni puni sira dhunē'ū. 5.

Lord Ram picked up Laxman and embraced him by clasping him to his bosom. Meanwhile, all the bears and monkeys¹ were exhilarated and felt extremely happy. (3)

In the mean time, the Kapi (Hanuman) then took Sushen back to Lanka and replaced his home in the same spot from where it was earlier lifted and brought along with its occupant. (4)

When Ravana heard the news (of Laxman's revival), he was very upset and beat his head repeatedly².

[Note—¹This clearly means that both the bears and monkeys were standing or sitting around Lord Ram. In this context, the reader ought to refer to note appended to Sortha no. 61 herein above where attention is drawn to the mention of only monkeys for feeling sad when they saw Lord Ram, and not of the bears. The reason is explained there itself.

²The question: 'Why did Ravana not punish Sushen for treating Laxman' is answered in the note appended to verse no. 2 that follows Sortha no. 61 herein above.

The next question is this: Why did Ravana showed exasperation and beat his head so much?

The answer is as follows: Like Lord Ram playing his role of a human being to perfection, Ravana too decided to play his role as a vicious demon and an arch enemy of the Lord—to ensure that the Lord certainly kills him so that his soul can, at last, find its liberation and deliverance; so that his soul can find the emancipation and salvation that eludes it; so that his soul can attain the much sought-after beatitude and felicity; so that his soul does not miss its only opportunity to attain eternal bliss and happiness, a chance to attain which would be lost for good should, for some reason, Lord Ram shows his characteristic grace and mercy upon him (Ravana) and spares him for all his sins and mischief that he has committed all along.

And one more final question: Why would Ravana feel so upset by Laxman's revival? The answer is obvious: it is the time of war, and every fallen great warrior in the enemy's side was celebrated as one point nearer to final victory over him. Laxman was not an ordinary warrior; he was the second-in-command of Lord Ram's army, his brother, and equally powerful and able as the Lord. This meant that if Laxman was out of the way, if he was fatally incapacitated, then Lord Ram would be so demoralized, so greatly overcome with grief, so much handicapped, and so deeply ruined emotionally that he would lose the will to fight the war any longer, and even if he continued to wage it then it would be a half-hearted effort that would certainly lead to his defeat.

So during the night, while Laxman lay unconscious on the ground, the demons must have been celebrating an imminent victory that would be theirs the next day when they would easily be able to rout the Lord's demoralized army. When Ravana's spy rushed to him to convey the news that Laxman had been revived, and is hale and hearty enough that he is raring to go to the battle-field as soon as the day broke, Ravana felt that all was lost; he trembled in consternation and the fearful thought of facing a raging Laxman in the battle-field, as it was now certain that Laxman would hit back with full force and vengeance at the demons, pouring all the fiery venom that he has at his command on them—for remember, Laxman was a manifestation of the legendary Seshnath, the serpent with a thousand hoods.

Ravana was not only worried for the demons in general, he was particularly concerned all the more gravely for his own son Meghanad, because it was he who had shot Laxman the day before, and so certainly he would be the primary target of Laxman's seething anger. This is the reason that when the battle resumed the next day, which was the third day of the war, he persuaded his brother Kumbhakaran to go and face the enemy, instead of Meghanad. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-12 that precedes Doha no. 62.}

Ravana's beating of head is a visible sign of his extreme exasperation and frustration; it shows that he felt all was lost and the danger to the demons was all the more aggravated. The hour of celebration for the demons when Laxman fell to the ground wounded and unconscious now transmuted into an hour of despair and despondency when he was revived, while the reverse was the case that prevailed in Lord Ram's camp.]

-----**-----

Section 15.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 65-86;
Canto 6, verse nos. 1-63; and Canto 7, verse nos. 1-41.

Now let us take a pause and do a little bit of rewinding; let's see how this episode of Laxman fainting has been narrated in sage Veda Vyas' Story of the Ramayana known as 'Adhyatma Ramayan'.

It is interesting to note at this juncture that there is a pointed difference between the ways the two classics that we are reading have described why Laxman had fainted, and some other related events. Let us summarise them here:

(i) While Goswami Tulsidas' classic book 'Ram Charit Manas' says that he was shot by Meghanad, the son of Ravana (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 54), the other book by sage Veda Vyas, the 'Adhyatma Ramayan', attributes Laxman's fainting to Ravana who shot him during their clash (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 1-8).

(ii) The second difference is that in 'Ram Charit Manas' we read that Hanuman was shot down by Bharat, the younger brother of Lord Ram, as he flew over the city of Ayodhya carrying the huge mountain. However, Hanuman was quickly revived, there was a short interview between the two, and then he resumed his journey to Lanka. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 60.}

In ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’, however, there is no mention of Hanuman meeting Bharat en-route to Lanka.

(iii) The third interesting point is that whereas in Ram Charit Manas it is Sushen, the doctor, who picks the correct herb to revive Laxman (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 62), in Adhyatma Ramayan it is Lord Ram who himself selects the herb and then asks Sushen to administer it to Laxman (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 36-37).

Another interesting episode in Adhyatma Ramayan is Kalnemi’s advice to Ravana where he prescribes three methods of worshipping Lord Ram. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 45-63.}

These interesting variations necessitates that we also read the episode of Laxman’s fainting from the Adhyatma Ramayan, besides our earlier reading from Ram Charit Manas, to get a more varied version of this grand Story as told from two angles, from two ancient classics.

For this purpose, therefore, we shall be quickly reading about Laxman’s fainting from Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, as follows:

Sub-section: 15.2.1 – Lanka Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 65-86;

Sub-section: 15.2.2 – Lanka Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 1-63;

Sub-section: 15.2.3 – Lanka Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 1-41.

Let us commence our reading now:

Sub-section: 15.2.1 – Lanka Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 65-86:-

स्वसैन्यं निहतं दृष्ट्वा मेघनादोऽथ दुष्टधीः ।
 ब्रह्मदत्तवरः श्रीमानन्तर्धानं गतोऽसुरः ॥ ६५॥
 सर्वास्तुकुशलो व्योम्नि ब्रह्मास्त्रेण समन्ततः ।
 नानाविधानि शस्त्राणि वानरानीकमर्दयन् ॥ ६६॥
 ववर्ष शरजालानि तदद्भुतमिवाभवत् ।
 रामोऽपि मानयन् ब्राह्ममस्त्रमस्त्रविदां वरः ॥ ६७॥
 क्षणं तूष्णीमुवासाथ ददर्श पतितं बलम् । वानराणां रघुश्रेष्ठश्चुकोपानलसन्निभः ॥ ६८॥

svasainyaṃ nihataṃ dr̥ṣṭvā meghanādo'tha duṣṭadhīḥ । brahmadattavaraḥ śrīmānantardhānaṃ gato'suraḥ ॥ 65॥ sarvāstrakuśalo vyomni brahmāstreṇa samantataḥ । nānāvidhāni śāstrāṇi vānarāṇīkamardayan ॥ 66॥ vavarṣa śarajālāni tadadbhutamivābhavat । rāmo'pi mānayan brāhmamastramastravidāṃ varaḥ ॥ 67॥

kṣaṇaṃ tūṣṇīmuṣāsātha dadarśa patitaṃ balam । vānarāṇāṃ raghuśreṣṭhaścukopānalasannibhaḥ ॥ 68॥

65-68. Seeing that the major part of his army had been eliminated, Meghanad (the son of Ravana), who was excessively evil and pervert, but was nevertheless encouraged to fight on and retaliate confidently because he was empowered by special boons that were granted to him by Lord Brahma, the creator, became invisible and vanished from sight in the battle-field (65).

That demon was proficient in using all types of weapons in the battle-field. So he climbed up in the sky, showered different types of arms, such as arrows, from there, and began to pound the army of monkeys by his Brahmastra (a special weapon given to him by Lord Brahma).

[He peppered the monkey army with numerous lethal weapons of various denominations that were very powerful and magical by nature. He literally sprayed the monkey army with those fierce weapons as if hail and rain were falling all over the battle-field.]

It appeared to be a very wondrous and astonishing sight (because Meghanad was not visible, and so the monkey commanders did not know whom to fight).

Sri Ram, who is the best amongst experts in weapons and the use of arms, watched the decline, destruction and decimation of his forces silently for a moment just in order to show respect to Brahma's weapon and maintain its sanctity.

At last however, the best in Raghu's clan (i.e. Sri Ram) became furious with anger like a raging fire (66-68).

चापमानय सौमित्रे ब्रह्मास्त्रेणासुरं क्षणात् ।
भस्मीकरोमि मे पश्य बलमद्य रघूत्तम ॥ ६९॥
मेघनादोऽपि तच्छ्रुत्वा रामवाक्यमतन्द्रितः । तूर्णं जगाम नगरं मायया मायिकोऽसुरः ॥ ७०॥ cāpamānaya saumitre brahmāstreṇāsuraṃ kṣaṇāt । bhasmīkaromi me paśya balamadya raghūttama ॥ 69॥ meghanādo'pi tacchrutvā rāmaṣvākyamatandritaḥ । tūrṇaṃ jagāma nagaraṃ māyayā māyiko'suraḥ ॥ 70॥

69-70. Addressing his brother Laxman, the Lord said, 'Oh the son of Sumitra! Bring my bow—I shall, in a moment, reduce to ashes this wicked demon with my own fiery weapon known as Brahmastra¹. Oh the best in king Raghu's clan (i.e. Laxman)! Watch the spectacular display of my might and the strength of my arms today' (69).

Meghnad was very alert. Hearing these words of Sri Ram (and fearing for his life), that cunning demon, who was good at tricks and pretending to be brave, stealthily fled from the battle-field while he was still invisible, and went back to his city (of Lanka) (70).

[Note—¹Any powerful weapon that could invariably destroy its enemy, like a fire would burn anything that comes in its way or a missile would destroy any target it hits, even if the target is wrong, was called Brahmastra. So in this sense, the powerful weapons of both Meghanad and Lord Ram were designated as 'Brahmastras'. It means that it was not necessary that any such weapon was given to its possessor by Brahma, the creator, himself.]

पतितं वानरानीकं दृष्ट्वा रामोऽतिदुःखितः । उवाच मारुतिं शीघ्रं गत्वा क्षीरमहोदधिम् ॥ ७१॥
 तत्र द्रोणगिरिर्नाम दिव्यौषधिसमुद्भवः । तमानय द्रुतं गत्वा सञ्जीवय महामते ॥ ७२॥
 वानरौघान् महासत्त्वान् कीर्तिरते सुस्थिरा भवेत् । आज्ञाप्रमाणमित्युक्त्वा जगामानिलनन्दनः ॥ ७३॥ patitaṃ vānarāṇikaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā rāmo'tiduhkhiṭaḥ । uvāca mārutiṃ śīghraṃ gatvā kṣīramahodadhim ॥ 71॥ tatra droṇagirirṇāma divyaauśadhisamudbhavaḥ । tamānaya drutaṃ gatvā sañjīvaya mahāmate ॥ 72॥ vānaraughān mahāsattvān kīrtiste susthirā bhavet । ājñāpramāṇamityuktvā jagāmānilanandanaḥ ॥ 73॥

71-73. Seeing that his army had suffered a lot due to Meghanad's ferocious attack, Lord Sri Ram felt very sorry and was overcome with sadness and remorse (because the monkeys and bears had to suffer due to him).

So the Lord summoned Hanuman (Maruti, the son of the wind god) and said, 'You go to the Kshir Sagar¹ immediately (71). There is a mountain called Dronachal there. Different types of medicinal herbs grow on it. Oh the wise one! Go and quickly bring that mountain here (72) and revive these brave and valorous monkey warriors back to life². This will make your fame, gallantry and glory stable and world-famous for all times to come'.

Hearing this, the son of the wind-god said 'as you please', and started off for the mission immediately (73).

[Note—¹The “Khir-Sagar” is an ancient celestial ocean of milk described in the scriptures where Lord Vishnu is said to reside; he reclines on the coiled body of the celestial serpent known as Sheshnath who floats on the surface of this ocean.

²In the version of the Ram Charit Manas, the Lord also wishes that all the monkeys and bears who lay wounded and dead on the battle-field should be brought back to life, but it was at the end of the war. He asks Indra, the king of Gods, to shower a rain of Amrit, an ambrosia that restores life, on the whole ground. This rain helped all the monkeys and bears to come back to life. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 114.}

Further, Lord Ram has given clear instructions to Hanuman here to bring the Dronachal mountain to Lanka to revive the monkeys. This is in sharp contrast to Tulsidas' version in Ram Charit Manas where the mountain was brought by Hanuman to revive Laxman, and not the other monkeys. Also he brought it because he could not recognise the required herb, but here he has done it on specific instructions of Lord Ram to 'bring the mountain here'.]

आनीय च गिरि सर्वान् वानरान् वानरर्षभः ।
जीवयित्वा पुनस्तत्र स्थापयित्वाऽऽययौ द्रुतम् ॥ ७४॥
पूर्ववद्दैवं नादं वानराणां बलौघतः ।
श्रुत्वा विस्मयमापन्नो रावणो वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ७५॥ ānīya ca giriṃ sarvān vānarān vānararṣabhaḥ । jīvayitvā punastatra sthāpayitvā'yayau drutam ॥ 74॥ pūrvavadbhairavaṃ nādaṃ vānarāṇāṃ balaughataḥ । śrutvā vismayamāpanno rāvaṇo vākyaṃabravīt ॥ 75॥

74-75. He brought that mountain, revived all the monkeys (by using its herbs), and immediately took it back to where it belonged¹ (74).

Hearing the tremendous uproar of the monkeys once again, Ravana was utterly astonished (because it was almost a miracle that he had not expected)². He summoned all his demon warriors and said in an urgent tone (75)—

[Note—¹In Ram Charit Manas nothing is said what was done with this mountain after Laxman was revived.

²When Meghanad went home he told his father Ravana that he had successfully decimated the monkey army. So when the demon king heard their uproar he was bound to be surprised as well as confounded. It meant that Meghanad's tricks and the weapons of which he was so proud of and boastful were useless.

This portended grave danger for the demon army because now it seems that Lord Ram's army would be difficult to subdue, as all the monkey and bear warriors who might be wounded or dead during the course of battle of the day would be revived during the night, and their number would never diminish. The demon army, on the other hand, was getting smaller and smaller in their numbers by each passing day as none of the demon fighters could be revived.]

राघवो मे महान् शत्रुः प्राप्तो देवविनिर्मितः ।
हन्तुं तं समरे शीघ्रं गच्छन्तु मम यूथपाः ॥ ७६॥
मन्त्रिणो बान्धवाः शूरा ये च मत्प्रियकाङ्क्षिणः ।
सर्वे गच्छन्तु युद्धाय त्वरितं मम शासनात् ॥ ७७॥

rāghavo me mahān śatruḥ prāpto devavinirmitaḥ । hantuṃ taṃ samare śīghraṃ gacchantu mama yūthapāḥ ॥ 76॥ mantriṇo bāndhavāḥ śūrā ye ca matpriyakāṅkṣiṇaḥ । sarve gacchantu yuddhāya tvaritaṃ mama śāsanāt ॥ 77॥

76-77. 'Raghav (Sri Ram) is my great enemy. It appears that the Gods, who are inherently my arch enemies and hate me innately, have created him (or sent him) to get rid of me. My entire army and its commanders, as well as all those who are my friends, well-wishers and loyal to me, who would like to ensure their own welfare and well-being by helping me to get rid of this danger from my enemy—I command all such friends and well-wishers and commanders of my army to proceed forthwith to the battle-field to eliminate (kill) this enemy of mine. (76-77)

ये न गच्छन्ति युद्धाय भीरवः पूरुषाविप्लवात् ।
तान् हनिष्याम्यहं सर्वान् मच्छासनपराङ्मुखान् ॥ ७८॥
तच्छ्रुत्वा भयसन्तस्ता निर्जग्मू रणकोविदाः । अतिकायः प्रहस्तश्च महानादमहोदरौ ॥ ७९॥
देवशत्रुर्निकुम्भश्च देवान्तकनरान्तकौ । अपरे बलिनः सर्वे ययुर्युद्धाय वानरैः ॥ ८०॥

ye na gacchanti yuddhāya bhīravāḥ prāṇaviplavāt । tān haniṣyāmyaḥ sarvān macchāsanaparāṇmukhān ॥ 78॥ tacchrutvā bhayasantrastā nirjagmū raṇakovidāḥ । atikāyaḥ prahastaśca mahānādamahodarau ॥ 79॥ devaśaturnikumbhaśca devāntakanarāntakau । apare balinaḥ sarve yayuryuddhāya vānaraiḥ ॥ 80॥

78-80. Those cowards who do not go to battle fearing for their lives—let them be certain that I shall kill all of them who do not obey my orders¹ (78).

Hearing these stern orders of Ravana and fearful of his wrath, the terrified demon warriors, who were skilled in the art of warfare, who were very valiant, courageous, brave and strong—such as the demons named Atikai, Prahasht, Mahanad, Mahodar, Devshatru, Nikumbh, Devantak, Narantak—all of them departed for the battle-field to fight the monkeys and take them head-on (79-80).

[Note—¹The poor demons had no choice. No matter how reluctant they might have been to go and face the wrath of the Lord's army, but when they found that if they demurred a bit more then Ravana would certainly do them to death, they decided to embrace death with the dignity of a brave warrior rather than die an ignominious death like a coward.]

एते चान्ये च बहवः शूराः शतसहस्रशः ।
प्रविश्य वानरं सैन्यं ममन्थुर्बलदर्पिताः ॥ ८१॥
भुशुण्डीभिन्दिपालैश्च बाणैः खड्गैः परश्वधैः ।
अन्यैश्च विविधैरस्त्रैर्निजघ्नुर्हरियूथपान् ॥ ८२॥ ete cānye ca bahavaḥ śūrāḥ śatasahasraśaḥ । praviśya vānaraṁ sainyaṁ mamanthurbaladarpitāḥ ॥ 81॥ bhuṣuṇḍībhindipālaiśca bāṇaiḥ khadgaiḥ paraśvadhaiḥ । anyaiśca vividhairastrairnijaghnurhariyūthapān ॥ 82॥

81-82. Those above named demons, as well as numerous other hundreds of thousands of demon warriors who were matchless in their bravery and courage, who were intoxicated with the pride of their valour, strength, potentials, bravery and might, entered the ranks of the monkey army, and began thrashing and crushing them relentlessly (81).

They attacked the commanders of the monkey army with ‘Bhushandi or Bhushundi’ (an ancient weapon of war; used to pierce the enemy in close duels or slice through his body; probably a dagger), ‘Bhindipal’ (an ancient weapon that was like a spike or spear thrown at the enemy), arrows, swords, battle-axes, and many other different sorts of sharp and formidable weapons of war (82).

ते पादपैः पर्वताग्रैर्नखदंष्ट्रैश्च मुष्टिभिः । प्राणैर्विमोचयामासुः सर्वराक्षसयूथपान् ॥ ८३॥
 रामेण निहताः केचित्सुग्रीवेण तथापरे ।
 हनूमता वाङ्गदेन लक्ष्मणेन महात्मना ।
 यूथपैर्वानराणां ते निहताः सर्वराक्षसाः ॥ ८४॥
 रामतेजः समाविश्य वानरा बलिनोऽभवन् । रामशक्तिविहीनानामेवं शक्तिः कुतो भवेत् ॥ ८५॥

te pādapaiḥ parvatāgrairnakhadamṣṭraiśca muṣṭibhiḥ । prāṇairvimocayāmāsuḥ sarvarākṣasayūthapān ॥ 83॥ rāmeṇa nihatāḥ kecitsugrīveṇa tathāpare । hanūmatā cāṅgadena lakṣmaṇena mahātmanā । yūthapairvānarāṇāṃ te nihatāḥ sarvarākṣasāḥ ॥ 84॥ rāmatejaḥ samāviśya vānarā balino'bhavan । rāmaśaktivihīnānāmevaṃ śaktiḥ kuto bhavet ॥ 85॥

83-85. Here, the brave monkey warriors used trees, rocks and boulders uprooted from mountains, as well as their own nails, teeth (to tear at and bite the flesh of the demons) and clenched fists (which they used to punch at them) etc. to hit back at the demon army with all the ferocity and might in their command, thereby rendering the demon army in general, and their commanders in particular, lifeless.

[To wit, it was a closely fought hand-to-hand battle of extreme ferocity.] (83).

Out of those demons, some were killed at the hands of Lord Sri Ram, some by Sugriv, and others by Hanuman, Angad, the great Laxman, and various other brave monkey warriors. In this manner, all those demons were killed (84).

Since the divine cosmic energy and dynamism that was unleashed by Sri Ram had injected the monkey warriors with stupendous energy and blessed them with invincibility, they had become extremely ferocious and a formidable force to reckon with; they had acquired astounding force, punch, might, valour, prowess and potentials against which the poor demons could not stand.

Otherwise say, how could these humble monkeys and bears become so potent a fighting force that was so powerful, so effective, so able, so strong, so valiant and so proficient in the battle-field that they could easily trounce the once famed army of the demons (who had some time ago crushed even the so-called mighty gods of heaven with extreme ease and impunity) had it not been for the miraculous effect of Lord Ram’s divine majesty and cosmic powers that defy understanding and measurement? (85).

[Note—Eight among the chief commanders of the demon army as listed in verse nos. 79-80 had died in this battle which was joined by Sri Ram and Laxman themselves as is clear from verse no. 84.

Verse no. 85 clearly attributes the victory of the monkey and bear army to the blessings of Lord Ram, and to the Lord's mystical powers, his cosmic energy, his majestic authority and his stupendous dynamism that led his army to a resounding victory in the war against a formidable enemy who was a little while ago regarded as a force that could not be faced by anyone, no matter how strong he was, anywhere in the world.]

सर्वेश्वरः सर्वमयो विधाता मायामनुष्यत्वविडम्बनेन ।
सदा चिदानन्दमयोऽपि रामो युद्धादिलीलां वितनोति मायाम् ॥ ८६॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे पञ्चमः सर्गः ॥ ५॥

sarveśvaraḥ sarvamayo vidhātā māyāmanuṣyatvaviḍambanena । sadā cidānandamayo'pi rāmo yuddhādilīlāṃ vitanoti māyām ॥ 86॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmaramāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
pañcamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 5॥

86. Lord Sri Ram is the Lord of the entire creation; he is the Lord of everything in this creation; he is all pervading and omnipresent; he is the controller of all and one who determines the destiny and fate of everything and everyone in existence; he is truly eternally blissful and self-contented.

In spite of these divine virtues, he follows the behaviour of an ordinary human being because he has assumed that body by employing his Maya, which is the Lord's cosmic powers that create illusions.

[To wit, though the Lord has a cosmic form that is invisible, without any attributes, all-pervading, sublime and subtle in nature, yet he appears like an ordinary human being because of the effect of Maya that the Lord employed to give an impression that he is an ordinary man like the rest of the human race.]¹

It is such a wonder that he spreads his playful activities to the battle-field and fights this battle that is so deceptive (because it raises doubts in the mind about the Lord's true identity, and creates a erroneous impression that he is an ordinary man).

[To wit, if Lord Ram wants, he can finish off the entire demon army by merely blinking at them. But he wishes not to do so for the purpose of creating a legendary Story which his devotees will sing and narrate for all times to come. Such Stories are called 'Kathas and Leelas' of the Lord which he had performed for the benefit of his devotees during one of his manifestations in this mortal world.] (86).

[Note—¹Lord Ram had to maintain the sanctity of the creator Brahma's boons given to Ravana according to which the demon king could be killed only by a human being. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 10-15.}

So the Lord had to keep his true identity a top secret.]

Thus ends the discourse between Lord Shiva and Uma as narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Uddha/Lanka Kand, Canto 5.]

Sub-section: 15.2.2 – Lanka Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 1-63:-

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

श्रुत्वा युद्धे बलं नष्टमतिकायमुखं महत् ।

रावणो दुःस्वसन्तप्तः क्रोधेन महताऽऽवृतः ॥ १॥

निधायेन्द्रजितं लङ्कारक्षणार्थं महाद्युतिः ।

स्वयं जगाम युद्धाय रामेण सह राक्षसः ॥ २॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

śrutvā yuddhe balaṃ naṣṭamatikāyamukhaṃ mahat ।

rāvaṇo duḥkhasantaptaḥ krodhena mahatā"vṛtaḥ ॥ 1॥ nidhāyendrajitaṃ laṅkāraṣaṇārthaṃ mahādyutiḥ ।

svayaṃ jagāma yuddhāya rāmeṇa saha rākṣasaḥ ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva resumed his narration and said—'Oh Parvati! Hearing that the large army led by Atikai etc. has been completely devastated in the battle, Ravana was dismayed and overcome with extreme remorse and gloom. He was greatly agitated with anger, wrath and vengeance (1).

That most energetic, agile and valiant demon appointed Indrajeet (Meghanad, his son) to take care of the internal security of the city of Lanka, and himself set off, along with other demons, to fight with Lord Sri Ram¹ (2).

[Note—¹According to this version of the grand Story of the Ramayan, it was Ravana who had shot Laxman and wounded him, as we shall read in this Canto, whereas in the version of as narrated in Ram Charit Manas of Goswami Tulsidas it was Meghanad who fought and wounded Laxman as we have already read earlier in Sub-section 15.1 of this Book.]

दिव्यं स्यन्दनमारुह्य सर्वशस्त्रास्त्रसंयुतम् ।

राममेवाभिदुद्राव राक्षसेन्द्रो महाबलः ॥ ३॥

वानरान् बहुशो हत्वा बाणैरशीविषोपमैः ।

पातयामास सुग्रीवप्रमुखान् यूथनायकान् ॥ ४॥

divyaṃ syandanamāruhya sarvaśastrāstrasaṃyutam ।

rāmamevābhidudrāva rākṣasendro mahābalaḥ ॥ 3॥

vānarān bahuśo hatvā bāṇairāśīviṣopamaiḥ ।

pātayāmāsa sugrīvapramukhān yūthanāyakān ॥ 4॥

3-4. Riding on a majestic and magnificent chariot, and armed to the teeth with all his arms, armaments and weapons of war, that most strong and valiant king of demons (Ravana) charged at Sri Ram (3).

Killing a number of monkeys with his deadly arrows, which were poisonous like serpents (i.e. they were poison-tipped and fierce, and whosoever they struck fell down), he fell Sugriv and many other chief commanders of the monkey army, making them fall unconscious on the ground by his volley of ferocious arrows¹ (4).

[Note—¹The arrows shot by Ravana killed many monkey warriors and injured others. The phrase “poisonous like serpents” is a figure of speech to indicate that these arrows were deadly and tipped with poison. Some who were struck with them fell down and died, but there were many others who did not actually die but were merely gravely wounded, for they “fell unconscious on the ground”.]

गदापाणिं महासत्त्वं तत्र दृष्ट्वा विभीषणम् ।
 उत्सर्ज महाशक्तिं मयदत्तां विभीषणे ॥ ५॥
 तामापतन्तीमातोक्य विभीषणविघातिनीम् ।
 दत्ताभयोऽयं रामेण वधाहो नायमासुरः ॥ ६॥
 इत्युक्त्वा लक्ष्मणो भीमं चापमादाय वीर्यवान् ।
 विभीषणस्य पुरतः स्थितोऽकम्प इवाचलः ॥ ७॥ gadāpāṇiṃ mahāsattvaṃ tatra dr̥ṣṭvā vibhīṣaṇam । utsasarja mahāśaktiṃ mayadattāṃ vibhīṣaṇe ॥ 5॥ tāmāpatantīmālokya vibhīṣaṇavighātinīm । dattābhayo'yaṃ rāmeṇa vadhārho nāyamāsurah ॥ 6॥ ityuktvā lakṣmaṇo bhīmaṃ cāpamādāya vīryavān । vibhīṣaṇasya purataḥ sthito'kampa ivācalaḥ ॥ 7॥

5-7. Seeing the most valiant and courageous Vibhishan was standing in his path with his battle-mace in hand, ready to challenge him, Ravana shot him with a very powerful weapon called ‘Maha-Shakti’ given to him by a demon named Maidanav (5).

Seeing that fierce weapon approaching Vibhishan with a clear intent to kill him, Laxman thought: ‘I wot that this prince of demons has been blessed with fearlessness by Lord Sri Ram¹. Hence, he must not be allowed to die or be harmed at any cost’ (6).

Therefore, Laxman, who was very gallant, valiant, valorous and strong, decided to intervene and take the hit of Ravana’s weapon himself in order to protect Vibhishan.

So he, Laxman, took his powerful bow in his hand and stood like a sturdy mountain in front of Vibhishan, putting the latter behind him and separating him from Ravana who approached Vibhishan menacingly (7).

[Note—¹Lord Ram had granted his protection to Vibhishan at the time the latter had surrendered before the Lord—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 10-13; 42-47.

So Laxman decided that he will allow no harm to befall Vibhishan.]

सा शक्तिर्लक्ष्मणतनुं विवेशामोघशक्तिः ।
यावन्त्यः शक्तयो लोके मायायाः सम्भवन्ति हि ॥ ८॥
तासामाधारभूतस्य लक्ष्मणस्य महात्मनः ।
मायाशक्त्या भवेत्किं वा शेषांशस्य हरेस्तनोः ॥ ९॥ sā śaktirlakṣmaṇatanuṃ viveśāmoghaśaktiḥ । yāvantyāḥ śaktayo loke māyāyāḥ sambhavanti hi ॥ 8॥ tāsāmādhārabhūtasya lakṣmaṇasya mahātmanah । māyāśaktyā bhavetkiṃ vā śeṣāṃśasya harestanoh ॥ 9॥

8-9. That specially charged (or energised) weapon shot by Ravana at Vibhishan was infallible, so it forced its way and entered the body of Laxman (because he was standing in front of Vibhishan).

All the magically empowered and specially charged weapons of war that can ever be created or produced by Maya in this world¹, Lord Vishnu (the Supreme Being) is the basic source of their origin, their existence, their strength, their potentials and effects (because the Lord is the Supreme Being, the supreme Authority and the supreme Lord-Emperor of this creation).

[To wit, Lord Vishnu is the almighty Authority under whose command everything exists in this world, and these weapons are no exception. ‘Maya’ is the Lord’s cosmic powers representing his majesty, his dynamism and his mystical ability to carry out his wishes. Just like all weapons of an army are deemed to be under the authority and command of a king who is the commander-in-chief of his army, similarly all weapons that exist in this creation are under the command of Lord Vishnu whose visible form was in the person of Lord Ram.]

Laxman who was as great as Lord Sheshnath (the celestial serpent who holds the universe on his hoods, and who had manifested himself as Laxman to serve Lord Vishnu) himself, and who was also an image of Lord Vishnu (because Seshnath and Vishnu are inseparable from one another²)—say then is it ever possible that any weapon, no matter how powerful it is, can actually ever harm him?

[To wit, no weapon can harm Laxman as he is a fractional manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the ‘Lord of all weapons’. He appears to be wounded by Ravana’s shot because of the effect of Lord’s Maya—his powers to create delusions, giving an illusory impression that “Laxman was gravely injured by Ravana’s weapon and lost his consciousness”. The matter of the fact is that it was nothing but a ‘smoke-screen’ of deception created by Maya.] (8-9).

[Note—¹The weapons that were used by Ravana during the ferocious no-holds-barred war can be compared to the weapons of our modern world. Those weapons were very powerful and effective, were state-of-the-art and technically advanced weapons, comparable to modern-day chemical, biological, nuclear and other such weapons of mass destruction, or missiles and rockets and guns and grenades that are widely used in warfare.

The term “Maya” refers to the almighty Lord’s cosmic energy and dynamism that can achieve impossible feats. In relation with the weapons that were used at the time this term means that these weapons were exceptionally powerful and effective. Their ability to cause destruction and havoc was unparalleled. Even an ordinary looking weapon such as an arrow could unleash and spew such raging fire and brimstone and vengeance upon anything it is aimed at that huge armies could perish under the attack of one such arrow if it is so wanted or wished.

²According to metaphysics and the Upanishads, everything that exists in this world was created by Brahm, the cosmic pure Consciousness. Brahm has revealed himself in the form of everything; everything is an 'image of Brahm', from the most microscopic to the most gigantic, from the inanimate to the animate, from the subtle and sublime to the gross, from the invisible to the visible. In fact, there is nothing in this creation that is 'not' Brahm.

Hence, Laxman too is an image of Lord Vishnu who is the cosmic form of this Brahm.

Lord Vishnu, the second god of the Trinity, is the sustainer and protector of this creation created by Lord Brahma, the first god of the Trinity. Lord Shiva, the third god of this Trinity, is however responsible for conclusion or bringing to an end of this creation.

In order to sustain this creation and help it to develop and flourish, Lord Vishnu needs a base upon which to rest his charge; so he invariably needs Seshnath's support as the latter holds the world aloft on his hoods and prevents it from collapsing and sinking into the nether world. Therefore, Lord Vishnu invariably depends upon Seshnath to carry on with his duties properly, which is like saying that 'Vishnu is inseparable from Seshnath'.]

तथापि मानुषं भावमापन्नस्तदनुव्रतः ।
 मूर्च्छितः पतितो भूमौ तमादातुं दशाननः ॥ १०॥ हस्तैस्तोलयितुं शक्तो न बभूवातिविस्मितः ।
 सर्वस्य जगतः सारं विराजं परमेश्वरम् ॥ ११॥ कथं लोकाश्रयं विष्णुं तोलयेल्लघुराक्षसः ।
 गृहीतुकामं सौमित्रं रावणं वीक्ष्य मारुतिः ॥ १२॥
 आजघानोरसि क्रुद्धो वज्रकल्पेन मुष्टिना ।
 तेन मुष्टिप्रहारेण जानुभ्यामपतद्भुवि ॥ १३॥ tathāpi mānuṣaṃ bhāvamāpannastadanuvrataḥ । mūrccchitaḥ patito bhūmau tamādātum daśānanaḥ ॥ 10॥ hastaistolayitum śakto na babhūvātivismitaḥ । sarvasya jagataḥ sāraṃ virājaṃ parameśvaram ॥ 11॥ kathaṃ lokāśrayaṃ viṣṇuṃ tolayellaghurākṣasaḥ । grahītukāmaṃ saumitriṃ rāvaṇaṃ vīkṣya mārutiḥ ॥ 12॥ ājaghānorasi kruddho vajrakalpena muṣṭinā । tena muṣṭiprahāreṇa jānubhyāmapatadbhuvi ॥ 13॥

10-13. Still, since the Lord was in the form of a human, he behaved accordingly, and becoming unconscious (due to the effect of the weapon known as Maha-Shakti), he fell to the ground.

In order to take the unconscious Laxman away with him back to Lanka, Ravana (10) tried to lift him up, but he was unsuccessful in doing so. This made him very astonished¹. Indeed say, how can a lowly and humble demon lift someone who supports the whole world from below (in his primary form as Seshnath, the celestial serpent who is believed to hold the world on his hoods), and who also holds Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, as he reclines on his coiled body on the surface of the Kshir Sagar, the celestial ocean of milk?

When Hanuman (Maruti, the son of the wind god) observed that Ravana wants to take Laxman (son of Sumitra) away from the battle-field (12), he became very angry and punched Ravana ferociously in the chest with his Bajra-like² clenched fists. Reeling under the severity of this impact, Ravana swooned and tottered and fell to the ground on his knees (13).

[Note—¹Why was Ravana so astonished when he could not lift Lord Ram lying on the ground? It is because Ravana was no ordinary demon; he had such stupendous strength in his arms that one day he had lifted Mt. Kailash, the abode of Lord Shiva, to bring it to Lanka. It was during this mischief of his that Lord Shiva's favourite mount known as Nandi, the Bull, had cursed Ravana that one day it would be a human being helped by monkeys who will cause his death. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 55-56.}

²The “Bajra” is the weapon of Indra; commonly called thunderbolt. It is said to be the most powerful and infallible weapon that ever existed.]

आस्यैश्च नेत्रश्रवणैरुद्वमन् रुधिरं बहु ।
विघूर्णमाननयनो रथोपस्थ उपाविशत् ॥ १४॥
अथ लक्ष्मणमादाय हनूमान् रावणार्दितम् ।
आनयद्रामसामीप्यं बाहुभ्यां परिगृह्य तम् ॥ १५॥
हनूमतः सुहृत्त्वेन भक्त्या च परमेश्वरः । लगुत्वमगमदेवो गुरुणां गुरुरप्यजः ॥ १६॥ āsyaiśca netraśravaṇaiarudvaman rudhiram bahu । vighūrṇamānanayano rathopastha upāviśat ॥ 14॥ atha lakṣmaṇamādāya hanūmān rāvaṇārditam । ānayadrāmasāmīpyaṃ bāhubhyāṃ parigrhya tam ॥ 15॥ hanūmataḥ suhṛttvena bhaktyā ca parameśvaraḥ । laghutvamagamaddevo gurūṇāṃ gururapyajaḥ ॥ 16॥

14-16. A lot of blood spouted from Ravana's mouth, eyes and ears; he was jolted so severely that he began swooning and tottering, and the world turned in circles before his eyes. Nevertheless, he somehow managed to lift and drag himself to board the rear of his chariot (14).

Thereafter, Hanuman lifted Laxman in his arms and brought him to where Lord Sri Ram was (15).

For the sake of Hanuman, for the sake of his devotion, faith and natural affection for him, Laxman became very light so as to be allowed to be lifted easily, though it is true that he (Laxman) is the heaviest of the most heavy elements in this creation¹. (16)

[Note—¹Laxman made himself light so that Hanuman would be able to easily lift him and take him to Lord Ram. This was done in deference to Hanuman's deep sense of devotion and love for both Laxman and Lord Ram, and his vow to serve them till the last breath of his life. Laxman thought that if Hanuman failed to lift him and take him to Lord Ram then he will feel he has failed in his commitment of service to the two brothers, and this may prove fatal, because then Hanuman may himself decide to end his life rather than face the ignominy of failing to serve Lord Ram and his brother Laxman in their hour of need.]

सा शक्तिरपि तं त्यक्त्वा ज्ञात्वा नारायणांशजम् ।
 रावणस्य रथं प्रागाद्रावणोऽपि शनैस्ततः ॥ १७॥
 सञ्ज्ञामवाप्य जग्राह बाणासनमथो रुषा ।
 राममेवाभिदुद्राव दृष्ट्वा रामोऽपि तं क्रुधा ॥ १८॥
 आरुह्य जगतां नाथो हनूमन्तं महाबलम् । रथस्थं रावणं दृष्ट्वा अभिदुद्राव राघवः ॥ १९॥

sā śaktirapi taṃ tyaktvā jñātvā nārāyaṇāṃśajam । rāvaṇasya ratham prāgādrāvaṇo'pi śanaistataḥ ॥ 17॥ sanjñānavāpya jagrāha bāṇāsanamatho ruṣā । rāmamevābhidudrāva dr̥ṣṭvā rāmo'pi taṃ krudhā ॥ 18॥ āruhya jagatāṃ nātho hanūmantam mahābalaṃ । rathastham rāvaṇam dr̥ṣṭvā abhidudrāva rāghavaḥ ॥ 19॥

17-19. Realising (or recognising) that he (Laxman) was but a part (a fraction) of Lord Narayan (Lord Vishnu) himself, that powerful weapon called 'Shakti' bounced-off him (or, left him alone) and went back to Ravana's chariot¹. There, Ravana too gradually regained consciousness (17).

Ravana became very angry and exasperated; taking his bow, he rushed at Lord Sri Ram menacingly. Seeing him coming in his direction, the Lord too became extremely wrathful (18). The Lord of the world (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) climbed on the shoulders of Hanuman, who was very valiant and exceptionally gallant, and seeing Ravana who was astride his chariot, the Lord rushed towards him² (19).

[Note—¹It is like the case of a ray of light bouncing off from a mirror, or from a well polished and glazed surface. It is also observed, though rarely, that a stroke of thunderbolt descending from the cloud in a shaft of dazzling light to strike the world below would sometimes bounces off the surface where it first lands, and then either jumps from one object to another till its energy is dissipated, or it may land on the ground after the first bounce and vanish inside the bowls of the earth.

To wit, the weapon known as 'Shakti' that was shot by Ravana was like a dazzling shaft of high energy equivalent to that of a thunderbolt. When it hit Laxman on the chest, it could not pierce it, but bounced-off it, rebounding and going back to the place from where it came. Boomerang also works in the same way—it comes back to the place from where it is shot.

In our modern world we are aware of bullet-proof jackets through which bullets do not pass. So there is no wonder in this Shakti not being able to pierce Laxman's chest, for it is possible that Laxman was protected by some kind of invisible protective shield that he wore, against which this Shakti was ineffective.

²Lord Ram has mounted Hanuman's shoulders more than once. The first time was when the two brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, had mounted on Hanuman's shoulders as he took them to the summit of the hill to meet Sugriv, the prince of the monkeys—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 27-29.

The second time was when the Lord and his army started on their journey to the shore of the southern ocean to launch a campaign to vanquish the demons and free Sita. At this time Lord Ram had himself commanded that he would mount on the shoulders of Hanuman, and Laxman would sit astride the shoulders of Angad—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 1, verse no. 31.]

ज्याशब्दमकरोत्तीव्रं वज्रनिष्पेषनिष्ठुरम् ।
रामो गम्भीरया वाचा राक्षसेन्द्रमुवाच ह ॥ २०॥
राक्षसाधम तिष्ठाद्य त्व गमिष्यसि मे पुरः । कृत्वापराधमेवं मे सर्वत्र समदर्शिनः ॥ २१॥
येन बाणेन निहता राक्षसास्ते जनालये । तेनैव त्वां हनिष्यामि तिष्ठाद्य मम गोचरे ॥ २२॥ jyāśabdamakarottīvraṃ vajraniṣpeṣaniṣṭhuraṃ । rāmo gambhīrayā vācā rākṣasendramuvāca ha ॥ 20॥ rākṣasādhama tiṣṭhādya kva gamiṣyasi me puraḥ । kṛtvāparādhamevaṃ me sarvatra samadarśinaḥ ॥ 21॥ yena bāṇena nihatā rākṣasāste janālaye । tenaiva tvāṃ haniṣyāmi tiṣṭhādya mama gocare ॥ 22॥

20-22. Sri Ram strung the string of his bow which made such a formidable and loud twang that it could demolish and turn to rubble (i.e. break into splinters) even the mighty and strong weapon known as 'Bajra' by the energy of its sound waves¹.

Then Sri Ram addressed Ravana in a very grave and serious manner in his voice (20)—'Oh you evil, pervert, lowly and wicked demon! Though I have a calm and even mind that remains steady and equitable, treating all the creatures equally and with equanimity, not differentiating one from the other, but still you have offended me unnecessarily. How dare you wish to escape from me now?

Stop; wait for a while (21).

Oh, come on! I shall now kill you using the arrow which I had used earlier to slay the other demons (e.g. the demons Khar, Dushan etc.) who attacked me on other occasions at different places that were inhabited².' (22).

[Note—¹The Bajra is a weapon of Indra, the king of gods. It is made of the toughest of all existing materials. The sound waves generated by the twang of Lord Ram's bow were so strong and had such high potential of energy concentrated in them that they could break to pieces even the Bajra if they struck against it. This example is used in a metaphoric way to give an idea of the huge sound that was produced when Lord Ram pulled the string of his fierce bow and then released it with a deafening, ear-splitting twang.

²The term “other inhabited places” refers to areas in and near forests where sages and hermits lived and established their hermitages, where they practiced their religious vows. Lord Ram had visited many of them during his journey through the forest. The demons used to live in the surrounding forests and torment these sages. Lord Ram had slayed many of them. Some of the demons slayed by Lord Ram were the following: (a) Tadka and Subahu who were killed near the hermitage of sage Vishwamitra—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, (i) Canto 4, verse nos. 26-32 (Tadka); (ii) Canto 5, verse nos. 5-8 (Subahu); (b) Viradh—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 17-34; (c) Khar and Dushan—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 26-35; (d) Marich—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 16-20.

These places referred to by Lord Ram where he slayed the other demons were different from Lanka, because in Lanka only the demons lived, it was ‘inhabited only by the demons’, whereas all other places were ‘inhabited by human beings’, and the demons hid themselves in forested areas, away from human population. This is why the Lord uses the phrase “other inhabited areas”.]

श्रीरामस्य वचः श्रुत्वा रावणो मारुतात्मजम् ।
वहन्तं राघवं सङ्ख्ये शरैस्तीक्ष्णैरताडयत् ॥ २३॥
हतस्यापि शरैस्तीक्ष्णैर्वायुसूनोः स्वतेजसा । व्यवर्धत पुनस्तेजो ननर्द च महाकपिः ॥ २४॥ śrīrāmasya vacaḥ śrutvā rāvaṇo mārutātmajam । vahanṭaṃ rāghavaṃ saṅkhye śaraistīkṣṇairatāḍayat ॥ 23॥ hatasyāpi śaraistīkṣṇairvāyusūnoḥ svatejasā । vyavardhata punastejo nanarda ca mahākapiḥ ॥ 24॥

23-24. Hearing these words of Sri Ram, Ravana shot very sharp, fierce and potentially effective arrows at the son of the wind-god (Hanuman) who was presently the mount of Raghav (Sri Ram) (in order to seriously wound him and render him unfit for participating in the war)¹. (23)

But inspite of being hit by those violent arrows, the son of the wind-god's strength and valour went on progressively increasing, and that great monkey roared thunderously; he yelled fiercely with renewed vigour (24).

[Note—¹In earlier days when chariots were used during wars, the enemy aimed at the chariot and the charioteer as well as the horses so that the king or the army commander riding on it is forced to abandon it. This restricted his movement and the ability to command his troops, because these chariots were often used as battle-field command-and-control units. Their breaking also acted as a big demoralising factor for the army.

So, Ravana intended to wound Hanuman and force Lord Ram to dismount. Injuring Hanuman would also help to push aside a formidable War-Horse of Lord Ram, for Ravana feared Hanuman more than anyone else.]

ततो दृष्ट्वा हनूमन्तं सव्रणं रघुसत्तमः ।
 क्रोधमाहारयामास कालरुद्र इवापरः ॥ २५॥
 साश्वं रथं ध्वजं सूतं शस्त्रौघं धनुरजसा । छत्रं पताकां तरसा चिच्छेद शितसायकैः ॥ २६॥

tato dr̥ṣṭvā hanūmantam savraṇam raghusattamaḥ । krodhamāhārayāmāsa kālarudra ivāparaḥ ॥ 25॥ sāśvam ratham dhvajam sūtam śastraugham dhanurañjasā । chatram patākām tarasā ciccheda śitasāyakaiḥ ॥ 26॥

25-26. When the most superior of the Raghus (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) saw that Hanuman has been injured, he became extremely angry and ferocious as if he were a personification of a second 'Kaal Rudra' (the form of Shiva which is regarded as a manifestation of death, destruction, wrath, vengeance and retribution) (25).

The Lord swiftly used a shower of his own acutely potent and sharp arrows to easily smash (destroy) Ravana's horses, chariot, charioteer and war-standard, as well as all the arms and weapons that were carried by him in this chariot, such as his bow, and the ceremonial umbrellas, royal insignia of the demon kingdom etc. that were also stored in the chariot¹ (26).

[Note—¹It was Ravana who had taken the first step in this direction—of trying to destroy the enemy's mount by shooting at Hanuman. Nothing however happened to Hanuman; but on the contrary, the tables were turned quickly on Ravana when Lord Ram retaliated with his own volley of arrows that demolished the demon king's chariot along with all its paraphernalia of war.]

ततो महाशरेणाशु रावणं रघुसत्तमः ।
 विव्याध वज्रकल्पेन पाकारिरिव पर्वतम् ॥ २७॥
 रामबाणहतो वीरश्चाल च मुमोह च । हस्तान्निपतितश्चापस्तं समीक्ष्य रघूत्तमः ॥ २८॥
 अर्धचन्द्रेण चिच्छेद तत्किरीटं रविप्रभम् । अनुजानामि गच्छ त्वमिदानीं बाणपीडितः ॥ २९॥ tato mahāśareṇāśu rāvaṇam raghusattamaḥ । vivyādha vajrakalpena pākāririva parvatam ॥ 27॥ rāmabāṇahato vīraścāla ca mumoha ca । hastānnipatitaścāpastam samīkṣya raghūttamaḥ ॥ 28॥ ardhačandrena ciccheda tatkirīṭam raviprabham । anujānāmi gaccha tvamidāniḥ bāṇapīḍitaḥ ॥ 29॥

27-29. Thereafter, the best amongst the Raghus (Sri Ram) shot his arrows that were as powerful and effective as Bajra, the 'thunderbolt', which is a strong weapon of Indra that he had used to reduce the mighty mountains to rubble; these formidable arrows pierced through Ravana's body and perforated it like a sieve (27).

Being hit and severely wounded thus by the hail of arrows shot by Lord Sri Ram, that brave warrior (Ravana) lost his bearings; he swooned and fell down unconscious; and his mighty bow slipped from his hand and fell down before Sri Ram, the Lord who was the best in king Raghu's race (28).

Then he (Lord Sri Ram) lopped off the crown—which was as splendid as the sun—from Ravana's head by shooting an arrow with a sickle-shaped tip. [The arrow cut off Ravana's crown from his head in the same way as a farmer uses his farming tool known as a sickle to cut and trim his crop, or lop off unwanted branches and twigs of trees as well as useless plants from his farmland.]

Then Sri Ram said, 'You are wounded and feeling miserable due to being injured by my arrows. Hence, I order you to go away from here for the time being'¹ (29).

[Note—¹Remarkable indeed! The reader must note how great warriors adhered to the principles of ethics and right conduct even during war times in ancient days. Lord Ram could have easily killed Ravana when he lay wounded and unconscious on the ground before him, with his chariot, horses, arms and armaments all destroyed by the Lord as mentioned in verse no. 26 herein above. At that moment, Lord Ram's job of getting rid of his enemy was very easy. But no, he did not kill a fallen enemy. This single instance is a very good and noble example of high and ethical standards that were followed during warfare in earlier times.

One will not fail to see the sharp contrast with what happens in our so-called civilised, cultured and modern society—where killing one's enemy unawares in a cowardly and unethical fashion, such as in an ambush, a terror attack, secret poisoning, remote-controlled weapons, or some other secret and clandestine methods that are routinely employed by spies and secret agents of countries and their militaries, rogue and not-rogue, to eliminate their adversaries, when the victim is unarmed or unprepared to offer any resistance, is more often followed as standard practice, rather than an exception, all over the world.

It will be noted that wars in ancient times were fought according to principles of ethics and morality that conformed to the rules of conduct set for warfare, such as ending the day's battle at evening, starting the next day's battle after sunrise, not killing a fallen warrior, giving protection or grant of life if the enemy asks for mercy, not killing an unarmed opponent, etc. But unfortunately, in our civilised and modern world such situations are seen as golden chances to rid off one's enemy with the least effort and incurring the least collateral damage.]

प्रविश्य लङ्कामाश्वस्य श्वः पश्यसि बलं मम ।
रामबाणेन संविद्धो हतदर्पोऽथ रावणः ॥ ३०॥
महत्या लज्जया युक्तो लङ्कां प्राविशदातुरः ।
रामोऽपि लक्ष्मणं दृष्ट्वा मूर्च्छितं पतितं भुवि ॥ ३१॥

praviśya laṅkāmaśvāsya śvaḥ paśyasi balaṁ mama । rāmabāṇena saṁviddho hatadarpō'tha rāvaṇaḥ ॥ 30॥

mahatyā lajjayā yukto laṅkāṃ prāviśadāturaḥ । rāmo'pi lakṣmaṇaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā mūrccitaṃ patitaṃ bhuvi ॥ 31॥

30-31. You go and take rest in Lanka today, then see my might and valour tomorrow (when you come to face me again after a night's rest)'.
Then being severely incapacitated and miserably wounded, and having his pride, ego, haughtiness and arrogance crushed, Ravana (30) returned shyly to Lanka; he was full of gloom, shame and regrets.

Meanwhile, Lord Sri Ram saw that Laxman was lying unconscious on the ground (31).

मानुषत्वमुपाश्रित्य लीलयानुशुशोच ह ।
ततः प्राह हनूमन्तं वत्स जीवय लक्ष्मणम् ॥ ३२॥
महौषधीः समानीय पूर्ववद्वानराणपि ।
तथेति रघवेणोक्तो जगामाशु महाकपिः ॥ ३३॥
हनूमान् वायुवेगेन क्षणात्तीर्त्वा महोदधिम् । एतस्मिन्नन्तरे चारा रावणाय न्यवेदयन् ॥ ३४॥ mānuṣatvamupāśritya līlayānuśoca ha । tataḥ prāha hanūmantam vatsa jīvaya lakṣmaṇam ॥ 32॥ mahauṣadhīḥ samāniya pūrvavadvānarāṇapi । tatheti raghaveṇokto jagāmāśu mahākapiḥ ॥ 33॥ hanūmān vāyuvegena kṣaṇāttīrtvā mahodadhim । etasminnantare cārā rāvaṇāya nyavedayan ॥ 34॥

32-34. [When Lord Ram saw his brother lying unconscious on the ground—] He began grieving (for Laxman) like an ordinary human under the influence of delusions¹.

The Lord said to Hanuman, 'Oh son (vatsa)! As you had done earlier², bring the great herb that has a rejuvenating property to revive Laxman and all other monkeys'.

When Raghav (Sri Ram) had said so, the great monkey, Hanuman (33), said 'alright', and he immediately started off on the mission of bringing the required herb, with a speed that of the wind³. He crossed the great ocean (that separated Lanka from the mainland towards its northern borders, and over which the Lord had got a bridge constructed earlier in order to cross over to Lanka with his mighty army) in a fraction of a moment (i.e. very quickly).

Just about that time, the spies of Ravana ran to inform him about the latest developments, and submitted their report as follows (34)—

[Note—¹When a person sees his dear brother mortally wounded and thinks that he will not survive, he starts grieving and lamenting for him. Lord Ram knew very well that nothing would happen to Laxman because he is all-knowing and omniscient; that Laxman's fainting and falling down was just for show. Still the Lord grieved and expressed his regret at the decision of sending Laxman to the battle-field as if he was under the sway of delusions like an ordinary man would be.

Why did the Lord behave this way? It was to maintain the secret that he was an incarnate Supreme Being, Lord Vishnu, who has come down in the form of a human being to eliminate the scourge of the evil demons who had been mercilessly tormenting the creatures of the Lord's world, making the Lord obliged to personally intervene and provide succour to his creatures who depended on him for their protection and happiness.

²Refer to: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 71-74. It is obvious why Lord Ram entrusted Hanuman with this job of bringing the herb that would revive Laxman. The Lord knew that Hanuman alone was capable of this unique feat, because he had done it earlier too when he had brought the Mandrachal Mountain on the orders of the Lord so that the wounded monkeys could be brought back to life as narrated in the verses referred to here.

³Hanuman sailed through the sky with the swiftness of a storm or a gale-force wind, with little or no resistance from any obstruction found on the ground below, such as from ocean, rivers, mountains, hills, forests, valleys, etc.]

रामेण प्रेषितो देव हनूमान् क्षीरसागरम् ।
गतो नेतुं लक्ष्मणस्य जीवनार्थं महौषधीः ॥ ३५॥
श्रुत्वा तत्त्वारवचनं राजा चिन्तापरोऽभवत् । जगाम रात्रावेकाकी कालनेमिगृहं क्षणात् ॥ ३६॥ rāmeṇa preṣito deva hanūmān kṣīrasāgaram । gato netuṃ lakṣmaṇasya jīvanārthaṃ mahauṣadhīḥ ॥ 35॥ śrutvā taccāravacanam rājā cintāparo'bhavat । jagāma rātrāvekākī kālanemigṛhaṃ kṣaṇāt ॥ 36॥

35-36. 'Oh Lord! Sri Ram has sent Hanuman to the 'Kshir Sagar' (the legendary ocean of milk), and he has gone there with the errand of bringing the great herb to revive Laxman' (35).

Hearing their report, the king (Ravana) became alarmed and very worried. He instantly, even though it was an improper hour of the night (rātrā---) to visit someone, went alone to the house of Kalnemi (36).

गृहागतं समालोक्य रावणं विस्मयान्वितः । कालनेमिरुवाचेदं पूञ्जतिर्भयविह्वलः ।
अर्घ्यादिकं ततः कृत्वा रावणस्यागूतः स्थितः ॥ ३७॥ किं ते करोमि राजेन्द्र किमागमनकारणम् । कालनेमिमुवाचेदं रावणो दुःखपीडितः ॥ ३८॥ grhāgataṃ samālokya rāvaṇaṃ vismayānvitaḥ ।

kālanemiruvācedaṃ prāñjalirbhayavihvalaḥ । arghyādikaṃ tataḥ kṛtvā rāvaṇasyāgrataḥ sthitaḥ ॥ 37॥ kiṃ te karomi rājendra kimāgamanakāraṇam । kālanemimuvācedaṃ rāvaṇo duḥkhapīḍitaḥ ॥ 38॥

37-38. Seeing Ravana come home to visit him at that odd hour of the night, Kalnemi was surprised and perplexed (and wandered at the probable reasons for his coming to him).

Kalnemi though showed his due respect to the visitor (Ravana) by offering water to clean his feet, and then stood before him with folded hands, but secretly very worried and terrified about what Ravana proposed to say to him.

After initial formalities were over, Kalnemi said politely (37), 'Oh King of kings (rājendra)! With what purpose have you come here today? Say what can I do for you; how can I serve you?'

Then Ravana said sombrely¹ to Kalnemi (38)—

[Note—¹Ravana was overcome with fear of the impending danger to the demon army if Laxman was revived, because he feared that now Laxman would unleash the might of his anger and wrath upon them with a vengeance, and being well aware that Laxman was an incarnation of Lord Seshnath, the thousand hooded serpent who supports the world on his hoods, Ravana was all the more terrified at the prospect of the scorching venom that would spout out of Laxman and fall upon the demons when he loses his cool, roasting them alive, and scorching them to a horrifying death.

Added to this worry was another: He was sure that stopping Hanuman was virtually an impossible thing, as he had witnessed Hanuman's abilities during the Burning of Lanka.

These gloomy and foreboding thoughts clouded his mind, making him feel sore affright and overcome with anxiousness that made him extremely upset.]

ममापि कालवशतः कष्टमेतदुपस्थितम् ।
 मया शक्त्या हतो वीरो लक्ष्मणः पतितो भुवि ॥ ३९॥
 तं जीवयितुमानेतुमोषधीर्हनुमान् गतः ।
 यथा तस्य भवेद्विघ्नस्तथा कुरु महामते ॥ ४०॥
 मायया मुनिवेषेण मोहयस्व महाकपिम् । कालात्ययो यथा भूयात्तथा कृत्वैहि मन्दिरे ॥ ४१॥ mamāpi kālavaśataḥ kaṣṭametadupasthitam । mayā śaktyā hato vīro lakṣmaṇaḥ patito bhuvi ॥ 39॥ taṃ jīvayitumānetumoṣadhīrhanumān gataḥ । yathā tasya bhavedvighnastathā kuru mahāmate ॥ 40॥ māyayā muniveṣeṇa mohayasva mahākapim । kālātyayo yathā bhūyāttathā kṛtvaihi mandire ॥ 41॥

39-41. 'Due to circumstances and bad times, I too am suffering from distress and despair today¹. The brave Laxman is lying on the ground after being hit and injured by my Shakti that I shot at him (39).

Hanuman has gone to fetch a medicinal herb that would revive him. Oh you who are so great ("mahāmate"; Kalnemi)²! You should do something that creates an obstacle in Hanuman's way in order to stop him (or at least delay him) (40).

You should assume a form of a hermit using your powers to create illusions, and try to lead the great monkey astray so that the time-slot for using the medicinal herb expires³. After that, you can return home.' (41).

[Note—¹Ravana was so confident of himself, of his inviolable authority, invincibility and power that he thought were supreme and superseded all others in this creation, that he erroneously thought that he was immune to and beyond the purview of the Laws of Nature so much so that despair, sorrow, grief, misery and misfortune that were a natural phenomena to effect all creatures in this mortal world, and no one, including the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram was spared from it, would dare not touch him. So, he was extremely astonished himself that these negative emotions have affected him that fateful night. This is why he uses the phrase "I too am ---".

²Ravana was very selfish, so he uses this term to praise Kalnemi to make him feel honoured and respected so that it would be easy for Ravana to play with his inflated ego in order to prevail upon him to risk his life to somehow stop Hanuman.

³The herb was to be administered before dawn, after which it would be rendered ineffective.]

रावणस्य वचः श्रुत्वा कालनेमिरुवाच तम् ।
 रावणेश वचो मेऽद्य शृणु धारय तत्त्वतः ॥ ४२॥
 प्रियं ते करवाण्येव न प्राणान् धारयाम्यहम् । मारीचस्य यथारण्ये पुराभून्मृगरूपिणः ॥ ४३॥
 तथैव मे न सन्देहो भविष्यति दशानन ।
 हताः पुत्राश्च पौत्राश्च बान्धवा राक्षसाश्च ते ॥ ४४॥ rāvaṇasya vacaḥ śrutvā kālanemiruvāca tam । rāvaṇeśa vaco me'dya śṛṇu dhāraya tattvataḥ ॥ 42॥ priyaṃ te karavāṇyeva na prāṇān dhārayāmyaham । māricasya yathāraṇye purābhūnmṛgarūpiṇaḥ ॥ 43॥ tathaiva me na sandeho bhaviṣyati daśānana । hatāḥ putrāśca pauṭrāśca bāndhavā rākṣasāśca te ॥ 44॥

42-44. Hearing these words of Ravana, Kalnemi said to him, 'Oh Lord Ravana! Listen to what I have to say to you, and accept it as the truth and a prudent advice (42).

I will do whatever is good for you, and for doing that I do not care for my own life. [But, say, what is the use, what is the real benefit of doing what you wish me to do?] Whatever had happened to Marich in the form of the decoy deer in the Dandakaranya forest earlier¹ (43) would also be my fate.

[To wit, like Marich was killed by Lord Ram when he was forced by you to become a deer with a golden hide so that you could steal Sita, it appears that in all likelihood this would be my fate too; I too would die for following your orders.]

Oh the 10-headed Ravana! There is no doubt about it happening. A number of your sons, grandsons and many of your kith and kin, as well as many other demons have already been killed (44).

[Note—¹This incident of the slaying of Marich by Lord Ram is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 1-41; and Canto 7, verse nos. 1-20.]

घातयित्वाऽसुरकुलं जीवितेनापि किं तव ।
राज्येन वा सीतया वा किं देहेन जडात्मना ॥ ४५॥
सीतां प्रयच्छ रामाय राज्यं देहि विभीषणे । वनं याहि महाबाहो रम्यं मुनिगणाश्रयम् ॥ ४६॥ ghātayitvā'surakulaṃ jīvitenaṃpi kiṃ tava । rājyena vā sītayā vā kiṃ dehena jaḍātmanā ॥ 45॥ sītāṃ prayaccha rāmāya rājyaṃ dehi vibhīṣaṇe । vanam yāhi mahābāho ramyaṃ munigaṇāśrayam ॥ 46॥

45-46. By getting the demon race killed or destroyed one by one in the war, what will you benefit even by living yourself, by having your kingdom with all its inhabitants dead or maimed in war, by having Sita as a trophy of this devastating war, or by being able to retain a body that is outright gross and sinful? (45).

Oh the one with very strong arms (mahābāho)! I sincerely advise you to give Sita back to Sri Ram, and the kingdom to Vibhishan, and then you should renounce the world and go to a pleasant forest inhabited by sages, hermits and ascetics (to do penances and austerities in their company, to repent and atone for your past sinful life, and make strong efforts for redemption of your soul) (46).

स्नात्वा प्रातः शुभजले कृत्वा सन्ध्यादिकाः क्रियाः ।
तत एकान्तमाश्रित्य सुखासनपरिग्रहः ॥ ४७॥
विसृज्य सर्वतः सङ्गमितरान् विषयान् बहिः । बहिःप्रवृत्ताक्षगणं शनैः प्रत्यक् प्रवाहय ॥ ४८॥ snātvā prātaḥ śubhajale kṛtvā sandhyādikāḥ kriyāḥ । tata ekāntamāśritya sukhāsanaparigrahaḥ ॥ 47॥ visṛjya sarvataḥ saṅgamitarān viṣayān bahiḥ । bahiḥpravṛttākṣagaṇam śanaiḥ pratyak pravāhaya ॥ 48॥

47-48. There (in Lanka), have a bath in the morning with clean water (i.e. refresh yourself), perform your Sandhya¹ (i.e. do your religious duty of offering prayers in the morning) and any other religious sacrament that you routinely observe. Then sit on a comfortable seat (such as a prayer mat) in a lonely and secluded place (47).

Then, gradually, step by step, you should detach yourself from all exterior attachments and contacts with the gross world of senses and sensual pleasures, abandon your attachment with all external objects of this material world, and divert your mind and its attention from the outside world towards your innerself (which is pure consciousness, and is known as the Atma)² (48).

[Note—¹The “Sandhya” is a religious sacrament observed three times a day, in the morning, at noon and in the evening. Prayers are offered to one’s deity during these times. It is derived from the word ‘Sandhi’, meaning a junction point. Hence, it refers to those three times of the day when two phases meet each other, viz. the dawn hours when night and day meet; noon hours when morning meets afternoon hours; and dusk or twilight hours when day meets night once again.

²Kalnemi advises Ravana to meditate and abandon his attachment with this gross material world of sensual objects, for this is the right thing for him to do as it would give him eternal peace, and help his soul to find emancipation and salvation. What he is presently doing and plans to do in future is absolutely wrong; it will tie his soul eternally to suffer from miseries and worries from which he would never find deliverance if he did not heed his (Kalnemi’s) wise advice now.]

प्रकृतेर्भिन्नमात्मानं विचारय सदानघ ।
चराचरं जगत्कृत्स्नं देहबुद्धीन्द्रियादिकम् ॥ ४९॥
आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तं दृश्यते श्रूयते च यत् ।
सैषा प्रकृतिरित्युक्ता सैव मायेति कीर्तिता ॥ ५०॥ prakṛterbhinnamātmānaṁ vicāraya sadānagha । carācaram jagatkṛtsnaṁ dehabuddhīndriyādikam ॥ 49॥ ābrahmastambaparyantaṁ drśyate śrūyate ca yat । saiṣā prakṛtirityuktā saiva māyeti kīrtitā ॥ 50॥

49-50. Oh Anagh¹ (“anagha”; someone who is ‘sinless, pure and faultless’)! Always treat your Atma (soul, pure self, pure consciousness) as being a separate and distinct entity from your ‘Prakriti’ (i.e. your nature; the inherent tendencies and inclinations of your physical gross body).

This whole animate as well as inanimate world is gross. Its components consist of a gross physical body, the mind-intellect apparatus, and the sense organs etc. that are associated with this body (49).

The world has two other aspects, the visual and the audible. The ‘visual world’ is the one which a creature directly sees and witnesses, and the ‘audible world’ is that about which he has only heard of. The entire creation, right from its cosmic aspect where its creator Brahma is present, to its microcosmic aspect pertaining to the physical gross world of the present time where the creature himself lives, comes under this ambit.

It is also called ‘Prakriti’ or Nature. Another name for it is ‘Maya’ because it is illusive and delusory in nature²*(50).

[Note—¹Ravana has been called ‘Anagh’ by Kalnemi because he is talking about the Atma or the soul of Ravana which is his true identity. This Atma is a pure entity because it is pure consciousness which is always sinless and without any worldly taints. It is the gross body which may be sinful, definitely not the Atma.

²Why so? It is because of the paradox that ‘what is seen is not the truth, and the truth is not seen’. The creature thinks that the physical world in which it lives is the real thing because it can see and feel this world and its objects. But the creature makes a grave error of judgement in this—because this world is a creation of the mind, hence it is imaginary and deluding; the world is gross and transient, not stable and universal as something that is ‘True’ ought to be, for ‘truth’ never changes while the world is ever-changing. Hence, it cannot be ‘true’.

Then what is the true ‘Truth’? According to the principles of metaphysics expounded by the Upanishads, this ‘true Truth’, the reality, is known as ‘pure Consciousness’. It is the actual entity that gives life and meaning to everything in existence, but the irony is that it cannot be ‘seen or felt’.

Hence it is said that ‘what is seen is not the truth, and the truth is not seen’.

*Here, Kalnemi advised Ravana to stop pursuing a mirage, stop wasting his time and energy in seeking worldly glory and fame by defeating Lord Ram and gaining his wife Sita as a trophy of war. This will not give him peace or happiness, for even if he succeeds in his effort, this success would be as short-lived as any other thing in this mortal and transient world. So what’s the sense of pursuing something that has no longevity and steadiness?

By addressing Ravana as ‘Anagh’, Kalnemi tries to draw his attention to his true identity, to his ‘pure self’, to his Atma, and wake him up from the sleep of delusions that has made him think that his physical body is his identity. This being the case, Kalnemi asks Ravana as to why is he unwittingly tainting his otherwise taintless Atma by indulging in un-righteous deeds, and evil, sinful behaviour?]

सर्गस्थितिविनाशानां जगद्वृक्षस्य कारणम् ।
लोहितश्वेतकृष्णादि प्रजाः सृजति सर्वदा ॥ ५१॥
कामक्रोधादिपुत्राद्यान् हिंसातृष्णादिकन्यकाः ।
मोहयन्त्यनिशं देवमात्मानं स्वैर्गुणैर्विभुम् ॥ ५२॥ sargasthitivināśānāṃ jagadvṛkṣasya kāraṇam । lohitaśvetakṛṣṇādi prajāḥ sṛjati sarvadā ॥ 51॥ kāmakrodhādiputrādyān hiṃsātrṣṇādikanyakāḥ । mohayantyaniśaṃ devamātmānaṃ svairguṇairvibhum ॥ 52॥

51-52. It (i.e. Maya—which is delusion-creating cosmic powers of the Supreme Being) creates three types of creatures who are subjects of the supreme Lord.

These three types of creatures have the following characteristics that distinguish one from the other in physical terms: (i) Those who are considered ‘white’ (i.e. creatures with Satvik tendencies), (ii) those who have a ‘rust-iron’ hue (i.e. creatures with Rajsik tendencies), and (iii) those who have a ‘dark’ feature (i.e. creatures with Tamsik tendencies)¹.

These characters and their bearers form the gross physical body of this huge Tree known as this creation (51).

The same Maya uses its magical powers to create a veil of delusions upon the Atma, the ‘pure-self’ of the creature, making it feel, though erroneously, that there is no difference between his Atma and his gross physical body. To wit, he begins to associate ‘true self’, which is his Atma, with his gross body having characteristics as enumerated above. This implies that the taints associated with the gross body are also applied uncannily to this Atma, which otherwise is pure, holy and taintless.

The Atma of an individual creature is a microcosmic form of the Supreme Atma that has a macrocosmic existence, and is marked by such virtues as being universal, eternal, infinite, constant and blissful. So therefore, the two are virtually similar in their characteristic. Hence, to think that the individual’s Atma is corrupt like the body is a complete wrong deduction, but this is what Maya actually does when it prevails upon the creature to think that his true identity, the Atma, is not separate or different from his gross physical body, thereby imposing upon the Atma all the faults of the body.

As a result of this influence of Maya upon the pure self, a strange situation is created whereby the foolish creature begins to exhibit all the faults associated with this gross world which are symbolically his off-springs—such as having anger, malice, desire, greed and lust, as well as different sorts of attachments and infatuations etc. (52).

[Note—¹The ‘Satvik’ tendencies are the best tendencies amongst the three. They are positive qualities of service, benevolence, mercy, devotion, wisdom, holiness, piety etc.

The ‘Rajsik’ tendencies are the second best quality which produces worldly desires, passions, selfishness, obsession, expansion etc.

The ‘Tamsik’ tendencies are the worst types leading to vices, perversion, delusions, deception, gloom, anger, ignorance et al.

These are collectively called the ‘Three Gunas’. They are all present in varying ratios in a creature, and together determine the character of any individual. Hence, an individual’s nature and character would depend upon the net effect of how these three react and influence each other.

The colours referred to here are only for symbolic purpose, and not intended to make any racial distinction between two individuals. ‘White’ is the colour for purity and piety; ‘red’ is the colour for worldly emotions that are hot and passionate; and of course ‘dark’ represents everything that is gloomy and worthy of abandoning as being unwanted.]

कर्तृत्वभोक्तृत्वमुखान् स्वगुणानात्मनीश्वरे ।
आरोप्य स्ववशं कृत्वा तेन क्रीडति सर्वदा ॥ ५३॥
शुद्धोऽप्यात्मा यया युक्तः पश्यतीव सदा बहिः । विस्मृत्य च स्वमात्मानं मायागुणविमोहितः ॥ ५४॥ kartṛtvabhokṛtvamukhān svaguṇānātmaniśvare । āropya svavaśaṁ kṛtvā tena krīḍati sarvadā ॥ 53॥

śuddho'pyātmā yayā yuktaḥ paśyatīva sadā bahiḥ । vismṛtya ca svamātmānaṁ māyāguṇavimohitaḥ ॥ 54॥

53-54. It (the Maya) casts its delusions upon the Atma of the creature, making it think that it is a 'doer' of things, and is also the 'one who enjoys or suffers' from such doings.

As a result of this, the Atma becomes a tool at the hands of Maya, which keeps on playing its tricks on the creature. The Maya keeps on playing with the creature like a child plays with its toy. The creature dances to the tune of Maya like a puppet does at the hands of the puppeteer.

[To wit, once the Maya manages to grip the Atma of a creature, which is the 'true self' of an individual, and bring it under its influence, it becomes easy for it to twist the mind and intellect of the creature in any way it wants; because it has captured his 'soul' in the same way evil spirits control a person's soul. This is the primary cause why the creature falls in its trap; the creature then is overcome by delusions and begins to long for the world which the Maya has created as its offspring.] (53)

When the Atma thus becomes a subject of the delusory influences of Maya, it loses its own wisdom, and the ability to discriminate between the right and the wrong. It forgets its original nature of being pure, untainted, holy and pious; on the contrary it assumes a faulty character of being sinful, evil and pervert.

As a consequence of this unfortunate development, the Atma begins to look at the material gross world of sense objects as its true habitat and destiny—which makes it lust for it passionately; which makes it yearn for it greedily; which makes it look forward to the world for its peace and happiness, oblivious of the fact that it is pursuing a mirage seeking water to quench its thirst for attaining peace and happiness that always elude him, simply because the world itself is a mirage created by Maya (54).

यदा सद्गुरुणा युक्तो बोध्यते बोधरूपिणा ।
निवृत्तदृष्टिरात्मानं पश्यत्येव सदा स्फुटम् ॥ ५५॥
जीवन्मुक्तः सदा देही मुच्यते प्राकृतैर्गुणैः ।
त्वमप्येवं सदात्मानं विचार्य नियतेन्द्रियः ॥ ५६॥
प्राकृतेरन्यमात्मानं ज्ञात्वा मुक्तो भविष्यसि । ध्यातुं यद्यसमर्थोऽसि सगुणं देवमाश्रय ॥ ५७॥ yadā sadguruṇā yukto bodhyate bodharūpiṇā । nivṛttadrṣṭirātmānaṁ paśyatyeva sadā sphuṭam ॥ 55॥ jīvanmuktaḥ sadā dehī mucyate prākṛtaiguṇaiḥ । tvamapyevaṁ sadātmānaṁ vicārya niyatendriyaḥ ॥ 56॥ prakṛteranyamātmānaṁ jñātvā mukto bhaviṣyasi । dhyātuṁ yadyasamartho'si saguṇaṁ devamāśraya ॥ 57॥

55-57. When it (Atma) interacts (i.e. comes in contact or has interface) with a wise, learned and self-realised teacher or guide, called a Guru, and the latter ignites the light of wisdom and enlightenment in it (or makes the Atma aware of the nature of its real, true self which the Atma had forgotten under the influence/spell of Maya), the Atma diverts (or removes) its sight from the external world surrounding it, and instead directs its attention once again towards its 'pure self', seeing it clearly in its crystal clear primary form as an entity that is holy, sublime, pristine pure, wise and enlightened, an entity that has no worldly taints, corruptions, negativities and blemishes of any kind in it (55).

When this happens, the creature who has hitherto erroneously thought that 'his body is his self and identity' is freed from this delusion, thereby becoming truly liberated. It is because he is freed from all bondages and fetters that tie 'him'—i.e. 'his true self known as the Atma'—to this gross, perishable and deluding world of sense objects.

Further, when this happens, he is naturally freed from all things associated with this world, including the effect of its various 'Gunas', good or bad, as enumerated earlier.

Oh Ravana! You must resolve to exercise self-restraint; you ought to distance yourself from your body because it is not 'you'. Instead, you ought to concentrate your attention and meditate upon your 'true form' which is pristine pure, taintless, free from corruption and vices, and sublime (i.e. your pure conscious Atma or soul) (56). By doing so you will realise that the Atma is different from Nature (represented by the physical world—both visual and invisible). As a result, you shall become liberated (from the delusions and misconceptions under which you are at present).

If however, you are unable to concentrate or meditate on the Atma which is pure consciousness, but which you may consider to be too abstract an entity to focus your mind on, then there is another option for you—should rely on the 'Sagun'¹ aspect of the same Supreme Atma that has revealed itself in the form of the Lord (i.e., Sri Ram) by having devotion and affection for him, by worshipping and adoring him, by having faith and trust in him (57).

[Note—¹The Supreme Being has two aspects—one is 'Saguna' and the other is 'Nirguna'. The Nirguna aspect has no attributes and physical form, while the Saguna aspect has known attributes and form.

The Nirguna aspect of the Lord refers to his cosmic form that is has no attributes, is invisible, all-pervading, all-encompassing, sublime and subtle. This form is pure cosmic Consciousness, also known as Brahm.

The manifested form of this Nirguna aspect is called Saguna, and it has 'gunas', i.e. it has specific characteristics and virtues.

Brahm's, i.e. pure cosmic Consciousness's, Saguna form is represented by Lord Ram at the plane of our gross physical world, while at the cosmic level the same Saguna form has a more sublime and subtle existence in the form of Lord Vishnu. Since Vishnu is the first revelation of pure cosmic Consciousness, or of 'Brahm', when it decided to manifest itself, Lord Vishnu has almost the same characteristics as Brahm, i.e. he is the Nirguna aspect of Brahm as compared to Lord Ram who is the Saguna aspect of the same Brahm. That is why Lord Vishnu is invisible and omnipresent while Lord Ram has a visible existence that has its physical limitations.

There should not be any confusion in this regard; it is a clear and well defined concept like the light of day. Just as a blind man can't see in day, and for him day and night are the same, ignorant persons fail to understand this basic concept about Brahm, Vishnu and Ram.]

हृत्पद्मकर्णिके स्वर्णपीठे मणिगणान्विते । मृदुश्लक्ष्णतरे तत् जानक्या सह संस्थितम् ॥ ५८॥ वीरासनं विशालाक्षं विद्युत्पुञ्जनिभाम्बरम् ।
 किरीटहारकेयूरकौस्तुभादिभिरन्वितम् ॥ ५९॥
 नूपुरैः कटकैर्भान्तं तथैव वनमालया ।
 तक्ष्मणेन धनुर्द्वन्द्वकरेण परिसेवितम् ॥ ६०॥ एवं ध्यात्वा सदात्मानं रामं सर्वहृदि स्थितम् । भक्त्या परमया युक्तो मुच्यते नात्र संशयः ॥ ६१॥ hr̥tpadmakarṇike svarṇapīṭhe maṇigaṇānvite । mṛduślakṣṇatare tatra jānakyā saha saṁsthitam ॥ 58॥ vīrāsanaṁ viśālākṣaṁ vidyutpuñjanibhāmbaram । kirīṭahārakeyūraukaustubhādibhiranvitam ॥ 59॥ nūpuraiḥ kaṭakairbhāntaṁ tathaiva vanamālayā । lakṣmaṇena dhanurdvandvakareṇa parisevitam ॥ 60॥ evaṁ dhyātvā sadātmānaṁ rāmaṁ sarvahr̥di sthitam । bhaktyā paramayā yukto mucyate nātra saṁśayaḥ ॥ 61॥

58-61. [Till this point Kalnemi has expounded upon the Nirguna aspect of the Supreme Being. This form is pure cosmic Consciousness, and it lives in the form of a creature's Atma, his soul, residing in his gross physical body. Meditation on the Atma is akin to worshipping the supreme Atma known as the Parmatma. This leads to bliss and liberation from all miseries associated with the body and the world in which this body lives.

Now, in verse nos. 58-63, Kalnemi describes how to worship the Sagun aspect of the same Supreme Being, who in the present case has manifested himself as Lord Ram.]

In the petals of the heart-like lotus there is a gem-studded, very beautiful golden throne. On it is seated 'he' (Sri Ram—refer verse no. 61) along with Janki (Sita) (58).

He (Sri Ram) is sitting in the 'Viraasan' posture¹, has large eyes resembling lotus petals; his clothes resemble the splendour, brilliance and radiance of a 'creeper-of-light' as they dazzle and shimmer on his divine form.

He is adorned by many ornaments, such as a tiara, a necklace, armlets and the Kaustav Mani² amongst others. The Lord looks extremely charming in his beauteous form (59).

He wears anklets, ear-pins and nose-pins, and a Vanmala³. The Lord is being served by Laxman (his younger brother) holding two bows (one belonging to him and the other kept ready for Lord Sri Ram) (60).

The Lord is the one who resides in the heart of all the creatures as their 'true self' or Atma; as a microcosmic form of pure cosmic Consciousness.

If you (Ravana) meditate upon this view or vision of Lord Sri Ram with full devotion, dedication, conviction, faith and belief, there is no doubt that you will attain emancipation and salvation (61).

[Note—¹The 'Viraasan' is a sitting posture adopted by warriors.

²The ‘Kaustav Mani’ is a jewel worn by Lord Vishnu on his chest.

³The Varmala is a garland worn by Vishnu, generally made of marigold flowers.]

शृणु वै चरितं तस्य भक्तैर्नित्यमनन्यधीः ।
 एवं चेत्कृतपूर्वाणि पापानि च महान्त्यपि । क्षणादेव विनश्यन्ति यथाग्नेस्तूलराशयः ॥ ६२॥

śṛṇu vai caritaṁ tasya bhaktairnityamananyadhīḥ । evaṁ cetkṛtapūrvāṇi pāpāni ca mahāntyapi । kṣaṇādeva vinaśyanti yathāgnestūlarāśayaḥ ॥ 62॥

62. [Kalmemi further says that if it is also not possible for Ravana to do as he has advised him in the aforesaid verses, then he should at least do the following—] You must daily listen to his (Lord Sri Ram's) stories that are inherently holy, pure and divine. While doing this, have full concentration of mind; pay full attention to what is being narrated; and listen to these stories being narrated by the Lord's devotees with devotion and faith.

By doing so, the dark packet that consists of all your previous sins will perish sooner than you expect; it will be destroyed literally in a second just like a huge bundle of cotton perishes in a raging fire¹ (62).

[Note—¹Kalmemi has expounded on three ways of worshipping Lord Ram, a manifestation of the Supreme Being. All these methods or paths of worship lead to the same goal: all grant spiritual bliss and deliverance to the creature; all lead to the creature's emancipation and salvation; all help the spiritual aspirant to attain liberation from the cycle of birth and death characteristic of this mortal world, with its attendant miseries, grief and torments; all hand-hold him and lead him towards attainment of eternal beatitude and felicity; all grant his soul eternal bliss and happiness.

(i) The first method espoused by Kalmemi is based on the philosophy of the Upanishads that essentially say that the individual's soul, known as his Atma, is a microcosmic form of the universal and cosmic Soul known as the Parmatma, the Supreme Being. The Atma of an individual is his ‘true self’, and it is pure consciousness. Since this Atma is an image of the cosmic Atma known as the Parmatma, it follows that a creature is a microcosmic form of the Parmatma. It is due to delusions created by Maya (the powers of cosmic Consciousness to create delusions and illusions) that a creature thinks that he is different from the Parmatma, and in order to find peace and spiritual happiness he goes searching for the Parmatma, the Lord God, the Supreme Being, to obtain his blessings, oblivious and ignorant of the fact that he has to look no further than his own inner-self to see that Parmatma residing right within him as his own Atma. Once this realisation happens, the creature feels bliss within himself.

Hence, the first method espoused by Kalmemi deals with the form of worship of Lord Ram, who is a personified form of the cosmic Consciousness, that relates to the Nirguna form of the Lord, the form that has no physical and identifiable specific attributes, because it incorporates every aspect of all virtues that exist in this creation in its cosmic form. It is a universal form of the Lord that is known as Brahm: it is a form that is invisible, subtle, sublime, all-pervading, all-encompassing and cosmic in its essential nature. It is a form that is called the Atma of an individual creature at the microcosmic level of creation, and the Parmatma at the macrocosmic level of existence, both being the same pure Consciousness existing at two levels or planes.

To successful practice this method of worship of the Lord, Kalnemi advises meditation and contemplation upon one's own self, which is pure Consciousness known as the Atma. For this one has to practice self-restraint on one's sense organs and their inherent tendency to be attached with and attracted to this mundane material world. Renunciation is a tool to enable this. This path is called the path of Gyan, the path of wisdom and self-realisation that leads to enlightenment, a path that is usually followed by great sages, hermits and ascetics. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 46-56.}

(ii) The second approach lays stress on the path of Bhakti—the path of devotion, adoration and worship of the Sagun or the visible aspect of the same Lord God known as the Parmatma. This aspect of the Supreme Being relates to one or the other forms in which he had revealed himself for the benefit of his devotees. One such revealed divine form of the Supreme Being is Lord Ram, the Lord whose life and time is narrated in the epic Ramayana. This form has attributes; it has a visible and physical existence unlike the invisible and attribute-less cosmic form of the Lord.

So, worshipping and adoring this Saguna form of the Supreme Being, which in the present case is Lord Ram, becomes easier and more practical for an individual spiritual aspirant because he can easily relate to it and understand about it using the parameters of this physical world that are known to him, with which he is conversant and comfortable, as compared to the Nirguna form which he might find too abstract and difficult to comprehend, and therefore it does not appeal to him. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 57-61.}

Both are the two sides of the same coin, and both lead to liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation; both the lines lead to the same goal of attainment of spiritual bliss, beatitude and felicity; both path lead to Mukti or Moksha.

(iii) And finally, if both these above two paths do not appeal to an individual, Kalnemi prescribes a third and simple method—which is to attentively hear, with devotion, faith and belief, the divine stories of the Lord being narrated by his devotees. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 6, verse no. 62.}

Dear Readers, you will appreciate that we, the narrator as well as his listener, the author and his reader, are obviously following this third path expounded by Kalnemi for bringing peace and bliss to the soul, which is the path of 'narration and listening', including of course 'reading', the divine Stories of Lord Ram, the incarnate Supreme Being, as we are currently engaged in. So blessed are these moments for all of us.]

भजस्व रामं परिपूर्णमेकं विहाय वैरं निजभक्तियुक्तः ।

हृदा सदा भावितभावरूपं अनामरूपं पुरुषं पुराणम् ॥ ६३॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे षष्ठः सर्गः ॥ ६॥ bhajasva rāmaṃ paripūrṇamekaṃ vihāya vairam nijabhaktiyuktaḥ । hrdā sadā bhāvitabhāvarūpaṃ anāmarūpaṃ puruṣaṃ purāṇam ॥ 63॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe ṣaṣṭhaḥ
sargaḥ ॥ 6॥

63. You must always worship and adore, have dedication and devotion for, have faith and firm conviction in Lord Sri Ram who is complete in all respects, and is the one of his kind (i.e. the Lord has no parallel; there is no one with whom one can compare the greatness of the Lord with).

You should forsake all animosity and ill-will with him, and instead involve yourself with self-inspired and sustained devotion for the Lord who actually has no name or form (because his primary form is Nirguna).

Verily, in his cosmic form he is known as the ‘Viraat Purush¹’ who is adored and worshipped in the Purans (ancient scriptures).

You must always concentrate your mind and meditate upon such a Lord in your heart. The Lord can assume any form which is compatible and in consonant with the desires, pleasures and wishes of his devotees. [To wit, the Lord assumes a form in which his devotee wishes to worship him.] (63).

[Note—¹The “Viraat Purush” is the cosmic form of the Supreme Being. It is another name for Lord Vishnu. The word ‘Viraat’ means vast; it refers to that form of the Lord that is all-pervading and macrocosmic in nature. The word ‘Purush’ means a Male.

Therefore, the Viraat Purush is the name given to the Supreme Father of creation who has a form as vast and measureless as this creation itself.]

Thus ends Canto 6 of Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand that describes the conversation between Lord Shiva and Uma.

Sub-section: 15.2.3 – Lanka Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 1-41:-

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

कालनेमिवचः श्रुत्वा रावणोऽमृतसन्निभम् ।

जज्वाल क्रोधताम्राक्षः सर्पिरद्धिरिवग्निमत् ॥ १॥

निहन्मि त्वां दुरात्मानं मच्छासनपराङ्मुखम् ।

परैः किञ्चिद्गृहीत्वा त्वं भाषसे रामकिङ्करः ॥ २॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

kālanemivacaḥ śrutvā rāvaṇo'mṛtasannibham ।

jajvāla krodhatāmṛākṣaḥ sarpiradbhirivāgnimat ॥ 1॥

nihanmi tvāṁ durātmānaṁ macchāsanaparāṇmukham ।

paraiḥ kiñcidgrhītvā tvāṁ bhāṣase rāmakīṅkaraḥ ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva continued with his narration, saying—'Oh Parvati! When Ravana heard these wise words of Kalnemi, which were actually equivalent to a shower of life-giving nectar called Amrit raining down on Ravana, he did not like them as he was in the throes of death and overcome with delusions.

Consequentially, he became excessively angry and indignant; he became wrathful and exasperated, and his eyes became fiery red with anger. His general reaction to Kalnemi's advice was as if butter or oil was poured on a burning fire; he spluttered and sizzled in excess of anger and wrathfulness.

[To wit, Ravana became furious at being lectured by Kalnemi. He was not accustomed to being lectured at. He spewed fire and brimstone by his demeanours. He cursed and muttered abuses at the poor fellow, calling him with the most abhorable names, grinding his teeth and clenching his fists to imply that he would twist Kalnemi's neck like one wrings wet cloth to squeeze water out of it.] (1)

Ravana threatened Kalnemi with dire consequences: 'I shall kill you, oh you wicked fellow, for disobeying me. It appears that you have taken something from (i.e. have been bribed by) my enemy, for you speak as if you were a servant of Sri Ram, in his pay-roll!' (2).

कालनेमिरुवाचेदं रावणं देव किं क्रुधा ।
न रोचते मे वचनं यदि गत्वा करोमि तत् ॥ ३॥
इत्युक्त्वा प्रययौ शीघ्रं कालनेमिर्महासुरः । नोदितो रावणेनैव हनूमद्विघ्नकारणात् ॥ ४॥ kālanemiruvācedaṃ rāvaṇaṃ deva kiṃ krudhā । na rocate me vacanaṃ yadi gatvā karomi tat ॥ 3॥ ityuktvā prayayau śīghraṃ kālanemirmahāsuraḥ । nodito rāvaṇenaiva hanūmadvighnakāraṇāt ॥ 4॥

3-4. Then Kalnemi said to Ravana, 'Oh Lord! Why do you become so angry? If you do not like what I have said, then I shall go and do as you tell me' (3).

Saying this, the great demon Kalnemi went from there immediately to create a hindrance, an obstacle, in Hanuman's work (i.e. in his path) at the behest of Ravana (4).

स गत्वा हिमवत्पार्श्वं तपोवनमकल्पयत् ।
तत्र शिष्यैः परिवृतो मुनिवेषधरः खलः ॥ ५॥
गच्छतो मार्गमासाद्य वायुसूनोर्महात्मनः ।
ततो गत्वा ददर्शाथ हनूमानाश्रमं शुभम् ॥ ६॥
चिन्तयामास मनसा श्रीमान् पवननन्दनः । पुरा न दृष्टमेतन्मे मुनिमण्डलमुत्तमम् ॥ ७॥ sa gatvā himavatpārśvaṃ tapovanamakalpayat । tatra śiṣyaiḥ parivr̥to muniveṣadharāḥ khalah ॥ 5॥ gacchato mārgamāsādyā vāyusūnormahātmanaḥ । tato gatvā dadarśātha hanūmānāśramaṃ śubham ॥ 6॥ cintayāmāsa manasā śrīmān pavananandanaḥ ।

purā na dr̥ṣṭametanme munimaṇḍalamuttamam ॥ 7॥

5-7. That impostor and wicked fellow went to the foothills of the Himalayas and created an illusionary Tapovan (i.e. a forest where hermits, ascetics and sages live to do penances and austerities), and seated himself disguised as a hermit surrounded by his disciples (5).

That spot was directly on the path by which Hanuman was going (cruising) through the air. When he reached the site, he saw that beautiful and auspicious looking hermitage (6).

The son of the wind-god (Hanuman) thought to himself, 'When I went by this way on the earlier occasion, I had not seen this magnificent group of hermits and their hermitage (7).

मार्गो विभ्रंशितो वा मे भ्रमो वा चित्तसम्भवः ।
यद्वाऽऽविश्याश्रमपदं दृष्ट्वा मुनिमशेषतः ॥ ८॥
पीत्वा जलं ततो यामि द्रोणाचलमनुत्तमम् ।
इत्युक्त्वा प्रविवेशाथ सर्वतो योजनायतम् ॥ ९॥
आश्रमं कदलीशालखर्जूरपनसादिभिः । समावृतं पक्वफलैर्नम्रशाखैश्च पादपैः ॥ १०॥

mārgo vibhramśito vā me bhramo vā cittasambhavaḥ । yadvā"viśyāśramapadaṁ dr̥ṣṭvā munimaśeṣataḥ ॥ 8॥ pītvā jalaṁ tato yāmi droṇācalamanuttamam । ityuktvā praviveśātha sarvato yojanāyatam ॥ 9॥ āśramaṁ kadaliśālakharjūrapanasādibhiḥ । samāvṛtaṁ pakvaphalairnamraśākhaiśca pādapaiḥ ॥ 10॥

8-10. Have I lost my way, or am I having some hallucination or optical illusion in my mind. Well, let me go to that hermitage nevertheless and see (meet) those exalted sages (8), drink water, and after that (having relaxed a bit and refreshed myself) I shall proceed to the Dronachal mountain which is the best among all the mountains'.

Deciding thus, he went to that illusionary hermitage. It was spread in an area of 1 Yojan (roughly 8 miles) in all the directions (i.e. it had a radius of approximately 8 miles) (9).

It was full of fruit trees, such as plantain, date palm and jackfruit etc., which were so laden with ripe fruits that their branches were bent. Besides these trees, there were Sal trees too (10).

वैरभावविनिर्मुक्तं शुद्धं निर्मललक्षणम् ।
तस्मिन्महाश्रमे रम्ये कालनेमिः स राक्षसः ॥ ११॥
इन्द्रयोगं समास्थाय चकार शिवपूजनम् । हनूमानभिवाद्याह गौरवेण महासुरम् ॥ १२॥ vairabhāvavinirmuktaṁ śuddhaṁ nirmalalakṣaṇam । tasminmahāśrame ramye kālanemiḥ sa rākṣasaḥ ॥ 11॥ indrayogaṁ samāsthāya cakāra śivapūjanam ।

hanūmānabhivādyāha gauraveṇa mahāsuram ॥ 12॥

11-12. That pure and holy looking hermitage was devoid of any hint of animosity, malice, enmity or ill-will. Inside that great and pleasant hermitage, the demon Kalnemi (11) was worshipping Lord Shiva by invoking the great magical trick called 'Indra Yoga' or 'Indrajal'¹.

Hanuman bowed before him with great respect, but at the same time with great sense of self-respect, dignity and honour² (12).

[Note—¹The 'Indrajal' is the name given to practice of witch craft and deception. Kalnemi was worshipping Lord Shiva with a crooked mind. He pretended to be worshipping the Lord but his mind was occupied by other ominous thoughts; he was thinking of means to trap and kill Hanuman. At the same time, he was also worried about his own safety should Hanuman discover his dirty trick.

He was in such a hurry that though he seemed to worship Lord Shiva but there was no Shivalingam there. The meditative posture he adopted and the pretension of worshipping Lord Shiva was intended to mislead Hanuman and make him believe that he was a great ascetic-devotee of Lord Shiva who was devoted to the Nirguna form of the Lord.

²Hanuman was a manifestation of Lord Shiva's eleventh form known as Rudra. So when he observed that Kalnemi was worshipping Shiva, Hanuman felt honoured.

Secondly, Hanuman was a messenger of Lord Ram, the supreme Lord of this creation whom even Lord Shiva worshipped. So therefore, Hanuman was not an ordinary messenger; he took pride and honour in the fact that he represents the Supreme Being.

Thirdly, he wished to subtly tell this hermit that he is bowing before him out of deference to his form as a hermit; for otherwise he would not have cared a dime for who he might be. So the hermit be careful with him.]

भगवन् रामदूतोऽहं हनूमान्नाम नामतः ।
रामकार्येण महता क्षीराब्धिं गन्तुमुद्यतः ॥ १३॥
तृषा मां बाधते ब्रह्मन्नदकं कुत्र विद्यते । यथेच्छं पातुमिच्छामि कथ्यतां मे मुनीश्वर ॥ १४॥ bhagavan rāmadūto'haṃ hanūmānnāma nāmataḥ । rāmakāryeṇa mahatā kṣīrābधिं gantumudyataḥ ॥ 13॥ tṛṣā māṃ bādhate brahmannudakaṃ kutra vidyate । yathēcchāṃ pātumicchāmi kathyatāṃ me munīśvara ॥ 14॥

13-14. Addressing the hermit, Hanuman said, 'Oh the exalted one! I am a messenger of Sri Ram. My name is Hanuman, and I am going to the 'Kshir Sagar' on some great work of my Lord (13).

Oh Brahmin! I am very thirsty and wish to drink a lot of water. Oh great sage! Please tell me the place where there is water here.' (14).

तच्छ्रुत्वा मारुतेर्वाक्यं कालनेमिस्तमब्रवीत् । कमण्डलुगतं तोयं मम त्वं पातुमर्हसि ॥ १५॥
 भुङ्क्ष्व चेमानि पक्वानि फलानि तदनन्तरम् ।
 निवसस्व सुखेनात्र निद्रामेहि त्वरास्तु मा ॥ १६॥ tacchrutvā mārutervākyaṃ kālanemistamabravit । kamaṇḍalugataṃ toyaṃ mama tvaṃ pātumarhasi ॥ 15॥ bhuṅkṣva cemāni pakvāni phalāni tadanantaram । nivasasva sukhenātra nidrāmehi tvarāstu mā ॥ 16॥

15-16. Hearing these words of Maruti (Hanuman), Kalnemi replied, 'You can drink the water of my Kamandalu (a pot of water carried by hermits; it is generally made from dried, hollowed out, round pumpkin) (15).

Quench your hunger by eating the ripe fruits here, then sleep a while and take some rest. Do not be in such a hurry (16).

भूतं भव्यं भविष्यं च जानामि तपसा स्वयम् ।
 उत्थितो लक्ष्मणः सर्वे वानरा रामवीक्षिताः ॥ १७॥
 तच्छ्रुत्वा हनुमानाह कमण्डलुजलेन मे । न शाम्यत्याधिका तृष्णा ततो दर्शय मे जलम् ॥ १८॥ bhūtaṃ bhavyaṃ bhaviṣyaṃ ca jānāmi tapasā svayam । utthito lakṣmaṇaḥ sarve vānarā rāmaṃvīkṣitāḥ ॥ 17॥ tacchrutvā hanumānāha kamaṇḍalujalena me । na śāmyatyadhikā tṛṣṇā tato darśaya me jalam ॥ 18॥

17-18. On the strength of my severe penances and austerities (Tapa), I know all about the past, the present and the future. Presently, Laxman and other monkeys have become conscious and have got up (i.e. they have regained their consciousness and have been revived back to life) when Sri Ram saw them or glanced at them with his gracious look that infused new life in them.' [To wit, there is no hurry now. You can relax as much as you wish.] (17).

Hearing this, Hanuman said, 'I have a great thirst. It cannot be quenched by the little water of the Kamandalu. So, show me a pond or a large body of water (18).

[Note—¹ Kalnemi said a lie in order to impress upon Hanuman that there was no need to hurry and worry when he said that he knew all about the past, present and future, and that Laxman and other monkeys were revived by Sri Ram's benevolent glance. Kalnemi used this as a ploy to make Hanuman waste precious time in bathing and relaxing and eating fruits so that he will be late in taking the herb back to Laxman within the allotted time-frame to make the herb effective, for once this time passed the herb won't work.

Besides this, Kalnemi also planned to kill Hanuman while he was asleep and off his guard.]

तथेत्याज्ञापयामास वटुं मायाविकल्पितम् ।
 वटो दर्शय विस्तीर्णं वायुसूनुर्जलाशयम् ॥ १९॥
 निमील्य चाक्षिणीं तोयं पीत्वागच्छ ममान्तिकम् ।
 उपदेक्ष्यामि ते मन्त्रं येन द्रक्ष्यसि चौषधीः ॥ २०॥ tathetyājñāpayāmāsa vaṭuṃ māyāvikalpitaṃ । vaṭo darśaya vistīrṇaṃ vāyusūnorjalāśayam ॥ 19॥ nimīlya cākṣiṇīṃ toyaṃ pītvāgaccha mamāntikam । upadekṣyāmi te mantraṃ yena drakṣyasi cauṣadhīḥ ॥ 20॥

19-20. Saying 'alright', he ordered an false Brahmachari (a celibate Brahmin who is a student of a hermit), who was created by Kalnemi by using his illusionary powers, 'Oh Brahmachari! Show the son of the wind-god that large pond.' (19).

Turning to Hanuman he said, 'Close your eyes while you drink water¹, and then come to me immediately. I shall teach you a divine Mantra (a magical group of words; in modern parlance, a formulae) by the help of which you will be able to see (recognise) the medicine (herb) that you desire' (20).

[Note—¹Kalnemi wanted Hanuman to keep his eyes closed as he entered the pond because he wanted him not to see an alligator living in the water, so that this giant reptile would catch hold of Hanuman and kill him before he discovers what had happened. But unfortunately for Kalnemi, it was not so easy to fool Hanuman, for he was more than a match for both Kalnemi and the Alligator, as both will eventually be killed by him.]

तथेति दर्शितं शीघ्रं वटुना सलिलाशयम् ।
 प्रविश्य हनुमांस्तोयमपिबन्मीलितेक्षणः ॥ २१॥
 ततश्चागत्य मकरी महामाया महाकपिम् । अग्रासत्तं महावेगान्मारुतिं घोररूपिणी ॥ २२॥ tatheti darśitaṃ śīghraṃ vaṭunā salilāśayam । praviśya hanumāṃstoyamapibanmīlitekṣaṇaḥ ॥ 21॥ tataścāgatya makarī mahāmāyā mahākapiṃ । agrasattaṃ mahāvegānmārutim ghorarūpiṇī ॥ 22॥

21-22. Then the Brahmin said 'alright' and immediately showed the body of water to Hanuman. He entered it and began drinking water with closed eyes (as advised by Kalnemi) (21).

Just at that instant, a huge she-alligator named Makari, who was formidable and horrible in shape and size, and was very illusive, deceitful and full of dirty tricks, came up quickly to devour the great monkey named Maruti (thinking that Hanuman was foolish and gullible enough to be so easily caught and killed by her dirty tricks) (22).

ततो ददर्श हनुमान् ग्रासन्तीं मकरिं रुषा । दारयामास हस्ताभ्यां वदनं सा ममार ह ॥ २३॥
 ततोऽन्तरिक्षे ददृशे दिव्यरूपधराङ्गना । धान्यमातीति विख्याता हनूमन्तमथाब्रवीत् ॥ २४॥ tato dadarśa hanumān grasantīm makarīm ruṣā । dārayāmāsa hastābhyāṃ vadanam sā mamāra ha ॥ 23॥ tato'ntarikṣe dadr̥ṣe divyarūpadharāṅganā । dhānyamālīti vikhyātā hanūmantamathābravīt ॥ 24॥

23-24. When Hanuman saw that the she-alligator (Makari) was swallowing him up, he was ferocious with anger, and he tore apart her mouth with his hands. As a result of this, she died instantly (23).

Just at that moment, a woman with a divine form was seen in the sky. Her name was Dhanyamali. She said to Hanuman (24)—

त्वत्प्रादादहं शापाद्धिमुक्तास्मि कपीश्वर । शप्ताहं मुनिना पूर्वमप्सरा कारणान्तरे ॥ २५॥
 आश्रमे यस्तु ते दृष्टः कालनेर्मिमहासुरः । रावणप्रहितो मार्गे विघ्नं कर्तुं तवानघ ॥ २६॥ tvatprasādādahaṃ śāpāddhimuktāsmi kapīśvara । śaptāhaṃ muninā pūrvamapsarā kāraṇāntare ॥ 25॥ āśrame yastu te dr̥ṣṭaḥ kālanemirmahāsuraḥ । rāvaṇaprahito mārge vighnam kartuṃ tavānagha ॥ 26॥

25-26. Oh the Lord of monkeys! By your grace, I have been liberated and freed from my curse. Previously, I was an Apsara (a celestial damsel working in the court of the king of Gods, Indra). Due to some reason, a sage had cursed me (by which I had become an alligator) (25).

The person you have seen in the hermitage is a great demon called Kalnemi. Oh the sinless, pure and faultless one (i.e. Anagh)! Ravana has sent him to cause obstacles in your path. [So beware of this crooked hermit.] (26).

मुनिवेषधरो नासौ मुनिर्विप्रविहिंसकः ।
 जहि दुष्टं गच्छ शीघ्रं द्रोणाचलमनुत्तमम् ॥ २७॥
 गच्छाम्यहं ब्रह्मलोकं त्वत्स्पर्शाद्धतकल्मषा । इत्युक्त्वा सा ययौ स्वर्गं हनूमानप्यथाश्रमम् ॥ २८॥ muniveṣadharo nāsau munirvipravihiṃsakaḥ । jahi duṣṭam gaccha śīghram droṇācalamanuttamam ॥ 27॥ gacchāmyaḥam brahmalokam tvatsparśāddhatakalmaṣā । ityuktva sā yayau svargaṃ hanūmānapyathāśramam ॥ 28॥

27-28. That fellow who is disguised as a hermit is not a hermit at all; in fact, he is a killer of Brahmins and sages. You must kill this rascal as soon as you can, very quickly, and then proceed to Dronachal which is the best amongst the mountains (27).

I have become freed from sins and blemishes of all kinds by your touch, and am now going to the abode of Brahma'.

Saying so, she went to the heaven, and Hanuman also went back to the hermitage (28).

आगतं तं समालोक्य कालनेमिरभाषत ।

किं विलम्बेन महता तव वानरसत्तम ॥ २९॥

गृहाण मत्तो मन्त्रांस्त्वं देहि मे गुरुदक्षिणाम् ।

इत्युक्तो हनुमान्मुष्टिं ददं बद्ध्वाह यक्षसम् ॥ ३०॥ āgataṁ taṁ samālokya kālanemirabhāṣata ।

kiṁ vilambena mahatā tava vānarasattama ॥ 29॥

grhāṇa matto mantrāṁstvaṁ dehi me gurudakṣiṇām ।

ityukto hanumānmuṣṭiṁ dṛdhaṁ baddhvāha rākṣasam ॥ 30॥

29-30. Seeing him come back, Kalnemi said, 'Oh the best among the monkeys! What will you gain by delaying any further? (29). Take the Mantra from me and give me my Guru Dakshina (the offering of some gift to the teacher in return for the initiation ceremony by accepting the holy Mantra given by him; in modern terms, the teacher's fees)'.

When Kalnemi said so, Hanuman clenched his fists tight and said to the demon (30)—

गृहाण दक्षिणामेतमित्युक्त्वा निजघान तम् ।

विसृज्य मुनिवेषं स कालनेमिर्महासुरः ॥ ३१॥

युयुधे वायुपुत्रेण नानामायाविधानतः ।

महामायिकदूतोऽसौ हनूमान्मायिनां रिपुः ॥ ३२॥ grhāṇa dakṣiṇāmetāmetryuktṛvā nijaghāna tam ।

visrjya muniveṣaṁ sa kālanemirmahāsuraḥ ॥ 31॥

yuyudhe vāyuputreṇa nānāmāyāvidhānataḥ ।

mahāmāyikadūto'sau hanūmānmāyināṁ ripuḥ ॥ 32॥

31-32. 'Take your fees first', and he hit (punched) him (Kalnemi) hard with his clenched fists. Instantly, the great demon abandoned his disguise of a hermit, and assuming different illusive forms and using various tricks he began to fight with the son of the wind-god (Hanuman). But the latter was the messenger of the greatest of tricksters and magicians that Sri Ram is, and he was an enemy of the lowly, inconsequential demons.

[So, how could Hanuman be affected by these wretched impostors and their dirty tricks? To wit, no matter how hard Kalnemi tried and no matter what tricks he employed, Hanuman always outwitted him.] (31-32).

जघान मुष्टिना शीर्ष्णि भग्नमूर्धा ममार सः ।
ततः क्षीरनिधिं गत्वा दृष्ट्वा द्रोणं महागिरिम् ॥ ३३॥
अदृष्ट्वा चौषधीस्तत्र गिरिमुत्पाद्य सत्वरः ।
गृहीत्वा वायुवेगेन गत्वा रामस्य सन्निधिम् ॥ ३४॥
उवाच हनुमान् राममानीतोऽयं महागिरिः ।
यद्युक्तं कुरु देवेश विलम्बो नात्र युज्यते ॥ ३५॥ jaghāna muṣṭinā śīrṣṇi bhagnamūrdhā mamāra saḥ । tataḥ kṣīranidhiṃ gatvā dr̥ṣṭvā droṇaṃ mahāgirim ॥ 33॥ adr̥ṣṭvā cauṣadhīstatra girimutpāṭya satvaraḥ । gr̥hītvā vāyuvegena gatvā rāmasya sannidhim ॥ 34॥ uvāca hanumān rāmamānīto'yaṃ mahāgiriḥ । yadyuktaṃ kuru deveśa vilambo nātra yujyate ॥ 35॥

33-35. He (Hanuman) hit his (Kalnemi's) head with a clenched fist which resulted in his death due to a cracked skull. Having got rid of this obstacle, Hanuman reached the 'Kshir Sagar' and saw Mt. Dronachal (33).

But he could not find (trace or recognise) the required herbal medicine. So he swiftly uprooted and lifted the mountain itself in his hands, and took off with the speed of wind to where Sri Ram was (34).

When he reached there¹, he said to Sri Ram, 'Oh the Lord of Gods! I have brought you the great mountain. Now do whatever you think fit. It will not be proper to delay any further.' (35).

[Note—¹It ought to be noted here that in this version of the Story in Adhyatma Ramayan of sage Veda Vyas, the episode of Hanuman being shot by Bharat as he flew over Ayodhya is not mentioned as done in Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha nos. 58-60.]

श्रुत्वा हनूमतो वाक्यं रामः सन्तुष्टमानसः ।
गृहीत्वा चौषधीः शीघ्रं सुषेणेन महामतिः ॥ ३६॥
विकित्सां कारयामास लक्ष्मणाय महात्मने ।
ततः सुप्तोत्थित इव बुद्ध्वा प्रोवाच लक्ष्मणः ॥ ३७॥ śrutvā hanūmato vākyaṃ rāmaḥ santuṣṭamānasaḥ । gr̥hītvā cauṣadhīḥ śīghraṃ suṣeṇena mahāmatiḥ ॥ 36॥ cikitsāṃ kārayāmāsa lakṣmaṇāya mahātmane । tataḥ suptotthita iva buddhvā provāca lakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 37॥

36-37. Hearing these words of Hanuman, Sri Ram was very pleased. The wise Lord immediately picked (selected) the necessary medicine from that mountain¹ and got the great soul Laxman treated with it through the wise and expert Sushen. Then Laxman became conscious as if he had woken up from a dream (36-37).

[Note—¹Again this is a clear diversion from Tulsidas' Ram Charit Manas and the popular belief that the selection of the medicine and its administration were both done by Sushen. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 62.}]

Here, it was Sri Ram who had selected the necessary drug and Sushen had only administered it to Laxman as a doctor's assistant in a clinic. Sri Ram did not wish to take the risk of letting Sushen do the selection—for, he might have got it all wrong and jeopardise Laxman's life.]

तिष्ठ तिष्ठ क्व गन्तासि हन्मीदानीं दशानन । इति ब्रुवन्तमालोक्य मूर्धन्यवधाय राघवः ॥ ३८॥
मारुतिं प्राह वत्साद्य त्वत्प्रासादान्महाकपे । निरामयं प्रपश्यामि लक्ष्मणं भ्रातरं मम ॥ ३९॥

tiṣṭha tiṣṭha kva gantāsi hanmīdāniṃ daśānana । iti bruvantamālokyā mūrdhnyavaghrāya rāghavaḥ ॥ 38॥ mārutim prāha vatsādyā tvatprasādānmahākape । nirāmayam prapaśyāmi lakṣmaṇam bhrātaram mama ॥ 39॥

38-39. Then Laxman said (to Ravana), 'Oh the 10-headed one! Keep standing. Where will you escape now? I shall kill you right now.'¹

Hearing him say so, Raghav (Sri Ram) smelt the head of Laxman (as a gesture of affection and happiness) (38), and said to Maruti (Hanuman), 'Oh great monkey (mahākape); oh son (vatsā)! It is because of your kindness and grace that I have been able to see my brother Laxman healthy and alive today.'

[Lord Ram thanks Hanuman for his services.] (39).

[Note—¹Laxman's first reaction in challenging Ravana after regaining consciousness shows that during the time he lay unconscious time had stood still for him. So when he woke up from his slumber, he remembered the last moments before fainting, that he was fighting Ravana.]

इत्युक्त्वा वानरैः सार्धं सुग्रीवेण समन्वितः ।
विभीषणमतेनैव युद्धाय समवस्थितः ॥ ४०॥
पाषाणैः पादपैश्चैव पर्वतान्गैश्च वानराः ।
युद्धायाभिमुखा भूत्वा ययुः सर्वे युयुत्सवः ॥ ४१॥

ityuktvā vānaraiḥ sārddham sugrīveṇa samanvitaḥ । vibhīṣaṇamatenaiva yuddhāya samavasthitaḥ ॥ 40॥
pāṣāṇaiḥ pādapaiścaiva parvatāgraiśca vānarāḥ ।

yuddhāyābhimukhā bhūtvā yayuḥ sarve yuyutsavaḥ ॥ 41॥

40-41. Having said so, the Lord began preparations for the war with the assistance of Sugriv, Vibhishan and other monkeys (40).

Then the monkeys, who were very eager for battle, started off for the battle-field armed with rocks, trees and summits of mountains (i.e. large boulders and rocks that came in handy to them), etc. (41).

-----**-----

Section 15.3: Geetawali Ramayan

Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 5-15

Let us take another brief pause at this juncture, before moving forward with this wondrous Story, to look at the episode of Laxman's fainting and his subsequent revival as narrated vividly, with poetic finesse and poignancy, by Goswami Tulsidas in his another classic known as 'Geetawali Ramayan'.

While going through the relevant verses here, we shall also read about the two very poignant moments of exceptional grief and sadness that occur during this episode. The first is when we read how Lord Ram lamented grievously when Laxman was brought to him in an unconscious state and laid down on the ground before him; and second is when we read of how Bharat, the younger brother of Lord Ram, was overwhelmed with regret and remorse when he learnt from Hanuman about what had happened to Laxman during the battle of the previous day, because he felt so helpless and sorry for not being able to render any kind of assistance or aid to his two dear brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, during the time of their misfortune.

For this purpose, in this Section no. 15.3, we shall read from Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 5-15 as follows:

लक्ष्मण—मूर्च्छा
राग केदारा
(6/5)

राम—लषन उर लाय लये हैं।
भरे नीर राजीव—नयन सब अँग परिताप तए हैं॥ 1॥
कहत ससोक बिलोकि बंधु—मुख बचन प्रीति गुथए हैं।
सेवक—सखा भगति—भायप—गुन चाहत अब अथए हैं॥ 2॥
निज कीरति—करतूति तात! तुम सुकृती सकल जए हैं।
मैं तुम्ह बिनु तनु राखि लोक अपने अपलोक लए हैं॥ 3॥
मेरे पनकी लाज इहाँलौं हठि प्रिय प्रान दए हैं।
लागति साँगि बिभीषन ही पर, सीपर आपु भए हैं॥ 4॥
सुनि प्रभु—बचन भालु—कपि—गन, सुर सोच सुखाइ गए हैं।

तुलसी आइ पवनसुत—बिधि मानो फिरि निरमये नए हैं ॥ 5 ॥

lakṣmaṇa-mūcrchā
rāga kēdārā

(6/5)

rāma-laṣana ura lāya layē haiṁ.
bharē nīra rājīva-nayana saba aṁga paritāpa ta'ē haiṁ.. 1.. kahata sasōka bilōki bandhu-mukha bacana prīti gutha'ē haiṁ.
sēvaka-sakhā bhagati-bhāyapa-guna cāhata aba atha'ē haiṁ.. 2..
nija kīrati-karatūti tāta! tuma sukr̥tī sakala ja'ē haiṁ.
mair̥m tumha binu tanu rākhi lōka apanē apalōka la'ē haiṁ.. 3..
mērē panakī lāja ihāṁlaur̥m haṭhi priya prāna da'ē haiṁ.
lāgati sām̐gi bibhīṣana hī para, sīpara āpu bha'ē haiṁ.. 4..
suni prabhu-bacana bhālu-kapi-gana, sura sōca sukhā'i ga'ē haiṁ.
tulasī ā'i pavanāsuta-bidhi mānō phiri niramayē na'ē haiṁ.. 5..

Laxman's Fainting-I

Verse no. 6/5—[In this book “Geetawali”, Goswami Tulsidas has skipped a detailed narration of the War at Lanka, and after describing how Mandodari tried and failed to dissuade Ravana from entering a destructive war and Angad, who was sent by Lord Ram to explore the option of making peace and avoid bloodshed, too tried and failed in his attempt to make Ravana see reason, the poet has come straight to an incident when Laxman, the younger brother of Lord Ram and his comrade-in-arm in the war, was wounded by an arrow shot by Meghnad, the son of Ravana, during their battle. This story of Laxman’s fainting and his subsequent revival has been narrated in Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/5—to 6/15.

Briefly, the story is this: Upon being shot by a poisonous arrow by Meghnad, Laxman fell unconscious in the battle-field. When the battle for the day ended at sunset, Hanuman found Laxman lying on the ground, so he lifted him and brought him to where Lord Ram was. The Lord grieved and lamented sorely over Laxman’s apparent loss of life. This event spread gloom and loss of all hopes of victory amongst the army of the Lord; everyone was distraught and dismayed no end, while there was obvious rejoicing in Ravana’s camp.

Jamvant, the old bear king who happened to be Brahma, the Creator, in his form, advised that Sushen, the medicine man of Lanka, be brought there, as he would be able to prescribe the herb that would revive Laxman. Hanuman immediately brought him there, lifting his whole house for this purpose. Sushen advised that a herb called “Sanjivani” should be brought immediately from the mountains in the north of the mainland (i.e. one of the mountains of the mighty Himalyan range to the north of the Indian peninsula), and it has to be done quick because the herb has to be administered to Laxman before dawn.

The Lord asked Hanuman to get it, because Hanuman had proved himself as the only one in the whole group who could jump long distances by his crossing of the great ocean in one gigantic leap. So, Hanuman went to the northern mountains, and unable to decide which herb to pick up, he uprooted the whole mountain in his hand and cruised back to Lanka through the sky like a plane.

Meanwhile, as he was passing over Ayodhya with the huge mountain in one hand, Bharat, the brother of Lord Ram, saw him a streak of light passing over the night sky, and thinking him to be a demon, Bharat shot him down with a headless arrow to investigate the matter. Hanuman fell down, but since the arrow was only a shaft and Hanuman himself was exceptionally strong in body, no mentionable injury occurred to him. He narrated the latest developments to Bharat, sought his permission and once again resumed his journey to Lanka.

He reached just before dawn; Sushen administered the herb and Laxman was revived, sending cheer in the rank and file of the Lord's army while a thick pall of gloom and dejection spread over the demon army.

This event, "the fainting of Laxman and his revival" has been narrated in (i) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 54—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 62; and (ii) Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/52—6/55 in detail.

In the meanwhile, the probable reason why Tulsidas chose not to describe the details of the War of Lanka in this book, but limit himself to narrating some isolated incidents, such as Mandadori's pleading with Ravna and Angad as an emissary to Ravana's court, is that he had already narrated all other events extensively in his other two version of the Ramayan, viz. "Ram Charit Manas" and "Kavitawali", in their respective Lanka Kands.

As the reader may have noted, the present book "Geetawali" is more focused on Lord Ram, describing the Lord's various moods, emotions and thoughts, his divine deeds and marvelous acts, as well as on some milestone incidents that highlight the role played by some of the more prominent and faithful devotees and followers of the Lord, some of whom had used their wit and words of wisdom to honour and glorify Lord Ram (e.g. Mandadori, Angad), some worshipped him and lived a lived like the Lord himself had led (Bharat), some helped the Lord to complete the task for which he had come down to earth, which was to eliminate the demons, by aiding him in his mission (Sugriv), some who actually acted as the foot-soldier to accomplish the task (Hanuman), some who showed how a soul awaits its deliverance and salvation by seeking the Lord (Sabari, Ahilya), some who made the ultimate sacrifice by laying down their lives in the service of the Lord (Jatau), and some who not only helped the Lord in his day-to-day activity but took upon himself to uphold the sanctity of the words of the Lord even it meant sacrificing his own life in the service of the Lord (Laxman).

We find that each such character finds a mention in Geetawali, and events related to them vis-à-vis Lord Ram are narrated in the book, some such events in great detail (such as was the case of 'Bharat' in Ayodhya Kand), and others a little more conservatively ('Ahilya' in Baal Kand, 'Jatau' and 'Sabari' in Aranya Kand, 'Mandodari' and 'Angad' in Lanka Kand).

In the case of Laxman, he shared a close bond of mutual love and affection with Lord Lord Ram that made him the closest of all the Lord's devotees and associates. The personal sacrifices that Laxman had made were unmatched. He had suffered all the pains, the miseries, the tribulations and the physical difficulties that Lord Ram had undergone during the fourteen years in the forest in his endeavour to finally eliminate the demons, something that Bharat had missed, albeit the latter's devotion for the Lord was in no way less than that of Laxman. Even Lord Ram has expressly acknowledged this fact. {Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/7, stanza no.1.}

Laxman was Lord Ram's only companion and friend in the days when the Lord found himself absolutely desolate, dejected, hopeless and inconsolable after Sita was abducted. Imaging what would have happened if Laxman was not at his side in those crucial moments when Lord Ram discovered Sita was stolen: he was completely dejected, distraught, crestfallen and helpless, swooning in distress, about to faint, and on the verge of well nigh losing all courage and hope, and wishing to lie down and dye. At that time it was Laxman who had lent him his shoulder, who encouraged the Lord to gather himself and face the situation bravely rather than surrendering meekly, because those who have courage and resilience are the winners in the end, and this was the need of the hour. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 30.}

Whenever Lord Ram was attacked by the ferocious demons, it was Laxman who fought shoulder-to-shoulder with the Lord, and there are umpteen instances of it. Then, throughout the fourteen years of exile in the wilderness, Laxman had kept vigil during the night and other times when Lord Ram and Sita lied down to rest. {This particular fact is clearly hinted at in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 90.}

Further, Laxman took it upon himself to ensure that all the words of honour that Lord Ram gave to others, the promises the Lord had made, are kept, even if it meant putting his own life in danger, as is highlighted in the current verse no. 6/5, stanza no. 4 of Geetawali as narrated herein below.

And to top it all, Laxman made the ultimate sacrifice that anyone can make: preferring to die in the cause of the Lord, the event that is the subject matter of the present verse nos. 6/5—6/15 of Geetawali.

Therefore, the event of Laxman fainting and the subsequent developments are narrated to show how Lord Ram loved his younger brother intensely, inspite of the fact that he had violated the Lord's order not to leave Sita alone, and which one disobedience on the part of Laxman had led to all the subsequent sufferings and miseries the Lord as well as Laxman himself had to endure.

Further, this incident sort of acts as a bridge of information that links the Lord Ram and his condition and whereabouts towards the end of his fourteen year exile period which was about to end, and Bharat who was eagerly awaiting the Lord's return to Ayodhya, for we shall soon see that after the full narration of this event of Laxman's fainting and revival, Tulsidas immediately starts on the next important milestone in the story of the Ramayan: viz. the Lord's victory in the War of Lanka, and his return to Ayodhya.]

[When Laxman fainted at being shot by an arrow of Meghnad, Hanuman brought the wounded Laxman to where Lord Ram was.]

Lord Ram lifted Laxman and clasped him to his bosom. His lotus-like eyes were filled with tears, and his entire body was extremely weary with lamentation, contrition, sorrow and anguish (1).

Seeing the face of his brother, he was overwhelmed with sorrows and anguish and said these woeful words soaked in deep regret but full of affection and love for Laxman: 'It appears that all the qualities and characteristics of an excellent servant, a friend, a devotee or worshipper and a brotherhood are about to set¹ (2).

[¹That is to say: “Since Laxman has all these grand and desirable qualities and characteristics in him, if he dies then it would be equivalent of all these noble virtues coming to an end for good.”

Lord Ram is expressing his intense love and affection as well as respect for Laxman; he acknowledges Laxman’s sacrifices for him and says that he is extremely obliged to him. In Ram Charit Manas, Lord Ram has said that one can find all other relations in this world, but it is impossible to find a loving, faithful, devoted and dear brother: refer, Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 61.]

Oh Dear (brother Laxman)! You have acquired great fame and renown in the world by the virtue of your noble characters, and your good and virtuous deeds.

By keeping this mine body (i.e. by keeping myself alive) without you (at my side), I have only earned a bad name and a lot of infamy² (3).

[² “To wit, one one side of the scale are you, Laxman, who has laid down your life for me; and on the other side of the scale is me, Ram, who has used all your services and let you face the wrath of the enemy which I should have faced myself instead. Tell me my dear brother, what face do I have to live without you?”

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 61.]

Ah, alas! You are indeed so vigilant and resolute about upholding my vows that you had laid down your life for it.

That is why, though the ‘Shakti’ (an arrow with a specially charged tip and so potent that it cannot go in vain) was aimed at Vibhishan, you had borne it like a shield.³ (4).

[³The story goes that Ravana had aimed his arrow to shoot down Vibhishan, but Laxman interceded and accepted the arrow himself. This was done by him to protect Vibhishan from any harm so as to uphold Lord Ram’s promise of giving him unconditional protection. This is what the Lord means here: Laxman laid down his life like a true friend and brother to keep the Lord’s words that he would give full protection to Vibhishan.

This incident is narrated in “Adhyatma Ramayan” of Veda Vyas, Lanka Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 1-8.]

Hearing these mournful words of lamentation being spoken by Lord Sri Ram, the bears, monkeys and Gods became very disheartened, dejected, depressed, anguished, forlorn, gloomy and sad⁴.

Tulsidas says that just at this moment, the son of the Wind-God (Hanuman) appeared (with the life saving Sanjivani herb) as if he was the Creator (Brahma) himself, and infused new life in him (Sri Ram)⁵ (5).

[⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Sortha/Doha no. 61.

⁵Brahma is the Creator and the one who injects life in the body of a living being at the time of its birth. So Tulsidas means that when a new lease of life was granted to Laxman by Hanuman by bringing the herb that revived him, it was like he played the role of the Creator vis-à-vis Laxman.]

मोपै तो न कछू है आई।
 ओर निबाहि भली बिधि भायप चल्यो लखन-सो भाई॥ 1॥
 पुर, पितु-मातु, सकल सुख परिहरि जेहि बन-बिपति बँटाई।
 ता सँग हौं सुरलोक सोक तजि सक्यो न प्रान पठाई॥ 2॥
 जानत हौं या उर कठोरतें कुलिस कठिनता पाई।
 सुमिरि सनेह सुमित्रा-सुतको दरकि दरार न जाई॥ 3॥
 तात-मरन, तिय-हरन, गीध-बध, भुज दाहिनी गँवाई। तुलसी मैं सब भाँति आपने कुलहि कालिमा लाई॥ 4॥

rāga sōraṭha

(6/6)

mōpai tō na kachū hvai ā'ī.
 ōra nibāhi bhalī bidhi bhāyapa calyō lakhana-sō bhā'ī.. 1..
 pura, pitu-mātu, sakala sukha parihari jēhi bana-bipati baṁṭā'ī.
 tā saṁga hauṁ suralōka sōka taji sakyō na prāna paṭhā'ī.. 2.. jānata hauṁ yā ura kaṭhōratēm kulisa kaṭhinatā pā'ī.
 sumiri sanēha sumitrā-sutakō daraki darāra na jā'ī.. 3..
 tāta-marana, tiya-harana, gīdha-badha, bhuja dāhinī gaṁvā'ī.
 tulasī mairi saba bhāṁti āpanē kulahi kālimā lā'ī.. 4..

Laxman's Fainting-II

Verse no. 6/6—[Lord Ram laments and grieves—] ‘Alas! I couldn't do anything! Today, Laxman, who was matchless as a brother, upheld the rules and sanctity of brotherhood, and most unfortunately, he has gone now (died) (1).

He, who had resolutely forsaken the city, father, mother and all types of comfort and happiness to share the troubles and tribulations of my forest exile¹—I could not abandon my sorrows and send my soul with him to the abode of Gods (i.e. I could not die with him) (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 61.]

It appears that Vajra (the strong and hard weapon of Indra) has obtained its hardness (toughness, sternness) from my hardened (stiff, emotionless) heart.

Verily, this is why perhaps why my heart did not crack by recalling and remembering the affection and love that Laxman had for me (as soon as I heard that he has fallen to the ground in the battle-field) (3).

Alas! I was the cause for my father's (Dasrath's) death, my wife (Sita) was abducted due to my misfortunes, the vulture king (Jatau) too lost his life for my cause, and now I had to lose this right arm of mine (i.e. Laxman). Thus, I have tarnished the reputation of my whole clan in all of my actions² (4).’

[²Lord Ram laments that the events of his life will be remembered by history as one in which many souls had to suffer for the sake of one individual: for instance,

(a) king Dasrath died because he could not bear separation from Lord Ram, and his death could have been avoided if the Lord paid heed to Sumantra and his own mother Kaushalya and stayed back at Ayodhya; (b) Sita was kidnapped because of his carelessness as he ought to have sternly refused her request to bring the deer because the forest was full of dangers and he would not venture to take a grave risk such as this; (c) Jatau died also due to him, because it was due to his attempt to protect Sita from being taken away by Ravana; and (d) it is now Laxman who too is on the verge of losing his life due to Lord Ram, because Laxman could have stayed comfortably at Ayodhya, but he chose to go with the Lord to the forest, share all the Lord's pains and miseries, and not he is on his death bed because he chose to lend his helping hand to Lord Ram in his war efforts to get Sita back.

In short, Lord Ram laments that so many people suffered because of their association with him. It is he who has misfortune writ large in his destiny, and it is he who has dragged other innocent souls to suffer alongside with him.

The Lord regrets that all the great kings of the Raghu dynasty were known for providing solace and succour to others, and not for being instrumental in their pain and sufferings like Lord Ram has been.]

(6 / 7)

मेरो सब पुरुषारथ थाको ।
 बिपति बँटावन बंधु-बाहु बिनु करौं भरोसो काको ॥ 1 ॥
 सुनु, सुग्रीव ! साँचेहू मोपर फेर्यो बदन बिधाता ।
 ऐसे समय समर-संकट हौं तज्यो लषन-सो भ्राता ॥ 2 ॥
 गिरि, कानन जैहैं साखा-मृग, हौं पुनि अनुज-सँघाती ।
 हैहै कहा बिभीषनकी गति रही सोच भरि छाती ॥ 3 ॥
 तुलसी सुनि प्रभु-बचन भालु-कपि सकल बिकल हिय हारे ।
 जामवंत हनुमंत बोलि तब, औसर जानि प्रचारे ॥ 4 ॥

(6/7)

mērō saba puruṣāratha thākō.
 bipati baṁṭāvana bandhu-bāhu binu karaum bharōsō kākō.. 1..
 sunu, sugrīva! sāṁcēhū mōpara phēryō badana bidhātā.
 aisē samaya samara-saṅkaṭa haum tajyō laṣana-sō bhrātā.. 2..
 giri, kānana jaihairi sākhā-mṛga, haum puni anuja-saṁghātī.
 hvaihai kahā bibhīṣanakī gati rahī sōca bhari chātī.. 3..
 tulasī suni prabhu-bacana bhālu-kapi sakala bikala hiya hārē.
 jāmavanta hanumanta bōli taba, ausara jāni pracārē.. 4..

Laxman's Fainting-III

Verse no. 6/7—[Lord Ram continues with his grieving and lamenting—] ‘All my manly courage, resilience, strength, valour and vigour seem to have become tired now (“mērō saba puruṣāratha thākō”; i.e. I have lost the courage, the resolution and the spirit to do anything further now; I have lost all hopes and feel doomed and dismayed exceedingly).

Without my brother who had shared my woes and troubles, and who was the strength of my arms and an embodiment of my courage, who else should I rely upon now in his absence? [To wit, I say, no one can ever replace Laxman.] (1).

Listen, Sugriv! The Creator has indeed turned his face away from me (i.e. he has become opposed and malicious towards me). For, this is why when the fear of war is looming large and the war is imminent, the Creator has contrived it that Laxman-like brother would also forsake me. [I am so unfortunate and evil-omened that Laxman who represented my arm, my strength, my courage, my valour, and was my friend and companion of all times, has left me at this crucial juncture when the war is about to start. Surely and without gainsay it appears that the envious Creator is hell-bent at tormenting me and wreaking his vengeance upon me, and he had therefore devised this device of falling Laxman to make a mockery of me.] (2).

The monkeys would go back to the mountains and forests (from whence they had come), while I would follow my brother Laxman (i.e. I would too die), but my only worry and concern now is: what, then, will be the fate of Vibhishan?¹ (3).'

[¹Such a remarkable observation of the gracious and munificent Lord! He is more concerned about Vibhishan whom he had given shelter and refuge, with a promise of protecting him and restoring his honour by crowning him the king of Lanka, in the same court in which his elder brother Ravana had kicked him and insulted him. Now what would happen? Laxman is almost dead, Lord Ram says that he too will die due to grief, and the monkeys and bears would go back to their respective lands—and what about Vibhishan? He would be left high and dry; he would be marooned alone in an island that is surrounded by sharks, with no where to run away! Ravana would now become wroth with exceeding wrath upon him, and vent his anger upon him with exceeding vengeance, torturing him viciously, especially when he treats Vibhishan as a traitor, a betrayer and a turncoat.

The Lord's worry is not limited to this; it is more profound and sinister: Lord Ram has a reputation of living upto his words of granting protection to his devotees, to those who have been rejected by the world and have taken shelter and refuge with the Lord; but what about this reputation now if the tide of war goes against him, as seems the case with the loss of Laxman? The poor Vibhishan would be the worst hit. This prospect worries Lord Ram more than anything else.

Forsooth it shows how much the Lord is concerned about the good, the well-being and the welfare of his devotees and those who surrender themselves to him.]

Tulidas says that hearing such mournful lamentations of the Lord, words that were soulful and full of remorse, contrition and regrets, all the monkeys and bears became extremely anguished, agitated and weary.

At this mournful, woeful and pitiful moment, (the bear king) Jamvant summoned Hanuman, and encouraged him (to come to the rescue of all and save the day by doing what was the need of the hour—which was to arrange for a medicine man and bring the necessary herbs he prescribes, without delay and second thoughts)² (4).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 55.]

राग मारू
(6/8)

जौ हौं अब अनुसासन पावौं ।
तौ चंद्रमहि निचोरि चैल—ज्यों, आनि सुधा सिर नावौं ॥ 1 ॥
कै पाताल दलौं ब्यालावलि अमृत—कुंड महि लावौं ।
भेदि भुवन, करि भानु बाहिरो तुरत राहु दै तावौं ॥ 2 ॥
बिबुध—बैद बरबस आनौं धरि, तौ प्रभु—अनुग कहावौं ।
पटकों मीच नीच मूषक—ज्यों, सबहिको पापु बहावौं ॥ 3 ॥
तुम्हरिहि कृपा, प्रताप तिहारेहि नेकु बिलंब न लावौं । दीजै सोइ आयसु तुलसी—प्रभु, जेहि तुम्हरे मन भावौं ॥ 4 ॥

rāga mārū

(6/8)

jau haum̐ aba anusāsana pāvaur̐.
tau candramahi nicōri caila-jyōm̐, āni sudhā sira nāvaur̐.. 1..
kai pātāla dalaum̐ byālāvali amṛta-kunḍa mahi lāvaur̐.
bhēdi bhuvana, kari bhānu bāhirō turata rāhu dai tāvaur̐.. 2..
bibudha-baida barabasa ānaur̐ dhari, tau prabhu-anuga kahāvaur̐.
paṭakaur̐ mīca nīca mūṣaka-jyaur̐, sabahikō pāpu bahāvaur̐.. 3.. tumharihi kṛpā, pratāpa tihārēhi nēku bilamba na lāvaur̐.
dījai sō'i āyasu tulasī-prabhu, jēhi tumharē mana bhāvaur̐.. 4..

Hanuman's assurance to Lord Ram

Verse no. 6/8—[Hanuman consoled Lord Ram not to grieve for Laxman as long as he, Hanuman, is with him. He encouraged the Lord to have strength and courage. He assured the Lord by saying—] ‘If I get your permission, I will wring the moon as if it were a piece of cloth, and squeeze the Amrit (nectar of life) out of it, bring it to you (in order to revive Laxman)—and then only I will bow my head before you! (1).

Or, should I kill the legendary serpents in the nether world who are protecting the pitcher of Amrit, and bring it to the surface (so that it can be given to Laxman to bring him back to life)?

If that did not serve the purpose, should I crack the universe, throw the Sun out of it, and bring Rahu, the enemy of the Sun, and seat him in the vacant place (caused by throwing the Sun out) and close the cavity (so that the Sun cannot rise over the world again, and Laxman can remain in suspended animation till the time a remedy is found, and till the time the demons are vanquished and Vibhishan is put on the throne of Lanka, a matter that is causing you so much worry)¹? (2).

[¹In those days, wars were fought only during the day time. If the Sun is pushed out from the sky and his eternal enemy Rahu is placed in the vacant space in his place, the day won't dawn, and so the war wouldn't start. In the meanwhile,

Hanuman would go alone in the city during the darkness of the night and do away with Ravana and his ilk. Then he would put Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka.]

Not only this, I shall prove my loyalty to my Lord (Sri Ram) only when I will bring Ashwini Kumar, the physician of the Gods, forcefully. [And as forcefully make him contrive a device whereby Laxman can be revived.]

Or, shall I trounce 'death' underfoot like a humble mouse, and make the creatures fearless from it? [To wit, if the Lord permits, I would kill 'death' itself, or at least keep it pressed under my foot till it dies of its own due to strangulation. Once the 'death' is done away with, the fear of it would be eliminated for all times to come. This would mean that no one would die henceforth; and obviously Laxman would too be spared from the clutches of 'death'.] (3).

Lord! It is because (or on the strength) of your grace and your might that I shall not delay a whit nor think for a moment in carrying out these works in full as promised by me to you.

Hence, oh Lord of Tulsidas (tulasī-prabhu), order me to do whatever you think fit, and which would please you and will make me (more) endeared to you² (4).'

[²It hurts and pains my heart when I see you in this pitiful condition. Tell me, have you forgotten me and my abilities? Don't you remember that when everything seemed lost and there was no hope of ever finding where Sita was, especially when our group was confronted by the formidable barrier of the ocean and the prospect of single-handedly entering the fortified city of the demons, a virtual forbidden place where even the Gods durst not peep, and coming back alive, it was I who had cheerfully done the imaginable. I had not only crossed the ocean, trounced the demons' morale and strength, but had burnt their so-called invincible city of Lanka to a smouldering heap of burnt out buildings and gardens, and had safely brought back the news of Sita. And you had then acknowledged my deeds publicly.

Now then, I prithee, why don't you take my service now; why don't you put me to good use? Do you doubt me or my loyalty or my abilities? There is aught naught that I canst do for you, if only I get your nod. And in all sooth, I am eagerly waiting for this nod!]

(6/9)

सुनि हनुमंत-बचन रघुबीर ।

सत्य, समीर-सुवन ! सब लायक, कह्यो राम धरि धीर ॥ 1 ॥

चहिये बैद, ईस-आयसु धरि सीस कीस बलऐन ।

आन्यो सदनसहित सोवत ही, जौलौं पलक परै न ॥ 2 ॥

जियै कुँवर, निसि मिलै मूलिका, कीन्हीं बिनय सुषेन ।

उठ्यो कपीस, सुमिरि सीतापति चल्यो सजीवनि लेन ॥ 3 ॥

कालनेमि दलि बेगि बिलोक्यौ द्रोनाचल जिय जानि ।

देखी दिव्य ओषधी जहँ तहँ जरी, न परि पहिचानि ॥ 4 ॥

लियो उठाय कुधर कंदुक-ज्यौं, बेग न जाइ बखानि ।

ज्यौं धाए गजराज-उधारन सपदि सुदरसनपानि ॥ 5 ॥

आनि पहार जोहारे प्रभु, कियो बैदराज उपचार ।

करुनासिंधु बंधु भेंट्यो, मिटि गयो सकल दुख-भार ॥ 6 ॥

मुदित भालु कपि—कटक, लह्यो जनु समर पयोनिधि पार। बहुरि ठौरही राखि महीधर आयो पवनकुमार॥ 7॥
 सेन सहित सेवकहि सराहत पुनि पुनि राम सुजान।
 बरषि सुमन, हिय हरषि प्रसंसत बिबुध बजाइ निसान॥ 8॥
 तुलसिदास सुधि पाइ निसाचर भए मनहु बिनु प्रान।
 परी भोरही रोर लंकगढ़, दर्ई हाँक हनुमान॥ 9॥

(6/9)

sunī hanumanta-bacana raghubīra.
 satya, samīra-suvana! saba lāyaka, kahyō rāma dhari dhīra.. 1..
 cahiyē baida, īsa-āyasu dhari sīsa kīsa bala'aina.
 ān'yō sadanasahita sōvata hī, jaulaur̃ palaka parai na.. 2..
 jiyai kuṃvara, nisi milai mūlikā, kīnhīm binaya suṣēna.
 uṭhyō kapīsa, sumiri sītāpati calyō sajīvani lēna.. 3..
 kālanēmi dali bēgi bilōkyau drōnācala jiya jāni.
 dēkhī dibya oṣadhī jahaṃ tahaṃ jarī, na pari pahicāni.. 4..
 liyō uṭhāya kudhara kanduka-jyaur̃, bēga na jā'i bakhāni.
 jyaur̃ dhā'ē gajarāja-udhārana sapadi sudarasanapāni.. 5..
 āni pahāra jōhārē prabhu, kiyō baidarāja upacāra.
 karunāsindhu bandhu bhēṇṭyō, miṭi gayō sakala dukha-bhāra.. 6..
 mudita bhālu kapi-kaṭaka, lahyō janu samara payōnidhi pāra.
 bahuri ṭhaurahī rākhi mahīdhara āyō pavanakumāra.. 7..
 sēna sahita sēvakahi sarāhata puni puni rāma sujāna.
 baraṣi sumana, hiya haraṣi prasansata bibudha bajā'i nisāna.. 8..
 tulasidāsa sudhi pā'i nisācara bha'ē manahu binu prāna.
 parī bhōrahī rōra laṅkagarha, da'i hāmka hanumāna.. 9..

Hanuman's Glorious Achievement:

The Bringing of the Sanjivani Herb that Revived Laxman

Verse no. 6/9—Hearing the words of Hanuman, Raghubir (Lord Ram) felt reassured and please, and he patiently said, 'It is true, oh son of the Wind-God! You can indeed do all these things (1).

Now, there is first and foremost the immediate need of a physician (a doctor, a medicine man who uses herbs in the traditional method of treatment of diseases or ailments; a 'Vaidya').

Keeping the Lord's orders on his head (i.e. he carried out the orders immediately on priority basis), the strong monkey (Hanuman) brought a 'Vaidya' who was asleep in his home, by scooping up the entire house in the fraction of a moment so small that one could not bat an eye-lid during the course of the time taken in this process¹ (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 55.]

The Vaidya was named Sushen. He said politely, 'If the Sanjivani herb can be brought during the night itself (before sunrise), then the prince (Laxman) can be revived.'

As soon as he heard this, the lord of monkeys (Hanuman) got up, remembered (invoked) Lord Sri Ram (in his heart and mind), and started-off to bring the herb² (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 55 and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.

Hanuman did not feel it necessary to take an express oral permission of Lord Ram before the journey, as this was implied when the Lord gave his permission to bring the medicine man named Sushen. Hanuman simply invoked the Lord's strength by remembering him in his heart before he launched on his journey to the northern mountains where this rare herb was to be found.]

On the way he slayed Kalnemi³, and soon saw Mt. Dronachal and recognised it by his sharp intellect. There he saw numerous herbs scattered here and there, but he could not specify (specifically recognise) the herb needed to revive Laxman⁴ (4).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 56—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 58.

It so happened that a spy told Ravana that Sushen has been taken away, and he has given some advice to the enemy, i.e. Lord Ram. Hanuman has been deputed to go bring the necessary herb, and he is on his way through the passage of the sky. Immediately then, Ravana forced one of his demons named Kalnemi to go and stop Hanuman. This demon assumed the form of a hermit and created an illusion of a pond and a hermitage in the path of Hanuman. Flying overhead, when Hanuman saw this green patch of land with a water body, he decided to refresh himself with a drink of fresh water. On the ground he met this imposter Kalnemi who tried to poison him in the guise of giving him water to drink from his water pot. Hanuman meanwhile asked him to wait, and let him first go and take a bath in the pond. While he was bathing, another demoness who lived in it as a crocodile caught hold of Hanuman's feet and began pulling him inside the deep waters of the pond, whereat Hanuman killed him by tearing his mouth into two by pulling his jaws. At the time of death, this demoness resumed her original form of an Apsara (celestial damsel). She warned Hanuman about Kalnemi. So, Hanuman came back to this deceitful hermit and did him to death. The great wonder is that at the time of his death, this demon pronounced the holy name of Lord Ram, by the virtue of which he found his deliverance. This incident astonished Hanuman and pleased him at the same time. He was astonished that even demons had a soul that was yearning for salvation, and that they could find deliverance by saying the holy name of Lord Ram. This fact please him very much, and reinforced his belief in the mystical powers of Lord Ram and his divine name.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 58.]

Then he lifted the entire mountain like it were a ball (playfully, without any effort)⁵.

No one can describe his speed and swiftness of that time. It appeared that the discus-bearing Lord Vishnu is rushing (dashing) forward to save the elephant king Gajraaj (from the jaws of death)⁶ (5).

[⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 58.

It so happened that Hanuman could not recognise the specific herb needed to revive Laxman. He had but little time in his hands to research and procrastinate. So he thought it wise to scoop the whole mountain and take it back to Lanka.

⁶The story of the Elephant King named "Gajraaj" is this: In the ancient country of Dravid (the present day South India), there was a kingdom called Pandyaraaj whose king was named Indradumna. He was a great devotee of Lord Vishnu and used to offer regular worship to the Lord with great diligence. Once, sage Agastya passed that way with his retinue of disciples. The king was so engrossed in the worship of the Lord that he did not notice the sage and neither did he get up to welcome him or pay his obeisance to him. This annoyed the sage and he cursed—‘You are like a haughty and wild elephant who pays no heed to those standing in the front. Therefore, you deserve to become an elephant—so you would take a birth as an elephant.’ When the king died he became an elephant in a pleasant island in the middle of the Kshirsagar, the celestial ocean of milk.

He had a majestic body and was very strong in his herd. Once he was playing with his she-elephants and companions in a large and beautiful pond. In this pond lived an alligator/crocodile who was actually a Gandharva (a semi-god) named Huhu in his previous life and had become an alligator due to a curse of sage Deval. The alligator /crocodile caught hold of the leg of the elephant and started pulling him inside the deep lake. The Gaja himself and all his companions tried their best but failed to free him from the mouth of the alligator. A long tussle followed and the elephant became completely exhausted. When the situation became so bad that the Gaja, the elephant, was about to sink fully inside the water, he broke a lotus flower and offered it to Lord Vishnu as his last worship and offering before dying. The merciful Lord rushed instantly astride his mount, called the Garud, to save him. Reaching the spot within a moment, the Lord pulled the Gaja out of the water with one hand, and with the other he opened the mouth of the alligator to yank the leg of the elephant free from its clutches. Then the Lord cut off the alligator’s head with his circular weapon known as the Chakra.

Both the alligator/crocodile and the elephant found liberation—the alligator/crocodile reverted to his earlier form of a Gandharva, and Gaja the elephant assumed a divine form similar to that of the Lord and went to his abode in the heaven.]

In this swift way, he brought the mountain and bowed before the Lord. And the Vaidya (Sushen) administered the proper herb (drug) to Laxman (so that he was instantly revived).

Thereafter, the ocean of mercy and compassion, Lord Ram, embraced his brother, and the entire burden caused by this unpleasant episode was removed⁶ (6).

[⁶Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 61 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that follow it.]

The community (i.e. the army) of bears and monkeys was exceedingly jubilant as if they have already crossed the ocean of war. [With the revival of Laxman, not only Lord Ram but the entire army of the Lord too regained their lost hopes and spirits. A loud chorus of greetings and cheer rang out in their rank and file.]

Thence, Hanuman took the mountain and placed it at its proper place⁷ (7).

[⁷Hanuman also took Sushen and placed his house at the spot from where he had brought it earlier. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 62.]

At that time, the most wise Lord Sri Ram, accompanied by the whole army, repeatedly praised his servant (follower, devotee: Hanuman) even as the Gods showered flowers (upon Hanuman), became joyous in their hearts, played their trumpets/kettle-drums to celebrate the occasion, and praised him profusely in laudatory terms (8).

Tulsidas says that when the demons heard this news (of Laxman's revival), they appeared to become lifeless (discouraged, despaired, hopeless and panicky)⁸.

At the crack of dawn, when Hanuman roared, there was a tumult and panic in Lanka (9).

[⁸Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 62.]

राग केदारा

(6 / 10)

कौतुक ही कपि कुधर लियो है।

चल्यो नभ नाइ माथ रघुनाथहि, सरिस न बेग बियो है॥ 1॥

देख्यो जात जानि निसिचर, बिनु फर सर हयो हियो है।

पर्यो कहि राम, पवन राख्यो गिरि, पुर तेहि तेज पियो है॥ 2॥

जाइ भरत भरि अंक भेंटि निज, जीवन-दान दियो है।

दुख लघु लषन मरम-घायल सुनि, सुख बड़ो कीस जियो है॥ 3॥

आयसु इतहि, स्वामि-संकट उत, परत न कछू कियो है।

तुलसिदास बिदर्यो अकास, सो कैसेकै जात सियो है॥ 4॥

rāga kēdārā

(6/10)

kautuka hī kapi kudhara liyō hai.

calyō nabha nā'i mātha raghunāthahi, sarisa na bēga biyō hai.. 1..

dēkhyō jāta jāni nisicara, binu phara sara hayō hiyō hai.

paryō kahi rāma, pavana rākhyō giri, pura tēhi tēja piyō hai.. 2..

jā'i bharata bhari aṅka bhēṅṭi nija, jīvana-dāna diyō hai.

dukha laghu laṣana marama-ghāyala suni, sukha baṛō kīsa jiyō hai.. 3..

āyasu itahi, svāmi-saṅkaṭa uta, parata na kachū kiyō hai.

tulasidāsa bidaryō akāsa, sō kaisēkai jāta siyō hai.. 4..

Hanuman-Bharat Meeting-I

Verse no. 6/10—[Tulsidas now describes the incident that occurred while Hanuman was returning to Lanka with the mountain and the herb. As he flew in the night sky with the glittering herbs all decorating the sides of the huge mountain, and also due to his speed, from the ground it appeared that a comet is passing through, or a demon is flying away. Bharat saw this spectacle, and apprehending that something was amiss, he shot a headless arrow to bring down this mysterious being. Thereat, Hanuman fell to the ground, but even as he fell he muttered aloud the holy name of Lord Ram. Bharat was shocked to hear the Lord's name, and came rushing forward to investigate. He met Hanuman and they exchanged notes. Bharat enquired about the whereabouts and welfare of the Lord, whereat Hanuman briefed him of the latest developments.

Bharat was full of regrets and contrition. He was torn on the horns of a dilemma. On the one hand he had the orders from Lord Ram to stay in Ayodhya and take care of it and its citizens till the time the Lord comes back, and on the other hand he felt the urge to go to the Lord's aid. The second option was impractical from the tidings of the state of affairs that Hanuman gave him. What would Bharat do alone, and it was impossible to assemble an army at such short notice and cover a huge distance from Ayodhya to Lanka. Besides this, the Lord already had an able army at his disposal. It made no sense to add to the confusion.

Then there was no time: Hanuman had to rush because the herb had to be given to Laxman before dawn, and it was already late in the night. There were no planes in Ayodhya. So, giving thoughts to all the matters and weighing the pros and cons, Bharat thought it prudent to let Hanuman resume his journey forthwith, without any delay or demurring.

These developments have been narrated herein below in verse nos. 6/10—6/14.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 60.]

Hanuman playfully scooped up (and lifted) the mountain. Then, bowing his head to Raghunath (Sri Ram), he started on the way back through the path of the sky. No one had the speed and swiftness that Hanuman had at that time (1).

Seeing him passing over (Ayodhya) and thinking that he was some demon, Bharat shot a headless arrow (i.e. only the shaft) at his heart.

Thus shot, he (Hanuman) cried aloud 'Ram' as he fell down upon the ground. It seemed that the magnetic pull of the city of Ayodhya had sucked his strength.

Meanwhile, the Wind God kept the huge mountain aloft (to protect Ayodhya from being crushed under its expanse and weight) (2).

Then Bharat, having heard Hanuman exclaim 'Ram', went near him, lifted him in his arms, and gave him the boon (blessing) of life. [That is, Bharat removed the arrow stuck in his body, gave him emergency treatment and first aid so that Hanuman was immediately revived back and his wound tended to.]

Hearing that Laxman was wounded caused a little whit of worry and sadness to Bharat, but seeing that Hanuman was alive was a greater source of joy for him¹ (3).

[¹This is because getting wounded is not a great source of worry for a brave warrior; it is part of the game and a way of life for them, to which all great warriors are trained to cope with and are accustomed to. But getting proper medicine in time for Laxman was far more important.

This is the reason that finding Hanuman alive and active was a greater source of joy for Bharat—for now the medicine would reach Laxman, who was lying wounded in Lanka, on time. This would make it sure that Laxman rises hale and hearty.

The power of herbs to give instant relief from injury and serious wounds is proved in the case of Hanuman also. Just like Laxman, Hanuman too was shot by an arrow. If he could be revived so easily and quickly by Bharat, then surely it is obvious that Bharat knew very well the powers and potentials of herbs to give immediate relief and heal the wound. So he was not unduly worried about Laxman as he knew that once the proper medicine was applied on his wound and even given orally, Laxman would be out of danger immediately. What was more important now was to make sure that the bearer of that medicine, in this case it was Hanuman, reaches him soon and within the time frame.

Bharat was very relieved to see that Hanuman was alright and out of danger; he was daring to resume his journey. Say, what would have happened if Hanuman was so seriously injured that he wouldn't have been able to resume his journey with the huge mountain in hand? No one else knew the location where Lord Ram and Laxman were present at that time: it was a far away land beyond the end of the land, in the middle of the vast ocean where no human had set foot till that date. No one in Ayodhya either knew the way to go there, nor would they dare to go. So it was extremely important that Hanuman was alright, hale and hearty after this accident.

This is the reason why Bharat was more happy at Hanuman's recovery than being sad at Laxman's injury.]

The Lord (Sri Ram) has ordered him (Bharat) to stay at Ayodhya while there is a looming danger of war on his (Lord's) head—this caused a huge consternation and dilemma for Bharat, but he could not do anything.

Tulsidas compares Bharat's dilemma and perplexity to the question: if the sky is torn, how do we sew it? (There is no plausible solution to it; there is no answer to it) (4).

(6 / 11)

भरत—सत्रुसूदन बिलोकि कपि चकित भयो है।
 राम—लषन रन जीति अवध आए, कैधौ मोहि भ्रम, कैधौ काहू कपट ठयो है॥ 1॥
 प्रेम पुलकि, पहिचानिकै पदपदुम नयो है।
 कह्यो न परत जेहि भाँति दुहू भाइन
 सनेहसों सो उर लाय लयो है॥ 2॥
 समाचार कहि गहरु भो, तेंहि ताप तयो है।
 कुधर सहित चढ़ौ बिसिष, बेगि पठवौ, सुनि
 हरि हिय गरब गूढ़ उपयो है॥ 3॥
 तीरतें उतरि जस कह्यो चहै, गुनगननि जयो है।
 धनि भरत ! धनि भरत ! करत भयो, मगन मौन रह्यो मन अनुराग रयो है॥ 4॥
 यह जलनिधि खन्यो, मथ्यो, लँघ्यो, बाँध्यो, अँचयो है।
 तुलसिदास रघुबीर बंधु—महिमाको सिंधु तरि को कबि पार गयो है?॥ 5॥

(6/11)

bharata-satrusūdana bilōki kapi cakita bhayō hai.
 rāma-laṣana rana jīti avadha ā'ē, kaidhaum mōhi bhrama, kaidhaurṁ kāhū kapaṭa ṭhayō hai.. 1..

 prēma pulaki, pahicānikai padpaduma nayō hai.
 kahyō na parata jēhi bhāṁti duhū bhā'ina sanēhasōṁ sō ura lāya layō hai.. 2.. samācāra kahi gaharu bhō, tēhi tāpa tayō hai.
 kudhara sahita caṛhau bisīṣa, bēgi paṭhavaurṁ, suni hari hiya garaba gūrha upayō hai.. 3.. tīratēm utari jasa kahyō cahai, gunaganani jayō hai.
 dhani bharata! dhani bharata! karata bhayō, magana mauna rahyō mana anurāga rayō hai.. 4..
 yaha jalanidhi khan'yō, mathyō, laṁghyō, bāṁdhyō, aṁcayō hai.
 tulasidāsa raghubīra bandhu-mahimākō sindhu tari kō kabi pāra gayō hai?.. 5..

Hanuman-Bharat Meeting-II

Verse no. 6/11—Seeing Bharat and Shatrughan (who were look-alikes of Sri Ram and Laxman respectively), Hanuman was very confused and perplexed.

He wondered: has Lord Ram and Laxman won victory in the war and returned to Ayodhya, or is this an illusion (as I seem to be hallucinating)?

Or is this some sort of ploy, mischief or deception (created by the enemy, the demons) to deceive me? (1).

Then when he (Hanuman) recognised them (and realized the truth that they were indeed the brothers of Lord Ram), he was thrilled with affection and bowed his head (reverentially) at their lotus-feet.

The way those two brothers (endearingly, affectionately, enthusiastically, emotionally and eagerly) embraced him (Hanuman) cannot be described in words (2).

Then he (Hanuman) gave them (i.e. updated them with) the whole news (about Lord Ram, Laxman and Sita), and said urgently, 'I am getting late'.

Hearing all this, Bharat was overcome with grief and anguish, and said, 'You climb on (ride, mount) my arrow with the mountain; I shall send you immediately to where Lord Ram is.' Hearing these words, a sense of pride emerged in the heart of Hanuman, albeit covertly¹ (3).

[¹Hanuman was proud because he vainly thought that he is so heavy, and added to his own weight was the weight of the mountain—how can the arrow lift them both, he wondered. So, he mounted the arrow to test its ability. He discovered to his amazement that the arrow could actually lift him with the mountain in his hand when Bharat raised his bow to shoot the arrow with Hanuman astride on it.

Hanuman's pride vanished when he found that he looked like a mere fly atop the huge shaft of Bharat's arrow. So he climbed down from it as he felt he would be blown away or slip once the arrow was air-borne.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 60 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it.]

He began to sing the glories and good fame (virtues, valour, strength etc.) of Bharat, for the latter's excellent qualities and noble characters had won him over (or overwhelmed him).

His mind was submerged in love, affection and endearment for Bharat, and saying 'Bharat is great; Hail him', he was so benumbed with surging emotions (and astonishment) that he fell silent (as he was unable to say anything more) (4).

Tulsidas (compares the fame and glory of Bharat with an ocean and) says, 'This physical ocean on the earth was dug up (by the sons of king Sagar), was churned (by the gods and demons in some ancient time in search of Amrit, the elixir of bliss and eternal life), was leapt across and measured (by Hanuman), was bridged or tamed (by the monkey architects Nal and Neel), and was drunk (by sage Agastya). But no poet (or any of the learned bards) has ever been able to cross the symbolic ocean represented by immensity of Bharat's greatness of glories, the immaculacy of his character, the auspiciousness of his nature and thoughts, and the excellency of his noble virtues which are matchless, famous and known world-wide. [To wit, though it is easy to fathom the physical ocean, it is impossible to measure the glories and virtues of Bharat. They are profound, immense and countless.] (5).

(6 / 12)

होतो नहि जौ जग जनम भरतको ।
 तौ, कपि कहत, कृपान-धार मग चलि आचरत बरत को ? ॥ 1 ॥
 धीरज-धरम धरनिधर-धुरहूँतें गुर धुर धरनि धरत को ? ।
 सब सदगुन सनमानि आनि उर, अघ-औगुन निदरत को ? ॥ 2 ॥
 सिवहु न सुगम सनेह रामपद सुजननि सुलभ करत को ? ।
 सृजि निज जस-सुरतरु तुलसी कहँ, अभिमत फरनि फरत को ? ॥ 3 ॥

(6/12)

hōtō nahi jau jaga janama bharatakō.
 tau, kapi kahata, kṛpāna-dhāra maga cali ācarata barata kō?.. 1..
 dhīraja-dharama dharanidhara-dhurahūṁtēm gura dhura dharani dharata kō?..
 saba sadaguna sanamāni āni ura, agha-auguna nidarata kō?.. 2..
 sivahu na sugama sanēha rāmapada sujanani sulabha karata kō?..
 sṛji nija jasa-surataru tulasī kahañ, abhimata pharani pharata kō?.. 3..

Hanuman-Bharat Meeting-III
 (Hanuman Praises the Glory of Bharat)

Verse no. 6/12—[In this verse, Hanuman praises the excellent virtues of Bharat and his sense of love and devotion for Lord Ram. A similar praise for Bharat is mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4, 7-8 that precede Doha no. 325; Chaupai line nos. 3-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 326.

Refer also to: Geetawali, Ayodhya Kand, verse nos. 2/79—2/81.]

Hanuman said, ‘Had Bharat not been born in this world, who would have set such an exemplary example of an immaculate life led in accordance with the best principles of living in a righteous and honourable way, because it is not an easy path to follow as it is similar to walking on the edge of a sharp sword¹ (1).

[¹Bharat had shown by his example what is the meaning of deep love, affection, devotion, worship, reverence, steadfastness of vows, austerities, penances, renunciation, sacrifice, selflessness, righteousness, probity, propriety, brotherhood, spirit of surrender etc. He did not preach, but lived such a life. In the world where we live, practicing these principles is a most difficult proposition, fraught more with the danger of faltering and failing midway than of any achieving any measurable and commendable success.]

Who would have borne in this world the burden of Dhiraj (“dhīraja”; having great patience, tolerance, courage, forbearance and fortitude, as well as of upholding the principles of Dharma (“dharama”; righteousness, probity, propriety, nobility, virtuous conduct), which are heavier than the burden of mountains (dharanidhara-dhurahūmtēm gura)?

Who else would have, on the one hand, respectfully and willingly accepted in his heart all the good virtues and noble characters that one is expected to inculcate and practice (saba sadaguna sanamāni āni ura), and, on the other hand, resolutely drive away or banish everything that is regarded as unrighteous, unethical, improper, vile and evil (agha-auguna nidarata kō)? (2).

Besides this, the virtue of having love and devotion for the lotus-like feet of Lord Sri Ram (sanēha rāmapada), which is not easily possible (i.e. difficult) even for Lord Shiva to access or have (sivahu na sugama)—who would have made it so easily accessible for those who are pious and noble at heart (sujana) by showing them how it can be actually practiced if it was not Bharat (sulabha karata kō)?

Who would have created the all wish-fulfilling Tree of Gods (“surataru”) out of his own glories, good virtues and fame (sr̥ji nija jasa) to produce the desired fruits (“abhimata pharani pharata kō”; of devotion, worship, veneration, love and affection for Lord Ram that ultimately leads to emancipation and salvation of the soul) for Tulsidas (tulasī kahaṁ)?² (3).

[²Tulsidas means that for him and for all other devotees of Lord Ram, Bharat had set an example of devotion, love, surrender and service for the Lord. These virtues are like the fruits of the Kalpa Tree, the Tree of Gods, that fulfil all spiritual needs of the seeker.]

(6 / 13)

सुनि रन घायल लषन परे हैं।
 स्वामिकाज संग्राम सुभटसों लोहे ललकारि लरे हैं॥ १॥
 सुवन—सोक, संतोष सुमित्रहि, रघुपति—भगति बरे हैं।
 छिन—छिन गात सुखात, छिनहिं छिन हुलसत होत हरे हैं॥ २॥
 कपिसों कहति सुभाय, अंबके अंबक अंबु भरे हैं।
 रघुनंदन बिनु बंधु कुअवसर, जद्यपि धनु दुसरे हैं॥ ३॥
 ‘तात ! जाहु कपि सँग’, रिपुसूदन उठि कर जोरि खरे हैं।

प्रमुदित पुलकि पैत पूरे जनु बिधिबस सुढर ढरे हैं॥ 4॥
 अंब-अनुजगति लखि पवनज-भरतादि गलानि गरे हैं। तुलसी सब समुझाय मातु तेहि समय सचेत करे हैं॥ 5॥

(6/13)

sunī rana ghāyala laṣana parē hair̥.
 svāmikāja saṅgrāma subhaṭasōm lōhē lalakāri larē hair̥.. 1.. suvana-sōka, santōṣa sumitrahi, raghupati-bhagati barē hair̥.
 china-china gāta sukhāta, chinahim̐ china hulasata hōta harē hair̥.. 2..
 kapisōm kahati subhāya, ambakē ambaka ambu bharē hair̥.
 raghunandana binu bandhu ku'avasara, jadyapi dhanu dusarē hair̥.. 3..
 'tāta! jāhu kapi saṁga', ripusūdana uṭhi kara jōri kharē hair̥.
 pramudita pulaki painta pūrē janu bidhibasa suḍhara ḍharē hair̥.. 4..
 amba-anujagati lakhi pavanaja-bharatādi galāni garē hair̥.
 tulasī saba samujhāya mātu tēhi samaya sacēta karē hair̥.. 5..

Hanuman meets Laxman's Mother Sumitra

Verse no. 6/13—Sumitra, the mother of Laxman, heard (the news) that Laxman is lying wounded in the battle-field, and that he had fought valiantly with the warrior of the opposite side, i.e. Meghnad, for the sake of his Lord (Sri Ram) (1).

At this information, she was indeed extremely anguished and worried at the condition of her son, albeit at the same time she felt happy and satisfied that he (Laxman) has accepted Raghupati's (Sri Ram's) devotion¹.

[¹To wit, Sumitra was glad that her son Laxman has obeyed her advice that she gave him at the time of departure for the forest. He has lived upto her expectation by faithfully and loyally serving his Lord Sri Ram like a true devotee and follower should do, and to prove his faith and love for Lord Ram he has cheerfully made the supreme sacrifice by laying down his life. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 74—to Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 75 wherein Sumitra has very explicitly advised Laxman to treat Lord Ram and Sita as his father and mother respectively, and make all sincere efforts in good faith to serve them to the best of his ability. So when she heard from Hanuman's accounts that Laxman was lying mortally wounded because he had fought for the Lord's cause, she felt very contented in her heart.]

She was swaying between two extremes of emotions: at one moment her body got agitated and shivered by overwhelming sorrows and grief (at the ominous news that Hanuman had brought, especially that her dear son Laxman was mortally wounded and on the verge of death), and the next moment she recovered herself and regained her poise, feeling cheerful and proud (about her son Laxman and his noble deeds, that he has lived upto her expectations and stood fast in his vows of love and loyalty for Sri Ram). (2).

Then, mother Sumitra had tears in her eyes and said to Hanuman earnestly, 'It is because of grave misfortunes and malignant forces of destiny that Sri Ram has been separated from his brother (Laxman) though both of them (Sri Ram and Laxman) had their bows with them² (3).

[²The two brothers were well armed and were competent enough to protect themselves and each other. They had defeated most fearsome demons while protecting the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra. It is only because of malicious and unfavourable stars that Laxman is dying and his brother Sri Ram could not protect him from getting harmed.]

[Then she turned towards Shatrughan and said—] ‘Dear! You go with Hanuman!’ Immediately on hearing it, Shatrughan stood up with hands joined together at the palms (as a gesture of humble submission and a signal that he fully agrees with what has been ordered him to do). His body was overcome with thrill, and he was so glad as if all the bets had been set in his favour³ (4).

[³Shatrughan was raring to go with Hanuman and help Lord Ram in the war, fighting shoulder-to-shoulder with the Lord and replacing Laxman should it so happen that he is not revived. He saw in this his chance to prove that his love and affection and loyalty for Lord Ram was no less even by a whit than that of Bharat or Laxman.]

Seeing such a condition of the mother and the younger brother (Shatrughan), both Hanuman as well as Bharat became contrite and remorseful.

Tulsidas says that the mother, on her part, when she observed the depressed mental state of the three (Hanuman, Bharat and Shatrughan), immediately recovered her self and overcame her emotions. She acted prudently now, and alerted the three about the urgency of the task at hand⁴. (5).

[⁴When Sumitra saw that Bharat, Hanuman and Shatrughan have become overcome with grief and sorrows, thereby losing their wits, their sense of judgement, prudence and wisdom in a surging tide of gloomy emotions, she immediately recovered her composure and decided to act wisely. She realized that what she had ordered, that Shatrughan should go with Hanuman to join the battle at Lanka, was most impractical and grave in its import. There are a variety of reasons why it was improper and rash to send Shatrughan away to Lanka because any reckless action could be ruinous and detrimental to the welfare of all, specially when a calamitous war was looming over Sri Ram.

Shatrughan had been taking care of the affairs of the kingdom of Ayodhya during the long period of absence of Bharat who was living in self-imposed exile as a recluse, and Lord Ram who was away in the forest. Such impulsive actions as sending Shatrughan to a far away land at so short a notice would leave Ayodhya without a care-taker, and it would result in total chaos and anarchy.

Then there was the question of his actually traveling to Lanka: while Hanuman could fly in the sky, how will Shatrughan go? If he is made to mount on Hanuman’s shoulders, that would only add an additional weight on him because he has to carry the mountain too. It will also slow him down, and it would be suicidal because it was necessary that he swiftly reached Lanka so that the herb could be administered to Laxman before dawn. Hanuman would be in a quandary: he would not be able to refuse to carry Shatrughan on his back as it would seem very bad and impolite, but it would be very cumbersome for him to carry an additional weight of Shatrughan, in addition to the weight of the great mountain that he was already bearing in his hand, who is sure to be heavily armed and carry some extra weapons and arsenal for Lord Ram and Laxman as the two brothers had nothing but their bows and arrows at the time. So that practically rules out any way by which Shatrughan can reach Lanka in the short course of the remaining time of the night.

Secondly, she loved Shatrughan and Bharat no less than she loved Sri Ram and Laxman. She did not wish to take the fateful, horrific risk of sending another son to face an uncertain future, for the outcome of the ongoing war at Lanka was yet unknown and unpredictable—as all wars are!

This explains why Sumitra immediately changed her decision of sending Shatrughan with Hanuman. That Shatrughan remained in Ayodhya and didn't go to Lanka is a fact, and in the context of this verse and especially stanza no. 4, this is the only plausible explanation for it.]

(6 / 14)

बिनय सुनायबी परि पाय ।
 कहौ कहा, कपीस ! तुम्ह सुचि, सुमति, सुहृद सुभाय ॥ 1 ॥
 स्वामि-संकट-हेतु हौ जड़ जननि जनम्यो जाय । समौ पाइ, कहाइ सेवक घट्यो तौ न सहाय ॥ 2 ॥
 कहत सिथिल सनेह भो, जनु धीर घायल घाय ।
 भरत-गति लखि मातु सब रहि ज्यौ गुड़ी बिनु बाय ॥ 3 ॥
 भेंट कहि कहिबो, कह्यो यों कठिन-मानस माय ।
 'लाल ! लोने लषन-सहित सुललित लागत नाँय' ॥ 4 ॥
 देखि बंधु-सनेह, अंब सुभाउ, लषन-कुठाय ।
 तपत तुलसी तरनि-त्रासुक एहि नये तिहुँ ताय ॥ 5 ॥

(6/14)

binaya sunāyabī pari pāya.
 kahaurṁ kahā, kapīsa! tumha suci, sumati, suhṛda subhāya.. 1..
 svāmi-saṅkaṭa-hētu haurṁ jara janani janamyō jāya.
 samau pā'i, kahā'i sēvaka ghaṭyō tau na sahāya.. 2..
 kahata sithila sanēha bhō, janu dhīra ghāyala ghāya.
 bharata-gati lakhi mātu saba rahi ज्याuṁ gurī binu bāya.. 3..
 bhēṇṭa kahi kahibō, kahyō yōṁ kaṭhina-mānasa māya.
 'lāla! lōnē laṣana-sahita sulalita lāgata nāṁya'.. 4..
 dēkhi bandhu-sanēha, amba subhā'u, laṣana-kuṭhāya.
 tapata tulasī tarani-trāsuka ēhi nayē tihūṁ tāya.. 5..

Bharat and Kaushalya's Message for Lord Ram

Verse no. 6/14—[Bharat said to Hanuman—] 'Oh Kapis (i.e. Hanuman, the lord of the monkeys)! When you reach Lord Ram, please catch hold of his feet (on my behalf) and convey my prayer to him. What more can I tell you? You are by nature of a pure and wise mind and intellect (suci), have wisdom (i.e. maturity of thought: sumati), and are of an amiable, friendly, brotherly and affable temperament (suhṛda subhāya) (1).

My wicked mother (Kaikeyi) has given birth to me to give (or to be the cause of) a lot of trouble to the Lord (Sri Ram)¹. How unfortunate and evil-lucked I am that when the time came to help the Lord, I could not provide any service to him inspite of being called his servant (here meaning, his ‘younger brother’ and ‘not a menial servant’).’ (2).

[¹Bharat refers to Lord Ram going to the forest and suffering from all the subsequent horrors because of his wicked mother Kaikeyi who was so extremely selfish that she wished to make her son, Bharat, the king, and in her evil over-zeal she inflicted uncountable miseries on Lord Ram, and Laxman and Sita were too dragged into the vortex of this misery by the virtue of their love for the Lord. Bharat laments that in the end it was he who proved to be the villain of the piece, albeit he was absolutely innocent and had no inkling of his mother’s vicious nature till it was too late.]

Saying thus, he became was overcome with emotions of love and affection, benumbed like a person, no matter how brave and valiant and courageous he is, becomes weary and lacking in energy due to his serious wounds².

Seeing this condition of Bharat, all the mothers³ became distraught and heavy at heart like a kite without an air current to support it (3).

[²A brave warrior’s spirit is not broken by the physical injuries he suffers during battle, but grave injuries to the body do indeed sap his energy and vigour, and makes him physically crippled and unable to continue the fight. This is what is meant by getting ‘weary due to wounds’.

³The ‘other mothers’ here are Sumitra, the mother of Laxman, and Kaushalya, the mother of Lord Ram. It should be noted that the third mother, i.e. Kaikeyi, was shunned by Bharat for the rest of his life. {Refer: Geetawali, Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/37.}

Hence, Kaikeyi was forced to hide her face in obscurity for life in some inner part of the royal palace. It were Sumitra and Kaushalya who came rushing to the spot when the word spread that Bharat has met some messenger of Lord Ram.]

[Then Kaushalya, mother of Lord Ram, said—] ‘Dear (Hanuman)! Meet Sri Ram and tell him that his stern hearted (emotionless) mother has said these words—“Oh son! Your name looks adorable only when conjoined (i.e. in conjunction, accompanied) with that of my lovely son Laxman.”’⁴ (4).

[⁴She means that you will be adored, admired or welcomed only when you come back to Ayodhya with Laxman by your side. Conversely, it means that it would be better if Sri Ram does not show his face in Ayodhya without Laxman who has laid down his life for him.

To Lord Ram’s credit, this is exactly what he said while lamenting for Laxman. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-17 that precede Doha no. 61.]

Tulsidas observes that Hanuman, who could torment even the scorching sun⁵, was himself now being tormented by the three sorrows originating from the surge of affection on part of Bharat (and his frustration and despair), at the statement of the mother (that Sri Ram could not return without Laxman), and at the thought of Laxman’s wound (and the chances of his revival) (5).

[⁵This alludes to his childhood episode when he had lunged forward to eat the sun thinking it to be a ripe red fruit in the sky.]

(6 / 15)

हृदय घाउ मेरे पीर रघुबीरै ।
 पाइ सजीवन, जागि कहत यों प्रेमपुलकि बिसराय सरीरै ॥ 1 ॥
 मोहि कहा बूझत पुनि पुनि, जैसे पाठ-अरथ-चरचा कीरै ।
 सोभा-सुख, छति-लाहु भूपकहँ, केवल कांति-मोल हीरै ॥ 2 ॥
 तुलसी सुनि सौमित्रि-बचन सब धरि न सकत धीरौ धीरै ।
 उपमा राम-लषनकी प्रीतिकी क्यों दीजै खीरै-नीरै ॥ 3 ॥

(6/15)

hṛdaya ghā'u mērē pīra raghubīrai.
 pā'i sajjivana, jāgi kahata yōm prēmapulaki bisarāya sarīrai.. 1..
 mōhi kahā būjhata puni puni, jaisē pāṭha-aratha-caracā kīrai.
 sōbhā-sukha, chati-lāhu bhūpakahaṁ, kēvala kānti-mōla hīrai.. 2..
 tulasī suni saumitri-bacana saba dhari na sakata dhīrau dhīrai.
 upamā rāma-laṣanakī prītikī kyōm dījai khīrai-nīrai.. 3..

Laxman's Revival

Verse no. 6/15—[Coming back to the battle-field, Tulsidas resumes his narration—]
 When Laxman was revived back to life after administration of the Sanjivini herb and asked how he felt, he forgot about any pain or wound afflicting his body, and said cheerfully with an emotionally thrilled body, 'My heart has suffered only the wound, but its pain is actually felt by Raghubir (Sri Ram)'¹ (1).

[¹The Shakti or the energized arrow that Meghnad had shot, had hit Laxman on the chest, near his heart. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 54.

Though he was revived by the herb, the physical wound would take some time to heal and its scar to blend with the skin tissue. It cannot be expected that is healed by magic as if nothing had happened. The healing process of the physical wound and its scar would take some time.

What Laxman means here is that albeit the physical wound was suffered by him, the real pain in the form of extreme shock and profound agony and grief was suffered by Lord Ram.

Laxman says that as far as he is concerned, nothing serious has happened; getting injured in the battle-field is a part of a warriors life. What actually matters is this trifling issue was the cause of so much pain and agony for Lord Ram.]

Even as someone asks a parrot about the meaning of the words it is repeatedly pronouncing, so why do you all repeatedly pester me with such irrelevant queries²?

[²A parrot learns the words by heart and chatters incessantly what he has learnt, but he does not understand an iota of it. So, when everyone around him asked him how he felt, he got annoyed. Laxman says all his feelings rest with Sri Ram; his personal feelings have no consequence. No one understands the special emotional bond of love and affection that he and Lord Ram share. It is clear in the next instance—]

The richness, glamour, magnificence, majesty and joy that is associated with the possession of a diamond, or the pain of loss and the pride of getting or acquiring it belongs to the king (who wears or possesses it), whilst only the intrinsic value and glitter belongs to the diamond³ (2).

[³Here, Lord Ram is like the ‘king’, and Laxman is like the ‘diamond’. It is the king who knows the real worth of the diamond. If it is rare and priceless, the king will exult when he possesses it, and if he loses it he would go into severe bout of dejection and despair, and would barter any thing he possesses if someone brings that diamond to him.

The diamond does not know its value or worth or qualities or characteristics; it is the king who knows them. It is the king who feels the pain of losing a priceless diamond; it is he who rejoices on getting it. The diamond only serves the king mutely by adding to his joys and pleasures and splendour and grandeur when he wears it; it only exacerbates his agony and pain when it is lost.

Similarly, Laxman’s value is known and measured only by Lord Ram: it is he only who knows how important Laxman is in his life. No one else can judge it.]

Tulsidas says that hearing such emotional words of Laxman that were marked by humility, modesty and submission, even those who are renowned for their patience, courage and fortitude would be moved and become emotional and sentimental.

Forsooth and in all sooth, the bond of love and affection betwixt Lord Ram and Laxman is so intangible and profound that no comparison can be made; nay, not even with ‘water and milk’ (khīrai-nīrai)⁴ (3).

[⁴Usually poets and bards compare the inseparable relationship between two individuals by comparing it with the relationship of water with milk. They are both inseparable from one another. But sometimes this comparison fails: for water can be drained out or evaporated from milk, leaving only the latter’s solidified constituents.

But in the case of Lord Ram and Laxman, the bond is so strong and abiding and unbreakable that either both live together, or none of them lives.]

-----**-----

Section 15.4: Kavitawali Ramayan

Kavitawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 52-55

We have read above, in Section 15.3, what ‘Geetawali Ramayan’ says about those critical moments during the epic War of Lanka when Laxman was wounded. Now, a more crisper version is presented in Kavitawali Ramayan. Let us have a quick read of it, and then move on to the next phase of the epic War.

This episode, of Laxman’s fainting and revival, is narrated in Kavitawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 52-55 as follows:

The Fainting of Laxman

मानी मेघनादसौ प्रचारि भिरे भारी भट, आपने अपन पुरुषार्थ न ढील की।

घायल लखनलालु लखि बिलखाने रामु, भई आस सिथिल जगन्निवास-दीलकी ।।
 भाईको न मोहु छोहु सीयको न तुलसीस
 कहैं 'मैं बिभीषनकी कछु न सबील की' ।
 लाज बाँह बोलेकी, नेवाजेकी सँभार-सार
 साहेबु न रामु-से बलाइ लेउँ सीलकी ।।52 ।।

52. mānī mēghanādasōm pracāri bhirē bhārī bhaṭa, āpanē apana puruśāratha na ḍhīla kī.
 ghāyala lakhanalālu lakhi bilakhānē rāmu, bha'ī āsa sithila jagannivāsa-dīlakī..
 bhā'ikō na mōhu chōhu sīyakō na tulasīsa kahaim 'mairim bibhīśanakī kachu na sabīla kī'.
 lāja bāmha bōlēkī, nēvājēkī saṁbhāra-sāra sāhēbu na rāmu-sē balā'i lē'uṁ sīlakī..52..

Verse no. 6/52—Many brave warriors, who were proud of their bravery, clashed with Meghnad, and they did not refrain from showing their valour, strength and prowess. Seeing Laxman injured, Lord Ram started weeping and wailing in distress, and the heart of him (Ram), who is the abode of the world, lost all hopes. The Lord of Tulsidas does not worry about the loss of his own brother, or Sita, but is terribly upset that he could not make any suitable arrangement for Vibhishan. He is more worried about Vibhishan because he is very sensitive to his responsibilities towards the latter (since he has taken the Lord's refuge). There is no master or Lord compared to Lord Ram—I (Tulsidas) say it earnestly and bow before this unique character, natural disposition and quality of Sri Ram (to look after the welfare of his dependants).

[Note—This incident, i.e. 'the fainting of Laxman and his subsequent revival, has been described also in (i) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 54—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 62; and (ii) Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 5-15.]

कानन बासु दसाननु सो रिपु आननश्री ससि जीति लियो है ।
 बालि महा बलसालि दल्यो
 कपि पालि बिभीषनु भूपु कियो है ।।
 तीय हरी, रन बंधु पर्यो
 पै भर्यो सरनागत सोच हियो है ।
 बाँह-पगार उदार कृपाल
 कहाँ रघुबीरु सो बीरु बियो है ।।53 ।।

53. kānana bāsu dasānanu sō ripu ānanaśrī sasi jīti liyō hai.
 bāli mahā balasāli dalyō kapi pāli bibhīśanu bhūpu kiyō hai..
 tīya harī, rana bandhu paryō pai bharyō saranāgata sōca hiyō hai.
 bāmha-pagāra udāra kṛpāla kahām raghubīru sō bīru biyō hai..53..

Verse no. 6/53—In spite of hardships of living in a forest and having an enemy as formidable as Ravana, the beauty of the countenance of Sri Ram's face has surpassed (won over) that of the Moon. He slayed most powerful Bali and protected Sugriva (from Bali's torment), and made Vibhishan the king of Lanka. On the other hand, his wife was stolen (kidnapped) and brother has fallen in the battle-field—still Sri Ram is worried about him who has sought refuge at his feet (about Vibhishan). Indeed, where would one find such a benevolent, magnanimous and merciful Lord as Sri Ram to give protection to those who have sought the protection of his arms?

लीन्हो उखारि पहारु बिसाल, चल्यो तेहि काल, बिलंबु न लायो ।
मारुतनंदन मारुतको, मनको, खगराजको बेगु लजायो ।।
तीखी तुरा 'तुलसी' कहतो,
पै हिउँ उपमाको समाउ न आयो ।
मानो प्रतच्छ परब्रतकी नभ
लीक लसी, कपि यों धुकि धायो ।।54 ।।

54. līnhō ukhāri pahāru bisāla, calyō tēhi kāla, bilambu na lāyō.
mārutanandana mārutakō, manakō, khagarājakō bēgu lajāyō..
tikhī turā 'tulasī' kahatō,
pai hi'ēṁ upamākō samā'u na āyō.
mānō prataccha parabbatakī nabha līka lasī, kapi yōṁ dhuki dhāyō..54..

Verse no. 6/54—[When the physician named Sushen prescribed the herb called Sanjivani found in the Himalayan Mountains, Hanuman went north to fetch it from Dronachal Mountain, but unable to recognize the herb he uprooted the entire mountain].

Without wasting any time, he (Hanuman) immediately uprooted the huge mountain and started back towards Lanka. He left to shame even wind, Garud (the mount of Lord Vishnu) and mind in speed and swiftness.

Tulsidas says that he tried in vain to find anything to compare with his speed and swiftness of movement as he darted across the sky, so he has abandoned the attempt (to describe it). Hanuman leapt so fast and darted like a streak of lightening across the sky that he left a trail behind him in it (i.e. he moved so fast that the mountain appeared to stretch from point-to-point across the sky).

चल्यो हनुमान, सुनि जातुधान कालनेमि
पठ्यो, सो मुनि भयो, पायो फलु छलि कै ।
सहसा उखारो है पहारु बहु जोजनको, रखवारे मारे भारे भूरि भट दलि कै ।।
बेगु, बलु, साहस, सराहत कृपाल रामु, भरतकी कुसल, अचलु ल्यायो चलि कै ।

हाथ हरिनाथके बिकाने रघुनाथ जनु, सीलसिंधु तुलसीस भलो मान्यो भलि कै ।। 55 ।।

55. calyō hanumāna, suni jātudhāna kālanēmi paṭhayō, sō muni bhayō, pāyō phalu chali kai.
sahasā ukhārō hai pahāru bahu jōjanakō, rakhavārē mārē bhārē bhūri bhaṭa dali kai..
bēgu, balu, sāhasa, sarāhata kṛpāla rāmu, bharatakī kusala, acalu lyāyō cali kai.
hātha harināthakē bikānē raghunātha janu, sīlasindhu tulasīsa bhalō mān'yō bhali kai..55..

Verse no. 6/55—Hearing that Hanuman had gone to fetch the life-restoring herb, Ravana sent a demon called Kalnemi to intervene and stop him. He assumed the form of a hermit and (in an attempt to cheat and trap Hanuman) got killed himself. Hanuman easily lifted a very large mountain, many miles long, killed and destroyed numerous demons and the greatest of warriors.

‘Look, Hanuman has brought back the mountain and the news of welfare of Bharat.’ Saying this, the merciful Lord Ram was lavish in his praise of Hanuman’s valour, fame, courage and swiftness as if the Lord was highly indebted and obliged to him.

The Lord of Tulsidas, i.e. Lord Ram, blessed and obliged Hanuman in all possible ways.”

-----**-----

Chapter 16

Battle with Kumbhakaran and His Death

Once Laxman was brought back to life, there was loud rejoicing and a thunderous cheer in Lord Ram’s camp as if a bright sun has shone from behind a thick blanket of dark clouds that a few moments ago had engulfed the whole army of the Lord in a thick veil of despair, despondency and lost hopes, while the opposite prevailed now in Ravana’s camp where a similar dark pall of gloom marked by dejection, despondency and lost hopes descended heavily on it, as if it was transferred magically to it from the Lord’s camp by the fiat of fate and a decree of destiny which destined aught but the doom and destruction of the cruel, sinful, evil, pervert and unholy demon race.

Now starts the next phase of the epic War of Lanka, and the third day of the battle. Ravana woke up his brother Kumbhakaran and prevailed upon him to join the war for the honour of the demon race and their family. Kumbhakaran gave a tough fight to Lord Ram and his army, but by-and-by he fell down and met his end. But what a wonderful end it was—for at the time of his death his soul emerged from his body as a brilliant shaft of light and directly entered Lord Ram’s holy body, symbolising the merger of the individual creature’s Atma with the Supreme Atma, the ‘Parmatma’, represented by Lord Ram.

This sort of end is regarded as the best destiny for the soul of a dying creature whereby the soul is freed from the fetters of the gross body to which it was bound till now, to attain eternal liberation and deliverance by merging with its parent known as the Supreme Soul, also called the ‘Parmatma’, the Supreme Being to become one and inseparable with the latter. This exalted destiny of the soul is called ‘Mukti’ as it is an eternal form of freedom from this gross mundane world marked by the cycle of birth and death with its attendant chain of endless miseries, pains, grief and torments. This destiny is also called ‘Moksha’ because now onwards there is no return of the soul to this mundane world and its countless miseries and pains. It helps the soul to attain eternal peace, bliss, beatitude and felicity. It is a much sought-after destination for the soul for which great sages, ascetics and hermits, those who are wise, enlightened and self-realised, do so many sacrifices, perform so many religious duties, and suffer hardships voluntarily.

Though Kumbhakaran was a demon by his body, but his soul, which incidentally was his ‘true self’, was extremely pure and holy, for otherwise this destiny was not at all possible for him.

We shall now commence reading about the ferocious battle between Kumbhakaran and Lord Ram, and his final deliverance at the hands of the Lord. This confrontation occurred on the third day of the Great War.

For this narration, we shall be reading the relevant verses from the two classics ‘Ram Charit Manas’ and ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’, as we have been doing till now, in the following two Sections of this Chapter no. 16:

Section 16.1: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 72.

Section 16.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 40-70; Canto 8, verse nos. 1-30; 49-52. This narration from Adhyatma Ramayan also has sage Narad’s prophesy where he tells Lord Ram how the events will unfold in the battle-field in the next few days.

Now therefore, let us commence with our narration.

Section 16.1: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 72.

यह बृत्तांत दसानन सुनेऊ । अति बिषाद पुनि पुनि सिर धुनेऊ ॥ ५ ॥

ब्याकुल कुंभकरन पहिं आवा । बिबिध जतन करि ताहि जगावा ॥ ६ ॥

yaha bṛttānta dasānana sunē'ū. ati biṣāda puni puni sira dhunē'ū. 5.
byākula kumbhakarana pahim āvā. bibidha jatana kari tāhi jagāvā. 6.

When the ten-headed Ravana heard of this development (that Laxman had regained consciousness, is hale and hearty as earlier, and that he seething with anger and full of wrath, raring to face the demons in the battle-field with renewed vigour and vengeance), he was crestfallen, gloomy and flabbergasted.

Being overcome with a sense of hopelessness, despondency and consternation, and fearing for the worst, Ravana repeatedly beat his head in frustration and exasperation¹. (5)

Agitated and exasperated, Ravana went to Kumbhakaran (his younger brother), and employed different methods to wake him up from his deep slumber². (6)

[Note—¹Ravana was elated when he heard earlier that Laxman was fatally wounded and lay unconscious in the battle-field. He welcomed this news because if something ill happened to Laxman, it would mean Lord Ram would be extremely demoralized, and that would bear negatively on his will to fight the rest of the war with vigour and enthusiasm. Not only the Lord himself, but his whole army too would be overcome with gloom and loss of hope with Laxman fallen, and it is an axiom that an army with low morale has lost the battle even before it actually commences. So the news of Laxman's fainting at the end of the previous day's battle was a matter of rejoicing for the demons.

Ravana had done all he could to stop Hanuman from bringing the required herb that would revive Laxman; or at least delay him from bringing it within the allotted time slot. But all his hopes were dashed when the news came that Laxman has got up hale and hearty, and he is cheerful and full of vigour as earlier. Ravana was astonished that Laxman would not show any signs of fatigue or pain, and from what he was informed of Laxman it seemed that the latter was completely comfortable and relaxed as if he had just got up from a refreshing sleep.

This unexpected development unveiled Ravana's darkest fears lurking in his heart, stoking terror in him, for now he feared for the worst. He was sure that now Laxman would unleash the full force of his wrath and unreserved vengeance upon him and the rest of the demons army as a means of punishing them, and to exact the severest retribution from the whole demon race. And Laxman's wrath was no ordinary anger; he was a personified form of Seshnath, the legendary thousand-headed celestial Serpent, and when this Serpent begins to pour out his scorching venom, it would virtually boil the whole demon race in a cauldron of fire from which there is no escape.

Ravana also feared that the monkey and bear army would now fight with extra vengeance and renewed energy, and with the knowledge and experience of what they could do with the demons as witnessed in the previous days of battle, the future seemed hopelessly dark, gloomy and doomed.

Moreover, Ravana was highly worried and full of consternation about the safety of his son Meghanad, because it was he who had wounded Laxman the previous day in the battle-field, and hence it was natural that Meghanad would be Laxman's first target to be brought down in the next day's battle; Meghanad would have to bear the brunt of Laxman's wrath if he was seen by the latter in the battle-field.

This is the simple and obvious reason why Ravana chose not to send Meghanad into the battle ground the next day; instead he decided to request Kumbhakaran, Ravana's younger brother, to lead the demon forces in the next day's battle.

²Kumbhakaran had got a boon from Brahma, the creator, that he would sleep for long times at a stretch, for six months continuously. It was because when Brahma saw his huge body and excellent appetite, he felt that if this fellow were to eat daily then the whole creation would suffer from a virtual famine as he would devour everything worth eating sooner rather than latter. So the creator asked goddess Saraswati, the goddess of speech and wisdom, to corrupt his mind so that he asks for a boon to sleep, which Brahma would gladly grant instantly, without losing a moment and giving Kumbhakaran a chance to realize the stupidity of his request. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 177.}

If we closely examine the narrative of the Ramayan, any version we chose to read, one thing will be found to be common—that Kumbhakaran came to learn about the destructive war, and the reason why it started, only now when Ravana went to arouse him from his deep sleep and asked him to help by joining the war for the honour of the family and the demon race. Kumbhakaran was astonished by this request, and he saw Ravana's face pale and ridden with worries, something he had never ever seen before. So he asked his brother what has happened, upon which Ravana disclosed about Sita's abduction, and the subsequent developments leading to the current war.

It is because he had been fast asleep all through; and he was not at all aware of what calamity had befallen upon the unfortunate demon race due to the madness of his brother Ravana. As we shall soon read below, when Kumbhakaran comes to learn about the ill developments, he chided Ravana and remonstrated with him in the strongest possible terms.

That Kumbhakaran would sleep for long periods of time suited Ravana well enough though, because with Vibhishan too kept out of the way and marginalized by allowing him to follow his religious practices privately in seclusion, Ravana ensured that he was free to do whatever he wished to do, with no one to oppose him. And when Vibhishan dared to oppose Ravana once, he was kicked out of the kingdom unceremoniously (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 41).

Since Kumbhakaran was in deep slumber, it was difficult to wake him up easily. So many methods were employed: perhaps loud music was played right beside his ears; perhaps he was poked by sharp pointed weapons; perhaps something was inserted in his nose and ears and mouth to titillate him; perhaps his creeper-like body hairs were pulled; perhaps giant demons danced and thumped on his chest.]

जागा निसिचर देखिअ कैसा । मानहुँ कालु देह धरि बैसा ॥ ७ ॥ कुंभकरन बूझा कहु भाई । काहे तव मुख रहे सुखाई ॥ ८ ॥ jāgā nisicara dēkhi'a kaisā. mānahuṁ kālu dēha dhari baisā. 7.

kumbhakarana būjhā kahu bhāī. kāhē tava mukha rahē sukhāī. 8.

When at last the demon (Kumbhakaran) woke up, he looked like a gigantic and fearful personification of Kaal, the god of death, itself. (3)

Looking around he saw Ravana close by. Observing that Ravana had a pale face and a countenance that seemed to be overcast with dark clouds of fear and worries, Kumbhakaran enquired, 'Oh brother, what is the matter; why is your face so pale, and why is your countenance so lifeless, dry and withered? What is so serious a thing to afflict you so much?’ (4)

कथा कही सब तेहिं अभिमानी । जेहि प्रकार सीता हरि आनी ॥ ९ ॥
 तात कपिन्ह सब निसिचर मारे । महा महा जोधा संघारे ॥ १० ॥
 दुर्मुख सुररिपु मनुज अहारी । भट अतिकाय अकंपन भारी ॥ ११ ॥ अपर महोदर आदिक बीरा । परे समर महि सब रनधीरा ॥ १२ ॥

kathā kahī saba tēhiṁ abhimānī. jēhi prakāra sītā hari ānī. 9.
 tāta kapinha saba niscara mārē. mahā mahā jōdhā saṅghārē. 10.
 durmukha suraripu manuja ahārī. bhaṭa atikāya akampana bhārī. 11.
 apara mahōdara ādika bīrā. parē samara mahi saba ranadhīrā. 12.

Ravana proudly told him about the whole affair, about how he had stolen Sita and brought her to Lanka¹. (9)

Ravana said, ‘My dear (tāta). The monkeys have slayed a greater part of the demon army; all the great among demon warriors have been killed. (10)

The most formidable demons warriors, such as the ones who had the most ferocious countenances (durmukha), those who were renowned enemies of the gods and terrified them with their mere presence (suraripu), those who devoured human beings and used them as their fodder (manuja ahārī), those warriors who had huge bodies (atikāya --- bhārī), those were steady and sturdy in the battle-field (akampana)--- (11),

--- In addition to them, the great demon named Mahodar, and many more like him (apara mahōdara ādika bīrā)—well, unfortunately, all have fallen dead in the battle-field.’ (12)

[Note—¹What was there for Ravana to be so proud of? Well, Ravana meant that it was a matter of great pride for him to have been able to bring Sita because it was not an easy task. Why was it not an easy task? It is because her husband, Lord Ram, was a mighty brave warrior, one who had broken the formidable bow of Lord Shiva to marry Sita in Janakpur, and was an incarnate Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world, and therefore fact that Lord Ram could not protect his wife Sita while Ravana took her away was naturally a great feat in its own right, something to boast of.

This above reason is from the perspective of this gross mortal world. But if we are to go deeper, then the meaning changes: from the spiritual perspective Ravana rejoiced that at last he has found a way to compel the Supreme Being to come all the way from heaven right up to his doorstep, in Lanka, to grant his soul liberation and deliverance from the cage of a sinful demon-body in which it is trapped, and thereby grant emancipation and salvation to him, all done so easily and without the hassles of having to undergo hardships associated with the usual methods that lead to this exalted destiny of the soul, such as doing Tapa (penance, austerity), Yoga (meditation), Dhyan (contemplation), Vairagya (renunciation), Yagya (sacrifices), Vrat (religious observances) etc.

Great sages, ascetics and hermits spend their lifetime searching for the Lord but fail; yet Ravana managed to get the same Lord come fact-to-face before him, and then compelled the Lord to free his soul from the evil body of a demon by piercing it with his arrows to let the soul escape from it. So was this not a great achievement by Ravana to be worthy of being proud of? Surely it was; and so he was.]

दो०. सुनि दसकंधर बचन तब कुंभकरन बिलखान ।
जगदंबा हरि आनि अब सठ चाहत कल्याण ॥ ६२ ॥

dōhā.

sunī dasakandhara bacana taba kumbhakaraṇa bilakhāṇa.
jagadambā hari āni aba saṭha cāhata kalyāṇa. 62.

Hearing the words of Ravana, the one with ten shoulders (dasakandhara), Kumbhakaraṇa was taken aback; he lamented gravely and expressed his displeasure unreservedly.

Sternly admonishing Ravana for his misadventure, Kumbhakaraṇa said, ‘Oh you wicked and stupid one. After having abducted the Mother of the World (jagadambā hari āni), how foolish it is of you to expect anything good for yourself? Say, how incongruous and incredulous it is for you to expect wellness after what you have done!’¹ (Doha no. 62)

[Note—¹One will not fail to observe that Kumbhakaraṇa’s advice is on the same lines of what Vibhishan had said earlier at the time when Ravana kicked him out. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 38; and Doha no. 40 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.}]

Let us take a deeper look at the episode of Kumbhakaraṇa—from the moment he was woken up by his elder brother Ravana, the way he reacted when first informed by him of Sita’s abduction, the way he has blessed and congratulated his younger brother Vibhishan for taking refuge with Lord Ram a little while later when the two met each other in the battle-field, and the final moments of his death when his soul, his Atma, emerged from his body as a brilliant shaft of light to go straight and enter the divine body of Lord Ram—because we have much to learn and know from it.

My dear reader, do thou wot what is so special about this episode? Well, read on: let us have an open mind, a broad perspective, and let us have knowledge that is eclectic and wide-angled.

First, it is known that Kumbhakaraṇa used to sleep for six months at a time, wake up for a single day, and then go back to sleep for another six-month period. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 177.} When he was woken up by Ravana and told about his abduction of Sita, Kumbhakaraṇa was not only astonished but also expressed excessive shock and horror at this news. This clearly implies that when he last went to sleep approximately six months ago, Sita hadn’t been stolen by Ravana by then, and she was abducted sometime after Kumbhakaraṇa last went to sleep—because he was totally ignorant of this incident of Sita being abducted and kept hostage in Lanka, for if he had been aware of it then previously there is no sense in Ravana informing him about it now, and besides this, the way Kumbhakaraṇa reacted with utter dismay and great shock on being informed of Sita's abduction clearly shows that he was totally ignorant of this development. {Apropos: Doha no. 62 herein above.}

These facts lead us to conclude that 'not more than six months had elapsed between the time Sita was abducted by Ravana and the outbreak of the war'. Remember: Kumbhakaran had yet not completed his normal sleeping time of 'six months' as is evident from Ravana forcing him awake by employing many different means. {Apropos: Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62 herein above.}

And, soon after the war ended, Lord Ram returned to Ayodhya with his entourage aboard an air plane known as Pushpak. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 119.}

This leads us to conclude that the War of Lanka was fought at the fag end of Lord Ram's fourteen years of forest exile, for immediately after than he returned to Ayodhya.

The second important observation is this: At the time of death, Kumbhakaran's soul had emerged as a brilliant shaft of light to enter the divine body of Lord Ram, leading to his final deliverance and attainment of emancipation and salvation. This rare happening had even surprised the gods and sages who were astonished that a demon would attain such an exalted destiny for himself, when his 'Atma' would merge with the 'Parmatma', the supreme Atma, to become one with it, a destiny that is extolled in laudatory terms in the Upanishads. From the perspective of metaphysics, Kumbhakaran had attained true 'Moksha', a destiny which marks dissolution of the soul and its merger with the cosmic Soul from where there is no return. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 71 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.}

Well, come to think of it—not every one has this great privilege; not even the greatest of sages and ascetics and hermits who spend their entire lifetime doing meditation, contemplation, austerities, penances, sacrifices, and practicing many assorted religious vows and observances are able to achieve this kind of end. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 104 said in reference to Ravana, the only other character in the Story of the Ramayan to attain this exalted stature that grants exemplary beatitude and felicity to the soul of a dying creature.}

What does this mean? Surely it points to the fact that Kumbhakaran's Atma, his 'true self', his soul, was very pure and holy, though the body might have been evil and sinful. But no, that was also not the case as it appears to be on the face. Kumbhakaran had not indulged in cruelty and mayhem like Ravana, he had not indulged in tormenting the creatures and making life hell for them like Ravana. How come so? Because he had been sleeping for six months, and on the one day he woke up he spent it on eating and drinking, only to retire to sleep once again. This clearly and irrefutably means that he had not gone on any bloody campaigns to terrorize the world; he had not soaked his hands with blood of poor creatures. So therefore, even his demon body was not spoiled with the blood of innocent creatures like the way other demons' bodies had been.

Then, this was not all. The world thought that Kumbhakaran was 'sleeping', but a wise man who has read the Upanishads and understands their philosophy would have a completely different take on it. To wit, Kumbhakaran had been lying in a "Yoga Nidra", a deep sleep state of consciousness entered into by enlightened ascetics when they rise to a higher level in the practice of Yoga (meditation). It's that state when the Atma, the 'true self', which is pure consciousness, completely detaches itself from the body of a creature, both at its gross level that is related to the sense organs and known as the 'Jagrat or waking state', as well as at its subtle level related to the mind-intellect complex known as the 'Swapna or dreaming state', to attain the third exalted state of existence of the consciousness that is known as 'Sushupta or deep sleep state'. This latter state of existence is a transitional stage between the first two states and the fourth state of spiritual bliss known as the 'Turiya state', beyond which is the fifth and final stage marked by full attainment of beatitude and felicity and is known by the name 'Turiyateet', i.e. that which is 'beyond Turiya'.

Now well, so Kumbhakaran was not sleeping the way we understand someone to be asleep; he was in a 'Yoga Nidra' for six month period when the ignorant world thought he was sleeping the way we understand the word to mean.

So that means he was silently doing Yoga (meditation) by practicing Pranayam (breath control exercises prescribed in Yoga) during those six months.

If this is so, if it is argued that he was doing Yoga during sleep as explained above, then how do we explain his eating and drinking heartily on the day he was awake? Well, well, my dear readers. Haven't I said at the beginning of this note that those who understand the philosophy of the Upanishads would think differently about Kumbhakaran sleeping and eating?

Let us explain. Kumbhakaran was not eating food to feed his gross physical body, or to enjoy food for its taste or flavour, but he was eating as an offering made to the 'Pran', the vital life-giving force of Nature, known as the vital winds, which personify Brahm, the cosmic Consciousness, that resided in his body. It was just like the way food is offered to the sacred fire during a fire sacrifice. The food-offerings put in the fire pit of a fire sacrifice are meant for the fire god who represents the cosmic fire element, known as the 'Vaishnavar Agni', which provides strength and energy and nutrition to all other gods representing other elements of creation. To wit, the offerings made to the sacred fire are actually meant for the different gods who represent the many elements of creation that are essential for existence of the world.

We have ample proof of this esoteric concept in the Upanishads. The Brahm Vidya Upanishad, which is the 16th Upanishad of the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition, verse nos. 52-53 says that the best form of a fire sacrifice is not done internally when the worshipper offers all that he eats as an offering to Brahm, the Supreme Being, represented by the pure cosmic Consciousness that resides in his own body in the form of the 'Pran', the vital winds that keep his body alive.

The Pran Agnihotra Upanishad, which is the 29th Upanishad of the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition, in its verse no. 15 clearly states that the cosmic 'Pran', the life infusing and life sustaining factor of Nature, is known as the Vaishwanar (Pran) as well as the Viraat Purush (the cosmic Male; the Supreme Being). Since the entire creation is a manifestation of this Viraat Purush, it follows that the Pran residing inside the body as the life-sustaining vital winds (such as Pran, Apaana, Urdyan, Vyan and Samaana) are the microcosmic revelation of the cosmic Vaishwanar.

The Pran Agnihotra Upanishad, verse no. 2 enunciates the Mantra for sanctifying food offered to Brahm, the Supreme Lord who resides in the body of the worshipper in the form of his Pran, the vital winds that keep him alive.

And then, the Pran Agnihotra Upanishad, verse no. 12 describes the Mantras which are used to honour the five vital winds as representative of Brahm, the Supreme Being.

So therefore, when we read that upon waking up Kumbhakaran had gulped down buffaloes and jars of wine, it must be kept in mind that in ancient times animal sacrifices were normal during the rituals associated with a formal fire sacrifice, and so was the use of wine in some secret and obscure forms of worship rituals practiced by certain ancient tribes. This form of worship was not mainstream though, but nevertheless if was practiced; it was called ‘Vaam panth’, the path of worship that is not normal and away from the routine. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 64.}

The third remarkable thing we observe is the way Kumbhakaran has lavishly praised Vibhishan for his decision to surrender to Lord Ram and take refuge with the Lord. He has called Vibhishan a ‘jewel’ of the demon race, and has asked him to continue with his devotion to Lord Ram. This also means that Kumbhakaran’s soul was as pious as that of Vibhishan. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 64 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-9 that precede it.}

A question now arises: If all what is said herein above is true, then why did Kumbhakaran fought ferociously with the monkey and bears, without any mercy?

Well, the answer is this: He wished to remain loyal to his race and family; he wished not to go down in the pages of history as a betrayer of his own people like Vibhishan had been; he wished to die a martyr’s death, as a brave warrior, instead of as a coward who turned his back to the enemy who was at the throat of his clan. His brother Ravana had pleaded with him to go join the battle for the honour of his family and race, so Kumbhakaran could not turn this request down.

There is one more outstanding point to note: When Vibhishan had told Ravana that he had committed a grave error by abducting Sita and he should give her back to Lord Ram, Ravana had become fierce with anger, kicking Vibhishan out of the kingdom. But remarkably no such outrage was expressed by Ravana when Kumbhakaran says almost the same thing. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; and Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Doha no. 41 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-9 that precede it (relating Vibhishan); (ii) Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 63 (Kumbhakran’s advice).}

What may have been the probable reason for Ravana overlooking Kumbhakaran’s apparent favour of Lord Ram? The answer is simple: A fierce war was underway, and Ravana needed strong hands to tackle a formidable enemy. Ravana knew well enough that Kumbhakaran was a mighty warrior who had virtually the same potential as he himself had. So it would not have been wise and prudent to antagonize him at this crucial juncture, because his services were immediately needed. Vibhishan, on the other hand, was not a great warrior; he was of a pious mind and a peaceful person; he did not have the same quality of ruthlessness, viciousness and battle-field valour as his other two brothers, Ravana and Kumbhakaran, had.

So therefore, keeping in mind the requirements of the war and one’s usefulness in it as viewed from Ravana’s perspective of the things, Vibhishan was dispensable, but Kumbhakaran was not. Hence, Vibhishan was kicked out, but Kumbhakaran was tolerated.

Not only this, Kumbhakaran has openly thanked his fate that he was so fortunate that he would now be able to see a personified beautiful form of the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram straight before his eyes; how lucky was he. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 63 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.}

This thought is remarkably similar to that of Marich who too had felt similarly happy that he would get a chance to see the beauteous form of Lord Ram at close quarters. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 26 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.}

Lord Ram, the all-knowing and omniscient Lord of the world, knew these secret thoughts of Kumbhakaran, and so he provided both of them, Marich earlier and Kumbhakaran now, an exalted destiny for their souls. Both were shot by the arrow of Lord Ram, and both attained deliverance for their souls.

There is another very interesting interpretation of the event of “Ravana waking up Kumbhakaran from his deep slumber”. Ravana thought to himself that if Kumbhakaran was not woken up now, but allowed to sleep in his usual way, then he will miss the golden opportunity of finding deliverance at the hands of Lord Ram, the incarnate Supreme Being, himself, who has come all the way to his very doorstep to provide this reward to him? How will Kumbhakaran’s soul, i.e. his Atma—which Ravana knew to be holy and pure consciousness like his own Atma—attain freedom from the gross body of a demon if he keeps on sleeping and avoids being killed by Lord Ram in the battle-field, because only when his body gets pierced by the arrows of the Lord would his Atma find a chance to escape from it and migrate to its parent form known as the Parmatma, the Supreme Atma that is represented by Lord Ram? So it was necessary to wake him up and motivate him to go and voluntarily offer his body as a sacrifice so that his ‘pure conscious self’, his Atma, could find emancipation and salvation.

The war was to end very soon, and Lord Ram would then immediately return home to Ayodhya. All those demon warriors, including Ravana himself, who had joined the war, would be granted the spiritual reward of liberation and deliverance of their souls by the grace of the Lord. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.}

To wit, this was not an ordinary war waged by Ravana; it was a sort of a ‘fire sacrifice’ undertaken by him to ensure that his sinful demon friends, the whole lot of them, find a chance to break free from the cycle of sins and evils to which they were ignorantly and involuntarily hooked, by offering themselves to the sacred fire symbolised by the war in which the Supreme Being has himself come to accept such offerings. Just as gross things are burnt when put in a raging fire and only pure metal survives, just as all impurities of gold are burnt when it is put in the fire, leaving pure gold in its wake, the sinful and evil gross body of the demons were reduced to ashes in a symbolic way when they got killed in the battle-field—because for a true warrior, death in the battle-field, fighting the enemy bravely and gallantly, is equivalent to the greatest of sacrifices that can be done by a person during a religious fire ceremony, which is ‘self-sacrifice’—thereby granting deliverance, emancipation and salvation to their soul which is always pure and holy.

If Kumbhakaran was allowed to sleep and escape being slayed by Lord Ram while every one of the demon race got this rare honour of personally having a chance to see the Supreme Being from such close quarters while engaging in a hand-to-hand war in close proximity with him, and dying while uttering his holy name to attain emancipation and salvation, it would be a grave injustice done to Kumbhakaran if he was also not made a part of this great self-sacrifice ceremony organized by Ravana, the king of the demon race.

Verily indeed and forsooth, it would have been him very selfish and unjust for Ravana if he had not first sent all those who were loyal to him to receive the spiritual reward of liberation, deliverance, emancipation, salvation, and attainment of eternal peace and beatitude before he himself stood up to receive it.

If this is the logic behind Ravana pushing all the demons to the battle-field to get themselves killed in order to enable them to attain deliverance from their gross demon body, then why did he spare Vibhishan from attaining this exalted fate? It is because Vibhishan was the only one in the entire demon race who lived a life that was visibly saintly, pious and holy, while all the other demons lived a life that was visibly sinful, evil and cruel. Ravana left Vibhishan behind to carry forward the family's name to future generations, as well as to lead all those demons who survived the war by being anointed as the next king of Lanka. And this is actually what had happened—for after the war ended, Vibhishan was appointed as the next king of the kingdom of the demons of Lanka. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 106; and (ii) Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 116.}}

चौ०. भल न कीन्ह तैं निसिचर नाहा । अब मोहि आइ जगाएहि काहा ॥ १ ॥

अजहूँ तात त्यागि अभिमाना । भजहु राम होइहि कल्याणा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bhala na kīnha tair̃ nīsicara nāhā. aba mōhi ā'i jagā'ēhi kāhā. 1.
ajahūṃ tāta tyāgi abhimānā. bhajahu rāma hō'ihī kalyānā. 2.

[Kumbhakaran said to Ravana—] 'Oh you lord (king) of the demon race (nīsicara nāhā)! What you have done is not at all good and advisable. Now that the damage has already been done, what is the use of your waking me up now at this late stage (for nothing can be done now by me to rectify the grave mistakes committed by you)¹? (1)

But still I would like to advise you that it is never too late to make amends for one's errors that are committed inadvertently by him due to some reason, while there is still time for doing it. So you ought to discard your ego and abandon your haughtiness even at this stage, and instead seek your welfare and well-being by worshipping Lord Ram and paying your obeisance to him (before the things go out of hand)². (2)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran essentially says that if his brother Ravana had woken him up earlier for consultation before stealing Sita, which was done to avenge the insult of Supernakha by Lord Ram for her pervert behaviour and attempt to corrupt the Lord, and which has ended in the start of this devastating war, then Kumbhakaran would have surely stopped Ravana from taking this rash action. If he still wanted to avenge Supernakha's insult, some other less dangerous means could have been devised.

But that chance has been lost now; for the war has already commenced. Kumbhakaran laments this and says that it would have been so much better if Ravana had woken him earlier before the situation went out of control.

²However, still there was hope; still something can be done to salvage the situation and prevent a calamity from happening. But for this it was obligatory that Ravana would have to overcome his ego and stubborn nature; he would have to prepare to make compromises; he would have to become polite and amenable. He will have to send a hint to Lord Ram that he was ready for a peaceful settlement; that he was ready to pay a tribute to end the war. It's worth it.

Vibhishan too had advised Ravana in the same way as Kumbhakaran does now—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Chaupai line no. 1 that follow it.]

हैं दससीस मनुज रघुनायक । जाके हनूमान से पायक ॥ ३ ॥
अहह बंधु तैं कीन्हि खोटाई । प्रथमहिं मोहि न सुनाएहि आई ॥ ४ ॥ hair̥m dasasīsa manuja raghunāyaka. jākē hanūmāna sē pāyaka. 3.

ahaha bandhu tair̥m kīnhi khōṭā'ī. prathamahir̥m mōhi na sunā'ēhi ā'ī. 4.

Oh ten-headed Ravana. Can the Lord of the Raghus (i.e. Lord Ram) be an ordinary human being if Hanuman serves him and becomes his messenger; is it ever possible that Hanuman would serve an ordinary man¹? (3)

Oh my dear brother; you have committed a serious mistake, a grave error, by not coming to me earlier and telling me everything. (4)

[Note—¹To wit, it is not possible that Hanuman would ever serve someone who is an ordinary human being. It is because Hanuman is a manifestation of Rudra, the eleventh form of Lord Shiva, the Great God and the third Deity of the Trinity.

Kumbhakaran draws Ravana's attention to the many stupendous and heroic deeds of Hanuman, such as his crossing the ocean, the burning of Lanka, the single-handed crushing of a huge demon army, the bringing of the mountain with the herb, and so on. Is this the feat of an ordinary monkey? Is Ravana blind not to see what stares in his eyes? Say, why would Hanuman, who has such magnificent abilities, ever wish to serve a human being? Naturally there is more than what meets the eye.]

कीन्हेहु प्रभु बिरोध तेहि देवक । सिव बिरंचि सुर जाके सेवक ॥ ५ ॥
नारद मुनि मोहि ग्यान जो कहा । कहतेउँ तोहि समय निरबहा ॥ ६ ॥ kīnhēhu prabhu birōdha tēhi dēvaka. siva birañci sura jākē sēvaka. 5.

nārada muni mōhi gyāna jō kahā. kahatē'uṁ tōhi samaya nirabahā. 6.

What a stupid folly have you indulged in by creating animosity with the Lord (Sri Ram) who is served (revered, worshipped and adored) by all the gods, including Lord Shiva (the concluder of creation and the third god of the Trinity) and Biranchi (i.e. Brahma, the creator of this physical world)¹. (5)

I would have enlightened you about the information that sage Narad had given me in long time back (if you had told me about your plans earlier), but it is too late for it now². (6)

[Note—¹A similar idea is expressed by others also in Ram Charit Manas. For instance (i) Malyawant has advised the same thing to Ravana in Lanka Kand, Doha no. 48-b; (ii) the teacher of Kaagbhusund has said the same thing to the latter in Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 106; (iii) Vibhishan too reiterates this thing to Ravana in Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 38; (iv) Mandodari, Ravana's wife, has done it in Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 6; (v) and Ravana's messenger named Suka endorses this view in Sundar Kand, Doha no. 56-a.

To wit, everyone who could muster courage felt that Ravana was committing a grave error by being hostile to Lord Ram, and that he would be doing great favour to the demon race by apologizing and making amends with the Lord.

²What was this knowledge that Narad had imparted to Kumbhakaran which he refers to here? It is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 59-65.

Kumbhakaran told Ravana about this meeting as follows: “I once met sage Narad while spending a night in a large city. When I asked the sage from whither he was coming, he told me he had been to the court of the gods in heaven. There I heard the gods talking about their prayer to Lord Vishnu to help them overcome the horrors from which they are suffering due to Ravana’s cruelty. Lord Vishnu has promised them that he would personally take charge of the matter, come down to the mortal world in the form of Lord Ram, and eliminate their tormentor. Narad then went his way. If I had had a chance I would have told you about this meeting and warned you, but unfortunately that chance was missed, perhaps because the Lord did not wish to alert you, so he prevailed upon my mind and made me forget it.”

We have read earlier that Vibhishan has also told Ravana about the impending doom as soon as he was informed about it by a messenger of sage Pulastya—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 39-b.]

अब भरि अंक भेंटु मोहि भाई । लोचन सुफल करौं मैं जाई ॥ ७ ॥

स्याम गात सरसीरुह लोचन । देखौं जाइ ताप त्रय मोचन ॥ ८ ॥ aba bhari aṅka bhēṇṭu mōhi bhāī. lōcana suphala karaūṁ maim jāī. 7.

syāma gāta sarasīruha lōcana. dēkhauṁ jā'i tāpa traya mōcana. 8.

But anyway, whatever has happened has happened for good (for Lord Ram is so merciful and kind and compassionate that it certainly cannot be otherwise).

[And what is this ‘good’? It is this—] Now embrace me affectionately and bless me, for now I shall go and feel blessed by seeing the beauteous form of Lord Ram (which will be an excellent reward for my eyes and their ability to see)¹. (7)

[What will I see that would make me feel so blessed and fortunate?] I shall go and see, to my heart’s content, the divine form of the Lord that has a dark complexion and lotus-like eyes; it is a holy form that grants liberation and deliverance from all the three torments that are associated with this mundane gross world; it is form that eliminates all the sufferings from which a creature suffers interminably in this world².’ (8)

[Note—¹Wonderful indeed! Kumbhakaran embraces his dear brother Ravana to bid him good-bye, and to thank him for not forgetting to remember him when the time came for the deliverance of the souls of the members of the demon race. He heartily thanked Ravana for waking him up so that he does not miss the bus by not being able to avail of this golden chance of attaining freedom from the ignominy of having a demon body, as well as attaining an eternal form of life as compared to a mortal one that he has at present.

Let's elaborate this a bit more. The body of a creature is mortal and perishable; it takes a birth and dies. Any thing that has a beginning (birth) and an end (death) does not come within the definition of being eternal; it is mortal with a limited span of life. The soul of the creature, called his Atma, is his 'true self', and it is pure consciousness, which is an eternal entity, as opposed to his body which is gross and mortal.

As long as this Atma lives inside the body and thinks, though erroneously, that the body is its identity, the creature remains mortal and gross. But when the Atma of a creature overcomes this ignorance and finds freedom from this delusion, it realizes that its true nature is eternal and pure consciousness. When this enlightenment dawns inside the creature, he is said to be self-realised. He also realizes that his Atma is but a microcosmic form of the cosmic Atma, the cosmic Consciousness that is known as the Parmatma, the Supreme Atma, the Supreme Being. This Atma transcends the limitations of time and space; it is an eternal and universal entity.

Hence, when a chance is afforded to a wise, enlightened and self-realised person to discard his mortal, gross and perishable body, and give his Atma the chance to attain eternity by escaping from the body, to fly out of it like a freed bird escaping from its cage into the broad wide space of the sky beyond, never to return to the cage and get trapped again, the lucky person who gets a chance to voluntarily shed his body and let his Atma emerge from it to find eternal freedom from this bondage would profusely thank his stars and feel ecstatic, exuberant and exhilarated.

This fortunate person would especially thank, feel highly grateful and obliged to someone who makes this exalted destiny possible for him. So therefore, Kumbhakaran now thanks and feels highly grateful to his brother Ravana for giving him this chance; he expresses his happiness by affectionately embracing Ravana and telling him that he will forever remain thankful to him for letting him "have the rare reward of possessing eyes and their ability to see by being able to look at the divine form of Lord Ram from so close quarters".

Now, come to think of it. Kumbhakaran knew very well that he is going to die soon, but still he feels so happy. Well, he was not going to die an ordinary death that would keep his soul trapped in the cycle of birth and death—for that would have been a matter of concern, and certainly nothing to rejoice. But he was going to gain an eternal life, to become immortal, to attain emancipation and salvation, to enjoy the fruit of beatitude and felicity.

Kumbhakaran was to meet the Supreme Being personally in the form of Lord Ram; he was to offer his gross evil body of a demon as a sacrifice to ensure liberation and deliverance of his pure and sinless Atma that was unfortunately trapped in it. So then, there was no cause for any regret; such a death was not dying, but it was the stepping stone to an eternal life.

Remember the sacred words of the Holy Bible when it is said: "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." {Holy Bible, New Testament, St. John, Chapter 11, verse nos. 25-26.}

And once again, a creature who has faith in the Lord, who believes in the mercy of the Lord, who decides to go and face the Lord, who mentally surrenders before him, is blessed by the Lord never to perish for he grants them eternal life. Has it not been said in the Holy Bible that "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." {Holy Bible, New Testament, St. John, Chapter 10, verse nos. 27-28.}

So, Kumbhakaran was indeed very fortunate and privileged that he had this wisdom inspite of being a demon. And Lord Ram, who is omniscient and all-knowing, duly appreciated his sentiments and inner thoughts—for at the time of Kumbhakaran's death his Atma emerged from his gross body in the form of a brilliant shaft of light and was welcomed by Lord Ram who allowed it enter his own body and become one with his own self. Indeed, forsooth, truly and without gainsay, what an excellent form of death did Kumbhakaran have—for he merged with the Supreme Being to become one with him!

Well, well, my dear readers—who says that Kumbhakaran was 'killed'? No he wasn't killed; he was rather granted an exalted existence by being one with the Supreme Being, by being one like him. Come to think of it: even great sages, hermits and ascetics yearn for it, but it eludes them; but it was so easily available to the so-called sinful demon Kumbhakaran.

One very important point, from the spiritual perspective, is proved by it. Lord God does not care of what kind of body a creature has; the Lord is only concerned by the purity of the inner thoughts of the creature and the readiness of his soul to embrace the Lord.

²The three 'traitaaps' are the following: Adhibhautik = related to the physical world; Adhidaivik = related to opposed stars and gods; and Adhyatmik = related to spiritual aspects.

When Marich went to Lord Ram's hermitage in the form of a golden deer so that he could entice the Lord to come after him in order to catch him when requested to do so by Sita, because she wished to keep this strange deer as a pet, Marich felt overjoyed that he would get a rare privilege, which was an honour and a spiritual reward, of repeatedly glancing at the divine form of Lord Ram as the Lord pursued him from behind, trying to overcome and catch him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 26 along with Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.}]

दो०. राम रूप गुन सुमिरत मगन भयउ छन एक ।

रावन मागेउ कोटि घट मद अरु महिष अनेक ॥ ६३ ॥

dōhā.

rāma rūpa guna sumirata magana bhaya'u chana ēka.

rāvana māgē'u kōṭi ghaṭa mada aru mahiṣa anēka. 63.

Kumbhakaran was overcome with a surge of emotions as he remembered the divine glories and virtues of Lord Ram; he closed his eyes and remained silent for a moment¹.

Recovering himself from his spiritual reverie that for a moment had lifted his soul to a transcendental plane of existence where one feels the nectar of profound bliss and ecstasy overflowing in his inner-self, Kumbhakaran regained his composure after a while, reverting back to the physical world. He asked Ravana to provide him with multiple jars of wine and hordes of buffaloes (to make a hearty meal before he sallies out of the fort to take on the enemy)². (Doha no. 63)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran was immersed in a sea of bliss when he realized that his final chance to attain liberation and deliverance of his soul has arrived. As has been said

earlier, he was actually practicing Yoga Nidra, a meditative form of sleep wherein the physical gross body appears to be sleeping but the creature remains awake internally at the subtle level of existence and practices meditation. Kumbhakaran felt that his meditation has borne him its due rewards; that now his dream of attaining freedom from the gross body of a demon will be fulfilled.

From a spiritual point of view, he closed his eyes for a while and drew in a deep breath to enjoy a blissful state of transcendental existence. From a worldly point of view, he braced himself for the horrors that he would face soon in the battle-field, and harden himself and firm his resolve to face bravely the pain of certain death like a true warrior.

²Once again, from the spiritual point of view, he was finishing his symbolic fire sacrifice by making the last offerings to the Pran, the presiding deity residing in his body that represent the vital winds that keep the body alive and active, by offering it the buffalo and wine that he requested. When a fire sacrifice was done, such offerings were normal at the end of the ritual. This concept has been described earlier in detail as a note to Doha no. 62 herein above.

But from the worldly perspective, he was eating and drinking and refreshing himself before going out to the battle front.]

चौ०. महिष खाइ करि मदिरा पाना । गर्जा बज्राघात समाना ॥ १ ॥

कुंभकरन दुर्मद रन रंगा । चला दुर्ग तजि सेन न संगी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

mahiṣa khā'i kari madirā pānā. garjā bajrāghāta samānā. 1.

kumbhakarana durmada rana raṅgā. calā durga taji sēna na saṅgā. 2.

After having eaten the buffaloes and drunken wine, Kumbhakaran roared with a thunderous noise resembling a clap of thunderbolt¹. (1)

Kumbhakaran was intoxicated with the will to fight, and was enthused with dare devilry. He sallied out of the fort of Lanka, leaving for the battle-field alone, not even bothering to take his army of demon warriors with him in his rash excitement². (2)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran perhaps belched loudly after a hearty meal, and it produced a thunder-like noise. The wine prepared him for the battle as it helped him to become so excessively intoxicated that all the fears and doubts that he may have had were overcome, and so were all his inhibitions and reservations, making him rash and bold.

Remember: He was certain of his death; and if a person is sure that he is walking to his own death he needs a lot of self-control and motivation to push him forward. Wine was a sure-shot formula that dulled his mind and suppressed his wisdom. Kumbhakaran willingly used this formula because he was not sure of himself; he thought that may be at the last moment he might stop fighting and surrender himself to Lord Ram just like the way Vibhishan had done. That was something he would not prefer, for that would mean his soul will not be freed from the cage of a demon-body in which it is trapped. Kumbhakaran wanted to attain emancipation and salvation, and what better chance will he ever get in life if he missed this present golden opportunity of having Lord Ram kill his body by piercing it with his arrows, thereby allowing his soul, his Atma, to escape from this cage like a freed bird.

Even Baali, the monkey king and brother of Sugriv, had preferred to die this way—to die before Lord Ram, to die while seeing the divine form of the Lord: apropos—Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 and Chanda line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 10.

Earlier we read that the vulture Jatau has said the same thing at the time of his death: apropos—Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 31.

So therefore, Kumbhakaran drank gallons of wine and ate tonnes of buffalo meat to get sufficiently intoxicated and energized to valiantly face the horrors of the battle, as well as to avoid becoming emotional and come under the influence of the weakness of his heart at the last moment when he sees Lord Ram face-to-face. He did not want to live; he wished to die with Lord Ram standing before him—first with the objective of attaining deliverance of his soul, second with the objective of receiving Lord Ram's grace and blessings that are bound to come to him unasked for, and third with the objective of dying like a warrior who would gladly embrace martyrdom rather than surrender timidly before his enemy.

²Kumbhakaran left the fort of Lanka and walked cheerfully to the battle-field all alone. He was not afraid of anything as he knew that he was brave and strong and competent enough to tackle all worldly enemies and armies, and he was not afraid of death either as he knew that the so-called impending 'death' was limited to his gross physical body which he knew is destined to die one day or the other, because the body of a living being is mortal and perishable like the world in which it lives; he also knew that this so-called death is actually a chance for his soul, his Atma that is his pure conscious 'true self', to attain eternal freedom from the cage of a demon body in which it is trapped at the moment.

Hence, it was a moment to rejoice and welcome, and not something to be afraid of or regret about. So why should he need the support of any army; why should he let the world think that he was a timid demon who was afraid to face his enemy—because for Kumbhakaran Lord Ram was not an enemy but a redeemer of his soul. Kumbhakaran rather thanked his stars that he has got this opportunity to see the Lord up close, and this thought made him so elated and ecstatic and exhilarated that he did not care who is with him or not with him.

Besides this, there was one more thought in Kumbhakaran's mind. He was certain that death would come to him that day, and that he was willingly and cheerfully embracing this death because it would free him from the cycle of birth and death, and provide him with the chance to attain eternal life—because it would not be an ordinary death, it would be a blessing-in-disguise for him as it would be granted by the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram himself. But not all demons thought that way; not all demons had this eclectic wisdom; not all demons were willing to offer their mortal body to attain eternity for their soul. So why should he drag reluctant fellow creatures to the sacrificial fire pit symbolized by the battle-field against their free will?

Spiritual path is a path that ought to be chosen voluntarily and out of one's free will, and not under any kind of duress, for then its sublime purpose is lost. Therefore, forcing the demon warriors to jump in the fire pit of death if they were unwilling to do so would be tantamount to committing sin from the viewpoint of Kumbhakaran because he had different views of death as compared to the ordinary demons—for he had the good fortune of being wise, enlightened and self-realised enough to understand that this ‘death’ is actually liberating for his soul, something others might not have, something others might not think.

So Kumbhakaran thought: why should he force other demons to join him in battle to die, as this would be like forcing them to commit suicide, and this would taint his Atma during the last moments of his worldly existence when he was on the threshold of attaining eternal deliverance? Why should he commit avoidable sin? He wisely concluded therefore that he should not do anything that would act as an unwanted impediment to his deliverance, emancipation and salvation at the last moment.

Of course from the worldly point of view it seems that he did not bother if the demon army was following him or not as he was very intoxicated with gallons of wine inside him, but if we delve deeper into the thought processes of Kumbhakaran we would conclude that he had other thoughts in his mind as outlined herein above when he decided to go it alone in the day’s battle with Lord Ram.]

देखि बिभीषनु आगें आयउ । परेउ चरन निज नाम सुनायउ ॥ ३ ॥

अनुज उठाइ हृदयँ तेहि लायो । रघुपति भक्त जानि मन भायो ॥ ४ ॥

dēkhi bibhīṣanu āgēm āya'u. parē'u carana nija nāma sunāya'u. 3.
anuja uṭhā'i hṛdayaṁ tēhi lāyō. raghupati bhakta jāni mana bhāyō. 4.

When Vibhishan saw Kumbhakaran coming to the battle-field, he came forward to meet the latter. Vibhishan paid his respects to him by falling at his feet (i.e. by prostrating before him) and introducing himself by name¹. (3)

He (Kumbhakaran) lifted his younger brother (Vibhishan) and clasped him to his bosom. Realising that Vibhishan was a devotee of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram), Kumbhakaran liked him very much; he felt very glad in his heart while embracing Vibhishan². (4)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran had got so excessively drunk and intoxicated that he could not recognize Vibhishan when the latter came to bow before him. So Vibhishan had to tell him who he was by identifying himself by his name.

²Kumbhakaran was happy that at least one member of his family was pious and devoted to the Lord. This would ensure that the family blood would continue to the next generation; that the name of his family would not be obliterated for all times to come because of the recklessness and madness of his elder brother Ravana.

We shall read in the verses that follow herein below that Kumbhakaran would bless Vibhishan and tell him that he has taken the right decision of surrendering himself to Lord Ram.]

तात लात रावन मोहि मारा । कहत परम हित मंत्र बिचारा ॥ ५ ॥

तेहिं गलानि रघुपति पहिं आयउँ । देखि दीन प्रभु के मन भायउँ ॥ ६ ॥ tāta lāta rāvana mōhi mārā. kahata parama hita mantra bicārā. 5.

tēhiṁ galāni raghupati pahim āya'uṁ. dēkhi dīna prabhu kē mana bhāya'uṁ.
6.

Vibhishan explained his position and why he left the family by saying, ‘My dear brother (tāta)! Ravana had kicked me even though I was telling him something that I had thought over and decided was the best for him¹. (5)

I felt very sad and humiliated with this treatment; it was because of it that I was filled with remorse and decided to come to Lord Ram². Fortunately for me, the Lord liked me and welcomed me when he realized that I was sad, miserable and unfairly treated³.’ (6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precede Doha no. 41.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 41.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 45 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it, and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.]

सुनु सुत भयउ कालबस रावन । सो कि मान अब परम सिखावन ॥ ७ ॥
धन्य धन्य तैं धन्य बिभीषन । भयहु तात निसिचर कुल भूषन ॥ ८ ॥
बंधु बंस तैं कीन्ह उजागर । भजेहु राम सोभा सुख सागर ॥ ९ ॥

sunu suta bhaya'u kālabasa rāvana. sō ki māna aba parama sikhāvana. 7.
dhan'ya dhan'ya tairṁ dhan'ya bibhīṣana. bhayahu tāta nīsicara kula bhūṣana. 8.
bandhu bansa tairṁ kīnha ujāgara. bhajēhu rāma sōbhā sukha sāgara. 9.

Kumbhakaran affectionately replied, ‘Listen my son (sunu suta)¹! Ravana is under the influence of Kaal (death), and so would he ever listen to any advice to the contrary, no matter how good and sincere it may be²? (7)

Vibhishan, you are very lucky, you are very fortunate, and I repeat it that you are extremely lucky and exceptionally fortunate. Verily indeed, you are like a jewel in the family, as well as in the race of the demons. (8)

My dear brother, you have brought great glory and honour to our clan and to our family name—that in spite of being born as a demon you had the wisdom and the foresight to devote yourself to Lord Ram, to adore the Lord and worship him.

Go, be devoted to Lord Ram, and worship him who is an embodiment of all good virtues and glories³! (9)

[Note—¹One must note how Kumbhakaran addresses Vibhishan; he calls him a “son”. It is an extremely endearing way in which Kumbhakaran addresses his younger brother, hinting to the latter clearly that he was full of appreciation for his decision to leave Lanka and take refuge with Lord Ram.

Further, Kumbhakaran hinted to Vibhishan that he was fighting this battle as it was his worldly duty and moral obligation to do so on behalf of Ravana as the latter was the king of the demon race and head of the family, and therefore his orders had to be carried out; but personally he (Kumbhakaran) was against it and he fully endorsed Vibhishan's approach.

An honourable man is one who does his duty, no matter what it is, with full diligence and to the best of his abilities. So Kumbhakaran silently told Vibhishan that he would fight with everyone who comes to face him, and this would include Vibhishan if he steps forward to engage him in a duel. But let Vibhishan know and be assured that there is no ill-will in Kumbhakaran's heart against him; that he blesses Vibhishan with the best in life and a great future like he would have blessed his own 'son'.

²To wit, Ravana's end has come. He is in the grip of Kaal, the god of death. This being the case, he will never pay heed to anything that could save him from death, as it is now his fate, as it is destined to happen that way, and it cannot be otherwise because it is the decree of his destiny.

³To wit, my dear son and brother, I truly salute you for it. I laud you; I thank you; I honour you; I love you; and I am proud of you. God bless you with all the blessings in this world. I am so happy that at least one of us had the wisdom and the prudence to abandon sins and vices, and instead live a quiet life of piety, holiness and purity, a life dedicated to the Lord, a life of devotion and worshipping of the Lord, a life away from sin, evil and perversion.

You are praise-worthy. I hereby grant you permission to be devoted to Lord Ram who is a personified form of the Supreme Being. Both I and Ravana are your elder brothers, so now you have the permission of one of them to pursue your spiritual path with diligence. Go; find peace and happiness in your life. Remember: You have my full and heart-felt blessings.]

दो०. बचन कर्म मन कपट तजि भजेहु राम रनधीर ।

जाहु न निज पर सूझ मोहि भयउँ कालबस बीर ॥ ६४ ॥

dōhā.

bacana karma mana kapaṭa taji bhajēhu rāma ranadhīra.
jāhu na nija para sūjha mōhi bhaya'uṁ kālabasa bīra. 64.

Worship and be devoted to Lord Ram, who is a resolute warrior in the battle-field¹, with your words, your deeds and your thoughts. [To wit, serve the Lord diligently to the best of your abilities; employ all your means to serve him.]

But go away now, for I have become virtually blind under the influence of my own Kaal (death), and I am unable to distinguish between a friend and an enemy².
(Doha no. 64)

[Note—¹The word “ranadhīra” that is used in the text can be applied to Lord Ram as well as to Vibhishan. If it is applied to Vibhishan, then the 1st line of the Doha would read as follows: “Oh my brother who is firm and steady in the battle-field. I advise you to be fully devoted to Lord Ram, and employ all the means at your command, such as your words, deeds and thoughts, to keep serving him.”

Howbeit, if it is applied to Lord Ram, then the version given above in the main text will hold good. This author personally feels, though, that the interpretation as given in the paragraph above of this note is nearer to the spirit of the interview between Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan. But at the same time, the word can also be applied to Lord Ram equally well because immediately Kumbhakaran engages in a battle with the Lord who firmly stands his ground inspite of the demon’s ruthless and brutal charge at him, and finally bringing Kumbhakaran down after a ferocious battle.

²Kumbhakaran tells Vibhishan to go away because all eyes were riveted on them; all the demons and the monkeys were closely watching their meeting. They were supposed to be rivals; so Kumbhakaran thought that if Vibhishan lingered any longer than needed, then his new friends in Lord Ram’s camp, the monkey and bear chiefs, would immediately become suspicious of him and his intentions. They will think he was plotting something against them. Then there were fair chances that they would go and poison Lord Ram’s ears against Vibhishan; perhaps even point out to the Lord their meeting at a distance. Though Kumbhakaran was sure that Lord Ram would not so easily be misled against Vibhishan, yet it was the time of war, and during such times even a harmless incident can prove fatal and arouse suspicions, as nerves are on edges, and trust and faith and friendship become very fragile and the first victims of suspicion and doubt.

So therefore, it was not good for Vibhishan to stay near Kumbhakaran any longer; rather it was dangerous for him. Vibhishan got the hint, for we read in the verses that follow herein below that he immediately went and informed Lord Ram of Kumbhakaran’s arrival in the battle-field. It was certainly a very wise move by Vibhishan because it prevented the seed of doubt and suspicion from germinating in the minds of the monkeys and bears.]

चौ०. बंधु बचन सुनि चला बिभीषन । आयउ जहँ त्रैलोक बिभूषन ॥ १ ॥

नाथ भूधराकार सरीरा । कुंभकरन आवत रनधीरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bandhu bacana suni calā bibhīṣana. āya'u jhaṁ trailōka bibhūṣana. 1.

nātha bhūdharākāra sarīrā. kumbhakarana āvata ranadhīrā. 2.

Hearing the words of his brother (Kumbhakaran), Vibhishan left him immediately and came to the place where Lord Ram, the jewel of the whole world consisting of three divisions (trailōka bibhūṣana) was present. [To wit, after meeting his brother and paying his respects to him, Vibhishan came back to Lord Ram’s place.]¹ (1)

On reaching Lord Ram, Vibhishan reported, ‘Oh Lord! The mighty Kumbhakaran who has a colossus body resembling a living mountain, and who is very resolute and firm in battle, is coming to the battle-field.’ (2)

[Note—¹When the news arrived that Kumbhakaran has emerged from the gates of the fort of Lanka, Vibhishan went to meet him. He was with Lord Ram at that time like other senior commanders of the Lord's army, and so naturally it follows that he had the Lord's permission to go and meet Kumbhakaran. Even if it is argued that there is no proof that Vibhishan was by the side of Lord Ram when Kumbhakaran stepped into the battle-field, but it certainly Vibhishan would not dare to take the bold step of going to meet his elder brother without the Lord's explicit permission, as it would not be taken lightly by his fellow commanders in the Lord's army who were always suspicious of him and doubtful of his intentions because he was Ravana's brother; besides this, it would be tantamount to breach of discipline and against probity for him to openly go and meet someone from the side of the Lord's enemy.

So therefore, Vibhishan had gone to meet Kumbhakaran with the full knowledge of Lord Ram.

As to why he came directly to the Lord immediately after meeting his elder brother, this has already been explained in a note to Doha no. 64 herein above. Remember: Kumbhakaran has explicitly told him to go away, but he implicitly meant to tell Vibhishan that he should go to Lord Ram and report to him that Kumbhakaran is coming his way.]

एतना कपिन्ह सुना जब काना । किलकिलाइ धाए बलवाना ॥ ३ ॥
लिए उठाइ बिटप अरु भूधर । कटकटाइ डारहिं ता ऊपर ॥ ४ ॥ ētanā kapinha sunā jaba kānā. kilakilā'i dhā'ē balavānā. 3.

li'ē uṭhā'i biṭapa aru bhūdhara. kaṭakaṭā'i dārahim tā ūpara. 4.

As soon as the brave monkey (and bear) warriors heard this (and received a signal from Lord Ram, their supreme commander), they rushed forward with a shrill cry and a sharp yell. (3)

They picked up huge boulders and large trees, and dumped them violently upon him (Kumbhakaran). (4)

कोटि कोटि गिरि सिखर प्रहारा । करहिं भालु कपि एक एक बारा ॥ ५ ॥ मुखो न मनु तनु टस्यो न टास्यो । जिमि गज अर्क फलनि को मास्यो ॥ ६ ॥ kōṭi kōṭi giri sikhara prahārā. karahim bhālu kapi ēka ēka bārā. 5.

muryō na manu tanu ṭaryō na ṭaryō. jimi gaja arka phalani kō māryō. 6.

The monkeys and bears simultaneously hurled countless rocks that were as large as summits of mountains upon him, and such attacks were repeated in quick succession. (5)

But none of them had any effect on Kumbhakaran, for he remained firm on his ground and stuck to his position, neither feeling intimidated internally in his heart and mind, nor showing any external sign of fear or alarm by turning back in the same way as hurling fruits of the swallow-wort plant (Calotropis Gigantea) makes no effect on a mighty elephant¹. (6)

[Note—¹To wit, Kumbhakaran was not deterred in the least by the ferocity of the attack by the monkeys and bears. He not only stood his ground, but even moved ahead fearlessly and relentlessly as if nothing bothered him, bludgeoning his way through the rank and file of the monkey army like a gigantic battle-ram, crushing some underfoot and devouring others whom he grabbed and squeezed tight in his hands before tucking them in his cave-like mouth—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precedes Doha no. 67 herein below.

We read about a similar attack by the monkeys in Valmiki's Ramayan, in its Lanka Kand, Canto 66, verse nos. 10-11.]

तब मारुतसुत मुठिका हन्यो । पश्यो धरनि व्याकुल सिर धुन्यो ॥ ७ ॥ पुनि उठि तेहिं मारेउ हनुमंता । घुर्मित भूतल परेउ तुरंता ॥ ८ ॥ taba mārutasuta muṭhikā han'yō. paryō dharani byākula sira dhun'yō. 7.

puni uṭhi tēhiṁ mārē'u hanumantā. ghurmita bhūtala parē'u turantā. 8.

Observing the predicament of his companions, the son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) stepped in the fray; he punched Kumbhakaran with his clenched fists so ferociously that the demon couldn't bear the force of it and fell down on the ground quite agitated, beating his head in frustration and annoyance¹. (7)

Not to be outwitted, he (Kumbhakaran) gathered courage and got up, and then retaliated by hitting Hanuman viciously. This hit made Hanuman swoon and fall to the ground immediately². (8)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran was so confident of his own strength and invincibility that he had never, even in his wildest of dreams, imagined that someone would dare to hit him so powerfully and with such a mighty force that he would swoon and fall down under its impact. So when Hanuman posted a clenched fistful on him, Kumbhakaran was for a shock of his life; he was stunned and confounded that it would actually come to happen one day to him. He beat his head in disgust and to curse himself that he wasn't prepared for this eventuality; that he had not taken due precautions and kept himself alert when he saw Hanuman approaching him menacingly. Kumbhakaran swore to himself that if he had been a little more careful, this wouldn't have happened.

²Both Hanuman and Kumbhakaran were mighty warriors of unmatched valour. Hanuman first punched and fell his opponent Kumbhakaran, and then the latter got up and hit back, felling the former. This description of the duel makes it look very natural and as likely to have actually happened, and lends a sense of reality and earthiness, a sort of worldliness to a war that otherwise appears to be a fable right out of a fantasy tale.]

पुनि नल नीलहि अवनि पछारेसि । जहँ तहँ पटकि पटकि भट डारेसि ॥ ९ ॥
चली बलीमुख सेन पराई । अति भय त्रसित न कोउ समुहाई ॥ १० ॥

puni nala nīlahi avani pachārēsi. jaham̐ tahaṁ paṭaki paṭaki bhaṭa ḍārēsi. 9.
calī balīmukha sēna parāṭī. ati bhaya trasita na kō'u samuhāṭī. 10.

Being outraged by Hanuman's dare devilry, he (Kumbhakaran) lost his cool and went on the offensive. Lunging forward angrily, he grabbed Nala and Neela (the other two great monkey warriors accompanying Hanuman) and dashed them violently on the ground; then he grabbed any of the monkey or bear warriors whom he managed to lay his hand on, and dashed them to the ground in a similar fashion, here and there wherever he could. (9)

The result was that the army of monkeys and bears started beating a hasty retreat; they were so terrified that none gathered courage to stand his ground and retaliate¹. (10)

[Note—¹When Kumbhakaran showed his true wrath, the army of monkeys and bears scattered like dry leaves scattering under a powerful storm; they fell under his onslaught like nine pins crumbling en-masse. There was utter chaos in the army, and no monkey or bear warrior dared to look back as they scampered to safety.]

दो०. अंगदादि कपि मुरुछित करि समेत सुग्रीव । काँख दाबि कपिराज कहूँ चला अमित बल सींव ॥ ६५ ॥

dōhā.

aṅgadādi kapi muruchita kari samēta sugrīva.
kāṁkha dābi kaporāja kahuṁ calā amita bala sīnva. 65.

Kumbhakaran made Angad, Sugriv and other monkey warriors faint and fall down.

Then he (Kumbhakaran), who was endowed with stupendous valour, might and strength, grabbed the unconscious Sugriv, the king of the monkeys, and tucked him under his arms (in his arm-pit) as he moved on in the battle-field¹. (Doha no. 65)

[Note—¹A question here arises: How could Kumbhakaran take away Sugriv cocked under his arms when Hanuman, the bravest of the monkey warriors, was present in the battle-field; why did Hanuman not intervene and free Sugriv; why did he not stop Kumbhakaran from grabbing an unconscious Sugriv and take him away unchallenged?

The answer is simple, and it is this: Hanuman was already unconscious and lying on the battle ground—apropos: Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes this Doha. So obviously he couldn't intervene to help any of his friends who bore the brunt of Kumbhakaran's ire.

We shall also read about it in Chaupai line no. 4 that follows Doha no. 65 herein below where it is said that as soon as Hanuman regained his consciousness he began searching for Sugriv. This clearly means that when Kumbhakaran had tucked Sugriv under his arm-pit, Hanuman was unconscious and unaware of anything.

The other question is this: Why did Kumbhakaran select Sugriv instead of Angad to be taken as a hostage? The answer is this: Angad's father Baali had humiliated Ravana in some time in the past by tucking him under his arm (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 24). So Kumbhakaran wanted to settle scores; he thought to himself thus: “Baali had carried off my brother Ravana under his arms, so I will now carry Baali’s brother Sugriv to square the old pending account.”

Another reason is this: Sugriv was not only the king of the monkey race but also the chief commander of Lord Ram’s army, as well as the Lord’s chief advisor. Sugriv’s capture would demoralize the rank and file of the monkey army, and would also make Lord Ram feel despondent and worried. The news that other brave warriors were already lying unconscious would aggravate the sense of loss and hopelessness amongst the Lord’s warriors.

Remember: It was war-time, and during such times any small thing that could act as a demoralizing factor for the enemy was welcome. So therefore, thought Kumbhakaran, such small steps would go a long way to help his brother Ravana during the course of the war. If the monkey army felt that their king Sugriv was dead, if Lord Ram got the impression that Sugriv was no more, he and his brother Laxman would be rudely shaken; and with them losing hope of victory, Ravana would have won the war in a symbolic way. This view is endorsed in Valmiki’s Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 67, verse no. 71.]

चौ०. उमा करत रघुपति नरलीला । खेलत गरुड़ जिमि अहिगन मीला ॥ १ ॥

भृकुटि भंग जो कालहि खाई । ताहि कि सोहइ ऐसि लराई ॥ २ ॥

जग पावनि कीरति बिस्तरिहिहिं । गाइ गाइ भवनिधि नर तरिहिहिं ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

umā karata raghupati naralīlā. khēlata garura jimi ahigana mīlā. 1.

bhṛkuṭi bhaṅga jō kālahi khāī. tāhi ki sōha'i aisi larāī. 2.

jaga pāvani kīrati bistarihahiṁ. gā'i gā'i bhavanidhi nara tarihahiṁ. 3.

[Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this magnificent Story, continued with his narration and told his consort goddess Parvati, whose other name was Uma, as follows—]

‘Oh Uma! Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) is playing around in the battle-field sportily with the demons like an ordinary human being would just like Garud, the celestial mount of Lord Vishnu, would play around with serpents¹. (1)

Verily indeed, does this kind of (cat-and-mouse; seesaw) war that Lord Ram is engaged in with the demons behooves the Lord who can exterminate even Kaal (the deity of death; the deity of time and age) by merely raising his eyebrows against the latter? [Surely not; but he acts in the way he does for the following reason:-] (2)

Surely he does it (i.e. he fights a war like an ordinary human would do in this world) so as to leave behind a legendary Story that would help to spread and establish his glories and fame in the world for generations to come when they are read, listened to and recited. This would purify the world and the heart of the Lord’s devotees who will find an easy means to cross over this symbolic ocean of mortal existence to reach its other shore to attain deliverance and bliss by singing and narrating this magnificent Story of the Lord’s wondrous deeds (that defy logic and explanation)². (3)

[Note—¹To wit, though Lord Ram is the Supreme Being in his primary form, because his true form is Lord Vishnu, the cosmic Lord of the universe, yet he acts like an ordinary human being while being engaged in a war with the demons. The Lord could have exterminated the demons by his mere desire, but still he goes through the act of waging a war, and suffering setbacks and making gains in it, just like a human knight would have done. But one must not be misled by this adventure to doubt the Lord's supremacy.

Why then did he act in such an ordinary way? This question is answered in verse no. 3 here—it was to give the world a magnificent story which the people would be able to easily relate to and understand, a story that would be so wonderful and fascinating that it would be read and repeated over and over for generations to come, providing a simple means to ordinary people to remember the Lord and sing his glories in a way that would be charming, interesting and enjoyable for them, a story that would capture their imagination and keep them enthralled.

Garud is an inveterate enemy of serpents; he gobbles up the most poisonous of snakes easily. But if we read that Garud had been surrounded by serpents and fought a seesaw, pitched battle with them, sometimes chasing them away and at other times being chased by them, at one moment gaining an upper hand on them and at other moment seeming to lose ground to them, then this would be very interesting for the reader.

And just like Garud merely playing around with the serpents for his own joy and entertainment, for he could have easily devoured them if he had so wanted, Lord Ram too plays with the demons just for the fun of it, for had the Lord wanted to eliminate them then he could have done it even without a war, for Lord Ram is the Lord of Death; he is the Lord who controls death and destiny of all living beings.

²Here is the clue: If the war of Lanka was not fought, if there was no characters like Ravana and Kumbhakaran, how would we have had the Story of the Ramayan, and how would the world have known of Lord Ram? There were so many kings in the illustrious family of the line of King Raghu; all were great and famed kings and righteous rulers in their own rights. Not only them, the world has a rich history of great and illustrious kings and emperors whose exploits and virtues have been glorified and recorded as histories and biographies by scribes, and sung by bards down the centuries. But they are not regarded as manifestations of the Supreme Being. Therein lies the wonder and glory of the Story of Ramayan.

Had the Supreme Being brought to an end the demon race by merely invoking the normal Laws of Nature—that everything and everyone that comes to this mortal world has to die, that all who have taken a birth must die too when their time comes—the end of the cruel demons would have been a natural process and a forgone conclusion. But then we won't have had the 'Story of the Ramayan'!

This answers why Lord Ram played around like an ordinary man. This glorious and divine Story of the Ramayan has been providing spiritual solace and bliss to generations of human beings; it has brought the Supreme Being, who is otherwise invisible, without attributes and too abstract to be understood by an ordinary man, within his reach. The Story of the Ramayan evokes devotion and love for the Lord God; it generates affectionate emotions and sentiments that are conducive to spiritual elevation and bliss; it brings the Lord God so much the nearer to his devotee.

If nothing else then at least this Story provokes debates and discussions, it keeps the interest to know more about Lord Ram alive by its wondrous episodes, it keeps the fire of devotion, faith and belief in the Lord God ignited, it acts as a beckon of hope for those forsaken by the world because it tells them that the merciful, compassionate and kind Lord Ram is there in an invisible form to help them.

To wit, it helps in resurrection of a drowning hope for salvation and emancipation of the creature.]

मुरुछा गइ मारुतसुत जागा । सुग्रीवहि तब खोजन लागा ॥ ४ ॥
सुग्रीवहु कै मुरुछा बीती । निबुकि गयउ तेहि मृतक प्रतीती ॥ ५ ॥ muruchā ga'i mārutasuta jāgā. sugrīvahi taba khōjana lāgā. 4.

sugrīvahu kai muruchā bītī. nibuki gaya'u tēhi mṛtaka pratītī. 5.

When his fainting spell ended and Hanuman regained his consciousness, he immediately began searching for Sugriv. (4)

Meanwhile, Sugriv too regained his consciousness, but he pretended to be dead and lifeless. So Kumbhakaran carelessly dropped him to the ground (thinking it to be too cumbersome to keep him pressed under his arm because he could not use this arm in the battle). (5)

काटेसि दसन नासिका काना । गरजि अकास चलेउ तेहिं जाना ॥ ६ ॥
गहेउ चरन गहि भूमि पछारा । अति लाघवँ उठि पुनि तेहि मारा ॥ ७ ॥ पुनि आयउ प्रभु पहिं बलवाना । जयति जयति जय कृपानिधाना ॥ ८ ॥ kāṭēsi dasana nāsikā kānā. garaji akāsa calē'u tēhim jānā. 6.

gahē'u carana gahi bhūmi pachārā. ati lāghavaṁ uṭhi puni tēhi mārā. 7.
puni āya'u prabhu pahim balavānā. jayati jayati jaya kṛpānidhānā. 8.

Sugriv got up on the sly and bit Kumbhakaran's nose and ears with his sharp teeth, and then made a loud yell as he jumped off towards the sky. It was then that Kumbhakaran realized that Sugriv was alive. (6)

He (Kumbhakaran) grabbed him (Sugriv) by the leg, and pulling him down, he dashed the latter on the ground. But Sugriv showed great agility by getting up instantly and retaliating by hitting Kumbhakaran back hard. (7)

After stunning Kumbhakaran for a while with his fierce jab, the brave Sugriv came back to Lord Ram, raising a slogan in the Lord's honour, saying: 'Hail Lord Ram who is an embodiment of mercy, compassion and grace; Glory be to you.' (8)

नाक कान काटे जियँ जानी । फिरा क्रोध करि भइ मन ग्लानी ॥ ९ ॥
सहज भीम पुनि बिनु श्रुति नासा । देखत कपि दल उपजी त्रासा ॥ १० ॥

nāka kāna kātē jiyam̐ jānī. phirā krōdha kari bha'i mana glānī. 9.
sahaja bhīma puni binu śruti nāsā. dēkhata kapi dala upajī trāsā. 10.

When Kumbhakaran got his with together he realized that his ears and nose have been bitten off. This infuriated him no end; he was overcome with vehemence and anger, feeling ashamed at himself and was overwhelmed with regret (that his carelessness has made him look ridiculous)¹. (9)

On the one hand he had a colossal body, and added to it was the macabre sight of his fearsome face from which the nose and the ears had been yanked off (creating huge cave-like cavities on his hideous face from which streams of blood gushed out). This sight was so frightening that it sent chill in the rank and file of the monkey army; they were sore scared and extremely terrified by this horrifying view of Kumbhakaran. (10)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran regretted his error of judgment when he dropped Sugriv, thinking him to be dead. Had he been a little more careful he could have wrung Sugriv tight to squeeze the life out of him like one wrings wet cloth to squeeze water. But it was a lost chance.]

दो०. जय जय जय रघुबंस मनि धाए कपि दै हूह । एकहि बार तासु पर छाड़ेन्हि गिरि तरु जूह ॥ ६६ ॥

dōhā.

jaya jaya jaya raghubansa mani dhā'ē kapi dai hūha.
ēkahi bāra tāsu para chārēnhi giri taru jūha. 66.

[When the monkey warriors saw that Hanuman, Sugriv and the rest, whom Kumbhakaran had hit so hard that they had all fainted, have regained their consciousness and are fighting-fit, they let out a shrill cry of joy and turned back to launch a vicious counter-attack on their enemy, the demon Kumbhakaran.]

Roaring enthusiastically, and repeatedly cheering and praising the glory of Lord Ram, the jewel of the race of king Raghu (raghubansa mani), the monkey hordes rushed forward to launch a fresh wave of attack on Kumbhakaran, dumping clusters of huge boulders and large trees of varying sizes and shapes on him all at once (almost burying him under the rubble). (Doha no. 66)

चौ०. कुंभकरन रन रंग बिरुद्धा । सन्मुख चला काल जनु क्रुद्धा ॥ १ ॥
कोटि कोटि कपि धरि धरि खाई । जनु टीड़ी गिरि गुहाँ समाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kumbhakarana rana raṅga birud'dhā. sanmukha calā kāla janu krud'dhā. 1.
kōṭi kōṭi kapi dhari dhari khāī. janu ṭīṛī giri guhām̐ samāī. 2.

Kumbhakaran was so intensely infused with the heat of war and greatly maddened with the passion to fight to the end that he faced his enemy fearlessly. Brushing aside the heaps of rocks and trees that had gathered around him in huge mounds, he was seething with anger as he marched against the monkeys and bears like a personified form of Kaal, the god of death, himself coming forward to wreak his vengeance upon them. (1)

He grabbed large numbers of monkeys on whom he could lay his hand, and put them in his wide-open cavernous mouth, a sight that reminded one of swarms of locusts entering a huge cave¹. (2)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran had a gigantic body; his mouth was exceptionally large and cave-like in proportion to his huge body. The monkeys he grabbed and dumped inside his mouth did not die; rather they were safe inside it like locusts are inside a cave. After entering the mouth these monkeys bit it from the inside, and hastily escaped from the many holes in it—like the ears and the nose, and even through the open mouth even as Kumbhakaran was busy dumping more monkeys inside it—this will be clear in Chaupai line no. 4 herein below. It was like locusts freely entering and leaving the cave.

What a fantastic imagery! Imagine a tall mountain with a deep cave that has a large main opening on one of its sides, and many other smaller openings in the form of various crevices and fissures on the sides of the mountain that lead to the interior of the cave through a network of tunnels and channels. Locusts and other insects freely enter and exit thorough these openings; while the main mouth of the cave serves as the chief entry-exit route but one would also see thin lines of insects making their way inside the cave and then exiting through it by the many tunnels and channels leading to the cave from the sides of the mountain.

The same thing was observed here with respect to the monkeys—the majority of them escaped directly through his wide open mouth, the rest jumped out through the openings of the ears and nose that led out from the buckle-cavity of the demon's mouth.

Remember one more thing: Kumbhakaran had grabbed and dumped inside his mouth not only the monkeys but also the bears in his mad spree of catching and devouring them as will be evident in Chaupai line no. 4 herein below.]

कोटिन्ह गहि सरीर सन मर्दा । कोटिन्ह मीजि मिलव महि गर्दा ॥ ३ ॥ मुख नासा श्रवनन्हि कीं बाटा । निसरि पराहिं भालु कपि ठाटा ॥ ४ ॥ kōṭinha gahi sarīra sana mardā. kōṭinha mīji milava mahi gardā. 3.

mukha nāsā śravananhi kīṁ bātā. nisari parāhiṁ bhālu kapi ṭhātā. 4.

He (Kumbhakaran) caught hold of multitudes of monkey warriors and crushed them either by rubbing them viciously against his own body or squeezing them hard with his hands (fingers), before letting them fall to the ground and getting covered with dust. (3)

Meanwhile, large groups of monkeys and bears were seen escaping in droves from his cavernous mouth and running away¹. (4)

[Note—¹See note appended to verse no. 2 herein above. It is pertinent to note here that Kumbhakaran was thrusting large numbers of monkeys and bears inside his mouth without tearing them apart with his teeth; he was not chewing or biting them before dumping them inside the cavity of the mouth. This is the reason why none of them died; they swarmed out of the mouth-cavity as soon as they were inside it.

Only those unfortunate ones whom he rubbed against his body or squeezed with his hand actually died.]

रन मद मत निसाचर दर्पा । बिस्व ग्रसिहि जनु एहि बिधि अर्पा ॥ ५ ॥ मुरे सुभट सब फिरहिं न फेरे । सूझ न नयन सुनहिं नहिं टेरे ॥ ६ ॥ rana mada matta nisācara darpā. bisva grasihi janu ēhi bidhi arpā. 5.

murē subhaṭa saba phirahim na phērē. sūjha na nayana sunahim nahim ṭērē.
6.

Kumbhakaran was intoxicated with pride and heated with the passion of war as he relentlessly unleashed his destructive wrath on the battle-field as if the Creator has offered him a chance and a mandate to devour (exterminate) the world in this way. (5)

All the great warriors in the monkey and bear army turned their back to the battle-field; no amount of cajoling and encouraging words would make them change their minds from desisting from battle and countering Kumbhakaran. They could not see anything clearly with their eyes, and they would not respond to any call because they did not hear properly (as a result of the trauma that they had gone through)¹. (6)

[Note—¹The monkeys and bears who managed to escape with their lives were so dazed and traumatized by their horrifying experience that they lost the will and enthusiasm to fight any more. There was so much confusion and consternation amongst their rank and file that for a moment it seemed difficult to control them and turn them around; there was complete chaos and panic in the army of Lord Ram.]

कुंभकरन कपि फौज बिडारी । सुनि धाई रजनीचर धारी ॥ ७ ॥
देखी राम बिकल कटकाई । रिपु अनीक नाना बिधि आई ॥ ८ ॥ kumbhakarana kapi phauja biḍārī. suni dhā'ī rajanīcara dhārī. 7.

dēkhī rāma bikala kaṭakā'ī. ripu anīka nānā bidhi ā'ī. 8.

When the demon army heard that Kumbhakaran had scattered the army of monkeys and bears, it rushed forward¹. (7)

In the mean time, Lord Ram observed that the situation was alarming as his army was in serious trouble, feeling helpless and agitated, and at the same time a large number of enemy warriors, the demons, have entered the battle-field². (8)

[Note—¹We have read earlier in Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 64 that Kumbhakaran had gone to the battle-field all alone; he had left the demon army behind. The demon warriors were already reeling under the bitter experience of being pounded and pummeled by the ferocity of attack by the monkeys and bears that they themselves feared facing them again, and so were initially reluctant to accompany Kumbhakaran as he stepped out on the battle ground. But when they saw that their leader has managed to scatter the enemy and crush it, they became encouraged to fight once more. So they gathered their courage and dashed forward.

²Lord Ram had been watching the proceedings from his control-and-command camp. He observed that his army was in panic and scattered. Now was the time for him to step in to save the situation. And this he did as we shall read in the next Doha.]

दो०. सुनु सुग्रीव बिभीषन अनुज सँभारेहु सैन ।
मैं देखउँ खल बल दलहि बोले राजिवनैन ॥ ६७ ॥

dōhā.

sunu sugrīva bibhīṣana anuja saṁbhārēhu saina.
maiṁ dēkha'um̐ khala bala dalahi bōlē rājivanaina. 67.

The lotus-eyed Lord Ram summoned his chief commanders and said, 'Listen Sugriv, Vibhishan and Laxman (the Lord's younger brother). You take charge of the army, while I will see if I can tackle this wicked fellow and his wild forces (i.e. Kumbhakaran and the demon army)'. (Doha no. 67)

चौ०. कर सारंग साजि कटि भाथा । अरि दल दलन चले रघुनाथा ॥ १ ॥
प्रथम कीन्हि प्रभु धनुष टँकोरा । रिपु दल बधिर भयउ सुनि सोरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kara sārāṅga sāji kaṭi bhāthā. ari ḍala dalana calē raghunāthā. 1.
prathama kīnhi prabhu dhanuṣa ṭaṁkōrā. ripu dala badhira bhaya'u suni sōrā.
2.

Arming himself with his famous bow known as 'Sarang'¹ that he held in his hand, and a quiver full of arrows that was tied to his waist, Lord Raghunath (i.e. Lord Ram) went forward to tackle the enemy (Kumbhakaran) and his army. (1)

The Lord first twanged his mighty bow so loudly that it produced a thunderous sound which had the effect of deafening the enemy hordes². (2)

[Note—¹The 'Sarang bow' is held by Lord Vishnu. Since Lord Ram was a manifestation of Vishnu, it is said that the bow he held was called 'Sarang'.

It is believed that this 'Sarang bow' was crafted by Vishwakarma, the engineer of the gods, especially for Lord Vishnu, and its original length was 9 feet. According to mythological accounts, during the War of the Gods during Sata-yuga, the first era of the 4-era celestial cycle of creation and destruction according to Hinduism, a huge castor-oil tree was produced. It measured approximately 25 feet. Out of the stem of this tree, Vishwakarma devised the following Bows: one bow of 9 feet length for Lord Vishnu which was called Sarang, one bow of 7 feet length for Lord Shiva which was called Pinak, one bow of 5 feet length for Lord Ram which was called Kodand (or Kodanda), one bow of 3 feet length for Arjun of the Pandava race, and it was called Gandiva, and the remaining part of the tree, measuring 1 foot, was used to make the flute of Lord Krishna which was called Vanshi.

This is why Lord Ram is often addressed as the Lord who holds the Kodand bow—i.e. Kodand Ram. He is also called the Lord with the Sarang bow because he was a manifestation of Lord Vishnu—and hence known as ‘Sarang Pani’, i.e. the Lord who holds the Sarang bow in his hand.

Now presently we read here that Lord Ram had held the ‘Sarang bow’, instead of his usual ‘Kodand bow’, and its twang had deafened the demons. How and when did this Sarang bow of Lord Vishnu come to Lord Ram?

If we examine Ram Charit Manas it will be abundantly clear that both the terms, i.e. ‘Kodand bow’ and ‘Sarang bow’, were used for the same bow held by Lord Ram. This will be clear by-and-by when we come to read about the Lord’s battle with Ravana. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 86.}

Though it is true that the Sarang bow was crafted for the exclusive use of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world, by Vishwakarma, the engineer of the gods, during the legendary war between the gods and the demons, and the Kodand bow was specially made by him for Lord Ram, but since Lord Ram was none other than Lord Vishnu himself in a human form, these two terms for the Lord’s bow were used interchangeably.

So though normally Lord Ram’s bow was referred to as the ‘Kodand bow’, but when the time came for the Lord to slay the two great demons, Kumbhakaran and Ravana, the term ‘Sarang bow’ is used for the Lord’s bow. This is to indicate that it was actually Lord Vishnu in the form of Lord Ram who was fulfilling his words given to the gods and mother earth that he would himself eliminate the sinful demons. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 68 with reference to Kumbhakaran; and (ii) Chanda line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 86 with reference to Ravana.}

Now, a question arises: When, where and from whom did Lord Ram get this Sarang bow? This is an interesting question, and if we carefully examine the Story of Ram Charit Manas, the answer is found in it, and it is this: The Bow of Lord Vishnu, known as Sarang, was handed over to Lord Ram by sage Parashuram at the venue of the Lord’s marriage ceremony in Janakpur—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 284.

It so happened that sage Parashuram was very angry when Lord Ram had broken the old bow of Lord Shiva, known as Pinak, to fulfill the vow of king Janak, Sita’s father, that he would marry his daughter to anyone who could lift and break the bow. It was because sage Parashuram worshipped Lord Shiva, and he felt that breaking of the bow had insulted his deity. A heated argument followed, and in spite of all his threats and angry outbursts to punish Lord Ram the sage failed to even raise his arms against the Lord. This stunned Parashuram as he had a reputation of being merciless and unforgiving, and once he decided to punish someone, no one could dare to save his victim. So, the sage was mightily astonished at his inability to harm either Lord Ram or his younger brother Laxman. Surely, he thought when he calmed down a bit, that there must be more to Lord Ram than what meets the eye; he had a subtle feeling that Lord Ram was not an ordinary prince but an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. To test his hunch, the sage gave the Lord the ‘bow of Lord Vishnu’, i.e. the Sarang bow, and to his amazement he observed that this bow went on its own to Lord Ram, who received it easily. This miraculous event confirmed to sage Parashuram that Lord Ram was no one else but Lord Vishnu himself in this form. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 284 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.}

It was therefore with this bow, i.e. the ‘Sarang’, that Lord Ram had killed the mighty demons to fulfill the promise made to the gods and mother earth in his primary form as Lord Vishnu that he would personally intervene to eliminate the demons to save the world from their cruelty and terror. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 186—to Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 187.}

And this is why the demons could not stand against Lord Ram, because this Sarang bow was no ordinary bow; it was the bow of the almighty Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world.

At this juncture it ought to be noted that in the Story of the Ramayan, Lord Ram has been addressed as a holder of both the Sarang bow and the Kodanda bow. There is a specific verse which uses this term ‘Kodand’ to indicate how fierce the Lord would be for those who try to disrupt peace, harmony and order in the Lord’s creation—because the term ‘Kodand’ includes the word ‘Danda’ which means punishment. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 91.}

²When Lord Ram pulled the string of his formidable bow right back up to his ear and then let it go with a snap, there was a deafening twang, so loud and piercing that it ruptured the eardrums of some of the demon warriors present in the vicinity, or numbed the faculty of hearing in others. Some were rendered permanently deaf, while others lost their ability to hear for varying lengths of time.]

सत्यसंध छाँड़े सर लच्छा । कालसर्प जनु चले सपच्छा ॥ ३ ॥

जहँ तहँ चले बिपुल नाराचा । लगे कटन भट बिकट पिसाचा ॥ ४ ॥

satyasandha chāṁṛē sara lacchā. kālasarpa janu calē sapacchā. 3.
jaham̐ taham̐ calē bipula nārācā. lagē kaṭana bhaṭa bikaṭa pisācā. 4.

Lord Ram, who was of a firmness of purpose, had strength of resolution, was vigorous in his actions, and true and firm in his resolve (satyasandha) to exterminate the cruel demons, shot a hail of countless arrows, which flew towards the enemy (Kumbhakaran and his army) like so many winged serpents¹. (3)

These were not ordinary arrows, but were called ‘Naracha’²; countless such Naracha arrows started their flight towards the enemy hordes, and as soon as they reached their target they began mowing down and slicing the fierce looking ogres (demons) into pieces. (4)

[Note—¹Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 92.

²The Naracha (nārācā) is a special sort of arrow made entirely of hardened iron; it has five fins, instead of four as in ordinary arrows, to stabilize it during flight. These arrows were like modern-day cruise missiles, and they homed on to their targets with great precision. To wit, none of the arrows shot by Lord Ram went to waste; each felled at least one demon warrior, if not more. They were shot in rapid succession, and the sky seemed to be covered by a blanket of arrows that swooped down on the demon warriors, nailing them all down to the earth.

A question arises: how could so many thousands of arrows be shot from a single bow? Well, remember that it was not an ordinary bow; it was the Sarang bow, a mystical bow of Lord Vishnu, the almighty Lord of the world. Besides this, we are reading about a time long in the past when there were many things of which we cannot have an idea today. So in all likelihood, these arrows were unique weapons which multiplied after being shot like the cluster bombs or multiple missile launchers of today. It will be wrong to think that such things are merely figments of fertile imagination just because we don't have or know of such things today; this doesn't prove that they did not exist in the time of which we are reading about.

For instance, our ancestors living even say a hundred years ago could not have imagined that one day their descendents would have an instrument known as 'telephone' that would help them talk with each other directly over long distances; or a time say fifty-sixty years ago when we had 'wired telephone' instruments, that there would one day be a small hand-held thing called a 'cell phone' which would enable people to communicate with each other while they would be moving, and talk across continents and seas as if they were speaking with each other face to face.]

कटहिं चरन उर सिर भुजदंडा । बहुतक बीर होहिं सत खंडा ॥ ५ ॥
घुर्मि घुर्मि घायल महि परहीं । उठि संभारि सुभट पुनि लरहीं ॥ ६ ॥ kaṭahim carana ura sira bhujadaṇḍā. bahutaka bīra hōhim sata khaṇḍā. 5.

ghurmi ghurmi ghāyala mahi parahim. uṭhi sambhāri subhaṭa puni larahim. 6.

Some of the demons got their legs cut; some had their chest pierced; some had their heads cut off; some had their arms torn away; while some were chopped into as many seven small pieces. (5)

The demon warriors swooned and rolled over on the ground, falling down dead or unconscious. Only a few amongst them who were exceptionally brave and energetic could firm up their courage to stand again to fight. (6)

लागत बान जलद जिमि गाजहिं । बहुतक देखि कठिन सर भाजहिं ॥ ७ ॥
रुंड प्रचंड मुंड बिनु धावहिं । धरु धरु मारु मारु धुनि गावहिं ॥ ८ ॥ lāgata bāna jalada jimi gājahim. bahutaka dēkhi kaṭhina sara bhājahim. 7.

ruṇḍa pracaṇḍa muṇḍa binu dhāvahim. dharu dharu māru māru dhuni gāvahim. 8.

As soon as the arrows struck them, the demon warriors roared and yelled like thunder. Others who were timid, they simply ran away in terror to escape being hit. (7)

Extremely fierce looking headless torsos of demon warriors, whose heads had been severed from the trunk, ran amok in angry frenzy, helter-skelter everywhere in the battle-field, letting out chilling war cries, scowling menacingly, and howling wildly in a chorus: 'catch hold of the enemy; kill-kill'. (8)

[Note—Surely, it was a blood-curdling, horrifying and deadly scene that was enacted on the battle-field of Lanka.]

दो०. छन महुँ प्रभु के सायकन्हि काटे बिकट पिसाच ।

पुनि रघुबीर निषंग महुँ प्रबिसे सब नाराच ॥ ६८ ॥

dōhā.

chana mahum̐ prabhu kē sāyakanhi kātē bikaṭa pisāca.
puni raghubīra niṣaṅga mahum̐ prabisē saba nārāca. 68.

Lord Raghubir's (i.e. Lords Ram's) formidable arrows cut through the fearsome ogres (the demon army) in an instant (i.e. very quickly), and after completing their mission these arrows known as Narach returned to Lord's quiver¹. (Doha no. 68)

[Note—¹This answers another question: From where did Lord Ram get access to so many countless arrows to fight the long war with the demons as a quiver has a limited capacity to hold them? The arrows would come back to the Lord who used them again and again, repeatedly; or he returned them to his quiver if there was no further need for them, to be used later on.

This is also not far-fetched, for in our modern world today we have re-usable rockets that are used in space flights, or take the example of an ordinary air-plane that is reused over and over again. Or even a boomerang that comes back to its thrower or shooter.

Remember: These arrows were not bombs that would explode and disintegrate; they were made of solid iron rods that could be reused.]

चौ०. कुंभकरन मन दीख बिचारी । हति छन माझ निसाचर धारी ॥ १ ॥

भा अति क्रुद्ध महाबल बीरा । कियो मृगनायक नाद गँभीरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kumbhakarana mana dīkha bicārī. hati chana mājha nisācara dhārī. 1.
bhā ati krud'dha mahābala bīrā. kiyō mṛganāyaka nāda gaṁbhīrā. 2.

Kumbhakaran was flabbergasted and dumbfounded at the thought that the whole demon army was decimated while he watched helplessly; it was a shameful thing for him to have happened in his presence. (1)

This infuriated him greatly, and he let out a thunderous and terrifying yell like that of a roaring lion overcome with anger. (2)

कोपि महीधर लेइ उपारी । डारइ जहँ मर्कट भट भारी ॥ ३ ॥ आवत देखि सैल प्रभु भारे । सरन्हि काटि रज सम करि डारे ॥ ४ ॥ kōpi mahīdhara lē'i upārī. ḍāra'i jaham̐ markṭa bhaṭa bhārī. 3.

āvata dēkhi saila prabhu bhārē. saranhi kāṭi raja sama kari ḍārē. 4.

He angrily picked up huge mountain-like rocks and forcefully dumped them wherever he could see groups of monkey warriors assembled at a place¹. (3)

When Lord Ram saw what was happening, he shot another volley of arrows that hit these falling rocks and reduced them to dust before they hit the ground and could crush (harm) the monkey army². (4)

[Note—¹So what happened then? Some of the monkeys ran away from the spot to save themselves, while some were buried under the rubble.

²It was like our modern-day anti-missile systems that intercept an incoming hostile missile and neutralizes it before it strikes the target on the ground.

Once the rocks were hit by Lord Ram's arrows, they were reduced to dust and rained down on the ground. But dust doesn't kill; rocks do. This gave great relief to the Lord's army.]

पुनि धनु तानि कोपि रघुनायक । छाँड़े अति कराल बहु सायक ॥ ५ ॥ तनु महुँ प्रबिसि निसरि सर जाहीं । जिमि दामिनि घन माझ समाहीं ॥ ६ ॥ puni dhanu tāni kōpi raghunāyaka. chāṁṛē ati karāla bahu sāyaka. 5.

tanu mahum̐ prabisi nisari sara jāhīm̐. jimi dāmini ghana mājha samāhīm̐. 6.

Then Lord Raghunath (i.e. Lord Ram) pulled his (Sarang) bow tight and angrily shot many more powerful and fierce arrows (at Kumbhakaran). (5)

These arrows entered the colossus body of Kumbhakaran and escaped from it (without harming him much) just like stabs of lightening can be seen shooting through thick dark clouds and vanishing from sight¹. (6)

[Note—¹Kumbhakaran's huge dark body is likened to a bank of thick dark clouds; and the arrows to the streaking lightening in the cloud. When the arrows struck Kumbhakaran he gave a loud yell just like the thunder that is heard in the cloud in the wake of a stab of lightening passing through it. Then these arrows escaped from the other side of his body to return to Lord Ram's quiver—apropos: Doha no. 68 herein above.

These arrows produced light due to friction as they passed through his body, and by the time they emerged from his body to return to Lord Ram's quiver they had cooled down.]

सोनित स्रवत सोह तन कारे । जनु कज्जल गिरि गेरु पनारे ॥ ७ ॥

बिकल बिलोकि भालु कपि धाए । बिहँसा जबहि निकट कपि आए ॥ ८ ॥ sōnita sravata sōha tana kārē. janu kajjala giri gēru panārē. 7.

bikala bilōki bhālu kapi dhā'ē. bihaṁsā jabahiṁ nikaṭa kapi ā'ē. 8.

Blood flowing in streams from the dark body of Kumbhakaran resembled red coloured water flowing out of spouts on the sides of a huge dark mountain of solidified soot. (7)

Seeing that he (Kumbhakaran) was confused and in a miserable condition, and therefore unlikely to retaliate and attack them, the emboldened monkey warriors rushed towards him. But to their utter dismay and astonishment, as soon as they came within reach, Kumbhakaran roared with laughter.

[Why did he laugh? The answer is given in the Doha that follows.] (8)

दो०. महानाद करि गर्जा कोटि कोटि गहि कीस ।

महि पटकइ गजराज इव सपथ करइ दससीस ॥ ६९ ॥

dōhā.

mahānāda kari garjā kōṭi kōṭi gahi kīsa.
mahi paṭaka'i gajarāja iva sapatha kara'i dasasīsa. 69.

He (Kumbhakaran) roared thunderously as he grabbed countless monkeys that were nearest to him, dashing them to the ground like a wild elephant catching hold of anything by its trunk and smashing it to the ground, all the while raising a war cry in favour of the ten-headed Ravana. (Doha no. 69)

[Note—¹This is the reason why Kumbhakaran had laughed in verse no. 8 herein above. He felt amused and thought that these monkeys were really stupid fellows when they came near him, thinking that they would vanquish him now that he was wounded and confused by the attack launched by Lord Ram. Little did they know about the kind of stern stuff that Kumbhakaran made of—for as soon as they came with his grasp he grabbed as many of the monkeys as he could and started smashing them to the ground so violently that they would be killed instantly.]

चौ०. भागे भालु बलीमुख जूथा । बृकु बिलोकि जिमि मेष बरूथा ॥ १ ॥

चले भागि कपि भालु भवानी । बिकल पुकारत आरत बानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bhāgē bhālu balīmukha jūthā. bṛku bilōki jimi mēṣa barūthā. 1.
calē bhāgi kapi bhālu bhavānī. bikala pukārata ārata bānī. 2.

Scarcely had Kumbhakaran started his brutal offensive by grabbing and thrashing the hordes of bears and monkeys, when they panicked, fleeing helter-skelter in terror, just like flocks of sheep disperse, as fast as they can for the fear of dear life, at the sight of a wolf approaching them. (1)

[Lord Shiva paused for a moment to recapitulate the scene of the battle-field as the army of Lord Ram scampered for cover and ran in total disarray under the hammering of Kumbhakaran's brutal offensive. Then he resumed his narrative, addressing his consort who was listening to this magnificent Story being told to her—]

‘Oh Bhavani (“bhavānī”; name of Lord Shiva's consort)! As soon as he (Kumbhakaran) launched his vicious attack, the monkeys and bears began running away from him, to escape his grasp and certain agonizing death, as fast as they could, all the while letting out pitiful cries of distress and woe. (2)

यह निसिचर दुकाल सम अहई । कपिकुल देस परन अब चहई ॥ ३ ॥ कृपा बारिधर राम खरारी । पाहि पाहि प्रनतारति हारी ॥ ४ ॥

yaha nisicara dukāla sama ahaī. kapikula dēsa parana aba cahaī. 3.
krpā bāridhara rāma kharārī. pāhi pāhi pranatārati hārī. 4.

They agitatedly cried out: ‘This ferocious demon is akin to a severe famine which wants to descend on the land of the monkey race by being determined to annihilate all its members by way of killing them mercilessly, without a regret¹. (3)

Oh Lord Ram who vouchsafes the bounty of his mercy and grace upon those who are suffering and under great distress just like the shower of cool rain from the rain-bearing cloud provides relief to the parched earth below that is suffering from severe famine due to prolonged drought (krpā bāridhara)².

Oh Lord who is famed as the slayer the demon named Khar (rāma kharārī)! We invoke your gracious nature and stellar virtues that you invariably defend those who are suffering and have sought your protection by taking refuge at your feet (pranatārati hārī).

Prithee oh the merciful and compassionate Lord; we plead with thee repeatedly and most earnestly to protect us, to save us, to shield us from this horrifying prospect which stares right at our face now (pāhi pāhi). [To wit, oh Lord, nothing else can save us now except thine intervention.]’ (4)

[Note—¹Here, Kumbhakaran is likened to the angry deity of death and destruction who mercilessly unleashes his wrath upon humble and weak creatures who are unable to stand against him, for some offence he took due to some unknown reason and decided to destroy the poor creatures by sending famine, drought and pestilence upon them so as to cause intense horror, suffering and misery on the populace, and to annihilate them.

²Just like rain is the only solution to death, misery and ruin caused by severe drought that causes famine and hunger, the only way out of Kumbakaran's deadly assault on the monkey-and-bear army is when Lord Ram intervenes and directly engages him in a duel, and then getting rid of this ferocious demon by felling him with his arrows.

This is why the terror-stricken monkeys and bears recall how Lord Ram had slayed the demon Khar. The episode of Khar's battle with Lord Ram and his ultimate slaying is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 21.

If this happens, i.e. if Lord Ram takes on Kumbakaran directly in a duel, then the latter's attention would be diverted away from the monkeys and bears as he would now have to focus on Lord Ram to tackle him; it would provide great relief to the poor monkeys and bears who are very panicky now and fear for their dear lives.]

सकरुन बचन सुनत भगवाना । चले सुधारि सरासन बाना ॥ ५ ॥

राम सेन निज पाछें घाली । चले सकोप महा बलसाली ॥ ६ ॥

sakaruna bacana sunata bhagavānā. calē sudhāri sarāsana bānā. 5.
rāma sēna nija pāchēm ghālī. calē sakōpa mahā balasālī. 6.

When the almighty Lord (“bhagavānā”, Lord Ram) heard this pitiful cry and pleadings of his army, he immediately decided to step in to protect his warriors. So the Lord wasted no time as he took his bow and arrow and started for the battle-field instantly, even as he was stringing the bow and mounting his formidable arrow on it while he was on his way¹. (5)

The most powerful and mighty Lord Ram (mahā balasālī) ordered his army to remain behind him as he angrily made his way to the battle front. (6)

[Note—¹There was no time to be wasted; each second was crucial. So Lord Ram hastily grabbed his bow and arrow and hastened to the battle-field. He stringed his bow and arranged the arrow on it while he was on his way to the ground to engage Kumbakaran in a fierce duel.]

खैँचि धनुष सर सत संधाने । छूटे तीर सरीर समाने ॥ ७ ॥

लागत सर धावा रिस भरा । कुधर डगमगत डोलति धरा ॥ ८ ॥

khaiñci dhanuṣa sara sata sandhānē. chūṭē tīra sarīra samānē. 7.
lāgata sara dhāvā risa bharā. kudhara ḍagamagata ḍōlati dharā. 8.

Lord Ram pulled the string of his bow and shot a volley of a hundred arrows at Kumbakaran; the arrows pierced through the demon's body and entered it. (7)

No sooner had the arrows pierced through his body than Kumbakaran's anger knew no bounds; he lurched forward, full of wrath and vengeance. The earth trembled and the mountains shook by the violent thumping of his heavy feet as he dashed towards Lord Ram. (8)

लीन्ह एक तेहिं सैल उपाटी । रघुकुल तिलक भुजा सोइ काटी ॥ ९ ॥
धावा बाम बाहु गिरि धारी । प्रभु सोउ भुजा काटि महि पारी ॥ १० ॥ līnha ēka tēhiṁ saila upāṭī. raghukula tilaka bhuajā sō'i kāṭī. 9.

dhāvā bāma bāhu giri dhārī. prabhu sō'u bhuajā kāṭi mahi pārī. 10.

He (Kumbhakaran) lifted a mountain (i.e. a huge rock that resembled a mountain because of its size) in his (right) arm (to attack Lord Ram with it), but the Lord, who was the best in the race of kings of Raghu's line (raghukula tilaka), immediately cut-off that arm. (9)

So he (Kumbhakaran) picked up another mountain with his left arm (bāma bāhu) and rushed at the Lord, whereat the Lord cut-off that arm too and fell it to the ground. (10)

काटें भुजा सोह खल कैसा । पच्छहीन मंदर गिरि जैसा ॥ ११ ॥
उग्र बिलोकनि प्रभुहि बिलोका । ग्रसन चहत मानहुँ त्रैलोका ॥ १२ ॥ kāṭēṁ bhuajā sōha khala kaisā. pacchahīna mandara giri jaisā. 11.

ugra bilōkani prabhuhi bilōkā. grasana cahata mānahuṁ trailōkā. 12.

With both his two arms chopped-off, the wicked demon appeared to resemble the huge Mt. Mandar after its two wings were cut-off¹. (11)

Kumbhakaran became wroth with exceeding wrath; he glared menacingly at Lord Ram with fiery eyes, and his angry visage implied that he would annihilate the entire world and devour it with fierce vengeance. (12)

[Note—¹In ancient times it is said that mountains could fly or glide in the sky like huge birds do because they had wings. Indra, the king of gods, feared that if due to some reason these mountains would fall on some part of the world, everything underneath them would be crushed to pulp. So he chopped-off their wings, so that they lose their ability to cause harm to the world and its creatures, whereat the mountains became permanently grounded on the earth.

Comparing Kumbhakaran with Mt. Mandar is to impress about his gigantic size and weight.]

दो०. करि चिक्कार घोर अति धावा बदनु पसारि । गगन सिद्ध सुर त्रासित हा हा हेति पुकारि ॥ ७० ॥
dōhā.

kari cikkāra ghōra ati dhāvā badanu pasāri.
gagana sid'dha sura trāsita hā hā hēti pukāri. 70.

He (Kumbhakaran) screamed wildly and lunged forward furiously with wide open mouth (to gobble up anyone who came his way), whereat the gods and mystics, who were watching the proceedings from their stations in the sky, recoiled in horror, exclaiming 'Oh my; alas-alack; oh dear me, it's so horrifying'¹. (Doha no. 69)

[Note—¹It was a hideous and terrifying sight indeed to see Kumbhakaran in this state—with both his arms sliced-off his gigantic body and blood spouting out of the open wounds which themselves resembled large openings on the side of a mountain from which red water gushed out, and his mouth wide open showing not only his sharp teeth and yelping tongue but also reminding one of the opening of a huge cave that leads into to a dark, dank and cavernous interior. Added to this frightening spectacle were his two huge reddened eyes that protruded from his ugly face like two gigantic fireballs ready to spew fire and brimstone on the world to burn and roast it alive, not to mention the hot breath blowing out of his nostrils that gave the impression of hot scorching wind blowing over the earth at the time of doomsday. To wit, Kumbhakaran looked nothing less than a ferocious dragon that has gone mad with anger.]

चौ०. सभय देव करुनानिधि जान्यो । श्रवन प्रजंत सरासनु तान्यो ॥ १ ॥
बिसिख निकर निसिचर मुख भरेऊ । तदपि महाबल भूमि न परेऊ ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

sabhaya dēva karunānidhi jān'yō. śravana prajanta sarāsanu tān'yō. 1.
bisikha nikara nisicara mukha bharē'ū. tadapi mahābala bhūmi na parē'ū. 2.

Lord Ram, who is an ocean of mercy and compassion, observed that the gods had become alarmed and terrified; so (to reassure them that there was nothing to fear from Kumbhakaran) he pulled the string of his bow tight, pulling it right back up to his ears¹. (1)

The volley of arrows shot by the Lord filled the gaping mouth of the demon, but even then the most powerful, most strong and most valorous demon did not yield nor fall to the ground². (2)

[Note—¹The Lord held the bow in one of his out-stretched hands, mounted an arrow on the bow, and then pulled its string back with his other hand till it reached his ears, to make the string extremely taught so that when the grip over it was removed the arrow would be shot forth with a mighty force.

²The arrows shot by Lord Ram stuffed Kumbhakaran's mouth tight, making it impossible for him to yell or scream any longer; yet he kept on moving forward towards the Lord. When the demon stopped his high-decibel shrieking, a sudden calm descended on the battle-field.]

सरन्धि भरा मुख सन्मुख धावा । काल त्रोन सजीव जनु आवा ॥ ३ ॥ तब प्रभु कोपि तीब्र सर लीन्हा । धर ते भिन्न तासु सिर कीन्हा ॥ ४ ॥ saranhi bharā mukha sanmukha dhāvā. kāla trōna sajīva janu āvā. 3.

taba prabhu kōpi tībra sara līnhā. dhara tē bhinna tāsū sira kīnhā. 4.

With his mouth stuffed with arrows, he (Kumbhakaran) rushed forward, and this fearful sight gave the impression that the deity of death, known as Kaal, has assumed the form of a quiver filled with deadly arrows to wreak his vengeance on the battle-field. (3)

Then the Lord (Sri Ram) angrily took a powerful arrow and shot it at him; this arrow chopped-off Kumbhakaran's head, severing it from his trunk. (4)

सो सिर परेउ दसानन आगें । बिकल भयउ जिमि फनि मनि त्यागें ॥ ५ ॥ धरनि धसइ धर धाव प्रचंडा । तब प्रभु काटि कीन्ह दुइ खंडा ॥ ६ ॥ sō sira parē'u dasānana āgēm. bikala bhaya'u jimi phani mani tyāgēm. 5.

dharani dhasa'i dhara dhāva pracaṇḍā. taba prabhu kāṭi kīnha du'i khaṇḍā. 6.

That severed head was flung off (due to powerful force with which it was severed from the trunk by the arrow), and it ultimately landed (with a heavy thud) in front of the ten-headed Ravana. When he saw it he was overcome with grief and distress in the same way as a serpent loses the luminescent sac present on its hood (phani mani tyāgēm)¹. (5)

Meanwhile, the head-less torso of Kumbhakaran continued with its advance with great speed, and it appeared that the ground below it was subsiding due to its weight. To bring this fearful spectacle to an end, Lord Ram shot another arrow which cut the torso into two pieces. (6)

[Note—¹According to legend, there is a special class of serpents that carry a luminous sac on its hood. It is formed by some kind of secretion from the skin on the serpent's head, and it solidifies to form a globule from which a soft light effuses. It is believed that the serpent can see only in this light when it comes out of its hole during the night to search for food. If this luminescent sac is lost, the poor creature becomes blind; it repeatedly dashes its head on the ground in regret and grief until it dies. The illuminated sac looks like a jewel on the hood of the serpent, and the serpent without this jewel is like a king without his crown.

This example is usually employed to highlight the extent of grief and misery a person suffers from when something or someone extremely close to him or important to him is suddenly lost or snatched away, leaving him utterly dismayed, extremely distraught, and overwhelmed with gloom and hopelessness, leaving him with a feel and sense of helplessness and haplessness.

To wit, when Ravana saw the severed head of his dear brother Kumbhakaran, the rug was pulled from under his feet; he was overcome with extreme distress and grief. He was unable to come to terms with the reality that Kumbhakaran was no more, and for some time he felt everything was lost, for not only did he lose his brother but he also lost a powerful warrior and companion and a close family member at a time when a ferocious war was underway. Kumbhakaran's death sounded like the death knell to Ravana; his hopes for victory were dashed; it was the first sure sign to him that things were going to turn ugly and awry and ruinous for him and the rest of the demon race for the simple reason that it was not a joke to kill Kumbhakaran, and Ravana knew it to so.]

परे भूमि जिमि नभ तें भूधर । हेठ दाबि कपि भालु निसाचर ॥ ७ ॥
तासु तेज प्रभु बदन समाना । सुर मुनि सबहिं अचंभव माना ॥ ८ ॥ parē bhūmi jimi nabha tēm bhūdharma. hēṭha dābi kapi bhālu nisācara. 7.

tāsu tēja prabhu badana samānā. sura muni sabahim acambhava mānā. 8.

The two severed parts of Kumbhakaran's body fell to the ground so heavily as if two mountains were falling to the ground from the sky, crushing many monkeys, bears and demons who came in the way. (7)

His (Kumbhakaran's) soul left his mortal body in the form of a shaft of light and went straight to enter the divine body of Lord Ram¹. It was a miraculous event, and most unexpected, which amazed the gods and sages who were surprised at it². (8)

[Note—¹Here, Kumbhakaran's pure conscious soul, known also as his Atma, his 'true self', emerged from his gross body to merge with the Supreme Atma, known as the Parmatma, represented by Lord Ram, to become one with it. According to principles of metaphysics, this is the best destination for the individual creature's Atma, his 'pure conscious self', whereby it becomes one with the Supreme Atma, the cosmic Consciousness, by merging its self with the latter. This is the final dissolution for the soul of the creature, for then there is no more return to the cycle of birth and death. It is the best form of death when the individual's Atma attains eternity; the Atma attains liberation and deliverance in the true sense; it is attainment of salvation and emancipation for the creature; it grants enduring bliss, beatitude and felicity to the 'self'.

This sort of deliverance of the soul is called 'Moksha'; it is a state from which there is no return to the mortal world. It is the ultimate destination for the soul, the Atma, which is the 'true self' and the pure consciousness of the creature, wherein it merges with its primary form known as the cosmic Consciousness to become one with it, and inseparable from it.

Only one other individual has been so lucky and privileged as to attain such an exalted destiny in the whole story of the Ramayana, and he is Ravana, for his Atma too merged with Lord Ram at the time of his death—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.

²Why were the gods and the sages astonished when they saw Kumbhakaran's soul entering the divine body of Lord Ram? It is because they thought that Kumbhakaran would go to hell, and such an exalted destiny for his soul was not expected by them.

But this incidence proves that Lord Ram does not care what sort of body a creature has; the Lord is only concerned with the purity of his inner-self and his Atma.

The very fact that Kumbhakaran's Atma, his soul that was nothing but pure consciousness, left his demon-body to enter the holy body of the Supreme Being represented by Lord Ram proves that no matter what Kumbhakaran said or did in the external world, internally he was pious and holy, and his soul was untainted by the nature of his external form, i.e. his body of a demon, or the deeds done by him with this body which were deemed to be sinful, evil and vile.

Kumbhakaran recognized the spiritual fact that the body and the soul, the latter known also as the Atma, are two distinct entities; he recognized the fact while the physical body is gross and perishable, the Atma on the other hand is pure, sublime and eternal; that the Atma is a creature's 'true self', as opposed to his body which is merely the Atma's habitat in this world; and this Atma is microcosmic form of the cosmic Consciousness that is known as the Parmatma, the Supreme Atma.

A creature who truly understands this universal principle of metaphysics is said to be illustrious, wise, enlightened and self-realised. So, Kumbhakaran was able to keep his Atma separate from his body in the sense that he never allowed the Atma to be affected by anything the body did. This enlightened approach to life helped him to maintain a clear inner-self and a clear conscience even while his body was decried as being that of a demon, a body that is deemed to be evil, sinful, pervert and vice, a body with all the negativities and degrading characters that are automatically attached to the term 'demon'.

It was therefore possible for him to retain the holiness and purity of his inner-self and his Atma which entitled him to attain an exalted destiny for his soul by making it merge with the Supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram who was none else but the Supreme Being himself in this form.

Indeed and without gainsay, what a fortunate soul Kumbhakaran's was that it obtained a destiny that eludes even the soul of the greatest of sages and hermits.

Lord Ram was of an exceptional good nature and stellar grace. He had no internal ill-will against anybody. What he was doing by way of slaying the demons was merely a call of duty and fulfilling of his obligation as the caretaker and well-wisher of this creation—because these demons had caused untold misery and pain to the creatures of the world, and it was obligatory for the Lord to stop this madness.

Lord Ram played his game wisely; he shot two birds with the same arrow. On the one hand he provided relief, solace and succour to the world by eliminating these cruel demons, and simultaneously, on the other hand, he ensured that these poor and unfortunate demons could find liberation and deliverance for their souls by granting them this opportunity in the battle-field. So what the world thought was the 'death' of the demons, was actually a means of their deliverance, emancipation and salvation—this is clearly and explicitly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-10 that precede Doha no. 114.

Normally those who are evil, sinful, pervert and cruel are condemned to hell; and surely heaven is not a place for them. But Lord Ram was so merciful, gracious, kind, compassionate, forgiving, benevolent and magnanimous by his inherent nature that he decided to welcome and accept Kumbhakaran warmly at his own place by way of opening the door of his heart for him in a symbolic way, and it was done by allowing his soul to enter his own body at the time it exited from the Kumbhakaran's demon-body. It was a rare gesture of grace and kindness shown by Lord Ram in the face of what was happening just a moment ago when both he and the demon were literally baying for each other's blood.

Thus, the merciful Lord Ram not only prevented the demon from going to hell, but he even went to the extent of accepting and welcoming Kumbhakaran warmly by granting the latter's soul a place in his own self in a symbolic way by allowing his soul to enter his body. It was a gesture that clearly meant that Kumbhakaran had not been condemned to hell, but elevated to an exalted stature where he would abide for ever in the company of the Supreme Being in heaven, where the Lord himself abides.

Surely, it was a moment of celebration—for a victory on the battle-field, as well as to salute the greatness of Lord Ram.]

सुर दुंदुभीं बजावहिं हरषहिं । अस्तुति करहिं सुमन बहु बरषहिं ॥ ९ ॥
 करि बिनती सुर सकल सिधाए । तेही समय देवरिषि आए ॥ १० ॥
 गगनोपरि हरि गुन गन गाए । रुचिर बीररस प्रभु मन भाए ॥ ११ ॥
 बेगि हतहु खल कहि मुनि गए । राम समर महि सोभत भए ॥ १२ ॥ sura dundubhīm bajāvahim haraṣahim. astuti karahim sumana bahu baraṣahim. 9.

kari binatī sura sakala sidhā'ē. tēhī samaya dēvariṣi ā'ē. 10.

gaganōpari hari guna gana gā'ē. rucira bīrarasa prabhu mana bhā'ē. 11.

bēgi hatahu khala kahi muni ga'ē. rāma samara mahi sōbhata bha'ē. 12.

The gods exulted and celebrated the occasion by playing their musical drums with great élan. They praised Lord Ram and showered bountiful flowers upon the Lord from their stations in the sky. (9)

After the gods had offered their prayers and gone their way (to their respective abode in the heaven), the celestial sage Narad came there (i.e. at the site of the battle between Lord Ram and Kumbhakara)¹. (10)

He stood in the sky and offered his prayers to Lord Ram, praising the Lord in high laudatory terms for his stellar qualities and excellent virtues, such as his valour, courage, steadfastness, fortitude and martial skills (which helped in eliminating one of the greatest and most feared demon of the race) as well as the Lord's graciousness, compassion, benevolence and magnanimity (that he granted deliverance, salvation and emancipation to a demon). This pleased the Lord immensely². (11)

Sage Narad finally requested Lord Ram to get rid of the chief wicked fellow (i.e. Ravana) at the earliest, and then he went his way.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram looked admirable and adorable in the battle-field. (12)

[Note—¹It is obvious here that sage Narad was not there at the time the battle raged on the ground and other gods were watching it from their station in the sky. Why was Narad absent earlier? The answer is this: He was the son of Brahma, the creator, and thus he was privy to many kinds of information that other gods had no access to. He had heard it from his father, Brahma the creator, what would happen when during the course of the war; so he wasn't so eager to watch the battle betwixt Lord Ram and Kumbhakaran live as other gods had been doing out of curiosity. Narad was aware that the death of Kumbhakaran was pre-destined in the day's battle, so what was the need, and the use, to jostle around and find an elbow room for himself to stand in the crowd of eager gods who were milling around over the site of the battle? It was always better to avoid a crowded place when a dangerous duel was underway, for in case the demon lunged towards the gods then there would be stampede, and all hell would break loose.

Come to think of it: Narad was correct in this respect as it is proved during the battle with Ravana, for once it so happened that in the heat of battle he had angrily lunged at the gods standing in the sky, vowing to thrash them black and blue to exact a vehement revenge from them for their having the temerity of praying to Lord Vishnu in his form as Lord Ram for his destruction, whereat there was a stampede amongst the crowd of gods as they ran madly to escape from Ravana's wrath. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 86—where we read that the gods have prayed to Lord Ram to slay Ravana without much waste of time; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 96—where we read that Ravana had attacked the gods who were watching the battle from the sky, roaring fiercely at them, scowling at them and threatening them all, chasing them so menacingly that there was a virtual stampede amongst the gods who ran helter-skelter for their safety.}

Sage Narad was a saintly figure; he did not like to enjoy bloodshed and mayhem like the other gods, so he thought it better to avoid the scene while the battle was underway. He came to offer his obeisance to Lord Ram and praise his good nature and stellar virtues. Narad was so happy that Lord Ram granted deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the soul of Kumbhakaran, while the other gods were happy only because one of their enemies was dead.

²Lord Ram noted that none of the other gods had said a single word in his honour or even praised him for fulfilling a part of the promise made to the gods by Lord Vishnu when he had promised the gods that he would go down to earth personally as Lord Ram to eliminate the demons. The gods were so selfish that they were only concerned that one of their arch enemies was out of the way, but had no time to offer as much as a formal 'thank you' to Lord Ram. On the other hand there was sage Narad who acknowledged the good nature of the Lord in providing liberation and deliverance to the Atma of Kumbhakaran who was decried by others as being a sinful demon who ought to be condemned to hell.

Nay, Lord Ram not only prevented the demon from going to hell, but the merciful Lord even went to the extent of accepting and welcoming Kumbhakaran warmly by granting the latter's soul a place in his own self in a symbolic way by allowing his soul to enter his body. It was a gesture that clearly meant that Kumbhakaran had not been condemned to hell, but elevated to an exalted stature where he would abide for ever in the company of the Supreme Being in heaven where the Lord himself abides.

To wit, Lord Ram noted his difference in attitude between sage Narad and the rest of the gods, and therefore he very appreciated and felt glad at Narad's words.]

छं०. संग्राम भूमि बिराज रघुपति अतुल बल कोसल धनी । १ ।

श्रम बिंदु मुख राजीव लोचन अरुन तन सोनित कनी ॥ २ ॥

भुज जुगल फेरत सर सरासन भालु कपि चहु दिसि बने । ३ ।

कह दास तुलसी कहि न सक छबि सेष जेहि आनन घने ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

saṅgrāma bhūmi birāja raghupati atula bala kōsala dhanī. 1.
 śrama bindu mukha rājīva lōcana aruna tana sōnita kanī. 2.
 bhuja jugala phērata sara sarāsana bhālu kapi cahu disi banē. 3.
 kaha dāsa tulasī kahi na saka chabi sēṣa jēhi ānana ghanē. 4.

Lord Ram—who was endowed with majestic powers and glory, and who was a jewel in the line of Kings of king Raghu’s race and the Lord of Ayodhya (known in ancient times as ‘Kaushal’)—looked adorable as he stood in the battle-field. (Chanda line no. 1)

The Lord looked so bewitchingly charming with drops of sweat glistening on his attractive face, his eyes like red-hued lotus flowers, his body covered with blood splattered all over it --- (Chanda line no. 2),

---And he was calmly toying with his bow and arrow with his two hands, while the monkeys and bears surrounded him on all the sides. (Chanda line no. 3)

[Speaking for himself, the principal author of this classic epic ‘Ram Charit Manas’, i.e. Goswami Tulsidas makes this observation—] ‘Tulsidas, the humble servant of Lord Ram, says that when Lord Seshnath, the celestial serpent who has a thousand mouths, cannot completely narrate the glory of Lord Ram, then say how is it ever possible for a humble man like him to sing the Lord’s glory, praise him for his grace, and describe his beauteous form in the battle-field even by a fraction of their immensity.’¹ (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Tulsidas expresses his inability to sufficiently describe the glory and virtues of Lord Ram, as well as his captivating charm that enthralls the heart of the beholder, because he finds himself incompetent to do so. He says that when the great Seshnath could not sufficiently do it with a thousand mouths, how can he do it with only a single mouth? So there is no regret in it. Rather, he is happy that he could do service to his dear Lord Ram by singing his glories to the best of his ability, and in whatever little manner he could do.

And what was so special, so unique, so laudatory, and so noble and honourable in Lord Ram’s actions? It is answered below.]

दो०. निसिचर अधम मलाकर ताहि दीन्ह निज धाम । गिरिजा ते नर मंदमति जे न भजहिं श्रीराम ॥ ७१ ॥

dōhā.

nisicara adhama malākara tāhi dīnha nija dhāma.
 girijā tē nara mandamati jē na bhajahiṁ śrīrāma. 71.

[Lord Shiva, the principal narrator of the divine Story of the Ramayan, said to his consort, goddess Parvati, the daughter of the King of Mountains, who was listening to the narrative—] ‘Oh Girija! The demon (Kumbhakaran) was vile, evil and a mine of sins. Even he was vouchsafed an exalted destiny by Lord Ram who granted his soul an abode where the Lord himself dwelt.

Say then how unfortunate and dumb-witted is a creature who would, in his stupid folly, not adore and worship and honour such a glorious and munificent Lord as Sri Ram (who graced even a demon and vouchsafed him with a grant of liberation and deliverance, of emancipation and salvation, in spite of his having a sinful body).’ (Doha no. 71)

[Note—Lord Shiva observes that only a great fool would desist from bowing before the greatness of Lord Ram; only one who is an utter fool and has completely bankrupted his mind of all senses and wisdom would search other Lords for the grant of favour, succour and solace instead of seeking these blessings directly from Lord Ram—because there is no other Lord who is as welcoming, amiable and friendly, as well as great, graceful, kind, compassionate, forgiving, merciful, benevolent, magnanimous and munificent as Lord Ram anywhere in this creation.]

चौ०. दिन कें अंत फिरीं द्वौ अनी । समर भई सुभटन्ह श्रम घनी ॥ १ ॥
 राम कृपाँ कपि दल बल बाढ़ा । जिमि तृन पाइ लाग अति डाढ़ा ॥ २ ॥
 छीजहिं निसिचर दिनु अरु राती । निज मुख कहें सुकृत जेहि भाँती ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

dina kēm anta phirīm dvau anī. samara bhaī subhaṭanha śrama ghanī. 1.
 rāma kṛpāñ kapi dala bala bāṛhā. jimi tṛna pā'i lāga ati dāṛhā. 2.
 chījahim nisicara dinu aru rātī. nija mukha kahēm sukrṭa jēhi bhāñtī. 3.

At the end of the day, when there was eventide, the armies of both the sides returned to their respective camps¹. (1)

The hordes of monkey and bear warriors were infused with a surge of energy and enthusiasm when Lord Ram graced them after they assembled in the camp in the same way as a dwindling fire is re-ignited into its full ferocity with a little help from some fresh twigs that are added to it². (2)

On the other hand, the opposite prevailed in the demon camp. They were overcome with ever rising regret and gloom, feeling utterly helpless and hapless. [Their confidence in themselves and their king Ravana were shattered.]

The condition of the demon ranks was like the case of one advertising one's own noble and meritorious deeds—because by doing so the rewards that accrue due to such deeds quickly dwindle and eventually disappear³. (3)

[Note—¹This marked the end of the third day of the epic War of Lanka. Kumbhakaran was slayed during this day.

²The monkeys and bears were well-nigh exhausted and weary by the end of the day of fierce battle with Kumbhakaran. But when Lord Ram looked over his army to take stock of the situation, his graceful look had such magical charm that it spread immediate cheer in the rank and file of the warriors.

The Lord's benevolent smile and graceful manners instilled confidence in the monkey and bear warriors. He told them that they need not worry at all about the outcome of the war in general, and the course of the war day-by-day, as they had witnessed today how he, Lord Ram, could easily handle the most ferocious of demons and take care of them.

The warriors were reassured and highly enthused; they were full of energy, confidence and the raring to go, for the death of Kumbhakaran in a single day's battle had not only cheered and invigorated the army of Lord Ram but it also marked a major milestone towards ultimate victory. All the weariness and doubts and consternations of the monkeys and bears were dispelled, and this soared the morale of the Lord's army to new heights.

³There is message here—and it is that one ought to show great modesty, humility and restraint when it comes to telling others about one's good deeds. Boasting and talking about them, to advertise the good deeds in the hope that such information would bring praise and honour to the doer, has just the opposite effect, for such boasting and advertising neutralizes the good effects and diminishes the rewards that accrue to a person due to whatever noble and meritorious deeds he does. It is a case of diminishing returns.

Similarly, the demons were getting low on morale and numbers with the passage of every single day of the war. It was because they had always boasted of their might, strength, invincibility and powers, and now it had boomeranged upon them.]

बहु बिलाप दसकंधर करई । बंधु सीस पुनि पुनि उर धरई ॥ ४ ॥

रोवहिं नारि हृदय हति पानी । तासु तेज बल बिपुल बखानी ॥ ५ ॥

bahu bilāpa dasakandhara karaī. bandhu sīsa puni puni ura dharaī. 4.
rōvahiṁ nāri hṛdaya hati pānī. tāsu tēja bala bipula bakhānī. 5.

The ten-shouldered Ravana (dasakandhara) lamented and grieved in many a ways; he clasped the severed head (of his dear brother Kumbhakaran) close to his heart even as he beat his head repeatedly in abject despair, deep agony, and aggravated frustration. (4)

At the same time as Ravana lamented and grieved gravely for Kumbhakaran, the women of the household too beat their hearts even as they soulfully mourned and wept for him, extolling Kumbhakaran's exemplary valour and strength, and praising his virtues and singular abilities in laudatory terms¹. (5)

[Note—¹The ladies of the demon king Ravana's household had lamented and grieved immensely in a similar way when Meghanad, the son of the demon king Ravana, was killed, and also when the demon king himself was killed in the war. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 77—when Meghanad died; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 104—when Ravana died.}

The death of Kumbhakaran was a major milestone in the epic War of Lanka, and it was a body-blow to Ravana as his demise had the effect of a warrior losing one of his limbs while the battle with the adversary was still raging fiercely.

Kumbhakaran was no ordinary demon warrior; he was a member of the ruling family, and a younger brother of the demon king Ravana. With his death Ravana lost a friend and brother who was not only a close family member but also his sincere well-wisher. The unfortunate Ravana had already lost the support of another of his brothers, i.e. Vibhishan, whom he had humiliated so much by kicking him in full court that he abandoned him. Ravana's arrogance and haughty manners had begun to slowly pull the rug from under his feet, and his slow decline into ruin was aided by the burden of his unabated sins and evil ways that were weighing down heavily upon him, unraveling his great reputation as an invincible warrior who could bring even the mighty gods to kneel down before his might. The great and mighty demon race—which Ravana had so assiduously nourished, fostered and encouraged, against which even the deity of death known as Kaal would have trembled, a race that had become the supreme terror of the world against which no power in creation dared to raise its head in opposition—was surely and certainly heading to its sunset hour, as everything would ultimately head to in this mortal world.

To wit, Ravana pulled his demons along with him as he tottered to his own destruction. With his two major supports, his brothers Vibhishan and Kumbhakaran, gone, Ravana was virtually marooned. Though there were other commanders in the demon army, but Ravana could not rely on them as much as he would on his own family members. There was no one except his valiant son Meghanad left now in the family to give him courage and company, and lead the charge against the enemy. And therefore, his last hopes were pinned on Meghanad, whom he will send next to the battle front.

-----**-----

Section 16.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 40-70; Canto 8, verse nos. 1-30.

Before proceeding further with the rendering of this magnificent and fascinating Story of the Epic War of Lanka, with its vivid narrative of events of singular dare devilry, valour, fortitude and courage, let us pause for a while to recount how 'Adhyatma Ramayan' of Veda Vyas describes this episode of Kumbhakaran's death.

It is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 40-70; and Canto 8, verse nos. 1-30.

By reading about the same incident or episode of the epic Story of the Ramayana as narrated by two independent narrators who lived in different periods of time, which in our present case is Goswami Tulsidas who narrated Ram Charit Manas, and sage Veda Vyas who penned Adhyatma Ramayan, the reader benefits in many ways: one, he gets to view the same picture from two different angles that present two independent perspectives of it; two, he reads how the same episode has been viewed and interpreted by two independent learned observers who were separated from each other by thousands of years, which implies that the main outline of the event being related by them actually did happen, and it is not a fanciful idea generated by the creative imagination any single author's fertile mind; and three, it helps to refresh the reader's memory about the details of the event under consideration, enabling it to be engraved more abidingly in his mind when he happens to read it once again, albeit as narrated by another narrator.

Presently, it seems that two different great souls, Tulsidas and Veda Vyas, over two different periods of time, have got the intuition to describe the same incident of the great Story of the Ramayan in their own unique style, with focus on different aspects of the same event which they chose to describe. It is therefore an excellent idea to read the Story of the Ramayan, which forms the basis of our own "Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka", from more than one classical book, and so it is wonderful to read about Kumbhakaran's death from Adhyatma Ramayan after reading it from Ram Charit Manas.

So, let's get going:-

(i) Sub-section 16.1.1: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 40-70:-

इत्युक्त्वा वानरैः सार्धं सुग्रीवेण समन्वितः ।
 विभीषणमतेनैव युद्धाय समवस्थितः ॥ ४०॥
 पाषाणैः पादपैश्चैव पर्वताग्रेष्व वानराः ।
 युद्धायाभिमुखा भूत्वा ययुः सर्वे युयुत्सवः ॥ ४१॥

ityuktvā vānaraiḥ sārḍham sugrīveṇa samanvitaḥ ।
 vibhīṣaṇamatenaiva yuddhāya samavasthitaḥ ॥ 40॥
 pāṣāṇaiḥ pādapaiścaiva parvatāgraiśca vānarāḥ ।
 yuddhāyābhimukhā bhūtvā yayuḥ sarve yuyutsavaḥ ॥ 41॥

[After Laxman had been revived by administration of the medicinal herb brought by Hanuman, cheer spread amongst the rank and file of Lord Ram's army. Every monkey and bear warrior was highly excited raring to go to take on the might of the enemy, the demon forces. After thanking Hanuman profusely for being instrumental in saving the life of Laxman, Lord Ram summoned his war council led by his chief commanders Sugriv and Vibhishan; he began urgent discussions for the next steps to be taken, and to prepare for the battle of the next day.]

40-41. Having thanked Hanuman (for the help in reviving Laxman), Lord Ram began earnest preparations for the war with the assistance of Sugriv, Vibhishan and other monkeys (40).

Then the monkeys, who were very eager for battle, started off for the battle-field, armed with rocks, trees, summits of mountains (i.e. large boulders) and sundry other things they could lay their hands on, things that they could use to attack their enemy (41).

रावणो विव्यथे रामबाणैर्विद्धो महासुरः ।
 मातङ्ग इव सिंहेन गरुडेनेव पन्नगः ॥ ४२॥
 अभिभूतोऽगमद्राजा राघवेण महात्मना । सिंहासने समाविश्य राक्षसानिदमब्रवीत् ॥ ४३॥ rāvaṇo vivyathe rāmabāṇairviddho mahāsuraḥ । mātaṅga iva siṃhena garuḍeneva pannagaḥ ॥ 42॥ abhibhūto'gamadrājā rāghaveṇa mahātmanā । siṃhāsane samāviśya rākṣasānidamabravīt ॥ 43॥

42-43. In the meanwhile, the great demon Ravana had become extremely agitated, vexed and confounded when he was hit and severely wounded by Lord Sri Ram's arrows, just like an elephant becomes agitated and terribly frightened when it is under a fierce attack by a lion, or a snake is when attacked by Garud (the legendary mount of Lord Vishnu, said to be such an inveterate enemy of serpents that he would gobble a snake as soon as he sights one)¹ (42).

The demon king Ravana was defeated at the hands of the great Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) and beat a hasty retreat; he went to Lanka for the time being. He sat on his throne and addressed the demons who had assembled around him (43)— [Note—¹An elephant, on the face of it, seems to have an upper hand over the lion in a fierce combat between the two because it has a larger body and looks more powerful and stronger than a lion, but when the lion begins its attack in right earnest the poor elephant seems helpless. After offering some strong resistance initially in the combat, the elephant finally panics because it becomes clear to him that he is no match for the lion, and if he does not manage to shake the lion off him and run away, then death is a foregone conclusion.

Similarly, Garud, the name given to the celestial Eagle or Heron who is said to be the mount of Lord Vishnu, would swoop down on a serpent and kill it instantly. Initially the serpent would try its best to bite the mighty bird or wrap itself tightly around it to squeeze it to death, but soon it gives up the struggle as the Garud begins to gobble it up.

In the present context it implies that Lord Ram's form of a human being who was civil and amiable, was no match for the colossus size of Ravana's body as well as his frightening visage and menacing demeanours. But when the duel commenced betwixt the two, Lord Ram had a quick upper hand over his adversary, creating an alarming situation for Ravana inasmuch as that had he not escaped from the battle front he would have been killed even before the combat ended. So Ravana was very scared, and he scampered away to the safety of his fort of Lanka where all other demon warriors assembled for a quick war council to take a stock of the situation.]

मानुषेणैव मे मृत्युमाह पूर्वं पितामहः ।
 मानुषो हि न मां हन्तुं शक्तोऽस्ति भुवि कश्चन ॥ ४४॥ ततो नारायणः साक्षान्मानुषोऽभून्न संशयः ।
 रामो दाशरथिर्भूत्वा मां हन्तुं समुपस्थितः ॥ ४५॥ mānuṣeṇaiva me mṛtyumāha pūrvam pitāmahaḥ । mānuṣo hi na māṃ hantum śakto'sti bhuvi kaścana ॥ 44॥ tato nārāyaṇaḥ sāḥśānmānuṣo'bhūnna saṃśayaḥ । rāmo dāśarathirbhūtvā māṃ hantum samupasthitaḥ ॥ 45॥

44-45. [Ravana said—] 'In some ancient time, the grandfather of creation, i.e. Brahma the creator, had forecast my death at the hands of a human, but there is no man in this world who can ever kill me (44).

Hence, there is no doubt¹ that Lord Narayan (Lord Vishnu) himself has manifested as a human being in the form of Lord Sri Ram, the son of king Dasrath (of Ayodhya), and he has come here to kill me (45).

[Note—¹Why was Ravana so sure that Lord Ram was no ordinary human being but Lord Vishnu himself? It is because in the duel between him and the Lord, it was the first time in his life that Ravana felt so alarmed and scared for his life. So he deduced that there must be more to Lord Ram than what meets the eye. Putting two and two together he arrived at the obvious conclusion that there is no other explanation for things as they are unfolding except that it is Lord Vishnu himself who has assumed the form of Lord Ram in order to get rid of him.]

अनरण्येन यत्पूर्वं शप्तोऽहं राक्षसेश्वर ।
 उत्पत्स्यते च मद्दंशे परमात्मा सनातनः ॥ ४६॥
 तेन त्वं पुत्रपौत्रैश्च बान्धवैश्च समन्वितः ।
 हनिष्यसे न सन्देह इत्युक्त्वा मां दिवं गतः ॥ ४७॥
 स एव रामः सञ्जातो मदर्थे मां हनिष्यति । कुम्भकर्णस्तु मूढात्मा सदा निद्रावशं गतः ॥ ४८॥ anaranyena yatpūrvam śapto'haṃ rākṣaseśvara । utpatsyate ca madvaṃśe paramātmā sanātanaḥ ॥ 46॥ tena tvam putrapautraiśca bāndhavaiśca samanvitaḥ । haniṣyase na sandeha ityuktvā māṃ divaṃ gataḥ ॥ 47॥ sa eva rāmaḥ sañjāto madarthe māṃ haniṣyati । kumbhakarnaṣtu mūḍhātmā sadā nidrāvaśaṃ gataḥ ॥ 48॥

46-48. In some ancient time, Anaranya had cursed me, saying 'Oh king of demons! The truthful and eternal Supreme Being, the Lord God, will incarnate (or reveal) himself in my family (46), and, without doubt, you along with your sons, grandsons, kith and kin, compatriots and friends et al, will die at his hands'. And having said so, he had gone to heaven (47).

So therefore I have no doubt that it is the same Supreme Being who has manifested himself for me in the form of Lord Sri Ram, and likewise it is also certain that he will kill me. My brother Kumbhakarn is a very foolish and stupid fellow; he is always under the influence of sleep (i.e. he is so singularly lazy and without ambitions that he always prefers to sleep, and do nothing else in his life) (48).

तं विबोध्य महासत्त्वमानयन्तु ममान्तिकम् ।
 इत्युक्तास्ते महाकायास्तूर्णं गत्वा तु यत्नतः ॥ ४९॥
 विबोध्य कुम्भश्रवणं निन्यू रावणसन्निधिम् । नमस्कृत्य स राजानमासनोपरि संस्थितः ॥ ५०॥ taṁ vibodhya mahāsattvamānayantu mamāntikam । ityuktāste mahākāyāstūrṇaṁ gatvā tu yatnataḥ ॥ 49॥ vibodhya kumbhaśravaṇaṁ ninyū rāvaṇasannidhim । namaskṛtya sa rājānamāsanopari saṁsthitaḥ ॥ 50॥

49-50. You must go and wake him up, and then bring him here.'

[To remove confusion, the reader must refer to verse no. 43 where Ravana was surrounded by other demons when he returned from the battle-field. He is addressing those demons.]

When he said so, the demons, who all had colossal and fearsome bodies, said 'alright', and they immediately rushed to carry out the orders given to them. They went to Kumbhakarn and engaged themselves in right earnest to wake him up from his deep slumber by employing umpteen numbers of methods. When they finally succeeded in arousing him from his sleep, they conveyed to him Ravana's urgent message and then brought him to the place where Ravana was waiting for him. There he (Kumbhakarn) showed his respects to the king of the demon race (i.e. Ravana) and sat down on his designated seat (49-50).

[Note—Ravana mortally feared facing Lord Ram in the battle-field because he knew that the Lord would surely slay him as had been prophesized long ago. So instead of leading the war from the front as a king is expected to do, and as Ravana had always been doing during his countless campaigns to conquer the world and the heaven, this time he preferred to send others in his stead so that, if possible, he could escape the trap of death. He would presently send his brother Kumbhakara, and then when the latter is killed in the battle, he would next send Meghanad, his beloved son, to face the wrath of Lord Ram. It is only when no other family member is left for him whom he can send as his proxy would he himself step into the battle-field, to fight unto death.

By sending one after another great fighter to face Lord Ram in the battle-field instead of fighting the Lord himself as he was expected to do, Ravana's intention or his strategy was to wear out the Lord by adopting the tactic of attrition, so that by the time his own turn comes the Lord would have already been exhausted and war-weary, while he would be fresh and sprightly enough to launch a fierce offensive. So, Ravana himself waited for the last moment to strike hard at the war-weary enemy. It was a military strategy employed by him, but it proved to be in vain because he could not change the fiat of fate and the decree of destiny.]

तमाह रावणो राजा भूतरं दीनया गिरा ।
 कुम्भकर्णं निबोध त्वं महत्कष्टमुपस्थितम् ॥ ५१॥
 रामेण निहताः शूराः पुत्राः प्रौत्राश्च बान्धवाः । किं कर्तव्यमिदानीं मे मृत्युकाल उपस्थिते ॥ ५२॥ tamāha rāvaṇo rājā bhrātaraṃ dīnayā girā । kumbhakarna nibodha tvaṃ mahatkaṣṭamupasthitam ॥ 51॥ rāmeṇa nihatāḥ sūrāḥ putrāḥ prautrāśca bāndhavāḥ । kiṃ kartavyamidāniṃ me mṛtyukāla upasthite ॥ 52॥

51-52. Then king Ravana said in a most pitiful way to his brother, 'Oh Kumbhakarn, listen to me. A great trouble has presented itself before us (51).

Sri Ram has killed the great warriors, sons, grandsons, relatives, compatriots and friends of our demon race. The time of my death (i.e. my end) appears to have come. What should I do now? I am very perplexed and confused, and am unable to decide what to do. So do please give me your advice (52).

एष दाशरथी रामः सुग्रीवसहितो बली ।
 समुद्रं सबलस्तीर्त्वा मूलं नः परिकृन्तति ॥ ५३॥
 ये राक्षसा मुख्यतमास्ते हता वानरैर्युधि । वानराणां क्षयं युद्धे न पश्यामि कदाचन ॥ ५४॥ eṣa dāśarathī rāmaḥ sugrīvasahito balī । samudraṃ sabalastīrtvā mūlaṃ naḥ parikṛntati ॥ 53॥ ye rākṣasā mukhyatamāste hatā vānarair Yudhi । vānarāṇāṃ kṣayaṃ yuddhe na paśyāmi kadācana ॥ 54॥

53-54. This son of Dasrath, i.e. Lord Sri Ram, along with the forces of Sugriv (i.e. the army of monkeys and bears), has successfully crossed the ocean, and has now surrounded (besieged) us from all the sides; he and his fierce warriors are slowly nibbling away at our very roots.

[To wit, like rodents that destroy a flourishing garden or verdant forest by steadily nibbling away at the roots of plants and trees, burrowing through the soil and striking directly at their roots, or gnawing at the fruits and leaves, dealing a death knell upon all vegetation, this son of Dasrath and his unrestrained army of reckless monkeys and bears have managed to come to our dear land of Lanka. Now they are gradually chopping away at us; they have besieged our fort and chipping away steadily at our defenses; they run amok all over the fort at their own free will, killing our great warriors one by one, weakening us and making us hollow from within. What appeared the other day to be an impregnable fort of Lanka has now become exceedingly vulnerable; its defenses are on the verge of collapse, and the morale of our army has become very fragile due to relentless ferocious attack by the enemy and our steadily diminishing ranks.] (53).

All our chief demons (i.e. commanders of the army etc.) have been killed at the hands of the monkeys, but we are not able to see any reduction in the numbers of the monkey (and bear) warriors in the battle-field.

[To wit, it seems that we are at the receiving end of thrashing by Fate in this frightening war. Our numbers are dwindling rapidly, and the morale of our warriors is fast sinking, while that of our enemy seems to be on the ascendant. It's a gravely alarming situation; a day so gloomy and dark that we had never expected would ever come to us has now come knocking at our door overnight.] (54).

नाशयस्व महाबाहो यदर्थं परिबोधितः ।
भ्रातुरर्थे महासत्त्व कुरु कर्म सुदुष्करम् ॥ ५५॥
श्रुत्वा तद्रावणेन्द्रस्य वचनं परिदेवितम् । कुम्भकर्णो जहासोच्चैर्वचनं चेदमब्रवीत् ॥ ५६॥ nāśayasva mahābāho yadartham paribodhitah । bhrāturarthe mahāsattva kuru karma suduṣkaram ॥ 55॥ śrutvā tadrāvaṇendrasya vacanam paridevitam । kumbhakarṇo jahāsoccairvacanam cedamabravīt ॥ 56॥

55-56. Oh the most valiant and valorous one! You must destroy them—that is why I have woken you up. Oh the great and brave warrior! Do this impossible and difficult task for the sake of your brother.' (55).

Hearing these gloomy and distressed words of their king Ravana, Kumbhakarn burst out, laughing derisively. He said (56)—

पुरा मन्त्रविचारे ते गदितं यन्मया नृप । तदद्य त्वामुपगतं फलं पापस्य कर्मणः ॥ ५७॥
पूर्वमेव मया प्रोक्तो रामो नारायणः परः । सीता च योगमायेति बोधितोऽपि न बुध्यसे ॥ ५८॥ purā mantravicāre te gaditaṁ yanmayā nrpa । tadadya tvāmupagataṁ phalaṁ pāpasya karmaṇaḥ ॥ 57॥ pūrvameva mayā prokto rāmo nārāyaṇaḥ paraḥ । sītā ca yogamāyeti bodhito'pi na budhyase ॥ 58॥

57-58. 'Oh king! When you had consulted me earlier, I had told you then also—the fruits of your past sins have indeed borne fruits today (57).

I had already told you (i.e. I had already warned you; I had already advised you) that Sri Ram is the Supreme Lord of the world known as Lord Narayan (i.e. Lord Vishnu) who is beyond everything, and Sita is his Yog Maya¹, but unfortunately you don't seem to understand anything inspite of my trying my best to make you see reason and think rationally (58).

[Note—¹The 'Yog Maya' is the Lord's supernatural power to bring together the different forms of his cosmic energy to do things that are otherwise not possible. It also refers to the ability of the Lord to create delusions that are so real life-like that even the wisest of creatures are taken for a ride by the illusion it creates.

In the present case Ravana seems to think that he has abducted and brought home a prince's wife and her husband, Lord Ram, could not protect her. But what he forgets is that, one, it is only a shadow of the real Sita that he has managed to abduct, and two, it is the way the Lord wants it to be that he had managed to steal her*, and not because he had the real strength and ability to do so on his own accord, against the wishes of the Lord. {*Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 1-4.}]

एकदाहं वने सानौ विशालायां स्थितो निशि ।
दृष्टो मया मुनिः साक्षान्नारदो दिव्यदर्शनः ॥ ५९॥
तमब्रुवं महाभाग कुतो गन्तासि मे वद ।
इत्युक्तो नारदः प्रह देवानां मन्त्रणे स्थितः ॥ ६०॥ ekadāhaṃ vane sānau viśālāyāṃ sthito niśi । dṛṣṭo mayā muniḥ sākṣānnārado divyadarśanaḥ ॥ 59॥ tamabravaṃ mahābhāga kuto gantāsi me vada । ityukto nāradaḥ prāha devānāṃ mantraṇe sthitaḥ ॥ 60॥

59-60. One night I was sitting on a large rock in the forest. At that time I saw the celestial sage Narad (59).

I said, 'Oh the most exalted and fortunate one (mahābhāga)! Tell me where are you going now?' When I had asked this, Narad replied, 'I was attending a very confidential meeting of the Gods (in heaven) (60).

तत्रोत्पन्नमुदन्तं ते वक्ष्यामि शृणु तत्त्वतः ।
युवाभ्यां पीडिता देवाः सर्वे विष्णुमुपागताः ॥ ६१॥ उचुस्ते देवदेवेशं स्तुत्वा भवत्या समाहिताः । जहि रावणमक्षोभ्यं देव त्रैलोक्यकण्टकम् ॥ ६२॥

tatrotpannamudantaṃ te vakṣyāmi śṛṇu tattvataḥ । yuvābhyāṃ pīditā devāḥ sarve viṣṇumupāgatāḥ ॥ 61॥ ūcuste devadeveśaṃ stutvā bhaktyā samāhitāḥ । jahi rāvaṇamakṣobhyaṃ deva trailokyakaṇṭakam ॥ 62॥

61-62. Whatever transpired there, I shall tell you verbatim; listen. Being extremely tormented and vexed by you two brothers (Ravana and Kumbhakarn), all the Gods approached Lord Vishnu (to find out a way to end the misery, fear and suffering these gods are subjected due to you two brothers) (61).

They offered prayers to the most exalted supreme Lord of Gods; these prayers were offered with immense devotion, faith, submission and humility. The gods pleaded: 'Oh Lord! This fellow Ravana has created great horrors for us; we are feeling utterly helpless against his might; he has caused immense distress, misery and agony to us. He (Ravana) has become a virtual thorn for all the three divisions of the world¹. Hence oh gracious Lord of the world, kindly do something soon to eliminate him, please get rid of this scourge of the entire world as soon as it is possible (62).

[Note—¹The three divisions of the world are the following: the heaven, the earth and the nether world.]

मानुषेण मृतिस्तस्य कल्पिता ब्रह्मणा पुरा । अतस्त्वं मानुषो भूत्वा जहि रावणकण्टकम् ॥ ६३॥
 तथेत्याह महाविष्णुः सत्यसङ्कल्प ईश्वरः । जातो रघुकुले देवो राम इत्यभिविश्रुतः ॥ ६४॥ mānuṣeṇa mṛtistasya kalpitā brahmaṇā purā । atastvaṃ mānuṣo bhūtvā jahi rāvaṇakaṇṭakam ॥ 63॥ tathetyāha mahāviṣṇuḥ satyasaṅkalpa īśvaraḥ । jāto raghukule devo rāma ityabhiviśrutaḥ ॥ 64॥

63-64. In an earlier time, the creator Brahma had destined (literally, written, foretold, decided, prescribed and prophesized) that his death would be at the hands of a human. So, oh gracious and kind Lord, you should become a human being and eliminate (destroy) this Ravana-like thorn (that is causing untold suffering to this creation)' (63).

Then the great Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being and the Lord of all, and who is steadfast in keeping his vows and is true to his words, assured the gods, saying, 'Alright; it shall be so'.

Now the same Lord has revealed himself as Lord Sri Ram in the family of the great king Raghu (of the kingdom of Ayodhya) (64).

स हनिष्यति वः सर्वानित्युक्त्वा प्रययौ मुनिः ।
 अतो जानीहि रामं त्वं परं ब्रह्म सनातनम् ॥ ६५॥
 त्यज वैरं भजस्वाद्य मायामानुषविग्रहम् । भजतो भक्तिभावेन प्रसीदति रघूत्तमः ॥ ६६॥

sa haniṣyati vaḥ sarvānityuktvā prayayau muniḥ । ato jānīhi rāmaṃ tvaṃ paraṃ brahma sanātanam ॥ 65॥ tyaja vairam bhajasvādya māyāmānuṣavigraham । bhajato bhaktibhāvena prasīdati raghūttamaḥ ॥ 66॥

65-66. He will slay you all'. Saying this, the sage (Narad) went his way. Hence, you must recognise and realize the fact that Lord Sri Ram is none but Brahm, the Supreme Lord of creation who is eternal, truthful and supreme (65).

With this wisdom and insightful thought, you will be doing the right thing by abandoning all forms of confrontation, hostility, ill-will, animosity, opposition and belligerence with this image of the Supreme Lord, for remember that the human form of Sri Ram is merely an illusion that hides the Lord's true form, which is none else but the Supreme Being himself.

You must adore, worship and have devotion for Lord Sri Ram instead of harbouring any kind of enmity or ill-will against him; you must not have a hostile attitude towards the Lord. The most exalted of the Raghus (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) becomes easily pleased with those who worship and adore him, those who pay their obeisance to him with full devotion, reverence, faith, conviction, humility, dedication and submission (66).

भक्तिर्जनित्री ज्ञानस्य भक्तिर्मोक्षप्रदायिनी ।
 भक्तिहीनेन यत्किञ्चित्कृतं सर्वमसत्समम् ॥ ६७॥
 अवताराः सुबहवो विष्णोर्लीलानुकारिणः ।
 तेषां सहस्रसदृशो रामो ज्ञानमयः शिवः ॥ ६८॥
 रामं भजन्ति निपुणा मनसा वचसाऽनिशम् ।
 अनायासेन संसारं तीर्त्वा यान्ति हरेः पदम् ॥ ६९॥ bhaktirjanitrī jñānasya bhaktirmokṣapradāyini । bhaktihīnena yatkiñcitkṛtaṁ sarvamasatsamam ॥ 67॥ avatārāḥ subahavo viṣṇorlīlānukāriṇaḥ । teṣāṁ sahasrasadrśo rāmo jñānamayaḥ śivaḥ ॥ 68॥ rāmaṁ bhajanti nipuṇā manasā vacasā'niśam । anāyāsenā saṁsāraṁ tīrtvā yānti hareḥ padam ॥ 69॥

67-69. Bhakti (which refers to sincere devotion, submission and complete dedication to the Lord God) is the mother of 'Gyan' (enlightenment, wisdom, gnosis, truthful knowledge of reality), as well as a provider of emancipation and salvation to the creature. If a person has no Bhakti in him, if he has not devotion and faith in any thing he does, if he is not fully dedicated and committed in any thing that he endeavours to do, if he lacks conviction and sincerity in his efforts, then all his efforts go in vain, whether they are related to spiritual matters or to worldly matters¹. (67)

Lord Vishnu had many incarnations, and in all of them he had done playful activities which are called the 'Lord's Leela', or the Lord's sports that were played in accordance with the form that the Lord had assumed.

But this incarnation or manifestation of the Supreme Lord as 'Lord Sri Ram' is an embodiment of enlightenment, wisdom, gnosis and truthful knowledge (Gyan), and hence it is nothing else but an image of 'Shiva' (i.e. an embodiment of the all the virtues that Lord Shiva stands for)².

This being the case, the incarnation of the Supreme Being as Lord Ram is equivalent to thousands of other incarnations (because it is personified form of 'Shiva', one who is true, pure, holy, divine, self-realised, enlightened, and the most exalted of them all) (68).

Those who worship Sri Ram sincerely, most diligently and devotedly, with their mind and heart as well as by their words and thoughts, at all times of their existence every day and night, are sure to easily cross this mundane, gross and mortal world that normally keeps a creature trapped in a cycle of birth and death, to attain final deliverance, emancipation and salvation for themselves. They attain an exalted destination for themselves by way of going to the supreme abode of Sri Hari (Lord Vishnu) in heaven (69).

[Note—¹The idea is that merely saying that "I am a devotee of God and I worship him" won't help the creature a wee whit unless one is very sincere and truly devoted to the Lord in his mind and heart, in his actions and deeds, in his thoughts and words. Mere lip-service won't help; it can please the world but it won't please the Lord.

²Lord Shiva stands for the virtues of the soul that are beautiful and pristine pure; the Lord symbolizes the purity of soul, its holiness, piety, wisdom, truth, enlightenment, self-realisation, renunciation and detachment; Lord Shiva stands for the glory of the soul and its freedom from all worldly attachments and material attractions.

Amongst all the incarnations of Lord Vishnu on this earth, the one in the form of Lord Sri Ram is regarded as the best in all respects. Lord Sri Ram is a personification of ‘Shiva’ because he stands for the virtues and the beauty of the soul which is pure cosmic Consciousness.

Further, Shiva is called a Mahadeva, the ‘Great God’—implying here that Lord Ram is also a Great God, and not an ordinary human being as he appears to be. Like Lord Shiva, Lord Ram too is the most exalted soul; he is sagacious, erudite, wise, enlightened, self-realised and auspicious; he is like a true hermit who remains detached from and dispassionate towards the external world of sense objects. Like Lord Shiva who remains eternally peaceful and blissful in his internal self, Lord Ram’s inner self too remains in a state of eternal bliss, peace, serenity and beatitude.

To wit, Lord Ram epitomises those excellent characters which make a man great and exalted, a perfect human being.]

ये राममेव सततं भुवि शुद्धसत्त्वा ध्यायन्ति तस्य चरितानि पठन्ति सन्तः ।
मुक्तास्त एव भवभोगमहाहिपाशैः सीतापतेः
पदमनन्तसुखं प्राप्नुयन्ति ॥ ७०॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे सप्तमः सर्गः ॥ ७॥

ye rāmameva satataṃ bhuvi śuddhasattvā dhyāyanti tasya caritāni paṭhanti santaḥ । muktāsta eva bhavabhogamahāhipāśaiḥ sītāpateḥ padamanantasukhaṃ prayānti ॥ 70॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde yuddhakāṇḍe saptamaḥ
sargaḥ ॥ 7॥

70. Those persons who are truly saintly, who have a pure and pious heart, and devote themselves in meditating on Lord Ram, in thinking about nothing else but Lord Ram, and in reading the divine story of Lord Ram in this world—such persons are sure to find freedom from the misery and pain associated with the great snare that traps a creature to this gross mortal world of transmigration; they attain an exalted destination for their souls in the form of gaining access to the eternal bliss, beatitude and felicity that are embodied in the lotus-like feet of Lord Sri Ram, the divine Lord (husband) of Sita. (70)

[Note—We observe that Kumbhakaran has emphasized the importance of ‘Bhakti’ in one’s spiritual pursuit. Without this eclectic and singularly excellent virtue, success would elude a spiritual aspirant.

The other point he lays stress on is to remember Lord Ram, a manifestation of the Supreme Being, during every moment of one's life. He nevertheless adds a caveat here—and it is that this should be done with a clean, pious, devoted and pure heart as well as a mind that is free from all worldly taints and corruptions; it should be done with sincerity, devotion and dedication.

And the third point is that he shows a practical way to do it—which is to narrate and listen to the Lord's divine and glorious stories that describe the Lord's deeds during his manifestation in this world. However, it is absolutely necessary while doing so that one must not harbour any sort of doubt about the Lord's true identity; one should be absolutely convinced that Lord Ram is a manifestation of the Supreme Being himself, and not an ordinary human being as he physically appears to be.

If one follows the advice given by Kumbhakaran, then it is certain that one would easily cross the vast and virtually intractable ocean that is represented by this gross, mundane world marked by all sorts of pains, miseries and torments associated with the constantly rotating cycle of life and death in it, to reach the other side, which implies attainment of freedom from all these torments, and have abiding peace, happiness, joy, bliss and beatitude for one's self.]

Thus ends Canto 7 of Lanka Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that describes the conversation between Lord Shiva and his divine consort named Uma.

(ii) Sub-section 16.1.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 1-30:-

॥अष्टमः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

कुम्भकर्णवचः श्रुत्वा भ्रुकुटीविकटाननः ।

दशग्रीवो जगादेदमासनादुत्पतन्निव ॥ १॥

त्वमानीतो न मे ज्ञानबोधनाय सुबुद्धिमान् ।

मया कृतं समीकृत्य युध्यस्व यदि रोचते ॥ २॥

॥aṣṭamaḥ sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

kumbhakarṇavacaḥ śrutvā bhrukuṭīvikaṭānanaḥ ।

daśagrīvo jagādedamāsanādutpatanniva ॥ 1॥

tvamānīto na me jñānabodhanāya subuddhimān ।

mayā kṛtaṁ samīkṛtya yudhyasva yadi rocate ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva—'Oh Parvati! Hearing the words of Kumbhakarn (Canto 7, verse nos. 57-70), the countenance and eyebrows, i.e. the facial expressions, of Ravana, the one with ten necks (daśagrīvo), became very fierce and wrathful. He almost leapt up from his seat in disgust and anger, and rebuffed Kumbhakarn with scorn and sarcasm in his tone (1), 'I know you are very wise, but I have not called you to preach me now. If you like, you can regard my deeds as being correct and in proper order, and enter the war on my behalf (for I am not in a mood to listen to lectures at this moment; I don't like it) (2).

नो वेदच्छ सुषुप्त्यर्थं निद्रां त्वां बाधतेऽधुना ।
 रावणस्य वचः श्रुत्वा कुम्भकर्णो महाबलः ॥ ३॥
 रुष्टोऽयमिति विज्ञाय तूर्णं युद्धाय निर्ययौ ।
 स लङ्घयित्वा प्राकारं महापर्वतसन्निभः ॥ ४॥
 निर्ययौ नगरात्तूर्णं भीषयन् हरिसैनिकान् । स ननाद महानादं समुद्रमभिनादयन् ॥ ५॥

no cedgaccha suṣuptyartham nidrā tvām bādhate'dhunā । rāvaṇasya vacaḥ śrutvā kumbhakarṇo mahābalaḥ ॥ 3॥ ruṣṭo'yamiti vijñāya tūrṇam yuddhāya niryayau । sa laṅghayitvā prākāraṁ mahāparvatasannibhaḥ ॥ 4॥ niryayau nagarāttūrṇam bhīṣayan harisainikān । sa nanāda mahānādaṁ samudramabhinādayan ॥ 5॥

3-5. If you don't agree, then go back and sleep. You must be feeling uncomfortable for being woken up too early; so go and complete your sleep! [And don't worry about me; I am competent to tackle the situation on my own. Scoot from here and lie down once again. No one would disturb you again.]'

Hearing these sarcastic and acerbic taunts of Ravana, the brave Kumbhakarn (3) realised that his brother Ravana is very angry, wrathful and annoyed.

Not to exacerbate matters any further that would probably lead to a shameful showdown between the two brothers (and also because he was aware of the fate of the demon race according to what he had heard from sage Narad), he (Kumbhakarn) set off for the battle front immediately.

Kumbhakkarn, who was as huge as a mountain in his body, stepped across (4) the ramparts of the walled city of Lanka (like a colossus taking a giant step), and with only a few steps he came out in the battle-field¹.

He then roared aloud so fearfully and thunderously that the whole army of monkeys and bears was petrified with mortal fear, and lost its wits. The sound waves generated by his roar reverberated in the sky and rolled over the earth, hitting the ocean so hard that it too rumbled and roared in resonance even as its waters heaved and waves rebounded violently (5).

[Note—¹Kumbhakarn was so huge that he could not get through the exit gates of the city walls, for they were too small for his large body. So, he just stepped across them in a giant, Gulliver-like step. One can very well visualize the sight of Kumbhakarn standing: he was like a Giant, towering so high as to touch the sky.]

वानरान् कालयामास बाहुभ्यां भक्षयन् रुषा । कुम्भकर्णं तदा दृष्ट्वा सपक्षमिव पर्वतम् ॥ ६॥ दुद्रुवुर्वानराः सर्वे कालान्तकमिवाखिलाः ।

भूमन्तं हरिवाहिन्यां मुद्गरेण महाबलम् ॥ ७॥ vānarān kālayāmāsa bāhubhyāṃ bhakṣayan ruṣā । kumbhakarnaṃ tadā dr̥ṣṭvā sapakṣamiva parvatam ॥ 6॥ dudruvurvānarāḥ sarve kālāntakamivākhlāḥ । bhramantaṃ harivāhinyāṃ mudgareṇa mahābalaṃ ॥ 7॥

6-7. Then, becoming fiercely angry, he started to destroy the army and annihilate the monkeys and bears by catching hold of them, and devouring them wholesale. Kumbhakarn then looked like a huge winged mountain¹ (6).

All the monkeys and bears began fleeing in terror from there in extreme great haste just like all the creatures try to escape from the clutches of death-god called Yam when he comes to catch them in his snare and take them to hell.

Kumbhakarn roared violently as he freely roamed in the battle-field, romping and rampaging unchecked through the ranks of the army of monkeys and bears, with a very heavy dumb-bell in hand as his only weapon (with which he battered the enemy warriors and bludgeoned them to death) (7).

[Note—¹His dark colossus body resembled a huge mountain, while his two arms protruding from the sides of his gigantic body looked like the outstretched wings of a huge bird. The general appearance of Kumbhakarn was like that of a huge dinosaur or some other horrifying, abominable creature that roamed the surface of the earth in early times.]

कालयन्तं हरीन् वेगाद्भक्षयन्तं समन्ततः ।
चूर्णयन्तं मुद्गरेण पाणिपादैरनेकधा ॥ ८॥ कुम्भकर्णं तदा दृष्ट्वा गदापाणिर्विभीषणः ।
ननाम चरणं तस्य भ्रातुर्ज्येष्ठस्य बुद्धिमान् ॥ ९॥ kālayantaṃ harīn vegādbhakṣayantaṃ samantataḥ । cūrṇayantaṃ mudgareṇa pāṇipāḍairanekadhā ॥ 8॥ kumbhakarnaṃ tadā dr̥ṣṭvā gadāpāṇirvibhīṣaṇaḥ । nanāma caraṇaṃ tasya bhrāturjyeṣṭhasya buddhimān ॥ 9॥

8-9. Everywhere the extremely strong and powerful Kumbhakarn was killing the monkeys and bears relentlessly; swiftly swallowing them up, or reducing them to pulp by either crushing and grinding them under his heavy feet, or pounding and thrashing them with his clenched fists (8).

In the mean time, Vibhishan, who was wise and observant, and was holding a battle mace in his hands, saw all this unfold before his eyes. He came forward and bowed at the feet of his elder brother (Kumbhakarn, to show respect to him) (9).

विभीषणोऽहं भ्रातुर्मे दयां कुरु महामते ।
रावणस्तु मया भ्रातर्बहुधा परिबोधितः ॥ १०॥
सीतां देहीति रामाय रामः साक्षाज्जनार्दनः ।

न शृणोति च मां हन्तुं खड्गमुद्यम्य चोक्तवान् ॥ ११॥

यिक् त्वां गच्छेति मां हत्वा पदा पापिभिरावृतः ।

चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिभिः सार्धं रामं शरणमागतः ॥ १२॥ vibhīṣaṇo'haṃ bhrāturme dayāṃ kuru mahāmate ।

rāvaṇastu mayā bhrātarbahudhā paribodhitaḥ ॥ 10॥

sītāṃ dehīti rāmāya rāmaḥ sāksājjanārdanaḥ । na śṛṇoti ca māṃ hantum khaḍgamudyamya cōktavān ॥ 11॥

dhik tvāṃ gaccheti māṃ hatvā padā pāpibhirāvṛtaḥ ।

caturbhirmantribhiḥ sārḍhaṃ rāmaṃ śaraṇamāgataḥ ॥ 12॥

10-12. Vibhishan said, 'Oh the wise one (mahāmate)! I am your brother Vibhishan. Have mercy on me¹. Oh my dear brother! I had tried repeatedly to tell and explain to Ravana (10) that he should give Sita back to Sri Ram because the latter is none but Lord Janardan² (i.e. Lord Vishnu) himself in a personified form. But it is so unfortunate that he did not listen to me; on the contrary, he drew his sword to kill me. (11)

He reproached me most scornfully, saying with disgust in his tone: 'Shame to you; get away from here.'

Surrounded as he is by sinful, corrupt and pervert courtiers, he did not hesitate a moment to kick me in full court. Then, accompanied by four ministers, I came to take shelter with Lord Sri Ram and seek refuge at the Lord's holy feet³ (12).

[Note—¹When Vibhishan saw Kumbhakarn coming to the battle front, he decided to go and meet him. One reason was to explain to him why he had left Lanka, and the other reason is to pray to him not to punish him for his action. That is why Vibhishan says “have mercy on me”; he requests Kumbhakarn to excuse him for having abandoned his family and race to join the enemy's camp, for he will explain why he did it, and then he further pleads that he be spared from incurring Kumbhakarn's wrath because the fault was not his but that of Ravana.

In the verses that follow herein below we shall see that Kumbhakarn shows his great affection to his younger brother Vibhishan and agreeing with him that Ravana is not ready to listen to any sane advice because he is under the grip of death. Kumbhakarn blesses Vibhishan and says that the latter had done the right thing by seeking refuge with Lord Ram, as this decision of his would ensure that the demon race would not completely be annihilated. The meeting between the two brothers was cordial and brotherly, with no sign of animosity or hatred betwixt them. When they parted, probably there were tears in their eyes. This is in sharp contrast with the way Vibhishan and Ravana parted with each other—it was a very bitter and angry parting; it was marked by disgust and rancour. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 27-36.}

²The word “Janardan” refers to Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world. It means the Lord who is very kind, compassionate and merciful towards his humble creatures; he takes care of them all and ensures their welfare and well-being.

³Vibhishan explains to Kumbhakarn why he deserted his elder brother Ravana. He says that while he was trying to make Ravana see reason, the latter took offense and publicly humiliated him. It was intolerable an insult, so Vibhishan says that he decided to abandon Lanka and seek refuge with Lord Ram.]

तच्छ्रुत्वा कुम्भकर्णोऽपि ज्ञात्वा भ्रातरमागतम् ।
समालिङ्ग्य च वत्स त्वं जीव रामपदाश्रयात् ॥ १३॥
कुलसंरक्षणार्थाय राक्षसानां हिताय च । महाभागवतोऽसि त्वं पुरा मे नारदाच्छ्रुतम् ॥ १४॥

tacchrutvā kumbhakarṇo'pi jñātvā bhrātaramāgatam । samāliṅgya ca vatsa tvam jīva rāmapadāśrayāt ॥ 13॥ kulasamrakṣaṇārthāya rākṣasānām hitāya ca । mahābhāgavato'si tvam purā me nāradācchrutam ॥ 14॥

13-14. Hearing these words and finding that his own brother Vibhishan has come to meet him, Kumbhakarn affectionately hugged him, clasping his dear brother close to his heart. He (Kumbhakarn) said, 'Oh son (vatsa)! You live a long life (tvam jīva)! By taking shelter and refuge in the holy feet of Lord Sri Ram (13), you have ensured that you will live long to take care of the future welfare of our demon race. On some previous occasion, I had heard from sage Narad that you are a great devotee of the Lord (14).

[Note—Compare this with how Ravana had treated Vibhishan. This seemingly normal meeting between two brothers marks a stark difference between Ravana and Kumbhakarn. While Ravana's mind and heart were completely overshadowed by perversion, wickedness and sinfulness, and he was full of pride, ego and haughtiness, making him singularly stubborn, ruthless and reckless, Kumbhakarn on the other hand was more reasonable, sober, prudent, courteous, wise and cultured in his demeanours and thoughts.

We have already read that Kumbhakarn too had tried to tell Ravana the same thing that Vibhishan had told him earlier, and on both the occasions there was no effect on Ravana.

One outstanding feature of the meeting between Kumbhakarn and Vibhishan is how they met, and the circumstances around it—they embraced each other like two affectionate siblings meeting for the last time, with no bitterness in their hearts, though they were in opposite camps. Vibhishan has bowed to his elder brother Kumbhakarn to pay his respects to him (verse no. 9), and the latter has picked him up and embraced him affectionately, calling Vibhishan his 'son' (verse no. 13).]

गच्छ तात ममेदानीं दृश्यते न च किञ्चन ।
मदीयो वा परो वापि मदमतविलोचनः ॥ १५॥
इत्युक्तोऽशुमुखो भ्रातृश्रणावभिवन्द्य सः । रामपार्श्वमुपागत्य चिन्तापर उपस्थितः ॥ १६॥ gaccha tāta mamedānīm drśyate na ca kiñcana । madiyo vā paro vāpi madamattavilocanaḥ ॥ 15॥

ityukto'srumukho bhrātuścaraṇāvabhivandya saḥ । rāmapārśvamupāgatya cintāpara upasthitaḥ ॥ 16॥

15-16. Oh my dear (tāta)! You must go away from me now for my eyes are wild and intoxicated by wine. I cannot see (i.e. differentiate between) who is my own or who is opposed to me.

[To wit, I have drunk so much that my mind is not under my control. The wine has got its firm hold on me, making me intoxicated so much that I am not able to judge who is my friend and who is my foe. So, before I cause you any harm, it is better you go away from me. But my dear brother, I bless you.]' (15).

When his brother (Kumbhakarn) had said so, tears welled-up in Vibhishan's eyes. He bowed at his (Kumbhakarn's) feet, and overcome by worries and filled with remorse, he came back and stood before Lord Sri Ram (16).

[Note—¹Vibhishan was moved by the way his elder brother Kumbhakarn met and blessed him. He was filled with gratitude and affection for his elder brother for the brotherly emotions he had shown him, and this aggravated the sense of remorse and sorrow in the heart of Vibhishan for he felt great pity and sympathy for Kumbhakarn because the latter had become a victim of circumstances. Vibhishan realized that Kumbhakarn did not wish to fight this war as he felt it was uncalled for, that he held a view that was similar to that of Vibhishan's regarding Lord Ram, and that he decided to enter the battle-field because he thought it was the proper thing to do to remain loyal and faithful to his family and the demon race, for it was his moral duty and obligation to obey the commands of his king like a true soldier who does not question the orders given to him by his chief commander, whether such orders are right or wrong is not for him to judge.

Vibhishan pondered over the matter and realized that there was also another reason that had made Kumbhakarn decide to remain loyal to Ravana, instead of abandoning him like Vibhishan had done. Kumbhakarn had little choice before him; he did not face the same situation as Vibhishan had faced which had compelled the latter to leave Lanka and take refuge with Lord Ram. There was a difference between his own case and that of his brother Kumbhakarn's case, and it was this: While Ravana had publicly humiliated Vibhishan by kicking him, he had not shown any disrespect to Kumbhakarn. So therefore, while Vibhishan's leaving Ravana was justified to a great extent, Kumbhakarn would not be able to justify a similar action if he had decided to leave Lanka and seek refuge with Lord Ram.

Vibhishan was filled with pity for Kumbhakarn, that he will have to die for an unjust cause, but at the same time he had great sympathy for him because he had no choice left before him. Vibhishan was overcome with a lot of remorse and grief, and the intensity of his sorrow was increased because of the love and affection that Kumbhakarn had shown him.

Vibhishan was also worried because he would be forced to play a part in the death of his brother Kumbhakarn, especially when the latter had shown so much affection for him. It was a situation which confounded Vibhishan, and filled him with excess of remorse and grief.]

कुम्भकर्णोऽपि हस्ताभ्यां पादाभ्यां पेषयन् हरीन् ।
चचार वानरीं सेनां कालयन् गन्धहस्तिवत् ॥ १७॥

दृष्ट्वा तं राघवः क्रुद्धो वायव्यं शस्त्रमादरात् ।
 विक्षेप कुम्भकर्णाय तेन चित्छेद रक्षसः ॥ १८॥
 समुद्रं दक्षहस्तं तेन घोरं ननाद सः । स हस्तः पतितो भूमावनेकानर्दयन् कपीन् ॥ १९॥ kumbhakarn'o'pi hastābhyāṃ pādābhyāṃ peṣayan harīn । cacāra vānarīm senām kālayan gandhahastivat ॥ 17॥ dr̥ṣṭvā taṃ rāghavaḥ kruddho vāyavyaṃ śastramādarāt । cikṣepa kumbhakarnāya tena ciccheda rakṣasaḥ ॥ 18॥ samudgaram dakṣahastaṃ tena ghoram nanāda saḥ । sa hastaḥ patito bhūmāvanekānardayan kapīn ॥ 19॥

17-19. Kumbhakarn roamed wildly and unhindered around the monkey army, rampaging, romping and stamping his way through it, freely battering, thrashing and crushing the monkey and bear warriors with his hands and feet, like he were a personified form of a wild and crazy elephant who represents death itself (17).

Seeing him run amok in the middle of his army, Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) became very annoyed and excessively angry. The Lord took cognizance of the matter and shot a special weapon called 'Vayavyastra'¹. With the help of that weapon, the Lord severed the right arm of the demon (18); this arm had held the dumb-bell (by which Kumbhakarn was hitting the monkeys and bears viciously). At this, the demon began shrieking violently. His arm (which was torn away due to the strike of this unique weapon) fell on the ground, crushing many monkeys and bears in its wake (19).

[Note—¹The “Vayavyastra” (vāyavyaṃ śāstra) is a powerful weapon that is as forceful and dynamic as the wind in its fiercest form. The wind element is one of the five elements in creation, and its wild aspect is revealed in the form of a strong gale, a fierce tornado, a howling hurricane or a churning cyclone and the like that can cause untold havoc on land and sea by uprooting huge trees, tearing off roofs of houses, toppling all manners of structures, capsizing ships, causing gigantic tidal waves and making the ocean heave and roar as if it is the doomsday.

This weapon is used by invoking the powers of the wind-god, and thus it is powered and propelled by the wind element. When it strikes, there is a huge explosion that creates a vacuum, and everything around is either blown away and torn apart, or violently sucked in and squeezed to pulp. Its effect is a combination of an explosion and an implosion. So when it hit Kumbhakarn, his hand which held his weapon, the dumb-bell, was torn away from his body, and it then fell with a heavy thud over the army of monkeys and bears, crushing a good many of them under its huge size and weight.]

पर्यन्तमाश्रिताः सर्वे वानरा भयवेपिताः ।
 रामराक्षसयोर्युद्धं पश्यन्तः पर्यवस्थिताः ॥ २०॥
 कुम्भकर्णश्छिन्नहस्तः शालमुद्यम्य वेगतः । समरे राघवं हन्तुं दुद्राव तमथोऽच्छिनत् ॥ २१॥ paryantamāśritāḥ sarve vānarā bhayavepitāḥ । rāmarākṣasayoryuddhaṁ paśyantaḥ paryavasthitāḥ ॥ 20॥ kumbhakarnaśchinnahastaḥ śālamudyamya vegataḥ । samare rāghavaṁ hantuṁ dudrāva tamatho'cchinat ॥ 21॥

20-21. [The following verses describe the fierce duel between Lord Sri Ram and Kumbhakarn—] Then all the monkeys and bears, who were scattered here and there in the battle field, stood aside, astounded and terrified, as they watched the duel between Lord Sri Ram and the demon (Kumbhakarn) (20).

When his right hand was severed, Kumbhakarn took hold of a big Sal tree (in his left hand) and rushed towards Raghav (Sri Ram) to hit him hard with it (21).

शालेन सहितं वामहस्तमैन्द्रेण राघवः ।
 छिन्नबाहुमथायान्तं नर्दन्तं वीक्ष्य राघवः ॥ २२॥ द्वावर्धचन्द्रौ निशितावादायास्य पदद्वयम् । चिच्छेद पतितौ पादौ लङ्काद्वारि महास्वनौ ॥ २३॥ śālena sahitaṁ vāmahastamaindreṇa rāghavaḥ । chinnabāhumathāyāntaṁ nardantaṁ vīkṣya rāghavaḥ ॥ 22॥ dvāvardhacandrau niśitāvādāyāsyā padadvayam । ciccheda patitau pādau laṅkādvāri mahāsvanau ॥ 23॥

22-23. But Raghav (Sri Ram) cut-off his left arm that held the Sal Tree using a weapon called 'Indra's weapon'. When Lord Raghav (Sri Ram) observed that inspite of having both his arms severed Kumbhakarn there was no respite from his violence as he became more aggressive, roaring and shrieking violently as he lunged forward for another bout of vicious attack (22), Lord Ram mounted two arrows that had crescent-shaped tips (shaped like a sickle) and shot them. These two arrows sliced off Kumbhakarn's two legs, one each, and flung them off; the severed legs finally landed at the gate of Lanka with a tremendous thud (23).

निकृत्तपाणिपादोऽपि कुम्भकर्णोऽतिभीषणः ।
 वडवामुखवद्वक्त्रं व्यादाय रघुनन्दनम् ॥ २४॥
 अभिदुद्राव निनदन् गडुश्चन्द्रमसं यथा । अपूर्यच्छित्तान्गैश्च सायकैस्तद्रघूत्तमः ॥ २५॥ nikṛttapāṇipādo'pi kumbhakarṇo'tibhīṣaṇaḥ । vaḍavāmukhavadvaktraṁ vyādāya raghunandanam ॥ 24॥ abhidudrāva ninadan rāhuścandramasaṁ yathā । apūrayacchitāgraiśca sāyakaistadraghūttamaḥ ॥ 25॥

24-25. In spite of having all his limbs (hands and legs) cut-off, the most ferocious and fierce Kumbhakarn rushed towards Raghunandan (Sri Ram) with a mouth wide open like a wild mare, and shrieking and yelling wildly (24).

He appeared like Rahu rushing towards the Moon-God to gobble him up¹. But the most exalted of the Raghus (Sri Ram) filled his gaping mouth (i.e. stuffed it) with a volley of very sharp arrows (25).

[Note—¹According to ancient mythological tradition, ‘Rahu’ was a demon whose head was severed by Lord Vishnu because he was trying to cheat others by disguising himself as one of the gods and sitting amongst them at the time when Amrit, the nectar or ambrosia of eternity that was derived by the churning of the celestial ocean, was being distributed between the gods and the demons. His true identity, that he was a demon and not a god, was revealed by the sun and the moon gods. This made Rahu an eternal enemy of these two gods. Since a few drops of Amrit had already fallen in his open mouth before it was severed, he could not die. It was a piquant situation; so the creator Brahma blessed him that though his severed head cannot be stitched back on his trunk, yet he will live, and to live he needed some periodic nourishment by way of something to eat. So it was provided that whenever he felt hungry he could devour the sun and the moon gods. This boon resulted in the occurrence of the solar and the lunar eclipses when it is believed that these two gods are gobbled up by Rahu. But fortunately, Rahu has his head severed from his trunk; so the sun and the moon soon emerge from the hole at the lower end of Rahu’s head after they enter it through his mouth.

The natural phenomenon known as the solar and the lunar eclipse are attributed to this boon given to Rahu. When he starts eating these two gods, the light of the disc of the sun and the moon gets diminished progressively; when they are fully inside his mouth the eclipse is said to be complete; and when they slowly slip out of the severed end of Rahu’s head, the eclipse gradually fades away, and finally comes to an end when Rahu leaves his victims and goes away.

The idea here is that Kumbhakarn dashed forward with an open mouth to devour Lord Ram just like the case of Rahu rushing towards the sun and the moon to gobble them up.]

शरपूरितवक्त्रोऽसौ चुक्रोशातिभयङ्करः ।
 अथ सूर्यपूतीकाशमैन्द्रं शरमनुत्तमम् ॥ २६॥
 वज्राशनिसमं रामश्चिक्षेपासुरमृत्यवे ।
 स तत्पर्वतसङ्काशं स्फुरत्कुण्डलदंष्ट्रकम् ॥ २७॥
 चकर्त रक्षोऽधिपतेः शिरो वृत्रमिवाशनिः । तच्छिरः पतितं लङ्काद्वारि कायो महोदधौ ॥ २८॥ śarapūritavaktro'sau cukrośātibhayaṅkaraḥ । atha sūryapratīkāśamaindraṃ śaramanuttamam ॥ 26॥ vajrāśanisamaṃ rāmaścikṣepāsuramṛtyave । sa tatparvatasāṅkāśaṃ sphuratkuṇḍaladaṃṣṭrakam ॥ 27॥ cakarta rakṣo'dhipateḥ śiro vṛtramivāśaniḥ । tacchiraḥ patitaṃ laṅkādvāri kāyo mahodadhau ॥ 28॥

26-28. In spite of having his mouth stuffed with arrows, the most ferocious and fierce demon Kumbhakarn continued to yell and shriek wildly. Then Sri Ram mounted the Indra's arrow, which was considered the best amongst them all, and which was as dazzling and splendid as the sun (26).

That arrow was sturdy, infallible, invincible, hard and strong as the Bajra (the weapon of Indra). Sri Ram shot it at the demon to finally kill him. That arrow went through his head—which was like a huge mountain, and had large ear-rings as well as a glittering row of teeth—to sever it from his trunk in the same way as the Bajra of Indra had cut-off the head of the demon Vrittasur in some ancient time. The head fell at the gates of Lanka, while the torso fell in the ocean (28).

शिरोऽस्य रोधयद्द्वारं कायो नक्राद्यचूर्णयत् ।

तो देवाः सन्नयस्यो गन्धर्वाः पन्नगाः खगाः ॥ २९॥

सिद्धा यक्षा गुह्यकाश्च अप्सरोभिश्च राघवम् ।

ईडिरे कुसुमासारैर्वर्षन्तश्चाभिनन्दिताः ॥ ३०॥

śiro'sya rodhayaddvāraṃ kāyo naktṛādyacūrṇayat ।

tato devāḥ sarṣayo gandharvāḥ pannagāḥ khagāḥ ॥ 29॥

siddhā yakṣā guhyakāśca apsarobhiśca rāghavam ।

īḍire kusumāsāirvarṣantaścābhinanditāḥ ॥ 30॥

29-30. That head blocked the gate of Lanka, while the torso crushed numerous marine creatures that lived in the ocean and blocked the movement of the whirlpools present in it. Seeing that Kumbhakarn has died, there was wide-spread celebrations amongst all the creatures; everyone welcomed it, including the Gods, the sages and hermits, the Gandharvas (celestial musicians), the subterranean creatures such as serpents, the air-borne creatures such as the birds (29), the Siddhas (mystics), the Yakshas (a type of demi-Gods), the cave dwellers (both humans such as hermits, as well as animals such as lions etc.), the Apsaras (celestial damsels or courtesans of Indra's court), and all the rest besides them—everyone became extremely pleased and happy. They showered flowers over Lord Raghav, sang his glories, and said prayers in his honour (30).

[Note—Verse nos. 18-29 describe how Kumbhakarn was killed. It was a one-to-one duel. No army had accompanied the demon, and during the last moments even the monkeys and bears had stood aside to watch the awe inspiring spectacle of the Ram-Kumbhakarn war.]

-----**-----

Chapter 17

The Second Battle with Meghanad and His Death

Section 17.1: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 72—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 78.

When Kumbhakaran died, a thick pall of gloom descended upon the family of Ravana in particular, and the whole of the demon race in general; there was a widespread sense of abject despair and dejection. Ravana and the ladies of his household wept bitterly and inconsolably, lamenting and grieving gravely for Kumbhakaran. At that moment of grief and despondency, Meghanad, the son of Ravana, came to condole with them. He soothed his father Ravana, encouraging him to show courage and resilience in the face of this calamity that has befallen the family as well as the demon race. He told his father Ravana not to despair, for he would show his true mettle and avenge his uncle's death in the battle of the next day.

And true to his word, Meghanad fought ferociously in the battle that followed, spreading terror in the enemy's camp. He felled Laxman, Sugriv and Vibhishan, and other brave warriors such as Hanuman, Angad, Nal and Neel too were severely battered by him. Then he ensnared Lord Ram in a coil of serpents, but the Lord was however freed when Garud, the Lord's celestial mount in the form of the legendary Eagle, was sent by sage Narad and other gods to free him. Garud came and devoured all the serpents that had tightly coiled themselves around Lord Ram's body, thus freeing him.

Meanwhile, Jamvant, the aged chief of the bears, fought valiantly with Meghanad in a fierce hand-to-hand duel during which the latter threw a spear at him, which Jamvant grabbed and threw back at Meghanad, thereby making him swoon and fall down. Then Jamvant caught hold of him and dumped him in Lanka.

When Meghanad recovered his consciousness and saw his father Ravana, he felt utterly ashamed at himself. So he decided to perform a fire sacrifice that would make him invincible and protected from death. When this news arrived in Lord Ram's camp through a spy of Vibhishan, the Lord sent his brother Laxman along with Angad and other brave monkey warriors with a clear instruction to get rid of Meghanad in any way that they thought fit according to the prevailing situation. They went and disturbed Meghanad's fire sacrifice, preventing him from completing it successfully. In the ferocious do-or-die battle that followed, Meghanad was finally slayed by Laxman when he shot a powerful arrow at him, which pierced through his chest and killed him.

Hanuman picked up Meghanad's body and dumped it in front of the gate of Lanka. Meghanad's death was the final nail that sealed Ravana's fate—for now he was sure that with his brother Kumbhakaran and son Meghanad dead, there was nothing left for him to look forward to, but to valiantly die a warrior's death, with dignity and honour and self respect, fighting till the last breath with all the might, courage and valour that he could garner for himself.

The episode of Meghanad's battle and his subsequent death at the hands of Laxman has been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 72—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 78.

Meghanad had entered the fray on the 4th day of the war, does a fire sacrifice during the night as demons usually do, and his death the next day marked the 5th day of the war.

Now, let us commence with our reading of this fascinating battle that lead to Meghanad's death:

मेघनाद तेहि अवसर आयउ । कहि बहु कथा पिता समुझायउ ॥ ६ ॥

देखेहु कालि मोरि मनुसाई । अबहिं बहुत का करौं बड़ाई ॥ ७ ॥

इष्टदेव सैं बल रथ पायउँ । सो बल तात न तोहि देखायउँ ॥ ८ ॥ mēghanāda tēhi avasara āya'u. kahi bahu kathā pitā samujhāya'u. 6.

dēkhēhu kāli mōri manusā'ī. abahim bahuta kā karaum barā'ī. 7.
iṣṭadēva saim bala ratha pāya'uṁ. sō bala tāta na tōhi dēkhāya'uṁ. 8.

At that time (when everyone was mourning and lamenting sorely for Kumbhakaran) Meghanad came in; he comforted his father (Ravana) and consoled him in various ways by citing many stories that are told on such occasions to provide reassurance to those who are grieving for their departed loved ones. (6)

Meghanad encouraged Ravana to show resilience and patience with these reassuring words: 'Tomorrow you shall see my extraordinary valour and heroism about which I do not want to speak in detail now (for at this juncture it would look as if I am bragging). (7)

My dear father (tāta)! The unmatched strength and unparalleled powers, as well as the war chariot that I had been gifted by the deity whom I worship (iṣṭadēva saim bala ratha pāya'uṁ)¹, I had never show them to you till now (because there was no occasion for it). [But be comforted in your heart as the time has arrived for me to unveil them to you now.] (8)

[Note—¹In ancient time when Ravana had launched his campaign to conquer the world, Meghanad had done a severe fire sacrifice with sage Shukracharya, who was the Guru, i.e. the moral preceptor and advisor, of the demon race, as its head priest. Shukracharya made Meghanad perform seven fire sacrifices, viz. Agnishtov, Ashwamedh, Bahusuvānak, Rajsuya, Gomegh, Vaishnav-yagya and Maheshwar-yagya. As a reward of these religious sacrifices, Meghanad was granted certain things that made him invincible and formidable in battle. These were the following: (i) A chariot that had the unique ability to fly in the air, was unbreakable, and it could go unhindered anywhere as was desired by its rider; (ii) Mystical powers that are associated with Maya, which enabled him to create delusions and illusions to confound his enemy, such as making him vanish from sight and creating sudden darkness that would confuse his enemy because he won't be able to see anything; (iii) Powerful weapons such as a quiver that never exhausted its supply of arrows, an invincible bow that could invariably subdue the enemy against whom it was used, and many other mystical weapons that would crush the enemy without fail. {Refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 25, verse nos. 7-10.}

Here Meghanad is referring to these unique and magnificent weapons that he has decided to employ in the next day's battle.]

एहि बिधि जल्पत भयउ बिहाना । चहुँ दुआर लागे कपि नाना ॥ ९ ॥
 इत कपि भालु काल सम बीरा । उत रजनीचर अति रनधीरा ॥ १० ॥
 लरहिं सुभट निज निज जय हेतू । बरनि न जाइ समर खगकेतू ॥ ११ ॥

ēhi bidhi jalpata bhaya'u bihānā. cahuṃ du'āra lāgē kapi nānā. 9.
 ita kapi bhālu kāla sama bīrā. uta rajanīcara ati ranadhīrā. 10.
 larahiṃ subhaṭa nija nija jaya hētū. barani na jā'i samara khagakētū. 11.

The whole night was thus spent in mourning and grieving, as well as reassurances given by Meghanad in a sorrowful voice. At last when the dawn broke on the horizon, a large number of monkeys and bears surrounded all the gates of the fort (of Lanka) to lay seize of the city¹. (9)

On this side were the ferocious monkeys and bears who personified Kaal (death) itself, while on the other side were their opponents, the equally ferocious demons who were war veterans and extremely steadfast in the battle-field. (10)

Each side was fighting valiantly with the object of attaining victory over the other. Oh the prominent one amongst the birds ("khagakētū"; i.e. Garud)²! It was a singularly awe-inspiring and such a blood-chilling war that it defies description; one cannot fully describe its horrors, its intensity, its magnitude in words—because its not feasible and not possible.

[To wit, words have a limited scope, and no matter how good a poet or a narrator is, he would not be able to do proper justice to the actual scene that unfolded in the battle-field no matter how best he tries to capture the sight by employing words to describe it. So therefore, much is left to the imagination of the reader who is at liberty to visualize the fighting on the ground and the horrors of this war according to his own understanding.] (11)

[Note—¹This was the beginning of the 4th day of the war.

²There are three primary narrators of the Story of Ram Charit Manas—one is Lord Shiva who tells it to his consort goddess Uma, also known as Parvati or Girija, the second is the saintly crow Kaagbhusund who narrates this magnificent Story to Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu and the king of birds, and the third is sage Yagyawalkya who narrates this Story to sage Bharadwaj. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 30.}

But for all practical purposes we find during our reading of this wonderful Story that Goswami Tulsidas, the author of this grand epic named 'Ram Charit Manas', has relied primarily on either Lord Shiva or Kaagbhusund as his source. The reason is that these two are the most ancient narrators of this Story. It was first conceptualized in the heart and mind of Lord Shiva who narrated it to Parvati, but that was done at such a sublime and subtle level of existence of consciousness that it was not heard by the ordinary world in which we live. It is because Lord Shiva is a 'God' and Parvati is a Goddess, and both of them do not have a physical body like creatures in this world have. So their dialogue remained in the form of cosmic vibrations that no creature of the world could hear.

But fortunately sage Kaagbhusund heard this Story directly from Lord Shiva, and he in his turn narrated it to Garud, the king of birds, who came to visit him in his hermitage in this mortal world. So therefore, the second narrator was Kaagbhusund; his narration was the first narration in this physical world.

Later on, sage Yagyawalkya received this Story from sage Kaagbhusund. So, Yagyawalkya not only became the third narrator but also the one from whom the Story spread in the human race. In this way, this divine Story descended from heaven in a gradual manner and made available to us in this mortal world.]

दो०. मेघनाद मायामय रथ चढ़ि गयउ अकास ।

गर्जेउ अट्टहास करि भइ कपि कटकहि त्रास ॥ ७२ ॥

dōhā.

mēghanāda māyāmaya ratha caḍhi gaya'u akāsa.
garjē'u aṭṭahāsa kari bha'i kapi kaṭakahi trāsa. 72.

Meghanad mounted his special chariot which had certain magical powers, and rode on it to the sky¹. Once there, he roared so thunderously and in such a fearful manner that it sent a chill down the spine of the monkeys and the bears, causing terror amongst them. (Doha no. 72)

[Note—¹This chariot had some unique qualities that were specific to it, such as its ability to fly like a plane in the sky, to stand at a fixed point in the air, and become invisible when needed. This chariot was very illusive, and to catch it was well-nigh impossible.

Meghanad chose to go up in the air to have a vantage point from which he could survey the whole battle-field. It also gave him an added advantage of quick mobility and safety from direct attack by the monkeys and bears who would find it rather difficult to pursue and engage him in the sky as compared to the ease with which they could have surrounded and thrashed him if he were on the ground.

Meghanad got his name from the fact that he could laugh or speak so loudly, with a high-pitched roar that it sounded like a deafening clap of thunder. So when he roared in anger, the monkeys and bears trembled in fear, and for a moment, were almost deaf.]

चौ०. सक्ति सूल तरवारि कृपाना । अङ्ग सङ्ग कुलिसायुध नाना ॥ १ ॥

डारइ परसु परिघ पाषाणा । लागेउ बृष्टि करै बहु बाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāṭi.

sakti sūla taravāri kṛpānā. astra sastra kulisāyudha nānā. 1.
ḍāra'i parasu parigha pāṣānā. lāgē'u br̥ṣṭi karai bahu bānā. 2.

Meghanad used a formidable array of weapons to attack the army of monkeys and bears on the ground below from his high position in the sky. He rained down upon them a volley of sharp and powerful lancets, spears, tridents, swords, sickles, scimitars and the like—all of which were extremely effective like the weapon known as Vajra¹ (kulisāyudha). (1)

Besides the above, he also used battle-axes, battle-rams, huge boulders, and a hail of ferocious arrows against his enemy². (2)

[Note—¹The 'Vajra' is the invincible weapon of Indra, the king of gods. Here it means that all the weapons discharged by Meghanad were as strong, powerful and infallible as the Vajra of Indra.

²One can imagine the ferocity of the attack by Meghanad. The weapons he used from high up in the sky must have cut through the rank and file of the monkeys and bears like a farmer using his cutting tools to reap his harvest.]

दस दिसि रहे बान नभ छाई । मानहुँ मघा मेघ झरि लाई ॥ ३ ॥

धरु धरु मारु सुनिअ धुनि काना । जो मारइ तेहि कोउ न जाना ॥ ४ ॥ dasa disi rahē bāna nabha chāṭi. mānahuṁ maghā mēgha jhari lāṭi. 3.

dharu dharu māru suni'a dhuni kānā. jō mārā'i tēhi kō'u na jānā. 4.

All the ten directions¹ were covered by arrows as if a dark cloud of doomsday is pouring its deadly rain of death and destruction upon the ground below. (3)

Everywhere and in all directions, left, right and center, there were chilling yells and angry shouts calling out 'kill, kill', and in the ensuing bedlam and the pandemonium that followed no one knew who was being killed, or who the killer was². (4)

[Note—¹The ten directions are the following: north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, zenith and nadir.

The idea is that the whole sky and land, as far as the eyes could see, were covered by a thick blanket of arrows.

²There was complete chaos and mayhem on the battle ground. First there was the rain of deadly weapons, then there was the fearful darkness in every direction, and added to this was the horror of indiscriminate death accompanied by yells and moaning of those dying; compounding the fearful scene and making the matters worse were the mad clashes of warriors who thrashed anyone they encountered, not discriminating between friend and foe, because the combatants were literally blinded with passion and extremely provoked by anger that is natural during a close combat between two powerful armies vying with each other for victory. The warriors madly shouted in chorus ‘kill-kill; thrash-pound’; there was pandemonium and bedlam in the battle-field, and in the utter confusion that arose from this free-for-all, no one could know who was killing whom.]

गहि गिरि तरु अकास कपि धावहिं । देखहिं तेहि न दुखित फिरि आवहिं ॥ ५ ॥
 अवघट घाट बाट गिरि कंदर । माया बल कीन्हेसि सर पंजर ॥ ६ ॥
 जाहिं कहाँ व्याकुल भए बंदर । सुरपति बंदि परे जनु मंदर ॥ ७ ॥ gahi giri taru akāsa kapi dhāvahiṃ. dēkhahiṃ tēhi na dukhita phiri āvahiṃ. 5.

 avaghaṭa ghāṭa bāṭa giri kandara. māyā bala kīnhēsi sara pañjara. 6.
 jāhiṃ kahāṃ byākula bha'e bandara. surapati bandi parē janu mandara. 7.

The monkeys and bears grabbed huge boulders and rocks and jumped into the sky to intercept Meghanad, but by that time he vanished from sight¹. When the warriors couldn't find him, they felt frustrated, and returned back in disgust. (5)

In the meanwhile, Meghanad employed his skills to create illusions to fabricate false paths, valleys and mountain caves that were all filled with sharp arrows (in an attempt to trap and kill the monkeys and bears who tried to flee and hide somewhere). (6)

Finding all escape routes thus blocked, the monkey and bear warriors became panicky. It was like the case of Mt. Mandrachal being imprisoned by the magical charm of Indra, the king of gods². (7)

[Note—¹It has already been said that Meghanad's chariot had the unique ability to vanish from sight—apropos Doha no. 72 herein above. So, when the monkey and bear warriors reached the spot where they saw Maghanad a few moments ago, he sneaked away undetected, and couldn't be intercepted. Repeated attempts to catch up with him failed, and so the monkeys and bears became frustrated and disgusted.

²Mt. Mandrachal had the ability to fly freely because it is believed that it had wings. But when Indra spun his magical charm around it, the great mountain forgot how to fly. This instance is cited here to mean that though these monkey and bear warriors were very brave and powerful fighters, but they felt themselves helpless against the might of Meghanad's magical powers to create delusions; they felt trapped and confused by the appearance of so many mysterious passages, valleys and caves even though they actually didn't exist. These warriors forgot that this sight was a mere illusion created by Meghanad, and therefore there was nothing to fear about.]

मारुतसुत अंगद नल नीला । कीन्हेसि बिकल सकल बलसीला ॥ ८ ॥
 पुनि लछिमन सुग्रीव बिभीषन । सरन्हि मारि कीन्हेसि जर्जर तन ॥ ९ ॥ mārutasuta aṅgada nala nīlā. kīnhēsi bikala sakala balasīlā. 8.

puni lachimana sugrīva bibhīṣana. saranhi māri kīnhēsi jarjara tana. 9.

All the strong and valiant warriors, such as Hanuman, Angad, Nala and Neela etc., were left stunned and agitated. (8)

After that, he (Meghanad) directed his attention on Laxman, Sugriv and Vibhishan; he assailed them all by shooting volleys of arrows that pierced through their bodies and severely wounded them. (9)

पुनि रघुपति सैं जूझै लागा । सर छाँड़इ होइ लागहिं नागा ॥ १० ॥
ब्याल पास बस भए खरारी । स्वबस अनंत एक अबिकारी ॥ ११ ॥
नट इव कपट चरित कर नाना । सदा स्वतंत्र एक भगवाना ॥ १२ ॥ रन सोभा लागि प्रभुहिं बँधायो । नागपास देवन्ह भय पायो ॥ १३ ॥ puni raghupati saim̐ jūjhai lāgā. sara chām̐ra'i hō'i lāgahim̐ nāgā. 10.

byāla pāsa basa bha'e kharārī. svabasa ananta ēka abikārī. 11.
naṭa iva kapaṭa carita kara nānā. sadā svatantra ēka bhagavānā. 12.
rana sōbhā lagi prabhuhiṁ baṁdhāyō. nāgapāsa dēvanha bhaya pāyō. 13.

Finally, he (Meghanad) engaged Lord Ram in a fierce duel; he shot powerful arrows that transformed themselves into serpents when they hit the Lord. (10)

These serpents managed to ensnare Lord Ram who is famed as the slayer of demon Khar; it is such an irony that the Lord who is eternally independent and free, who is without a beginning or an end as he is eternal and infinite, who is one and non-dual, and who has no faults in him that are normally associated with this mortal world, should get trapped by a snare of serpents that tightly coiled themselves around him.

[Why did this happen; why did Lord Ram, who is eternally free from all sorts of delusions, allow himself to be caught in this one? This question is answered in the next verse.] (11)

Verily, though Lord Ram is the Supreme Being who is always free and independent, yet he decided to get tied in a snare of serpents just to play out his role as a human being to perfection like an expert actor ought to¹. (12)

The fact of the matter is that the almighty and omnipotent Lord Ram wished to uphold the dignity of a duel and adhere to the norms associated with a battle where there are ups and downs during a combat, and a warrior, no matter how strong and powerful he might be, cannot always have the upper hand over his adversary.

The Lord did this to imply that since he had assumed the form of a human being, he is subject to all the limitations that apply to this race. His form as an ensnared warrior who remained calm and poised inspite of being tied with a rope of serpents imparted a unique charm and beauty to the battle-field; it was a singularly captivating sight that enthralled the mind of the beholder amidst the general scene of the battle-field that was marked by bloodshed, bedlam and mayhem.

The sight of Lord Ram trapped in a snare of serpents sent waves of fear rolling amongst the gods (who were watching the proceedings from their stations in the sky). [The gods became alarmed and terrified when they saw Lord Ram ensnared in a tight grip of serpents that coiled themselves around him. It was a nightmare for the gods.] (13)

[Note—¹To wit, Lord Ram willingly allowed himself to be caught in the snare of magical serpents thrown by Meghanad because the Lord is an expert actor, and so he wished to play his role of a human being to perfection. Being the almighty and omnipotent Lord God of the world, had the Lord wanted he could have remained free and very easily neutralize this formidable weapon of Meghanad, but that would not be like an ordinary man, for it would obviously have been a display of superhuman powers, an act which the Lord wished to avoid.]

दो०. गिरिजा जासु नाम जपि मुनि काटहिं भव पास । सो कि बंध तर आवइ व्यापक बिस्व निवास ॥ ७३ ॥

dōhā.

girijā jāsu nāma japi muni kāṭahim bhava pāsa.
sō ki bandha tara āva'i byāpaka bisva nivāsa. 73.

[Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this glorious story, says to his consort Parvati, whose other name was Girija as she was the daughter of the King of Mountains—]

‘Oh Girija! The Lord whose name is so divine and holy that when great sages and hermits repeat it during their meditative sessions they are able to cut through the formidable snare that ties the soul of a creature to this gross mortal world of transmigration, and thereby find deliverance for themselves, say how can that supreme Lord be tied in a snare of false snakes?’¹ (Doha no. 73)

[Note—¹To wit, it is not true that Meghanad was actually able to tie Lord Ram in a snare of snakes, because it was simply impossible to do so for reasons cited in this Doha. But the illusion that Meghanad created was so perfect that it gave the impression that the Lord was indeed trapped in his snare, and this illusion was further sustained because the Lord himself wished to maintain this impression.

Why so? The answer is given in Chaupai line nos. 12-13 that precede Doha no. 73 herein above. The Lord had to act his role of a human being to perfection for he wished to honour the words of the creator Brahma that Ravana and his compatriots would be killed only by a human being*, and so it was necessary that the Lord must actually behave like an ordinary man in order to keep Brahma’s words. Had Lord Ram used his supernatural powers to free himself from this magical snare, the very purpose of his assuming the form of a human being would be defeated, for then his true identity as the Supreme Being would be known to one and all, and if that happened and he still went ahead to eliminate the demons led by their king Ravana then it would be in gross violation of Brahma’s solemn words. That would not be good under any circumstance as it would undermine the Creator’s dignity and authority. This is why Lord Ram willingly accepted to be tied up by a snare of snakes created by Meghanad.

*Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 177.]

चौ०. चरित राम के सगुन भवानी । तर्कि न जाहिं बुद्धि बल बानी ॥ १ ॥

अस बिचारि जे तग्य बिरागी । रामहि भजहिं तर्क सब त्यागी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

carita rāma kē saguna bhavānī. tarki na jāhiṁ bud'dhi bala bānī. 1.
asa bicāri jē tagya birāgī. rāmahi bhajahiṁ tarka saba tyāgī. 2.

[Lord Shiva told his consort called Bhavani—] ‘Oh Bhavani! What the Supreme Being did in his human manifestation as Lord Ram is so mysterious and beyond comprehension of mortal creatures that it cannot be subjected to worldly logic and interpretation of the mind. Hence, it cannot be described by the power of speech or understood by application of the power of reasoning, and therefore there should not be any debates and arguments regarding the Lord’s deeds and actions (for all of them are exceedingly mysterious and beyond comprehension of the mind-intellect complex)¹. (1)

Taking this into consideration, those who are enlightened about this Truth concerning Lord Ram, are wise and prudent enough to have devotion for the Lord, to worship and adore the Lord in a dispassionate manner, without getting unnecessarily perturbed and perplexed at what the Lord does in his human form, because no matter how hard they try they would only be wasting their time and energy in the futile exercise of attempting to unravel these secrets by applying logic and reasoning to understand them, for they are bound to fail in this exercise. (2)

[Note—¹ Similar idea is expressed elsewhere also in Ram Charit Manas—for instance, refer to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 121; Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 341.

The idea is that a wise and enlightened person ought not to allow himself to be dragged into the whirlpool of doubts and confusions by applying unnecessary logic and reasoning to understand every thing about Lord Ram, as it would only vex his spirit and create misunderstanding regarding the Supreme Being because the latter is beyond the reach of the mind and the intellect. Such an exercise, if attempted, would only lead to more and more perplexities and uneasiness of the soul, instead of granting any worthwhile result in the form of peace and stability of the mind; so it’s better to avoid it altogether.]

ब्याकुल कटकु कीन्ह घननादा । पुनि भा प्रगट कहइ दुर्बादा ॥ ३ ॥

जामवंत कह खल रहु ठाढ़ा । सुनि करि ताहि क्रोध अति बाढ़ा ॥ ४ ॥

बूढ़ जानि सठ छाँड़ेउँ तोही । लागेसि अधम पचारै मोही ॥ ५ ॥

अस कहि तरल त्रिसूल चलायो । जामवंत कर गहि सोइ धायो ॥ ६ ॥

byākula kaṭaku kīnha ghananādā. puni bhā pragaṭa kaha'i durbādā. 3.
 jāmvanta kaha khala rahu ṭhāṛhā. suni kari tāhi krōdha ati bāṛhā. 4.
 būṛha jāni saṭha chāmṛē'uṁ tōhī. lāgēsi adhama pacārai mōhī. 5.
 asa kahi tarala trisūla calāyō. jāmvanta kara gahi sō'i dhāyō. 6.

Meghanad (“ghananādā”; one who roared like the sound of like thunder) made the whole army of monkeys and bears extremely agitated and perplexed by his skillful maneuverings and employment of magical tricks. After remaining illusive for some time, he reappeared once again, and began using offensive and threatening language. (3)

Jamvant, the chief of the bears, challenged him, saying, ‘Oh you rascal; keep standing (to face me).’

Meghanad became excessively furious when he heard it. (4)

He angrily shot back at Jamvant, saying caustically, ‘I had spared you hitherto fore considering your old age. But how ungrateful you lowly fellow are that, instead of feeling obliged to me, you choose to challenge and remonstrate me. Woes betide you, oh you wretch!’ (5)

Saying these wrathful words, Meghanad shot a shimmering hot trident at Jamvant; the latter grabbed it immediately and lunged aggressively towards his attacker to hit him back with the same trident. (6)

मारिसि मेघनाद कै छाती । परा भूमि घुर्मित सुरघाती ॥ ७ ॥

पुनि रिसान गहि चरन फिरायो । महि पछारि निज बल देखरायो ॥ ८ ॥ mārisi mēghanāda kai chātī. parā bhūmi ghurmita suraghātī. 7.

 puni risāna gahi carana phirāyō. mahi pachāri nija bala dēkharāyō. 8.

He (Jamvant) hit Meghanad in his chest with this trident so violently that the tormentor of gods reeled under its impact, swooned, and then fell down on the ground. (7)

Then Jamvant showed his valour by catching hold of Meghanad by his leg in a fury, swung him round and round, and then dashed him against the ground. (8)

[Note—¹Whatever sense that was left in Meghanad after being attacked by the trident was now surely gone, and he remained prostrated on the ground, completely lifeless for some moments. This was the first time in his life that Meghanad had had to face this situation, and he wasn’t prepared for it. So it came to him as a shock that totally unnerved him. First was the violent strike by the powerful trident, and then in quick succession came this vicious dashing on the ground; this left little time for him to recover his breath and wits, and for some moment he lay dazed and motionless on the ground like a corpse.

Jamvant was responding to Meghanad’s comment that he had desisted from attacking the former out of deference to his old age when a person becomes physically weak—apropos verse no. 5 herein above. Jamvant wished to tell Meghanad that he owes nothing to him, and a warrior does not want to live on charity or mercy of his enemy. He might be old in body but that does not mean that he lacks in strength, power, courage and valour.]

बर प्रसाद सो मरइ न मारा । तब गहि पद लंका पर डारा ॥ ९ ॥ इहाँ देवरिषि गरुड़ पठायो । राम समीप सपदि सो आयो ॥ १० ॥

bara prasāda sō mara'i na mārā. taba gahi pada laṅkā para ḍārā. 9.
ihāṁ dēvariṣi garuṛa paṭhāyō. rāma samīpa sapadi sō āyō. 10.

Due to the boons that Meghanad had, he did not die¹. So Jamvant seized him by his legs and tossed him away in such a way that he landed in Lanka. (9)

Meanwhile, the celestial sage Narad sent Garud (the mount of Lord Vishnu who is renowned for his ability to devour serpents) who came immediately to Lord Ram. (10)

[Note—Meghanad was granted a boon by Lord Brahma, the creator, that he would die only at the hands of someone who hasn't slept and hasn't had a proper meal for fourteen years. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 64-65; and Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 11, verse no. 175.}

The question arises: 'from whom and when did Laxman learn the skill that enabled him to remain alive without eating and sleeping for such a long time?' Well, the answer is found in Ram Charit Manas itself where it is expressly mentioned that sage Vishwamitra had imparted this singularly unique Vidya (esoteric knowledge) to the two brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, when he was taking them to his hermitage in order to eliminate the demons who had been defiling his fire sacrifice. This Vidya imparted to the two brothers the skill to survive without eating, drinking and sleeping. This mystical ability and its esoteric knowledge would stand them in good stead when they would eventually go to the forest where proper food, drink and sleep would be virtually impossible.

The grateful sage had also given them some very rare weapons that were exclusive and could only be used by a person who is entitled to use them, for they were sort-of locked by a password in the form of some Mantra, which could have been some sort of a special combination of words, letters or phrases that would unlock the fierce potentials of the concerned weapon upon invocation. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 209 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.}

According to Valmiki's Ramayan, Brahma gave him a boon that he could only be killed if his enemy managed to reach the site where he would be doing some fire sacrifice to gain victory over the enemy, disrupt his sacrifice and attack him simultaneously. {Refer: Valmiki's Ramayana, Lanka Kand, Canto 85, verse nos. 14-15.}

We shall soon read in the verses that follow herein below that in order to honour Brahma's words, Lord Ram would send Laxman along with others to disrupt the fire sacrifice that Meghanad was performing to gain victory in the war, and in the ensuing scuffle he was killed by Laxman. It ought to be noted here that Laxman hadn't slept or eaten properly for the entire fourteen years he stayed with Lord Ram in the forest—and so he fitted in perfectly to be the one who was eligible to slay Meghanad as ordained by Brahma.]

दो०. खगपति सब धरि खाए माया नाग बरूथ ।

माया बिगत भए सब हरषे बानर जूथ ॥ ७४ (क) ॥

dōhā.

khagapati saba dhari khā'ē māyā nāga barūtha.

māyā bigata bha'ē saba haraṣē bānara jūtha. 74 (a).

The king of birds, i.e. Garud, caught hold of the serpents that were created by Maya (delusions) spread by Meghanad, as a result of which Lord Ram appeared to be tied in their snare because they had wrapped themselves tightly around his body. Garud gobbled up all these serpents, thereby freeing the Lord from their clutches¹.

As soon as this delusion was dispelled and Lord Ram became free once again, there was cheer and exhilaration all around as the monkeys and bears rejoiced at this positive turn of events. (Doha no. 74-a) [Note—¹Garud was utterly confounded that Lord Ram, who was deemed to be an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Lord of the world, could be so easily tied by ordinary serpents. Garud wondered how could this be possible, and since it had actually happened then surely Lord Ram was not what he is made out to be: Is he an ordinary human prince, or is it true that he is actually a manifestation of Lord Vishnu himself as the gods and the scriptures affirmed him to be? Garud could not reconcile the two opposing pictures, and he was overcome with utter confusion and doubt about Lord Ram's true nature and identity. This confusion had been worrying his mind and heart so much that he sought clarification to settle the matter once and for all; so he later on approached sage Narad who sent him to the creator Brahma, who in turn referred him to Lord Shiva because the latter is considered not only as the wisest and the most enlightened amongst all the gods but also the one who is specially qualified to answer Garud's query regarding Lord Ram's true nature and identity as Lord Shiva worshipped Lord Ram and adored him as his chosen deity, using Lord Ram's holy name as his preferred Mantra for doing mediation and other spiritual pursuits.

Lord Shiva decided that it would be better to send Garud to the saintly crow named Kaagbhusund for the divine discourse that would remove Garud's confusion, because both of them were birds and so it would be easy for them to converse with each other in their own language. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 64.}

What followed is the divine discourse given by the crow-saint Kaagbhusund for the benefit of Garud, a discourse that came to be known as the famed "Kaagbhusund Ramayan". It is narrated in full in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 64—to Doha no. 125. Fortunately, this Ramayan has been dealt with thoroughly in English by the humble author of this current Book the reader is reading now, and is also available on the same websites where this current Book is available.]

गहि गिरि पादप उपल नख धाए कीस रिसाइ ।

चले तमीचर बिकलतर गढ़ पर चढ़े पराड़ ॥ ७४ (ख) ॥

gahi giri pādapa upala nakha dhā'ē kīsa risā'i.
calē tamīcara bikalatara gaṛha para caṛhē parā'i. 74 (b).

Reinvigorated with energy and renewed enthusiasm, the furious monkey and bear warriors launched a fresh wave of vicious attack by arming themselves with mountainous rocks and boulders, huge trees and anything else they could lay their hands upon.

The ferocity of the retaliatory attack by Lord Ram's army was so intense that the demon warriors fled in panic, rushing back into the fort of Lanka (as fast as they could, to escape being slaughtered). (Doha no. 74-b)

चौ०. मेघनाद कै मुख्छा जागी । पितहि बिलोकि लाज अति लागी ॥ १ ॥

तुरत गयउ गिरिबर कंदरा । करौं अजय मुख अस मन धरा ॥ २ ॥

caupā'i.

mēghanāda kai murachā jāgī. pitahi bilōki lāja ati lāgī. 1.

turata gaya'u giribara kandarā. karauṁ ajaya makha asa mana dharā. 2.

Meanwhile, when Meghanad recovered from his fainting spell, and when he saw his father Ravana he felt very ashamed at himself¹. (1)

He immediately went into a mountain cave, telling himself determinedly that he would perform a fire sacrifice that would make him virtually invincible in the war. (2)

[Note—¹Meghanad had excessively boasted earlier about his stellar martial skills, assuring his father Ravana that he would avenge the killing of his uncle Kumbhakaran—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 72. Now, what face did he have to show his father? Instead of coming home proudly as a victor, he had been dumped unconscious, like a sac, at his father's foot, lying prostrate on the ground like a battered and defeated warrior. So where was his boast and bluster now?]

इहाँ बिभीषन मंत्र बिचारा । सुनहु नाथ बल अतुल उदारा ॥ ३ ॥

मेघनाद मुख करइ अपावन । खल मायावी देव सतावन ॥ ४ ॥

जौं प्रभु सिद्ध होइ सो पाइहि । नाथ बेगि पुनि जीति न जाइहि ॥ ५ ॥ ihāṁ bibhīṣana mantra bicārā. sunahu nātha bala atula udārā. 3.

mēghanāda makha kara'i apāvana. khala māyāvē dēva satāvana. 4.

jauṁ prabhu sid'dha hō'i sō pā'ihī. nātha bēgi puni jīti na jā'ihī. 5.

Here, in Lord Ram's camp, Vibhishan thought to himself that it would be wise to tell the Lord about this development¹. So he approached the Lord and said, 'Listen my Lord of immense strength and magnanimity. (3)

The evil Meghanad, who employs deceit and vile methods to accomplish his goal, and who is a known tormentor of gods, is performing a fire sacrifice with malefic intentions. (4)

Oh Lord, should he be able to complete it successfully then it would be impossible to defeat him.' (5)

[Note—¹Surely this shows that there were spies in Lanka who had kept Vibhishan abreast of the developments inside the fort. These demons were the ones who were disillusioned with Ravana and had a secret desire to overthrow him. They had sided with Vibhishan in the hope that when the tide of war turns against Ravana and he is trounce, it is certain that Vibhishan would be the next king of Lanka, and if they joined him now, albeit quietly, then they would be rewarded in due course. Truly this behaviour is treason and betrayal, but it is what actually happens everywhere during a war.]

सुनि रघुपति अतिसय सुख माना । बोले अंगदादि कपि नाना ॥ ६ ॥
 लछिमन संग जाहु सब भाई । करहु बिधंस जग्य कर जाई ॥ ७ ॥
 तुम्ह लछिमन मारेहु रन ओही । देखि सभय सुर दुख अति मोही ॥ ८ ॥
 मारेहु तेहि बल बुद्धि उपाई । जेहिं छीजै निसिचर सुनु भाई ॥ ९ ॥
 जामवंत सुग्रीव बिभीषन । सेन समेत रहेहु तीनिउ जन ॥ १० ॥

sunī raghupati atisaya sukha mānā. bōlē aṅgadādi kapi nānā. 6.
 lachimana saṅga jāhu saba bhāī. karahu bidhansa jagya kara jāī. 7.
 tumha lachimana mārēhu rana ōhī. dēkhi sabhaya sura dukha ati mōhī. 8.
 mārēhu tēhi bala bud'dhi upāī. jēhim chījai nīsicara sunu bhāī. 9.
 jāmavanta sugrīva bibhīṣana. sēna samēta rahēhu tīni'u jana. 10.

When Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) heard this, he felt very glad¹. He summoned Angad and other monkeys [6] and instructed them, 'Oh brothers (bhāī)²! All of you go along with Laxman³ and destroy his (Meghanad's) fire sacrifice [7]. (6-7)

You Laxman, listen to me. You must slay this demon in the battle. I feel hurt when I observe that the gods are terrified of him. (8)

So, employ whatever tactic you deem fit according to the situation on the ground, and use your martial skills, strength and wisdom to somehow get rid of him so that the demons are demoralized and emotionally defeated⁴. (9)

Jamvant, Sugriv and Vibhishan—you three stay back with the rest of the army.⁵ (1)

[Note—¹Why did Lord Ram feel glad when Vibhishan told him about Meghanad performing a fire sacrifice? Well, it was a proof that Vibhishan was loyal to him, and it also proved him correct when he had taken a decision to welcome Vibhishan inspite of stiff opposition and strong reservations expressed against it by all the monkey advisors at the time when Vibhishan had come to seek Lord Ram's refuse after being kicked out by Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 43—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 45.

²By calling the monkey warriors “brothers”, Lord Ram instantly established a close rapport and an emotional connect with them. They all felt that Lord Ram was not someone who was an outsider for whom they were fighting a war that did not concern them directly, but that the Lord was very dear to them all and they were fighting for someone who was like a family member for the monkey race. By this single word “brother”, the wise Lord Ram had endeared the rank and file of the whole army so much that the monkey and bear warriors were ready to die for him.

³Why did Lord Ram select Laxman to lead this campaign? We have read earlier that Meghanad had defeated Laxman during their first encounter when Laxman had been gravely wounded and fell down unconscious—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 54.

Lord Ram wanted to give Laxman a chance to redeem his self-esteem and reputation by slaying Meghanad to avenge his defeat earlier.

⁴With Kumbhakran already dead, Meghanad's death would completely demoralize the demon army as well as their king Ravana, and this would weaken their resolve to continue with the war; and even if they decided not to turn back at this late stage then at least they would be fighting half-heartedly. This would ensure victory for the Lord's army which was now in a great fighting spirit.

⁵So, who went with Laxman to fight with Meghanad? This answer is given in Doha no. 74 herein below. Laxman was accompanied by Angad, Neela, Nala, Mayand, Nala, and the valiant warrior Hanuman. They were close friends and stood together in thick and thin. They led the assault from the front; they were commanders and leading warriors of troops under their supervision. On the other hand, Sugriv, who was the king of the monkeys, Jamvant, who was the chief of the bears, and Vibhishan, who was a royal member of the demon race and a brother of Ravana, and had come to seek refuge with the Lord, were senior advisors of the Lord and top generals of his army.]

जब रघुबीर दीन्हि अनुसासन । कटि निषंग कसि साजि सरासन ॥ ११ ॥

प्रभु प्रताप उर धरि रनधीरा । बोले घन इव गिरा गँभीरा ॥ १२ ॥

जौं तेहि आजु बधे बिनु आवौं । तौ रघुपति सेवक न कहावौं ॥ १३ ॥

जौं सत संकर करहिं सहाई । तदपि हतउँ रघुबीर दोहाई ॥ १४ ॥

jaba raghubīra dīnhi anusāsana. kaṭi niṣaṅga kasi sāji sarāsana. 11.

prabhu pratāpa ura dhari ranadhīrā. bōlē ghana iva girā gaṁbhīrā. 12.

jauṁ tēhi āju badhēm binu āvaurṁ. tau raghupati sēvaka na kahāvaurṁ. 13.

jauṁ sata saṅkara karahim sahāī. tadapi hata'um raghubīra dōhāī. 14.

When Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram, the brave warrior in the family of king Raghu) had issued these instructions, Laxman prepared to leave; he tied his quiver properly to his waist and stringed his bow as he got ready to depart. (11)

Invoking the glory and the majesty of Lord Ram in his heart, Laxman said with a stern and deep voice that resonated like thunder [12], 'If I come back without slaying him (Meghanad), then I shall forfeit the right to be called a sincere servant of Lord Ram [13]. (12-13)

Verily I make a vow that even if thousands of Shivas (who is deemed to be the god of death and war as he is responsible for bringing life to an end in this creation) come out to help him (Meghanad) and obstruct his demise, I say on oath by invoking the name of my revered Lord Ram (Raghubir) that I would still slay him, no matter what happens.¹ (14)

[Note—¹For Laxman no one in this world mattered more than Lord Ram and his honour; if a situation arose where he had to make a choice between Lord Ram and anyone else, his choice will surely and certainly be in the favour of Lord Ram, even if it meant to turn the world upside down. This decision of Laxman to stand by Lord Ram at all costs is clear earlier also when he had sternly and fearlessly taken sage Parashuram to task for attempting to brow-beat and threaten the Lord when he had broken the bow of Lord Shiva during the marriage ceremony of Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 268—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 281.

A similar approach of Laxman is seen when the news arrived that Bharat, their brother, is coming to the forest with a huge army to meet Lord Ram. Though Bharat's intention was absolutely above board as he wished to persuade the Lord to come back to Ayodhya, but the news that a huge army was accompanying Bharat gave the wrong impression that he is coming to fight the Lord and defeat him to ensure that he can ascend the throne of the kingdom and there is no one to claim it later on. At that time too, Laxman had threatened to kill Bharat if he dared raise his head against Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 227—to Doha no. 230.

The use of the term 'thousands of Shivas' is a figure of speech that simply means that even if multitudes of forces of multiple strengths join hands to protect Meghanad, still Laxman would defeat them.]

दो०. रघुपति चरन नाइ सिरु चलेउ तुरंत अनंत । अंगद नील मयंद नल संग सुभट हनुमंत ॥ ७५ ॥
dōhā.

raghupati carana nā'i siru calē'u turanta ananta.
aṅgada nīla mayanda nala saṅga subhaṭa hanumanta. 75.

*Anant (another name of Laxman, signifying that he was eternal in his primary form as Lord Seshnath, the thousand hooded celestial serpent who supports the world on his hoods) bowed his head reverentially before Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram)¹ and set out to accomplish his assigned mission (to eliminate Meghanad).

He was accompanied by Angad, Neela, Mayand, Nala, and Hanuman who had exceptional skills and was a valiant warrior (and they too followed Laxman's example by first bowing their heads before Lord Ram before starting on their mission). (Doha no. 75)

{*This Doha can also be read as follows: “Anant (Laxman), Angad, Neela, Mayand, Nala, along with the skilled and valiant (saṅga subhaṭa) Hanuman, bowed their heads before Lord Ram to pay their respects to him and seek his blessings as they started on their mission (of eliminating Meghanad as instructed by the Lord_.”}

[Note—¹When Laxman had gone to face Meghanad on the first occasion, he hadn’t paid his obeisance to Lord Ram by bowing his head before the latter, as a result of which he had to suffer an ignominious defeat at the hands of Meghanad who successfully shot him down, making him faint and fall unconscious in the battle-field—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 52, and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 54.

Even others who accompanied him at that time neglected this etiquette, and so they too suffered a humiliating defeat during the duel with Meghanad.

So, having learnt a bitter lesson, Laxman and his companions did not forget to pay their respects to Lord Ram by bowing before him to seek his blessings at the time they started on their mission to tackle Meghanad. The result was they succeeded in their mission this time; they easily managed to overcome and slay Meghanad.

If we examine the proceedings of the war carefully we will find that on every occasion when the monkey and bear warriors missed paying their due respects to Lord Ram before an assault on the enemy forces, they were forced to retreat and suffer greatly. Let’s see such instances now.

During the first day of the war, the monkeys and bears went to the battle-field after bowing before Lord Ram, and thus they became victorious—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 39; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 42; Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precedes Doha no. 43; Doha no. 44; and Doha no. 47.

On the second day, however, they did not follow this protocol, and hence had to suffer defeat and battering at the hands of Meghanad—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 50 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.

A similar situation prevailed on the third day of the war too—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 65; Doha no. 64; Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 67.

On the fourth day also the monkey troops committed the same error of not paying their respects to Lord Ram before commencement of the day’s battle, and thus suffered heavily—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-11 that precede Doha no. 72; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 74.

That was enough for them, and so they took special caution to bow their heads before Lord Ram on the fifth day of the war when they went out to deal with Meghanad.]

चौ०. जाइ कपिन्ह सो देखा बैसा । आहुति देत रुधिर अरु भैंसा ॥ १ ॥

कीन्ह कपिन्ह सब जग्य बिधंसा । जब न उठइ तब करहिं प्रसंसा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jā'i kapinha sō dēkhā baisā. āhuti dēta rudhira aru bhainsā. 1.
kīnha kapinha saba jagya bidhansā. jaba na uṭha'i taba karahim prasansā. 2.

When the Kapis (the monkeys; named in Doha no. 75 herein above) went to the site (where Meghanad was performing his fire sacrifice to make him invincible and conquer his enemy), they found him offering blood and sacrificing live buffalos as offerings to the fire¹. (1)

The Kapis destroyed his evil sacrifice², but when they observed that inspite of this grave provocation he remained unmoved and continued with his rituals, they began to praise him³. (2)

[Note—¹Since only the Kapis went to the actual spot of Meghanad's fire sacrifice, it clearly means that Laxman stood outside the cave where it was being performed, in order to guard the cave's mouth to make sure that Meghanad did escape from there, and also that no demon is allowed to go in to his aid from the outside.

How did the Kapis and Laxman go to know about the exact location of this secret fire sacrifice? Well, it was disclosed by Vibhishan himself (Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 75), because he was Ravana's brother and privy to all the secrets of Lanka.

This site was well protected and known only to a selected few. It is written in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 131, verse nos. 181-184 that this place was near a great Banyan tree and was guarded by a plethora of formidable obstacles, such as poisonous snakes, huge and strong elephants, raging fire, fierce wind, and deep trenches filled with water. Laxman destroyed them by employing the following counter measures: he destroyed the serpents by using the Garud weapon; the elephants by using Parvat weapon, i.e. a weapon that turned into a huge mountain and crushed the enemy upon whom it falls; the Water weapon which doused the raging fire; by Storm was neutralized by asking Hanuman, the son of the wind god, to inhale it; and the Vayabyastra, the explosive fire weapon, the heat of which dried up the water filled trenches.

However, Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 13-14 says that a huge army was guarding Meghanad's fire sacrifice, and so Vibhishan told Laxman to destroy it. This means two things—viz. (i) Vibhishan had accompanied them to help them conquer Meghnad, and (ii) that a huge army of demons had been guarding the fire sacrifice, making it necessary for Laxman to engage them in a battle while the Kapis went inside to destroy the fire sacrifice itself and engage Meghanad in a duel.

A similar idea is expressed in Valmiki's Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 86, verse no. 14.

²A question may be asked, and an objection may be raised: 'Destroying an ongoing fire sacrifice is an offense; it is a sinful act. So why did the Lord's messengers do it; why did they commit an offense by destroying a fire sacrifice of Meghanad?'

Well, the answer is this: The Lord's messengers wanted to teach the demons a lesson by giving them the same treatment that they had been meting out to the sages, seers and hermits whose fire sacrifices they had been destroying for a long time; the Lord's messengers wished to administer the demons the same medicine that they had been using to subdue and torment others.

Secondly, the fire sacrifice that Meghanad was doing was an evil form of the ritual as he was using blood and live buffaloes as offerings, which in effect meant that the 'Fire God', who is the patron deity of the sacred fire of the fire sacrifice as well as a representative of the holy fire element, was actually being defiled and insulted, instead of being worshipped and honoured, an act which itself was very sinful and unpardonable, and therefore punishable. Hence, there was nothing wrong in stopping this evil and sinful form of fire sacrifice.

³And why did the Kapis praise Meghanad? They appreciated his determination and resilience; they appreciated that inspite of the ruckus created by them Meghanad continued to remain calm; he continued to meditate and remain focused on his objective, something which is rare and difficult to practice under the situation prevailing at that time.]

तदपि न उठइ धरेन्हि कच जाई । लातन्हि हति हति चले पराई ॥ ३ ॥ लै त्रिसूल धावा कपि भागे । आए जहँ रामानुज आगे ॥ ४ ॥

tadapi na uṭha'i dharēnhi kaca jā'ī. lātanhi hati hati calē parā'ī. 3.
lai trisūla dhāvā kapi bhāgē. ā'ē jahaṁ rāmānuja āgē. 4.

When Meghanad did not rise up from his seat inspite of this grave provocation, the Kapis went to him, caught hold of his hairs and pulled them hard, after which they kicked him viciously and ran away. [Obviously, this was too much an insult for Meghanad to bear, so at last he lost is cool.] (3)

He (Meghanad) grabbed his fierce Trident and rushed wrathfully at the Kapis, who ran as fast as they could to come out of the cave, where Laxman was waiting for them¹. (4)

[Note—¹Had the great Kapis, such as Angad, Hanuman, Nala, Neela and Mayand wanted, they could have trashed Meghanad to death inside the cave itself; they wouldn't have allowed him to grab his Trident. But that would have undermined Laxman's glory and honour; it would be tantamount to subordination Lord Ram's brother and dent his reputation, because history will recall that Laxman could never defeat Meghanad in a direct battle, for during the first encounter he had fell down unconscious when attacked by Meghanad, and on the second occasion he had preferred to stand outside the cave and send the Kapis to slay his adversary inside it, perhaps because he was scared to face Meghanad directly.

So therefore, the Kapis chose not to kill Meghanad themselves, but force him to pursue them and come to the place where Laxman was waiting for them, outside the mouth of the cave. This would give Laxman an opportunity to avenge his earlier defeat at the hands of Meghanad by killing him now.]

आवा परम क्रोध कर मारा । गर्ज घोर रव बारहिं बारा ॥ ५ ॥ कोपि मरुतसुत अंगद धाए । हति त्रिसूल उर धरनि गिराए ॥ ६ ॥ āvā parama krōdha kara mārā. garja ghōra rava bārahiṃ bārā. 5.

kōpi marutasuta aṅgada dhā'ē. hati trisūla ura dharani girā'ē. 6.

He (Meghanad) was overwhelmed with excess of anger, and rushed forward roaring repeatedly and terrifyingly like the sound of thunder with which the doomsday clouds roar in the sky. (5)

When Hanuman (the son of the wind god—"marutasuta") and Angad saw him pursuing them, they turned back and rushed to intercept him. But Meghanad struck the two warriors so ferociously with his formidable Trident that they fell down on the ground, unable to cope with the force of the strike. (6)

प्रभु कहँ छाँड़ैसि सूल प्रचंडा । सर हति कृत अनंत जुग खंडा ॥ ७ ॥
उठि बहोरि मारुति जुबराजा । हतहिं कोपि तेहि घाउ न बाजा ॥ ८ ॥ prabhu kahaṁ chāṁṛēsī sūla pracandā. sara hati kṛta ananta juga khaṇḍā. 7.

uṭhi bahōri māruṭi jubarājā. hatahiṃ kōpi tēhi ghā'u na bājā. 8.

Then he (Meghanad) threw his formidable Trident with great force at the Lord (Laxman), but Lord Anant (i.e. Laxman, because he is a manifestation of 'Anant', the celestial Serpent known as Seshnath who is believed to be eternal) shot his arrow and broke that Trident into two midway¹. (7)

Meanwhile, Maruti (Hanuman) and Jubraj (the prince of the monkeys, i.e. Angad) recovered from their shock, and furiously began their retaliatory attack on Meghanad, but mysteriously he was not injured, at least not gravely and in a visible manner². (8)

[Note—¹Imagine the speed with which Laxman reacted. Everything was over in a span of a few milliseconds as Meghanad's Trident fell down like a broken tree branch.

²Meghanad was made of an exceptionally stern stuff; he was a war-veteran, had a colossal, robust and muscular body, and he was the fiercest of all the demon warriors, inheriting the genes of his great warrior father Ravana.

Remember: Meghanad had held the Trident in his hand as he struck Hanuman and Angad violently in quick succession, after which he threw it with all his might at Laxman. The blow was so hard that it had made Hanuman and Angad fall down on the ground, which in itself was no mean achievement as they were equally valiant and strong as Meghanad. Nevertheless, the two victims of Meghanad's wrath had suffered immensely by the fierceness of the blow of the Trident, which had sapped their energy and made them swoon and lose their balance. So, though they recovered from the blow to some extent and stood up to challenge their enemy, yet this recovery was only partial as they could not fully muster the strength to strike back at their enemy sufficiently hard and with the same ferocity with which they had hit him during the disruption of his fire sacrifice, for it was not practical that they could collect the extent of the energy and dynamism which they initially possessed at the beginning of the duel, at such short notice, after being pummeled by Meghanad.

The result was that their strike had no visible effect on Meghanad; the thick-skinned, strong and powerful demon prince simply felt like an elephant who has been hit by a stick; he simply neglected it.]

फिरे बीर रिपु मरइ न मारा । तब धावा करि घोर चिकारा ॥ ९ ॥
 आवत देखि क्रुद्ध जनु काला । लछिमन छाड़े बिसिख कराला ॥ १० ॥
 देखेसि आवत पबि सम बाना । तुरत भयउ खल अंतरधाना ॥ ११ ॥
 बिबिध बेष धरि करइ लराई । कबहुँक प्रगट कबहुँ दुरि जाई ॥ १२ ॥ phirē bīra ripu mara'i na mārā. taba dhāvā kari ghōra cikārā. 9.

 āvata dēkhi krud'dha janu kālā. lachimana chārē bisikha karālā. 10.
 dēkhēsi āvata pabi sama bānā. turata bhaya'u khala antaradhānā. 11.
 bibidha bēṣa dhari kara'i larā'ī. kabahuṁka pragaṭa kabahuṁ duri jā'ī. 12.

When the two warriors (Hanuman and Angad) realized that their enemy could not be subdued by any means they employed, they (wisely) decided to turn back (and join Laxman). But as soon as Meghanad saw them returning, he thought that they were retreating out of fear; so he lunged forward vehemently, with renewed vigour, and yelling ferociously. (9)

At that time, Meghanad appeared to be like a personified form of an angry 'Kaal', the god of death and destruction, who seemed bent on wreaking vengeance upon his enemy.

When Laxman observed that Meghanad was coming towards him with such an excessive ferocity, he himself became exceedingly angry (as he remembered the earlier episode when he was gravely wounded by Meghanad during their first encounter). Hence, Laxman wasted no time in shooting powerful arrows at Meghanad. (10)

That wicked fellow (i.e. Meghanad) vanished from sight as soon as he saw the fierce arrows, which were glowing like a raging fire, coming to strike him down. (11)

He started playing his usual tricks that caused delusions, by assuming various illusionary forms and striking at the enemy in different ways, appearing near for one moment and then disappearing and reappearing at a distance at the next moment, creating utter confusion and consternation amongst the monkeys and bears, and trying his best to frustrate Laxman. (12)

देखि अजय रिपु डरपे कीसा । परम क्रुद्ध तब भयउ अहीसा ॥ १३ ॥
 लछिमन मन अस मंत्र दृढ़ावा । एहि पापिहि मैं बहुत खेलावा ॥ १४ ॥
 सुमिरि कोसलाधीस प्रतापा । सर संधान कीन्ह करि दापा ॥ १५ ॥
 छाड़ा बान माझ उर लागा । मरती बार कपटु सब त्यागा ॥ १६ ॥

dēkhi ajaya ripu ḍarapē kīsā. parama krud'dha taba bhaya'u ahīsā. 13.
 lachimana mana asa mantra dṛṛhāvā. ēhi pāpihi mair̥m bahuta khēlāvā. 14.
 sumiri kōsalādhīsa pratāpā. sarā sandhāna kīnha kari dāpā. 15.
 chārā bāna mājha ura lāgā. maratī bāra kapaṭu saba tyāgā. 16.

Observing that the enemy (Meghanad) appeared to be invincible, Laxman, a manifestation of the celestial Serpent (ahīsā), became wrathful and ferocious like his primary form¹. (13)

Laxman decided in his mind that he has had enough of this sinful creature, and so it was high time to bring this drama to an end. (14)

[So, what did Laxman do in the final act?] Laxman remembered the glory and majesty of Lord Ram (i.e. he invoked the divinity of the Lord and sought his blessings and permission for what he was about to do), and then, full of vengeance, he mounted his arrow on his bow, and took a careful aim at the enemy. (15)

Finally, Laxman shot that formidable arrow straight at Meghanad, and it slammed into the latter's chest, piercing it in the middle. At the time of his death, he (Meghanad) abandoned all deceits, falsehoods and pretensions².

[To wit, the whole array of illusionary but fearful forms, as well as the many magical tricks that Meghanad had been employing while alive, immediately vanished as soon as he died.] (16)

[Note—¹It means that Laxman began hissing with clenched teeth and breathing fire through his nostrils like an angry mythological dragon that spews fire and brimstone upon the world to destroy it when it gets annoyed.

Laxman was a manifestation of Lord Seshnath, the celestial serpent who has a thousand hoods, and holds the world aloft on them like it were merely a speck of sand—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 126; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 83 which explicitly endorse these two points.

²Meghanad knew very well, like his own father Ravana and his uncle Kumbhakaran did, that both Lord Ram and Laxman were no ordinary human princes but manifestations of Lord Vishnu and Lord Seshnath respectively. So why then did he fight them as if they were his mortal enemies? It was because he was merely obeying his father Ravana's orders, and he was doing it as an obedient son and a faithful member of the demon race was expected to do, for it was his moral duty to remain loyal and faithful and committed to his own family and race.

Lord Ram is an impartial and compassionate Lord of the world; he has no enemy or friend; he simply wishes to uphold the law of Dharma, the law that espouses the cause of auspiciousness, righteousness, propriety, probity, good and right conduct, and ethics and morality. The demons had violated this law; they were tormenting and wreaking havoc upon the creatures of the Lord's own creation, which was an unjustified and unpardonable act which needed to be stopped, and the perpetrator brought to justice. That is why Lord Vishnu was compelled to come down as Lord Ram and get rid of these demons; he had no personal grudge against them.

So, though it looked that these demons were killed in the war and must have surely gone to hell because of the horrendous sins they had been committing, but the fact is that all of them found deliverance for their souls—this is explicitly stated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 114; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 45; and (iii) Aranya Kand, Doha no. 20-a.

How do we know that Meghanad had attained deliverance at the time of his death? The answer is found in the Doha that follows herein below.]

दो०. रामानुज कहँ रामु कहँ अस कहि छाँड़ैसि प्रान ।

धन्य धन्य तव जननी कह अंगद हनुमान ॥ ७६ ॥

dōhā.

rāmānuja kahañ rāmu kahañ asa kahi chāñṛēsī prāna.
dhan'ya dhan'ya tava janani kaha aṅgada hanumāna. 76.

At the time of death, Meghanad had the names of the Laxman (rāmānuja) and Lord Ram on his lips as he asked, ‘Where is the younger brother of Ram? Where is Lord Ram himself?’

When Angad and Hanuman heard these utterances, they felt glad in their hearts and praised Meghanad, saying, ‘Indeed, your mother is very fortunate and blessed (to have a son like you)!’ (Doha no. 76)

[Note—¹Why did Angad and Hanuman praise Meghanad’s mother (Mandodari)? They were astonished that Meghanad would remember Lord Ram and utter his holy and divine name twice, once by remembering Laxman as the younger brother of ‘Ram’ (rāmā + nuja), and then by remembering ‘Lord Ram’ himself directly (rāmu). This ensured that Meghanad would surely find deliverance for his soul, and attain emancipation and salvation for himself.

Everyone believed him to be a sinful and evil demon, but if that truly had been the case then Meghanad wouldn’t have uttered the Lord’s name “Ram” which is holy and divine, and is a provider of liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation, as well as eternal bliss and beatitude to the soul of a creature. Any creature who remembers the Lord and invokes his holy name at the time of death is rest assured to attain deliverance and eternal peace for his soul.

So this is why Angad and Hanuman praised Meghanad’s mother for having given birth to a son who attained an exalted destiny for his soul at the time of his death, who died such a glorious death by fighting like a valiant warrior on the one hand, and on the other hand attaining an exalted destiny for his soul by invoking the holy name of Lord Ram. This was a rare honour for Meghanad that he was so much praised by Lord Ram’s two trusted aides who were also great devotees of the Lord.

We will note in this context that Marich had died in a similar way—he first uttered the name of Laxman and then Lord Ram, and as a result attained instant deliverance—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 15-17 that precede Doha no. 27.

There is another interesting point here: Angad and Hanuman had praised the ‘mother’ of Meghanad, instead of his father. It is because his mother, Mandodari, was a pious lady who had herself tried to persuade her husband, Ravana, repeatedly to abandon his hostility with Lord Ram, telling him that the Lord was not an ordinary human being but the Supreme Being himself in his form—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Doha no. 7; (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15; (iii) Doha no. 35-b—to Doha no. 37.]

चौ०. बिनु प्रयास हनुमान उठायो । लंका द्वार राखि पुनि आयो ॥ १ ॥
 तासु मरन सुनि सुर गंधर्बा । चढ़ि बिमान आए नभ सर्बा ॥ २ ॥ बरषि सुमन दुंदुभीं बजावहिं । श्रीरघुनाथ बिमल जसु गावहिं ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

binu prayāsa hanumāna uṭhāyō. laṅkā dvāra rākhi puni āyō. 1.
 tāsu marana suni sura gandharbā. caḍhi bimāna ā'ē nabha sarbā. 2.
 baraṣi sumana dundubhīm bajāvahiṁ. śrīraghunātha bimala jasu gāvahiṁ. 3.

Hanuman lifted Meghanad's body effortlessly, went to the main gate of the fort of Lanka and placed it there¹, and then returned (to where Laxman waited). (1)

When the Gods and the Gandharvas (junior gods; said to be musicians and skilled decorators in heaven) heard of Meghanad's demise, all of them mounted their aerial vehicles and assembled in the sky². (2)

They celebrated the occasion by showering flowers from the sky, sounding their kettle-drums, and singing the stellar glories of Lord Ram. (3)

[Note—¹We will not fail to observe that amongst all the monkeys and bears in the army of Lord Ram, it was Hanuman who had a singularly powerful body that was exceptionally strong, muscular and well-built. It was Hanuman who had lifted Laxman when he was wounded by Meghanad during their first encounter and lay unconscious on the ground, and brought him to Lord Ram*, and it was also Hanuman who had lifted the entire mountain when he could not find the correct herb needed to revive Laxman, and carried it aloft in his hands as he cruised through the sky at tremendous speed from the northern Himalayas right up to Lanka#.

{* Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 54—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 55.

#Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 58.}

Lifting Meghanad is the third instance of the proof of his exceptional bodily strength. Remember: There were other warriors present there—viz. Angad, Nala, Neela and Mayand for example, but no one could lift this mighty weight and carry it all the way to the gates of Lanka. Remember also that it was not simply the matter of carrying a heavy weight from one point to another, for it was a battle-field and a ferocious war was underway; the enemy, the demons, had become excessively aggressive and vehement and smitten by this setback, and so therefore taking Meghanad's dead body from the ground where the battle raged to the gates of Lanka through the thick wall of ferocious and blood-thirst demon warriors was like walking through a mine field. This fact would also highlight Hanuman's valiance, courage, self-confidence, and daring.

Hanuman had some personal grudge against Meghanad and a score to settle with him and his father Ravana. We have read earlier that it was Meghanad who had captured Hanuman and brought him tied as a prisoner to the court of Ravana during the episode where Hanuman had gone to Lanka in search of Sita, and after meeting her he had been eating fruits and ruining the garden there, at which Ravana had sent his son Akshaya Kumar to tackle this unexpected marauder, but Hanuman killed him, after which Meghanad was dispatched by Ravana to bring Hanuman to the court. Meghanad had shot Hanuman down by a powerful weapon, tied him up, paraded him through the streets of Lanka like a trophy of war, and finally brought him as a conquered warrior to Ravana's court. This was a grave insult for Hanuman who had never ever been subjected to such humiliation in his life. So he was waiting for an opportunity to square up the account; now he got it, and decided to dump his insulter's dead body at the gate of Lanka to tell Ravana "take this gift from me!"

²Where were these gods and gandharvas earlier? They had hidden somewhere when the battle between Laxman and Meghanad was raging, for they had a mortal fear of Meghanad because the latter had the ability to change forms and fight even from the sky—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 11-2 that precede Doha no. 76; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 51; Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 52; Doha no. 72.

Long ago when Indra had captured Ravana, it was Meghanad who went to attack heaven where he defeated the gods after which he not only got his father freed but had also brought Indra as a captive to Lanka; at that time Brahma, the creator, had intervened and somehow managed to get Indra released from captivity. So the gods feared Meghanad more than anyone else. {Refer: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 77-81; and Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 50-54.}

Hence, when the gods saw Meghanad's furious form while battling Laxman, they became scared out of their wits, and ran away.]

जय अनंत जय जगदाधारा । तुम्ह प्रभु सब देवन्हि निस्तारा ॥ ४ ॥

अस्तुति करि सुर सिद्ध सिधाए । लछिमन कृपासिंधु पहिं आए ॥ ५ ॥ jaya ananta jaya jagadādhārā. tumha prabhu saba dēvanhi nistārā. 4.

astuti kari sura sid'dha sidhā'ē. lachimana kṛpāsindhu pahim ā'ē. 5.

The Gods and the Gandharvas praised Laxman and applauded his victory over Meghanad by saying in unison: 'Glory to Lord Anant; Glory to the Lord who is a support of the universe¹. Oh Lord, you have provided succour and relief to all the gods, and have settled the cause of great fear (of Meghanad) that had been tormenting them for so long.' (4)

After paying their homage to Laxman, the assembled Gods and the Siddhas (mystics; holy spirits)² went their way, and then he, Laxman, came to Lord Ram who is an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness (kṛpāsindhu)³. (5)

[Note—¹An exactly similar idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 54, and Baal Kand, Doha no. 197 regarding Laxman. He was a manifestation of Lord Seshnath, the celestial thousand-hooded Serpent who holds the world on his hoods.

²In verse no. 2 herein above we have read that “gods and gandharvas” had come, and now in addition to them we have the “siddhas”.

³It seems incongruous to call Lord Ram ‘merciful, compassionate and kind’ especially when he was engaged in a war where countless demons were being killed every day. But the truth is that every one of these demons had been granted deliverance of their souls; they were all provided liberation, emancipation and salvation by Lord Ram. There are ample proofs in Ram Charit Manas about this assertion—viz. Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114; and Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 45.]

सुत बध सुना दसानन जबहीं । मुरुछित भयउ परेउ महि तबहीं ॥ ६ ॥

मंदोदरी रुदन कर भारी । उर ताड़न बहु भाँति पुकारी ॥ ७ ॥

नगर लोग सब व्याकुल सोचा । सकल कहहिं दसकंधर पोचा ॥ ८ ॥

suta badha sunā dasānana jabahīm. muruchita bhaya'u parē'u mahi tabahīm.

6.

mandōdarī rudana kara bhārī. ura tāṛana bahu bhāṁti pukārī. 7.

nagara lōga saba byākula sōcā. sakala kahahīm dasakandhara pōcā. 8.

When the ten-headed Ravana heard of his son's death, he fell down unconscious on the ground at that instant. (6)

Mandodar (Meghanad's mother) cried uncontrollably, feeling excess of grief, and loudly lamented for her dear son by beating her chest. (7)

The citizens of Lanka mourned for Meghanad; they were all agitated and worried, and put the blame squarely on Ravana, unanimously saying that he was very mean, dumb-witted, evil and wicked (pōcā)¹. (8)

[Note—¹What did the citizens of Lanka mean, and why were they so angry with Ravana? They accused Ravana of cowardice and meanness and lack of wisdom, for he had first sent his brother Kumbhakaran and then his son Meghanad to face the wrath of the enemy and die instead of leading his army himself from the front like a true warrior king is expected to do; then he had not listened to his wife Mandodari and his brother Vibhishan as well as the aged demon named Malyawan and his trusted spy named Suka when they had all tried to persuade him to abandon hostility with Lord Ram and make peace with him by returning Sita. He had seen the death of his other son Akshay Kumar when he was killed by Hanuman earlier, but still he was so haughty and mad with arrogance and ego that he did not read the writing on the wall. The demon citizens of Lanka felt that certainly Ravana would lead to the complete destruction of the demon race.]

दो०. तब दसकंठ बिबिधि बिधि समुझाई सब नारि ।

नस्वर रूप जगत सब देखहु हृदयँ बिचारि ॥ ७७ ॥

dōhā.

taba dasakaṇṭha bibidhi bidhi samujhā'īm saba nāri.
nasvara rūpa jagata saba dēkhahu hṛdayaṁ bicāri. 77.

When he recovered his senses, the ten-necked Ravana assumed the role of a philosopher and consoled the grieving ladies of the household, saying to them, 'Have courage and peace in your heart and mind with the thought that this world is mortal, and all who are born here must die one day. [To wit, though it is a sorrowful day for all of us as we have lost our dear son Meghanad, but remember everyone must die one day, so have heart and take courage. It is a part of life and the law of Nature; death is inevitable for every living being. So therefore, do not grieve.]^{1*}' (Doha no. 77)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 150 where we read that Sumantra, king Dasrath's chief minister, has tried to pacify an agitated Dasrath who was gravely lamenting for Lord Ram, Laxman and Sita after they had left Ayodhya for the forest. Ravana's words and philosophical teaching is exactly the same as Sumantra's.

*This marked the end of the 5th day of the Great War.]

चौ०. तिन्हहि ग्यान उपदेसा रावन । आपुन मंद कथा सुभ पावन ॥ १ ॥
पर उपदेस कुसल बहुतेरे । जे आचरहिं ते नर न घनेरे ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tinahi gyāna upadēsā rāvana. āpuna manda kathā subha pāvana. 1.
para upadēsa kusala bahutērē. jē ācarahim tē nara na ghanērē. 2.

Ironically, Ravana was teaching spiritual philosophy and citing pious thoughts to preach others but remained deaf to them himself. (1)

Indeed there are many in this world who would preach great and holy things to others, but they themselves practice none of what they espouse! (2)

[Note—Meghanad had fought for two consecutive days. On the first day of his battle, which was the 4th day from the commencement of the actual war, he fought a pitched battle with Lord Ram and managed to tie the Lord in a magical snare consisting of serpents, but he fell down unconscious when Jamvant, the old bear chief, retaliated viciously and knocked him down. When Meghanad regained his senses however after some time, he performed a fire sacrifice during the night which would have granted him victory in the war if completed successfully, but unfortunately for him it was disrupted due to the intervention of Laxman. In the ferocious battle of the following day, which was the 5th day of the war, he was killed while battling Laxman.

A thick pall of gloom and hopelessness descended on Lanka. Ravana felt completely heartbroken and utterly despondent; the ladies of his royal household wailed and grieved inconsolably. The demon citizens cursed their king Ravana vehemently and angrily accused him for the calamity and the ruin that had suddenly befallen on the otherwise prosperous kingdom of Lanka just because of Ravana's senseless actions, his recklessness, his stubborn, egoist and arrogant nature.

But by this time little choice was left for anyone—with his son Meghanad and Akshay Kumar as well as his brother Kumbhakaran dead, Ravana had become very desperate and excessively revengeful; he had lost all restraint by now and was determined to take this war to its final conclusion; victory and defeat mattered not to him any longer, for now he was burning with a raging urge to take revenge.

Hence, by this time it had become clear to all the demons that they can't escape from being sucked into, voluntarily or involuntarily, and devoured by this whirlpool of self-destruction. Any reluctance to join Ravana in the war meant certain death at his hands, and participating in the war also meant certain death: so there was no choice before anyone. So the demon warriors made a community decision to die a noble death like a brave warrior fighting the enemy in the battle-field instead of hiding and inviting a lifelong ignominy of committing treachery, treason and disloyalty to their king, of being a traitor, a coward and a turn-coat. Such a life would be a dark blot on their present family, as well as on the generations that would come in the future. So therefore it is better to die a noble death as a brave and valiant warrior, rather than live a life of ignominy and shame.]

-----**-----

Section 17.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 53-68; Canto 9, verse nos. 1-58.

Now we shall take a brief pause here, and before progressing further with our narrative we shall quickly recapitulate Meghanad's episode as it is described in sage Veda Vyas's classic 'Adhyatma Ramayan'. This way we create a fusion of different classics that adds colour and diversity to this extraordinary "Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka", a tool that we have been employing throughout our narration in this Book.

In Adhyatma Ramayan, Meghanad's episode is narrated in Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 53-68; Canto 9, verse nos. 1-58.

So here we go:

भ्रातरं निहतं शुत्वा कुम्भकर्णं महाबलम् ।
 रावणः शोकसन्तप्तो रामेणाविलष्टकर्मणा ॥ ५३॥
 मूर्च्छितः पतितो भ्रूमावुत्थाय विललाप ह ।
 पितृव्यं निहतं शुत्वा पितरं चातिविह्वलम् ॥ ५४॥
 इन्द्रजित्प्राह शोकार्तं त्यज शोकं महामते ।
 मयि जीवति राजेन्द्र मेघनादे महाबले ।। ५५ ।।
 दुःखस्यावसरः कुत्र देवान्तक महामते । व्येतु ते दुःखमखिलं स्वस्थो भव महीपते ॥ ५६॥ bhrātaraṃ nihataṃ śrutvā kumbhakarṇaṃ mahābalaṃ । rāvaṇaḥ śokasantapto rāmeṇākliṣṭakarmanā ॥ 53॥ mūrccitaḥ patito bhūmāvutthāya vilālāpa ha । pitṛvyaṃ nihataṃ śrutvā pitaraṃ cātivihvalaṃ ॥ 54॥ indrajitprāha śokārtaṃ tyaja śokaṃ mahāmate । mayi jīvati rājendra meghanāde mahābale. 55.

 duḥkhasvāvasaraḥ kutra devāntaka mahāmate.
 vyetu te duḥkhamakhilaṃ svastho bhava mahīpate ॥ 56॥

53-56. Hearing that his brother, the most valiant and brave Kumbhakarn, had died at the hands of Lord Sri Ram who does (or is capable of doing) the most daunting and difficult of tasks, Ravana became exasperated and overwhelmed with grief and sorrows (53).

He was so shocked that he fainted and fell on the ground. When eventually he regained his consciousness, he wailed and mournfully lamented (for his brother). Hearing that his uncle was killed and his father was overcome by grief (54), Indrajeet (i.e. Meghnad, Ravana's son) said to his grieving and mourning father, 'Oh my great father (mahāmate)! Give up regretting and lamenting in this way! Oh king of kings (rājendra)! When I, the most valiant and valorous Meghnad, is still alive (55), where is the cause for such profound expression of regret, hopelessness, lamentation, worry, sorrow, distress, despair and dejection as seems to have overcome you?

Your majesty (mahāmate) is famed as being the 'terminator of gods' (devāntaka)! You are the 'lord of the earth and a great king' (mahīpate). Give up this dejected look and stop lamenting and feeling helpless because it does not behoove of you to behave in this way (56).

सर्वं समीकरिष्यामि हनिष्यामि च वै रिपून् ।
 गत्वा निकुम्भिलां सद्यस्तर्पयित्वा हुताशनम् ॥ ५७॥
 लब्ध्वा रथादिकं तस्मादजेयोऽहं भवाम्यरेः ।
 इत्युक्त्वा त्वरितं गत्वा निर्दिष्टं हवनस्थलम् ॥ ५८॥ sarvaṃ samīkariṣyāmi haniṣyāmi ca vai ripūn । gatvā nikumbhilāṃ sadyastarpayitvā hutāśanam ॥ 57॥ labdhvā rathādikaṃ tasmādaejo'haṃ bhavāmyareḥ । ityuktvā tvaritaṃ gatvā nirdiṣṭaṃ havanasthalaṃ ॥ 58॥

57-58. I shall soon set everything in order; I shall surely kill the enemy. Presently, I am going to a cave called Nikumbhila. There I shall perform a fire sacrifice to please the fire-God (57) and obtain a chariot and other war paraphernalia. This will make me invincible for the enemy'. Saying this, Meghnad went to the designated place for doing the fire sacrifice¹ (58).

[Note—¹We can easily see the difference in the versions of Ram Charit Manas and Adhyatma Ramayan. In Ram Charit Manas we have read that Meghnad performed the fire sacrifice after his battle with Lord Ram when he was gravely wounded by Jamvant, the chief of the bear warriors in the Lord's army (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 74—to Chaupai line no. 2 that follow this Doha). But here we read that he went to do the fire sacrifice to empower himself prior to stepping on the battle-field.

No mention is made in Adhyatma Ramayan of Meghanad fighting Lord Ram. We shall read herein below that he fought directly with Laxman who killed him.]

रक्तमाल्याम्बरधरो रक्तगन्धानुलेपनः ।
निकुम्भिलास्थले मौनी हवनायोपचक्रमे ॥ ५९॥
विभीषणोऽथ तच्छ्रुत्वा मेघनादस्य चेष्टितम् । प्राह रामाय सकलं होमारम्भं दुरात्मनः ॥ ६०॥ raktamālyāambaradharo raktagandhānulepanaḥ । nikumbhilāsthale maunī havanāyopacakrame ॥ 59॥ vibhīṣaṇo'tha tacchrutvā meghanādasya ceṣṭitam । prāha rāmāya sakalam homārambham durātmanah ॥ 60॥

59-60. At the designated place where the goddess called Nikumbhila¹ was to be worshipped, Meghanad put on a blood-coloured red cloth, wore a similar red-coloured garland, and smeared his body with a paste of sandalwood that was kneaded with blood. Then he started to perform the fire sacrifice to appease her (i.e. the goddess Nikumbhila) (59).

When Vibhishan came to know about all this (through his spies), he informed Lord Sri Ram about the start of the fire sacrifice by the rascal and evil fellow (Meghanad) (60).

[Note—¹This goddess was the patron deity of Ravana's family and a goddess of war. She is believed to be one of the many forms of goddess Kaali, the goddess that rules over death and destruction. She was worshipped with the express objective of gaining victory in the battle-field.]

समाप्यते चेद्धोमोऽयं मेघनादस्य दुर्मतेः ।
तदाजेयो भवेद्राम मेघनादः सुरासुरैः ॥ ६१॥
अतः शीघ्रं लक्ष्मणेन घातयिष्यामि रावणिम् ।
आज्ञापय मया सार्धं लक्ष्मणं बलिनां वरम् । हनिष्यति न सन्देहो मेघनादं तवानुजः ॥ ६२॥ samāpyate ceddhomo'yaṁ meghanādasya durmateḥ । tadājeyo bhavedrāma meghanādaḥ surāsuraiḥ ॥ 61॥ ataḥ śīghraṁ lakṣmaṇena ghātayiṣyāmi rāvaṇim । ājñāpaya mayā sārḍham lakṣmaṇaṁ balināṁ varam । haniṣyati na sandeho meghanādaṁ tavānujaḥ ॥ 62॥

61-62. Vibhishan said to Lord Ram, 'If the fire sacrifice of this wicked, evil and pervert fellow (durmateḥ--i.e. Meghanad) is completed successfully, without any hindrance in its completion, then he cannot be conquered by anyone, neither by the Gods nor by the non-Gods; there is no doubt about it' (61).

Hence, it has become imperative for me to get this son of Ravana (rāvaṇim) killed by Laxman as soon as it is possible. Oh Lord; please order Laxman, who is the best among the warriors renowned for their bravery and valour (lakṣmaṇaṃ balināṃ varam) to accompany me (to the site of the fire sacrifice). There is no doubt that your younger brother (Laxman) shall surely kill Meghnad.' (62).

[Note—¹Remember: Vibhishan was the younger brother of Ravana, and therefore he knew all the secrets of the family. No one else was better placed to know the secret rituals that Ravana and his family performed to retain their supremacy over the demon race as well as the world in general. Vibhishan was also privy to the secret paths that led to such hidden sites where Ravana would go to perform his rituals that would grant him the boon of invincibility and victory over his enemy prior to waging the numerous wars that always turned in his favour, whether such campaigns were against the gods of heaven or the great kings of earth.

The ingredients used in these rituals, the components of such fire sacrifices, had an evil dimension as is obvious by liberal use of blood, or the red colour symbolizing blood. Such sacrifices were called 'Tamsic'—meaning they were evil and sinful both in their implementation as well as in their intention.]

श्रीरामचन्द्र उवाच ।

अहमेवागमिष्यामि हन्तुमिन्द्रजितं रिपुम् ।

आग्नेयेन महास्त्रेण सर्वराक्षसघातिना ॥ ६३॥

विभीषणोऽपि तं प्राह नासावन्यैर्निहन्यते ।

यस्तु द्वादश वर्षाणि निद्राहारविवर्जितः ॥ ६४॥

तेनैव मृत्युर्निर्दिष्टो ब्रह्मणास्य दुरात्मनः ।

लक्ष्मणस्तु अयोध्याया निर्गम्यायात्वया सह ॥ ६५॥

तदादि निद्राहारादीन्न जानाति रघूत्तम ।

सेवार्थं तव राजेन्द्र ज्ञातं सर्वमिदं मया ॥ ६६॥ śrīrāmacandra uvāca ।

ahamevāgamiṣyāmi hantumindrajitaṃ ripum ।

āgneyena mahāstreṇa sarvarākṣasaghātina ॥ 63॥

vibhiṣaṇo'pi taṃ prāha nāsāvanyairnihanyate ।

yastu dvādaśa varṣāṇi nidrāhāravivarjitaḥ ॥ 64॥

tenaiva mr̥tyurnirdiṣṭo brahmaṇāsyā durātmanaḥ । lakṣmaṇastu ayodhyāyā nirgamyāyāttvayā saha ॥ 65॥ tadādi nidrāhārādīnna jānāti raghūttama ।

sevārthaṃ tava rājendra jñātaṃ sarvamidaṃ mayā ॥ 66॥

63-66. Lord Sri Ram replied, 'I shall go myself to kill the enemy with the formidable weapon called 'Agneyen' (the "fire weapon")' (63).

Vibhishan objected, saying, 'This demon cannot be killed by anyone else (except Laxman)—for it has been prophesized that only a person who has forsaken any food and sleep for a continuous period of 12 years¹ (64) would be able to kill him. Such a death has been fixed (destined) for this wicked fellow by Brahma, the creator, himself. Ever since he (Laxman) had left Ayodhya to accompany you, he has been so devoted and focused in serving you in a most diligent way² that he has virtually forgotten about eating and sleeping properly himself. [To wit, Laxman had remained so preoccupied in serving you and Sita that he had not bothered about his own comfort at all.]

Your majesty, who is the King of kings (rājendra)! I know all these things (65-66).

[Note—¹Laxman had spent 14 years in forest exile with Lord Ram and Sita, but here only 12 years are mentioned. Why so? The difference of 2 years is meant to account for the sum total of hours that Laxman had spent in taking a few winks of sleep and eating some frugal meal daily to survive during the long time of 14 years.

Let us calculate the total number of hours that Laxman may have spent in taking a few winks of sleep and eating a few morsels of food to survive.

The calculation is as follows: 2 years x 365 days each year x 24 hours each day = a total of 17,520 hours, which was sufficient for his survival.

Great sages, mystics, ascetics and hermits who engaged in spiritual practices such as doing meditation, contemplation, penances and austerities, called doing Yoga, Dhyan and Tapa, were accustomed to spending long durations of time without food and drink and sleep.

²We read in Ram Charit Manas that when Laxman had gone to his mother Sumitra to seek her permission to go to the forest with Lord Ram and Sita, she had advised her son to be very diligent and faithful in his service to the Lord who was like his father, and Sita who was like his mother. Laxman proved himself a worthy son and a worthy devotee of Lord Ram as he had stood firm in his resolve to carry out the advice of his mother by being most diligent in serving Lord Ram and Sita throughout their forest sojourn of 14 years. {Ref: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 74—to Chanda line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 75; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 90; and (iii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 142.}]

तदाज्ञापय देवेश लक्ष्मणं त्वरया मया ।

हनिष्यति न सन्देहः शेषः साक्षाद्गणधरः ॥ ६७॥

त्वमेव साक्षाज्जगतामधीशो नारायणो लक्ष्मण एव शेषः ।

युवां धराभारनिवारणार्थं जातौ जगन्नाटकसूत्रधारौ ॥ ६८॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे अष्टमः

सर्गः ॥ ८॥

tadājñāpaya deveśa lakṣmaṇaṁ tvarayā mayā । haniṣyati na sandehaḥ śeṣaḥ sāksāddharādharah ॥ 67॥

tvameva sāksāj jagatāmadhīśo nārāyaṇo lakṣmaṇa eva śeṣaḥ । yuvāṃ dharābhāranivāraṇārtham jātau jagannāṭakasūtradhārau ॥ 68॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde yuddhakāṇḍe aṣṭamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 8॥

67-68. Hence, oh the Lord of Gods (deveśa)! Instruct Laxman to come along with me immediately. He is a personified form of the legendary Sheshnath, the bearer of the earth. There is no doubt that he will kill him (Meghnad) (67).

Indeed in all sooth and without gainsay, you (Lord Ram) are a personification of Lord Narayan, the Lord of the world, and Laxman is the legendary Sheshnath himself personified¹. Both of you are the so-called ‘masters of the ring’, the controller of this world, the puppeteer of the magnificent show that is known as this visible world. Forsooth, you have taken birth to remove the burden of this world by eliminating the cruel and evil demons). (I know all this!) (68).

[Note—¹It is remarkable that all the chief demons who came in contact with Lord Sri Ram were aware of his true identity. Whatever they did was done willingly as means of attaining emancipation and salvation. Perhaps Meghnad is the only exception; perhaps also it is the reason why Lord Sri Ram had sent Laxman to slay him instead of killing him himself.]

Thus ends Canto 8 of Yuddha Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and Uma, his divine consort.

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 1-58:-

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

विभीषणवचः श्रुत्वा रामो वाक्यमथाब्रवीत् ।

जानामि तस्य रौद्रस्य मायां कृत्स्नां विभीषण ॥ १॥

स हि ब्रह्मास्त्रविच्छूरो मायावी च महाबलः ।

जानामि लक्ष्मणस्यापि स्वरूपं मम सेवनम् ॥ २॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

vibhīṣaṇavacaḥ śrutvā rāmo vākyamathābravīt ।

jānāmi tasya raudrasya māyāṃ kṛtsnāṃ vibhīṣaṇa ॥ 1॥

sa hi brahmāstravicchūro māyāvi ca mahābalaḥ ।

jānāmi lakṣmaṇasyāpi svarūpaṃ mama sevanam ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Hearing these words of Vibhishan, Lord Sri Ram said, 'Oh Vibhishan! I know all about this great and horrifying demon (Meghnad), and about the many cunning tricks and evil deeds that this wretched fellow can engage in (1).

He knows about the use of Brahmastra (a special weapon given by Brahma, the creator, and it is considered infallible and invincible); he is very illusive and full of deceit and tricks; he is very valiant, brave, strong and powerful. I am also aware of how Laxman serves me (i.e. I am conscious of the fact that Laxman has been surviving without food and sleep and has been very diligent and serious in serving me; I acknowledge it) (2).

ज्ञात्वैवासमहं तूष्णीं भविष्यत्कार्यगौरवात् ।
इत्युक्त्वा लक्ष्मणं प्राह रामो ज्ञानवतां वरः ॥ ३॥
गच्छ लक्ष्मण सैन्येन महता जहि रावणिम् । हनूमत्प्रमुखैः सर्वैर्युथपैः सह लक्ष्मण ॥ ४॥ jñātvaivāsamahaṁ tūṣṇīm bhaviṣyatkāryagauravāt । ityuktvā lakṣmaṇaṁ prāha rāmo jñānavatāṁ varaḥ ॥ 3॥ gaccha lakṣmaṇa sainyena mahatā jahi rāvaṇim । hanūmatpramukhaiḥ sarvairyūthapaiḥ saha lakṣmaṇa ॥ 4॥

3-4. Though I know everything yet I had not disclosed them considering the difficulty of the task at hand¹.

After this, Lord Sri Ram—who is very wise, sagacious and prudent—turned to Laxman and said (3), 'Go Laxman! Take along with you the army of monkeys led by Hanuman and other chief (commanders of the various battalions of the army). Go and get rid of the son of Ravana (Meghnad) (4).

[Note—¹It was imperative to keep secret the true identities of Lord Ram and Laxman because if the demons came to know who they actually were they would have fled and hid themselves somewhere, frustrating Lord Ram's efforts to eliminate this scourge from the world, the primary reason why Lord Vishnu had come down to earth in the form of the Lord to honour his promise to the gods and mother earth who had prayed to him to save them from the terror of the demons—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 6-28.]

जाम्बवानृक्षराजोऽयं सह सैन्येन संवृतः ।
विभीषणश्च सचिवैः सह त्वामभियास्यति ॥ ५॥
अभिज्ञस्तस्य देशस्य जानाति विवराणि सः ।
रामस्य वचनं श्रुत्वा लक्ष्मणः सविभीषणः ॥ ६॥
जग्राह कार्मुकं श्रेष्ठमन्यद्दीमपराक्रमः ।
रामपादाम्बुजं स्पृष्ट्वा हृष्टः सौमित्रिरब्रवीत् ॥ ७॥ jāmbavānṛkṣarājo'yaṁ saha sainyena saṁvṛtaḥ । vibhīṣaṇaśca sacivaiḥ saha tvāmabhiyāsyati ॥ 5॥ abhijñāstasya deśasya jānāti vivarāṇi saḥ । rāmasya vacanaṁ śrutvā lakṣmaṇaḥ savibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 6॥ jagrāha karmukam śreṣṭhamanyadbhīmaparākramaḥ । rāmapādāmbujam sprṣṭvā hrṣṭaḥ saumitrirabravīt ॥ 7॥

5-7. Jamvant, the chief of the bears, will accompany you with his army of bears, and Vibhishan with his group of ministers (advisors) will also go along (5).

(I am sending Vibhishan because—) Vibhishan is well acquainted with him (Meghnad) (hence, he will help you to identify him) and he knows all the places where he can possibly hide—he has all the required information'.

Hearing the words (commands) of Lord Sri Ram, Laxman—who is the most valiant, valorous, gallant and famous warrior amongst his peers—lifted his magnificent and mighty bow that had excellent qualities unmatched by any other bow. Then he touched the lotus-like feet of Lord Sri Ram to pay his respects to him as well as to seek formal permission and blessings of the Lord before departure.

Then the son of Sumitra (Laxman—“saumitri”) cheerfully said (6-7)—

अद्य मत्कार्मुकान्मुक्ताः शरा निर्भिद्य रावणिम् ।
गमिष्यन्ति हि पातालं स्नातुं भोगवतीजले ॥ ८॥
एवमुक्त्वा स सौमित्रः परिक्रम्य पूजयाम्य तम् । इन्द्रजिनिधनाकाङ्क्षी ययौ त्वरितविक्रमः ॥ ९॥

adya matkārmukānmuktāḥ śarā nirbhidyā rāvaṇim । gamiṣyanti hi pātālaṁ snātum bhogavatījale ॥ 8॥ evamuktvā sa saumitriḥ parikramya praṇamya tam । indrajinnidhanākāṅkṣī yayau tvaritavikramaḥ ॥ 9॥

8-9. Laxman declared: 'Today, the arrows shot from my bow shall pierce through the body of the son of Ravana, and then they shall go to the subterranean world to take a bath (i.e. dip themselves) in the waters of the river Bhogwati¹ (8)

Saying this, the son of Sumitra (Laxman) circumambulated and bowed before him (Lord Sri Ram), and then swiftly, and with a firmness of resolve, departed to accomplish his mission of eliminating Indrajeet (Meghnad) (9).

[Note—¹“Bhogwati” is a subterranean river that is equivalent to river Ganges that flows on the surface of the earth. Laxman means that the force of his arrow would be so great that after passing through the body of Meghanad they will drill themselves deep into the earth to reach some subterranean source of water to clean themselves.]

वानरैर्बहुसाहसैर्हनूमान् पृष्ठतोऽन्वगात् । विभीषणश्च सहितो मन्त्रिभिस्त्वरितं ययौ ॥ १०॥
जाम्बवत्प्रमुखा ऋक्षाः सौमित्रं त्वरयान्वयुः ।
गत्वा निकुम्भिलादेशं लक्ष्मणो वानरैः सह ॥ ११॥
अपश्यद्धलसङ्घातं दूराद्राक्षससङ्कुलम् । धनुरायम्य सौमित्रिर्यतोऽभूद्भूरिविक्रमः ॥ १२॥ vānarairbahusāhasairhanūmān prṣṭhato'nvagāt । vibhīṣaṇaśca sahito mantribhistvaritaṁ yayau ॥ 10॥ jāmbavatpramukhā ṛkṣāḥ saumitriṁ tvarayānvayuh ।

gatvā nikumbhilādeśaṃ lakṣmaṇo vānaraiḥ saha ॥ 11॥ apaśyadbalaśaṅghātaṃ dūrādrākṣasasaṅkulam । dhanurāyamyā saumitriyatto'bhūdbhūrivikramaḥ ॥ 12॥

10-12. Behind him followed Hanuman with thousands of monkeys, and Vibhishan with his ministers (10).

Besides them, Jamvant and other bears also accompanied the son of Sumitra (Laxman) for the mission.

At the moment when Laxman reached the place of goddess Nikumbhi along with the monkeys (11), he saw from a distance a huge army of demons collected there (to protect Meghnad's fire sacrifice). Then the most valorous and powerful son of Sumitra (Laxman) strung and readied his bow (12).

अङ्गदेन च वीरेण जाम्बवान् राक्षसाधिपः ।
 तदा विभीषणः प्राह सौमित्रिं पश्य राक्षसान् ॥ १३॥
 यदेतद्राक्षसानीकं मेघश्यामं विलोक्यते ।
 अस्यानीकस्य महतो भेदने यत्नवान् भव ॥ १४॥
 राक्षसेन्द्रसुतोऽप्यस्मिन् भिन्ने दृश्यो भविष्यति । अभिद्रवाशु यावद्वै नैतत्कर्म समाप्यते ॥ १५॥ aṅgadena ca vīreṇa jāmbavān rākṣasādhipaḥ । tadā vibhīṣaṇaḥ prāha saumitriṃ paśya rākṣasān ॥ 13॥ yadetadrākṣasānīkaṃ meghaśyāmaṃ vilokyate । asyānīkasya mahato bhedane yatnavān bhava ॥ 14॥ rākṣasendrasuto'pyasmin bhinne drśyo bhaviṣyati । abhidravāśu yāvadvai naitatkarma samāpyate ॥ 15॥

13-15. Along with Laxman, Angad and the brave Jamvant too became alert. Then the prince of demons, i.e. Vibhishan, said to the son of Sumitra (Laxman) (13), 'Look at these demons. The huge demon army that you see in front indeed appears to be like a bank of dark clouds looming low over the sky. You must first remove this obstacle from our path (14).

Only when this thick wall of demon army is removed can we see (find) the son of the king of demons, i.e. Meghnad. Once we locate him, you must immediately attack him to prevent him from completing his religious rituals (because otherwise, if he is able to successfully complete his sacrifice, he will automatically become invincible, and our mission will fail) (15).

जही वीर दुरात्मानं हिंसापरमधार्मिकम् ।
 विभीषणवचः श्रुत्वा लक्ष्मणः शुभलक्ष्मणः ॥ १६॥
 ववर्ष शरवर्षाणि राक्षसेन्द्रसुतं पूति ।
 पाषाणैः पर्वतान्गैश्च वृक्षैश्च हरियूथपाः ॥ १७॥
 निर्जघ्नुः सर्वतो दैत्यांस्तेऽपि वानरयूथपान् ।
 परश्वधैः शितैर्बाणैरसिभिर्यष्टितोमरैः ॥ १८॥

निर्जघ्नुर्वानरानीकं तदा शब्दो महानभूत् । स सम्प्रहारस्तुमुलः सञ्जज्ञे हरिरक्षसाम् ॥ १९॥ jahī vīra durātmānaṃ hiṃsāparamadhārmikam । vibhīṣaṇavacaḥ śrutvā lakṣmaṇaḥ śubhalakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 16॥ vavarṣa śaravarṣāṇi rākṣasendrasutaṃ prati । pāṣāṇaiḥ parvatāgraiśca vrkṣaiśca hariyūthapāḥ ॥ 17॥ nirjaghnuḥ sarvato daityāṃste'pi vānarayūthapān । paraśvadhāiḥ śitairbāṇairasibhīryaṣṭitomaraiḥ ॥ 18॥ nirjaghnurvānarānīkaṃ tadā śabdo mahānabhūt । sa samprahārastumulaḥ sañjajñe harirakṣasām ॥ 19॥

16-19. Oh the brave one (“vīra”—i.e. Laxman)! Kill this sinner; quickly eliminate this violent and cruel killer who is a wicked and evil creature'.

Hearing these words of Vibhishan, Laxman, who possessed auspicious qualities and good character (16), began raining a hail of powerful arrows aimed at the son of the king of demons (Meghnad). Meanwhile, all other monkey commanders and their troops began pelting stones, boulders and trees (17) at the demon army (protecting Meghanad and his fire sacrifice) from all directions.

The demon warriors retaliated with full force, attacking the monkey army with battle-axes, sharp arrows, swords, batons, branches of trees, and ‘Tomars’¹ (18).

There was a horrific tumult at the site of the confrontation; a hand-to-hand and fiercely fought pitched battle broke out between the monkeys and the demons (19).

[Note—¹A “Tomar” is an ancient fighting tool shaped like a dumb-bell or a heavy metal ball attached to one end of a long iron rod. It is swung violently to break the heads of the enemy soldiers in close combat. In some instances however, a Tomar may be modified to appear like a spear or a lancet that can be first swung around to gather momentum, and then thrown viciously at the enemy from a distance so that whomsoever it strikes falls dead with the impact of the blow.]

इन्द्रजित्स्वबलं सर्वमर्दमानं विलोक्य सः ।
निकुम्भिलां च होमं च त्यक्त्वा शीघ्रं विनिर्गतः ॥ २०॥
रथमारुह्य सधनुः क्रोधेन महतागमत् । समाह्वयन् स सौमित्रिं युद्धाय रणमूर्धनि ॥ २१॥

indrajitsvabalaṃ sarvamardyamānaṃ vilokya saḥ । nikumbhilāṃ ca homaṃ ca tyaktvā śīghraṃ vinirgataḥ ॥ 20॥ rathamāruhya sadhanuḥ krodhena mahatāgamat । samāhvayan sa saumitriṃ yuddhāya raṇamūrdhani ॥ 21॥

20-21. Seeing that his army was being mercilessly beaten and crushed (i.e. vanquished, decimated and smashed), the brave Indrajeet¹ could not restrain himself any longer; he left the cave of Nikumbhila and the fire sacrifice incomplete, and came out immediately (20).

He quickly mounted his chariot with his bow in hand, and rushed to the battle-field with full haste; seething with anger and vehement with wrath, he came forward to face Laxman. He challenged the son of Sumitra (Laxman) for a duel (21).

[Note—Meghanad is known as “Indrajeet” because he had once conquered Indra, the king of the gods, to free his father Ravana who was captured and imprisoned by Indra when he had attacked heaven to vanquish the gods.]

सौमित्रे मेघनादोऽहं मया जीवन्न मोक्ष्यसे ।
तत्र दृष्ट्वा पितृव्यं स प्रह निष्ठुरभाषणम् ॥ २२॥
इहैव जातः संवृद्धः साक्षाद् भ्राता पितुर्मम । यस्त्वं स्वजनमुत्सृज्य परभृत्यत्वमागतः ॥ २३॥ saumitre meghanādo'haṃ mayā jīvanna mokṣyase । tatra dr̥ṣṭvā pitṛvyam sa prāha niṣṭhurabhāṣaṇam ॥ 22॥ ihaiva jātaḥ samvṛddhaḥ sāksād bhrātā piturmama । yastvaṃ svajanamutsrjya parabhr̥tyatvamāgataḥ ॥ 23॥

22-23. Meghanad said, 'Oh Saumitre (Laxman, the son of Sumitra)! I am Meghanad. Now you cannot escape alive from me'. Then he saw his uncle Vibhishan there (standing by the side of Laxman), and the sight filled him with great disgust, provoking anger in him.

Meghanad addressed Vibhishan using very stern, scornful, contemptible and harsh words (22), 'You were born here (in Lanka) amongst us (i.e. as a member of the demon race), you were brought up here, you are a blood-related brother of my father, but unfortunately now you have left and betrayed us, you have turned your back at us, you have forsaken us as if we were your mortal enemy, as if we were dead. Why, you have betrayed your own family and race, you have forsaken your royal heritage and the rightful claim to prince-hood of the mighty demon race, and instead, unfortunately, you have accepted serfdom and subservience of others (who are no match for our majestic race). [Woe to you; let the worst of curses befall you!] (23).

कथं द्रुह्यसि पुत्राय पापीयानसि दुर्मतिः ।
इत्युक्त्वा लक्ष्मणं दृष्ट्वा हनूमत्पृष्ठतः स्थितम् ॥ २४॥
उद्यदायुधनिस्त्रिंशे रथे महति संस्थितः । महाप्रमाणमुद्यम्य घोरं विस्फारयन् धनुः ॥ २५॥ kathaṃ druhyasi putrāya pāpīyānasi durmatih । ityuktvā lakṣmaṇaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā hanūmatpr̥ṣṭhataḥ sthitam ॥ 24॥ udyadāyudhanistṛiṃśe rathe mahati saṁsthitah । mahāpramāṇamudyamya ghoram visphārayan dhanuḥ ॥ 25॥

24-25. I am like your son (being your nephew); I do not know how and why you have developed such animosity and ill-will with me (and our family, which had always shown respect to you). Surely it must be because you are very sinful, pervert and wicked in your heart (as well as a very selfish person who would have no qualms in joining the enemy for the greed of the throne of Lanka)'.¹

Saying this, Meghanad looked at Laxman who was riding on the back (shoulders) of Hanuman¹ (24).

Sitting in a war chariot which was well armed and provided with all sorts of weapons that were exceptionally powerful and effective, the great demon warrior (Meghanad) took hold of a very large bow and made a terrible twang with it (25).

[Note—¹Take note—“Laxman was riding on the back of Hanuman”. From the reading of Ram Charit Manas we get the impression that Laxman stood on the ground through the battle with Meghanad, and it seems to be the natural, normal and the logical thing for him to do. But in Adhyatma Ramayan we learn that not only here but previously also it is said that at the time of Lord Ram's departure from Kishkindha with the army of monkeys and bears to launch the campaign of Lanka, he had ridden all the way from Kishkindha to the shore of the southern ocean on the shoulders of Hanuman, and Laxman rode on the back of Angad—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 1, verse no. 31.

Perhaps Laxman and Hanuman mutually agreed to this mechanism for the purpose of safety of Laxman, and to give him agility and maneuverability in the battle-field that was needed during combat with Meghanad as he was very tricky, agile and clever at creating illusions that needed quick responses to be neutralized. Besides that, Meghanad had a colossus body, and standing on the ground in front of him Laxman would have been dwarfed by his gigantic size. So it was necessary to lift Laxman to a level where he could see Meghanad in the face.]

अद्य वो मामका बाणाः पूरणान् पास्यन्ति वानराः ।

ततः शरं दाशरथिः सन्धायामित्रकर्षणः ॥ २६॥

ससर्ज राक्षसेन्द्राय क्रुद्धः सर्प इव श्वसन् ।

इन्द्रजिद्रक्तनयनो लक्ष्मणं समुदैक्षत ॥ २७॥ adya vo māmakā bāṇāḥ prāṇān pāsyanti vānarāḥ ।

tataḥ śaraṁ dāśarathiḥ sandhāyāmitrakarṣaṇaḥ ॥ 26॥

sasarja rākṣasendrāya kruddhaḥ sarpa iva śvasan ।

indrajidraktanayano lakṣmaṇaṁ samudaikṣata ॥ 27॥

26-27. Turning towards the monkey soldiers, Meghanad said, 'Oh monkeys! Today my arrows will quench their thirst by drinking your blood. [To wit, I shall kill all of you and bathe my arrows in your warm blood.]'

Then the son of Dasrath (i.e. Laxman) aimed an arrow that was specially meant to vanquish and crush the enemy (26).

Laxman hissed like an angry serpent and furiously shot this arrow at the demon prince. At the same time, Indrajeet (Meghnad) too glared at Laxman with eyes that glowed red with anger (27).

शक्राशनिसमस्पर्शैर्लक्ष्मणेनाहतः शरैः ।

मुहूर्तमभवन्मूढः पुनः प्रत्याहतेन्द्रियः ॥ २८॥

ददर्शवस्थितं वीरं वीरो दशरथात्मजम् । सोऽभिवक्त्राम सौमित्रिं क्रोधसंरक्तलोचनः ॥ २९॥ śakrāśānisamasparśairlakṣmaṇenāhataḥ śaraiḥ । muhūrtamabhavanmūḍhaḥ punaḥ pratyāhrtendriyaḥ ॥ 28॥ dadarśāvasthitaṁ vīraṁ vīro daśarathātmajam । so'bhicakrāma saumitriṁ krodhasaṁraktalocanaḥ ॥ 29॥

28-29. After being hit by the powerful arrow shot by Laxman, which was as formidable and tough as the Vajra of Indra, he (Meghnad) fainted for one Muhurt¹. When he regained consciousness (28), he saw the most brave and valorous son of Dasrath (“vīro daśarathātmajam”--Laxman) standing in front of him. Seeing the son of Sumitra (“saumitriṁ”--Laxman), that demon dashed towards him, his eyes red with anger and his countenance full of wrath (29).

[Note—¹One Muhurta is roughly 48 minutes; but here it means ‘for a short while’.]

शरान् धनुषि सन्धाय लक्ष्मणं वेदमब्रवीत् ।
यदि ते प्रथमे युद्धे न दृष्टो मे पराक्रमः ॥ ३०॥
अद्य त्वां दर्शयिष्यामि तिष्ठेदानीं व्यवस्थितः ।
इत्युक्त्वा सप्तभिर्बाणैरभिविव्याध लक्ष्मणम् ॥ ३१॥ दशभिश्च हनूमन्तं तीक्ष्णधारैः शरोत्तमैः ।
ततः शरशतेनैव सम्प्रयुक्तेन वीर्यवान् ॥ ३२॥
क्रोधद्विगुणसंरब्धो निर्बिभेद विभीषणम् । लक्ष्मणोऽपि तथा शत्रुं शरवर्षैरवाकिरत् ॥ ३३॥

śarān dhanuṣi sandhāya lakṣmaṇam cedamabravīt । yadi te prathame yuddhe na dr̥ṣṭo me parākramaḥ ॥ 30॥ adya tvāṁ darśayiṣyāmi tiṣṭhedānīm vyavasthitaḥ । ityuktvā saptabhirbāṇairabhivivyaḍha lakṣmaṇam ॥ 31॥ daśabhiśca hanūmantam tīkṣṇadhāraiḥ śarottamaiḥ । tataḥ śaraśatenaiva samprayuktena vīryavān ॥ 32॥ krodhadviguṇasaṁrabdho nirbibheda vibhīṣaṇam । lakṣmaṇo'pi tathā śatruṁ śaravarṣairavākirat ॥ 33॥

30-33. Meghanad mounted an arrow on his bow and glowered at Laxman, 'If you have not seen my valour, my courage, my power, my might and my strength in the war earlier (30), then stand right there; I shall show it to you right now.'

Saying this, he pierced and gravely wounded Laxman with a volley of seven arrows (31), Hanuman with ten arrows that had sharp tips and were one of the best he had in his arsenal, and Vibhishan with a hundred arrows that were wrathfully shot at him with precision so that they don't miss their target.

Here, Laxman also started showering arrows at the enemy (32-33).

तस्य बाणैः सुसंविद्धं कवचं काञ्चनपूभम् ।
 व्यशीर्यत रथोपस्थे तिलशः पतितं भुवि ॥ ३४॥
 ततः शरसहस्रेण सङ्कुद्धो रावणात्मजः । बिभेद समरे वीरं लक्ष्मणं भीमविक्रमम् ॥ ३५॥

tasya bāṇaiḥ susaṁviddhaṁ kavacaṁ kāñcanaprabham । vyaśīryata rathopasthe tilaśaḥ patitaṁ bhuvi ॥ 34॥ tataḥ śarasahasreṇa saṅkruddho rāvaṇātmajaḥ । bibheda samare vīraṁ lakṣmaṇaṁ bhīmavikramam ॥ 35॥

34-35. Peppered and perforated by his (Laxman's) arrows, the body-armour of Meghanad, which had the radiance of gold, broke up into splinters, first falling at the rear of the chariot and then sliding down to the ground (34).

Then the son of Ravana (Meghnad) became very furious and wrathful, and he wounded the most valiant and valorous Laxman by shooting thousands of arrows at him in retaliation (35).

व्यशीर्यतापतदिव्यं कवचं लक्ष्मणस्य च ।
 कृतप्रतिकृतान्योन्यं बभूवतुरभिद्रुतौ ॥ ३६॥
 अभीक्ष्णं निःश्वसन्तौ तौ युध्येतां तुमुलं पुनः । शरसंवृतसर्वाङ्गौ सर्वतो रुधिरोक्षितौ ॥ ३७॥ vyaśīryatāpataddivyaṁ kavacaṁ lakṣmaṇasya ca । kṛtapratikṛtānyonyaṁ babhūvaturabhidrutau ॥ 36॥ abhīkṣṇaṁ niḥśvasantau tau yudhyetāṁ tumulaṁ punaḥ । śarasamvṛtasarvāṅgau sarvato rudhirokṣitau ॥ 37॥

36-37. As a result of this, even Laxman's magnificent armour fell down shattered. In this manner, the two brave warriors mutually fought each other with great courage and ferocity, countering the aggressive steps taken by his opponent by dexterity of movement, skilled maneuvering, and precision of their counter attacks (36).

Both of them breathed heavily and deeply every now and then even as they fought each other valiantly and ferociously. All the parts of their bodies were peppered by arrows, and were drenched in blood (37).

सुदीर्घकालं तौ वीरावन्योन्यं निशितैः शरैः ।
 अयुध्येतां महासत्त्वौ जयाजयविवर्जितौ ॥ ३८॥
 एतस्मिन्नन्तरे वीरो लक्ष्मणः पञ्चभिः शरैः । रावणेः सारथिं साश्वं रथं च समचूर्णयत् ॥ ३९॥

sudīrghakālaṁ tau vīrāvanyonyaṁ niśitaiḥ śaraiḥ । ayudhyetāṁ mahāsattvau jayājayavivarjitau ॥ 38॥

etasminnantare vīro lakṣmaṇaḥ pañcabhiḥ śaraiḥ । rāvaṇeḥ sārathim sāśvaṃ rathaṃ ca samacūrṇayat ॥ 39॥

38-39. For a very long time those two valiant and brave warriors fought each other with sharp and effective arrows. None of them could be victorious or be defeated by his opponent (38).

Suddenly, the brave Laxman shot five potent and vigorous arrows at Meghanad, the son of Ravana (rāvaṇeḥ), that not only smashed his war chariot and reduced it to splinters but also killed his charioteer as well as the horses (39).

विच्छेद कार्मुकं तस्य दर्शयन् हस्तलाघवम् ।
सोऽन्यत् कार्मुकं भद्रं सज्यं चक्रे त्वरान्वितः ॥ ४०॥ तत्त्वापमपि विच्छेद लक्ष्मणस्त्रिभिराशुनैः ।
तमेव छिन्नधन्वानं विव्याधानेकसायकैः ॥ ४१॥

ciccheda karmukam tasya darśayan hastalāghavam । so'nyattu karmukam bhadram sajyam cakre tvarānvitaḥ ॥ 40॥ taccāpamapi ciccheda lakṣmaṇastribhirāśugaiḥ । tameva chinnadhanvānaṃ vivyādhānekaśāyakaiḥ ॥ 41॥

40-41. Showing deftness and skill of his hands at archery, he (Laxman) cut-off his (Meghnad's) bow immediately. That gentleman (“bhadram”—Meghanad) took up another excellent bow and raised it (40).

Laxman cut it too with three arrows, and then perforated the demon, who by now had no bow in his hand (i.e. he had been disarmed), with another quick volley of arrows (41).

पुनरन्यत्समादाय कार्मुकं भीमविक्रमः ।
इन्द्रजित्त्विक्रमणं बाणैः शितैरादित्यसन्निभैः ॥ ४२॥
बिभेद वानरान् सर्वान् बाणैरापूरयन् दिशः । तत ऐन्द्रं समादाय लक्ष्मणो यवणिं प्रति ॥ ४३॥
सन्धायाकृष्य कर्णान्तं कार्मुकं दृढनिष्ठुरम् । उवाच लक्ष्मणो वीरः स्मरन् रामपदाम्बुजम् ॥ ४४॥ punaranyatsamādāya karmukam bhīmavikramaḥ । indrajitlakṣmaṇaṃ bāṇaiḥ śitairādityasannibhaiḥ ॥ 42॥ bibheda vānarān sarvān bāṇairāpūrayan diśaḥ । tata aindraṃ samādāya lakṣmaṇo rāvaṇim prati ॥ 43॥ sandhāyākṛṣya karṇāntaṃ karmukam dṛḍhaniṣṭhuraṃ । uvāca lakṣmaṇo vīraḥ smaran rāmapadāmbujam ॥ 44॥

42-44. Then the most valiant and valorous Indrajeet picked up another bow (the 3rd one), and covering all the directions by a hail of sharp arrows that were as splendorous and dazzling as the sun, he gravely wounded Laxman and all other monkeys when these arrows rained down upon them from the sky.

Then Laxman took out the specially empowered arrow called ‘Aendra’¹, and aiming it at the son of Ravana, he mounted it on his bow. He pulled the string of the uncompromisingly strong, sturdy and tough bow right up to his ear, and remembering (invoking the blessings of) the lotus-like feet of Lord Sri Ram in his heart, the brave Laxman said solemnly (42-44)—

[Note—¹This “Aendra” arrow was used by invoking Indra, the king of gods. It was the one that Meghanad feared the most because it was exceptionally powerful and backed by the combined might of all the gods of heaven.]

धर्मात्मा सत्यसन्धश्च रामो दाशरथिर्यदि ।
त्रिलोक्यामपूतिद्वन्द्वस्तदेनं जहि रावणिम् ॥ ४५॥
इत्युक्त्वा बाणमाकर्णाद्विकृष्य तमजिमहगम् । लक्ष्मणः समरे वीरः ससर्जेन्द्रजितं पूति ॥ ४६॥ dharmātmā satyasandhaśca rāmo dāśarathiryadi । trilokyāmapratidvandvastadenam jahi rāvaṇim ॥ 45॥ ityuktvā bāṇamākarnādvikṛṣya tamajimhagam । lakṣmaṇaḥ samare vīraḥ sasarjendrajitaṁ prati ॥ 46॥

45-46. 'If the son of Dasrath (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) is most upright and most righteous upholder of Dharma¹, if he is steadfast in keeping the vows of truthfulness and is an upholder of the sanctity of the virtue of Truth, if he is truly the Lord of the three divisions of the world² and has no match anywhere in any regard—then, oh my arrow, I invoke the Lord's glory and majesty and request you to kill this son of Ravana in order to honour the Lord.' (45).

Saying this, the brave Laxman pulled that arrow up to his ears and shot it straight at Indrajeet (Meghnad) (46).

[Note—¹“Dharma” refers to the stellar qualities of auspiciousness, righteousness, virtuousness, probity, propriety, ethics, morality, and good conduct and thought.

²The three divisions of the world or universe are the following: heaven, earth and nether world.]

स शरः सशिरस्तूणं श्रीमज्ज्वलितकुण्डलम् ।
प्रमथ्येन्द्रजितः कायात्पातयामास भूतले ॥ ४७॥
ततः प्रमुदिता देवाः कीर्तयन्तो रघूत्तमम् ।
ववर्षुः पुष्पवर्षाणि स्तुवन्तश्च मुहुर्मुहुः ॥ ४८॥ sa śaraḥ saśirastrāṇaṁ śrīmajjvalitakuṇḍalam । pramathyendrajitaḥ kāyātpātayāmāsa bhūtale ॥ 47॥ tataḥ pramuditā devāḥ kīrtayanto raghūttamam ।

vavarṣuḥ puṣpavarṣāṇi stuvantaśca muhurmuḥuḥ ॥ 48॥

47-48. That arrow severed the head of Indrajeet (Meghnad)—which was protected by a helmet and looked glorious and radiant with large ear-rings—from his body, and it fell on the ground (47).

In this manner, when Meghnad was killed, the Gods became exhilarant and extremely ecstatic with joy. They celebrated the development by repeatedly applauding Laxman, who was exalted member of the race of king Raghu, singing his glories enthusiastically, and showering flowers on him from the sky (48).

जहर्ष शक्रे भगवान् सह देवैर्महर्षिभिः ।
आकाशेऽपि च देवानां शुश्रुवे दुन्दुभिस्वनः ॥ ४९॥
विमतं गगनं चासीत्स्थिराभूद्दिश्वधारिणी । निहतं रावणिं दृष्ट्वा जयजल्पसमन्वितः ॥ ५०॥

jaharṣa śakro bhagavān saha devairmaharṣibhiḥ । ākāśe'pi ca devānāṃ śuśruve dundubhisvanaḥ ॥ 49॥ vimalaṃ gaganam cāsītsthirābhūdviśvadhārīṇī । nihataṃ rāvaṇiṃ drṣṭvā jayajalpasamanvitaḥ ॥ 50॥

49-50. Lord Indra, along with all the gods and the great sages, felt very happy and contented. At that time, the sound of the kettle-drums and trumpets played by the gods reverberated in the sky (49).

Seeing that the son of Ravana (Meghnad) has been killed, there was a chorus of acclaim and thunderous applause everywhere. The sky became clear and the earth, which is the mother and the bearer of life in this world, also became happy and stable. [To wit, gloom in the world was dispelled as symbolized by a 'clear sky'; 'mother earth' felt calm and peaceful because all her creatures had now become fearless and happy.] (50).

गतश्रमः स सौमित्रिः शङ्खमापूरयद्रणे ।
सिंहनादं ततः कृत्वा ज्याशब्दमकरोद्विभुः ॥ ५१॥
तेन नादेन संहृष्टा वानराश्च गतश्रमाः ।
वानरेन्द्रैश्च सहितः स्तुवद्भिर्हृष्टमानसैः ॥ ५२॥
लक्ष्मणः परितुष्टात्मा ददर्शाभ्येत्य राघवम् ।
हनूमद्राक्षसाभ्यां च सहितो विनयान्वितः ॥ ५३॥
ववन्दे भ्रातरं रामं ज्येष्ठं नारायणं विभुम् । त्वत्पूसादाद्रघुश्रेष्ठ हतो रावणिराहवे ॥ ५४॥ gataśramaḥ sa saumitriḥ śaṅkhamāpūrayadraṇe । siṃhanādaṃ tataḥ kṛtvā jyāśabdamakarodvibhuḥ ॥ 51॥ tena nādēna saṃhrṣṭā vānarāśca gataśramāḥ । vānarendraiśca sahitaḥ stuvadbhirhrṣṭamānasaiḥ ॥ 52॥

lakṣmaṇaḥ parituṣṭātmā dadarśābhyetya rāghavam । hanūmadrākṣasābhyāṃ ca sahito vinayānvitaḥ ॥ 53॥ vavande bhrātaraṃ rāmaṃ jyeṣṭhaṃ nārāyaṇaṃ vibhum । tvatprasādādraghuśreṣṭha hato rāvaṇirāhave ॥ 54॥

51-54. When the victorious son of Sumitra (Laxman) felt a bit relaxed after a while, he blew his conch, the sound of which resonated throughout the battle-field. Then (in jubilation and to celebrate the occasion) he twanged his bow so enthusiastically that it made a sound that seemed like the roar of a lion (51).

The terrible cacophony that resulted by the sound of the blowing of the conch shell as well as the twanging of the bow thundered and reverberated everywhere. It made all the monkeys ecstatic with joy, and they became free from all fatigue and weariness arising of the exhausting battle.

Then, along with the jubilant and celebrating brave monkeys, and being praised by them for his epic victory over Meghanad (52), Laxman came to Raghav (Lord Sri Ram). He was very cheerful and satisfied (because he had successfully completed the task assigned to him) as he met his elder brother and paid his respects to him. He was accompanied by Hanuman and the demon king (Vibhishan) (53) who too, along with Laxman, bowed their heads before Lord Ram who actually was none but Lord Narayan himself, the Supreme Lord who is honoured by the term “Vibhu”, meaning one who is omnipresent, omnipotent and the eternal Lord of the world.

Laxman said—‘Oh the most exalted of the Raghus (Lord Sri Ram)! By your kind grace and blessings, the son of Ravana has been killed in the battle today.’ (54).

श्रुत्वा तल्लक्ष्मणाद्भवत्या तमालिङ्ग्य रघूत्तमः ।
 मूर्धन्यवघ्राय मुदितः सस्नेहमिदमब्रवीत् ॥ ५५॥
 साधु लक्ष्मण तुष्टोऽस्मि कर्म ते दुष्करं कृतम् ।
 मेघनादस्य निधने जितं सर्वमरिन्दम ॥ ५६॥
 अहोरात्रैस्त्रिभिर्वीरः कथञ्चिद्विनिपातितः ।
 निःसपत्नः कृतोऽस्म्यद्य निर्यास्यति हि रावणः ॥ ५७॥
 पुत्रशोकान्मया योद्धुं तं हनिष्यामि रावणम् ॥ ५८॥

śrutvā tallakṣmaṇādbhaktyā tamāliṅgya raghūttamaḥ । mūrdhnyavaghrāya muditaḥ sasnehamidamabravīt ॥ 55॥ sādhu lakṣmaṇa tuṣṭo'smi karma te duṣkaraṃ kṛtam । meghanādasya nidhane jitaṃ sarvamarindama ॥ 56॥ ahorātraistribhīrvīraḥ kathañcidvinipātitaḥ । niḥsapatnaḥ kṛto'smyadya niryāsyati hi rāvaṇaḥ ॥ 57॥ putraśokānmayā yoddhum taṃ haniṣyāmi rāvaṇam ॥ 58॥

55-58. Hearing these most devoted, humble and submissive words of Laxman (words which did not have the slightest trace of pride, ego, haughtiness or boast), the most exalted of the Raghus (Lord Sri Ram—“raghūttamaḥ”) became very pleased and happy; he embraced Laxman affectionately.

As a mark of his gratitude and a sign of immense satisfaction with Laxman, the Lord smelt his head and said (55), 'Oh Laxman! You are truly great and saintly (sādhū lakṣmaṇa)! I am very satisfied with your deeds. Today you have succeeded in accomplishing a very difficult task. Oh the vanquisher of all enemies (sarvamarindama)! With the death of Meghanad, we have apparently won everything in the war (i.e. we have virtually won the war itself)¹ (56).

You have fought bravely and courageously for three days and three nights², and somehow slayed that great warrior (Meghanad). By doing this you have made me free of enemies, for in all practical purposes, Ravana has now become defenseless without his son to support him (57).

Since Ravana is already overcome with grief at the death of his son, it has become all the more easy for me to vanquish him when he comes face-to-face in the battle-field to confront me.' (58).

[Note—¹Lord Ram means that the death of Meghanad, and Kumbhakarn earlier, has dealt a death knell for Ravana because the two were the most formidable warriors amongst the entire demon race, only matching Ravana in ferocity, prowess, abilities and invincibility, and like him they too were protected by various boons.

With Meghanad out of the way, three fourths of the war had literally been won. Ravana's morale and spirits would dip tremendously, and so will of the rest of his demon army. And an army with low morale and lost spirits that weakens it from the inside, making it lose hope, courage and confidence, stands little chance of winning a war. Such a demoralized army is sure to crumble when faced by a determined enemy that is confident of victory.

Meghanad and Kumbhakarn were the backbone of Ravana's defenses; they were the two strong pillars upon which the success or failure of his army depended. On numerous occasions when he found himself trapped, it was Meghanad who came to the rescue of his father. With the mighty Meghanad out of the way, the decks were now clear for Lord Sri Ram to easily conquer the lonely Ravana, all the more easily because the latter was suffering from great depression and grief at the loss of his dear son Meghanad as well as brother Kumbhakarn. That is what Lord Sri Ram means by saying 'everything has been won'—that is, 'the war is almost won'.

²Here it is specifically mentioned that the battle between Laxman and Meghanad lasted for "three consecutive days and nights".

It clearly means that Meghanad had attempted to do his fire sacrifice prior to this battle with Laxma, because when the confrontation actually commenced there was no let up or pause in the fighting in the battle-field; it was a continuous process, and it ended only when Meghanad fell down dead.

Another variation from Ram Charit Manas is that whereas it is said in it that Meghanad first fought with Lord Ram on the first day of his battle, and then with Laxman on the second day when he was killed in the battle-field after a ferocious duel, in Adhyatma Ramayan however it is narrated that Meghanad fought only with Laxman for three continuous days and nights.]

[Note—This marked the killing of Meghanad by Laxman in the Epic War of Lanka as described in Adhyatma Ramayan. It also was a milestone towards Lord Ram's ultimate victory in the War.]

-----**-----

Chapter 18

The Final Phase of the War;

Battle between Lord Ram and Ravana, and the latter's Death

After his son Meghanad's death, Ravana lost all hopes. It would be too humiliating and degrading a prospect for him and his self-respect to yield to Lord Ram now, to stop the war midway and make peace with the Lord. It would be tantamount to accepting abject defeat without a fight, which no warrior worth his name and honour would ever agree to do. For a mighty warrior of the stature of Ravana—who had one day in the past made the heaven and the earth bow before him, who had conquered the almighty gods and subdued powerful sages having immense spiritual and mystical powers, who had ruled over the world as its conqueror—to abjectly surrender now, without a fight, in order to escape death, was an unimaginable prospect and an unacceptable option. It would be better for him to die fighting in the battle-field like a valiant and fearless warrior than live a humiliating life of shame and ignominy.

So therefore, he made a firm resolve—that no matter what, he will fight on till the end. And the 'end' was well nigh clear to him; he was prepared to die a noble and honourable death that would not only grant him great fame for having had the good luck to see Lord Ram, who was a manifestation of the Supreme Being, from so close quarters, engaging the Lord in a hand-to-hand duel and often forcing him on the back foot, a feat which would make him famous and unparalleled in the annals of history of warfare, and then die at the Lord's hands that would ensure liberation and deliverance of his soul, a prospect he actually longed for. He had planned it long ago, right in the beginning, at the time when he first decided to create animosity with Lord Ram. This is clearly written in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 23.

Hence, Ravana girded himself; he gathered his courage and wits, and plunged head-on in the battle with Lord Ram as he saw it as a great 'self sacrifice' that would burn his evil body of a demon, and thereby grant deliverance to his soul that was trapped inside it! What more would a mortal creature wish?

Ravana had led a life of pleasure and conquest; he was unchallenged and invincible; he lived proudly and held his head high like a great Emperor; he had forced the almighty Supreme Being to leave heaven and come down to earth in the form of Lord Ram, and then walk all the way across thousands of miles in order to grant his soul deliverance, and at the end he did attain his objective because when he died his soul left his body and entered the holy body of the Lord as a dazzling shaft of light (apropos—Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103). Say honestly, what more would a mortal creature wish?

And not only this, Ravana also ensured that the rest of his demon warriors also attain emancipation and salvation alongside himself to prove that he was not selfish to seek this blessing only for his own self. This is clear in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.

Having said this, let us now proceed with our narration and see how the Great War progressed, culminating in the death of Ravana on the 8th day of the War. What we call ‘death’ was actually a great blessing for Ravana, for it is what he had wanted—to find a way for deliverance of his soul, to attain emancipation and salvation for himself. {Apropos: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 23; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61; Lanka Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 55-61.}

Presently, we shall pick up the thread from where we had left it a while ago when we’d read about Meghanad’s death. Ravana’s battle with Lord Ram and his ultimate ‘death’ has been described in detail Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 78—to Doha no. 103:-

Now let us resume our reading of this fascinating Epic War in the following pages:-

Section 18.1: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 78—to Doha no. 103:-

निसा सिरानि भयउ भिनुसारा । लगे भालु कपि चारिहुँ द्वारा ॥ ३ ॥
 सुभट बोलाइ दसानन बोला । रन सन्मुख जा कर मन डोला ॥ ४ ॥
 सो अबहीं बरु जाउ पराई । संजुग बिमुख भएँ न भलाई ॥ ५ ॥ निज भुज बल मैं बयरु बढावा । देहउँ उतरु जो रिपु चढ़ि आवा ॥ ६ ॥ nisā sirāni bhaya'u bhinusārā. lagē bhālu kapi cārihuṁ dvārā. 3.

 subhaṭa bōlā'i dasānana bōlā. rana sanmukha jā kara mana ḍōlā. 4.
 sō abahīm baru jā'u parā'ī. sañjuga bimukha bha'ēṁ na bhalā'ī. 5.
 nija bhuja bala mairi bayaru barhāvā. dēha'uṁ utaru jō ripu caḍhi āvā. 6.

When the night ended and the day broke¹, the monkeys and bears surrounded all the four gates of the fort of Lanka. (3)

When the alarm bells were sounded inside the city, the ten-headed Ravana summoned all his great warriors and addressed the assembly, sternly warning them as follows: ‘Listen all of you. He who is afraid of the battle-field and may turn his face away from the enemy during the battle (4), well, I warn him that it would be better for him to run away right now, for it would not be good for him if he turns his back during the course of the battle (because then I will slay him, and don’t blame me then that I didn’t warn you) (5).

Verily, I have relied on the strength and powers of my own arms when I decided to create hostility and challenge the enemy for battle. So therefore, I will face him alone should the need arise, and I do not want any charity or beg for help from anyone. [Did you all hear it loud and clear? I don’t wish to be obliged to anyone to fight this war; I alone am capable to tackle the enemy. Be warned in advance; you are not going to turn your back during the battle, and you are not going to betray me, for if you dare to do it then be prepared to die.]² (6)

[Note—¹This was the 6th day of the war.

²Why was Ravana so apprehensive that there were fair chances of his demons suddenly turning their backs and running away from the battle-field during the heat of battle? He had witnessed this actually happening during the early stages of the war when the whole demon army left the battle-field and escaped from it in total disarray when they were fiercely beaten back by the Lord's army. At that time Ravana was forced to threaten them with death if they showed their back to the enemy. He had scolded them and sternly warned that since they had been eating and fattening themselves on food provided by their king and his treasury, and when the time came for serving the same king and his kingdom they preferred to run away, so surely then they deserved no better fate than death for their betrayal, cowardice and ungratefulness. {Ref: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 42.}

अस कहि मरुत बेग रथ साजा । बाजे सकल जुझाऊ बाजा ॥ ७ ॥
चले बीर सब अतुलित बली । जनु कज्जल कै आँधी चली ॥ ८ ॥ असगुन अमित होहिं तेहि काला । गनइ न भुज बल गर्ब बिसाला ॥ ९ ॥ asa kahi maruta bēga ratha sājā. bājē sakala jujhā'ū bājā. 7.

calē bīra saba atulita balī. janu kajjala kai āṁdhī calī. 8.
asaguna amita hōhīm tēhi kālā. gana'i na bhuja bala garba bisālā. 9.

Saying this, he (Ravana) ordered that a war chariot, that had the quality to move as swiftly as the wind, must be immediately readied for him. Meanwhile, a clarion call for battle was given by the beating of kettle-drums; it was meant to urgently summon the entire demon army and get its rank and file ready for battle in great haste. (7)

All the demon warriors were unmatched in their strength, power, gallantry and valour; multitudes of such dare-devils started off for the battle-field enthusiastically in such huge numbers and with such great rapidity of movement that they appeared to be like a storm of very dark clouds rolling in over the battle-field from the direction of the city of Lanka. (8)

At that time many bad omens or signs made their appearances, but these demons paid no heed to them because they were very proud of themselves and their ability to defeat the enemy by the strength of their arms. (9)

छं०. अति गर्ब गनइ न सगुन असगुन स्रवहिं आयुध हाथ ते । १ ।
भट गिरत रथ ते बाजि गज चिक्करत भाजहिं साथ ते ॥ २ ॥
गोमाय गीध कराल खर रव स्वान बोलहिं अति घने । ३ । जनु कालदूत उलूक बोलहिं बचन परम भयावने ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ati garba gana'i na saguna asaguna sravahim āyudha hātha tē. 1.
 bhaṭa girata ratha tē bāji gaja cikkarata bhājahim sātha tē. 2.
 gōmāya gīdha karāla khara rava svāna bōlahim ati ghanē. 3.
 janu kāladūta ulūka bōlahim bacana parama bhayāvanē. 4.

So haughty and arrogant and proud he (Ravana) was that he did not pay any attention to any sign that pointed to his fate; whether such signs were auspicious or inauspicious mattered not to him.

[What were these signs or omens? They were the following:-]

The weapons fell down or slipped on their own (without any warning) from the hands of the demon warriors. (Chanda line no. 1.)

Warriors fell down from their chariots. Horses and elephants shrieked and broke away from their ranks, running amok and scattering hither-thither without any provocation. (Chanda line no. 2.)

Horrifying sound of wailing and howling jackals, rasping and grunting of vultures, crowing crows and braying donkeys were heard everywhere, and so were the howls and terrifying barking of so many dogs. (Chanda line no. 3.)

The owls hooted in such a fearsome way that they appeared to be messengers of the death-god himself. (Chanda line no. 4.)

दो०. ताहि कि संपति सगुन सुभ सपनेहुँ मन बिश्राम । भूत द्रोह रत मोहबस राम बिमुख रति काम ॥ ७८ ॥

dōhā.

tāhi ki sampati saguna subha sapanēhuṁ mana biśrāma.
 bhūta drōha rata mōhabasa rāma bimukha rati kāma. 78.

Verily indeed and in all sooth, can there be any prosperity, auspiciousness as well as peace and happiness for someone even in his dreams if he is foolish enough, under the influence of delusions and ignorance, to harbour ill-will and animosity with all living beings, be opposed to Lord Ram (i.e. to the Lord God), and be indulgent in worldly passions and desires?¹ (Doha no. 78)

[Note—¹To wit, if any person has these negative traits in him, there is no way he can have welfare and happiness in this world. Since Ravana had these negative traits in him, there was no hope for him.]

चौ०. चलेउ निसाचर कटकु अपारा । चतुरंगिनी अनी बहु धारा ॥ १ ॥
 बिबिधि भाँति बाहन रथ जाना । बिपुल बरन पताक ध्वज नाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

calē'u nisācara kaṭaku apārā. caturaṅginī anī bahu dhārā. 1.
bibidhi bhāṁti bāhana ratha jānā. bipula barana patāka dhvaja nānā. 2.

The demon army, which was so huge that no one could measure the length and width of its countless columns of demon warriors, marched to the battle-field. This formidable army was divided into four divisions, called “caturaṅginī”¹, and its ranks and files formed countless columns that flowed into the battle ground (like so many streams overflowing and surging forward during the rainy season). (1)

There was a wide variety of war chariots and other vehicles to carry the demon warriors and their commanders to the battle-field. Similarly, there were all sorts of colours used for banners, flags and war standards that marked out the different battalions and divisions of the huge mass of demon troops². (2)

[Note—¹The “caturaṅginī” or the four divisions of an army were the following: horses, elephants, chariots and foot soldiers.

²How great was the demon army? Well, we get an idea of its immensity in Valmiki's Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 94, verse no. 6; Canto 96, verse nos. 27-28. It says that there were 10 lakh chariots, 30 lakh elephants, 60 crore horses, and countless donkeys, camels and foot soldiers. {1 lakh = 100,000; 1 crore = 100 lakhs.}]

चले मत्त गज जूथ घनेरे । प्राबिट जलद मरुत जनु प्रेरे ॥ ३ ॥
बरन बरन बिरदैत निकाया । समर सूर जानहिं बहु माया ॥ ४ ॥

calē matta gaja jūtha ghanērē. prābiṭa jalada maruta janu prērē. 3.
barana barana biradaita nikāyā. samara sūra jānahim bahu māyā. 4.

Rows after endless rows of war-intoxicated elephants moved forward as if thick banks of rain-bearing clouds were rolling ahead in the sky when they were propelled forward by wind during the rainy season. (3)

Columns after thick columns of bold and valiant demon warriors, all renowned for their gallantry and bravery as well as for cunning and having knowledge of many tricks, marched ahead wearing colourful dresses and headgears (as if they were going in a ceremonial procession to celebrate some great event). (4)

अति बिचित्र बाहिनी बिराजी । बीर बसंत सेन जनु साजी ॥ ५ ॥ चलत कटक दिगसिंधुर डगहीं । छुभित पयोधि कुधर डगमगहीं ॥ ६ ॥ ati bicitra bāhinī birājī. bīra basanta sēna janu sājī. 5.

calata kaṭaka digasindhura ḍagahīm. chubhita payōdhi kudhara ḍagamagahīm. 6.

The strange army of demon warriors looked exceedingly magnificent and marvelous to behold with its variety and colour, as if the Spring season has himself assembled a wonderful and colourful army of his followers¹. (5)

As this huge army marched ahead it caused a mighty tumult on the earth in all its directions; the legendary Diggajs (elephants who are believed to hold the earth upon their backs in its eight corners¹) shook and shifted in their places; the ocean heaved and splashed; the mountains too trembled and shook as if an earthquake had caused the ground beneath them to vibrate and shake³. (6)

[Note—¹The ‘spring season’ is known for a wide variety of colourful flowers and leaves that cover the earth. This metaphor is used to give an idea of the wide variety in the rank and file of the demon army—its many breeds and colours of horses, its many types of war elephants, the different types of chariots and other vehicles, as well as the multitudes of colourful dresses and headgears that its soldiers wore.

²These eight Diggajs hold the earth from below in the following eight corners: north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west and north-west.

³The idea is that the vibrations caused by the marching of such a huge army of demons had caused the earth to shake and tremble as if an earthquake had occurred with its epicenter in Lanka.]

उठी रेनु रबि गयउ छपाई । मरुत थकित बसुधा अकुलाई ॥ ७ ॥

पनव निसान घोर रव बाजहिं । प्रलय समय के घन जनु गाजहिं ॥ ८ ॥ uṭhī rēnu rabi gaya'u chapā'ī. maruta thakita basudhā akulā'ī. 7.

panava nisāna ghōra rava bājahim. pralaya samaya kē ghana janu gājahim.
8.

Such a huge amount of dust was kicked up in the sky that it formed a thick blanket of cloud that obscured the sun, the air became still (i.e. there was a stifling feeling that one gets before a gigantic dust storm strikes; the proverbial ‘lull before the storm’), and the earth became agitated (i.e. there were tremors that shook the bowls of the earth). (7)

War trumpets and kettle-drums were sounded with such a deafening din that it looked as if the clouds of doomsday were rumbling and thundering threateningly. (8)

भेरि नफीरि बाज सहनाई । मारू राग सुभट सुखदाई ॥ ९ ॥

केहरि नाद बीर सब करहीं । निज निज बल पौरुष उच्चरहीं ॥ १० ॥

bhēri naphīri bāja sahanā'ī. mārū rāga subhaṭa sukhadā'ī. 9. kēhari nāda bīra saba karahīm. nija nija bala pauruṣa uccarahīm. 10.

Tabors, clarionets and trumpets were being played with martial tunes that pleased and infused zeal and enthusiasm amongst the warriors, inspiring them with the spirit of dare devilry, and to confidently face the enemy with the will to 'either kill them or die themselves'. (9)

All the demon warriors are extolling their own martial qualities with a loud voice even as they raise huge war cries as if hordes of lions were roaring angrily. (10)

कहइ दसानन सुनहु सुभट्टा । मर्दहु भालु कपिन्ह के ठट्टा ॥ ११ ॥
हौं मारिहउँ भूप द्वौ भाई । अस कहि सन्मुख फौज रेंगाई ॥ १२ ॥ यह सुधि सकल कपिन्ह जब पाई । धाए करि रघुबीर दोहाई ॥ १३ ॥ kaha'i dasānana sunahu subhaṭṭā. mardahu bhālu kapinha kē ṭhaṭṭā. 11.

haum māriha'uṃ bhūpa dvau bhā'ī. asa kahi sanmukha phauja rēngā'ī. 12.
yaha sudhi sakala kapinha jaba pā'ī. dhā'ē kari raghubīra dōhā'ī. 13.

[Ravana must have surely felt glad and encouraged when he saw the enthusiasm in his army. So therefore—] The ten-headed Ravana addressed his soldiers as follows: 'Listen all of you brave and valiant warriors. While you destroy the monkey hordes [11], I will endeavour to kill the two brothers (Lord Ram and Laxman).'

Giving his army this instruction, he ordered them to move ahead with the attack and launch the offensive [12]. (11-12)

As soon as the monkeys heard of this (that the demon army has launched its attack), they invoked the glory of Lord Ram and rushed forward to engage the enemy and retaliate viciously (with a determination to hit back and decimate the demon army). (13)

छं०. धाए बिसाल कराल मर्कट भालु काल समान ते । १ ।
मानहुँ सपच्छ उड़ाहिं भूधर बृंद नाना बान ते ॥ २ ॥ नख दसन सैल महाद्रुमायुध सबल संक न मानहीं । ३ । जय राम रावन मत्त गज मृगराज सुजसु बखानहीं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

dhā'ē bisāla karāla markaṭa bhālu kāla samāna tē. 1.
mānahuṃ sapaccha urāhiṃ bhūdhara bṛnda nānā bāna tē. 2.
nakha dasana saila mahādrumāyudha sabala saṅka na mānahiṃ. 3.
jaya rāma rāvana matta gaja mṛgarāja sujasa bakhānahiṃ. 4.

Those huge-bodied and ferocious monkey and bear warriors (markaṭa bhālu), who personified the god of death himself, dashed forward as if huge winged mountains of various sizes and shapes were flying to their destination¹. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

Their large and pointed nails and teeth were their natural arms; besides this, they carried huge rocks that were as large as small mountains, as well as trees as additional weapons of attack. All of them were fearless and gallant warriors who feared none, no matter how mighty and powerful their opponent might be. (Chanda line no. 3)

They were extolling the glories of Lord Ram who was like a lion vis-à-vis a the wild elephant symbolized by Ravana². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹To wit, the monkey and bear warriors were moving swiftly; they had such colossus bodies that they looked like mountains on the move. And when they would clash with the oncoming demon warriors, who themselves were of equal size and ferocity, it would be like a duel between two giants or two huge mountains dashing against each other.

²To wit, just like a fearless lion can easily overcome a wild elephant, the monkey and bear warriors were praising the glories of Lord Ram who would easily vanquish Ravana who is compared here to a wild and rogue elephant.]

दो०. दुहु दिसि जय जयकार करि निज निज जोरी जानि ।

भिरे बीर इत रामहि उत रावनहि बखानि ॥ ७९ ॥

dōhā.

duhu disi jaya jayakāra kari nija nija jōrī jāni.
bhirē bīra ita rāmahi uta rāvanahi bakhāni. 79.

The final moment of the clash arrived when the two sides raised loud war cries glorifying their respective Lords; on this side the monkeys and bears were extolling the virtues of Lord Ram, and on the other side the demons were doing the same for Ravana, even as they met each other head-on and engaged themselves in a fierce close combat with their opponents, with each warrior clashing with his opposing partner very ferociously. (Doha no. 79)

चौ०. रावनु रथी बिरथ रघुबीरा । देखि बिभीषन भयउ अधीरा ॥ १ ॥

अधिक प्रीति मन भा संदेहा । बंदि चरन कह सहित सनेहा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

rāvanu rathī biratha raghubīrā. dēkhi bibhīṣana bhaya'u adhīrā. 1.
adhika prīti mana bhā sandēhā. bandi carana kaha sahita sanēhā. 2.

When Vibhishan observed that Ravana was on a mighty war chariot while Lord Ram had no such privilege, for the Lord was on foot, he became very worried and alarmed¹. (1)

Vibhishan had great affection for the Lord, and the alarming prospect of the Lord having to fight a ferocious do-or-die battle while walking on foot, whilst his enemy had the privilege of mounting a war chariot that was not only fully armed but also gave him the added advantage of rapid maneuverability and protection, made Vibhishan feel very disconcerted; he developed doubts in his mind and became worried in his heart (about the chances of Lord Ram being successful against his enemy in the face of such great odds)².

So therefore, he bowed before the holy feet of the Lord and paid his obeisance to him, and then observed as follows—(2)

[Note—¹Vibhishan was very worried and felt disconcerted when he observed that Lord Ram was on foot while the great demon king Ravana was riding a strong and well-provisioned war chariot. It was an unequal combat which caused Vibhishan a lot of consternation and doubts about the Lord's success. He expressed his fears to the Lord, and the answer that Lord Ram gave him concerning the chariot that is needed to win a battle is very different than one thinks it to be. Here the Lord is alluding to the 'battle that a creature has to fight every single day of his life on earth', and the 'chariot' he describes are the stellar qualities and excellent virtues that a person ought to inculcate in himself in order to win the symbolic battle of life and ace all the life's hurdles, to become stronger and emerge victorious at the end of the day.

²It ought to be noted here that only Vibhishan got worried because Lord Ram had no war chariot at his disposal; none of the monkeys and bears were concerned at all. Why so? It is because the monkeys and bears had never seen Lord Ram or his brother Laxman mounting a chariot till; nearly half of the war was won, and it was done while both the brothers were on foot.

They had witnessed the ferocious battle between Lord Ram and Kumbhakaran while the Lord was on foot; similarly they had witnessed the no-holds barred battle between Laxman and Meghanad while the former was on foot. They had seen Lord Ram and Laxman arriving in Kishkindha on foot, and then leading the attack on the demon army from the front as their commander-in-chief while being on foot.

The monkeys and bears themselves fought and won the many great battles without the privilege of a chariot, arms and armaments, or any other paraphernalia of warfare such as horses, elephants etc. that an army is supposed to have, and which the demons did have. They were accustomed to fighting and winning wars using natural means at their disposal, such as teeth, nails, rocks, boulders, trees, and the might and punch of their own muscular bodies.

These monkeys and bears had witnessed how Lord Ram had shot one single arrow that dismantled the crown and the royal umbrella over the head of Ravana, along with breaking to pieces the ear-rings of Mandodar, his queen. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 13—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 14.}

They had also seen how the Lord had remained calm and poised on the battle-field while tackling Meghanad and overcoming his tricks with a pleasant smile; the Lord had shot one arrow that pierced through the veil of illusions that Meghanad had created, dispelling all fears of his army. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 51—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 52.}

Kumbhakaran was Ravana's brother; he had the same sort of physical features like Ravana. He was colossal in size, was most vicious and ruthless, and had dark muscular body like that of a giant. When Kumbhakaran stood before Lord Ram he towered above him like a giant colossus, dwarfing the Lord like an ant standing before an elephant. But the giant and fearsome form of the enemy did not scare the Lord any wee whit, for he bravely faced Kumbhakran and ultimately slayed him; Kumbhakaran's size and ferocity did not deter Lord Ram.

To wit, the monkeys and bears were not at all concerned that Lord Ram was on foot while Ravana was riding a formidable war chariot. They were confident that if the need arose then they would dump a heavy mountain on the chariot and crush it to a pulp, pulverizing Ravana along with it.

But Vibhishan was used to seeing wars being fought using the usual means and paraphernalia of war; so he was worried. Even when his brother Ravana had launched his many campaigns against the gods of heaven, the fighting was on equal terms because the gods too used arms, chariots etc. to battle Ravana and his troops.

Hence, from the viewpoint of Vibhishan, this was a very unconventional way that a war was being fought, with one king (Lord Ram) on foot and the other king (Ravana) mounting a chariot!]

नाथ न रथ नहिं तन पद त्राना । केहि बिधि जितब बीर बलवाना ॥ ३ ॥ सुनहु सखा कह कृपानिधाना । जेहिं जय होइ सो स्यंदन आना ॥ ४ ॥ nātha na ratha nahim tana pada trānā. kēhi bidhi jītaba bīra balavānā. 3.

sunahu sakhā kaha krpānidhānā. jēhim jaya hō'i sō syandana ānā. 4.

[Vibhishan said despondently to Lord Ram—] ‘Oh Lord. You have neither a chariot, nor a protective shield or armour for your body, or anything to put on your feet. Say then oh Lord, how would you attain victory over this formidable enemy under this situation, with the limitations that you face?’ (3)

Lord Ram, who is an embodiment of mercy, compassion and grace, comforted Vibhishan with this reply: ‘Listen my friend (sunahu sakhā). The chariot that grants victory is a different one. [To wit, the chariot that leads a man to victory is different from the physical chariot you are talking about.]¹ (4)

[Note—¹What follows is Lord Ram's great Gospel given to Vibhishan on the battle-field of Lanka, highlighting the divine qualities and excellent characters that would entitle a person to gain victory over the obstacles that he may face in his daily day-to-day life in this world, and thereby attain good fame for himself. It points out the stellar qualities one ought to inculcate in himself in order to attain success in all his endeavours and fields of activity in life. These are noble virtues that make a man great and worthy; they hand-hold him and take him successfully across the rough sea of life; they help him attain stability of mind and confidence in himself while facing the many inconsistencies and contingencies of life.

This wonderful discourse can be called “The Chariot Of God—the Dharma Ratha” as it has a divine spiritual message for the whole world, a message that can transform the life of the people and the world as a whole, bringing heaven right at our doorsteps if taken seriously by everyone.

Vibhishan was talking about a war chariot, but Lord Ram used this opportunity to teach him about the principles of obtaining success in all spheres of life and come out victorious from the battle symbolized by the constant miseries and torments that a man faces in this world in his life. The Lord explained to him the grand principles of morality, ethics, righteousness, propriety and probity—in essence, the laws of Dharma that protects a person like body-armour, can be used by him to vanquish all his negative and sinful tendencies as well as the thick layer of faults and blemishes that have accumulated around his Atma due to these sins and demeanours, because they act like a formidable enemy for a man. A physical enemy can at the most harm a person's body which is nevertheless mortal and perishable, but the lack of good virtues are like an internal enemy that kills the prospects of his Atma from finding peace, bliss, tranquility, happiness and liberty.

It is interesting to note that Lord Ram is honoured as being 'one who is an abode of mercy, kindness and grace' ('Kripaanidhaan'—'Kripaa' means mercy and kindness; 'Nidhaan' means an abode). This is to indicate that the Lord is gracious and kind enough to use this opportunity of removing the doubts of Vibhishan to preach to the world at large something of great value which would be of great help for the rest of the creatures to overcome formidable obstacles that all of them face in their lives in this world to a greater or lesser degree. The principles outlined by the Lord will act as a guide and moral reference manual for all of them to show them the path of victory in life and how to surmount all obstacles and hurdles easily so that victory is obtained by them against all odds.

Another point to note is that Lord Ram addresses Vibhishan as a 'friend'—implying that he is about to reveal some secrets of success in life to him because Vibhishan is his friend, and therefore a saintly person. Spiritual secrets should be told to a competent person only, for otherwise it is wasteful to tell unworthy people. And being the Lord's friend, Vibhishan must be assured that the Lord will undoubtedly win the war, and that he need not harbour unnecessary worries as these will have a negative impact on morale.

This discourse resonates with the one that Lord Krishna gave to Arjun on the battle-field of Kurushetra that came to be known as the famed 'Gita of Krishna'.

Meanwhile, we shall read by-and-by that the gods did send a divine chariot to Lord Ram during the final phases of the battle with Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 89.]

सौरज धीरज तेहि रथ चाका । सत्य सील दृढ़ ध्वजा पताका ॥ ५ ॥ sauraja dhīraja tēhi ratha cākā. satya sīla dṛṛha dhvajā patākā. 5.

[Lord Ram now describes the various parts that constitute the glorious 'Chariot of Dharma'.

These parts are metaphoric representations of the golden rules of conduct and grand qualities that a person must possess in order to be successful in life and overcome all obstacles that he faces during the course of his life in this tumultuous world. Riding a symbolic chariot that is made up of these auspicious virtues, any person is sure to obtain victory in the long battle against all odds in this life to emerge victorious and glorious.]

The two noble virtues of 'Sauraj' (valour; bravery) and 'Dhiraj' (courage; patience; resilience; fortitude; forbearance) are the two metaphoric or symbolic wheels of this Chariot (which takes a person to his moral victory and gives him glory and conquest against all odds in life).

The two flags or standards flying on this Chariot are the two virtues of ‘Satya’ (truthfulness and honesty) and ‘Sheel’ (good character and conduct; politeness, civility and courteousness; humility, good manners and etiquette). (5)

[Note—As we have by now read, Lord Ram is describing a symbolic ‘Chariot of Dharma’. Just like a warrior is able to obtain victory against a formidable enemy if he is provided with a strong war-chariot, any person who rides a Chariot of Dharma is able to conquer the world as well as vanquish all his enemies represented by all the various hurdles that he faces in life to emerge victorious and glorious.

Just like any ordinary chariot, the fabulous Chariot of Dharma also consists of various parts, and all of them are necessary to make the complete Chariot. In other words, a person must inculcate all of them in his life, give all of them equal importance and attention, for even if one fails to reach the required standard the Chariot of Dharma will be weakened to that extent. And then chances of total and comprehensive success in life will be reduced to the extent that any of these virtues are lacking in strength.

Even as any ordinary chariot needs two robust wheels to move, the Chariot of Dharma needs the two primary virtues of ‘Sauraj’ and ‘Dhiraj’ to enable the person to ride to his victory. Obviously it is true—for without courage and fortitude, without patience and resilience no one can expect any big and sustainable success in life.

In ancient times, chariots had only two wheels instead of four, whether they were war chariots or civilian chariots. This is endorsed in the first of the four Vedas, i.e. the most ancient one known as the Rik Veda, which describe such chariots—the war chariot is described in its Mandal 6, Sukta (hymn) no. 75, and the civilian chariot in its Mandal 10, Sukta no. 85.

The two virtues of ‘Satya’ and ‘Sheel’ make him honourable and respected in society; a person who has these two virtues is shown the highest adoration in this world. Any success that is obtained by pretensions and deceit is dishonorable and contemptible. Then, success should not make a man pride, haughty and arrogant—i.e. he should have ‘Sheel’ in him inspite of the glories he acquires. This goes on to fortify his conquest—for if he is truthful and trustworthy as well as polite and kind, he is lauded and remembered for generations to come after he is dead and gone. Otherwise he is loathed and despised by all, even by them who praise him out of fear of reprisals.

The flag mounted on the chariot of a king stands for his authority, glory and fame. It is seen from far away even though the chariot is yet not visible. Hence, if a man has Satya and Sheel in his character, then his name and glory spreads to even the world’s remotest corner inspite of his never setting foot there in his life. This is tantamount to the conquest of the world—a conquest in which not a single drop of blood is shed. For instance, Lord Buddha’s glory and name has spread over the world even though he did not move anywhere, and preached non-violence in deed and words.

During a war, if the standard or flag of the king falls it symbolizes his defeat; the army surrenders or flees as soon as the flag is felled. Similarly, if a man compromises with these two noble virtues of Satya and Sheel, than he is deemed to be as good as being defeated.]

बल बिबेक दम परहित घोरे । छमा कृपा समता रजु जोरे ॥ ६ ॥

bala bibēka dama parahita ghōrē. chamā kṛpā samatā raju jōrē. 6.

This Chariot of Dharma has four magnificent horses—they are the four noble virtues of ‘Bal’ (strength; power; authority; force; energy; dynamism), ‘Vivek’ (wisdom; discriminatory powers and abilities; intelligence; rationality; discretion), ‘Dam’ (self-restraint; self-control), and ‘Parhita’ (to do good to other; be diligent towards other’s welfare, happiness and well-being; benevolence, graciousness and magnanimity).

The reins or fasteners that tie them together and keep them in order are the three grand virtues of ‘Kshamaa’ (forgiveness), ‘Kripaa’ (mercy; grace; compassion), and ‘Samtaa’ (equanimity; equality; evenness of mind) (6)

[Note—Next important part of a chariot is the horse. The Chariot of Dharma is pulled by these four symbolic horses representing the four glorious virtues as listed above. In other words, one must carry on with his life and its duties energetically and without losing courage and patience (‘Bal’), taking all decisions wisely, intelligently and rationally (‘Vivek’), all the while exercising great self-control over the mind and the sense organs of the body and keeping them under tight leash to prevent them from falling prey to temptations and other traps laid out by the deluding world (‘Dam’), and be mindful about the welfare and well-being of the creature around him so that any of his actions or deeds or words may not harm them in true spirit of non-violence as well as the eclectic philosophy of non-duality whereby one is expected to see the same Supreme Being in each individual living being known as the Jiva (‘Parhita’).

If a man has these four virtues in him, his chariot of life is driven smoothly like a physical chariot in which the horses are well trained and tamed.

Then again, the reins that are used to control the horses are symbolized by the three virtues of forgiveness and tolerance (‘Kshamaa’), compassion, mercy and grace (‘Kripaa’), and equanimity and evenness of mind (‘Samtaa’). A charioteer knows the wisdom of maintaining his cool and poise when riding a chariot—he has to control the horses, keep an eye on the road, skirt dangers such as holes and obstacles on the path, and avoid hurting passers-by. Even if some of the horses act wildly, even if the people met in the way act rudely or make disparaging remarks, the charioteer should not lose his cool and mind, for if he gets angry and loses his composure at provocations he will not be properly able to focus on riding the chariot which would start rocking and ultimately lead to some sort of accident, minor or major.

Therefore, to ensure that the Chariot of Dharma reaches its destination comfortably, the wise person must inculcate these virtues along with other virtues also because any chariot can reach its destination only when it is pulled by horses, and these horses need to be tamed, and properly harnessed and bridled.

The first virtue listed in this line is ‘Bal’ which literally means strength, force, powers and authority that a person possesses. There are said to be seven kinds of Bals—viz. (i) ‘Vairagya Bal’—the stupendous moral and spiritual strength that comes with true renunciation, detachment, dispassion and non-involvement in any thing related to this mundane, deluding and mortal world of sense objects and their allurements; (ii) ‘Shaairak Bal’—or the strength, stamina, vigour, energy, dynamism, potent, valour and abilities of the physical body, such as the strength of one’s arm and that which comes with a muscular body; (iii) ‘Buddhi Bal’—or the strength of one’s intellect and wisdom; (iv) ‘Tapa Bal’—or the astounding mystical powers that one accesses by doing Tapa, which means austerity, penance and sufferance of hardship for some noble cause which hardens a man from the inside; (v) ‘Yoga Bal’—or the fabulous mystical powers that come to a person by the virtue of his doing Yoga, which means doing meditation in a comprehensive manner as this bestows stupendous powers to its practitioner; (vi) ‘Sainya Bal’—or the power that comes with a strong army of a kingdom; and (vii) ‘Atma Bal’—or the inherent strength that the Atma possesses, which can be translated as self-confidence and grit.

The second virtue is ‘Vivek’ which literally means wisdom, intelligence, an analytical mind, and the ability to discriminate between the right and the wrong. It also incorporates the ability to have insight and foresight. If a man possesses these virtues then naturally he is able to smoothly overcome all problems of life because he analyses each development and selects the best course of action that will suit his objectives in life. Such a man never acts in haste and impulse; his actions are well-thought of and planned.

The third virtue is ‘Dam’ meaning self-restraint and self-control. This is a very important instrument in the hands of a person to by-pass many problems in life that are easily overcome or avoided by merely exercising restraint over one’s emotions and body. This virtue helps one to overcome temptations and entanglements with the world of material objects and their multifarious delusions and false charms. ‘Dam’ helps prevent greed and yearning; it helps get rid of such negativity as jealousy, envy and malice; it fosters peace and contentment of the mind; it prevents the mind to be wayward and instead helps it to be focused on the job at hand.

The fourth virtue is ‘Parhita’—or keeping in mind the good and well-being of others. This naturally fosters goodwill and brotherhood; a man who thinks good of others is invariably liked by everyone, and even his opponents fear annoying him as they know that the society will take his side. There is no better principle of Dharma as thinking and doing good of others, and to make others suffer is the worst sin one can commit—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 41 wherein Lord Ram has himself endorsed this virtue of ‘Parhita’ in a person as being the best one.

The next three virtues of ‘Kshamaa’ (forgiveness), ‘Kripaa’ (benevolence, grace, mercy and compassion) and ‘Samtaa’ (equanimity and forbearance; treating everyone and everything alike) go hand in hand. If a person has them, he is elevated to an exalted position in the world that would be no less than that of Lord Ram himself, because the Lord is famous as being an ocean of these three grand and eclectic moral and spiritual virtues.

Usually it is observed that when one becomes powerful and strong, when one acquires authority and fame by observance of the other virtues, then these three virtues become the first casualty. To possess them in addition to the other great virtues mentioned in this line ensures that a man is eligible for getting acclaim and honour that come with being truly successful in life.

An interesting point emerges by reading this verse. It mentions four horses but only three fasteners. The question arises how are the four horses controlled by mere three fasteners? Well, in war-chariots, two horses are bridled in the front row, and just behind them is the pair of the other two horses. The horses in the front row are tied together by two fasteners on either side, while those behind them in the second row need only one fastener as they follow their companions in the front. Another interpretation is that the horses are bridled on the right and the left by two strong fasteners, and a third is used to guide them in the straight direction. A charioteer has three reins in his hands with which he is able to manoeuvre the chariot in any direction he wishes—to the right, to the left and straight ahead. The implication is clear—the Chariot of Dharma must be controlled by observing the three cardinal principles of Kshamaa, Kripaa and Samtaa. Otherwise it will be rocked and go out of control.

Another interesting observation is the placement of the four horses. The first pair of horses is represented by the first two virtues of 'Bal' and 'Vivek'; they are fastened by the first two fasteners of 'Kshamaa' and 'Kripaa'. Behind them are the two horses represented by the other two pair of virtues, viz. 'Dam' and 'Parhita', and they are fastened by 'Samtaa'. This sequence is deduced from the way these virtues are mentioned in the verse itself.]

ईस भजनु सारथी सुजाना । बिरति चर्म संतोष कृपाना ॥ ७ ॥

īsa bhajanu sārathī sujānā. birati carma santōṣa kṛpānā. 7.

[Now, after describing the chariot, Lord Ram describes who the charioteer is.]

Worshipping the Lord God and having devotion, affection and adoration for him is the symbolic the clever and expert charioteer of this divine Chariot.

The virtue of 'Virati' (Vairagya or renunciation, detachment and dispassion) is the strong shield, and the virtue of 'Santosh' (satisfaction; contentment) is like the sword. (7)

[Note—The charioteer is the person who is responsible for guiding the chariot and taking the warrior to his victory in the battle. So, if a person has devotion for Lord God, if he worships the Lord with faith and sincerity, then it is sure that the Lord God would protect him and guide his destiny to victory against all odds and tumult of life. One must offer his security and future in the trustworthy, strong, expert and caring hands of the Lord even as a warrior reposes his in the hands of an expert and wise charioteer.

The fact that when one leaves his destiny and welfare in the hands of Lord Ram, the incarnate Supreme Being, the latter takes full responsibility for the former is endorsed in Ram Charit Manas, 1/39/5 which essentially says that “none of the obstacles of life create any problem for a man on whom Lord Ram looks benevolently”. And the Lord looks mercifully and benevolently and graciously, with special care and attention, on those who have surrendered themselves to the Lord and have deep love, devotion, trust and faith in him, who worship the Lord as their only solace and succour—refer: Ram Charit Manas (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1 and 5 that precede Doha no. 36 when Lord Ram has preached Sabari; (ii) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precedes Doha no. 43 when Lord Ram preached Narad; and (iii) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 129 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede it, Doha no. 130 along with Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes it, and then Doha no. 131 where sage Valmiki has listed the places where Lord Ram should live.

Obviously, when the almighty Lord of creation favours a person and vows to take care of him, no other force will be able to disturb his peace of mind or harm his interests.

Now, we have a strong chariot, well-trained and tamed horses, a strong rein, and an expert charioteer. What is now needed by the warrior is his personal armour and weapon. These are described next—the shield is represented by the virtue of 'Virati', and the sword by 'Santosh' as narrated in this verse. The shield is used to protect oneself against harm, and the sword is used to cut through the ranks of the attacking enemy.

If one has inculcated the eclectic virtue of detachment and dispassion, then he is able to overcome all temptations and allurements of the world, as well as the constantly annoying desire of the sense organs of his body seeking self gratification. The virtue of ‘Virati’ helps him to ward off all sorts of delusions and temptations, and the sword of ‘Santosh’ aids him in this endeavour to cut off any remaining residual effects of delusions that may be lurking and manage to sneak in unnoticed to corrupt his mind and sub-conscious.

It happens usually that one is able to turn away from temptations in the first instance, but later on his sub-conscious mind keeps nagging at him to yield ground. We can understand this phenomenon by a simple example. Suppose a man is advised by his doctor to avoid sweets. When a delicious sweetmeat is brought to him in platter full, he may resist the temptation of indulging in it right then and turns his head away, but his sub-conscious will not forget the dish so easily and would keep on nagging at him till the time he surreptitiously binges on the box of the sweet stored in the fridge in the kitchen. Otherwise he wouldn’t be able to sleep peacefully. This is what is meant in this verse. Even if a wise man is able to overcome all temptations and allurements of the world at the first sight by employing his grand virtue of ‘Virati’, he still needs the sword of ‘Santosh’ to overcome their long-term lingering effects.

A sword cuts on both sides; it is swung right, left and vertical. In other words, with practicing the virtue of Santosh, the spiritual aspirant is able to conquer the three main enemies of his, viz. ‘Kaam’ (passions and lust; desires and yearnings; greed and rapacity), ‘Krodha’ (anger that comes when Kaam is not fulfilled or requited), and ‘Moha’ (attractions, attachments and infatuations that Kaam generates). This observation is endorsed in Ram Charit Manas as follows—(i) Greed dries up contentment; hence to use the latter to cut off the former before it attacks is important: refer—Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 16; (ii) Without Santosh it is not possible to eliminate Kaam: refer—Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 90; (iii) One’s anger, the desire to use strong language against one’s opponent and wreak vengeance upon him continues to increase if one is not satisfied fully and happy that his opponent has been sufficiently humiliated or defeated: refer—Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 274.]

दान परसु बुधि सक्ति प्रचंडा । बर बिग्यान कठिन कोदंडा ॥ ८ ॥

dāna parasu budhi sakti praçaṇḍā. bara bigyāna kaṭhina kōdaṇḍā. 8.

The virtue of being charitable, making donations and giving alms liberally, known as ‘Daan’, is the strong battle-axe.

The ‘Buddhi’ (sharp intellect and discriminatory powers; the analytical and rational mind) is like the most powerful and potent Shakti (energized arrow; a sharp spear).

And a highly developed ‘Vigyan’ (deep knowledge of anything; the ability to have insight into anything in order to understand that aspect of it which is subtle and hidden from view) is akin to a strong and robust bow. (8)

[Note—Here we have three powerful weapons—the battle-axe, the arrow or spear, and the bow. The bow is held in the hand; the arrow and the spear are thrown at the enemy; and the battle-axe is used both ways.

‘Daan’ is one of the four main forms of Dharma as described in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 103 Kha which says—“Dharma has four limbs (‘Satya’ or truthfulness, ‘Dayaa’ or mercy, ‘Tapa’ or austerity, and ‘Daan’ or giving of alms and making charity), but in Kali-Yug (i.e. in the present era of the 4-era one cycle of creation and destruction) Daan is the main limb of Dharma. One should therefore make charities and give alms to the best of his ability.”

In this verse, ‘Daan’ is described as being equivalent to the battle-axe because it makes even one’s enemy as one’s friend. Charity and magnanimity makes a man endeared to all, even his opponent is subdued by his attitude. A charitable man is welcomed everywhere, and everyone comes forward to help him should he himself fall on bad times. This noble virtue in any man acts to protect him against all misfortunes that may befall him in life—hence it is likened to an axe. Again, since donations are made and charities are given by the man using his own hand, the simile is apt.

‘Buddhi’ is used by a wise man to deal with the current situation as well as plan for the future. It is used by a wise man to overcome sticky situations and avoid such eventualities from occurring in the future. Even the greatest of difficulties are overcome with intelligent handling of any situation, while foolishness lands a man in grave trouble unnecessarily. This is metaphorically depicted in the form of an arrow and a spear. The ‘arrow’ is thrown at the enemy, while the ‘spear’ is used either by throwing or holding in hand. The reach of the arrow is far longer as compared to the spear. So, ‘Buddhi’ helps a wise man to overcome difficulties of life in the short as well as the long run.

But Buddhi cannot work alone; it works together with ‘Vigyan’. This is the metaphoric ‘bow’. Even as one needs a bow to use the arrow, one needs Vigyan to use the Buddhi properly.

In other words, intelligence, wisdom, knowledge, deep insight, analytical and discriminatory abilities, the ability to decide what is the correct and right path and what is not, to have insight and foresight, to be conscientious and sensitive, and such other grand virtues of the mind and sub-conscious—all must work in coordination to help a person to reach his goal in life.]

अमल अचल मन त्रोन समाना । सम जम नियम सिलीमुख नाना ॥ ९ ॥ amala acala mana trōna samānā. sama jama niyama silimukha nānā. 9.

The Mana (mind and heart) that is clean, pure, steady and stable is like the quiver.

The grand virtues of ‘Sham’ (control of the mind), ‘Yam’ (self-control and abstinence that leads to quietitude and peace of the mind), and ‘Niyam’ (observance of various religious duties, vows and sacraments) are like the many arrows (in the quiver that the warrior carries and uses). (9)

[Note—A clear and stable mind can think properly. If it is fickle and unsteady, it will make the man fidgety and restless. Steadiness of mind and purity of heart are the essential requirements to be successful in any enterprise, because this makes the entire endeavour righteous and auspicious. In the field of Yoga it is unequivocally stated that the purity of mind and heart are essential for success in it because they help the aspirant to fully concentrate his attention on the subject that he deals with, without wavering and jumping from one subject to another and landing nowhere.]

A warrior carries many types of arrows. Thus, a reference is made here to the various limbs of Yoga which work together to help the practitioner achieve his objective for which he had started doing Yoga in the first place—to find peace, to find spiritual enlightenment and freedom, and to establish oneness between his own ‘self’ known as the Atma and the cosmic ‘Self’ known as the Parmatma or the Supreme Atma which is equivalent to realisation of the Supreme Consciousness.

The Upanishads dealing with the concept of Yoga as well as Patanjali’s Yogsutra explain these different limbs of Yoga cited in the present verse. Now let us examine the virtues of Sham, Yam, Niyam etc. in brief.

There are said to be eight steps or branches or limbs or paths of Yoga as follows—Yam, Niyam, Aasan, Pranyam, Prayahar, Dharna, Dhyan and Samadhi.

(1) Yam—broadly meaning self restraint and it covers such virtues as non-violence (Ahinsa), honesty and truthfulness (Stya), abhorring theft (Asteya), abstinence, celibacy and detachment from passions (Brahmacharya), and non-accumulation and non-possession (Aparigraha).

(ii) Niyam—or observance of principles or codes of conduct in a religious pursuit. Such as having good habits and contentment, observing austerities and doing penances, self-study of scriptures, following a righteous, virtuous and noble way of life, and etc.

According to Skanda Puran, the ‘Yam and Niyam’ mentioned above are ten, and they have been described in Skanda Puran in these words:-

The ten ‘Yams’ are—truthfulness, forgiveness, simplicity, Dhyan (meditation, concentration of the mind), lack of cruelty (or presence of compassion and mercy), forsaking violence, restraint of mind and sense organs, pleasant demeanors and sweet towards all).

The ten ‘Niyams’ are—cleanliness/ablution, bath (purification of body), Tapa (austerities, penances, sufferings), alms and charities, keeping silence, Yagya (sacrifices, religious rituals), self study, observance of vows, keeping fasts, celibacy. (Skanda Puran, Bra. Dha. Ma. 5/19-21).

The 10 Yams and 10 Niyams—These have been described in (i) the Varaaha Upanishad of Krishna Yajur Veda tradition, Canto 5, verse nos 11-14; and (ii) the Shandilya Upanishad of Atharva Veda, Canto 1, sections 1-2.

The Shandilya Upanishad of Atharva Veda, Canto 1, section 1 lists the ten Yams and section 2 lists the ten Niyams as follows—

“Canto 1, section 1 = The eight branches of Yoga are the following—Yam (self-control), Niyam (observation of spiritual laws or rules), Aasan (sitting postures), Pranayam (breath control), Pratyahar (restraint of the mind), Dharna (belief), Dhyan (concentration of mind; remembrance) and Samadhi (trance-like state of permanence in Yoga).

Yam and Niyam are of ten types each, Aasans are of eight types, Pranayam has three phases, both Pratyahar and Dharna have five types each, Dhyan is of two types, while Samadhi is of only one type with no variations.

The ten types or aspects of Yam are the following—Ahinsa (non-violence), Satya (truthfulness), Asteya (non-stealing), Brahmacharya (abstinence, continence, celibacy), Daya (mercy), Saralta (simplicity, humility), Kshama (forgiveness), Dhairya (patience), Alpa-ahar (moderation in eating), and Pavitra (purity and cleanliness).

[Now, each of these terms are being defined—] ‘Ahinsa’ means not harming or causing pain to any creature, at any time, and by any means—not by one’s thoughts or involvement of the mind in any way, not by speech or words, not by the body and its actions. [That is, non-violence should be holistic and comprehensive in nature—it is not limited to only avoiding physical cruelty or aggression but also includes mental and verbal aspects.]

‘Satya’ means to tell, honestly, truthfully and with the greatest sincerity one can have, whatever is for the good and true welfare of the other person, whether he likes it or not. This would involve the mind and its thoughts, the speech and the words used to tell the truth, and the body that implements this truth in the shape of deeds done by it and actions taken by it. [That is, Satya involves not telling things simply because they might appear pleasing to the hearer, or said out of some vested interest at stake, but to say things which are genuinely in the interest and long-term good of the other person. Such things might be unpleasant to hear in the beginning and might even cause rebuke or ill-will for the speaker of the truth, but they give the speaker or the advisor great mental and spiritual satisfaction for having spoken the truth without deceit or fear, besides helping to create positive vibrations around him, and ushering in an atmosphere of trust and brotherhood.]

‘Asteya’ broadly means non-stealing, and it includes the idea of keeping one’s self aloof from the wealth of others, of not being attracted towards such assets that do not rightly belong to one’s own self, of eyeing the wealth of others with envy and jealousy, of having a greed for them, yearning for them, and waiting for an opportunity to either harm them or deprive the other person of his possessions, or usurping and grabbing the assets rightfully belonging to others by any crooked or deceitful means one can think of. This neutrality and non-lusting must be genuine and sincere, and should involve one’s mind and its thoughts, one’s speech, as well as one’s body and the deeds done by it or actions taken by it. One should be sincere in not being tempted by the wealth of others, and of course this would involve the mind and the sub-conscious which must be duly trained and cultured. [That is, one must never be envious of other people’s prosperity and acquisitions; one must never allow the mind to ever contemplate of harming these assets or plan to grab them by force or conceit. Similarly, one must never allow the speech to ever utter a word of jealousy and say anything that might harm these assets simply because they belong to others, or create prejudice against the rightful possessor of such assets. One must not allow the body to do anything that would in anyway, directly or indirectly, cause harm to the assets that belong to others. Since the general meaning of the word ‘Asteya’ is ‘non-stealing’ it follows that even mental greed or yearning for something that belongs to others, and imagining how good it would have been if it belonged to me, is as good as the actual stealing of it. When the Upanishads talk about implementation of any principle, they imply a wholesome attitude and a holistic approach towards it, and not only physical aspect of it such as its literal implementation which is devoid of the spirit of the doctrine. Not physically able to steal anything but be mentally obsessive about it is as good as actually stealing it. In other words, the purity of mind, sub-conscious and intellect are as important as the physical act of abstaining from stealing.]

‘Brahmacharya’ is to abstain from all sexual activities or any kind of indulgences and unrestrained behaviour involving the mind, the speech as well as the physical body and its sense organs under all circumstances. [That is, mere observance of physical celibacy is not enough. One must observe total control over the mind and its faculties so that they are not allowed even to think of any lustful subject or indulge in any inauspicious, unrighteous, unethical, immoral and improper thoughts related to sense gratification or attractions of the material sense objects of the world. One must never think or talk about sensual subjects that arouse passions and disturb the tranquility of the mind. One must never allow the gross organs of the body to be attracted towards objects of self gratification, or of sensual pleasures and comforts. In short, all sensual attractions, all forms of indulgences, all instances of temptations, all examples of self-gratification, and all sorts of unrestrained behaviour of the mind, the speech and the body are covered by the term Brahmacharya. It means total and comprehensive self-restraint or self-control in all spheres of life, and not just of the organs of sensual pleasures.]

‘Daya’ refers to having compassion and mercy towards all the creatures, to be graceful and kind towards all, from the lowly and the humblest to the highest and the exalted.

‘Aarjav’ or ‘Dhairya’ means to have exemplary tolerance, fortitude, courage, forbearance, resilience and patience of mind, to be immensely steady in one’s thoughts and behaviour, to restrict one’s speech and desist from speaking any wrong word against anyone or to anyone, and to keep the body under strict control and not react under any kind of provocation or situation, whether favourable or unfavourable. It implies that a person remains completely neutral and equanimous when faced by favourable and expected circumstances, or by unfavourable and untoward ones.

‘Kshama’ implies to be truly forgiving and un-affected by any offense caused by the other person, to bear with stoic calmness, equanimity, forbearance and a sense of neutrality all sorts of behaviour one has to face from others, whether done inadvertently or purposely, whether such behaviour is favourable or unfavourable, whether it is likable or not. One must be exemplarily calm, unruffled and be forgiving towards others, whether one is praised and honoured by them, or criticized and humiliated by them. One must be sincerely forgiving for any kind of mischief, any kind of misdeed, kind of transgression, any kind of provocative behaviour, any sort of insults, aspersions, asides or insinuations inflicted or cast upon him by other person, directly or indirectly, or by situations created by his adversary that lead to him being subjected to humiliation and insult. Kshama involves remaining unruffled and completely calm, both emotionally as well as sentimentally, under all prevailing situations and under all instigations. One must not harbour any animosity, ill-will, a sense of grievance, a feeling of hatred or a desire for revenge against anyone, or for any deed done by the latter, which has in any way harmed one’s own interest or even has been a cause of annoyance for him. [Therefore we see that Kshama, Daya and Dhairya go hand in hand; one must accompany the other to give meaning to what is being said in this great Upanishad. It has already been emphasized that a wholesome approach is needed when one reads the Upanishad and hopes to benefit from this eclectic and grand philosophy promoted by it.]

‘Dhriti’ is having equanimity, neutrality, fortitude, firmness and steadiness of mind under all circumstances, even when one is subjected to immense emotional turmoil, both of the positive kind such as having happiness and joys, as well as of the negative kind such as being subjected to immense anguish and pain. [That is, one must remain unruffled and maintain one’s poise and calm under opposing situations—such as the one when he suffers from some great financial loss or loses his dear and near ones on the one hand, or when he begets some great fortune or meets his beloved ones unexpectedly on the other hand.]

‘Alpa-ahar’ is to eat with moderation or restraint. It implies eating only so much as to keep one-fourth of the stomach empty. It also implies eating such things that are soothing for the system and non-irritating by nature, things that are invigorating and energizing for the body. Such eatables are foods that are soothing for the digestive system, as well as sweet, pleasant and comforting for the body in general. Some of such eatables are clarified butter (Ghee) of the best quality, unadulterated milk, and other such things.

‘Shauch’ means to be clean and purified both externally as well as internally. While external cleanliness can be done by rubbing the body with clay and washing off the dirt with water, internal cleanliness and purity is achieved by keeping the mind, the sub-conscious and the intellect free from all sorts of taints, corruptions and negativities, and instead concentrating their efforts towards auspicious and righteous endeavours such as on spiritualism and attainment of the Truth. [Both sorts of cleaning are necessary. One should keep the physical body clean because it is the residence of the Atma, the pure ‘self’, and if the residence is dirty and filthy it would create a negative environment for the Atma, causing the latter restlessness and having a negative impact on its nature. Further, the body is regarded as the temple of the Lord because this Atma is a miniature form of the cosmic Atma known as the ‘Parmatma’, the Supreme Being. Just like a man keeps his place of worship, the ‘shrine’, physically clean so as to maintain its sanctity, it is equally important to keep one’s body clean as it is the abode of the ‘personal deity’ known as the Atma. But this body is driven by the mind and its various faculties, and therefore to ensure that the personal shrine of the Atma in the form of the physical body is able to maintain its sanctity and credibility it is imperative to keep the internal apparatus clean and uncorrupt. If the mind and its components are not clean then no matter how clean the external body may be it is of no good to the spiritual aspirant, for sooner rather than latter the body would fall prey to the many temptations of the corrupt world and their attending delusions. Therefore, all efforts of the mind should be diverted away from the falsehoods of the material world of the sense objects and focused on the Atma and the universal truth of the conscious ‘self’.] (1).

“Canto 1, section 2 = 1. The term ‘Niyam’ (literally meaning certain rules and regulations that one is strictly expected to follow in order to be successful in one’s endeavour) applies to the following observances—Tapa (austerity, penance and sufferance for some noble and auspicious cause), Santosh (contentedness), Astik (to be a believer), Daan (to give charity and make alms), Ishwar-poojan (worship of God), Siddhanta-srawan (listening to the tenets and doctrines of the scriptures being explained), Hri (shame, prudence, modesty and self-respect), Mati (thoughts, intellect, sense, understanding, inclination, convictions, desires of the mind, and being mindfulness of one’s duties and ethical behaviour), Japa (repetition of Mantras), and Vrat (religious fasting, observing austerity, keeping righteous vows and strict self-control or self-restraint).

[Now, each of these terms would be explained in a holistic way.] The term ‘Tapa’ in the context of Yoga (meditation) is to observe various religious sacraments such as the ‘Krischa Chandrayan¹’ which helps the body to become thin, energized, fit, reactivated and detoxified, as well as shed its unnecessary flab and burden of ailments.

‘Santosh’ means to be satisfied and contented with whatever is available by providence, and never to greed or yearn or wish for more.

‘Aastik’ (believing) implies that one should sincerely believe in what the Vedas have said about religion and other spiritual matters.

‘Daan’ is to give alms to the poor, make donations and charities to the deserving, with due respect to the dignity and self respect of the recipient or the beneficiary, without expecting anything in return. These charities and donations must be made out of the wealth that has been obtained by rightful means, and which rightly belongs to the person who gives such alms, or makes donations or charities. [In other words, if charities are made to humiliate others, to demean their spirits and social standing, to show them that they are underprivileged, unfortunate and inferior to the donor, to create a situation when the other members of the society become lazy, indolent and unproductive in the expectation of getting largesse without making efforts to meet their requirements by doing deeds, or to show off one's wealth and majesty, or to reap some sort of worldly fame and name as a philanthropic person etc., or if such charities or alms are made out of assets acquired by unlawful and unethical means—then such alms, charities and donations are deemed to be null and void.]

'Ishwar-poojan' is to honour, to offer respectful worship and to pay sincere obeisance to the Supreme Being in his various manifestations, such as Lord Vishnu (the second of the Trinity Gods, the sustainer and protector of creation, and the Lord who had manifested as various incarnations on earth) and Lord Shiva (the third of the Trinity Gods, the concluser of creation and the patron God of ascetics) amongst others. Such worship and honour should be done cheerfully, with great devotion and faith, and by following the proper sanctified method for this purpose as narrated in the scriptures.

'Siddhanta-srawan' is to attentively hear the tenets and doctrines of the Vedas and the Upanishads being explained by those who are well-versed in them, those who are highly erudite and extremely learned in the finer nuances and intricacies of these great scriptures.

'Hri' (shame, modesty, self-respect and dignity) is to feel ashamed at one's own self for doing something that goes against the eclectic doctrines of Dharma (ethics, morality, righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety and correct thought and action). Therefore, it also entails that one avoids doing anything that is regarded as unholy, lowly, demeaning, degrading and despicable by the Vedas as well as by traditional wisdom and universally accepted convention.

'Mati' (thoughts, intellect, sense, understanding, inclination, convictions, desires of the mind, and being mindful of one's duties and ethical behaviour) is to sincerely wish and have an inborn inclination to follow the tenets of the Vedas. It would include proper training of the mind-intellect apparatus to think and contemplate rightly, correctly and with a positive attitude about the right things and in a right perspective. One should therefore turn away from those things that are demeaning and degrading for the soul, and which undermine the exalted stature of one's divine 'self'.

'Japa' is to honestly practice (repeat and meditate upon) the Vedic Mantra (hymn) that has been prescribed by one's Guru (moral preceptor). Japa is done in two ways—one is verbal or audible Japa, and the other is non-verbal or mental or silent Japa. The mental or silent form of Japa is done by repeating the Mantra mentally in a silent mode without uttering a word audibly, and involves concentration of the mind and turning its thoughts inwards. The verbal or audible form of Japa is again of two types—viz. one that is done loudly, and the other that is simply muttered. The Japa done while muttering the Mantras silently is thousands of times more beneficial than doing Japa loudly, and mental Japa that is done silently without even opening the lips is far better than even the one done by slowly muttering the words, and it is multiple times more beneficial.

'Vrat' (observance of religious vows) is to diligently, steadfastly, honestly, consistently and regularly follow the different eclectic principles, the doctrines and the tenets of the Vedas and the Upanishads—to avoid things that are proscribed by them, and do things that are prescribed by them (1).

{¹The word ‘Chandrayan’ means ‘following the phase of the moon’, while ‘Krischa’ means to become thin and lean. Hence, the term Krischa Chandrayan means to make the body thin by strictly restricting the diet according to the established system of doing the Chandrayan Vrat. Hence it involves restricting one’s food intake by strictly following the phase of the moon—reducing it gradually during the waning phase of the moon, and increasing it in a step-by-step reverse order in which it was reduced during the waxing phase of the moon.

The Hindu scriptures have prescribed a number of methods of atonement for one’s misdeeds and expiations for sins. The Chandrayan is the universal penance for expiation of almost any kind of sin—especially where no specific remedy is prescribed.

It is so-called as during this exercise one follows the phase of the moon in his eating habits. Starting with fifteen morsels of food on the full-moon day it is gradually reduced by one morsel per day till the new-moon day when not a single morsel is eaten by the aspirant. Then from this day onwards, one morsel per day is increased till the full-moon day when once again he eats fifteen morsels. This is one cycle of the penance. It can be repeated as many times as desired according to the intensity of the sin to be atoned for. This penance is also called ‘Pipillikaamadhyā’ or ‘middle of an ant’ exercise because it starts and ends with full fifteen morsels of food with nil food in the middle.

There is a variation of the Chandrayan described above. In the modified version, the penance is started with one morsel on the full-moon day, gradually increased to fifteen morsels on the new-moon day and then progressively reduced by one morsel each day till the full-moon day when once again only one morsel is eaten. This is called ‘Yavamādhyā’ or ‘middle of the wheat grain’—as this grain is thickest at the center and tapers off at the two ends.

In the third variation, eight morsel of food is eaten each day for a month’s time. This is called ‘Yati-Chandrayan’—or the Chandrayan that is prescribed for wandering ascetics who beg for food for sustenance.

The size of the morsel of food is approximately that of a big myrobalan fruit. A person who undertakes the penance called Chandrayan should tonsure the head, do initial fasting as a preparatory step, offer libations of clarified butter (Ghee) and water to the Gods, consecrate the food before eating it, and worship the Moon God.”}] kavaca abhēda bipra gura pūjā. ēhi sama bijaya upāya na dūjā. 10.

कवच अभेद बिप्र गुर पूजा । एहि सम बिजय उपाय न दूजा ॥ १० ॥

The impenetrable body-armour (the ‘Kavach’) is represented by worshipping and having devotion and faith in Vipras (Brahmins; elderly and learned men) and Guru (moral preceptor, teacher and guide).

Verily, there is no better way to obtain victory in this world; there is no efficacious way than this to attain the glory of conquest. (10)

[Note—The ‘Kavach’ is the closest and the safest thing to protect the warrior. It is usually made of iron either as a plain sheet or as a mesh made of plaited iron chains. It is very sturdy and regarded as the safest protection because it directly protects the body from up close.

Since worshipping Brahmins and paying obeisance to their holy feet is regarded as one of the major auspicious deeds of Dharma (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 45), it is likened to a strong Kavach here because the worshipper gets their blessings and grace which protects him against any evil effects of sins and misdeeds.

Lord Ram has himself told the demon Kabandha—“Look, anyone who worships and serves Brahmins, who are like living gods on earth, by his mind, deed, as well as words and speech, without any deceit and pretensions, verily I say that all the Gods, along with the creator Brahma and the concluder Shiva, as well as myself, become subservient to such a person”—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 33.

Once again this virtue is reiterated by Lord Ram to the citizens of Ayodhya when the Lord told them—“Gods and saints are gracious and benevolent upon a person who serves Brahmins without any deceit and pretensions”. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 45.

We note here that two types of Kavachs are mentioned here—one is worshipping of the Brahmin, and the other is the Guru. It implies that both of them should be given equal importance in one’s life. Whereas Brahmins act as teachers and moral preceptors for the whole world in a general way, keeping themselves engaged in studying the scriptures so as to give advice to the world whenever needed, and carrying out religious duties and doing such deeds as needed for the general welfare of the society at large, the Guru is a personal guide and teacher who cares for the individual’s spiritual and temporal welfare. So while the Brahmin is a representative of the Supreme Being at the macro level of existence, the Guru represents the same Supreme Being at the micro level of the individual.

Another interpretation is that a wise warrior takes extra precaution by wearing a double-breasted suit of armour—so that even if the outer layer is damaged he still gets protection from the inner layer. In the present context this would mean that even if the Brahmins fail to protect him due to some reason, his Guru will always stand by him. The blessing of Brahmins forms the outer ring of protection, and that of the Guru as the inner ring.

Now, we have a strong chariot, well-trained horses, an expert charioteer, powerful and potent weapons, and personal body armour. Surely then, all the paraphernalia for victory are there, and therefore there is no other better way to win a war and obtain conquest. What one now needs is one’s own personal resolve and training, one’s own strength, confidence and commitment. In other words, even if every imaginable instrument and mean for personal enlightenment and spiritual elevation are available to a person, even if he has read all the scriptures and is wise enough to understand them correctly and properly, yet if he does not commit himself whole-heartedly towards his spiritual path of obtaining liberation and deliverance, none of them will provide emancipation and salvation to him automatically. A wise man is he who uses all the available resources most judiciously and properly to reach his desired goal in life.]

सखा धर्ममय अस रथ जाकें । जीतन कहँ न कतहुँ रिपु ताकें ॥ ११ ॥

sakhā dharmamaya asa ratha jākēm. jītana kahañ na katahuñ ripu tākēm.
11.

My friend, anyone who has the kind of Chariot of Dharma which I've described to you above, becomes invincible in this world; no enemy can ever defeat and conquer him. (11)

[Note—The 'chariot' described by Lord Ram is not a physical one, but a metaphoric and symbolic one that stands for the glorious and auspicious virtues a person must inculcate in himself, grand virtues that he must seek and acquire for himself in order to be successful in life even against the most formidable of odds that might seem daunting on their face like a strong and powerful enemy, but they buckle when faced by a man who possesses these magnificent qualities like the enemy crumbling when it faces a stronger warrior.

Lord Ram has described a 'Chariot of Dharma'—that is, a vehicle that can help a spiritual aspirant attain his goals inspite of all the daunting and thorny problems of the world in which he lives. By following the principles of Dharma outlined above, he is rest assured of liberation and deliverance from all fetters and bondages that tie his Atma, his 'pure self', to this mundane world and makes it go round and round in an endless cycle of birth and death along with their accompanying horrors and miseries. Not only this, the journey through life becomes easy and smooth because the aspirant has the security and safety of the Chariot, and the protection of the umbrella of Dharma.

Lord Ram has listed the following twenty-one auspicious virtues that a man must possess if he wishes that the Lord extends him his protection, and if he wishes to become invincible against all the evil effects of this world. The sequential order of the virtues is as follows—Sauraj, Dhiraj, Satya, Sheel (line no. 5), Bal, Vivek, Dam, Parhit, Kshamaa, Kripaa, Samtaa (line no. 6), Bhajan (devotion for Lord God), Virati, Santosh (line no. 7), Daan, Buddhi, Vigyan (line no. 8), Amal (purity) and Achal (steady) Mana (mind), Sama, Yam, Niyam (line no. 9), and worship of Brahmins and Guru (line no. 10).

Now, it will be very pertinent and interesting to examine the presence of all these magnificent and divine virtues in Lord Ram himself as depicted at different places in different contexts spread through the text of epic Ram Charit Manas, which made the Lord invincible.

Virtue no. 1= 'Sauraj' (bravery and valour)—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 25 where Marich tells Ravana that it is very unwise to make Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman enemies because they are very brave, powerful and strong, and any opposition to them would be futile.

Virtue no. 2, 3 and 18 = 'Dhiraj' (patience, fortitude, courage and resilience), Satya and mind that is steady, firm and resolute respectively—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 82 where king Dasrath tells his minister to go behind Lord Ram, after he has been sent to forest exile, and try to purusade the Lord to come back. During this instruction, Dasrath says—"If the two brothers, Ram and Laxman, who are of a firm resolve and an unwavering mind, courageously refuse to come back because Lord Ram is extremely firm in his resolve and is true to his word (that he will go to the forest if it the father's will)---".

Virtue no. 3= ‘Satya’ (truthfulness)—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 264 in which the assembly felt glad upon hearing Lord Ram make a firm resolve to honour Bharat’s wish—because the Lord is exemplarily truthful to his words, and once he says that he will honour the wish of Bharat he will do it no matter what comes. The context is Bharat’s plea to the Lord to return to the city of Ayodhya to ascend its throne, and the Lord agreeing to do what Bharat says because he knew that Bharat cannot tell him to do anything that goes against the tenets of Dharma.

Then again in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 292, the Lord has been ascribed with the virtues of Satya, Dharma, and Sheel.

In Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 23 that precedes Doha no. 7 Lord Ram has himself proclaimed to Sugriv that “listen friend, my words do no go in vain; I do not lie”.

Virtue no. 4 = ‘Sheel’ (politeness, courteousness, civility, humility, good manners and etiquette)—refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 243 where Lord Ram has eagerly gone forward to welcome his guru sage Vasistha when the party of Bharat arrived at the Lord’s hermitage in Chitrakoot to persuade the Lord to come back to Ayodhya. Here Lord Ram has been described as being an ocean of Sheel. (ii) Then again, in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 29 Ka, it is said that “Tulsidas declares and asserts that there is no other Lord compared to Lord Ram in as far as the virtue of Sheel is concerned because Lord Ram is an abode, or a treasure-trove, of this grand virtue”. (iii) In Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 6 it is asserted that Lord Ram is an abode of Sheel and other auspicious Gunas (virtues).

Virtue no. 5= ‘Bal’ (strength)—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 2 wherein Jayant, the stupid son of Indra (the king of gods), has accepted that Lord Ram possesses unmatched strength, power, authority and potent about which he had not known earlier, for then he would not have had the temerity to hurt Sita. He regretted sincerely, and the merciful Lord forgave him and spared his life.

Virtue no. 6= ‘Vivek’ (wisdom)—refer: (i) Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 97 in which Sita says that Lord Ram is most merciful and full of wisdom. (ii) In Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 254, sage Vashistha declares to the assembly “no one knows the essential principles and the tenets as well as the practical implementation of the grand virtues of Niti (laws of conduct and thought; laws of jurisprudence), Priti (love, affection, cordiality), Parmaarath (spiritual welfare; general good in the long run) and Swaarath (personal safety and interests) more than Lord Ram. (iii) Then again, in Lanka Kand, the 2nd half of Chanda line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 111, the creator has said while praying to Lord Ram that the Lord is free from anger and is always an embodiment of wisdom and enlightenment.

Virtue no. 7 = ‘Dam’ (self restraint over one’s organs and urges)—refer: (i) Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 179 in which it is asserted that “Lord Ram is pure in mind and heart, that he is pious, and that he is disinterested in and dry (non-emotional) towards the sense objects of the world and their allurements or temptations”. (ii) Then again in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 32, king Dasrath declares to Kaikeyi (his wife) that “everyone says that Lord Ram is like a Sadhu (saintly and pious)”.

Virtue no. 8 = ‘Parhita’ (welfare of others)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (1) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 192 that says that Lord Vishnu took birth as a human being (in the form of Lord Ram) for the interest, welfare, well-being and good of Brahmins, mother Earth, Gods and Saints. (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 254 says “Lord Ram has taken birth for the general good, well-being and welfare of the world at large”.

Virtue no. 9 = ‘Kshamaa’ (forgiveness)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (1) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 285 wherein sage Parashuram has declared that Lord Ram and his brother Laxman are like a temple (abode) of the virtue of forgiveness. (2) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 218 in which the creator Brahma has advised the Gods not to create mischief and put an obstacle in the path of Bharat’s attempt to bring Lord Ram back to Ayodhya because though “Lord Ram does not get angry at any harm or offence caused to him personally or directly”, but will not accept any mischief being created to annoy his devotees.

Virtue no. 10 = ‘Kripaa’ (compassion, grace, benevolence)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 259 that says Lord Ram is an ‘abode of Kripaa’; (ii) Baal Kand, line no. 2 of Doha no. 208 Kha which says that Lord Ram is an ‘ocean of Kripaa’; (iii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 101 that also endorses this virtue of Lord Ram as being an ‘ocean of Kripaa’; (iv) Aranya Kand, line no. 2 of Doha no. 2 that says ‘there is no one comparable to Lord in having in him the virtue of Kripaa’; (v) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 33 that says “Lord Ram has a very sweet temperament, is most merciful, compassionate and gracious, and shows his benevolence dispassionately, without any sort of interests involved”; (vi) Aranya Kand, Doha no. 9 and its preceding Chaupai line no. 8 that say—“When Lord Ram was told that the heap of bones lying on the ground was of the sages and seers who have been devoured by the demons, his eyes were filled with tears. He raised his arms and took a firm vow that he will eliminate all the demons from the surface of the earth. After that, the Lord went to the hermitages of all the sages and seers independently to comfort them and give them happiness and pleasure.”

Virtue no. 11 = ‘Samtaa’ (equanimity, fortitude, evenness of mind, to treat all alike without distinction and discrimination)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Kishkindha Kand, line no. 1 of Doha no. 7 in which Baali, the king of the monkey race and elder brother of Sugriv tells his wife Tara that “Lord Ram treats everyone alike and harbours no personal ill-will against anyone”. (ii) Ayodhya Kand, line no. 2 of Doha no. 227 in which Laxman has said “Oh Lord, you have equal love and compassion for all, and treat everyone like you would treat your own self”. (iii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 219 which asserts Lord Ram has equanimity and evenness of mind as he treats everyone alike without any distinction and discrimination, and therefore has no ill-will against anyone nor is infatuated with someone else”. (iv) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 34 that precedes Doha no. 86 in which Lord Ram has himself declared that “all the creatures are dear to me equally as all of them are my off-springs, all have been created by me—i.e. I do not distinguish between them on any pretext”.

Virtue no. 12 = ‘Devotion for Lord God and worshipping him’ (Ish Bhajan)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) In Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 2, till Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 3 it is narrated that Lord Ram had installed an image of Lord Shiva, known as a lingam, and then duly worshipped it. (ii) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 237 that says Lord Ram did his sacraments in the sanctioned way. (iii) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 237 says that the Lord brought flowers so that sage Vishwamitra can offer his ritualistic worship of Gods. (iii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 103 says that Lord Ram worshipped an image of Lord Shiva on the banks of the holy river Ganges on his way to the forest after taking a purification bath in the river.

Virtue no. 13 = 'Virati' (renunciation, detachment, dispassion, non-involvement with anything related to the world and its gross objects of the senses)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 31 which says "Lord Ram had no greed for the kingdom of Ayodhya; he never yearned for it"; (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 51 that says "Lord Ram's mind is like a free elephant, and the responsibilities of the kingdom is like the iron shackle that is put around this elephant's leg to tie it down; so as soon as the Lord learnt that he has been ordered to go to the forest he felt as this shackle has been broken and so he felt exceedingly glad and happy"; (iii) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 165 that says "Lord Ram discarded the royal ornaments and clothes as soon as he received the father's orders to proceed to the forest, and most cheerfully and willingly took up and wore clothes made of bark of the birch tree and leaves with complete dispassion, without having any sort of emotions either of happiness or of dismay in his heart".

The same idea is emphasized in Kavitawali of Tulsidas, in its Ayodhya Kand, verse no. 2, line no. 4 which says "The lotus-eyed Lord Ram went to the forest after abandoning the kingdom of his father like a mendicant who has no attachment with anything at all, and who does not look back at the place which he leaves"

Virtue no. 14 = 'Santosh' (contentment; satisfaction at whatever is available)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 342 says "Lord Ram, who is always fulfilled and contented, became satisfied by the words of King Janak". (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 133 that says that Lord Ram's mind and heart felt fully contented when he saw the natural beauty of Chitrakoot.

Virtue no. 15 = 'Daan' (making charity)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Baal Kand, Doha no. 148 in which Lord Vishnu has told Manu and Satrupaa that they are free to ask for anything they want as the Lord is a great giver who gives liberally. (ii) Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 196 says that king Dasrath gave charity with an open hand at the time of birth of Lord Ram and his brothers. Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 Kha says "the wealth that Lord Shiva had granted to the 10-headed Ravana when the latter offered his heads to him as sacrifice, the same wealth was granted hesitatingly by Lord Ram to Vibhishan (even without the latter making any sacrifice like Ravana)". The fact that Lord Ram was 'hesitant' in giving Vibhishan all this is that the Lord felt that it was not enough, and that he should have given Vibhishan much more than that. In other words, Lord Ram is a most magnanimous and benevolent giver; he always thinks that he has not done enough for his devotees and should have done more. (iv) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 12 says that when Lord Ram was crowned the king of Ayodhya after his return to the city, liberal donations were made to Brahmins. (v) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 24 says that after becoming the king of Ayodhya, Lord Ram used to make liberal charities to Brahmins in many ways.

Virtue no. 16 = 'Buddhi' (intelligence)—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 56 that says "Lord Seshnath (the legendary celestial serpent with a thousand hoods) is unable to recount the splendorous glories, the matchless strength and immensity of intelligence and wisdom (Buddhi) of Lord Ram even though he has a thousand mouths (hoods)".

Virtue no. 17 = 'Vigyan' (analytical abilities; deep insight and foresight; higher levels of intelligence; transcendental intelligence and wisdom)—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 72 that says “Lord Ram is such an expert that he knows how to act in different circumstances like an expert artist who can assume so many different postures according to the role he is assigned on the stage of the theatre”. No one can say that the person playing out a particular part on the stage is not the same person in practical life, so expertly does the artist plays out his role. This is because he knows the secrets of the trade, has a first-hand knowledge of the character that he plays on stage, and is so well-versed with the actual situation in the real life that his depiction of the character becomes extremely natural and convincing as if it is the real thing. Similarly, Lord Ram is so wise and expert that he knows the subtle secrets and even those aspects of a thing that are not apparent and known to all.

Virtue no. 18 = ‘Mana (mind, sub-conscious and heart) that is un-corrupt, holy, pious and steady’—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precedes Doha no. 231 that say—“It is natural for the members of the Raghu dynasty (in which Lord Ram took birth, and therefore had this wonderful character in him) that they do not step on a path that is unrighteous, inauspicious, improper, immoral and unethical. I have a firm belief and faith in my (Lord Ram’s) Mana that it has never thought of coveting any woman to whom one is not related.” (ii) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 92 that says “Lord Ram is as steady and unmoving as the mountain covered by snow (i.e. the Himalayas), and is as grave, dense and deep as the vast ocean”.

Virtue nos. 19 and 20 = ‘Sham’ and ‘Yam’ (self-restraint of the sense organs and their natural urges for gratification), ‘Niyam’ (following rules strictly, and obeying religious sacraments and observances)—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Ayodhya Kand, the 2nd half of Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 82 says “Lord Ram was true to the vows he had taken, and was steady on his chosen path”. (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29 says “Lord Ram lived like a true hermit, having completely renounced all his attachments for everything and being fully disinterested in any material thing of the world and its charms”—that is, the Lord practiced a high degree of self control; he shunned all desires for pleasure and comfort inspite of the fact that he was born a prince and would one day ascend the throne of Ayodhya which was regarded as the most prosperous kingdom of the time. (iii) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 165 says that “Lord Ram wore clothes made of the bark of the birch tree and leaves (like a renunciate hermit inspite of his being entitled to royal ornaments and attire befitting a king)”. (iv) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 211 says that—“Lord Ram wore the minimum of clothes, ate naturally grown wild fruits, and slept on the ground on a bed made of leaves and twigs. He lived under the shade of trees, and suffered from the vagaries of Nature by tolerating with equanimity and stoic neutrality the effects of snow, heat, rain and storm (during the phase of his life in the forest as a hermit, without complaining or having any grudge against anyone.”

And finally Virtue no. 21 = ‘Respect of Guru and Brahmins’—refer: Ram Charit Manas:- (i) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 9 which say that “when Lord Ram heard about the arrival of his Guru (sage Vashistha) at his palace, he came forward to receive him at the door, and bowed his head to the Guru. Then the Lord welcomed him (Guru) by worshipping him comprehensively in a ritualistic manner that consists of sixteen steps. (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 79 says that “Lord Ram payed his respects to and worshipped the feet of Brahmins and his Guru (sage Vashishtha), and then went on his way to the forest”. (iii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 90 where it is said that “Lord Ram (mentally) bowed his head before the lotus-like feet of Brahmins as he strode ahead on the chariot (that was sent by the Gods, to face the enemy in the battle-field of Lanka)”.]

दो०. महा अजय संसार रिपु जीति सकइ सो बीर।

जाकें अस रथ होइ दृढ़ सुनहु सखा मतिधीर॥ ८० (क)॥

dōhā.

mahā ajaya sansāra ripu jīti saka'i sō bīra.

jākēm asa ratha hō'i dṛṛha sunahu sakhā matidhīra. 80 (a).

Listen oh friend (Vibhishan) who has a steady and resolute mind! A warrior (living being) who has a sturdy Chariot (magnificent virtues) as described above becomes invincible for any enemy in this world; he cannot be defeated even if the whole world becomes his enemy; his detractors cannot cause his downfall even if they join hands against him.' (Doha no. 80-a.)

[Note—In the beginning of this discourse by Lord Ram, Vibhishan was uneasy and full of doubts—refer: Ram Charit Manas, 6/80/1. He was wary of the prospects of fighting a strong enemy like Ravana without a war chariot and other paraphernalia of battle. It becomes virtually impossible to acquire maneuverability and swiftness of movement, so essential for victory on the battle-field, while fighting on foot. But when Lord Ram taught him the principles of Dharma, when he was enlightened about the subtle inner strength of the Atma that comes to a man by the possession of the divine virtues listed by Lord Ram herein above, Vibhishan became assured of the Lord's victory. This is because he knew that Ravana lacked all of them, and therefore stood no chance against Lord Ram who had all these glorious virtues in him that made the Lord spiritually and morally strong and invincible.

The Lord has said here that a person who possesses this Chariot cannot be defeated by the 'whole world', implying that Ravana, being an individual person, holds no chance when the whole world united against a person who possesses such a fabulous and glorious Chariot of Dharma cannot defeat him.

This teaching of Lord Ram herein above describes the glorious virtues that make a man victorious in all his struggles in this mundane world. These virtues are likened to a chariot on which a warrior rides to his victory in the battle-field. The analogy is obvious—the struggles of life in this mundane world are like the battle-field as they consist of innumerable pains and miseries as well as improbables over which one has no control. And just like a strong chariot helps the expert warrior to move swiftly from one corner of the battle-ground to another, issuing instructions to his army and out-manoeuvre the enemy, the grand virtues listed by Lord Ram helps a person overcome all obstacles in life and emerge victorious.

The context is the battle-field of Lanka. Ravana, the demon king, is astride a strong chariot, while Lord Ram is on foot. It becomes physically difficult to manoeuvre and move swiftly on foot and fight against a powerful enemy who is given the advantage of mobility and protection of a vehicle built especially for the battle, such as the war chariot. He can store his arms and ammunition in this chariot besides enjoying the advantage of the ability to have a commanding position from which to control the army spread across the battle-field by the virtue of his fast manoeuvrability and movement.

So, this deficiency made Vibhishan very worried and upset. Though he had immense affection and faith in the Lord, but for once he began to have doubts as how will the Lord conquer a strong enemy while fighting him standing himself on foot. It was then that Lord Ram preached these grand and glorious virtues to Vibhishan just like Lord Krishna had taught his friend Arjun in the battle-field of Kurushetra that became famous as Lord Krishna's "Geeta".]

सुनि प्रभु बचन बिभीषन हरषि गहे पद कंज ।
एहि मिस मोहि उपदेसेहु राम कृपा सुख पुंज ॥ ८० (ख) ॥

sunī prabhu bacana bibhīṣana haraṣi gahē pada kañja.
ēhi misa mōhi upadēsēhu rāma kṛpā sukha puñja. 80 (b).

When Vibhishan heard these wise words of Lord Ram, he felt exhilarated and contented. He fell down to clasp the holy feet of the Lord and exclaimed in gratitude: 'Oh Lord, you are a fountain of mercy and grace. How fortunate am I that you have given this great wisdom to me on the pretext of answering my concerns regarding the necessity of a chariot during this war.' (Doha no. 80-b)

उत पचार दसकंधर इत अंगद हनुमान । लरत निसाचर भालु कपि करि निज निज प्रभु आन ॥ ८० (ग) ॥

uta pacāra dasakandhara ita aṅgada hanumāna.
larata nisācara bhālu kapi kari nija nija prabhu āna. 80 (c).

[After describing this glorious Chariot, we resume our narrative of the Great War.]

On the other side it was Ravana who was challenging and thrashing the enemy warriors (i.e. the monkeys and bears) with all his might, and on this side it were Angad and Hanuman who retaliated with equal ferocity, challenging Ravana and his might, every step of the way.

Both the demons of the other side (i.e. of Ravana's side), and the bears and monkeys of this side (i.e. of Lord Ram's side) viciously clashed with each other using brutal force, all the while applauding their respective Lords and raising loud cries extolling their glories, and swearing in their names. (Doha no. 80-c)

चौ०. सुर ब्रह्मादि सिद्ध मुनि नाना । देखत रन नभ चढ़े बिमाना ॥ १ ॥
हमहू उमा रहे तेहिं संगी । देखत राम चरित रन रंगा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sura brahmādi sid'dha muni nānā. dēkhata rana nabha caṛhē bimānā. 1.
hamahū umā rahē tēhiṁ saṅgā. dēkhata rāma carita rana raṅgā. 2.

[Continuing with the narration of this fascinating Story of a War the like of which was never witnessed heretofore anywhere in the annals of history, and would neither be hereafter, Lord Shiva quoth to goddess Uma, his divine consort who was listening to it very attentively—]

‘All the Gods, including the creator Brahma, as well as many mystics and great sages (who had the mystical ability to assume an ethereal or a disembodied form when they so wished), were watching the proceedings on the battle-field and the progress of the Epic War from their aerial vehicles stationed in the sky. (1)

Oh Uma; I (Lord Shiva) was also accompanying them as we watched with awe the wondrous and strange deeds of Lord Ram done by him on the battle-field¹. (2)

[Note—¹What was so strange, mysterious and awe-inspiring about Lord Ram’s actions in the battle-field of Lanka that so dazed the gods? Well, the gods were aware of Lord Ram’s true identity, that he was a personified form of Lord Vishnu, the sustainer and protector of the world, and the most powerful and almighty second god of the Trinity, the other two being the creator Brahma, and Lord Shiva who is the concluder of this creation. This being the case, it was so astonishing that Lord Ram should behave like any other ordinary human warrior, who is gallant, valiant, courageous and brave, would during a war, instead of employing any of his cosmic supernatural powers to easily win the enemy in a battle of this magnitude—for the almighty Lord Ram had allowed himself to be tied in a snare of serpents created by Meghanad^a, and had even permitted Laxman to be mortally wounded and almost on the verge of losing his life when Meghanad attacked him and made him unconscious, and further adding to the confusion of gods the Lord had gravely lamented and mournfully wailed for Laxman like an ordinary man would for his dear brother^b.

{Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, ^aChaupai line nos. 11-13 that precede Doha no. 73; and ^bChaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 54; Doha no. 61.}]

सुभट समर रस दुहु दिसि माते । कपि जयसील राम बल ताते ॥ ३ ॥

एक एक सन भिरहिं पचारहिं । एकन्ह एक मर्दि महि पारहिं ॥ ४ ॥ subhaṭa samara rasa duhu disi mātē. kapi jayasīla rāma bala tātē. 3.

ēka ēka sana bhirahiṁ pacārahiṁ. ēkanha ēka mardī mahi pārahiṁ. 4.

The veterans of both the sides were maddened with a burning passion for war and victory. Howbeit, the monkeys (and bears) had a clear upper hand in the battle-field, leading the fight and holding a sway over their enemies, by the grace and blessings of Lord Ram. (3)

There was a fierce hand-to-hand duel; the valiant warriors engaged their opponents in a ruthless face to face combat, thrashing the other mercilessly, and dashing their adversaries to the ground with such violent force that they were pulverized and reduced to a pulp¹. (4)

[Note—¹A similar battle of excess of gallantry and ferocity, where zealot warriors engaged in a fierce face-to-face duel with their opponents, was fought during the first battle with Meghanad—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 53.

Besides this, it was also witnessed during the opening phases of the war when the demon and monkey armies clashed with each other—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-9 that precede Doha no. 46.]

मारहिं काटहिं धरहिं पछारहिं । सीस तोरि सीसन्ह सन मारहिं ॥ ५ ॥ उदर बिदारहिं भुजा उपारहिं । गहि पद अवनि पटकि भट डारहिं ॥ ६ ॥ mārahim kāṭahim dharahim pachārahim. sīsa tōri sīsanha sana mārahim. 5.

udara bidārahim bhuajā upārahim. gahi pada avani paṭaki bhaṭa ḍārahim. 6.

The enemy was beaten mercilessly, slashed and cut violently, caught hold of and thrashed to the ground, and their heads were yanked off their bodies and then used as missiles to hit others with them. (5)

Abdomens were ripped open; arms were torn away from the torso; and gallant warriors were grabbed by their legs, swung around, and then dashed on the ground. (6)

निसिचर भट महि गाड़हिं भालू । ऊपर ढारि देहिं बहु बालू ॥ ७ ॥
बीर बलीमुख जुद्ध बिरुद्धे । देखिअत बिपुल काल जनु क्रुद्धे ॥ ८ ॥ nisicara bhaṭa mahi gāṛahim bhālū. ūpara ḍhāri dēhim bahu bālū. 7.

bīra balīmukha jud'dha birud'dhē. dēkhi'ata bipula kāla janu krud'dhē. 8.

Demon warriors were grabbed by mighty bears and buried in the earth over which a mound of sand was dumped¹. (7)

The valiant warriors who were filled with zeal and a firm determination to overcome their adversaries in the battle-field appeared to be like personified forms of Kaal, the god of death himself². (8)

[Note—¹To wit, two scenarios are possible here. One is that the monkeys first dashed the demon warriors to the ground, and when they died they were buried by the bears who dug a grave for them and covered it with sand.

In the other possibility, the bears grabbed demons and buried them alive in the ground, heaping sand over them so that they die of suffocation.

And of course obtaining 'sand' was no problem as there was an ocean all around Lanka, and sand is found in abundance near the ocean.

²Though it is not specifically mentioned here to whom this reference of 'being personified form of Kaal' is being made, whether it refers to the monkeys and bears or to the demon warriors, but taking into consideration the ground situation on the battlefield where the monkeys and bears had an upper hand over the demons, it is clear that the allusion is to the Lord's warriors, the monkeys and the bears, instead of the demons who were bearing the brunt of their attack, and were on the defensive.

This deduction is supported by the following verses.]

छं०. क्रुद्धे कृतांत समान कपि तन स्रवत सोनित राजहीं । १ ।
मर्दहिं निसाचर कटक भट बलवंत घन जिमि गाजहीं ॥ २ ॥
मारहिं चपेटन्हि डाटि दातन्ह काटि लातन्ह मीजहीं । ३ ।
चिक्करहिं मर्कट भालु छल बल करहिं जेहिं खल छीजहीं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

krud'dhē kṛtānta samāna kapi tana sravata sōnita rājahīm. 1.
mardahīm nisācara kaṭaka bhaṭa balavanta ghana jimi gājahīm. 2.
mārahīm capēṭanhi ḍāṭi dātanha kāṭi lātanha mījahīm. 3.
cikkarahīm markāṭa bhālu chala bala karahīm jēhīm khala chījahīm. 4.

The gallant and powerful monkeys, who were furious with anger as if Kaal himself has taken their forms, appeared glorious with blood oozing out of the wounds on their bodies. (Chanda line no. 1)

Those valiant warriors (i.e. the monkeys and bears) fought vigorously with powerful demon warriors and trounced them, all the while roaring like the thunder of the cloud. (Chanda line no. 2)

They (the monkeys and bears) slapped and severely reprimanded their opponents (the demon warriors), bit them viciously with their sharp teeth, and then trampled them underfoot, pulverizing and reducing them to a pulp. (Chanda line no. 3)

The monkeys and bears were letting out shrill war cries and adopting all possible strategies to make their enemy feel exasperated, to make him depressed and dejected, and ultimately decimated. (Chanda line no. 4)

धरि गाल फारहिं उर बिदारहिं गल अँतावरि मेलहीं । ५ ।
प्रह्लादपति जनु बिबिध तनु धरि समर अंगन खेलहीं ॥ ६ ॥
धरु मारु काटु पछारु घोर गिरा गगन महि भरि रही । ७ । जय राम जो तृन ते कुलिस कर कुलिस ते कर तृन सही ॥ ८ ॥ dhari gāla phārahīm ura bidārahīm gala aṁtāvari mēlahīm. 5.

prahlādapati janu bibidha tanu dhari samara aṅgana khēlahīm. 6.
dharu māru kātu pachāru ghōra girā gagana mahi bhari rahī. 7.
jaya rāma jō ṭṛṇa tē kulisa kara kulisa tē kara ṭṛṇa sahī. 8.

The vehemently angry (monkey and bear) warriors caught hold of their enemies (the demon warriors) with excess of wrath, tearing their cheeks, slicing their chests, and hanging their intestines around their own necks after ripping up their abdomens. (Chanda line no. 5)

They give the impression that the Lord of Prahalad, i.e. Lord Narsingh¹, has assumed countless forms to enact the 'dance of death' by mercilessly unleashing his devastating anger on the evil demon hordes, and slaying them in great numbers. (Chanda line no. 6)

The sky and the earth reverberated in all the directions with horrifying and shrill cries of 'Grab, Kill, Cut them off, Thrash and Trample Under the Foot' that ranted everywhere. (Chanda line no. 7)

Simultaneously, there was a resounding applause for Lord Ram as the (enthusiastic and victorious) warriors invoked the glories of the Lord with great zeal, enthusiastically cheering 'Glory to the great Lord Ram, who indeed and without any gainsay has the mystical powers that can truly turn a humble twig into the mighty Vajra (the strongest, the sturdiest, the heaviest and an invincible weapon in the world, something that cannot be conquered or subdued), or make a Vajra become like a poor twig (that is easily crushed and trampled upon)². (Chanda line no. 8)

[Note—¹The allusion here is to Lord Vishnu who had assumed a terrifying form of 'half-lion and half-man', known as 'Narsingh', to tear apart the body of the demon Hiranyakashipu, the father of Prahalad, because he was not allowing his son to worship the Lord, and after having failed in persuading Prahalad to desist from offering his obeisance to Lord Vishnu, the demon father finally decided to kill him. He drew his sword to cut off Prahalad's head, but when the poor little helpless boy prayed to Lord Vishnu to save him, the Lord assumed a ferocious form of 'Narsingh' and revealed himself immediately. The Lord was seething with excess of anger, and he grabbed Hiranyakashipu, laid him across his lap, and tore his abdomen viciously into two; then the angry Lord Narsingh yanked out the entrails of the cruel demon and hung them around his neck like blood-soaked garlands.

In a similar fashion, the ferocious monkey and bear warriors tore apart the bodies of the demons and pulled out their intestines which they hung around their necks like so many victory garlands; in this form and action they assumed the role of Lord Narsingh.

²To wit, Lord Ram, being the almighty, all-able and omnipotent Supreme Lord of the world, can do the impossible and the unimaginable if he so wishes. For instance, he can convert an ordinary-looking, weak and powerless creature into a formidable giant with supernatural powers, one who can conquer the whole world and defeat the most formidable and strongest of enemy with the greatest of ease, and should it please the Lord he can do the reverse with equal comfort, i.e. he can turn a mighty and most powerful man into an incompetent, inept, imbecile and impotent person.

The idea here is that though monkeys and bears were no match for the might and the ferocity so characteristic of the powerful demon race, yet now the same humble creatures were ruthlessly thrashing and vanquishing the same demon warriors who had been so powerful only some time ago that the mere mention of their name would send chill down the spine of the almighty gods of heaven. The mystery of the whole thing was that the demons were being beaten black and blue, and they were unable to retaliate and take revenge against the monkeys and bears.

Why and how this strange thing was made possible? The answer is this: It was made possible by the grace and the wish of Lord Ram alone, and for no other reason.]

दो०. निज दल बिचलत देखेसि बीस भुजाँ दस चाप । रथ चढ़ि चलेउ दसानन फिरहु फिरहु करि दाप ॥ ८१ ॥

dōhā.

nija dala bicalata dēkhēsi bīsa bhujaṁ dasa cāpa.
ratha caḍhi calē'u dasānana phirahu phirahu kari dāpa. 81.

When the ten-headed Ravana observed that his forces were in a dire strait, he strode upon his war chariot, held ten powerful bows in his twenty arms¹, and rode to the frontline of the battle, urging his troops to make a strategic retreat; he called out to his warriors: 'Retreat, retreat immediately'. (Doha no. 81)

[Note—¹To wit, Ravana held ten bows in his ten arms, one in each, and naturally the other ten arms held arrows, shields, and other weapons. Till now he was standing behind to watch the developments on the ground, but when he discovered that his soldiers were being beaten back mercilessly and rapidly decimated, he could not hold back and rode ahead to the line of physical combat, ordering his warriors to fall behind and regroup.]

चौ०. धायउ परम क्रुद्ध दसकंधर । सन्मुख चले हूह दै बंदर ॥ १ ॥
गहि कर पादप उपल पहारा । डारेन्हि ता पर एकहिं बारा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dhāya'u parama krud'dha dasakandhara. sanmukha calē hūha dai bandara. 1.
gahi kara pādapa upala pahārā. ḍārēnhi tā para ēkahim bārā. 2.

The ten-shouldered (dasakandhara) Ravana was seething with excess of anger as he dashed forward with a vengeance. The monkeys meanwhile were very excited (because of their recent victory), and they hurried forward, chuckling gleefully, to confront the advancing Ravana midway. (1)

They dumped trees, boulders and rocks, small and large, on Ravana all at once. (2)

लागहिं सैल बज्र तन तासू । खंड खंड होइ फूटहिं आसू ॥ ३ ॥
चला न अचल रहा रथ रोपी । रन दुर्मद रावन अति कोपी ॥ ४ ॥ lāgahim saila bajra tana tāsū. khaṇḍa khaṇḍa hō'i phūṭahim āsū. 3.

calā na acala rahā ratha rōpī. rana durmada rāvana ati kōpī. 4.

The mountain-like huge rocks and boulders struck Ravana's body, which was as strong and robust as Vajra (the hardest substance in existence), only to break up into small pieces and fall down to the ground. (3)

Ravana, who was a mighty and valiant warrior renowned for his exceptional gallantry, bravery, valour, steadfastness and resilience during a combat, stood his ground firmly, with great ease and dogged determination, not moving from his position and yielding ground a wee whit. (4)

इत उत झपटि दपटि कपि जोधा । मदैँ लाग भयउ अति क्रोधा ॥ ५ ॥
चले पराड़ भालु कपि नाना । त्राहि त्राहि अंगद हनुमाना ॥ ६ ॥ ita uta jhapaṭi dapaṭi kapi jōdhā. mardai lāga bhaya'u ati krōdhā. 5.

calē parā'i bhālu kapi nānā. trāhi trāhi aṅgada hanumānā. 6.

Here and there and everywhere, to his left, right and front, Ravana challenged the monkey warriors vehemently, sternly remonstrating them, and dashing at them wrathfully in order to grab them (with the intention of ruthlessly doing them to death). (5)

It was now the turn of the monkeys and bears to flee the ground under the ferocious retaliatory attack by Ravana. They became panicky, shrieking for help and crying aloud: 'Oh Angad, oh Hanuman! Save us; come to our aid; help us immediately'¹. (6)

[Note—¹A similar situation was observed earlier during the first phase of the war when the demons, who had suffered defeat and rout initially, hit back viciously at the advancing army of monkeys and bears after Ravana became angry at them for their cowardice, and motivated them to fight with the enemy with courage and resilience. The counter attack of the demons made the monkeys and bears flee in terror, shouting for help from Angad, Hanuman, Nala, Neela and Dwivid. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 42—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 43.}]

पाहि पाहि रघुबीर गोसाईं । यह खल खाड़ काल की नाई ॥ ७ ॥
तेहिं देखे कपि सकल पराने । दसहुँ चाप सायक संधाने ॥ ८ ॥ pāhi pāhi raghubīra gōsā'īm. yaha khala khā'i kāla kī nā'īm. 7.

tēhiṁ dēkhē kapi sakala parānē. dasahuṁ cāpa sāyaka sandhānē. 8.

[They also sought the intervention of Lord Ram, pleading to the Lord to show mercy upon them by invoking his holy name and seeking his graceful help to free them from their plight.]

They invoked Lord Ram and pleaded for help, praying: 'Oh Lord Raghubir; oh gracious and kind Lord (raghubīra gōsā'īm). We fall at your feet and plead with you to have mercy on us and relieve us from this plight (pāhi pāhi). This wicked fellow

(Ravana) is killing us all, as if Kaal, the god of death, has himself assumed his ferocious form to annihilate us.' (7)

When he (Ravana) observed that all the monkeys (and bears) have started fleeing from him, he strung all his ten bows and mounted arrows on them (to shoot down the terror-stricken, fleeing troops of his enemy). (8)

छं०. संधानि धनु सर निकर छाड़ेसि उरग जिमि उड़ि लागहीं । १ ।
 रहे पूरि सर धरनी गगन दिसि बिदिसि कहँ कपि भागहीं ॥ २ ॥
 भयो अति कोलाहल बिकल कपि दल भालु बोलहिं आतुरे । २ । रघुबीर करुना सिंधु आरत बंधु जन रच्छक हरे ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

sandhāni dhanu sara nikara chārēsi uraga jimi uḍi lāgahīm. 1.
 rahē pūri sara dharanī gagana disi bidisi kahañ kapi bhāgahīm. 2.
 bhayō ati kōlāhala bikala kapi dala bhālu bōlahīm āturē. 3.
 raghubīra karunā sindhu ārata bandhu jana racchaka harē. 4.

He (Ravana) took aim and shot a rapid volley of sharp arrows that flew like countless serpents flying towards their prey with great speed. (Chanda line no. 1)

The arrows filled the sky and the earth in all the directions. Where would the monkeys (and bears) run away now to escape them?

[To wit, there was no place available where the fleeing monkeys and bears could go to hide themselves, and escape being hit by the arrows.] (Chanda line no. 2)

There was great alarm and a fearful tumult amongst the ranks of the monkey and bear warriors who were out of their wits and utterly terrified. They were all overcome with fear as they made an earnest plea to Lord Ram asking for his intervention to relieve them of this unexpected and sudden calamity that had befallen upon them all. (Chanda line no. 3)

They prayed in unison: 'Oh Lord Raghubir (raghubīra); oh Lord who is an ocean of mercy and compassion (karunā sindhu); oh Lord who is a dear friend of those who are in distress and need (ārata bandhu); oh Lord who ensures protection as well as welfare and well-being of his devotees (jana racchaka); oh Lord who dispels and removes the sorrows and miseries of all (harē)! (Chanda line no. 4)

दो०. निज दल बिकल देखि कटि कसि निषंग धनु हाथ । लछिमन चले क्रुद्ध होइ नाइ राम पद माथ ॥ ८२ ॥

dōhā.

nija dala bikala dēkhi kaṭi kasi niṣaṅga dhanu hātha.
 lachimana calē krud'dha hō'i nā'i rāma pada mātha. 82.

Seeing that his troops were in disarray and facing a dire situation, Laxman picked up his bow in his hand, strung it, bowed his head at the feet of Lord Ram, and then angrily marched to the battle-field¹. (Doha no. 82)

[Note—¹Two things are to be noted here: One, that Laxman has not been asked by Lord Ram to go the aid of the fleeing monkeys and bears, and two, that Laxman has departed angrily for the battle-field after bowing his head before Lord Ram.

The first point is answered by saying that since he was next in command in the army after Lord Ram himself, and a fierce war was raging in the battle-field, it was not deemed necessary by Laxman to seek permission from the Lord every time a quick action was to be taken, for it was assumed that such permission was automatically deemed to be granted.

The second point is however more significant. At the time of going out to fight Meghanad for the first time, Laxman had also left for the battle-field in an angry mood; the result was that he got wounded in the battle and fell down unconscious. He repeats this mistake once again now. And what happened? We shall soon read herein below that he was shot by Ravana and fell down unconscious once again.

This incident has a subtle message for all of us: that we must always remain calm and poised during adversities, leaving everything confidently on the Lord God with a firm conviction that he will definitely take care of us. We learn this fact from Laxman's incident—because when he went out to fight Meghanad for the second time he had not shown any anger at all, but remained calm. What was the result? He succeeded in slaying Meghanad.

Here too we shall read that after regaining his senses, Laxman went back to confront Ravana, but now he had not lost his cool, and hence succeeded in making Ravana faint—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 7-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 84 herein below.]

चौ०. रे खल का मारसि कपि भालू । मोहि बिलोकु तोर मैं कालू ॥ १ ॥

खोजत रहेउँ तोहि सुतघाती । आजु निपाति जुड़ावउँ छाती ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

rē khala kā māraṣi kapi bhālū. mōhi bilōku tōra mair̥m kālū. 1.
khōjata rahē'uṁ tōhi sutaghātī. āju nipāti jurāva'uṁ chātī. 2.

[When Laxman reached the spot where Ravana was, he challenged the demon king with these stern words:-]

Laxman said to Ravana, 'Oh you wicked fellow (rē khala). Why do you target these humble monkeys and bears? Look at me; I am your Kaal (death personified)¹.' (1)

[When Ravana saw Laxman, his anger burst out like a suppressed volcano. He immediately recalled that it was Laxman who had killed his dear son Meghanad. For Ravana, now it was the time to take revenge. So he said bitterly, with utter contempt in his voice:-]

Ravana shot back at Laxman vehemently with these contemptuous and scornful words, 'Oh you who are the one who killed my dear son (Meghanad). I was searching for you. Oh my good fortune; I have finally got hold of you, and now I will cool my burning heart by slaying you with a vengeance (to avenge my son's death and give rest to his soul)².’ (2)

[Note—¹To wit, if you are indeed so eager for a fight and wish to prove your gallantry in the battle-field, you ought to choose someone who is your match. It's foolish and cowardly for you to vent your frustration and anger on these poor fellows, the humble monkeys and bears, who are no match for your might and the high stature of your royal majesty! Why do you wish to waste your energy, why do you demean yourself, why do you invite scorn and dishonour yourself by fighting with these poor creatures? It's a shameful thing to do for you. Well, do you wot naught that a valiant warrior worth his honour always fights with someone who is of an equal stature as himself? So, it is not a good and honourable thing for you, who are the great king of the mighty and proud demon race, to vent your fury on these simple creatures, the poor and humble monkeys and bears.

Come on then; meet me, for I am someone of an equal stature as you are, for you are the king of Lanka while we two brothers, myself and my elder brother Lord Ram, are the princes of a mighty kingdom of Ayodhya. I have come to greet you and invite you for an honourable duel. Accept my challenge like a gallant warrior, and let's prove ourselves before the world which is watching us closely. Come hither; let's see what we can do.

²Meghanad was killed by Laxman in a battle during of previous day—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-16 that precede Doha no. 76.

When Ravana saw Laxman standing before him, it was natural for him to lose his cool for he was meeting the killer of his son. His anger was provoked much like a smouldering fire in a hearth that leaps up fiercely in a burst of unrestrained flames when fresh air is pumped into it from the side.]

अस कहि छाड़ेसि बान प्रचंडा । लछिमन किए सकल सत खंडा ॥ ३ ॥ कोटिन्ह आयुध रावन डारे । तिल प्रवान करि काटि निवारे ॥ ४ ॥

asa kahi chārēsi bāna pracaṇḍā. lachimana ki'ē sakala sata khaṇḍā. 3.
kōṭinha āyudha rāvana ḍārē. tila pravāna kari kāṭi nivārē. 4.

Saying this, Ravana shot a thick volley of sharp and powerful arrows; Laxman shot his own arrows to counter them, and successfully broke the incoming arrows into hundreds of pieces. (3)

Ravana shot countless (literally 'hundreds of thousands'—"kōṭinha") weapons of various denominations; Laxman swiftly demolished all of them, cutting them into splinters¹. (4)

[Note—¹All sorts of missiles, such as arrows, spears, lancets, dumb-bells, sharp-edged wheels, serrated rings and discuses that had razor-sharp edges, et al, were shot by Ravana in a rapid-fire action. Laxman showed alacrity and swiftness of reaction as he neutralized all the missiles as quickly as they came, demolishing them before they could hit their target, which obviously was Laxman himself.]

पुनि निज बानन्ह कीन्ह प्रहारा । स्यंदनु भंजि सारथी मारा ॥ ५ ॥
सत सत सर मारे दस भाला । गिरि संगन्ह जनु प्रबिसहिं ब्याला ॥ ६ ॥ puni nija bānanha kīnha prahārā. syandanu bhañji sārathī mārā. 5.

sata sata sara mārē dasa bhālā. giri sṛnganha janu prabisahim byālā. 6.

After neutralizing Ravana's weapons, Laxman fiercely retaliated by shooting his own arrows, which broke Ravana's war chariot and killed his charioteer. (5)

Then he (Laxman) shot another volley of arrows that pierced through Ravana's head, ten arrows in each of his ten heads¹; it looked as if so many flying serpents were entering inside caves located on the top of a huge mountain. (6)

[Note—¹Laxman had first shot 2 arrows that broke Ravana's chariot and killed the charioteer. Then he shot a total of 100 arrows as ten arrows had pierced through each of Ravana's ten heads: 10 heads x 10 arrows in each head = 100 arrows.

To wit, Laxman had shot a total of 2 + 100 = 102 arrows at Ravana.]

पुनि सत सर मारा उर माहीं । परेउ धरनि तल सुधि कछु नाही ॥ ७ ॥ उठा प्रबल पुनि मुरुछा जागी । छाड़िसि ब्रह्म दीन्हि जो साँगी ॥ ८ ॥ puni sata sara mārā ura māhīm. parē'u dharani tala sudhi kachu nāhīm. 7.

uṭhā prabala puni muruchā jāgī. chāḍisi brahma dīnhi jō sāṅgī. 8.

Then Laxman shot another volley of a hundred powerful arrows aimed at Ravana's chest; these arrows slammed in and pierced through his body, felling him down on the ground, gravely wounded and unconscious. (7)

Soon Ravana regained his senses and got up. Peeved and exasperated, the ferocious Ravana, who was now in full fury, took out a very powerful weapon given to him by the creator Brahma (known as Brahmastra)¹. (8)

[Note—¹This weapon was infallible and sure to have a serious and devastating effect on its target. It was employed only in cases of emergency when all other weapons failed. Burning with anger, Ravana invoked it and used it to hit Laxman back with it.

It could have been a special arrow, a spear, a lancet, or some other kind of missile that could be thrown at the target from a distance.]

छं०. सो ब्रह्म दत्त प्रचंड सक्ति अनंत उर लागी सही । १ ।
पर्यो बीर बिकल उठाव दसमुख अतुल बल महिमा रही ॥ २ ॥
ब्रह्मांड भवन बिराज जाकें एक सिर जिमि रज कनी । ३ ।
तेहि चह उठावन मूढ़ रावन जान नहिं त्रिभुवन धनी ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

sō brahma datta pracaṇḍa sakti ananta ura lāgī sahī. 1.
 paryō bīra bikala uṭhāva dasamukha atula bala mahimā rahī. 2.
 brahmāṇḍa bhavana birāja jākēṁ ēka sira jimi raja kanī. 3.
 tēhi caha uṭhāvana mūrha rāvana jāna nahim tribhu'ana dhanī. 4.

That Brahma's infallible weapon, which had an inherent quality of striking hard and felling its target without fail, hit Laxman (who is also known as 'Anant') in his chest. (Chanda line no. 1)

The strike was so hard that it made the valiant and brave Laxman fall down to the ground unconscious by its sheer force. Then Ravana, who had phenomenal strength of arms and stupendous might at his command, came forward agitatedly and tried to lift Laxman (with the intention of taking him as hostage inside the fort of Lanka). But he failed in his endeavours, for he could not move Laxman.

Thus Laxman was able to maintain his dignity, and retain his honour and glory by making Ravana fail to lift him. (Chanda line no. 2)

[What was the reason why Ravana failed to lift Laxman? Here's the answer:-]

He (i.e. Lord Seshnath, the celestial Serpent who is the primary form of Laxman) on whose head the whole universe, including its different divisions, lie like a small speck of sand --- (Chanda line no. 3)

--- The stupid and dumb-witted Ravana tried to lift the same cosmic Being (who was presently in the form of Laxman) because he was not aware of the fact that he was the Lord of Tribhuvan (the three divisions of the world)¹. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Laxman was a manifestation of Lord Seshnath, the celestial Serpent, who is believed to support the entire creation by holding it on his head—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand—(i) Doha no. 197; (ii) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 17; (b) Ayodhya Kand—Doha no. 253 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede it.

The 'Tribhuvan' refers to the three divisions of this world: viz. heaven, earth, and nether world.

This inability of Ravana to lift Laxman is easy to understand if we just apply common sense. Laxman, in his primary form as Seshnath, supports the world, which obviously includes this earth where Lanka was situated, on his head. How can anyone, no matter how strong he might be, lift the very piece of earth, the area of land or the ground on which he is standing?

Suppose a person is standing on a mat, and the mat is spread over floor of his room. How can he dig that floor and lift it on his shoulders or head while standing on the same part of the floor? It's like trying to lift one's own self; it's absolutely absurd and madness to even think of doing it. One can lift someone else, but not one's own self!

So therefore, trying to lift Laxman was logically and physically impossible for Ravana because he was standing on the very piece of ground which Laxman supported on his head in his primary form as Seshnath; it would be like lifting his own self along with the ground on which Ravana was standing, which is a ridiculous proposition, a senseless thought, and against all principles of science.]

दो०. देखि पवनसुत धायउ बोलत बचन कठोर ।
आवत कपिहि हन्यो तेहिं मुष्टि प्रहार प्रघोर ॥ ८३ ॥

dōhā.

dēkhi pavanasuta dhāya'u bōlata bacana kaṭhōra.
āvata kapihi han'yō tēhiṁ muṣṭi prahāra praghōra. 83.

When the son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) saw Ravana making attempts to lift Laxman, he dashed forward (to intervene and stop him from doing so), shouting at him and strongly admonishing Ravana by using harsh words against him.

Almost simultaneously, when Ravana observed that Hanuman is approaching him menacingly, he raised himself and hit the latter hard with his clenched fists as if a mighty Vajra (a very hard and strong weapon used by Indra, the king of gods) was used to strike Hanuman¹. (Doha no. 83)

[Note—¹A very interesting observation can be made here. Earlier on in the war, when Laxman was shot and made unconscious by Meghanad (Ravana's son), the latter too had tried to lift Laxman, but had failed. Then Meghanad left the wounded Laxman lying on the ground and went away. So by the time Hanuman came there to lift and take Laxman away to Lord Ram, there was no one to oppose him. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 54 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 55.}

But now in the case of Ravana we find that he did not go away, but continued to make efforts to lift Laxman till the time Hanuman came to intervene.]

चौ०. जानु टेकि कपि भूमि न गिरा । उठा सँभारि बहुत रिस भरा ॥ १ ॥
मुठिका एक ताहि कपि मारा । परेउ सैल जनु बज्र प्रहारा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jānu ṭēki kapi bhūmi na girā. uṭhā saṁbhāri bahuta risa bharā. 1.
muṭhikā ēka tāhi kapi mārā. parē'u saila janu bajra prahārā. 2.

Hanuman tottered a bit but overall succeeded in overcoming the force of the blow by kneeling down on his knees and supporting himself on the ground; this strategy prevented him from falling down flat on the ground.

He soon recovered himself and got up, full of excess of fury and seething with vehement wrath¹. (1)

Hanuman retaliated viciously by striking Ravana ferociously with his clenched fists; the blow was so hard that it struck Ravana as if the Vajra (the hard and strong weapon of Indra) itself had hit him with its full force. (2)

[Note—¹Why was Hanuman's anger so mightily provoked? First it was because he saw Ravana felling Laxman by hitting the latter with Brahm's weapon, then whatever little anger was yet left unprovoked inside Hanuman was stoked when Ravana hit him with his fists. That was intolerable for Hanuman, so he decided to teach this villain some bitter lesson by giving him his own medicine by way of a counter fist-attack.]

मुरुछा गै बहोरि सो जागा । कपि बल बिपुल सराहन लागा ॥ ३ ॥
 धिग धिग मम पौरुष धिग मोही । जौं तैं जिअत रहेसि सुरद्रोही ॥ ४ ॥ muruchā gai bahōri sō jāgā. kapi bala bipula sarāhana lāgā. 3.

 dhiga dhiga mama pauruṣa dhiga mōhī. jaum̐ taim̐ ji'ata rahēsi suradrōhī. 4.

[What was the effect of Hanuman's mighty strike?] Ravana fell down unconscious by the mighty force of the fist blow, but he soon recovered his senses and praised Hanuman's valour and courage¹. (3)

When Hanuman observed that Ravana had recovered himself, he vehemently cursed his own self and moaned: 'Shame to me; shame to my valour, honour and fame. I am terribly ashamed of myself that I left you, the enemy of gods, alive (instead of doing you to death immediately after you fainted when I struck you with my fist).'² (4)

[Note—¹This indeed was the way great and true warriors thought and behaved in ancient times. Instead of cursing and abusing Hanuman and calling him several filthy names in uncouth language, Ravana praised him for his gallantry and valour; he recognized and gave credit to Hanuman's astounding strength and stupendous powers that succeeded in felling Ravana, a feat that of course was not easy.

In today's world, we kill each other from hiding, using guns and rockets and remote controlled bombs raining down from the sky upon the helpless enemy on the ground, and then we claim victory over a much weaker adversary. How cowardly this is; what kind of 'victory' is it? A true soldier worth his honour and name is one who praises the valour and martial skills of the other soldier, even though the latter is his mortal enemy.

²Well, Hanuman could have done it now, he could have killed Ravana still yet, couldn't he? So why didn't Hanuman lunge at Ravana and caught hold of him and dash him to the ground to kill him if he was so regretful to have left him alive?

The reason is this: Laxman was lying unconscious on the ground, and a huge, angry and ferocious army of demons was teeming all around. There was grave danger to Laxman if any time was wasted in removing him from the battle-field to a safer place. Some heavy demon may trample upon him, or some mighty monkey or bear warrior might do it by mistake, because during the heat of war warriors become literally blind to whom they hit, or who is lying dead or still alive but wounded on the ground. This possibility was too risky to overlook in the eagerness to kill Ravana.

Hence, Hanuman decided to first take Laxman to a safer place, for Ravana could be tackled later on; it wasn't that urgent now.]

अस कहि लछिमन कहूँ कपि ल्यायो । देखि दसानन बिसमय पायो ॥ ५ ॥ कह रघुबीर समुझु जियँ भ्राता । तुम्ह कृतांत भच्छक सुर त्राता ॥ ६ ॥ asa kahi lachimana kahum̐ kapi lyāyō. dēkhi dasānana bisamaya pāyō. 5.

kaha raghubīra samujhu jiyam̐ bhrātā. tumha kṛtānta bhacchaka sura trātā. 6.

After expressing extreme anger and exasperation at himself for not having killed Ravana at the spot itself (due to the exigency of the situation and the urgent call of duty requiring him to take Laxman to a safe place first, and keep everything else pending for a while), Hanuman lifted the prostrate Laxman, very swiftly and very easily, and brought him to where Lord Ram was¹.

When Ravana saw this (i.e. when he observed that Hanuman could easily lift Laxman when he himself hadn't been able to move the latter a wee bit despite trying his best and employing all the strength that he could muster for the job, strength which was truly phenomenal), he was greatly astounded and utterly awed at this strange development². (5)

Lord Ram looked at Laxman and explained: 'My dear brother. Think for yourself; recall your mighty glory and majesty. You are the one who can devour even the god of death, and you are the one who is the protector of gods!³' (6)

[Note—¹Earlier we have read that Hanuman had easily lifted Laxman and brought him to Lord Ram when he was shot and made unconscious by Meghanad—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 55.

There we have read that Meghanad too had tried his best to lift Laxman but failed—apropos: Doha no. 54.

An elaborate note has been appended to these verses to explain how and why Hanuman was able to lift Laxman when all others had failed.

We will briefly site here a simple example of ordinary life to explain how it was made possible. Suppose a green leaf of a tree is plucked off its branch by some miscreant; the leaf would obviously fall on the ground below. It wouldn't move on its own, but suppose again that a strong wind starts blowing. What will happen? The wind would easily lift the leaf, bear it along or carry it aloft to a certain point, and then drop it there. Now, a sudden force in the wind is needed to actually lift the leaf from the ground; mild or soft breeze wouldn't lift it.

This example explains what might have happened on the battle-field of Lanka. Hanuman, as is well known and documented, was the 'son of the wind god'; he inherited the genes, and consequently the abilities and qualities of the 'wind god'. Added to this factor was another: since Lord Ram and his brother were fighting this war on behalf of the gods, and on their behest, it was obligatory for the gods to help them in the best way they could; they were morally duty-bound to do it. So therefore, when the time came to help Lord Ram by removing Laxman from the dangers of the battle-field, the 'wind god' decided to do his bit by aiding his son Hanuman in lifting Laxman and taking him out of harms way, which meant bringing him to Lord Ram.

So be it. But then, why couldn't Ravana not move Laxman even a fraction of a millimeter from the ground where he was lying in spite of the well-known fact that he had successfully lifted the mighty Kailash mountain, the abode of Lord Shiva, when he laid siege on it and decided to bring it to Lanka along with its Patron Lord, Shiva—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 25; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 29.

The answer is this: Ravana had an extremely gross nature; he was very sinful and evil and full of vices in his body, and so therefore he represented more closely the 'earth element', which is the grossest and the most heavy of the five elements of creation, which incidentally are the sky, wind, fire, water and earth elements in ascending order of grossness. In sharp contrast with the nature of Ravana was Hanuman, for he stood for the ‘subtler and lighter forces of creation represented by the wind element’. So therefore, since Ravana himself was ‘gross and heavy as lead’, and consequently symbolized the nature of the ‘earth’ which itself is heavy and gross, he differed remarkably from the nature of Hanuman who symbolized the ‘subtle and lighter forces of creation represented by the wind element’.

To wit, Ravana was an image of the ‘heavy and gross earth element’, while Hanuman was an image of the ‘subtler and lighter wind element’.

Heavy things go down; lighter things move up. If we put a ball of lead in water, it will sink; but if we put a balloon filled with air on the same water, it will float on the surface; won’t it?

This observation answers our question on its own accord: Ravana, being gross and heavy as the earth element, could not lift Laxman because here Laxman’s own weight was added to the mighty weight of the earth which he carried on his head in his primary form as Lord Seshnath, the celestial Serpent—apropos: Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 83 herein above.

On the other hand was Hanuman; he had the qualities of the wind element which is an invisible stupendous force of creation, strong enough to be able to easily uproot large trees, and make even the mighty ocean heave and rise in the form of gigantic waves, many meters high, that move forward in the form of a high wall that moves fast and furious with devastating force, when it is whipped up by the force of a fierce storm, so much so that it can topple huge ships and lay to ruin vast coastal areas where it makes landfall. What is a humble leaf lying on the ground before the might of this wind force? To wit, when Hanuman employed his inherent force of the power of the wind element, lifting Laxman was only like a child’s play; like a child lifting a leaf from the ground and taking it somewhere.

Come to think of it; anything that is gross like the earth element is visible also like the earth in its physical form as we know it, but anything that is subtle and light like the wind element remains invisible to us like our own breath or the air that surrounds us. So therefore, we can see or visualize Ravana flexing his muscles, biting his teeth, sweating and fretting and fuming and cursing and calling names as he physically applies all the might of his twenty strong arms in an attempt to lift Laxman, but we have no such account for Hanuman! It is because Ravana’s efforts were visible to us as he was a gross person, while Hanuman’s efforts remained invisible as his was a subtler and sublime presence, a persona that transcended the grossness of this physical world.

We must remember in this context that Hanuman was able to lift the mighty mountain containing the medicinal herbs needed to revive Laxman when he had fainted earlier, and held it aloft on his hands as he cruised all the way across the night sky for thousands of miles from the northern Himalayas to the battle-field of Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 58. If he could do that, there is no wonder he could lift Laxman as well, because he had the technical skill and the acumen needed to perform this feat, something others didn’t have.

Besides this incident, Hanuman had also streaked across the sky over the ocean like an arrow while coming to and going back from Lanka when he had been sent to search for Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 1.

²Ravana was confounded because he couldn't see deeper into the truth. It is because of the effects of 'Maya', the Supreme Lord's power to create delusions that overwhelmed him and clouded his wisdom. It was because his time was up; 'death' was coming closer to him, and its dark shadow had engulfed his intellect and discretion like the creeping shadow that precedes total lunar or solar eclipse.

³See note appended to verse no. 7 herein below.]

सुनत बचन उठि बैठ कृपाला । गई गगन सो सकति कराला ॥ ७ ॥ पुनि कोदंड बान गहि धाए । रिपु सन्मुख अति आतुर आए ॥ ८ ॥ sunata bacana uṭhi baiṭha krpālā. ga'ī gagana sō sakati karālā. 7.

puni kōdaṇḍa bāna gahi dhā'ē. ripu sanmukha ati ātura ā'ē. 8.

No sooner did the merciful Laxman heard Lord Ram's pleas, then he sat up, as if nothing at all had happened to him¹. Meanwhile, the deadly 'Shakti', i.e. the powerful energized weapon that Ravana had used to strike Laxman with, went back to the heavens². (7)

Thence, Laxman grabbed a formidable bow called 'Kodanda'³ and its compatible arrows, and rushed once again very eagerly to face the enemy in the battle-field. (8)

[Note—¹When Laxman was made unconscious the last time during his battle with Meghanad, we have read that he was revived with the help of certain medicinal herbs that grew on a mountain brought by Hanuman from the higher reaches of the Himalayas. Now, once the usefulness of these herbs was proved, it can be reasonably and logically assumed that Lord Ram and his wise ministers had kept the rest of the herbs safely for any future use, because they couldn't take any further risks while a bloody and deadly war was raging.

So this time around, these herbs came in handy to them; for as soon as Laxman was brought in, he was immediately administered the potion that had revived him earlier. Wonderful war strategy indeed it was; any commander of an army will instinctively do the same thing even today.

²And what about this 'Shakti' going to the heaven? Well, here heaven actually means the 'sky'. It implies that the shaft that had entered Laxman's body was pulled out by either Lord Ram himself or any one of his ministers, who immediately 'flung it off so violently that it appeared to fly away into the sky'. Meanwhile, the medicinal herb was applied to Laxman's wound, and its action was so rapid that he recovered very quickly. In ancient times when no modern medicines and healing technology were available, but the most ferocious of wars were fought nevertheless, surely some ancient method of healing the wounded soldiers were known to the commanders of great armies which helped them to get the wounded soldiers back on their feet fast.

To recall an example from classical literature, we read in 'Don Quixote' by Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, in its chapter no. iii, book 2, that when the knight-errant named Don Quixote was once seriously injured in his ears during one of his many misadventures, wherein one of his ears was just short of being ripped off his body, and he managed to escape with just a deep gash which was bleeding and paining extremely, the nomadic goatherds with whom had been discoursing on some subject and to whom he complained about his misery, came to his aid; they crushed some leaves of the rosemary plant, mixed some salt in the paste, and bandaged the injured part of the ear with this concoction. It had a rapid healing effect, and our brave knight-errant found immediate relief.

Well, let's come back to the story. We have read that this weapon was known as Brahma Shakti; so it went to its original owner, i.e. to the creator Brahma. This is why it is said here that it went to the 'heaven'.

³The Kodanda Bow is the special bow belonging to Lord Ram, and it was used sparingly during the war; it was the one which was used to slay Ravana. It was different from other bows, for it had some special virtues unique to it. It was crafted by with the specific purpose of eliminating the scourge of the evil forces of Nature symbolized by Ravana and his vile demon compatriots.]

छं०. आतुर बहोरि बिभंजि स्यंदन सूत हति व्याकुल कियो । १ ।
गिर्यो धरनि दसकंधर बिकलतर बान सत बेध्यो हियो ॥ २ ॥ सारथी दूसर घालि रथ तेहि तुरत लंका लै गयो । ३ ।
रघुबीर बंधु प्रताप पुंज बहोरि प्रभु चरनहि नयो ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ātura bahōri bibhañji syandana sūta hati byākula kiyō. 1.
giryō dharani dasakandhara bikalatara bāna sata bēdhyō hiyō. 2.
sārathī dūsara ghāli ratha tēhi turata laṅkā lai gayō. 3.
raghubīra bandhu pratāpa puñja bahōri prabhu carananhi nayō. 4.

Laxman went back hastily, and with renewed fury, to face Ravana once again in the battle-field. He shot a volley of fierce arrows that broke Ravana's second chariot¹ into splinters, killed his charioteer, and made the demon warlord extremely exasperated. (Chanda line no. 1)

He (Laxman) pierced Ravana's chest with a hundred arrows shot simultaneously; they had a devastating effect on Ravana, making him totter and swoon, and fall down on the ground in great agitation. (Chanda line no. 2)

In the meantime, another charioteer, who was waiting with a spare chariot², immediately picked up the fallen Ravana and scampered away with great haste, taking him back to the fort of Lanka. (Chanda line no. 3)

After having chased back the enemy and avenging himself, Lord Ram's valorous brother (Laxman) came back to the Lord. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Laxman had broken Ravana's first chariot and killed its charioteer before he was shot and made unconscious by the demon king—apropos: Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 83 herein above.

Meanwhile, during the intervening time, while Hanuman had taken Laxman to Lord Ram and then Laxman had come back to the battle-field to face Ravana once again after regaining his senses, Ravana called in another chariot that was kept in reserve, as a stand-by. It was this new chariot, the 2nd one, that Laxman broke now.

²This was the '3rd chariot' used by Ravana that we come across. The demon king kept many war chariots in reserve during battles so that he can quickly switch from one to another should any emergency arise.]

दो०. उहाँ दसानन जागि करि करै लाग कछु जग्य ।

राम बिरोध बिजय चह सठ हठ बस अति अग्य ॥ ८४ ॥

dōhā.

uhāṁ dasānana jāgi kari karai lāga kachu jagya.
rāma birōdha bijaya caha saṭha haṭha basa ati agya. 84.

There, inside Lanka, when the ten-headed Ravana regained his consciousness after some time, he started doing some kind of fire sacrifice¹ that would enable (or empower) him to win the war against Lord Ram.

Indeed and in all sooth, he was truly an ignorant and dumb-witted fellow, whose mind was pervert and heart wicked, that he even imagined he would gain victory in a war by antagonizing Lord Ram, by standing as the Lord's enemy with the hope of defeating the Supreme Lord of the world². (Doha no. 84)

[Note—¹This is the second time we come across performance of a fire sacrifice by the demon clan during the course of the war. Earlier it was Meghanad who did it—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 75.

In both these cases, i.e. in the case of Meghanad earlier and of Ravana now, the fire sacrifices were done during the night, at the end of the day's battle.

The light of the fire lit for the purpose of the sacrifice lighted up the night sky. It was a tell-tale sign that would warn Vibhishan that a fire sacrifice was being undertaken by Ravana in Lanka. We shall read in the following verse that Vibhishan came to know about the developments and went to warn Lord Ram about it.

²This marked the end of the 6th day of the war.]

चौ०. इहाँ बिभीषन सब सुधि पाई । सपदि जाइ रघुपतिहि सुनाई ॥ १ ॥

नाथ करइ रावन एक जागा । सिद्ध भएँ नहिं मरिहि अभागा ॥ २ ॥

पठवहु नाथ बेगि भट बंदर । करहिं बिधंस आव दसकंधर ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

ihāṁ bibhīṣana saba sudhi pāī. sapadi jā'i raghupatihi sunāī. 1.
nātha kara'i rāvana ēka jāgā. sid'dha bha'ēṁ nahim marihi abhāgā. 2.
paṭhavahu nātha bēgi bhaṭa bandara. karahim bidhansa āva dasakandhara. 3.

In the meantime, Vibhishan learnt everything about the developments in Lanka (i.e. he got to know that Ravana was engaged in doing a fire sacrifice to gain victory in the war)¹. So he immediately rushed and told all about it to Lord Ram². (1)

Vibhishan said: ‘Oh Lord; Ravana is doing a fire sacrifice. If that unfortunate fellow completes it successfully, then he would become invincible, and it will not be possible to kill him any longer. (2)

So therefore oh Lord, it has become imperative (for us) to send monkey and bear warriors to interrupt it. They must go forthwith and disrupt the sacrifice so that Ravana would be provoked and forced to come here (in the battle-field) before he manages to complete it successfully and gain invincibility.³’ (3)

[Note—¹How did Vibhishan come to know what Ravana was doing inside his fort? There are two possibilities: One, some spy had informed Vibhishan about it, who was also keeping him abreast of everything that was happening inside the fort. And two, as soon as the sacrificial fire was lit, its flames lighted the night firmament above, and it was a tell-tale sign which led Vibhishan to conclude that Ravana was performing a great fire sacrifice. We must remember that Vibhishan was Ravana’s brother, and so he was well acquainted with family practices and his elder brother’s habits, and the rituals he was likely to perform when faced with emergencies.

²Earlier too, when Meghanad had done a similar fire sacrifice, Vibhishan had rushed to tell Lord Ram about it, and warn him that if he succeeded in finishing it, then he would become invincible—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 75.

³Remarkable indeed! It ought to be noted that the initiative to disrupt the fire sacrifice was taken by Vibhishan, and not Lord Ram. Here it is clear that Vibhishan had expressly requested that troops be dispatched to prevent the completion of the sacrifice. This made it obligatory for Lord Ram to heed this advice, because Vibhishan was a trusted military advisor, a close confidential aide and the strategist of the Lord during this campaign, and failing to listen to him, and then if the war was lost, the entire blame would lie squarely on the Lord’s shoulders.

Besides this, the Lord was employing the ancient wisdom of paying back a wicked fellow with the sort of money with which he does his own business; or rather, to give him the taste of his own medicine. Demons were known to defile and destroy fire sacrifices of sages, and so now it was high time to repay them and giving them the same remedy by destroying their own sacrifices. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 181; and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 183.}

In sage Veda Vyas’ epic ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’, Lanka Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 4-16, it is clearly mentioned that Ravana was advised by his guru Sukracharya that he should do a particular kind of fire sacrifice in some secret place. His guru also told him the secret of how to do it and the Mantras to be employed. This ritual, if completed successfully, would provide him with certain war paraphernalia, such as a chariot, horses, bows, arrows, quiver etc., which would make him invincible in the war. So Ravana retired to his palace and got a deep underground cavern made for this purpose. But unfortunately for him, a huge plume of smoke emanating from the fire sacrifice rose and went up high in the sky; it also contained the aroma of the various herbs that were used for the sacrifice. Vibhishan had spotted this smoke and also smelled the smell of herbs, most probably because the smoke wafted towards the camp of Lord Ram by the force of the breeze that was blowing in that direction.

So Vibhishan immediately became alert; he came to the conclusion that the only cause of this smoke and its aromatic smell was that Ravana was doing some sort of fire sacrifice, and there could be no other reason for him doing it in the middle of night other than gaining victory in the war.]

प्रात होत प्रभु सुभट पठाए । हनुमदादि अंगद सब धाए ॥ ४ ॥
 कौतुक कूदि चढ़े कपि लंका । पैठे रावन भवन असंका ॥ ५ ॥ जग्य करत जबहीं सो देखा । सकल कपिन्ह भा क्रोध बिसेषा ॥ ६ ॥ prāta hōta prabhu subhaṭa paṭhā'ē. hanumadādi aṅgada saba dhā'ē. 4.

 kautuka kūdi caṛhē kapi laṅkā. paiṭhē rāvana bhavana asaṅkā. 5.
 jagya karata jabahīm sō dēkhā. sakala kapinha bhā krōdha bisēṣā. 6.

As soon as it was dawn, Lord Ram sent agile and valiant warriors such as Hanuman, Angad etc. to accomplish this task¹. All of them dashed forward to Lanka with great haste. (4)

The monkeys leapt over the walls of the fort of Lanka² very easily, and then fearlessly entered the palace of Ravana. (5)

When they found him doing the fire sacrifice, they lost their cool and became excessively furious and wild with anger. (6)

[Note—¹Throughout the war we will observe that it were Angad and Hanuman who had led the assault from the front. Other great warriors, such as Nala, Neela, Dwivid, Jamvant etc. had their own roles to play and had accompanied them, but the main pillars on which the success of the war rested were undoubtedly Angad and Hanuman. Lord Ram was acquainted with their exceptional abilities, stupendous valour and phenomenal strength, and so he would always summon them first and ask them to lead each phase of the assault.

A question arises in one's mind that was it good for Lord Ram to order the destruction of a fire sacrifice? Well, though apparently this ordering of destruction of a fire sacrifice was not a good act for Lord Ram to do, as he was an upholder of righteousness and supporter of good deeds, but we must remember that he was fighting a war with a cunning and vicious enemy who would go to any length to defeat his opponent; and times of wars have different set of rules as compared to peaceful times. Besides this, the Lord wished to give a message that a thorn has to be plucked out by another thorn or a needle if the whole body is to be prevented from developing gangrene; it was a literal tit-for-tat for the demons who had been relentlessly defiling fire sacrifices of sages.

If mercy was shown on the demons in this final stage when the objective of Lord Vishnu to come down to earth as Lord Ram was about to be fulfilled, then all efforts would be wasted. To wit, if Ravana was allowed to survive, which he surely would if he successfully completed the fire sacrifice, then the sufferings he had caused to the world and the horrors he had perpetrated, would continue unabated. He would become all the more brazen and reckless; sins and evil deeds would multiply, and all things under the banner of 'Dharma', such as the virtues of goodness and righteousness, would become the casualty.

If this was allowed to happen then Lord Ram, who was the Supreme Being, would fail in his duty in upholding the tenets of Dharma and protecting the humble creatures of his own creation who were being mercilessly tormented and made to suffer interminably by the demons. So such niceties as avoiding the destruction of a fire sacrifice on the grounds of high moral and scrupulous were not the need of the hour, especially in the context of what was already happening and what would happen in the world if Ravana survived.

Lord Ram also wished to make Ravana and Meghnad, both of whose fire sacrifices were ordered to be destroyed, have a taste of their own medicine. They were used to defiling the fire sacrifices of sages, hermits and seers, so let them feel how bad they must have felt.

It also shows that when all means to avoid confrontation were exhausted, when the wicked, the pervert, the rascal and the unrighteous evil fellows who were embodiments of every imaginable forms of sin and evil, would not see reason and mend their ways, then for the larger good of the world, in the larger interest of restoring order and peace in this world, the Lord had no other alternative but to administer a bitter medicine to the demons to which they were so accustomed. Drastic situations need equally drastic remedies, for oftentimes it does become imperative to use harsh methods for the larger interest of the society and humanity. If the carrot doesn't work, the stick has to be oftentimes used.

If the Lord shows mercy and compassion—which is actually his habit and wont—then multitudes suffer due to the wickedness of a handful of persons. It is better to sacrifice them and salvage the boat of peaceful and harmonious existence rather than pretending to be righteous and let the humanity suffer. Being a King and Lord of the universe and a caretaker of its inhabitants, it was morally bound on Sri Ram to protect his suffering subjects from the cruelty and tyranny unleashed by Ravana and his kith and kin.

So the ordering of the destruction of Ravana's fire sacrifice should be seen in this context.

²All the gates of the fort of Lanka were closed. So it became necessary for Angad and Hanuman to take a giant leap and enter the city forthwith, as no time could be wasted in stopping Ravana from completing the sacrifice. In Adhyatma Ramayan, a similar thing is described in its Lanka Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 16-20.

Even if the gates were not closed, it would be a waste of crucial time and sapping of vital energy trying to engage with the demon army stationed to protect the fort. Angad and Hanuman were tasked with destroying the fire sacrifice, and not clashing with and decimating the enemy army.]

रन ते निलज भाजि गृह आवा । इहाँ आइ बक ध्यान लगावा ॥ ७ ॥
अस कहि अंगद मारा लाता । चितव न सठ स्वारथ मन राता ॥ ८ ॥ rana tē nilaja bhāji gr̥ha āvā. ihāṁ ā'i baka dhyāna lagāvā. 7.

asa kahi aṅgada mārā lātā. citava na saṭha svāratha mana rātā. 8.

They scornfully teased Ravana by saying, ‘Oh you shameless and cowardly fellow. You ran away from the battle-field, and came here to pretend to be doing meditation like a heron.¹ (7)

Saying this, Angad kicked him (Ravana) viciously. But the wicked fellow paid no attention to it as his mind was preoccupied with other things². (8)

[Note—¹This metaphor of the heron is used for a person who is very pretentious, deceitful, and full of falsehood, who pretends to be a harmless, nice and holy person to mislead other from his true intention, for he is the most wicked creature one may come across.

This bird stands in water on one leg and bent neck, appearing to be engaged in silent meditation. But its attention is fixed on any fish that may come within its range, for then it would swiftly pick it up from water with its long beak and gobble it up, only to resume its meditative, saintly and holy posture the next moment.

Here the monkeys mean that Ravana was a coward who ran away from battle, but now he pretends to be a holy man engaged in his religious pursuit. Is this his true character; is he really a holy man doing a fire sacrifice? Well, if it was so then they would never dare ruin his fire sacrifice, but the truth is that he is a crook who is assuming this posture with the evil intention of acquiring powers that would enable him to wreak havoc, to unleash the fire of hell on his enemy, the monkeys and bears as well as their Lord Ram and his close advisors. So this being the case, surely there is no harm in disrupting his fire sacrifice.

This observation makes it clear why the monkey troops were not accused of committing a sinful act by destroying the sacrifice of Ravana: for it was being done with evil intentions. Compared to this, the destruction of the fire sacrifices of sages by the demons was a sinful act as their sacrifices were a part of their religious duties and spiritual practices that had no evil component in it; they weren’t aimed against anybody.

²Credit must be given to Ravana at least for once in this regard, that when he was engaged in doing the fire sacrifice, all his attention was focused on it as it rightly ought to be. He was immune to everything else; external stimuli did not affect him at all, nor was he disturbed by them, for his inner-self was deeply immersed in meditating on the deity to whom he was offering this sacrifice and his physical body was as good as dead and numb.

Even if we do not accept this argument and say that Ravana was fully conscious of his surroundings, then at least one thing is sure: as soon as a noisy raucous was created by the invading monkeys, Ravana immediately realized why they had come, which was to disrupt his sacrifice. So he mentally geared himself up to defeat their design by not allowing himself to be disturbed and get provoked by anything they do.

Hence, when Angad kicked him violently, Ravana maintained his cool.]

छं०. नहिं चितव जब करि कोप कपि गहि दसन लातन्ह मारहीं । १ ।

धरि केस नारि निकारि बाहेर तेऽतिदीन पुकारहीं ॥ २ ॥

तब उठेउ क्रुद्ध कृतांत सम गहि चरन बानर डारई । ३ ।

एहि बीच कपिन्ह बिधंस कृत मख देखि मन महुँ हारई ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

nahim citava jaba kari kōpa kapi gahi dasana lātanha mārahim. 1.

dhari kēsa nāri nikāri bāhēra tē'tidīna pukārahim. 2.

taba uṭhē'u krud'dha kṛtānta sama gahi carana bānara ḍāra'i. 3.

ēhi bīca kapinha bidhansa kṛta makha dēkhi mana mahuṁ hāra'i. 4.

When he (Ravana) did not open his eyes (i.e. when he remained calm and continued with his fire sacrifice, neglecting all insinuating words and provocative actions of Angad who had kicked him and called him a coward and a pretentious crook), all the monkeys who had come to disrupt his sacrifice attacked him all at once; some biting him with their teeth and others kicking him violently. (Chanda line no. 1)

They went on the rampage; some entered his palace and dragged his women (i.e. the female members of Ravana's royal household) out into the open by pulling them by their hairs, as a result of which they wailed in terror and screamed in abject fear (of being dishonoured and seriously injured)¹. (Chanda line no. 2)

It was too much for Ravana to cope with (because never ever in his long life had he been subjected to this extreme low level of humiliation where his women would be dragged out of the palace by their hairs, wailing and crying helplessly, and subjected to such wild dishonour in his presence).

So finally he lost his poise and got up in a huff. Bursting in the seam in surging anger, with all his restraint cracked beyond repair, he was a personified Kaal (Death) raging mad with vehemence and wrath. He reacted most violently and vengefully by quickly catching whosoever monkey warrior he could lay his hands by their legs, and dealing with all of these unfortunate victims most viciously, by throwing them away violently, felling some unconscious to the ground while thrashing and dashing others most brutally, and flicking some into the raging fire of the sacrificial pit (where they would char to death and roasted alive). (Chanda line no. 3)

During this time (while he was engaged in venting his anger on those monkeys who had dragged out his women), the other monkey warriors destroyed his fire sacrifice². When Ravana finally took notice of it, he was extremely dismayed and completely devastated, for now he lost all hopes of winning this war². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹The monkeys were representing Lord Ram. It therefore implies that what they did had an indirect approval or tacit support of the Lord, for the Lord had never scolded them for doing such nasty things as dragging out women from inside their private chambers by pulling at their hairs. What does it mean? The Lord wanted to tell Ravana, albeit silently, that it is his punishment for what he had done with the women folk of others—for it is documented in ancient histories related to him that when he attacked the gods and other great rulers, he would grab their women and bring them as mistresses of his household—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 182-b.

One such instance of Ravana's pervert and lascivious nature is right before us—the abduction of Sita, the wife of Lord Ram, which, as we are well acquainted with by now, was the reason why this epic war erupted—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 25; and (ii) Doha no. 28.

²Once again, this was exactly what Ravana himself had ordered his demons to do—to destroy the fire sacrifices of sages and kill them, and was now being paid in his own coin—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 181 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 206; and (iii) Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede Doha no. 207; and (b) Aranya Kand, Doha no. 9 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it.

³Ravana had pinned his hopes of victory in the war on the successful completion of his fire sacrifice. With this sacrifice in ruins, all hopes were lost; he felt himself sinking and weak in his knees. Now he was sure that the end was near; that the game was up for him. As it is said that when a person becomes very desperate and loses all hopes of recovery from his misfortunes, he becomes a very frustrated and dangerous man, like an injured lion or tiger, and if this person is in command of anything with which he can vent his anger on him who he believes has been the cause of his fall and misfortunes, then all hell breaks loose. Knowing now that death was a forgone conclusion for him, Ravana pulled out all stops and went berserk in anger.

So we shall discover now when we read on with this most fascinating narration of this equally fascinating Story, that the last phase of the war was the most vicious and brutal of all; it was a terrifying war fought with the extreme viciousness and hair-raising horror imaginable; a war the like of which was never again fought on earth.

Imagine the mismatch between the two great warring armies: on one side were ferocious giants, the vicious demons, armed to the teeth with the best of weapons and war paraphernalia in vogue at that point of time in history, and on the other side were the humble creatures known as monkeys and bears, who are regarded as primitive creatures low down in the ladder of evolution, who had nothing worth the name to be called as proper weapons of war, except their own teeth and the strength of their muscular arms, or the access to primitive attack weapons provided by mother Nature herself, such as trees, rocks and boulders! With these primitive tools at their disposal, the monkeys and bears succeeded in conquering the mightiest empire on earth at that time—the Demon Empire ruled by Ravana, an empire that stretched its sway and tentacles from the high heavens where the almighty Gods lived, right up to the nether world where other powerful Spirits ruled, those who had no less importance and no less powers than the Gods of heaven, with the poor earth with its humble creatures, including the human race and the animals, lying somewhere in between!

All these things point to one obvious reason: it is that this victory of the monkeys and bears was made possible only by the grace and blessings of Lord Ram, the Supreme Being himself personified in the Lord's physical form, and there was no other reason.]

दो०. जग्य बिधंसि कुसल कपि आए रघुपति पास ।

चलेउ निसाचर क्रुद्ध होइ त्यागि जिवन कै आस ॥ ८५ ॥

dōhā.

jagya bidhansi kusala kapi ā'ē raghupati pāsa.
calē'u nisācara krud'dha hō'i tyāgi jivana kai āsa. 85.

After destroying Ravana's sacrifice successfully, the monkeys came back to Lord Ram. Meanwhile, the demon king (Ravana) lost all hopes of either attaining victory or surviving this war alive, and so he departed for the battle-field boiling over with rage and mad with vengefulness¹. (Doha no. 85)

[Note—¹Ravana now decided that there is no looking back for him, that there was no hope for him to retrieve his lost glory and fame. He had lived a proud life as an invincible conqueror who had vanquished even the mighty gods by the valour of his strong arms. Now faced with the horrifying prospect of defeat and its attendant ignominy and humiliation, which was by now magnified manifold times by his inability to protect the honour and dignity of his own women folk who were pulled out unceremoniously from their palace by the monkey troops and ridiculed publicly, coupled by the infamy attached to the earlier deaths of his mighty son Meghanad and equally mighty brother Kumbhakaran, Ravana by now had turned into a mad and fanatic killer, who wots no boundaries and transcends all limits in his determination to unleash his fiery fury, like an erupting volcano spewing out molten lava or a ferocious dragon out to annihilate the world by breathing fire and brimstone, upon those whom he thinks are the cause of his fall from grace and loss of fortunes.

In this mental state of excessive aggressiveness and frustration, where he lost all hopes of living, and was therefore turned into a ferocious messenger of death and destruction, Ravana left the fort of Lanka and plunged head-on into the battle. He was determined now onwards to fight like a mad bull that is gravely injured, resolved to obliterate anything that stood in his way in the battle-field.]

चौ०. चलत होहिं अति असुभ भयंकर । बैठहिं गीध उड़ाइ सिरन्ह पर ॥ १ ॥

भयउ कालबस काहु न माना । कहेसि बजावहु जुद्ध निसाना ॥ २ ॥

caupā'i.

calata hōhiṁ ati asubha bhayaṅkara. baiṭhahiṁ gīdha urā'i siranha para. 1.
bhaya'u kālabasa kāhu na mānā. kahēsi bajāvahu jud'dha nisānā. 2.

No sooner had Ravana left the fort for the battle-field, than all sorts of ill omens of the worst kind, portending calamities and horrors of destruction without forbearance, commenced to reveal themselves. For instance, vultures (that are harbingers of death as they feed on dead bodies and rotting corpses) came in droves to alight on his head and then fly away. (1)

But he was so tightly under the grip of Death and entangled firmly by its deadly tentacles that he won't listen to anything sane or to anybody whosoever he might be (as he had become excessively stubborn, exceptionally furious with anger, and filled with burning desire for revenge that engulfed his entire being).

He declared an all-out war with no holds barred, and asked war trumpets to be sounded with full vigour, in high decibel. (2)

[Note—¹Having decided that for aught he saw there was no other future left for him but death, Ravana cared no more for his own life, nor for what would befall upon anyone else.

So, without waiting or caring to weigh his options any longer, he ordered the war trumpets to be sounded with full vigour, screwed his face menacingly in a grisly sign of unleashing his nasty vengeance upon his enemy, he immediately sallied out of the fort of Lanka, mad and furious with anger and raging wrath.

He didn't even bother whether his demon warriors followed him or not, for let us remember he had declared earlier that he relied on no body but the valour and might of his own arms when he had first decided to pick up the cudgel of animosity with Lord Ram, and so he would prove it in this war once the enemy has come directly to challenge him for a duel—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 78.]

चली तमीचर अनी अपारा । बहु गज रथ पदाति असवारा ॥ ३ ॥

प्रभु सन्मुख धाए खल कैसें । सलभ समूह अनल कहँ जैसें ॥ ४ ॥

calī tamīcara anī apārā. bahu gaja ratha padāti asavārā. 3.

prabhu sanmukha dhā'ē khala kaisēm. salabha samūha anala kahaṁ jaisēm.

4.

The huge and formidable army of the demon race sallied out of the fort and headed for the battle-field. It had countless war elephants, chariots, foot soldiers (infantry) as well as those mounted on horses (cavalry)¹. (3)

These wicked and dumb-witted fellows rushed towards Lord Ram (and his army) just like insects fly towards a flame to meet their death. (4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 79 where it is said that the demon army had four wings—implying foot soldiers or infantry, horse-riding soldiers or the cavalry, those who rode war elephants or the warrior mahouts, and those who used war chariots, which in modern parlance we call the 'mechanized division'.]

इहाँ देवतन्ह अस्तुति कीन्ही । दारुन बिपति हमहि एहिं दीन्ही ॥ ५ ॥

अब जनि राम खेलावहु एही । अतिसय दुखित होति बैदेही ॥ ६ ॥

ihāṁ dēvatanha astuti kīnhī. dārūna bipati hamahi ēhiṁ dīnhī. 5.

aba jani rāma khēlāvahu ēhī. atisaya dukhita hōti baidēhī. 6.

Meanwhile, on this side (i.e. on the side of the battle-field where Lord Ram and his army were assembled) the gods (who had collected in the heaven to watch the proceedings on the ground) prayed fervently to Lord Ram, pleading with the Lord: 'Oh Lord. This fellow (Ravana) had inflicted uncountable horrors and miseries upon us. (5)

So therefore oh Lord, don't play hide and seek with him for long, and get rid of him soon, for Sita (also known as Vaidehi) is getting very upset and feeling highly miserable as she is tormented with the uncertainty of fate that prevails in the war with the passage of each day.¹ (6)

[Note—¹The gods were correct in this, for we shall soon read about it directly while narrating the conversation that Sita had with Trijata, the pious old demoness appointed by Ravana to guard her, and who had become very friendly and sympathetic to her during her captivity in Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 100.

Here we note two things—The first is that the gods are reminding Lord Ram the primary reason why Lord Vishnu had come down to earth from heaven in the Lord's form when the gods had prayed to him for deliverance from the terror unleashed by Ravana and his cruel demon race—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 187.

And two, the gods are reminding the Lord about what Hanuman had said when he came back from Lanka with Sita's report, hearing which the Lord decided not to waste any more time but launch a campaign to free her—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 32; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 34, which is very explicit on this subject.

So, when the gods observed that the war was dragging on and on without any end in sight, they were worried, and decided to remind Lord Ram to hurry up and bring it to an end.]

देव बचन सुनि प्रभु मुसुकाना । उठि रघुबीर सुधारे बाना ॥ ७ ॥

जटा जूट दृढ़ बाँधें माथे । सोहहिं सुमन बीच बिच गाथे ॥ ८ ॥

dēva bacana suni prabhu musukānā. uṭhi raghubīra sudhārē bānā. 7.
jaṭā jūṭa dṛṛha bāṁdhēṁ māthē. sōhahīṁ sumana bīca bīca gāthē. 8.

When Lord Ram heard the words of the gods, he smiled¹ and got up to get ready for the final phase of the war. He took up his arrows (as well as the bow) to put them in order, and make them ready for use. (7)

He also wound the long hairs on his head tightly into a coil, and looked so charming in this form as flowers were also tucked in between the layers of this coil to form a wreath on his head (as a symbolic token of victory)². (8)

[Note—¹Why did the Lord smile? There are several reasons. He smiled because the gods want him to do everything for them, but they do not even have the basic courtesy and common sense of extending some help to him on their part. Don't they know that the Lord is on foot while his enemy Ravana is riding a war chariot? Couldn't the gods arrange a chariot for the Lord; couldn't Indra, the king of gods, send his own chariot to help Lord Ram? Well, the Lord smiled at the selfishness of the gods: for they want the Lord to do everything for them, and they not considering any simple way of helping him to help them. The Lord smiled in amusement, thinking to himself that he would fulfill his obligations irrespective of how the gods are.

He also smiled that the gods have started getting nervous; they have begun to doubt about the outcome of this war, inspite of being aware that once Lord Vishnu had promised them to eliminate the scourge of the demons he would not fail his words. But everything is done at the proper time, and that proper time regarding the hour of Ravana's physical death had not arrived as yet.

The Lord smiled as he was waiting for the gods to make another fervent plea for protection and deliverance from the fear of Ravana, lest they should forget the Lord's obligation upon them and say later on that Ravana died on his own accord when his lifespan had ended. Or, the God of Death, the 'Kaal', may boast that it was he who had killed Ravana, and Lord Ram had no role in it. Lord Ram was aware of the selfish nature of the gods. Were the gods really 'selfish'? Yes indeed they were, and it is clearly reiterated in Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 295; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 110.

Another reason for the Lord smiling is that these gods were so clever that they have cited Sita's miseries as the main reason for asking Lord Ram to hurry up in ending the war, instead of acknowledging that they themselves are dying of fear with the passage of each day.

²The flowers and leaves intertwined in the matted hairs of Lord Ram look odd in the background of the fierce war underway in the bloody fields of Lanka. But it indicates two things: One, that the Lord was complete at ease and confident, even finding time to groom himself properly in anticipation of certain victory. And two, the wreath on his head was a clear signal to the gods that they need not worry as the victory was now a certainty, for only a victorious warrior becomes entitled to wear the wreath symbolizing conquest on his head.]

अरुन नयन बारिद तनु स्यामा । अखिल लोक लोचनाभिरामा ॥ ९ ॥
कटितट परिकर कस्यो निषंगा । कर कोदंड कठिन सारंगा ॥ १० ॥

aruna nayana bārida tanu syāmā. akhila lōka lōcanābhirāmā. 9.
kaṭitaṭa parikara kasyō niṣaṅgā. kara kōdaṇḍa kaṭhina sārāṅgā. 10.

The Lord's reddened eyes (as they were angry; or it may also mean 'eyes that were like a lotus flower with a pink shade) and his dark complexion looked majestic and charming; they were so fascinating to behold that this sight gave unbound pleasure to everyone in this world who had the good fortune to observe it at that time (and to everyone else in this world who can close his eye and have this divine view revealed on the canvas of his mind). (9)

The Lord had the quiver tied firmly around his waist with the help of the waist-cloth that was girdled tightly around the middle part of his body. He also held the formidable bow called Kodanda¹ as well as powerful arrows in his two hands. (10)

[Note—¹This 'Kodanda' bow was used sparingly during the war, at only crucial points. This bow was the one which was used by Lord Ram to fulfil his promise made to the gods and mother earth in his original form as Lord Vishnu that he would remove the cause of their fears and miseries by getting rid of the cruel demon race led by its king Ravana. Therefore, the Bow was called 'Sarang' when it was held by Lord Vishnu, and when held by Lord Ram, an incarnation of Vishnu, it came to be known as 'Kodanda'.

A very remarkable thing has happened here, and it is worth pausing a bit here to understand its significance. The bow which Lord Ram picks up now to kill Ravana is called 'Kodanda'. Well, if we go back to the time when the Lord had married Sita by breaking the bow in Janakpur, that bow was also called 'Kodanda', and it belonged to Lord Shiva! This is explicitly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 251; and (ii) Chanda line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 261.

So what does this mean? How can Lord Ram use a bow, named Kodanda, that he had himself broken long ago? Well, come to think of it—herein lie the great mystery about Lord Ram, about what he did in this world, about his actions that have been invariably described by the scriptures as being beyond comprehension and logic. On the one hand he had broken the Kodanda bow, and on the other hand he picks up the same Kodanda bow to eliminate Ravana. It is obviously difficult to reconcile these two opposite and apparently contradictory situations unless and until we understand that everything the Lord did here in this world was a play of his cosmic Maya—the supreme power vested with the Supreme Being to create fantastic delusions, magical mysteries and unexplainable illusions like a Great Charmer or Master Magician.

To wit and in all sooth, he had neither broken Lord Shiva's bow named Kodanda, nor had he ever insulted Shiva by doing it. The breaking of that bow then was merely a magical trick done by Lord Ram like any other magician would do on stage. For let us understand one thing: that if the Kodanda bow was actually broken at that time, how then can it be used by Lord Ram now in the battle-field of Lanka?

Lord Ram had intended to use this Kodanda bow to slay Ravana later on, so he spread the spell of his magical charm called Maya much like a magician who would make his audience believe whatever he says, and literally have them eat out of his hands things that do not actually exist. So in effect, Lord Ram gave the impression that he had broken the Kodanda bow, but it is quite possible that it was given to him by King Janak as part of his marriage gift. Remember: Sita used to clean and pay homage to this bow when she was a child. So she loved it, and would not have parted with it after her marriage. Hence, she brought it with her to Ayodhya as part of her personal belongings.

At the time of going to the forest, Lord Ram carried it along, with his other bow called the Sarang. The world thought that since it was a 'broken bow', broken into two pieces, it was harmless. No one knew the reality—that it was merely made to appear like that, and would be the fatal bow that would one day do Ravana in one day.

This is evidently the reason why Lord Shiva had never felt offended when it was declared that Lord Ram had 'broken his bow'. Lord Shiva merely smiled and kept quiet to keep the secret, to prevent Ravana from being aware of the reality.

Such are indeed the mysterious and mystical ways of the Supreme Being; and how foolish would it be for ordinary human beings who have limited knowledge, and that too limited to this mortal world, try to comprehend the play of the Lord who is the Master Puppeteer of this Creation.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 91. The term 'Kodanda' is used to indicate how fierce the Lord would be for those who try to disrupt peace and order in the Lord's creation—because the term 'Kodanda' includes the word "Danda" which means punishment.]

छं०. सारंग कर सुंदर निषंग सिलीमुखाकर कटि कस्यो । १ ।
 भुजदंड पीन मनोहरायत उर धरासुर पद लस्यो ॥ २ ॥
 कह दास तुलसी जबहिं प्रभु सर चाप कर फेरन लगे । ३ ।
 ब्रह्मांड दिग्गज कमठ अहि महि सिंधु भूधर डगमगे ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

sāraṅga kara sundara niṣaṅga silīmukhākara kaṭi kasyō. 1.
 bhujaḍaṇḍa pīna manōharāyata ura dharāsura pada lasyō. 2.
 kaha dāsa tulasī jabahim prabhu sara cāpa kara phērana lagē. 3.
 brahmāṇḍa diggaja kamaṭha ahi mahi sindhu bhūdhara ḍagamagē. 4.

[In this verse, the beauteous and charming form of Lord Ram—who besides being the warrior fighting the demon race in a bloody war for the sake of the welfare and the well-being of humble creatures of this creation who were being subjected to endless merciless cruelty by the demons, was also at the same time the most merciful and compassionate Lord God of this creation who had no personal enemy and no personal grudge against anyone, for the Lord treated all the members of this creation equally—is being described.

A reference to the virtues of beauty and charm in the midst of chaos and bloodshed so typical of a battle-field is to remind the reader not to be distracted from the truth by the illusion of mayhem and blood-letting that is created on the ground of Lanka, for though it appears that Lord Ram is very angry and vengeful, out to crush his mortal enemy for the sake of his wife, but it is merely a smokescreen to hide the reality—which is that, one, Lord Ram is protecting the rest of the creation by disciplining a few wayward members of the same creation who had gone astray from the path of Dharma and have become a nuisance for all others, and two, the Lord decided to use this war as an excuse to grant deliverance to the souls of all the demons who would have otherwise perished in hell for their life spent in evil deeds.

To wit, though Lord Ram appears to be shooting arrows and ordering killing of the demons in a merciless war like the one of which the world had never witnessed, yet internally he was calm and poised and cheerful and happy as if nothing was happening, for otherwise his physical form would have surely betrayed his vehement nature and excess of cruelty and seething anger, but surely, if nothing else, it could never have been so peaceful, calm, charming and pleasant to behold; it would have been furious and fearful to look at, a form that is usually the norm with merciless conquerors who have no qualms in going berserk and killing, looting, burning and plundering wherever they set their foot.

Remember: Lord Ram embodied in his physical form the virtues of charm and beauty that are invariably associated with Mother Nature; he was actually a visible representation of these eternal qualities of cosmic Nature which manifested themselves in all their finery and glory in the Lord's form.]

There was a beautiful bow called Sarang¹ in the Lord's hand; and at his waist was tied a quiver that had the mystical ability to supply an endless numbers of powerful arrows without exhausting its reserve. (Chanda line no. 1)

The Lord's arms were well-formed, robust and muscular; and on his broad chest was marked the footprints of sage Bhrigu, the Brahmin². (Chanda line no. 2)

Tulsidas (the primary author of this wonderful story of Ram Charit Manas) says that when Lord Ram was preparing himself for the battle-field (and the duel with Ravana that was to be fought there) by stringing and testing his bow and examining his arrows by holding them in his hands --- (Chanda line no. 3),

--- There was a tremor throughout the world. The whole universe, including all the elephants that support it in different directions (i.e. the Diggajas)³, the legendary Tortoise (said to support the earth and its mountains on its back), Lord Seshnath (the legendary celestial Serpent also believed to hold the earth on his gigantic hood), the earth with all its mountains and oceans—all began to shake and tremble⁴. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹As has been noted earlier, the 'Sarang Bow' is the one that belongs to Lord Vishnu. By citing it here, especially immediately after citing the 'Kodanda Bow' in the previous verse, it is being hinted that Lord Ram was no one else but Lord Vishnu, and now Lord Ram is assuming his original form of Lord Vishnu to fulfill his promise made to the gods and mother earth—that he would come down to earth as Lord Ram to eliminate the scourge of the demon race.

²The story of the mark of footprints of sage Bhrigu on the chest of Lord Vishnu is briefly as follows. This particular sign is being alluded to here to reiterate that Lord Ram is Lord Vishnu himself, for this sign cannot be present on anybody else except Lord Vishnu.

Sage Bhrigu once tested the Trinity Gods (Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva) and determined that Lord Vishnu is the best amongst them and alone deserves worship. This story in brief is as follows—

Once all the sages had collected and decided to judge which of the Trinity Gods, i.e. Brahma the creator, Vishnu the sustainer, and Shiva the concluser, is the greatest. Sage Bhrigu was appointed to find it out. Bhrigu first went to Brahma and did not show any respect to him. This enraged Brahma, but somehow he managed to control himself. Then Bhrigu went to meet Shiva. Shiva came forward but Bhrigu did not want to meet him, accusing the Lord of following inauspicious way of life. This enraged Shiva who lifted his trident to kill Bhrigu. Then Parvati, the consort of Shiva, intervened and pacified him.

Finally, Bhrigu went to Vishnu who was reclining in his divine abode known as Vaikuntha. Bhrigu got annoyed that Vishnu did not get up to welcome him, and so he kicked the Lord on his chest. Lord Vishnu woke up from his sleep, and instead of becoming angry at Bhrigu asked for his forgiveness as he was unaware that the Brahmin has arrived as he was asleep. Further, Vishnu showed Bhrigu great respect and said that instead of feeling insulted on being kicked on the chest, he is feeling honoured that a great sage had blessed him by touching his body with his august feet. This stunned Bhrigu; he was dumbfounded at the gracious and forgiving nature of Vishnu. But Vishnu's consort Laxmi, the goddess of wealth and prosperity, was extremely peeved, and she cursed the Brahmin that henceforth the entire Brahmin race will have to suffer because of lack of wealth and would be forced to beg for their sustenance.

Lord Vishnu wears the mark made by the sage's footprint on his chest as a token of respect that he has for learned Brahmins.

Bhrigu came back and narrated the entire thing to the assembly of sages. They decided that indeed it was Lord Vishnu who was the greatest because he had conquered anger, the worst of all the negative qualities and the cause of all strife and destruction. Anger was to become the greatest of evils and vices in this world, and forgiveness as the greatest of virtues.

³The Diggajas: There are said to be eight 'Diggaj' who support the earth from eight directions or corners. These Diggajs are believed to be strong and muscular 'elephants' stationed at eight strategic points in eight directions of the earth to support it from rolling or toppling over. The word 'Diggaj' itself means anyone who is very strong and muscular.

According to the Purans, these eight directions and their respective Diggajs are the following—(i) in the north, the Diggaj (elephant) is known as 'Saarvabhoum'; (ii) in the north-east, the Diggaj is known as 'Suprateek or Saptateek'; (iii) in the east, the Diggaj is known as 'Airaawat'; (iv) in the south-east, the Diggaj is known as 'Pundareek'; (v) in the south, the Diggaj is known as 'Vaaman'; (vi) in the south-west, the Diggaj is known as 'Kumud'; (vii) in the west, the Diggaj is known as 'Anjan'; and (viii) in the north-west, the Diggaj is known as 'Pushpa-danta'.

However, according to Valmiki's Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 40, verse nos. 14, 18, 20 and 22, when king Sagar's sons went to dig the earth in search of the horse of the sacrifice that had gone missing, they saw only four Diggajs as follows—(i) in the east they saw the Diggaj named 'Virupaaksha', (ii) in the south, the Diggaj named 'Maha-padma', (iii) in the west, the Diggaj named 'Saumnas' (pronounced as Saw+um+nus), and (iv) in the north, the Diggaj named 'Bhadra'.

These Diggajs are referred to in Tulsidas' epic Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that preceded Doha no. 254 as well as Chaupai line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 260 in the context of Lord Ram breaking the bow. In the first instance, when Laxman became angry, these Diggajs shifted from the place out of fear, and in the second instance Laxman alerted them to be careful and hold the earth properly so that it does not topple over when Lord Ram prepared to lift and break Lord Shiva's bow in order to marry Sita.

⁴The same thing had happened when Lord Ram had broken the bow to marry Sita in Janakpur—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chanda line no. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 261.]

दो०. सोभा देखि हरषि सुर बरषहिं सुमन अपार।

जय जय जय करुनानिधि छबि बल गुन आगार ॥ ८६ ॥

dōhā.

sōbhā dēkhi haraṣi sura baraṣahim sumana apāra.
jaya jaya jaya karunānidhi chabi bala guna āgāra. 86.

Observing the exceptional charm and the bewitching beauteous form of Lord Ram, the gods were exhilarant; they showered countless flowers upon the Lord from the heaven.

Overjoyed, they exclaimed repeatedly in unison: ‘Glory to the Lord who is an ocean of abounding compassion, mercy, kindness and grace, as well as a repository of immense charm and beauty’. (Doha no. 86)

चौ०. एहीं बीच निसाचर अनी । कसमसात आई अति घनी ॥ १ ॥

देखि चले सन्मुख कपि भट्टा । प्रलयकाल के जनु घन घट्टा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ēhīm bīca nisācara anī. kasamasāta āī ati ghanī. 1.

dēkhi calē sanmukha kapi bhaṭṭā. pralayakāla kē janu ghana ghaṭṭā. 2.

[After the brief lull in the storm, or we can say after the calm before the storm actually unfolds its full fury before finally dissipating itself, as marked by the brief pause herein above where we read about the gods appreciating the beautiful form of Lord Ram and showering flowers upon him from the sky, and Lord Ram smiling and calmly preparing to step out into the battle-field, we once again plunge into the heat and fire of the battle that rages on in Lanka.]

In the meantime, while Lord Ram was preparing himself for the battle and the gods had been appreciating his charming form and showering flowers upon him, the huge demon army that was packed from end to end with ferocious soldiers, came grinding in. (1)

As soon as the valorous monkey (and bear) warriors saw them arrive, they started off at once in huge numbers to face them. The army of these monkeys (and bears) looked like a bank of thick dark clouds that rise from the horizon to sweep across the sky during the calamitous events of the doomsday. (2)

बहु कृपान तरवारि चमंकहिं । जनु दहँ दिसि दामिनीं दमंकहिं ॥ ३ ॥

गज रथ तुरग चिकार कठोरा । गर्जहिं मनहुँ बलाहक घोरा ॥ ४ ॥

bahu kṛpāna taravāri camaṅkahim. janu dahaṁ disi dāminīṁ damaṅkahim. 3.

gaja ratha turaga cikāra kaṭhōrā. garjahim manahuṁ balāhaka ghōrā. 4.

Numerous polished swords and sharp scimitars were glistening and dazzling in the rays of the sun as if streaks of lightening tore relentlessly through the body of the doomsday cloud. (3)

The clamour and the noise produced by trumpeting of elephants, the rattling caused by the movement of giant chariots, and the furious neighing of war horses, seemed to be like the deafening roar of thunder accompanying the advancing cloud¹. (4)

[Note—¹To wit, as the two giant armies came nearer, the din and the raucous created by excited warriors of both the sides, to which was added the defeating shrieks of intoxicated elephants, excited horses who were jumping furiously when whipped and spurred on viciously by their mounts, and the loud rattling sound produced by the rumbling of the heavy chariots across the uneven ground, together with the flashing swords and other war paraphernalia—all gave the horrifying general impression of two thick banks of clouds arising simultaneously from opposite directions and heading towards each other for a violent meeting at the time of the end of the world.]

कपि लंगूर बिपुल नभ छाए । मनहुँ इंद्रधनु उए सुहाए ॥ ५ ॥ उठइ धूरि मानहुँ जलधारा । बान बुंद भै बृष्टि अपारा ॥ ६ ॥ kapi laṅgūra bipula nabha chā'ē. manahuṁ indradhanu u'ē suhā'ē. 5.

uṭha'i dhūri mānahuṁ jaladhārā. bāna bunda bhai bṛṣṭi apārā. 6.

The giant monkeys, who had different shades of colour of their skin, waved their long tails in the sky, giving the impression of the appearance of so many magnificent rainbows simultaneously in the sky. (5)

A huge dust storm arose, covering the whole place, and giving the impression of a heavy rainfall; the shower of arrows raining down from the sky looked like drops of rain¹. (6)

[Note—¹When there is heavy rainfall, one is not able to see anything beyond a limited area. So likewise, the dust that was kicked up by the movement of these two armies covered the battle-field so thickly that view became extremely limited.

If one stands out in a fierce storm that is lashing violently, the rain does not appear soothing and comforting; it rather becomes annoying, and one begins to feel that the rain drops are striking his body like so many tiny pebbles hitting him with some force.

In this metaphor, the rain drops are the arrows, and the heavily falling rain is the thick cloud of dust that was kicked up and obscured all view.]

दुहुँ दिसि पर्वत करहिं प्रहारा । बज्रपात जनु बारहिं बारा ॥ ७ ॥ रघुपति कोपि बान झरि लाई । घायल भै निसिचर समुदाई ॥ ८ ॥ duhuṁ disi parbata karahim prahārā. bajrapāta janu bārahim bārā. 7.

raghupati kōpi bāna jhari lā'ī. ghāyala bhai nisicara samudā'ī. 8.

Huge rocks and boulders as large as mountains were being used on both the sides to attack and pulverize the enemy; these were dumped on the adversary thick and fast, and with great violence, giving the impression that Vajra (the heavy and sturdy weapon of Indra, the king of gods) is striking the warring factions repeatedly. (7)

Seeing that his troops are under stress, Lord Ram let out a thick volley of arrows that rained upon the demon army and wounded a lot many of its warriors. (8)

लागत बान बीर चिक्करहीं । घुमि घुमि जहँ तहँ महि परहीं ॥ ९ ॥

स्रवहिं सैल जनु निर्झर भारी । सोनित सरि कादर भयकारी ॥ १० ॥ lāgata bāna bīra cikkarahīm. ghurmi ghurmi jahaṁ tahaṁ mahi parahīm. 9.

sravahīm saila janu nirjhara bhārī. sōnita sari kādara bhayakārī. 10.

When the brave demon warriors were hit by the arrows, they shrieked furiously, swooned and fell down, rolling over on the ground. (9)

When they fell down and rolled over the ground with blood streaming out of their gigantic bodies, it appeared that streams of water were rolling down from high mountains, or like many waterfalls cascading down the side of lofty mountains¹. (10)

[Note—¹The comparison with the mountain is made because the demons were huge giants, with a huge body. The blood streaming out of their wounds resembled streams and rivulets that emerge from crevices and holes on the sides of mountains to fall down as waterfalls on the ground below. Here, the wounds are the crevices and holes in the mountains, and the blood flowing out of them is like the streams and rivulets coming out from the mountain and cascading down along its craggy sides.]

छं०. कादर भयंकर रुधिर सरिता चली परम अपावनी । १ ।
दोड कूल दल रथ रेत चक्र अबर्त बहति भयावनी ॥ २ ॥ जलजंतु गज पदचर तुरग खर बिबिध बाहन को गने । ३ । सर सक्ति तोमर सर्प चाप तरंग चर्म कमठ घने ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kādara bhayaṅkara rudhira saritā calī parama apāvanī. 1.
dō'u kūla dala ratha rēta cakra abarta bahati bhayāvanī. 2.
jalajantu gaja padacara turaga khara bibidha bāhana kō ganē. 3.
sara sakti tōmara sarpa cāpa taraṅga carma kamaṭha ghanē. 4.

[The metaphor of a River, albeit of flowing blood and not of water, is employed in this verse to give the reader an idea of the horrors of the War of Lanka.]

An inauspicious and horrifying river of blood—the sight of which created terror for those who were coward in their hearts, fickle in their minds, and weak in their resolve to fight and defeat their enemy—began flowing over the ground of the battle-field. (Chanda line no. 1)

The ‘two warring armies’ were like the two opposite banks of this river. The ‘chariots’ were like sand that was sprinkled along these banks, and their ‘wheels’ were the rapidly whirling whirlpools of this fearsome river. Forsooth, this river indeed looked scary and blood-curdling as it flowed through the battle-ground (sometimes slowly and at other times rapidly, depending on the volume of blood that poured into it in an endless stream). (Chanda line no. 2)

The multitudes of war ‘elephants, foot soldiers, horses and mules’ that filled the battle-field symbolized the countless creatures of various denominations that lived in this river. (Chanda line no. 3)

‘Arrows, spears and lancers’ were like the countless water-serpents flowing up and down this strange river, both against and along its current; the ‘bows’ were like the many currents themselves (ebbing and flowing, and changing course every now and then, and often clashing or rubbing against one another as this metaphoric river rapidly flowed down the ground); and the ‘shields of the warriors’ were like the hard shells of the many tortoises that floated on the surface of this river (bobbing up and down as they fought with one another to gain some space in the flow of current). (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—In this excellent imagery, the learned poet draws our attention to the immensity of blood-shed and horrors that were enacted on the ground in the battle-field during the epic War of Lanka. Whosoever came near this river would fall in its swiftly flowing currents, either on their own or when pushed in by those standing at the back; those who still managed to remain on its banks would get sucked in when the current swelled and overflowed the bank of this metaphoric river with an inflow of fresh supply of blood as more and more warriors died on its banks and discharged more blood into it. Those who fell in this river got immediately sucked in and taken away by its rapidly turning whirlpools and swift currents.

The shields held by the warriors, both alive and dead, looked like so many tortoises bobbing up and down on the surface of this scary river as they flowed down its current. The bows were like the ever changing currents as they quickly changed their contours when their strings were pulled and released in rapid succession, or when they were moved and pointed in different directions by the warriors who held them.

The war chariots were so many in their numbers, and so thickly packed, moving and changing their locations quickly that they were like sand particles strewn on the banks of a river. The sand is not fixed at one place on the ground, and it is easily moved aside when some heavy object passes over it, or is easily blown away when a strong gust of wind flows. So therefore, sand is likened to the fast moving chariots, ever changing their locations, and thickly packed in the field. Their wheels turned rapidly like the whirlpools in a churning river, either pushing away some object or sucking in others with the twin forces of nature known as centrifugal and centripetal respectively.

And of course, to complete the picture we have the many creatures who have their natural habitat in the river—like the water-serpent and tortoise and many others who represented the elephants, horses, mules and soldiers that also were the natural components of an army.]

दो०. बीर परहिं जनु तीर तरु मज्जा बहु बह फेन ।

कादर देखि डरहिं तहँ सुभटन्ह के मन चेन ॥ ८७ ॥

dōhā.

bīra parahim janu tīra taru majjā bahu baha phēna.
kādara dēkhi ḍarahim tahaṃ subhaṭanha kē mana cēna. 87.

Warriors were falling on the ground along the banks of this frightful river just like trees along the banks of a swiftly flowing river topple over and fall to the ground (when the soil under them is undercut and loosened because of the river's swift currents).

The abundant bone marrow that flowed on the surface of this river looked like the scum that the river normally scoops up during the course of its flow.

It was such a horrifying sight that those who were cowards and timid, those who were weak in mind and heart, shuddered at it and felt terrified, while those who were brave veterans of war, gallant in their hearts and firm in their minds, found delight in it (as they were accustomed to such scenes, and were aroused and got excited when they saw it). (Doha no. 87)

चौ०. मज्जहिं भूत पिसाच बेताला । प्रमथ महा झोटिंग कराला ॥ १ ॥
काक कंक लै भुजा उड़ाहीं । एक ते छीनि एक लै खाहीं ॥ २ ॥
caupā'ī.

majjahim bhūta pisāca bētālā. pramatha mahā jhōtiṅga karālā. 1.
kāka kaṅka lai bhuja uḍāhīm. ēka tē chīni ēka lai khāhīm. 2.

Horrifying fiends and evil spirits that frequent battle-fields, such as ghosts, ghouls, phantoms and goblins, as well as Pramaths (attendants of Lord Shiva; those who roam around corpses and cremation grounds) who had long disheveled hairs, jumped into this river of blood to take a bath in it. (1)

Crows and kites dived into this river to pick up and fly away with severed limbs of dead warriors, fighting with each other to snatch and eat their share of flesh. (2)

एक कहहिं ऐसिउ सौंघाई । सठहु तुम्हार दरिद्र न जाई ॥ ३ ॥ कहँरत भट घायल तट गिरे । जहँ तहँ मनहुँ अर्धजल परे ॥ ४ ॥

ēka kahahim aisi'u sauṅghā'ī. saṭhahu tumhāra daridra na jā'ī. 3.
kahaṃrata bhaṭa ghāyala taṭa girē. jahaṃ tahaṃ manahuṃ ardhajala parē. 4.

After snatching meat from others, these birds of prey chided them, saying: 'Oh you most greedy and rapacious fellows. Even when there is an abundant supply of our natural food, of which there is no dearth at present, it is so shameful a thing that you do not desist from exhibiting your habit of being greedy and rapacious to the extreme (like a miserly person who will not give away anything to others in charity inspite of having an oversupply of something that he does not need any more).¹' (3)

Wounded and seriously injured warriors, who had fallen on the ground on the bank of this river (of blood), groaned and sighed and moaned grievously in pain as half of their bodies lay on the ground and the other half was dangling inside the river.

It was like a scene witnessed on the banks of a holy river where infirm and desolate persons, those who are destitute and have no one to take care of them, lie half on the ground and half submerged in the water in the hope that when they die the sacred water of the river would wash away their mortal remains automatically and grant deliverance to their souls because they have nobody to do their last rites. (4)

[Note—¹A description of the physical appearance of these ghouls and spirits that frequent battle-fields is found in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 93 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 4-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 95.]

खैंचहिं गीध आँत तट भए । जनु बंसी खेलत चित दए ॥ ५ ॥
बहु भट बहहिं चढ़े खग जाहीं । जनु नावरि खेलहिं सरि माहीं ॥ ६ ॥ khaimcahiṁ gīdha ānta taṭa bha'e. janu bansī khēlata cita da'e. 5.

bahu bhaṭa bahahiṁ caṛhē khaga jāhīṁ. janu nāvāri khēlahiṁ sari māhīṁ. 6.

Vultures were tearing out the intestines of these unfortunate warriors (who were lying half dead on the banks of this river, with their bodies half submerged and half on the ground) giving the impression that fishermen, who are sitting on the banks of a river attentively watching their fishing lines, would pull out the string with a jerk as soon as the fish caught the bait dangling at the end of the line. (5)

Many dead bodies of warriors were floating on the surface of this river, and different kinds of birds were alighting on these corpses and flying away in merriment as if they all enjoyed this free boat ride without any fear of being harmed or shooed away. (6)

जोगिनि भरि भरि खप्पर संचहिं । भूत पिसाच बधू नभ नंचहिं ॥ ७ ॥
भट कपाल करताल बजावहिं । चामुंडा नाना बिधि गावहिं ॥ ८ ॥ jōgini bhari bhari khappara sañcahiṁ. bhūta pisāca badhū nabha nañcahiṁ.

7.
bhaṭa kapāla karatāla bajāvahiṁ. cāmuṇḍā nānā bidhi gāvahiṁ. 8.

Female fiends of the battle-field, called Joginis, were collecting blood in cups made of hollow skulls. Other female ghosts, ghouls and phantoms were dancing in the sky in merriment. (7)

Another type of female fiend known as Chamunda, the patron spirit of the battle-field, was so overjoyed that she sang war songs to the accompaniment of sound of clanging or crushing produced by striking two empty skulls, extracted from dead warriors, with each other like so many pairs of cymbals. (8)

जंबुक निकर कटक्कट कट्टहिं । खाहिं हुआहिं अघाहिं दपट्टहिं ॥ ९ ॥

कोटिन्ह रुंड मुंड बिनु डोल्लहिं । सीस परे महि जय जय बोल्लहिं ॥ १० ॥

jambuka nikara kaṭakkaṭa kaṭṭahim. khāhim hu'āhim aghāhim dapaṭṭahim. 9.
kōṭinha ruṇḍa muṇḍa binu ḍōllahim. sīsa parē mahi jaya jaya bōllahim. 10.

Hordes of jackals grinded their teeth and snapped at each other as they tore apart corpses, ate them, snarling and growling menacingly at each other as was their wont, even though they had sufficient to satisfy their own hunger. (9)

So intoxicated and excited were the warriors, and so feverish was their enthusiasm for battle that was stoked by the invigorating environment of the battle-field which was so much in consonance with their inherent nature, that even after their heads were severed from their bodies yet their headless torsos roamed around aimlessly in the battle-field.

Nay, even the heads of these warriors that had fallen on the ground were active, for even while lying there they continued to yell and shriek war cries, repeatedly applauding their own sides and glorifying their compatriots, cheering them on and declaring their victory. (10)

छं०. बोल्लहिं जो जय जय मुंड रुंड प्रचंड सिर बिनु धावहीं । १ ।

खप्परिन्ह खगग अलुज्झि जुज्झहिं सुभट भटन्ह ढहावहीं ॥ २ ॥

बानर निसाचर निकर मर्दहिं राम बल दर्पित भए । ३ ।

संग्राम अंगन सुभट सोवहिं राम सर निकरन्हि हए ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

bōllahim jō jaya jaya muṇḍa ruṇḍa pracaṇḍa sira binu dhāvahim. 1.
khapparinha khagga alujjhi jujjahim subhaṭa bhaṭanha ḍhahāvahim. 2.
bānara nisācara nikara mardahim rāma bala darpita bha'ē. 3.
saṅgrāma aṅgana subhaṭa sōvahim rāma sara nikaranhi ha'ē. 4.

Severed heads yelled war cries of 'Victory, victory'; torsos sans heads ran helter-skelter wildly all over the ground. (Chanda line no. 1)

Birds, singly and in flocks, alighted on skulls and got entangled within its hollows as they vied with each other to scoop up whatever flesh and marrow that still remained sticking to the sides, and in the ensuing tussle the stronger birds pushed away and trampled those who were weak. (Chanda line no. 2)

The valiant and brave monkey warriors, invigorated and energized by the grace and blessings of Lord Ram, were thrashing and decimating the demon warriors relentlessly. (Chanda line no. 3)

Countless multitudes of gallant warriors (of the demon army) were killed by the hail of arrows showered by Lord Ram, and they lay down on the ground in an eternal sleep. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—Really indeed, the imagery of the ferocious war, and the enormity of the bloodshed and mayhem and horrors that attended it, is gut churning, and evokes revulsion. One can well imagine the horrifying sight of how the otherwise sandy soil of Lanka would have turned into a slushy ground resembling a thick swamp of blood and flesh that was stinking with rotting corpses and shredded bodies from which intestines and other organs were being pulled out by birds and animals of prey. To add to this eerie, blood chilling scene was the chilling cries and painful groans of those who were not already dead but suffering intensely; or of those who were maddened with passion for blood and vengeance.]

दो०. रावन हृदयँ बिचारा भा निसिचर संघार । मैं अकेल कपि भालु बहु माया करौं अपार ॥ ८८ ॥
dōhā.

rāvana hr̥dayaṁ bicārā bhā nisicara saṅghāra.
maiṁ akēla kapi bhālu bahu māyā karaum apāra. 88.

When Ravana observed this large-scale decimation of his demon army, he was utterly dismayed and excessively exasperated. Thus finding himself alone to face a huge enemy army of monkeys and bears, he bethought to himself: ‘I am left alone to confront so many ferocious monkeys and bears baying for my blood. So it would be wise and prudent for me to employ Maya (which are the powers to create delusions and illusions to mislead the enemy) extensively at this crucial juncture.’ (Doha no. 88)

चौ०. देवन्ह प्रभुहि पयादें देखा । उपजा उर अति छोभ बिसेषा ॥ १ ॥
सुरपति निज रथ तुरत पठावा । हरष सहित मातलि लै आवा ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

dēvanha prabhuhi payādēṁ dēkhā. upajā ura ati chōbha bisēṣā. 1.
surapati nija ratha turata paṭhāvā. haraṣa sahita mātali lai āvā. 2.

The gods, who were watching the proceedings of the battle-field from their stations in the sky, felt very sorry in their hearts when they saw that Lord Ram was suffering so much for them by fighting this ferocious war on foot, without the basic aid of a war chariot, while their mortal enemy, the demon king Ravana, whom the Lord fought at the behest of these gods, had this privilege. (1)

[This realization made the gods feel very guilt and shameful, so they collectively decided to help the Lord by sending the chariot that belonged to their king Indra. So therefore—] The king of gods immediately sent his own heavenly chariot, and his charioteer named Matali brought this chariot to the ground for Lord Ram’s use. (2)

तेज पुंज रथ दिव्य अनूपा । हरषि चढ़े कोसलपुर भूपा ॥ ३ ॥
चंचल तुरग मनोहर चारी । अजर अमर मन सम गतिकारी ॥ ४ ॥

tēja puñja ratha dibya anūpā. haraṣi caṛhē kōsalapura bhūpā. 3.
cañcala turaga manōhara cārī. ajara amara mana sama gatikārī. 4.

This heavenly chariot was glorious, splendid, radiant and divine; it was one of its own kind. The Lord of Kaushal (i.e. Lord Ram) immediately boarded it and moved forward in the battle-field¹. (3)

The chariot had four gifted horses that were agile and well-trained. These four horses were of an excellent breed, most charming to behold, and possessed exceptional and unique qualities that made them imperishable and invincible. They were very swift; in fact, they were as swift as the mind². (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram immediately recognized Matali and the chariot. Remember: He was a personified form of Lord Vishnu, the Lord of heaven; so there is no wonder that he could recognize the chariot at once, as being the one that belonged to the gods. He also knew Matali, the charioteer, personally.

Lord Ram knew that this chariot and its charioteer cannot be duplicated by anyone, so therefore he was sure that it was not a creation of Ravana's 'Maya' to trap him. Of course the Lord was in need of a chariot, so when he found that it had come to him without asking, he accepted it to oblige the gods; for if the Lord had not accepted this gift from the gods it would be tantamount to his insulting them. Lord Ram was well aware of the nature and temperament of these gods: that they took quick offence.

Lord Ram did not wish to create an unpleasant and unsavoury scene, while a fierce war was underway, by telling Matali to take the chariot back to the gods for he was competent to fight and win this war without their help or the gift of a chariot. Being the Supreme Lord, and therefore the Lord of the gods themselves, it was incumbent upon him to show restraint and modesty, and not act rashly by teasing the gods with the question: 'were they sleeping till now; why couldn't they send the chariot earlier'. Doing anything that may be construed as an insult by the gods might be counter-productive at this dangerous point of time, for who knows what not the gods might do if they feel offended, for they were very selfish by nature.

Remember: Vibhishan had felt this shortcoming of the absence of a chariot during a war when he had expressed his reservations to Lord Ram in this regard—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 80. Should the gods not have sent it then; shouldn't they have done what they could to help Lord Ram who was fighting this war for them? But Lord Ram was so magnanimous and broad-minded that he did not mind this neglect by the gods at all, for a great King has often to overlook many minor faults and missteps of his junior ministers and subjects, like the gods were in the Lord's case.

It is quite possible that the conversation between Lord Ram and Vibhishan was conducted in a low tone, almost in a whisper as if they were discussing some war strategy, so that the gods stationed high above in the heaven could not make out what they were talking about, and so they weren't even aware that the point of discussion was the need of a chariot, for it is incredulous to believe that had they been aware of it, even slightly, that Vibhishan was worried about the necessity of a chariot for Lord Ram, then the gods would have hastened to supply it immediately. They were so occupied with and in an absolute awe of what they saw happening all around them in the battle-field down below that they were almost dumbfounded and astonished and out of their wits, as they hadn't seen such a horrifying war earlier, and therefore their mind could not register the need of a war chariot for Lord Ram.

But the astonishing thing is not this that a chariot was suddenly made available to Lord Ram by the gods, but the fact that Ravana did not take any note of it. What might have been the reason for it? Well, Ravana was so alarmed with the situation on the ground, as well as so preoccupied in his mind with his own problems that were mounting with the passage of every moment, and was so overworked in devising strategies for the war, that he could not see the difference between how Lord Ram stood on the ground a few while ago and how he was astride a war chariot the other moment.

²The 'Mana', the mind, is said to be extremely agile and swift because a person can think of one thing at a given point of time, and within a fraction of a second his mind starts thinking of a completely different and unrelated thing a moment later. He may be thinking of something happening here, and the next moment his thoughts take him to something that happened long ago somewhere else.

The horses of this chariot were exceptionally swift, and to give an idea of the rapidity of their movement this simile of the Mana is cited.]

रथारूढ रघुनाथहि देखी । धाए कपि बलु पाइ बिसेषी ॥ ५ ॥
सही न जाइ कपिन्ह कै मारी । तब रावन माया बिस्तारी ॥ ६ ॥ rathārūṛha raghunāthahi dēkhī. dhā'ē kapi balu pā'i bisēṣī. 5.

sahī na jā'i kapinha kai mārī. taba rāvana māyā bistārī. 6.

When the monkeys (and bears) saw Lord Ram riding a chariot, they were exhilarant and greatly enthused. They rushed forward (to attack the enemy) with renewed energy, vigour and dynamism. (3)

When Ravana could not bear the ferocity of the attack and beating by the monkeys and bears, he expanded his Maya (spread the veil of delusions and its attendant illusions) to mislead and ward off his attackers. (4)

सो माया रघुबीरहि बाँची । लछिमन कपिन्ह सो मानी साँची ॥ ७ ॥ देखी कपिन्ह निसाचर अनी । अनुज सहित बहु कोसलधनी ॥ ८ ॥

sō māyā raghubīrahi bāñcī. lachimana kapinha sō mānī sāñcī. 7.
dēkhī kapinha nisācara anī. anuja sahita bahu kōsaladhanī. 8.

This Maya (delusion; illusion) was so powerful and surreal that except Lord Ram all else, including Laxman as well as all the monkeys, took what they saw to be a reality. (7)

[And, what did they see?] They saw that the battle-field was covered with an army of Lord Ram ("kōsaladhanī"; the Lord of Kaushal, or Ayodhya) which had countless forms of the Lord himself and that of his younger brother Laxman leading the warriors¹. (8)

[Note—¹What was the effect of this illusion? The rushing monkey and bear warriors suddenly stopped in their tracks, for while a moment ago they saw their enemy, the demons and their king Ravana whom they were eager to hit, now all of a sudden they saw Lord Ram's army, i.e. an image of their own selves. This astonishing change of scene utterly baffled the monkeys and bears, leaving them confounded and puzzled.

The result was what Ravana had expected. Suddenly the attack ceased; suddenly calm prevailed in the battle-field. To wit, it was like the calm that precedes a fierce storm; it was a lull before the strike of the storm. But nonetheless, it gave Ravana some breathing space and time to recover his wits.]

छं०. बहु राम लछिमन देखि मर्कट भालु मन अति अपडरे । १ ।
 जनु चित्र लिखित समेत लछिमन जहँ सो तहँ चितवहिं खरे ॥ २ ॥
 निज सेन चकित बिलोकि हँसि सर चाप सजि कोसल धनी । ३ ।
 माया हरी हरि निमिष महुँ हरषी सकल मर्कट अनी ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

bahu rāma lachimana dēkhi markāṭa bhālu mana ati apaḍarē. 1.
 janu citra likhita samēta lachimana jahaṁ sō tahaṁ citavahiṁ kharē. 2.
 nija sēna cakita bilōki haṁsi sara cāpa saji kōsala dhanī. 3.
 māyā harī hari nimīṣa mahuṁ haraṣī sakala markāṭa anī. 4.

When the monkey and bear warriors saw countless images of Lord Ram and Laxman that were created by Ravana spreading his Maya (magical powers to produce illusions) over the battle-field, they were taken aback, being utterly confounded and totally perplexed at this unexpected sight that stunned and greatly scared them out of their wits. (Chanda line no. 1)

So therefore, all of them, along with Laxman, were so dazed and confounded that they stood motionless on their tracks as if paralyzed, giving the impression that they weren't living beings but portraits painted on a canvas. (Chanda line no. 2)

When Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal (kōsala dhanī), observed that his army was dazed and utterly shocked by Ravana's tricks (i.e. by his Maya), the Lord smiled in amusement¹, and mounted his arrow on the bow. (Chanda line no. 3)

Lord Hari (for this is another name of Lord Vishnu, the primary form of Lord Ram) shot the arrow which in an instant cut through the veil of delusions or Maya spread by Ravana, that had created the illusion which had so much confounded his army². As soon as this Maya was removed, the army of monkeys and bears was overjoyed; everyone felt relieved and greatly excited. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram knew that what was seen on the ground was actually a mirage, an illusion created by Ravana to confuse the army of the Lord. It must be remembered here that Lord Ram, the Supreme Being, is the Lord of all Maya; he is like the Master

Magician. So, Lord Ram stepped in to neutralize the effects of Ravana's Maya just like this Master Magician who initially feels amused when a junior magician spreads his illusions to completely daze his audience, but soon finds out, at some point of time, that this junior fellow is behaving mischievously and transcending limits of discipline by deriving sadistic pleasure at the cost of the terrified audience, then the Master intervenes, and by his superior abilities neutralizes the spell of the mischievous fellow to relieve the tension and fear that had gripped the helpless audience.

Lord Ram smiled both in amusement, as he appreciated Ravana's abilities, as well as in annoyance, because Ravana was crossing limits of tolerance.

²So the Lord shot an arrow that ruptured this veil of delusions, and restored the original situation on the battle-field.]

दो०. बहुरि राम सब तन चितइ बोले बचन गँभीर । द्वंदजुद्ध देखहु सकल श्रमित भए अति बीर ॥ ८९ ॥

dōhā.

bahuri rāma saba tana cita'i bōlē bacana gaṁbhīra.
dvandajud'dha dēkhahu sakala śramita bha'ē ati bīra. 89.

Then, Lord Ram addressed every one of his troops in a serious tone, instructing them; 'All of you are tired by now. So take a break; draw back a bit and move aside to clear the front line. From the sidelines, quietly watch a close hand duel that would now unfold directly between me and Ravana¹.' (Doha no. 89)

[Note—¹Both the chief commanders of their respective armies, Lord Ram of the army of monkeys and bears on this side, and Ravana commanding the army of demons on the other side, were now on equal footing, as both were astride magnificent war chariots that were fully armed and well equipped. So, this was the first time in the war that a duel between two powerful Lords and valiant warriors would take place on equal terms. On earlier occasions the fight was a mismatch as Lord Ram or Laxman were on foot while their adversaries were better placed as they rode chariots, as we find in the case of Meghanad as well as with Ravana.

However, Kumbhakaran's case was different as he had come to the battle-field on foot, trampling and crushing large numbers of monkeys and bears as he rampaged in the battle-field, furious with mad anger. So Lord Ram had faced him directly, because both were engaged in this duel on equal terms, with both of them standing on the ground, and not that one had the privilege of riding a war chariot and the other being disadvantaged by not having one.

Another question is this: The tide of the battle, at this point of time, was in favour of Lord Ram and his army, for the enemy army was virtually decimated and its commander-in-chief, the demon king Ravana, was besieged from all sides and left alone to fend for himself. This is the precise reason why Ravana decided to use his Maya to deflect the ferocious attack of the monkey and bear warriors who were trashing him wildly from all the sides, and he was unable to cope with this drubbing—apropos: Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 89 herein above. This being the case, Lord Ram could have allowed his army to continue pounding and pulverizing Ravana, for then, sooner or later, the demon king would have automatically succumbed under this ferocious thrashing, sparing the Lord any more trouble. But why then did Lord Ram order his soldiers to hold back and stop their advance, and watch as he engages the demon king directly in a duel?

Well, when we ponder over this question to find an answer, the following points come to our mind:

The first is this: These monkeys and bears were no ordinary creatures; they were born carrying the genes of various gods—this undeniable fact is explicitly mentioned in (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that follow it; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 29-32. These gods were fed up by Ravana's belligerence and had vowed to get rid of him anyhow, and with the support of the almighty Lord Vishnu in the form of Lord Ram, their wishes were finally coming to be true.

Therefore, when the monkeys and bears were fighting Ravana, they had their personal scores to settle with him, and when given an opportunity they would not have waited for Lord Ram, who himself was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, to carry out his words, that 'he would come down to earth in the form of Lord Ram to eliminate the scourge of the cruel demon race'—apropos: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 187; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 22-28.

To wit, the gods were so eager for settling scores with Ravana that they wouldn't have had the decency and the courtesy to wait and let their own Lord, i.e. Lord Vishnu in the form of Lord Ram, to do the job for them to help him keep his word and maintain his honour, which would be possible only if Ravana was eliminated by Lord Ram. It is quite possible that the gods would have wished to take the credit of killing their arch enemy Ravana themselves rather than letting Lord Vishnu do so, and later on making them feel obliged to him by reminding them that he had suffered so much for their sake, and that if he had not helped them then Ravana would have continued to torment them endlessly. Yes indeed, this is true and quite feasible because we must remember that the gods 'were all very selfish by their inherent nature'—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 295; (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 110.

This is one primary reason why Lord Ram stepped in and ordered the monkeys and bears to hold back and let him do what he was expected to do.

The second plausible reason is this: It would have been very unbecoming of a noble commander-in-chief of the stature of Lord Ram to subject his opponent Ravana, who was of equal stature as him because he too was a mighty king of an equally mighty race, to such abject humiliation that he would be left to be thrashed and killed by junior soldiers of the Lord's army, while he was alone, without giving him an opportunity to prove himself in a direct conflict with the chief Lord. History would have recorded that 'Ravana was finally subdued and beaten to death by the monkeys and bears, and did not die fighting Lord Ram'. It would have been a great matter of shame and concern for the noble line of kings of Ayodhya if Lord Ram was accused by history on this account; it would have been an ignominy that would have lowered his head for all times to come.

Lord Ram was careful that he must fight and win this war by conforming to the laws of Dharma applied alongside the laws of Warfare. The laws of Dharma mandated that an enemy must be treated fairly and in a transparent manner, giving him an equal opportunity to fight his opponent, and not done to death when he is helpless and feels trapped. That is not the noble law of knight-hood. The laws of Warfare also mandated that Ravana must be given an equal opportunity to prove his valour and gallantry in the battle-field, and not battered to death when he was finding himself cornered and all alone, for allowing that to happen would be demeaning for Lord Ram's own glory and fame.

In effect, here we find that Ravana was virtually marooned and left all alone to fend for himself against a vastly superior army of extremely ferocious warriors, the monkeys and bears, who were battering and bludgeoning him mercilessly from all sides. On the other hand, Lord Ram did not face this dire state; there was no direct threat to his life or body; nobody was attacking him physically. So therefore, to allow this situation to continue, where a lonely warrior, in this case Ravana, was being pummeled mercilessly from all the sides while his equally strong and able opponent, in this case Lord Ram, stood watching merrily and enjoying his sufferings, would have been tantamount to a battle that was unfair and fought on unequal terms. That was not acceptable either under the law of Dharma or of Warfare.

And suppose Ravana had died due to some reason during this confrontation with the monkeys and bears, what face would Lord Ram have to show the world as well as the gods—especially when they have provided him with a war chariot now, and he therefore had no excuse to offer—when confronted by the taunt that he had dared not face the mighty demon king face-to-face, that the real credit of killing Ravana should go the monkeys and bears and not to Lord Ram. Would it not have been a dark blot on the Lord's glory; would history excuse him for letting Ravana die a humiliating death at the hands of monkeys and bears when he was cornered and found himself alone, instead of like a valiant and brave warrior falling to the ground during a duel with an equally valiant and brave warrior?

Lord Ram did not wish to create a scandal; he had to ensure that Ravana's soul gets its due right of attaining deliverance, emancipation and salvation, which could only happen if he was killed by the Lord himself, and not by the monkeys. To be sure, this is what exactly happened—that when Ravana finally died, a brilliant shaft of light representing his Atma, his pure consciousness, emerged from his body and entered the divine body of Lord Ram, to clearly show the world that Lord Ram had accepted Ravana's soul within his own divine Self, which was pure cosmic Consciousness itself—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.]

चौ०. अस कहि रथ रघुनाथ चलावा । बिप्र चरन पंकज सिरु नावा ॥ १ ॥

तब लंकेस क्रोध उर छावा । गर्जत तर्जत सन्मुख धावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

asa kahi ratha raghunātha calāvā. bipra carana paṅkaja siru nāvā. 1.

taba laṅkēsa krōdha ura chāvā. garjata tarjata sanmukha dhāvā. 2.

Saying this (i.e. after instructing his warriors to fall back from the front lines and watch the hand-on-hand combat between himself and Ravana), Lord Raghunath (Lord Ram) mentally bowed his head before the revered (literally “lotus-like”) feet of Brahmins (to pay his obeisance to elders and seek their blessings), and then moved his chariot to the front of the line. (1)

No sooner did the Lord appear in the front of the battle line than Ravana's heart burnt with excess of anger as he became exceedingly furious; he raged and ranted and yelled and thundered as he dashed forward madly to meet the Lord head-on¹. (2)

[Note—¹When Ravana saw that his arch rival, who had killed his brother Kumbhakaran and his son Meghanad, had come boldly before him, there is no wonder he lost control over himself as all his pent-up feelings of revenge and retribution suddenly erupted like a suppressed volcano spewing hot lava of anger and indignation.

In Lord Ram the demon king Ravana saw the cause of all his misfortunes and troubles; and he was all the more infuriated when he saw the Lord calm and confident as if nothing was disturbing or bothering him. Ravana took exception to this display of nonchalance by Lord Ram as an open affront to his authority and majesty as he was accustomed to being treated with fear and awe, because even the mighty gods would ordinarily run away as soon as they heard his name, with no one in this creation ever daring to even to stand before him, what to talk of confronting or challenging him for an open duel. It was too much for Ravana's self-esteem and ego to cope with; so he burst out cursing and swearing vehemently, without any let and pause.

In the following verses we shall read how he vented his indignation and fury at Lord Ram.]

जीतेहु जे भट संजुग माहीं । सुनु तापस मैं तिन्ह सम नाहीं ॥ ३ ॥

रावन नाम जगत जस जाना । लोकप जाकें बंदीखाना ॥ ४ ॥ jītehu jē bhaṭa sañjuga māhīm. sunu tāpasa mair̥m tinha sama nāhīm. 3.

rāvana nāma jagata jasa jānā. lōkapa jākēm bandīkhānā. 4.

Ravana vented his anger and indignation at Lord Ram by shouting at him haughtily with these acerbic remarks with an underlying tone of boastfulness: 'Listen you hermit (tāpasa)¹! I am not like the many warriors you claim to have vanquished in battles till now.

[So therefore, don't befool thyself. I am no ordinary demon warrior as thou might be thinking. Don't live in a fool's paradise; don't hallucinate! Be warned that fighting with me and subduing me is a completely different proposition; it's a completely different cup that thee will find very bitter to put to thine lips, and even bitter to gulp down. Don't weigh me with the same scale as thou have been weighing others. Thou think that thou wilt easily drub me; well let's see who drubs whom.] (3)

My name is Ravana (don't thou wot that?). This name is famous the world over; it belongs to the One in whose prisons even the great Lokpals (the many gods who are deemed to be the custodians of the world) languish.

[Well, well; do thou imagine it would be an easy job and a joke for anyone to capture and enslave these mighty Lokpals who themselves are very powerful and resourceful? I have done exactly this, aren't thou aware of it? So it's merely thine figment of imagination that thou wilt trounce me like the way thou had done others; there's aught naught further from the truth. So be ware, I warn thee.] (4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram was dressed like a hermit during his sojourn in the forest, as this was one of the conditions imposed on him at the time he had left Ayodhya to spend 14 years in the forest—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29.]

खर दूषन बिराध तुम्ह मारा । बधेहु ब्याध इव बालि बिचारा ॥ ५ ॥
 निसिचर निकर सुभट संघारेहु । कुंभकरन घननादहि मारेहु ॥ ६ ॥
 आजु बयरु सबु लेउँ निबाही । जौं रन भूप भाजि नहिं जाही ॥ ७ ॥ आजु करउँ खलु काल हवाले । परेहु कठिन रावन केपाले ॥ ८ ॥ khara dūṣana birādha tumha mārā. badhēhu byādha iva bāli bicārā. 5.

 nisicara nikara subhaṭa saṅghārēhu. kumbhakarana ghananādahi mārēhu. 6.
 āju bayaru sabu lē'uṁ nibāhī. jauṁ rana bhūpa bhāji nahim jāhī. 7.
 āju kara'uṁ khalu kāla havālē. parēhu kaṭhina rāvana kē pālē. 8.

You have slayed Khar, Dushan¹ and Viradh², and you have killed the unfortunate poor fellow Baali³. (5)

You have killed great demon warriors who were most valiant and renowned for their gallantry⁴; and of course you have slayed Kumbhakaran (my brother)⁵ and Meghanad (my son)⁶. (6)

Oh King (bhūpa)! If you do not run away from the battle-field (out of terror, or when you are battered and bludgeoned by me), then come, today is the time for me to settle old scores with you by avenging all these deaths. Forsooth, the time has come for me to exact my retribution from you with a vengeance. (7)

In all sooth and without gainsay, I shall cast you to the jaws of Kaal (death) today, for remember you are up against me who is famed for his ruthlessness and stern and uncompromising nature⁷. (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20; (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 23.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 7.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 8—Doha no. 10.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 45; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 10-12 that precede Doha no. 62.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 67—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 71.

⁶Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 76 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-16 that precede it.

⁷The word “Ravana” means someone who makes others weep and wail. So here Ravana alludes to this interpretation of his name to threaten Lord Ram that today he will lash out so viciously and violently at the Lord that he will remember the battering for generations to come.]

सुनि दुर्बचन कालबस जाना । बिहँसि बचन कह कृपानिधाना ॥ ९ ॥
सत्य सत्य सब तव प्रभुताई । जल्पसि जनि देखाउ मनुसाई ॥ १० ॥

sunī durbacana kālabasa jānā. bihaṁsi bacana kaha kṛpānidhānā. 9.
satya satya saba tava prabhutā'ī. jalpasi jani dēkhā'u manusā'ī. 10.

Lord Ram, who was an embodiment of the virtues of mercy, grace, compassion and kindness (kṛpānidhānā), heard the angry outburst of Ravana gracefully. He smiled and answered: (9)

‘Verily indeed; all that you have said about your majesty and powers are true¹ (and I don’t doubt it a wee whit). But come on; prove yourself and show your valour and gallantry in practical terms (to help us verify that all the things you have said about yourself are really true, and not merely loud bluster and empty talk). (10)

[Note—¹It is a noble and gentlemanly gesture for Lord Ram to publicly acknowledge Ravana’s greatness and majesty, though the latter was his enemy. But this acknowledgement is tinged with underlying taunt and scorn, for the Lord immediately teases him to prove himself worthy of what he claims to be.]

छं०. जनि जल्पना करि सुजसु नासहि नीति सुनहि करहि छमा । १ ।
संसार महँ पूरुष त्रिबिध पाटल रसाल पनस समा ॥ २ ॥
एक सुमनप्रद एक सुमन फल एक फलइ केवल लागहीं । ३ ।
एक कहहिं कहहिं करहिं अपर एक करहिं कहत न बागहीं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

jani jalpanā kari sujasu nāsahi nīti sunahi karahi chamā. 1.
sansāra maham̐ pūruṣa tribidha pātala rasāla panasa samā. 2.
ēka sumanaprada ēka sumana phala ēka phala'i kēvala lāgahīm. 3.
ēka kahahīm kahahīm karahīm apara ēka karahīm kahata na bāgahīm. 4.

[Lord Ram continued—] ‘Don’t waste your breath by boasting so much about yourself as it would undermine your own fame (because those who are hollow from within try to hide their shortcoming by resorting to making a lot of noise about their achievements).

Excuse me, but there are some established norms and principles in this regard. Listen to them; I’ll tell you. (Chanda line no. 1)

Verily, there are three types of people in this world, and they are likened to these three plants—viz. the rose, the mango, and the jackfruit. (Chanda line no. 2)

[Now, pay attention to the difference between these three.] The first, i.e. the ‘rose’, gives flowers; the second, i.e. the ‘mango’, produces both flowers and fruits; while the third, i.e. the ‘jackfruit’, bears only fruits. (Chanda line no. 3)

Thus, the first sort of people are those who only talk and do nothing (like the rose plant that only bears flowers which gives visual pleasure to the world but gives it nothing worth more than that).

The second types of people are those who talk and do what they talk about (like the mango plant which has flowers as well as fruits).

And then lastly, there is the third category of people who actually do things but do not go about beating their own drum about their achievement (like the jackfruit plant that bears only fruits which the world eats, and no flowers to boast about in the world)¹. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram meant to say that he would prefer not to list his achievements and boast about himself like Ravana has done just a while ago; for the Lord believes in actions rather than loud talk. He teases Ravana and chides him for talking too much, instead of carrying out his threats on the ground.

These remarks of the Lord, said calmly with a sarcastic smile, were sure to engage Ravana further and stoke his anger, as the demon king had expected that Lord Ram would also shout back at him to counter his threats with equal vigour as Angad had done during their meeting some time ago, when they, i.e. Angad and Ravana, had engaged in a heated oral spat using all sorts of bitter insults and acerbic comments about each other. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 35.}

Lord Ram’s composure and patience unnerved Ravana, and though he was taken aback and felt jolted, yet he gathered his wits and haughtily rebuked the Lord in the following Doha.]

दो०. राम बचन सुनि बिहँसा मोहि सिखावत ग्यान ।

बयरु करत नहिं तब डरे अब लागे प्रिय प्रान ॥ ९० ॥

dōhā.

rāma bacana suni bihañsā mōhi sikhāvata gyāna.

bayaru karata nahim taba ḍarē aba lāgē priya prāna. 90.

Hearing the words of Lord Ram, the exasperated Ravana laughed aloud boisterously, shooting back at the Lord in a haughty and sarcastic manner: ‘Ah, you are preaching me wisdom. At the time when you decided to develop hostility with me you had no fear, but now it seems you hold your life dear when you face me and feel that it is in danger.

[To wit, you act like a wise person calmly giving some solemn advice, of course in this case it is to someone who isn’t interested in it, to give an impression that you aren’t in affright of him and that nothing bothers you, whereas the fact is you might be shuddering inside at the prospect of complete rout and abject defeat, and are looking desperately for a window for an honourable means of escape).’ (Doha no. 90)

[Note—Ravana retorts to Lord Ram’s cool response by saying that the latter is trying to hide his mortal fear of the former by behaving as if nothing serious faces him, as if the presence of the dreaded demon king is of no matter worth paying attention to because the Lord thinks that he would easily trounce Ravana.

Lord Ram had started his statement with the use of a courteous phrase “excuse me” (refer: Chanda line no. 1 herein above), and Ravana thought that it was a sign of weakness and fear, for he concluded that his opponent is trying to appease him by being courteous and polite, instead of being belligerent as is the usual case with warriors facing each other in a duel unto death, when such niceties are thrown to the wind, and replaced with provocative words and phrases to denounce the adversary.

Ravana thundered: “Hey, Look here ye all. Here is a hermit preaching me how a valorous and gallant knight ought to act. Well, come to think of it: why then does this King-turned-Hermit not practice himself what he professes. Oh King, come on now. Instead of employing the muscles of thy tongue in giving futile lectures, it would be fit for the occasion if thou employed the powers of the muscles of thine arms, and spare the trouble to the tongue. Hence, I strongly object to thy expostulating on how or how not I ought to behave, and I prithee instead to come forward to settle the question of who is greater and wiser by letting the Duel decide the matter for good.

I loathe being lectured. If thou wert as brave and valiant as thou claim to be, then why do thee hesitate and procrastinate in the matter of charging at me with full tilt and vigour like noble and gallant warrior-in-arm is expected to do? Say why have thee developed cold feet when face-to-face with someone whom thee treats as thine mortal enemy? It’s surely not behooving of a great warrior to hold back his reins when challenged by his opponent to prove his valour and mettle in open battle-field, and on equal terms. So welcome, charge; I am waiting for thee.”]

चौ०. कहि दुर्बचन क्रुद्ध दसकंधर । कुलिस समान लाग छाँड़े सर ॥ १ ॥

नानाकार सिलीमुख धाए । दिसि अरु बिदिसि गगन महि छाए ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kahi durbacana krud'dha dasakandhara. kulisa samāna lāga chāṁṛai sara. 1.
nānākāra silīmukha dhā'ē. disi aru bidisi gagana mahi chā'ē. 2.

Having said these taunting words to Lord Ram, the ten-shouldered Ravana (dasakandhara) began shooting a hail of arrows that were as powerful as the strike of thunder. [To wit, anyone who was hit by an arrow, fell to the ground immediately.] (1)

There was a rush of arrows that covered the sky and the earth from all sides. [The whole battle-field was blanketed by arrows that rained down from the sky in all directions.] (2)

पावक सर छाँड़ेउ रघुबीरा । छन महँ जरे निसाचर तीरा ॥ ३ ॥

छाड़िसि तीब्र सक्ति खिसिआई । बान संग प्रभु फेरि चलाई ॥ ४ ॥ pāvaka sara chāmṛē'u raghubīrā. chana mahum̐ jarē nisācara tīrā. 3.

chāḍisi tībra sakti khisi'ā'ī. bāna saṅga prabhu phēri calā'ī. 4.

Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) responded by shooting fiery arrows that immediately dashed forward and not only intercepted the incoming arrows shot by Ravana but also burnt them to ashes¹. (3)

Feeling peeved and ashamed at his failure, Ravana shot a powerful weapon called Shakti (which probably was a special missile more powerful than ordinary arrows shot by him).

Lord Ram intercepted it by shooting a precisely aimed arrow which hit the incoming Shakti at its tip with such a mighty force that it turned around and retraced its path (to return to Ravana and fall down before him in a crumbled mass of the burnt-out shaft)². (4)

[Note—¹It was like the case of modern-day missile interception system. The incoming missiles launched by Ravana in the form of his arrows fired in rapid succession were intercepted and destroyed mid-air by the missiles shot by Lord Ram in the form of his arrows.

²The defensive arrow shot by Lord Ram intercepted Ravana's Shakti mid-air which with such a great force that surely there must have been a mighty flash and explosion as the two darts met each other head-on. This resulted in the Shakti's power keg exploding in a fiery display of light and thunder, after which the diffused shaft of the missile was flung back to the place from where it was launched.]

कोटिन्ह चक्र त्रिसूल पबारै । बिनु प्रयास प्रभु काटि निवारै ॥ ५ ॥
निफल होहिं रावन सर कैसें । खल के सकल मनोरथ जैसें ॥ ६ ॥ kōṭinha cakra trisūla pabārai. binu prayāsa prabhu kāṭi nivārai. 5.

niphala hōhim rāvana sara kaisēm. khala kē sakala manōratha jaisēm. 6.

Ravana was not to be so easily outwitted. He (grounded his teeth in anger and) launched a fresh salvo of weapons such as discs with sharp razor-like edges, and lancets that were shaped like tridents. But Lord Ram neutralized them as well, by cutting and breaking them all (with the help of his powerful arrows). (5)

All the arrows and other missiles shot by Ravana failed in the same way as all crooked intentions and evil plans of a wicked person are destined to failure¹. (6)

[Note—¹The idea here is that no matter how intelligent and great a crooked person thinks himself to be, no matter how carefully he may have designed his evil plans, but wickedness never pays in the long run, and such a person cannot finally prevail over those who are good and righteous.]

तब सत बान सारथी मारेसि । परेउ भूमि जय राम पुकारेसि ॥ ७ ॥
राम कृपा करि सूत उठावा । तब प्रभु परम क्रोध कहूँ पावा ॥ ८ ॥ taba sata bāna sārathī mārēsi. parē'u bhūmi jaya rāma pukārēsi. 7.

rāma kṛpā kari sūta uṭhāvā. taba prabhu parama krōdha kahūñ pāvā. 8.

Then he (i.e. Ravana) shot a hundred arrows at the charioteer of Lord Ram, who gave a loud cry hailing the glory of the Lord and calling for his victory as he fell down unconscious to the ground, gravely wounded by the strike. (7)

Lord Ram invoked his mystical powers and showed his compassionate nature by lifting the charioteer back on his feet (i.e. reviving him)¹.

This action of Ravana highly infuriated the Lord², and he became exceedingly wrathful³. (8)

[Note—¹We have read earlier that when Laxman was made unconscious for the second time by Meghanad, Lord Ram had easily revived him in a similar manner—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 84.

²Lord Ram indeed had this mystical ability to revive any person who was on the verge of death. We have a fine example of it when the Lord had asked Jatayu, the old vulture king who was mortally wounded by Ravana while the latter was taking Sita away to Lanka aboard his chariot and Jatayu had tried to save her. When Lord Ram met Jatayu, he had asked him that if he so wished then the Lord can bless him with the boon of life, but Jatayu refused, saying that he would rather attain deliverance, emancipation and salvation than live now, because not again would he ever get this opportunity to die while the Supreme Being was himself there right before him. Refer—Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-10 that precede Doha no. 31.

Another clear example is found in the case of Baali, the brother of Sugriv, whom also the Lord had given the option to live a long and stable life if he so wished, but he too preferred to die in the Lord's presence just like Jatayu had wished. Refer—Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 10.

The idea is that though Lord Ram had desisted from performing any super-human deeds in order to conceal his true identity as being Lord Vishnu himself, but often times he let it known to those on whom he had shown his grace who he actually was, to make them feel blessed and spiritually blissful.

We shall soon read that Ravana would shoot down all the four horses of the Lord's chariot, but once again the Lord would immediately get them on their feet—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 92 herein after.

³Why was Lord Ram so infuriated when his charioteer, named Matali, was wounded? It is because the charioteer was innocent; he had not caused any harm to any of the demons like other monkeys and bears had been doing during the course of the war. So therefore, by showing anger the Lord gave a message to one and all that if an innocent person, who is quietly doing his duty, is harmed in any manner, then the Lord would not tolerate it.]

छं०. भए क्रुद्ध जुद्ध बिरुद्ध रघुपति त्रोन सायककसमसे । १ ।
 कोदंड धुनि अति चंड सुनि मनुजाद सब मारुत ग्रसे ॥ २ ॥
 मंदोदरी उर कंप कंपति कमठ भू भूधर त्रसे । ३ ।
 चिक्करहिं दिग्गज दसन गहि महि देखि कौतुक सुर हँसे ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

bha'ē krud'dha jud'dha birud'dha raghupati trōna sāyaka kasamasē. 1.
 kōdaṇḍa dhuni ati caṇḍa suni manujāda saba māruta grasē. 2.
 mandōdarī ura kampa kampati kamaṭha bhū bhūdhara trasē. 3.
 cikkarahim diggaja dasana gahi mahi dēkhi kautuka sura haṁsē. 4.

When the Lord of the Raghus (“raghupati”; Lord Ram) became angry in the battle-field and wished to punish the opponent (Ravana, who had offended the Lord by injuring his innocent charioteer), the arrows in his quiver became agitated, eager to become active and shoot forth. (Chanda line no. 1)

The thunderous twang made by the Lord’s bow created such a fierce sound that the sound-waves produced by it hit the man-eating demon with a mighty force so hard that they were stunned, tottering and trembling wherever they stood. (Chanda line no. 2)

[Ravan’s wife] Mandodari’s heart fluttered too. The ocean, the legendary Tortoise, the earth with its mountains, et al, all felt terrified, and all began to tremble¹. (Chanda line no. 3)

The Diggajas (the legendary Elephants who support the earth in the eight corners) shrieked wildly as they caught the earth in their teeth (to prevent it from getting dislodged from its position).

It was such an awe-inspiring and strange sight that the gods wondered at it, but at the same time they felt happy at the development². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹A similar thing had occurred when Lord Ram had broken the bow in Janakpur to marry Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 261.

Once again, such a development is recorded when Lord Ram and his vast army departed from Kishkindha for Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 35.

²There was a great upheaval, as if a mighty quake is shaking up this world. All this commotion was caused by one thing—Lord Ram’s bow twanging. This was a thing that filled the gods with awe and wonder. But since it was the sound of Lord Ram’s bow, the Lord who was their well-wisher and protector, and in this particular instant he twanged his bow to show his annoyance at his charioteer’s injury, the gods felt happy. It was not something to worry, but rather an occasion to celebrate, as now it became all the more certain for the gods that Lord Ram would definitely slay Ravana without showing any mercy on him.

Earlier the gods may have had some hidden fear that it may perhaps be that Ravana decides to surrender before the Lord, and if this happens the merciful Lord Ram would find it difficult to refuse his plea for mercy. If that came to pass, then their tormentor Ravana would escape unharmed, and then everything would come to a naught. But now that Lord Ram had become angry at Ravana, the gods felt rested as their fear was unfounded, for now it was certain that Lord Ram would show no mercy on Ravana as the latter had offended the Lord by injuring his innocent charioteer.]

दो०. तानेउ चाप श्रवन लागि छाँडे बिसिख कराल ।

राम मारगन गन चले लहलहात जनु ब्याल ॥ ९१ ॥

dōhā.

tānē'u cāpa śravana lagi chāṁṛē bisikha karāla.

rāma māragana gana calē lahalahāta janu byāla. 91.

Lord Ram pulled the string of his bow right back up to his ears (i.e. pulled the string tight), and then shot fierce arrows. These arrows of the Lord dashed forward like so many ferocious dragons or serpents flying in the air (with their heads aiming straight in the direction of Ravana, and their tails waving behind them in a slow motion to the right and the left). (Doha no. 91)

चौ०. चले बान सपच्छ जनु उरगा । प्रथमहिं हतेउ सारथी तुरगा ॥ १ ॥

रथ बिभंजि हति केतु पताका । गर्जा अति अंतर बल थाका ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

calē bāna sapaccha janu uragā. prathamahim hatē'u sārathī turagā. 1.

ratha bibhañji hati kētu patākā. garjā ati antara bala thākā. 2.

The Lord's arrows moved ahead towards their target (Ravana) as if so many winged serpents were flying speedily in that direction. They first slammed down the charioteer and the horses of Ravana's chariot, killing them. (1)

Then they slammed at the chariot itself, breaking it down into splinters, and at the same time tore through the royal flag and the war standard of the demon race, as well as the banner atop his chariot, reducing them into tatters. (2)

तुरत आन रथ चढ़ि खिसिआना । अज सज छाँडेसि बिधि नाना ॥ ३ ॥

बिफल होहिं सब उद्यम ताके । जिमि परद्रोह निरत मनसा के ॥ ४ ॥ turata āna ratha caḍhi khisi'ānā. astra sastra chāṁṛēsi bidhi nānā. 3.

biphala hōhim saba udyama tākē. jimi paradrōha nirata manasā kē. 4.

Feeling extremely embarrassed and ashamed at this humiliation¹, Ravana wasted no time in climbing onto a second chariot (which he had kept as a standby)², and angrily shot many varieties of weapons and missiles of different denominations at his adversary (Lord Ram). (3)

All his efforts proved futile in the same way as an evil person's intentions to cause ill to others would fail in the long run³. (4)

[Note—¹Ravana felt exasperated because when he had shot his own arrow or missile aimed at Lord Ram's chariot, it had only felled the charioteer whom the Lord immediately revived; but Ravana's arrow could not do more harm other than this small diversion.

On the other hand, when Lord Ram shot his arrow in retaliation, it completely demolished Ravana's chariot, killing its horses and the charioteer, and tearing apart his flag and banner, proving at once that the Lord was superior to Ravana in the art and skill of warfare and use of weapons. This realization not only peeved and embarrassed Ravana greatly but also sent a chill down his spine, as now he was gaping at the alarming prospect of trying to outwit an enemy who was far more superior and capable and skilled and empowered than what he had earlier envisioned him to be.

²We have noticed earlier too that Ravana had always kept an extra chariot, fully armed and well equipped, as a standby in the battle-field—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 84.

Another remarkable point to be noted here is this: Lord Ram was able to revive his charioteer when he was struck down by the missile shot by Ravana, but it is obvious that Ravana did not possess the knowledge of how to do it. This was another reason of his getting extremely alarmed. He wondered at how his enemy was able to revive those who fell down mortally wounded and unconscious on the ground. Earlier it was Laxman who was revived, and now it was the charioteer.

Well, come to think of it: How actually was Lord Ram able to achieve this miraculous feat besides the factor of his being the Supreme Being who is all-able, all-knowing and all-powerful, the Lord who can do the impossible should he wish to do it?

The plausible answer is this: When Laxman was revived by the concoction prepared from the medical herbs brought by Hanuman on the advice of the doctor named Sushen, Lord Ram realized its wonderful properties, and surely he had kept aside the rest of the remedy after a part of the preparation successfully revived Laxman, to be used in emergencies during the war. Lord Ram had used it first to revive Laxman when he fell for the second time upon being hit by Ravana's powerful Shakti (refer: Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 83—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 84), and now again when he revived his charioteer who was also struck down by Ravana (refer: Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 91). The Lord would also revive his four horses when they would be struck dead by Ravana soon—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 5-6 herein below.

Ravana was dumb-struck; he could not understand the mystery of how Lord Ram managed to perform this magical trick of fully reviving someone who was almost dead. What does it indicate? Well, it means that Sushen, Ravana's own doctor, was privately annoyed at his own Lord, at his high-handedness and arrogant nature; the doctor was very sad and angry when the pious Vibhishan was ill-treated by the demon king. So he mentally resolved not to help him any further. This is also the reason that Sushen told the correct herb to Lord Ram in order to revive Laxman, for if the doctor had so wished he could have administered a wrong medicine to Laxman that would have done him to death, instead of reviving him with all his original vigour. This was Sushen's way of punishing his cruel Lord Ravana for the way the latter had been behaving throughout his life.

But this point did not strike Ravana; he had never thought in his wildest of dreams that Sushen, the royal doctor of the demon race, would also betray him by not disclosing the secret medicine by which the almost-dead could be revived back to life. But some blame goes to Ravana as well—for he had never, in his arrogance and haughtiness, sought Sushen's advice on this matter, thinking he did not need it, as no one in this creation would ever be able to trounce him and create a situation where he would need someone's help to revive those who were on the verge of death. Ravana thought: "I have conquered the God of Death himself; so what's the worry."

The point to remark here is that if a king, or any ruler for that matter, fails to keep his subjects in good humour and favourably inclined towards himself, then one or the other day these same subjects of his would vent their suppressed anger at him by turning hostile, and pulling the rug from under his feet at a time when he least expects. In the case of the poor and unfortunate demon king Ravana, many of his trusted aides had turned their backs on him when the tides of time and fortune themselves turned against him.

³A similar idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 91.]

तब रावन दस सूल चलावा । बाजि चारि महि मारि गिरावा ॥ ५ ॥ तुरग उठाइ कोपि रघुनायक । खैंचि सरासन छाँड़े सायक ॥ ६ ॥ taba rāvana dasa sūla calāvā. bāji cāri mahi māri girāvā. 5.

turaga uṭhā'i kōpi raghunāyaka. khaiñci sarāsana chāṁṛē sāyaka. 6.

Then Ravana shot ten fierce tridents or lancets, which struck and fell the four horses of Lord Ram's chariot almost as dead. (5)

Lord Raghunayak (Lord Ram) immediately lifted the fallen horses (i.e. he revived the horses back to life and put them on their feet once again in the same way as he had lifted his charioteer a while ago).

The enraged Lord Ram pulled his bow and furiously shot a powerful volley of arrows in retaliation. (6)

रावन सिर सरोज बनचारी । चलि रघुबीर सिलीमुख धारी ॥ ७ ॥ दस दस बान भाल दस मारे । निसरि गए चले रुधिर पनारे ॥ ८ ॥ rāvana sira sarōja banacārī. cali raghubīra silīmukha dhārī. 7.

dasa dasa bāna bhāla dasa mārē. nisari ga'e calē rudhira panārē. 8.

The group of arrows of Lord Ram went towards the heads of Ravana like hordes of bees were moving towards a cluster of lotus flowers, as is their natural wont or habit¹. (7)

Lord Ram shot a volley of arrows in such a way that a cluster of ten of them struck the forehead of each of Ravana's ten heads, pierced through them, and emerged on the other side². This resulted in producing large gaping holes in his heads, from which gushed out streams of blood like water flowing from water spouts or drains from which rain water flows out from rooftops during heavy rainfall². (8)

[Note—¹The bees have a natural habit of moving in large numbers towards a dense cluster of lotus flowers where they hover for a while before alighting on the flowers to suck out their nectar. In this metaphor, the large numbers of Lord Ram's arrows are likened to the bees, and the heads of Ravana to the lotus flowers. Just like the bees aim straight at the lotus flower and alight directly on it without being attracted by any other flower, the arrows aimed straight at Ravana's head without going off track. Once they strike the heads these arrows would suck the life out of them just as the bees suck out the nectar from the lotus flowers after alighting on them.

²A total of 100 arrows were shot by Lord Ram. There were 10 arrows aimed at each of Ravana's 10 heads—i.e. 10 x 10 = 100.

Remember: Ravana's heads were huge as mountains; so therefore his foreheads were also broad like the sides of these mountains.

Ravana had shot ten tridents (refer: Chaupai line no. 5 herein above), so Lord Ram answered by shooting an equal number of arrows aimed at each of his heads.]

स्रवत रुधिर धायउ बलवाना । प्रभु पुनि कृत धनु सर संधाना ॥ ९ ॥
तीस तीर रघुबीर पबारे । भुजन्हि समेत सीस महि पारे ॥ १० ॥

sravata rudhira dhāya'u balavānā. prabhu puni kṛta dhanu sara sandhānā. 9.
tīsa tīra raghubīra pabārē. bhujanhi samēta sīsa mahi pārē. 10.

Ravana, who was exceptionally strong and valorous, dashed forward even while blood flowed out in a steady stream from his foreheads. Lord Ram once again mounted his arrows on his bow, and took aim. (9)

The brave Lord of the Raghus ("raghubīra"; Lord Ram) this time shot thirty arrows at one go. These arrows sliced away Ravana's twenty arms and ten heads which fell to the ground. (10)

काटतहीं पुनि भए नबीने । राम बहोरि भुजा सिर छीने ॥ ११ ॥
प्रभु बहु बार बाहु सिर हए । कटत झटिति पुनि नूतन भए ॥ १२ ॥ kāṭatahīm puni bha'e nabīnē. rāma bahōri bhujā sira chīnē. 11.

prabhu bahu bāra bāhu sira ha'ē. kaṭata jhaṭiti puni nūtana bha'ē. 12.

No sooner had Lord Ram severed Ravana's heads and arms than they grew back once again, immediately.

Not to be daunted, the Lord cut off his heads and arms once again. (11)

But the same thing was repeated: for as soon as these were severed from Ravana's body, new ones (10 heads and 20 arms) took their place instantly¹. (12)

[Note—¹It is like the case of a Hydra. We learn in basic zoology that when any part of this primary organism is cut, it is able to regenerate the severed part on its own. This phenomenon of Ravana regenerating his heads and arms applies especially to the Hydra whose heads regenerate automatically if cut off.]

पुनि पुनि प्रभु काटत भुज सीसा । अति कौतुकी कोसलाधीसा ॥ १३ ॥
रहे छाड़ नभ सिर अरु बाहू । मानहुँ अमित केतु अरु राहू ॥ १४ ॥ puni puni prabhu kātata bhuja sīsā. ati kautukī kōsalādhīsā. 13.

rahē chā'i nabha sira aru bāhū. mānahuṁ amita kētu aru rāhū. 14.

[Now it was the turn of Lord Ram to be amazed and left wondering. Why? Because—]

Lord Ram repeatedly severed the heads and arms of Ravana, but each time they grew back on his body. The Lord of Kaushal ("kōsalādhīsā"; Lord Ram) was playing this strange game with Ravana to amuse himself (kautuka)¹. (13)

The severed heads and arms of Ravana filled the sky as if so many comets and falling stars, represented by Rahu and Ketu in mythology², were dashing hither-thither through the firmament. (14)

[Note—¹This verse can have another interpretation: "This strange phenomenon of Ravana growing his heads and arms every time Lord Ram cut them filled him with awe and amazement."

²In this analogy, the heads of Ravana are like the many 'Rahus', and his arms are like the 'Ketus'. The 'Rahu' is the severed head of a demon of this name; the Rahu is said to devour the disc of the moon and the sun to produce the lunar and solar eclipses respectively according to mythology.

The 'Ketu' is the torso of the same demon Rahu, and after his head was cut off the rest of the body moved around in the universe. The 'comet' that we witness in the sky is said to be the Ketu of mythology.

Since Ravana's heads were round, they are compared to Rahu; and his arms, being muscular and tubular, are likened to the Ketu which is like a long and broad ribbon.]

छं०. जनु राहु केतु अनेक नभ पथ स्रवत सोनित धावहीं । १ ।
रघुबीर तीर प्रचंड लागहिं भूमि गिरन न पावहीं ॥ २ ॥
एक एक सर सिर निकर छेदे नभ उड़त इमि सोहहीं । ३ ।

जनु कोपि दिनकर कर निकर जहँ तहँ बिधुंतुद पोहहीं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

janu rāhu kētu anēka nabha patha sravata sōnita dhāvahīm. 1.
raghubīra tīra pracaṇḍa lāgahīm bhūmi girana na pāvahīm. 2.
ēka ēka sara sira nikara chēdē nabha uṛata imi sōhahīm. 3.
janu kōpi dinakara kara nikara jaham̐ taham̐ bidhuntuda pōhahīm. 4.

It appeared that countless Rahus and Ketus were streaking through the sky while blood flowed from them and formed a trail behind their path. (Chanda line no. 1)

These heads and arms of Ravana continued to fly across the sky as they couldn't fall down to the ground, because they were flung off so violently when Lord Ram's arrows cut them off from the demon king's body that they were put in a trajectory that neutralized the effect of gravity and kept them air-borne for a long time (much like the kite flies). (Chanda line no. 2)

The heads of Ravana flew through the sky, with each of them being pierced by Lord Ram's arrows that passed through them, to create an impression that the countless rays of the angry sun were picking up the Rahus one by one and impaling them by their energized darts¹. (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹The Sun became angry at Rahu; so it decided to shoot its rays in the form of energized darts that impaled Rahu, and forced it to go round and round around the blazing disc of the Sun to get roasted alive.

In this analogy, the arrows of Lord Ram are like the darts of Sun's rays shot to impale Rahu, and the severed heads of Ravana are like Rahu himself.]

दो०. जिमि जिमि प्रभु हर तासु सिर तिमि तिमि होहिं अपार । सेवत बिषय बिबर्ध जिमि नित नित नूतन मार ॥ ९२ ॥

dōhā.

jimi jimi prabhu hara tāsū sira timi timi hōhīm apāra.
sēvata biṣaya bibardha jimi nita nita nūtana māra. 92.

Ravana's heads grew back soon as Lord Ram cut them off in the same way as longing for the world and its material objects, as well as the yearning for the pleasures of the senses continue to increase in direct proportion to one's involvement in them. (Doha no. 92)

[Note—To wit, the more a person allows himself to get involved with the material world, and derive pleasure and comfort from its sense objects, the more his desire for them increases. So likewise, the more heads of Ravana were cut off by Lord Ram, the more heads grew back.

The idea is this: After a certain point of time, Lord Ram realized that it was a waste of time and energy trying to kill Ravana by cutting off his heads. Some other means had to be devised now.]

चौ०. दसमुख देखि सिरन्ह कै बाढ़ी । बिसरा मरन भई रिस गाढ़ी ॥ १ ॥

गर्जेउ मूढ़ महा अभिमानी । धायउ दसहु सरासन तानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dasamukha dēkhi siranha kai bāṛhī. bisarā marana bhaī risa gāṛhī. 1.
garjē'u mūrha mahā abhimānī. dhāya'u dasahu sarāsana tānī. 2.

When the ten-mouthed (dasamukha)¹ demon Ravana observed that his heads were multiplying endlessly, he forgot about the danger of death that had been looming over his head a while ago (because now he was sure that he wouldn't die, for it is next to impossible for a living being to survive once its head is cut off from its body, but this principle didn't seem to apply to Ravana).

With that fear out of the way, with the peril of imminent death no more occupying his mind, Ravana was now seized with severe pangs of revenge as flames of burning wrath and desire for vengeance swept through his entire being. (1)

That extremely haughty and arrogant fool of a monster (mūrha mahā abhimānī) thundered boisterously (garjē'u) even as he dashed forward with all his ten bows² drawn and strung tight, ready to shoot (arrows). (2)

[Note—¹Ravana had ten heads, and therefore 'ten mouths'.

²He had 'twenty arms', which means 'ten pairs of arms'. So he held ten bows in each of his ten arms on one side of his gigantic body, while the other ten arms were ready to mount arrows on the bows of the corresponding side in order to shoot them.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, line no. 1 of Doha no. 81 where this arrangement of bows and arrows is clearly marked.]

समर भूमि दसकंधर कोप्यो । बरषि बान रघुपति रथ तोप्यो ॥ ३ ॥

दंड एक रथ देखि न परेऊ । जनु निहार महुँ दिनकर दुरेऊ ॥ ४ ॥ samara bhūmi dasakandhara kōpyō. baraṣi bāna raghupati ratha tōpyō. 3.

daṇḍa ēka ratha dēkhi na parē'ū. janu nihāra mahuṁ dinakara durē'ū. 4.

The ten-shouldered (dasakandhara)¹ Ravana became wrathful and vengeful in the battle-field; he rained down a dense volley of arrows that covered the chariot of Lord Ram (also known as "Raghupati", the Lord of the Raghu-race of great kings of Ayodhya). (3)

The chariot of Lord Ram was so covered by this thick veil of arrows that for about an hour (daṇḍa ēka) it remained out of sight like an object that becomes invisible for some time during thick fog or mist². (4)

[Note—¹Ravana had 'ten shoulders' upon which were his ten necks and ten heads like a Hydra of ancient Greek mythology.

²Even as an object remains unharmed, though it is not visible, when it is covered by a thick cover of fog or mist, which however is short-lived by its very nature, and as soon as the fog or mist dissipates the object comes to view once again, so was the case with Lord Ram's chariot. To wit, for some time the Lord's chariot became invisible because Ravana's arrows had covered it from all sides, but when the hail of arrows cleared, the chariot was once again seen in all its splendour and magnificence.]

हाहाकार सुरन्ह जब कीन्हा । तब प्रभु कोपि कारमुक लीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥
सर निवारि रिपु के सिर काटे । ते दिसि बिदिसि गगन महि पाटे ॥ ६ ॥ hāhākāra suranha jaba kīnhā. taba prabhu kōpi kāramuka līnhā. 5.

sara nivāri ripu kē sira kātē. tē disi bidisi gagana mahi pātē. 6.

But during this time when Lord Ram's chariot became invisible, the gods panicked and became extremely alarmed; they raised a pitiful cry of woe and fear.

When the Lord observed the piteous condition of the terrified gods, he angrily lifted his formidable bow which was like the mouth of Death (kāramuka). (5)

Letting out a fierce volley of arrows from it, the Lord severed the heads of the enemy once again. These severed heads covered the firmament, the landscape of the sky, from one end to another¹. (6)

[Note—¹Imagine the confoundedness of the terrified gods: The sky was already thickly covered with countless heads and arms of Ravana flying randomly in all directions like so many Rahun and Ketus (apropos: Chaupai line no. 14 and Chanda line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 92 herein above); then Ravana's arrows flew thickly to conceal Lord Ram's chariot (apropos: Chaupai line no. 3 herein above); and now whatever space was left was filled with a fresh supply of Ravana's heads that the Lord now cut.

There was a thick carpet of heads, arms and arrows spread in the space of the sky between where the gods were stationed in the heaven and the ground below where the war was being fought. In this smokescreen the gods were literally blinded as they could perceive nothing of what was happening on the battle-field.

To wit, this cover of heads, arms and arrows which obscured the view of the battle-field from the gods was actually Lord Ram's way of spreading his Maya upon these gods: the Lord had performed certain mystical deeds and magical tricks which perhaps he wished to keep to himself and concealed from the gods; and so he employed this ruse to keep the gods in oblivion of what was actually happening in the battle-field.]

काटे सिर नभ मारग धावहिं । जय जय धुनि करि भय उपजावहिं ॥ ७ ॥
कहँ लछिमन सुग्रीव कपीसा । कहँ रघुबीर कोसलाधीसा ॥ ८ ॥

kāṭē sira nabha māraga dhāvahiṃ. jaya jaya dhuni kari bhaya upajāvahiṃ. 7.
kahaṃ lachimana sugrīva kapīsā. kahaṃ raghubīra kōsalādhīsā. 8.

The severed heads of Ravana dart hither and thither through the path of the sky, letting out shrieks of ‘victory-victory; hail-hail’ that create terrible fear in all those who listen to these ghostly voices¹. (7)

Even as these heads streak through the sky they kept on howling gravely: ‘Where is Laxman; where is Sugriv, the king of the monkeys. Where is Raghubir, the Lord of Kaushal (i.e. Lord Ram)?’ (8)

[Note—¹The ghostly sound produced by severed heads of Ravana terrified the gods in heaven, as well as the army of monkeys and bears on the ground.]

छं०. कहँ रामु कहि सिर निकर धाए देखि मर्कट भजि चले । १ ।
संधानि धनु रघुबंसमनि हँसि सरन्हि सिर बेधे भले ॥ २ ॥
सिर मालिका कर कालिका गहि बूंद बूंदन्हि बहु मिलीं । ३ ।
करि रुधिर सारि मज्जनु मनहुँ संग्राम बट पूजन चलीं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

kahaṃ rāmu kahi sira nikara dhā'ē dēkhi markāṭa bhaji calē. 1.
sandhāni dhanu raghubansamani haṃsi saranhi sira bēdhē bhalē. 2.
sira mālikā kara kālīkā gahi bṛnda bṛndanhi bahu milīṃ. 3.
kari rudhira sari majjanu manahuṃ saṅgrāma baṭa pūjana calīṃ. 4.

‘Where is Ram’—saying these words, clusters of severed heads whistled through the sky in every direction, and this sight so much terrified the monkeys and bears on the battle-ground that they ran helter-skelter out of fear. (Chanda line no. 1)

Lord Ram, who was like a gem in the race of kings belonging to Raghu’s race (raghubansamani), smiled in amusement even as he lifted his bow and shot arrows that pierced these flying heads properly in such a way that they stopped creating any more howling sound¹. (Chanda line no. 2)

Meanwhile, on the battle-field itself there were hordes of Kalikas (female forms of the god of death known as ‘Kaal’) roaming around in groups while holding garlands of skulls in their hands. (Chanda line no. 3)

It created an impression that these patron goddesses of the battle-field had first taken a bath in a river of blood and were now proceeding to offer their worship of a Vat Tree (a banyan tree) symbolized by the war². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹The next set of arrows shot by Lord Ram punctured bigger holes in the heads of Ravana that were making so much noise as they flew in the sky so as to completely silence them. Perhaps the holes made previously were very small, say like those in a flute or any other wind-based musical instrument, and when these heads flew through the sky with great speed they produced a whistling sound when air passed through these apertures. So, Lord Ram shot a second volley of arrows that drilled bigger holes into these heads, which helped to stop the ghostly sound that they made.

²The Kalikas were carrying garlands of skulls just like women folk carry garlands of flowers when they go to offer worship to a holy tree, which is the banyan tree in this case. Here this ‘banyan tree’ is represented by the raging ‘war’, and like the banyan tree that has many roots and branches of different shapes spreading over a large area, the war too had different phases and different aspects, with its ups and downs and changing contours, where the tide of fortune would change sides swiftly, once favouring the demon army and at another moment favouring the army of monkeys and bears.]

दो०. पुनि दसकंठ क्रुद्ध होइ छाँड़ी सक्ति प्रचंड । चली बिभीषन सन्मुख मनहुँ काल कर दंड ॥ ९३ ॥

dōhā.

puni dasakaṇṭha krud'dha hō'i chāṁṛī sakti pracaṇḍa.
calī bibhīṣana sanmukha manahuṁ kāla kara daṇḍa. 93.

Once again, Ravana shot another powerful weapon called ‘Shakti’ (a lancet or a trident that possessed exceptional ability to strike down the target at which it was aimed)¹. It was aimed at Vibhishan, and so it headed straight to him as if the fearful baton of Kaal (i.e. the weapon of the god of death) was thrown at Vibhishan (with the intention to kill him). (Doha no. 93)

[Note—¹The term “Shakti” applied to a powerful and strong weapon that had a lot of energy and punch incorporated into it; it had the potential to create extensive damage to the target it was aimed at. It was invincible and infallible as it rarely failed to attain its objective.

Ravana had many such exclusive weapons in reserve, and he used them when other weapons failed to satisfy him. He had used a Shakti earlier to hit Laxman with the result that the latter fell down on the ground unconscious by its impact—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 83.

Presently, when Ravana saw Vibhishan, his estranged brother, his indignation and anger knew no bounds. He flew into a rage when he sighted Vibhishan because he treated the latter as a traitor and one who had betrayed his own family and race. Ravana’s anger leapt up into a flame when he saw Vibhishan in the same manner as when he had become furious upon seeing Laxman, because the sight of Laxman reminded Ravana that it was he who had killed his dear son Meghanad. Now once again, the sight of Vibhishan revived the memory of the bitter moment when he had kicked him out of Lanka for advocating the cause of Lord Ram.

To wit, Ravana became incensed by the sight of Vibhishan so much that he decided to get done with him; so he shot the powerful Shakti to kill his brother and get him out of his way for good.]

चौ०. आवत देखि सक्ति अति घोरा । प्रनतारति भंजन पन मोरा ॥ १ ॥

तुरत बिभीषन पाछें मेला । सन्मुख राम सहेउ सोइ सेला ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

āvata dēkhi sakti ati ghōrā. pranatārati bhañjana pana mōrā. 1.

turata bibhīṣana pāchēm mēlā. sanmukha rāma sahē'u sō'i sēlā. 2.

When Lord Ram saw this formidable Shakti approaching to target Vibhishan, he bethought to himself: ‘It is my declared vow that I would eliminate all fears of those who have surrendered themselves to me and have sought my protection. [Therefore, it is obligatory upon me to protect Vibhishan and get him out of harms way, even if it means that I have to suffer as a consequence.]’¹ (1)

Deciding thus, the Lord immediately pushed Vibhishan behind and stood in the front to bear the brunt of the attack of the incoming Shakti, thereby effectively shielding Vibhishan from the horrifying deadly effects of the missile². (2)

[Note—¹This determination of Lord Ram, that he would not flinch or demur, nor procrastinate even for a while, when it comes to extending his protection to those who have come to him in the time of distress to surrender themselves before him and seek his protection, is explicitly stressed by the Lord himself earlier too with reference to Vibhishan himself—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 43—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 44.

Lord Ram had made this declaration publicly, and so it was now incumbent upon him to show everyone that he keeps his words like a true and gallant knight.

²Another very significant point to note at this juncture is this: Lord Ram was riding a chariot at this point of time, and so was Ravana. How then did Vibhishan come into the picture?

Well, there are three possibilities here; let us consider them one by one as follows—

(i) The first possibility is that Vibhishan was also on the chariot alongside Lord Ram in order to assist him, being his constant companion and special advisor during the war, as he was hand-picked by the Lord himself because Vibhishan was fully aware about the secrets of Lanka and its army like no one else in the Lord’s army.

(ii) The second probability is that after the Lord’s charioteer Matali was wounded when he was hit by Ravana’s arrows (apropos: Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 91), he was replaced by Vibhishan who took the reins of the chariot himself in order to give Matali some rest.

(iii) The third likelihood is that after the charioteer Matali was revived by Lord Ram, the Lord decided to give him some rest, and so he left the chariot and stood on the ground near it, where his chief commanders such as Vibhishan and others were already present. When Ravana saw his estranged brother standing close to his arch enemy Lord Ram, his anger knew no bounds; he flared up with vengeance when he recalled how his own brother had betrayed him. So Ravana shot a deadly dart at Vibhishan to kill him.

All these three possibilities can be true, though nothing is clearly mentioned regarding how Lord Ram could ‘push Vibhishan behind him’ when he saw the Shakti coming. It is surely not practically possible to happen if the Lord was on a chariot and Vibhishan was standing on the ground with other commanders who were directed earlier by the Lord to stand by and watch the duel between himself and Ravana—apropos: Doha no. 89 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.

Now therefore, if we take into consideration the first option, that ‘Vibhishan was on the chariot sitting or standing alongside Lord Ram’, then it is easy to visualize Ravana spotting him and shooting his Shakti at his brother to vent his suppressed anger and indignation at him; it is also easy then for Lord Ram to push Vibhishan behind the seat and take the hit himself.

The second option—that ‘Vibhishan had replaced Matali as the charioteer of Lord Ram for some time’—also works well with the narration and to explain what may actually have happened during those crucial moments. During such duels it was a common-place thing to immobilize one’s adversary by falling his charioteer and horses—both Lord Ram and Ravana had done it. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 91 (Ravana felling Lord Ram’s charioteer); and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 92 (Lord Ram retaliating in the same way by felling Ravana’s charioteer and horses).}

When Ravana’s sight fell on Vibhishan taking charge of Lord Ram’s chariot, obviously the former lost his cool and flew into a raging fit of anger—because the very sight of his estranged brother filled Ravana with loathing, for he was overcome with extreme disgust and burning indignation. When he aimed his Shakti at Vibhishan, Lord Ram immediately pushed the latter aside and stepped in his place to bear the brunt of the attack.

Likewise, the third option—that ‘Lord Ram had left the chariot for a while and stood on the ground while Vibhishan and others came close to him, and then Ravana shot his Shakti at Vibhishan’—also seems plausible, because then it would be natural for Lord Ram to push Vibhishan behind him and take the hit himself.

In any case, what happened to Vibhishan? Well, we shall read in the following verses that he took up his fighting mace and rushed at Ravana. It clearly means that if we take into consideration either of the first two options then the chariot of Lord Ram had stopped on its track, and Vibhishan had jumped off it and ran on foot to confront his brother.

On the other hand, if we regard the third possibility as what actually might have transpired during those moments, then also everything fits in well with the description of what happened during those moments.

Vibhishan dashing forward to challenge and engage Ravana after Lord Ram fell down unconscious was a natural and spontaneous reaction on his part, for he was greatly obliged to the Lord for giving him unconditional shelter and promising him his full support and protection at a time when his own brother Ravana would have certainly killed him if he had remained a little longer in Lanka.

To wit, in the absence of any clear description of what might have actually happened during those crucial moments, the above three possibilities are the only ones that come to mind to explain the development; there is no practical way of what might have happened then other than this.]

लागि सक्ति मुरुछा कछु भई । प्रभु कृत खेल सुरन्ह बिकलई ॥ ३ ॥

देखि बिभीषन प्रभु श्रम पायो । गहि कर गदा क्रुद्ध होइ धायो ॥ ४ ॥ lāgi sakti muruchā kachu bha'ī. prabhu kṛta khēla suranha bikala'ī. 3.

dēkhi bibhīṣana prabhu śrama pāyō. gahi kara gadā krud'dha hō'i dhāyō. 4.

When the Shakti slammed into Lord Ram, he fell unconscious for some time. This play of the Lord confounded the gods who felt sore affright, alarmed and agitated¹. (3)

No sooner did Vibhishan see Lord Ram falling exhausted after being hit by the powerful Shakti, than he picked up his war mace and rushed angrily at Ravana². (4)

[Note—¹The reader might have recognized by now how impatient and nervous and fragile the gods were. Every time they found Lord Ram on the back-foot, they panicked; they didn't realize that it was a war, and in a war it is impossible that the tide of fortune would always and exclusively favour one combatant. They forgot that Lord Ram was actually 'Lord Vishnu', and therefore there was no question of his losing the war against the demon king Ravana. But everything takes its time.

Lord Ram, meanwhile, being the Supreme Lord of the world, wished to play an even game; the Lord wished that Ravana ought to be given his due share of fame and glory by allowing to prove himself as a mighty warrior; the Lord wished that history would give due credit to Ravana and honour him for his unrivalled gallantry, valour and qualities as a great and powerful warrior.

At the same time the Lord had to honour and recognize the mystical powers that the many weapons that were used at different times during the war inherently possessed. Remember: The Supreme Being had created every conceivable component in this creation; the demons too were obviously a part of the same creation, and so were the myriad weapons they used. The Lord had to take action on these demons because they were crossing the limits of tolerance, but that did not mean that they weren't a part of the creation created by the Supreme Being.

The demons represented the 'Tama Guna', or the third quality out of the three qualities created by the Lord at the time of creation—the other two being 'Sata Guna' and the 'Raja Guna'. These three qualities were like the tripod on which the character and nature of all creatures was based; and in an ideal situation there ought to be a balance between the three so that the tripod would stand stable and straight. Unfortunately this was not to be so and the balance failed over time so that the worst of the three, the 'Tama Guna', became dominant, pushing aside the other two and upsetting the delicate balance designed by the Supreme Lord. Now when this happened, it became obligatory for the Lord to reset things and bring normalcy in his creation. This in brief was why Lord Ram was fighting the 'demons'; it was just to bring the ancient balance back to the normal.

Therefore, the Lord played things patiently and with a cool head, though externally he had to act like an expert actor who shows so many emotions and sentiments on the stage in accordance to the role he is playing, but once off the stage he remains unconcerned and calm, becoming his earlier self.

²See note appended to Chaupai line nos. 1-2 herein above. The missile sapped Lord Ram's energy for a while as it hit him hard, as a result of which the Lord sank to his feet, exhausted and tired like a person who loses his senses for some time when suddenly hit hard by a blow.]

रे कुभाग्य सठ मंद कुबुद्धे । तैं सुर नर मुनि नाग बिरुद्धे ॥ ५ ॥
सादर सिव कहूँ सीस चढ़ाए । एक एक के कोटिन्ह पाए ॥ ६ ॥ rē kubhāgya saṭha manda kubud'dhē. tair̥m sura nara muni nāga birud'dhē. 5.

sādara siva kahuṃ sīsa caṛhā'ē. ēka ēka kē kōṭinha pā'ē. 6.

Vibhishan sternly rebuked Ravana, saying: 'Oh you unfortunate, wicked and dumb-witted fellow whose mind has become pervert. You have become hostile to all living beings; you have not spared anyone, neither the gods, the human beings, the pious sages and hermits, nor the serpents (representing the reptiles who aren't even able to stand up and walk).

[To wit, thou hast oppressed and created animosity with every imaginable creature in the Lord's universe; thou hast spared neither the high and the mighty, nor the weak and the humble. Thy mind is so excessively pervert that it has eclipsed thine wisdom and senses so much that thee hast been blinded of everything. Forsooth, thee thinks that thou art the Lord of the world, but in thine haughty recklessness thou hast forgotten that everything has a limit, that one wouldst be well-advised to live within one's limits, and never overdo things in arrogant overconfidence. I had tried to show thee the correct path, but in thy arrogance thee didst naught pay any heed to it. So now, reap what thou hast sowed.] (5)

You had offered your heads to Lord Shiva as offerings at the time you had worshipped him, as a result of which you had been blessed by the boon that you will never be short of heads, as for each head you had offered to Shiva, you were granted countless heads in return¹.

[Lord Shiva was so pleased by thy self-sacrifice of thine heads that he granted thee access to countless heads, so that if by an unhappy chance thou wouldst lose thine head, then thee wouldst be compensated by another head immediately. That is why Lord Ram has failed to get rid of thee by cutting thine heads. Woe to thee, thou wicked fellow, for thy time has come!] (6)

[Note—¹This incident is hinted at in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 38-39; and verse no. 53.

Ravana has himself boasted of it while arguing with Angad in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precedes Doha no. 25.]

तेहि कारन खल अब लगि बाँच्यो । अब तव कालु सीस पर नाच्यो ॥ ७ ॥
राम बिमुख सठ चहसि संपदा । अस कहि हनेसि माझ उर गदा ॥ ८ ॥ tēhi kārana khala aba lagi bāñcyō. aba tava kālu sīsa para nācyō. 7.

rāma bimukha saṭha cahasi sampadā. asa kahi hanēsi mājha ura gadā. 8.

That is the reason why you have survived for so long (inspite of Lord Ram severing your heads so many times). But now your death seems to be dancing over your head. (7)

How stupid you are to expect prosperity and welfare by being opposed to Lord Ram!'

Saying this, Vibhishan swung his battle mace and slammed it hard on Ravana's chest. (8)

छं०. उर माझ गदा प्रहार घोर कठोर लागत महि परचो । १ ।
 दस बदन सोनित स्रवत पुनि संभारि धायो रिस भर्यो ॥ २ ॥
 द्वौ भिरे अतिबल मल्लजुद्ध बिरुद्ध एकु एकहि हनै । ३ ।
 रघुबीर बल दर्पित बिभीषनु घालि नहिं ता कहूँ गनै ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ura mājha gadā prahāra ghōra kaṭhōra lāgata mahi paryō. 1.
 dasa badana sōnita sraṇata puni sambhāri dhāyō risa bharyō. 2.
 dvau bhirē atibala mallajud'dha birud'dha ēku ēkahi hanai. 3.
 raghubīra bala darpita bibhīṣanu ghāli nahim tā kahūṁ ganai. 4.

No sooner did the mighty battle mace struck Ravana in his chest with a deadly blow, than he fell down on the ground. (Chanda line no. 1)

Blood flowed from all his ten mouths. But not to be so easily outwitted, the valorous Ravana soon recovered himself and rushed forward, with renewed vengeance, towards Vibhishan. (Chanda line no. 2)

The two equally strong, valiant and gallant champions clashed with each other vigourously, slamming each other with all their might, and raining deadly blows. (Chanda line no. 3)

Vibhishan was encouraged to take on his formidable adversary Ravana with renewed vigour and confidence as he had the latent support and blessing of Lord Ram so much so that the former gave no credence to how mighty or valorous the latter may have been for anyone else.

[To wit, since Vibhishan had full support of Lord Ram, and he was fighting on the Lord's behalf, he had no fear from Ravana at all. Otherwise, left to himself, Vibhishan was no match against his mighty brother who was so powerful and strong that even his name would send the gods of heaven running for cover¹.] (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Baal Kand, Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-13 that precede it; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 25; Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 28.]

दो०. उमा बिभीषनु रावनहि सन्मुख चितव कि काउ । सो अब भिरत काल ज्यों श्रीरघुबीर प्रभाउ ॥ १४ ॥

dōhā.

umā bibhīṣanu rāvanahi sanmukha citava ki kā'u.
sō aba bhirata kāla jyōm śrīraghubīra prabhā'u. 94.

[Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this magnificent Story, said to his consort Uma who was listening to it.] 'Listen Uma. Could Vibhishan ever gather the courage to see eye to eye with Ravana? [No; never.]

That same Vibhishan now clashed fearlessly with Ravana as if he was a personified form of Kaal (god of death). Verily indeed, in all sooth and without gainsay, this was made possible only due to the grace and glory of Lord Ram¹. (Doha no. 94)

[Note—¹To wit, the very fact that Vibhishan could even as much as dare to face Ravana and hit him so hard that the mighty Lord of the demons would fall down, bleeding from his mouths, shows the secret power inherent to the grace of Lord Ram. Since Vibhishan had Lord Ram's blessings, he was very well empowered and protected so much so that he not only had no fear from his ferocious demon brother, but he also succeeded in bringing him down to earth by his blow. Ravana's powers and strength of arm were no secret from Vibhishan, and under any other situation he would have run away instead of confronting Ravana and getting squashed to death by him.]

चौ०. देखा श्रमित बिभीषनु भारी । धायउ हनूमान गिरि धारी ॥ १ ॥

रथ तुरंग सारथी निपाता । हृदय माझ तेहि मारेसि लाता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dēkhā śramita bibhīṣanu bhārī. dhāya'u hanūmāna giri dhārī. 1.
ratha turaṅga sārathī nipātā. hṛdaya mājha tēhi mārēsi lātā. 2.

Hanuman, who was watching the proceedings from the sidelines, observed that Vibhishan was getting exhausted. So he decided to come to Vibhishan's aid, and holding a huge boulder that resembled a mountain, he leapt forward with a mighty dash. (1)

He (Hanuman) dumped this mountain-like boulder with a great force on Ravana's chariot, crushing it to smithereens, and killing the horses as well as the charioteer. Thence he kicked Ravana viciously in the chest¹. (2)

[Note—¹This is not the first time that Hanuman had intervened during one-to-one duels, for he had reacted with the same swiftness and agility earlier also during the confrontation between Ravana and Laxman when the latter was shot down and felled unconscious by a powerful Shakti shot by Ravana, whereat Hanuman had dashed forward to intervene, giving a violent fist-blow to Ravana that made him swoon and fall down. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 83—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 84.}

At other times too when Hanuman found that his companions were in dire danger, he was the first to come to their aid; there are several instances of it. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 43; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 51.}

ठाढ़ रहा अति कंषित गाता । गयउ बिभीषनु जहँ जनत्राता ॥ ३ ॥
पुनि रावन कपि हतेउ पचारी । चलेउ गगन कपि पूँछ पसारी ॥ ४ ॥ ṭhārha rahā ati kampita gātā. gaya'u bibhīṣanu jahaṁ janatrātā. 3.

puni rāvana kapi hatē'u pacārī. calē'u gagana kapi pūṁcha pasārī. 4.

Ravana stood stunned and shaken by the blow, with his body trembling for a while (like the leaves that shake on a tree when a gust of wind passes through).

Meanwhile, Vibhishan went back to the place where Lord Ram, the protector of devotees, was. (3)

Recovering himself, Ravana challenged Hanuman and hit him hard; but Hanuman lengthened his tail and went up in the sky¹. (4)

[Note—¹Hanuman's blow left Ravana shuddering for a moment, but he did not fall down. Gathering his wits together, Ravana struck back at his assailant, thrusting a clenched fist at him. But Hanuman was prepared for it, and so before the fist-cuff could actually land on him he cleverly escaped unharmed by using his long tail as a lever to spring himself into the sky. Why did Hanuman employ this strategy? It is explained below.]

गहिसि पूँछ कपि सहित उड़ाना । पुनि फिरि भिरेउ प्रबल हनुमाना ॥ ५ ॥ लरत अकास जुगल सम जोधा । एकहि एकु हनत करि क्रोधा ॥ ६ ॥ gahisi pūṁcha kapi sahita urānā. puni phiri bhirē'u prabala hanumānā. 5.

larata akāsa jugala sama jōdhā. ēkahi ēku hanata kari krōdhā. 6.

Ravana caught hold of Hanuman's tail and flew alongside him into the sky. After some time (i.e. after a brief pause when both the champions were at a distance from the place where Ravana had first fought with Lord Ram, and later with Vibhishan), the mighty Hanuman turned back and clashed violently with Ravana¹. (5)

The two valiant and courageous warriors, who were equal in gallantry and bravado, fought each other in the sky, bravely and fiercely, with gusto and dare-devilry. They punched and boxed each other vehemently, both highly enraged and seething with anger. (6)

[Note—¹Hanuman wished to take Ravana away from the sight of where Lord Ram was. Remember: the Lord was struck and made unconscious by Ravana's Shakti, so Hanuman thought it was wise to take Ravana away from the sight and engage him in a duel so as to deflect his attention from Lord Ram, for which purpose he went some distance away into the sky, with Ravana in hot pursuit. When Hanuman felt that they were at a safe distance from Lord Ram, he turned back to clash with Ravana in a fierce duel.]

सोहहिं नभ छल बल बहु करहीं । कज्जल गिरि सुमेरु जनु लरहीं ॥ ७ ॥
बुधि बल निसिचर परइ न पाख्यो । तब मारुत सुत प्रभु संभाख्यो ॥ ८ ॥ sōhahim nabha chala bala bahu karahīm. kajjala giri sumēru janu larahīm. 7.

budhi bala nisicara para'i na pāryō. taba māruta suta prabhu sambhāryō. 8.

The two mighty warriors were engaged in a close combat that was fought most fiercely and valiantly in the sky, with both using myriads of tricks and maneuverings. The sight was akin to Mt. Kajjal clashing with Mt. Sumeru¹. (7)

After having failed to subdue the demon king (“nisicara”; Ravana) inspite of using all his wits and skills as well as his might, the son of the wind god (“māruta suta”; Hanuman) remembered Lord Ram (i.e. prayed to the Lord for help)². (8)

[Note—¹Here, Hanuman is compared to Mt. Sumeru, and Ravana to Mt. Kajjal. The reason is that Ravana had a dark body like Mt. Kajjal, which means a mountain of black soot. On the other hand, Hanuman’s complexion was fair, resembling the mountain with a golden hue, i.e. Mt. Sumeru.

Ravana has been likened to Mt. Kajjal earlier also, when Angad saw him for the first time—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 19.

Similarly, Hanuman was likened to Mt. Sumeru in the invocation at the beginning of Sundar Kand—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Sanskrit verse line no. 9 that precedes the Chaupais before Doha no. 1.

²No matter how hard Hanuman tried, yet he failed to vanquish Ravana. So at last he invoked the glory and blessings of Lord Ram, praying for help.]

छं०. संभारि श्रीरघुबीर धीर पचारि कपि रावनु हन्यो । १ ।
महि परत पुनि उठि लरत देवन्ह जुगल कहूँ जय जय भन्यो ॥ २ ॥
हनुमंत संकट देखि मर्कट भालु क्रोधातुर चले । ३ ।
रन मत्त रावन सकल सुभट प्रचंड भुज बल दलमले ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

sambhāri śrīraghubīra dhīra pacāri kapi rāvanu han'yō. 1.
mahi parata puni uṭhi larata dēvanha jugala kahuṁ jaya jaya bhan'yō. 2.
hanumanta saṅkaṭa dēkhi markaṭa bhālu krōdhātura calē. 3.
rana matta rāvana sakala subhaṭa pracaṇḍa bhuja bala dalamalē. 4.

Remembrance of Lord Ram injected fresh courage and enthusiasm in Hanuman, who fought with renewed vigour and gallantry. He stood up and challenged Ravana once again, giving him a mighty blow that brought the demon king down. (Chanda line no. 1)

As has been said already, it was an equal fight, with both the champion warriors dashing and felling each other repeatedly, with no one emerging a clear winner. The gods were amused at this sight, and they applauded them both for their strength, might, vigour and gallantry, calling out 'hail and glory to you both'. (Chanda line no. 2)

Meanwhile, when the rest of the army of monkeys and bears saw that Hanuman was cornered and feeling weary, they immediately rushed forward angrily in order to help him. (Chanda line no. 3)

Ravana, who was intoxicated with passion for war, grabbed hold of and squashed all the brave warriors with his strong arms¹. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹We will recall that Kumbhakaran had done the same thing with the monkeys and bears when he stepped out into the battle-field—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 67.

This is because both Ravana and Kumbhakaran, being brothers, had similar gigantic forms of their bodies and were similar in strength.]

दो०. तब रघुबीर पचारे धाए कीस प्रचंड ।

कपि बल प्रबल देखि तेहिं कीन्ह प्रगट पाषंड ॥ ९५ ॥

dōhā.

taba raghubīra pacārē dhā'ē kīsa pracaṇḍa.

kapi bala prabala dēkhi tēhiṁ kīnha pragata pāṣaṇḍa. 95.

Then, cheered on by Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram)¹, the fierce monkeys and bears dashed forward (to help Hanuman).

When Ravana observed that the Kapis (monkeys; bears), who were charging at him, had formidable strength and force, he spread his Maya (i.e. his power to create illusions) so as to deflect the attack by diverting the attention of the attackers². (Doha no. 95)

[Note—¹We have read herein above that when Hanuman was cornered by Ravana and felt exhausted, he had prayed to Lord Ram to help him—apropos: Chanda line no. 1 that precedes this Doha no. 95.

So this was Lord Ram's response. The Lord urged his army to go and intervene on his behalf, and help Hanuman out of harm's way.

²Whenever Ravana himself felt cornered and outnumbered, he had spread his Maya, i.e. his magical powers to create illusions, to deflect the attack by the monkeys and bears—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 88.]

चौ०. अंतरधान भयउ छन एका । पुनि प्रगटे खल रूप अनेका ॥ १ ॥

रघुपति कटक भालु कपि जेते । जहँ तहँ प्रगट दसानन तेते ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

antaradhāna bhaya'u chana ēkā. puni pragaṭē khala rūpa anēkā. 1.
raghupati kaṭaka bhālu kapi jētē. jahaṁ tahaṁ pragaṭa dasānana tētē. 2.

The cunning fellow vanished from sight for some moments, and then reappeared by assuming many forms. (1)

The imposter assumed as many forms as they were monkeys and bears in Lord Ram's army. [To wit, Ravana assumed so many forms that there was one Ravana facing each member of Lord Ram's army.]¹ (2)

[Note—¹This sudden development mightily astonished the monkeys and bears out of their wits. Earlier there was one Ravana whom they fought, but now there were countless Ravana. Each monkey and bear warrior would now have to fight and defeat a Ravana all by himself, which was, in itself, an extremely difficult and daunting prospect as compared to the earlier situation when they could use their combined might against one single enemy. Naturally therefore, the entire army was in a panicky state, and all its warriors lost all hopes of victory. Not only the monkeys and bears, but even the gods were confounded and taken aback, fearing now that vanquishing Ravana seemed a lost dream. We shall read about it in the verses that follow herein below.

Ravana is an 'imposter and a cunning fellow' because he uses fowls means, tricks and delusions to overcome his opponent and fight a war deceitfully instead of using fair and transparent means as would behoove of a gallant knight and famed warrior worth his name and honour.

But Ravana can be excused for it, for this was a 'war', it was a question of life and death for him, and during such dangerous and testing times, means fair or foul matter not, as long as the objective is achieved.]

देखे कपिन्ह अमित दससीसा । जहँ तहँ भजे भालु अरु कीसा ॥ ३ ॥ भागे बानर धरहिं न धीरा । त्राहि त्राहि लछिमन रघुबीरा ॥ ४ ॥ dēkhē kapinha amita dasasīsā. jahaṁ tahaṁ bhajē bhālu aru kīsā. 3.

bhāgē bānara dharahim na dhīrā. trāhi trāhi lachimana raghubīrā. 4.

When the monkeys and bears saw that there were countless ten-headed Ravana (roaring and gesturing menacingly at them), they felt sore affright and panicky; they ran helter-skelter and scattered in all directions (to escape being caught and thrashed). (3)

The monkeys (and bears) scampered away in terror, unable to gather courage to hold their ground and retaliate. Even as they fled, they cried out aloud: 'have mercy upon us, Lord Ram and Laxman; save us from being slaughtered'¹. (4)

[Note—¹The sudden appearance of so many Ravana's was literally like a bomb that exploded within the rank and file of the Lord's army. Each monkey and bear saw that a Ravana was glaring at him with red eyes, stretched arms and loud yell, ready to grab him and squash him to pulp. The monkeys and bears therefore flew away like dry leaves that are scattered during a violent storm.]

दहँ दिसि धावहिं कोटिन्ह रावन । गर्जहिं घोर कठोर भयावन ॥ ५ ॥
 डरे सकल सुर चले पराई । जय कै आस तजहु अब भाई ॥ ६ ॥
 सब सुर जिते एक दसकंधर । अब बहु भए तकहु गिरि कंदर ॥ ७ ॥ रहे बिरंचि संभु मुनि ग्यानी । जिन्ह जिन्ह प्रभु महिमा कछु जानी ॥ ८ ॥ dahaṁ disi dhāvahiṁ kōṭinha rāvana. garjahiṁ ghōra kaṭhōra bhayāvana. 5.

 ḍarē sakala sura calē parā'ī. jaya kai āsa tajahu aba bhā'ī. 6.
 saba sura jitē ēka dasakandhara. aba bahu bha'ē takahu giri kandara. 7.
 rahē birañci sambhu muni gyānī. jinha jinha prabhu mahimā kachu jānī. 8.

Countless Ravana could be seen in all the ten directions¹, running, roaring, looking frightening and fierce, gesticulating menacingly, and generally threatening the life out of one and all. (5)

[Not only was the army of monkeys and bears in terror, but even the gods panicked.] The gods were so sore affright and alarmed that they too fled away in terror, lamenting thus: 'Brothers, abandon all hopes of victory now. (6)

One ten-shouldered Ravana (dasakandhara) was able to conquer all the gods², but look now, there are countless numbers of him. It will be better for us to seek refuge in deep mountain caves to hide ourselves and escape him. (7)

All but the creator Brahma, the concluder Lord Shiva, and illustrious sages and seers who were learned and enlightened about the glory and potentials of Lord Ram (i.e. those who knew the truth of Lord Ram as being the almighty Lord of the world)³, were able to maintain calm and remain where they were in their stations in the sky even as all other gods fled from the sight. (8)

[Note—¹The ten directions are north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, zenith and nadir. The idea is that wherever one could see, he would perceive Ravana in that direction.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-13 that precede it.

³These two wise and learned senior gods, Brahma and Shiva, as well as sages and seers knew that Lord Ram was a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the world, and therefore that it is impossible for Ravana to prevail over Lord Ram in the final game, and that all this was a drama that the Lord wishes to play to give Ravana an ample opportunity to prove his mettle and test his abilities so that later on he would not regret that he did not try this or that trick, that he was not given an even playing field to defend his honour and title to fame.

Lord Ram wished that the war should be fought like a war ought to be, where both sides win some and lose some, and not a one-sided game like the case when one combatant is overwhelmingly superior and domineering over the other, for in the latter case Ravana would claim that he was trounced and killed just because he was fighting an uneven war with the almighty Lord God of creation against whom there was no question of winning, but for that he was invincible and unconquerable.

Remember: Ravana had extracted a promise from this same creator Brahma that no one but a human being or monkeys would be able to kill him—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 177. So it was obligatory for Lord Ram not to create a situation where it would appear that Ravana was killed by anyone but a human being, or that his demon warriors were defeated by anyone other than monkeys and bears.

Hence, the Lord had to fight this war like wars are normally fought on earth. Had the Lord's hands not been tied and subjected to such injunctions, he could have eliminated the entire demon army in a single day of war.]

छं०. जाना प्रताप ते रहे निर्भय कपिन्ह रिपु माने फुरे । १ ।
चले बिचलि मर्कट भालु सकल कृपाल पाहि भयातुरे ॥ २ ॥ हनुमंत अंगद नील नल अतिबल लरत रन बाँकुरे । ३ । मर्दहिं दसानन कोटि कोटिन्ह कपट भू भट अंकुरे ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

jānā pratāpa tē rahē nirbhaya kapinha ripu mānē phurē. 1.
calē bicali markṭa bhālu sakala kṛpāla pāhi bhayāturē. 2.
hanumanta aṅgada nīla nala atibala larata rana bāṁkurē. 3.
mardahiṁ dasānana kōṭi kōṭinha kapaṭa bhū bhaṭa aṅkurē. 4.

To wit, those who were enlightened about the Truth and the Reality about Lord Ram and his glory, might and majesty (jānā pratāpa tē), remained fearlessly where there were (while others fled).

The Kapis (monkeys), however, were overwhelmed by the delusory effects of Ravana's powerful Maya so much so that they thought that the illusionary Ravanases that were seen all around them were real¹. (Chanda line no. 1)

All the monkeys and bears scampered away in fear, running helter-skelter in terror, crying out to Lord Ram for help and protection: 'Oh merciful Lord, kindly protect us.'² (Chanda line no. 2)

Meanwhile, gallant warriors such as Hanuman, Angad, Neela and Nala, who were singularly valiant and exemplarily brave in the battle-field (rana bāṁkurē), held their ground and continued to fight with undaunted courage and resilience.

[To wit, while the general mass of the troops ran away in fear, the above-named warriors, who were steadfast in the battle-field, held their ground and continued to engage Ravana without any fear.] (Chanda line no. 3)

Though they continued to thrash and vanquish countless numbers of Ravanases relentlessly, yet all the while new forms of illusionary ten-headed monster continued to emerge from no where as if by magic (just like mushrooms sprout or flies spiral up from the wet ground during the rainy season)³. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹To wit, Ravana's magic had its charming effect on the monkey and bear warriors, for they thought that the countless images of Ravana which they saw on the battle-field all around them were real Ravana, and not fake ones, not illusions. Come to think of it, even the gods, who are supposed to be more intelligent and better informed about anything as compared to other creatures in this world, also had fled in terror (refer: Chaupai line nos. 6-7 herein above), so there is no wonder if the poor Kapis could not see through the trick of Ravana, and believed it to be true.

Now, who were those that remained there fearlessly, and not run away? The first were the wise gods and enlightened sages who were watching the war from the sky (refer: Chaupai line no. 8 herein above), and the others were Lord Ram's close companions on the battle-field, such as Vibhishan, Sugriv, Jamvant, Angad, Hanuman etc.

²We have already read in Chaupai line nos. 1-5 herein above that Ravana had assumed as many forms as there were monkey and bear warriors in the battle-field, facing each one of them individually, challenging and threatening each one of them, dashing at everyone menacingly from up close, gesturing at them wildly as if he would wring the life out of every single warrior. The Lord's troops were taken in by complete surprise; they were dazed and shocked beyond measure. Facing one single Ravana with the combined might of the entire monkey and bear army arrayed against him was a different proposition as compared to the horrifying prospect of a one-on-one challenge between individual monkey and bear warrior who was pitted against the formidable might of the mighty Ravana.

³There seemed to be no end to the numbers of Ravana on the battle-field. Remember: Ravana had employed this trick after he found that most of his troops have either been killed or have run away—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 88.

Finding himself thus alone and surrounded by a mounting wave of ferocious monkeys and bears, he created a magical charm that produced countless Ravana. He employed this trick to wear out his enemy, for sooner or later the opponent would be tired and exhausted fighting an illusive monster where he does not actually exist. Then, when Lord Ram's troops would be fatigued out, Ravana planned to hit them hard and crush all of them with ease.]

दो०. सुर बानर देखे बिकल हँस्यो कोसलाधीस । सजि सारंग एक सर हते सकल दससीस ॥ ९६ ॥

dōhā.

sura bānara dēkhē bikala haṁsyō kōsalādhīsa.
saji sārāṅga ēka sara hatē sakala dasasīsa. 96.

The Lord of Kaushal ("kōsalādhīsa"; Lord Ram, the Lord of Ayodhya) laughed in amusement when he saw that the monkeys as well as the gods were agitated and nervous¹.

He prepared his Sarang bow and shot one arrow which cut through the illusion created by the ten-headed Ravana, as a result of which all his fake images vanished from sight instantly. (Doha no. 96)

[Note—¹What made Lord Ram laugh? Well, the Lord felt amused and thought to himself: “These gods are said to be powerful and all-knowing; but now look at them—they are running away in fear like ordinary mortals. Don’t they know that all these countless Ravanaas are false? And look at these monkeys and bears; they also are supposed to be born out of genes of these gods, because the creator Brahma had advised them to come down to earth as monkey and bears to help me (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188). Imagine, what help would they render me when they are now pleading with me to help them!”

In the advanced stages of the epic war, Ravana unleashed his famed potentials of spreading terror and mayhem in his opponents, and uncorked the genie of his dreaded wrath upon them all, the monkey army on the ground as well as the gods who were witnessing the war and cheering the army of Lord Ram from their station in the sky. A fearful atmosphere of dread and horror spread in all the directions; Ravana employed his ability to create horrifying illusions to strike terror in the rank and file of his enemy by making it appear that there was not one but countless Ravanaas who were full of wrath and vengeance running everywhere in the battle-field, all over the place, pouncing on the monkeys and bears on the ground, and chasing the gods in the sky, all simultaneously. This caused a massive stampede.

When Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal, observed this alarming situation—that the monkeys on the ground and the gods in the sky were very agitated and panicky because of Ravana’s excessive aggressiveness and his use of tricks that created fearful illusions of countless Ravanaas attacking them simultaneously from all the sides, spreading utter dread and terror in all directions—the Lord readied his Sarang bow and shot one arrow which at once cut-off the illusion of there being so many Ravanaas attacking the monkeys and gods, providing instant relief to them all.

To wit, Lord Ram invoked his cosmic form of Lord Vishnu and used his Sarang bow to shoot an arrow that removed this illusion (of numerous Ravanaas attacking everyone from all sides instantaneously) with a snap. This dispelled the fear of everyone in an instant, as suddenly only one Ravana, the original demon king, was left on the battle-field, while all the illusionary Ravanaas vanished from sight. This sudden change in the situation for good led both the monkey and bear warriors on the battle-field and the gods in heaven rejoice and celebrate.]

चौ०. प्रभु छन महुँ माया सब काटी । जिमि रबि उएँ जाहिं तम फाटी ॥ १ ॥

रावनु एकु देखि सुर हरषे । फिरे सुमन बहु प्रभु पर बरषे ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu chana mahuṁ māyā saba kāṭī. jimi rabi u'ēṁ jāhiṁ tama phāṭī. 1.
rāvanu ēku dēkhi sura haraṣē. phirē sumana bahu prabhu para baraṣē. 2.

The Lord (Sri Ram) cut through the illusions created by Ravana in an instant, just like the case when the darkness of the night is immediately got rid of as soon as the sun rises. (1)

Seeing that there was one Ravana once again, all the gods felt exhilarated, and returning back (from their flight) they again showered flowers in abundance upon the Lord¹. (2)

[Note—¹In the context of the battle with Ravana, the gods had showered flowers upon Lord Ram in the beginning of the combat when the Lord had stepped out to engage the demon king. At that time however, it was a gesture to appreciate the Lord's charming form as he finally stepped out to eliminate Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 86.

And in the context of actually attaining some miraculous success in battle against a formidable demon, the occasion when the gods had showered flowers upon Lord Ram was the slaying of Kumbhakaran, the brother of Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chauapi line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 71.]

भुज उठाइ रघुपति कपि फेरे । फिरे एक एकन्ह तब टेरे ॥ ३ ॥
प्रभु बलु पाइ भालु कपि धाए । तरल तमकि संजुग महि आए ॥ ४ ॥ bhuja uṭhā'i raghupati kapi phērē. phirē ēka ēkanha taba ṭērē. 3.

prabhu balu pā'i bhālu kapi dhā'ē. tarala tamaki sañjuga mahi ā'ē. 4.

Once the cause of fear was removed, i.e. after all illusionary forms of Ravana were eliminated and normalcy was restored on the ground, Lord Ram raised his arms and harked at all the monkeys and bears who had taken flight earlier, calling out to them to come back. Whoever first heard the Lord's call to return not only came back himself but called out to all others around him to follow suit, and in this way the good message was passed on from one to another down the rank and file of the fleeing warriors, and by-and-by everyone returned to where the Lord stood (waiting for their return). (3)

Encouraged by Lord Ram and feeling blessed by his grace, the monkey and bear warriors were infused with renewed vigour and zeal; they once again dashed to the battle-field enthusiastically, jumping with excitement and anger stoked with a desire for vengeance.

[To wit, these warriors lunged at Ravana wrathfully to exact retribution from him and punish him for causing them so much terror and misery.] (4)

अस्तुति करत देवतन्हि देखें । भयउँ एक मैं इन्ह के लेखें ॥ ५ ॥ सठहु सदा तुम्ह मोर मरायल । अस कहि कोपि गगन पर धायल ॥ ६ ॥ astuti karata dēvatanhi dēkhēm. bhaya'uṁ ēka mair̥ inha kē lēkhēm. 5.

saṭhahu sadā tumha mōra marāyala. asa kahi kōpi gagana para dhāyala. 6.

When Ravana observed that the gods were praying to Lord Ram (which he guessed they were surely doing while showering flowers upon Lord Ram, and there could be nothing else that they sought but to ask that the demon king be eliminated as soon as possible)¹, he became furious with anger and indignation.

He bethought to himself: 'These gods see (find) me all alone, and therefore they think that now it would be easy to vanquish me. [Woe to them, these cowardly and selfish fellows. When they saw my countless forms, they had run like mad out of fear; but now when they find that I am all alone, they sheepishly returned to ask my enemy, Lord Ram, to do away with me as soon as possible. Look at their temerity; how durst they have the courage to shower flowers on my adversary right before my eyes? Wait ye all; now I shall teach the lot of you a good lesson that thou wilt never forget till doom overtakes the whole lot of you fellas.] (5)

[Filled thus with excess of contempt and resentment, Ravana shrieked and lunged wildly at the gods:-] Oh you wicked and dumb-witted fellows (saṭha). You all had always been thrashed by me since time immemorial, all along the long passage of time till now, and how then durst thou show such intolerable insolence by praying to my enemy against me? [Brace thyself now; I wilt show all of thee thine places in the larger scheme of things. Dost thee wot naught that I am the same Ravana who had sent the whole lot of thine race running helter-skelter for thine dear lives when I ran over heaven and ransacked it, not long ago? Hark ye cowards who art scared stiff to your bones by the mere sight of me; stand there whilst here comest the mighty and valorous Ravana to give thee thine due rewards. Dost thou wot what that reward wouldst be? Well, it shalt be one that none of thine race would ever forget till the time doom has the pleasure to overtake thee; and it shalt be the squeezing of thine necks and wringing the life out of thine crooked souls, ye wicked felas!]

Saying this, and with a countenance burning with furious vengeance, Ravana made a fierce dash for the gods who were standing in the sky (to wreak his wrathful might upon them). (6)

[Note—¹What made Ravana lose his cool and become so violent upon the gods, accusing them of praying to Lord Ram against him? Well, just a moment ago he had observed that they were showering flowers upon Lord Ram for eliminating the countless illusionary forms that Ravana had assumed, clearing the battle-field of all fictitious Ravana and restoring normalcy—apropos: Chaupai line no. 2 herein above. Ravana's game-plan to instill terror in the rank and file of Lord Ram's army was thus check-mated, and this acted as a fuse that ignited his fury, which was further aggravated when he saw that his eternal enemies, the gods, were praising his adversary and honouring him by showering flowers.

Ravana's self-respect and honour were hurt when he found that the same gods whom he had vanquished and made to bow before himself recently are now become emboldened enough to openly insult him by showering flowers on his enemy in the battle-field. This was sufficient a provocation for Ravana, and he railed and raged wildly against the gods, determined to punish them for their audacity to praise Lord Ram.]

हाहाकार करत सुर भागे । खलहु जाहु कहँ मोरें आगे ॥ ७ ॥

देखि बिकल सुर अंगद धायो । कूदि चरन गहि भूमि गिरायो ॥ ८ ॥ hāhākāra karata sura bhāgē. khalahu jāhu kahaṁ mōrēm āgē. 7.

dēkhi bikala sura aṅgada dhāyō. kūdi carana gahi bhūmi girāyō. 8.

Finding Ravana coming to them, all the gods let out a terrified cry of pity and began to run from the place as fast as they could.

But Ravana chased them in hot pursuit, yelling and thundering behind them: ‘You rascals (khala); where do you think you will go away from me? How dare you insolent and irrelevant fellows run ahead of me?’ (7)

When Angad observed that the gods were terrified and running helter-skelter in the sky, he ran forward to intervene; he made a great leap and caught hold of Ravana with his legs, pulling him down to the ground. (8)

छं०. गहि भूमि पार्यो लात मार्यो बालिसुत प्रभु पहिं गयो । १ ।
संभारि उठि दसकंठ घोर कठोर रव गर्जत भयो ॥ २ ॥
करि दाप चाप चढ़ाइ दस संधानि सर बहु बरषई । २ । किए सकल भट घायल भयाकुल देखि निज बल हरषई ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

gahi bhūmi pāryō lāta māryō bālisuta prabhu pahim gayō. 1.
sambhāri uṭhi dasakaṇṭha ghōra kaṭhōra rava garjata bhayō. 2.
kari dāpa cāpa caṛhā'i dasa sandhāni sara bahu baraṣa'ī. 3.
ki'ē sakala bhaṭa ghāyala bhayākula dēkhi nija bala haraṣa'ī. 4.

The son of Baali (“bālisuta”; Angad) pulled down Ravana to the ground, and then kicked him viciously; after that, he returned to Lord Ram. (Chanda line no. 1)

Ravana, meanwhile, recovered himself and got up; then he roared and thundered violently (as his ego and self-respect were hurt, coupled by his frustration and indignation that were enhanced by his repeatedly suffering defeats and being pushed back on the back foot, something to which Ravana was not accustomed, for he had always been the victor and conqueror, and not someone who would be compelled to bite the dust and get kicked around like an impotent and imbecile creature). (Chanda line no. 2)

He (Ravana) angrily picked up and stringed all his ten bows (i.e. he raised his ten arms with one bow in each), and mounting fierce arrows on them he started raining a hail of sharp darts on the enemy forces (of Lord Ram). (Chanda line no. 3)

This fierce volley of arrows wounded and made affright countless warriors (monkeys and bears), and this sight gave a lot of satisfaction to Ravana who felt happy at the show of his might and a brilliant display of the strength of his arms and skills at archery. (Chanda line no. 4)

दो०. तब रघुपति रावन के सीस भुजा सर चाप । काटे बहुत बड़े पुनि जिमि तीरथ कर पाप ॥ ९७ ॥

dōhā.

taba raghupati rāvana kē sīsa bhujā sara cāpa.
kāṭē bahuta baṛhē puni jimi tīratha kara pāpa. 97.

Then Lord Raghupati (i.e. Lord Ram) cut off Ravana's twenty arms along with the ten bows and countless arrows that they held¹.

But what a wonder it was that no sooner were the arms chopped off, newer ones immediately sprung up in their places², just like sins and evil deeds done in a holy place, such as a religious site, produce multiple negative effects that rebound and have a multiplying domino effect upon the doer of such deeds³. (Doha no. 97)

[Note—¹Ravana held ten bows in each of his ten arms of one side of his body, and in the other ten arms of the corresponding opposite side he held countless arrows which he mounted and shot from the bows in quick succession.

²We have read earlier too that the more Lord Ram cut off the heads and arms of Ravana, the more they grew on his body—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 92 along with Chaupai line nos. 10-14 that precede it.

³If a person commits some evil and sinful deed at a holy place then its negative result is manifold times more and greater than what it would have been at other places. One wrong deed pushes the doer of this deed in a vortex of sins, whereupon he continues to do more and more sinful deeds without realizing what he is doing, the gravity of his actions, and the mounting negative consequences of his mischief that keep on multiplying and adding weight to the bundle of punishments that would one day fall heavy upon his head with a deadly thud, crushing him underneath.

The idea here is that one should be extremely careful how he lives his life and what he does in a holy place, and be careful not to do any unrighteous thing which would defile the sanctity of the place and demean the purity of his own soul—because any reckless deed is unpardonable in a religious environment as it goes against the holiness and purity of the place.]

चौ०. सिर भुज बाढ़ि देखि रिपु केरी । भालु कपिन्ह रिस भई घनेरी ॥ १ ॥
मरत न मूढ़ कटेहुँ भुज सीसा । धाए कोपि भालु भट कीसा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sira bhuja bāḍhi dēkhi ripu kērī. bhālu kapinha risa bha'ī ghanērī. 1.
marata na mūrha kaṭēhuṁ bhuja sīsā. dhā'ē kōpi bhālu bhaṭa kīsā. 2.

When the monkeys and bears discovered that the more heads and arms of the enemy (Ravana) were being cut, the more they grew back with rapidity, all of them were furious with exasperation. (1)

‘This rascal will not die by merely getting his heads and arms cut¹’, saying this to each other, the angry monkey and bear warriors rushed with a vengeance towards Ravana. (2)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 92—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 93.]

बालितनय मारुति नल नीला । बानरराज दुबिद बलसीला ॥ ३ ॥ बिटप महीधर करहिं प्रहारा । सोइ गिरि तरु गहि कपिन्ह सो मारा ॥ ३ ॥ bālitānaya māruti nala nīlā. bānararāja dubida balasīlā. 3.

biṭapa mahīdhara karahim prahārā. sō'i giri taru gahi kapinha sō mārā. 4.

The son of Baali (Angad), the son of the Wind God (Hanuman), Nala, Neela, the king of the monkeys (Sugriv), Dwivid—all of whom were very brave, courageous, valorous and gallant, --- (3)

--- began hitting Ravana with huge trees and mountain-like rocks and boulders. Ravana, meanwhile, grabbed these same trees and rocks, using them to strike back at his attackers with equal force. (4)

एक नखन्हि रिपु बपुष बिदारी । भागि चलहिं एक लातन्ह मारी ॥ ५ ॥
तब नल नील सिरन्हि चढ़ि गयऊ । नखन्हि लिलार बिदारत भयऊ ॥ ६ ॥ ēka nakhanhi ripu bapuṣa bidārī. bhāgi calahim ēka lātanha mārī. 5.

taba nala nīla siranhi caḍhi gaya'ū. nakhanhi lilāra bidārata bhaya'ū. 6.

Some of the attacking warriors (i.e. the monkeys) cut deep gashes on Ravana's body with their sharp pointed nails, while others kicked him viciously before they ran away. (5)

Then Nala and Neela leapt over Ravana's heads and began tearing at his foreheads (with their nails and teeth). (6)

रुधिर देखि बिषाद उर भारी । तिन्हहि धरन कहूँ भुजा पसारी ॥ ७ ॥ गहे न जाहिं करन्हि पर फिरहीं । जनु जुग मधुप कमल बन चरहीं ॥ ८ ॥ rudhira dēkhi biṣāda ura bhārī. tinhahi dharana kahūṁ bhuajā pasārī. 7.

gahē na jāhim karanhi para phirahim. janu juga madhupa kamala bana carahim. 8.

When Ravana took notice that blood was flowing down his heads and body (as a result of deep wounds made by the monkey warriors), he was aghast and terribly furious. He extended his hands to catch hold of the miscreants. (7)

They (Nala and Neela) moved around on his huge arms as if two bees were moving around fearlessly amongst a cluster of lotus flowers, as a result of which Ravana could not catch any of them¹. (8)

[Note—¹Ravana stretched his hands towards his heads and parts of his body from which blood was flowing out, and which hurt him the most; but he could not find anyone where he was searching for them because the clever monkeys had by this time climbed on the back of his hands. Ravana grappled and groped here and there all over his body in order to catch hold of his tormentors, but to his utter dismay he could not lay his fingers on any of the attackers, because they weren't there where he searched for them, but were perched on his arms themselves, clinging to the hairs or the skin of his forearms where he least expected them to be.]

कोपि कूदि द्वौ धरेसि बहोरी । महि पटकत भजे भुजा मरोरी ॥ ९ ॥

पुनि सकोप दस धनु कर लीन्हे । सरन्हि मारि घायल कपि कीन्हे ॥ १० ॥ kōpi kūdi dvau dharēsi bahōrī. mahi paṭakata bhajā bhujā marōrī. 9.

puni sakōpa dasa dhanu kara līnhē. saranhi māri ghāyala kapi kīnhē. 10.

Meanwhile, the two monkeys (Nala and Neela) were jumping merrily on his arms, which made Ravana aware of their whereabouts; he grabbed them instantly, but even as he prepared to dash them on the ground they twisted and turned his arms in order to wriggle out and free themselves from his grip, and succeeding in it, they ran away. (9)

Highly enraged and utterly embarrassed, Ravana once again lifted all his ten bows in his arms and shot a fresh volley of sharp arrows at the monkeys¹, wounding them. (10)

[Note—¹This is the third time that Ravana has used all his ten bows at the same time to shower arrows at his enemy. The other two occasions were as follows: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 92; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 93.]

हनुमदादि मुरुछित करि बंदर । पाइ प्रदोष हरष दसकंधर ॥ ११ ॥

मुरुछित देखि सकल कपि बीरा । जामवंत धायउ रनधीरा ॥ १२ ॥ hanumadādi muruchita kari bandara. pā'i pradōṣa haraṣa dasakandhara. 11.

muruchita dēkhi sakala kapi bīrā. jāmavanta dhāya'u ranadhīrā. 12.

Having felled unconscious Hanuman and many other valiant monkeys, Ravana felt exhilarated and satisfied at his success, feeling relieved when he observed that it was the end of the day and eventide when the war was to be paused till the dawn of the next day¹. (11)

When Jamvant, the chief of the bear warriors who was very valiant and steady in the battle-field (ranadhīrā), observed that Hanuman and virtually all other brave monkey warriors lay wounded and unconscious on the ground, he decided that it was his time to take an initiative and proactively participate in the ongoing battle; so therefore he dashed forward to intervene². (12)

[Note—¹Those were the days when strict rules and regulations were followed even during wars and engaging the enemy on the battle-field. One such rule was that as soon as the sun sets, all activity in the war must pause. The two sides withdrew to their respective camps, the wounded were taken back for healing as best could be arranged during such times, and all hostilities ceased till the sun appeared the next day. There are clear instances when this age-old tradition was observed in the War of Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 55; (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 72.

Therefore, when Ravana observed that it was eventide and the time for ending the day's actions, he felt mightily relieved for a variety of reasons. For one, he would now have time to recuperate from his own wounds, take stock of the situation, and devise his next strategy, and two, even if the unwounded monkey and bear warriors, who were standing as reserve troops, did wish to launch a fresh wave of attacks on him, they would be restraint from doing it as it was sunset and the battle for the day was to come to an end. Not even Lord Ram or Laxman would strike him during these hours as he was dead sure that the two brothers, renowned for their righteousness and probity, would never ever take any reckless action that would undermine their noble lineage and fame, for breaking established traditions and laws of warfare was sure to give them a very bad name, which they would not welcome.

To wit, the sight of evening coming on was a great respite for Ravana as he was already so battered and frustrated by the continuous hammering to which he was subjected by the mighty warriors of Lord Ram's army that he was looking for a window to manage an honourable escape from the battle-field, even for a short time.

He was happy that when he returns to the fort, at least he could boast that he had left all his enemies lying wounded and unconscious on the ground as a severe retribution on them for making him return unconscious on his chariot at the end of the last day's battle—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 84.

Hence, today's victory was a saving grace for Ravana, and this thought made him feel glad and satisfied.

²Jamvant was old in age; he was a senior member of Lord Ram's advisory team. He had generally remained in the background like Vibhishan, the prince of Lanka and brother of Ravana who had joined Lord Ram, and Sugriv, the monkey king. Lord Ram had himself wished that these three chief commanders remain by his side and desist from active engagement in the war, as it was prudent and crucial to not only keep them out of harm's way but also to ensure that they would monitor the ground situation and give relevant orders to the troops. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 75.}

But when the occasion came, Jamvant proved himself and his mettle by actively participating in battle and trouncing his enemy; one such time was when the mighty Meghanad had trapped Lord Ram in a snare of serpents. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-9 that precede Doha no. 74.}

संग भालु भूधर तरु धारी । मारन लगे पचारि पचारी ॥ १३ ॥

भयउ क्रुद्ध रावन बलवाना । गहि पद महि पटकइ भट नाना ॥ १४ ॥ देखि भालुपति निज दल घाता । कोपि माझ उर मारेसि लाता ॥ १५ ॥ saṅga bhālu bhūdhara taru dhārī. mārana lagē pacāri pacārī. 13.

bhaya'u krud'dha rāvana balavānā. gahi pada mahi paṭaka'i bhaṭa nānā. 14.
dēkhi bhālupati nija dala ghātā. kōpi mājha ura mārēsi lātā. 15.

He (Jamvant) was accompanied by his valiant bear warriors who began pounding Ravana with trees and huge mountain-like rocks, repeatedly challenging him and dashing him viciously. (13)

Ravana was furious with rage; he began grabbing the bear warriors by their legs and smashing them violently to the ground. (14)

When the king of the bears (“bhālupati”; Jamvant) saw that his troops were being wounded and thrashed, he became wrathful, and furiously kicked Ravana in his chest¹. (15)

[Note—¹This was the rare occasion when only the bears were the attacking Ravana. At other times they had accompanied their monkey friends, but now since all of them were wounded, they led the assault themselves.]

छं०. उर लात घात प्रचंड लागत बिकल रथ ते महि परा । १ ।
गहि भालु बीसहुँ कर मनहुँ कमलन्हि बसे निसि मधुकरा ॥ २ ॥
मुरुछित बिलोकि बहोरि पद हति भालुपति प्रभु पहिँ गयो । ३ ।
निसि जानि स्यंदन घालि तेहि तब सूत जतनु करत भयो ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ura lāta ghāta praçaṇḍa lāgata bikala ratha tē mahi parā. 1.
gahi bhālu bīsahuṁ kara manahuṁ kamalanhi basē nisi madhukarā. 2.
muruchita bilōki bahōri pada hati bhālupati prabhu pahim gayō. 3.
nisi jāni syandana ghāli tēhi taba sūta jatanu karata bhayō. 4.

No sooner did the powerful kick land on his chest with a mighty thrust, then Ravana swooned and fell down on the ground. (Chanda line no. 1)

With countless bears caught up in his twenty fists as he fell down, it appeared that numerous bees were caught within the petals of the lotus flower as night fell¹. (Chanda line no. 2)

When the bear chief saw that Ravana was unconscious, he gave the latter another fierce blow with his legs², after which he (Jamvant) went back to Lord Ram. (Chanda line no. 3)

Observing that it was nightfall, Ravana’s charioteer put him back on the chariot, trying to revive him back to his senses. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹In this metaphor, the bears are like the ‘bees’, and the clenched fists of Ravana are like the ‘closed petals of the lotus flowers’. The bees alight on the petals of the lotus flower during evening time, before the flower closes at nightfall, and then get caught inside it till the flower opens its petals again the next day with the advent of the sunlight.

Ravana grabbed as many bears as he could even as he fell down on the ground, clenching them in his closed fists.

²The trapped bears would be released when Ravana loses his senses completely upon being kicked violently by Jamvant once again as narrated in Chanda line no. 3 here, because the jerk would be so fierce that whatever traces of senses that still remained in Ravana after the first kick by Jamvant would finally give away, loosening his grip over the bears, and enabling them to wriggle out and scamper to safety.

Why did Jamvant kick Ravana twice? The answer is this: Jamvant observed that after Ravana fell down with his first kick, he had some senses still left in him as proved by the fact that he could maintain a firm grip on the bears he had already clenched in his fists. So in order to finish the task, to ensure that Ravana did not gain consciousness soon, and devise a device so the bear soldiers clenched in his fists could be freed, Jamvant decided to give Ravana another fierce blow which would completely knock out the demon king, which in turn would help to ease the grip on the bears who would then find it easy to somehow get out of his fingers and escape to safety.]

दो०. मुरुछा बिगत भालु कपि सब आए प्रभु पास । निसिचर सकल रावनहि घेरि रहे अति त्रास ॥ ९८ ॥

dōhā.

muruchā bigata bhālu kapi saba ā'ē prabhu pāsa.
niscara sakala rāvanahi ghēri rahē ati trāsa. 98.

When, by-and-by, the monkeys and bears finally recovered their senses once again, they came back to Lord Ram¹.

On the other side, meanwhile, when Ravana was brought back to Lanka by his charioteer, the demons surrounded him; they were all horrified and mortified with fear when they observed that the situation was extremely alarming (because Ravana was still unconscious)². (Doha no. 98)

[Note—¹This was the end of the 7th day of the war; both the armies withdrew to their respective camps for the day. On this side, Lord Ram, his brother Laxman, and the Lord's chief advisors such as Vibhishan, Jamvant and Sugriv, surveyed their army to take stock of the situation and consult each other to devise the strategy for the next day's battle. The tide of the war was turning in their favour, for though they had suffered some sort of setback because Ravana had succeeded in thrashing and making unconscious some of their best warriors such as Hanuman, Angad, Dwivid, Nala and Neela, but they had not only regained their senses quickly but their enthusiasm was also on a high. Some injuries and casualties in a war of such magnitude were acceptable; and so the situation was not alarming.

On the whole, by this time, the morale and the spirit of the demon army had taken a severe beating; their enthusiasm and the will to fight were already at their lowest since the advent of the demon race, and whatever was still there was ebbing away rapidly. From all indications it appeared that the end of the demons, and their complete capitulation and decimation was not far away.

²On the other side in Lanka, the demons surrounded Ravana; all were in a grave and sombre mood, the reason being that their king was still unconscious when he was brought back by his charioteer, for we shall soon read that it was only around midnight that Ravana had regained his senses—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 100.

The prospects for the demon army, therefore, were gloomy and foreboding. Thus, a thick pall of dejection and depression prevailed over Lanka at the end of the 7th day of the war.]

चौ०. तेही निसि सीता पहिं जाई । त्रिजटा कहि सब कथा सुनाई ॥ १ ॥

सिर भुज बाढ़ि सुनत रिपु केरी । सीता उर भड़ त्रास घनेरी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tēhī nisi sītā pahim jā'ī. trijaṭā kahi saba kathā sunā'ī. 1.

sira bhuja bāḍhi sunata ripu kērī. sītā ura bha'i trāsa ghanērī. 2.

That night (i.e. the intervening night of the 7th and the 8th day of the war, and also the last night before the war ended and Ravana was killed in battle) Trijata went to Sita and informed her about all the developments (till the previous evening)¹. (1)

When Sita heard how Ravana's heads and arms continued to grow endlessly in spite of Lord Ram repeatedly severing them, she was very distressed in her heart². (2)

[Note—¹Trijata was an old demoness appointed by Ravana to look after Sita in the garden where she was confined—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 12.

Ravana, though decried and derided as being a savage monster, was, truly speaking, not what he has been cruelly depicted to be, for he was very careful in selecting this aged demoness named Trijata to guard Sita because he was in the know that she, like his own brother Vibhishan, was a devotee of Lord Ram, the manifestation of the Supreme Lord of the world, and therefore she would also be sympathetic to Sita. By appointing her to take care of Sita, instead of any other demon or demoness to guard her, Ravana effectively ensured that Sita would be in good and favourable company of someone who would be her friend and comforter during the testing time she would have to spend in his captivity. Trijata's presence would also ensure that no member of the demon race would ever have the courage to torment Sita as there was always the fear of Trijata reporting the matter to Ravana, which, if happened, would surely bring death to the individual who causes this nuisance.

We read that in practice it so transpired that in due course of time Trijata became Sita's close friend and confidante; Sita used to confide with her about all her worries, miseries and pains, even treating Trijata as she would treat her own mother (apropos: Chaupai line no. 4 herein below), and on her part Trijata always encouraged Sita to have patience and keep her hope of deliverance alive, because when the proper time comes all her miseries would come to an end, but for that good day to dawn when she would enjoy the light of freedom and happiness once again, it was necessary for her to keep herself and her hopes alive by having patience, as well as keep saying her prayers with faith and devotion, for it is rightly said that prayers that are said sincerely and from the deep recesses of the heart never go unheeded.

Trijata would keep Sita updated about the progress of the war. During this night, as usual, she told Sita about the developments of the previous day—that Lord Ram had cut-off Ravana's heads and arms multiple numbers of times, but yet the demon king survived. This filled Sita with gloom and distress, as she thought in despondency that it seems well nigh impossible that her tormentor Ravana would ever die during the war, and that she would ever be freed from her miseries. This dilemma of Sita is clear in the verses that follow herein below, as is the way how Trijata comforts her and encourages her to keep her hopes alive.

In the present verses we read the conversation between Trijata and Sita that took place during the night which proceeded the last day of the war when Ravana was finally killed.

²Sita was overcome with despondency and gloom at the prospect of Lord Ram not being able to eliminate her tormentor as was apparent by Ravana managing to survive even though his arms and heads were chopped off so many times. It was an unusual thing to happen, for under normal conditions if an individual's head is cut-off then he must surely die. Sita was confounded and perplexed; she could not visualize how, after all, Ravana would actually be killed when such conventional means have failed.]

मुख मलीन उपजी मन चिंता । त्रिजटा सन बोली तब सीता ॥ ३ ॥
होइहि कहा कहसि किन माता । केहि बिधि मरिहि बिस्व दुखदाता ॥ ४ ॥ mukha malīna upajī mana cintā. trijaṭā sana bōlī taba sītā. 3.

hō'ihi kahā kahasi kina mātā. kēhi bidhi marihi bisva dukhadātā. 4.

Sita's face became dark with gloom, and immense worries sprouted inside her heart. Filled with despondency and hopelessness, she said to Trijata, --- (3)

'Oh Mother (mātā)! Say, what shall happen now; how will this fellow, who is a tormentor of the world (bisva dukhadātā), die? (4)

रघुपति सर सिर कटेहुँ न मरई । बिधि बिपरीत चरित सब करई ॥ ५ ॥
मोर अभाग्य जिआवत ओही । जेहिं हौं हरि पद कमल बिछोही ॥ ६ ॥
जेहिं कृत कपट कनक मृग झूठा । अजहुँ सो दैव मोहि पर रूठा ॥ ७ ॥
जेहिं बिधि मोहि दुख दुसह सहाए । लछिमन कहूँ कटु बचन कहाए ॥ ८ ॥ raghupati sara sira kaṭēhuṁ na marā'ī. bidhi biparīta carita saba kara'ī. 5.

mōra abhāgya ji'āvata ōhī. jēhim haurṁ hari pada kamala bichōhī. 6.

jēhiṁ kṛta kapaṭa kanaka mṛga jhūṭhā. ajahuṁ sō daiva mōhi para rūṭhā. 7.
jēhiṁ bidhi mōhi dukha dusaha sahā'ē. lachimana kahuṁ kaṭu bacana kahā'ē.
8.

He does not die even when Lord Raghupati (“raghupati”; the Lord of Raghus; the Lord of Ayodhya; Lord Ram) has chopped-off his heads several times! It's unbelievable and stunning. The Creator seems to be opposed to me for he is doing everything that is odd and goes against me and my interests. (5)

Verily it seems that my misfortune and doomed fate is responsible to keep him (Ravana) alive, so that the misery and grief that has been my lot after being separated from Lord Hari's (i.e. Lord Ram's) lotus-like feet would continue unabated, unhindered and unchecked. (6)

That misfortune of mine had joined hands with an antagonized Creator to devise a device whereby I was misled to be attracted by a fictitious deer with a golden hide that formed the background of my separation from Lord Ram, and the chain of miseries and pains that followed in its wake¹—verily indeed it looks that they are yet not satisfied by my sufferings, and they continue to frown at me maliciously. (7)

There is no doubt that it is the same malicious Creator who had made me use harsh words for Laxman², who now undertakes to make me suffer endlessly in pain and agony, with no end in sight. (8)

[Note—¹This incident is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 27; and Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 28—to Doha no. 29.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 28; and Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 30.]

रघुपति बिरह सबिष सर भारी । तकि तकि मार बार बहु मारी ॥ ९ ॥

ऐसेहुँ दुख जो राख मम प्राना । सोइ बिधि ताहि जिआव न आना ॥ १० ॥ raghupati biraha sabiṣa sara bhārī. taki taki māra bāra bahu mārī. 9.

aisēhuṁ dukha jō rākha mama prānā. sō'i bidhi tāhi ji'āva na ānā. 10.

The God of Love, known as Kaamdeo, has been deriving sadistic pleasure from my sufferings as he repeatedly aims and shoots his arrows at me, arrows that are tipped with the poison of grief and pain attending separation from Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram). (9)

In this miserable situation, surely it is the Creator, who is already opposed to me, that keeps me alive inspite of my horrifying grief, torment and misery, and definitely it is no one else¹. (10)

[Note—¹To wit, I am certain that it is this malicious Creator who is keeping me alive, and would not allow me to die inspite of the intolerable pains and miseries that I am subjected to by being hit by the arrows of this cruel Kaamdeo. It is so obvious that one becomes helpless against the will of the Creator, and is forced to surrender before the will of the Creator even against one's own free will.]

बहु बिधि कर बिलाप जानकी । करि करि सुरति कृपानिधान की ॥ ११ ॥
 कह त्रिजटा सुनु राजकुमारी । उर सर लागत मरइ सुरारी ॥ १२ ॥
 प्रभु ताते उर हतइ न तेही । एहि के हृदयँ बसति बैदेही ॥ १३ ॥ bahu bidhi kara bilāpa jānakī. kari kari surati kṛpānidhāna kī. 11.

 kaha trijaṭā sunu rājakumārī. ura sara lāgata mara'i surārī. 12.
 prabhu tāṭē ura hata'i na tēhī. ēhi kē hṛdayaṁ basati baidēhī. 13.

In this way, Sita ("jānakī"; the daughter of king Janak) lamented and grieved in many ways as she remembered her dear Lord Ram who was an embodiment of grace, mercy, compassion and kindness (kṛpānidhāna). [To wit, the more she remembered Lord Ram, the greater was her misery.] (11)

[Trijata comforted her by telling how Lord Ram would finally kill her tormentor Ravana and rescue her.]

Trijata said to Sita: 'Oh Princess (rājakumārī), listen! The tormentor of gods (i.e. Ravana) would die when an arrow would pierce his heart.

[To wit, there is no way he can be killed by cutting-off his heads or arms, because he has a boon granted to him by Brahma and Shiva that he would not be short of heads and arms, no matter how many of them are severed from his body. As a result he continues to survive, though Lord Ram has repeatedly chopped them off.] (12)

[Now, Trijata gives the reason why Lord Ram has not aimed an arrow directly straight at Ravana's heart to get rid of him.]

The Lord (Sri Ram) has not slayed him (Ravana) by striking directly at his heart because he knows that Vaidehi (Sita) lives inside his heart¹. (13)

[Note—¹This is a very interesting observation. On the surface we find that Sita wishes Ravana's death and holds him responsible for all her miseries as is clear from the foregoing verses, and Ravana too treats her with apparent contempt, even going to the extent of asking his guards to keep troubling her so that she surrenders to his wishes. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 9—to Doha no. 10.}

But at the same time it must not be forgotten that he had kidnapped Sita with the intention of using this means to compel Lord Ram, about whom he was certain that he was not a human being as he appears to be, but the Supreme Being himself in his form, to visit Lanka and give freedom to the soul of all sinful demons by killing them, for otherwise their deliverance seemed impossible. {Apropos: (i) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 23; and (ii)

Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61; and Canto 6, verse nos. 30-32.}

To wit, Ravana was very clear in his mind that Lord Ram was no one else but the Supreme Being himself, and he had abducted Sita with a clear objective of attaining deliverance and emancipation for himself.

If he had any doubt in this regard, his queen Mandodari removed it when she pleaded with him to surrender before the Lord, telling him in clear terms that the Lord is a personified form of the Supreme Being. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15.}

A question arises that if it was true that Ravana was aware that Lord Ram was the Supreme Lord God of the world, and that Sita was the Lord's cosmic Shakti, known as the Mother Goddess, then why did he still fight the bloody war and get himself as well as all other demons killed?

It is because he knew that the members of his demon race had become so sinful that the only way for their souls to find peace was to get rid of the demon body, and it was not an easy task at it appears to be—because even the god of death, known as Kaal, was so scared stiff of Ravana that he would not dare to touch any of the demons out of fear of incurring Ravana's wrath. And Ravana, out of ego and self-pride, as well as to save his face and reputation, would not afford to allow Kaal to carry out his normal duties of making the demons die in accordance to the laws of creation where all those who are born must die too, thereby creating a piquant situation that unless some other means could be found to make the demons die, they would continue to live perpetually, which in turn would mean that their individual souls would never find deliverance and peace ever.

So therefore, when Ravana decided that the chance for deliverance has finally arrived, he would not listen to any other thing and to no body; he wouldn't budge from his decision, though this made him look stubborn and haughty. To do justice to him, this surely goes to his credit that inspite of facing all sorts of ignominy, ridicule and scorn, he still held to his belief and succeeded in attaining liberation and deliverance not only for his own self but for the rest of his clan and the demon race.

And why is it said that "Sita lived in Ravana's heart"? It implies that he had enshrined her inside the sanctum of his heart-like temple as its revered deity, because he was certain that it was she who would prove to be the deliverer of his race, for it was for her that Lord Ram would be compelled to come to his very doorstep in Lanka to grant him and all his companions deliverance right where they lived, and they would be spared the trouble of going elsewhere in search of this spiritual bonanza. It ought to be noted that Ravana had kept Sita in the garden known as Ashok Van with due respect that one would give to one's mother, and he took proper care that she is treated and protected like a mother would be—this fact is expressly stated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65.

With this background and understanding, it is impossible to even think or imagine that Ravana had any real malefic or pervert intentions regarding Sita, though of course he pretended outwardly to behave that way, but that was only to conceal his true objective of bringing Sita to Lanka to force Lord Ram to come there and grant the whole of the demon race with the benefit of a liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation right at its doorstep, for otherwise Lord Ram would have found it very difficult to find an excuse to kill the sinful demons en-masse, and with this purported 'killing' the Lord would be actually freeing their souls from the cage symbolized by the sinful body of a demon, a body that was so hardened and thickened with layers and layers of accumulated sins encasing it that the soul would have remained trapped inside forever, being unable to escape on its own.

Trijata perhaps had one other objective of telling Sita that “Lord Ram is not shooting an arrow at the heart of Ravana because the Lord knows that Sita resides there”. Well, what could it be? Trijata wished to subtly hint to Sita that she must know the secret about Ravana, that after all he is not as cruel towards her as she thinks him to be; and therefore she ought not to curse him so vehemently as she is inclined to do at present.

What could have been Sita’s reaction to this disclosure by Trijata? For one, she must have frowned, as she could not come to terms with the notion that someone who had caused her so much grief and pain would actually admire her. Secondly, she loved only Lord Ram, and this love sprouted from the first day she saw him in the garden at Janakpur, her father’s place[§]; on the other hand she had despised Ravana from the moment she first saw him and came to know who he was at the time when he had gone to abduct her[#]. With what Trijata said it may be true that Ravana loved Sita, but it does not necessarily mean that his views were endorsed and accepted by her, or that she ever condoned his overtures even a wee whit. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, [§]Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 232—to Doha no. 236; [#]Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 12-16 that precede Doha no. 28; and Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 9—to Doha no. 10.}

Of course one can safely conclude that when Sita heard what Trijata had to tell her about what Ravana thought of her, she must have blushed and felt highly embarrassed. But that was all; she became very angry, and her annoyance was stoked further when she recollected the sort of ill treatment she was being subjected to by Ravana ever since he had brought her to Lanka, and the way he is trying his best to defeat her beloved husband Lord Ram in the war so that he could keep her forever against her wishes. This thought filled her heart with repugnance and hate for Ravana.]

छं०. एहि के हृदयँ बस जानकी जानकी उर मम बास है । १ ।
मम उदर भुअन अनेक लागत बान सब कर नास है ॥ २ ॥
सुनि बचन हरष बिषाद मन अति देखि पुनि त्रिजटाँ कहा । ३ । अब मरिहि रिपु एहि बिधि सुनहि सुंदरि तजहि संसय महा ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ēhi kē hr̥dayaṁ basa jānakī jānakī ura mama bāsa hai. 1.
mama udara bhu'ana anēka lāgata bāna saba kara nāsa hai. 2.
suni bacana haraṣa biṣāda mana ati dēkhi puni trijaṭāṁ kahā. 3.
aba marihi ripu ēhi bidhi sunahi sundari tajahi sansaya mahā. 4.

Trijata told Sita: ‘The Lord (Sri Ram) realizes that Janki (Sita) resides in his (Ravana’s) heart, and also that the Lord himself lives in the heart of Janki.

[To wit, Lord Ram knows that Sita lives inside the heart of Ravana as he is always thinking of her, while the Lord himself lives in her heart as she is always thinking of him.] (Chanda line no. 1)

Lord Ram also knows that the whole universe, consisting of countless worlds, resides inside his own self (because the entire creation is said to exist within the cosmic body of Brahm, the Supreme Being; there is nothing beyond Brahm).

So therefore, if the Lord shoots an arrow at Ravana's heart, then the consequences would be disastrous for the whole creation—for then everything would be destroyed in a fraction of a moment¹. (Chanda line no. 2)

Hearing these solemn words of Trijata, Sita was overcome with sadness and despondency (as she lost all hopes that any means could be devised for eliminating her tormentor).

When Trijata observed Sita's state of mind of abject despair and dejection, she comforted her by proposing a method which Lord Ram might employ to get rid of Ravana. So, Trijata said once again to assuage Sita's anxieties and discomfort: --- (Chanda line no. 3)

'Oh charming lady (sundari)! Don't be so sad, hopeless and despondent; stop doubting and becoming so much perplexed about how Ravana would be eliminated. Listen to me; I shall tell you now how Lord Ram would ultimately kill his enemy (aba marihi ripu ēhi bidhi sunahi). (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Put simply it means that if Lord Ram shoots an arrow at Ravana's heart in order to kill him, then it would mean a catastrophic development for the whole creation; everything would be ruined. The arrow will make no distinction between the good and the bad; it would not spare whom to spare and whom to kill. It would first kill Sita, and then pierce deeper to kill Lord Ram, and the result would be the slaying of the entire creation that the Supreme Being cradles in his bosom, a creation that he had himself so lovingly created, nourished and protected. The whole purpose of the Supreme Being taking the trouble of coming down in the form of Lord Ram, which was to eliminate the cruelty perpetrated by the demons so as to afford freedom from fear and restoration of happiness for the rest of his creation, would be defeated—because the Lord's arrow would kill one and all without distinction; the demons would be eliminated alright, but along with them the rest of the creation would also be eliminated, which the Lord surely does not intend to do.]

दो०. काटत सिर होइहि बिकल छुटि जाइहि तव ध्यान ।

तब रावनहि हृदय महुँ मरिहहि रामु सुजान ॥ ९९ ॥

dōhā.

kāṭata sira hō'ihi bikala chuṭi jā'ihi tava dhyāna.

taba rāvanahi hr̥daya mahum̐ marihahim̐ rāmu sujāna. 99.

When Ravana would become extremely bewildered, confused and disoriented at the time when Lord Ram would swiftly go on severing his heads with great rapidity, one after another in quick succession, he (Ravana) would feel so distracted and disturbed that for certain moments he would forget about you (i.e. he would cease to remember you as he would be more concerned about his own safety)—it would be then, during those crucial moments of his mental confusion and disorientation, that Lord Ram would hit him in his heart with a powerful arrow (to kill him)¹. (Doha no. 99)

[Note—¹This was Trijata's prediction concerning Ravana's death in order to comfort Sita and somehow sooth her. Did it actually happen as she had foretold? No, not at least according to Ram Charit Manas—for we shall read shortly that Lord Ram had shot 31 arrows at Ravana during the last moments of the war, out of which 20 arrows cut-off Ravana's twenty arms, 10 arrows severed his ten heads, and the last arrow, the 31st, struck at Ravana's navel and dried up the nectar of life that was stored there. This killed the demon king. Not a single arrow was aimed by Lord Ram at Ravana's heart. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 102 along with Chaupai line no. 4 that follows it.}

Since Lord Ram had not shot even a single arrow at Ravana's heart, Trijata's words—that Lord Ram desists from shooting at Ravana's heart because Sita lives there, and she would be gravely injured if the arrow was aimed at Ravana's heart—is upheld to be true. But the real reason as to why Lord Ram did not aim his arrow at Ravana's heart is quite different. So, what is it?

The answer is that Ravana's pure conscious 'self', known as the 'soul' or the 'Atma' that is eternally pure, holy and divine, lived in his heart, and the arrow would have killed that soul. Lord Ram's intention was to free the soul, to grant it liberation from the trap of a sinful demon body, and not to harm or kill it. The merciful and kind Lord wished to give deliverance to Ravana's soul instead of condemning it to suffer in hell. Hence, the Lord would not aim his arrow at Ravana's heart where his soul lived, and he contrived an alternative method to get rid of Ravana's sinful demonic body that trapped his holy soul inside, so that two problems could be solved simultaneously: one was to get rid of the sinful and evil body of a demon, and the other was to liberate the holy soul unharmed from the trap of this evil body. Therefore, the Lord devised a method of accomplishing both the objectives at one go, and it was to first sever Ravana's heads and arms, and then hit him in his navel in order to kill the demonic body, but spare his heart in order to protect his soul from any injury.

But was Trijata completely wrong in saying that Lord Ram would finally shoot an arrow at Ravana's heart to bring about his end? The strange thing is this: Trijata was not entirely wrong, though of course she appears to be so if we focus our reading only to Ram Charit Manas; for in another version of this marvellously wondrous Story of the Ramayan, that of the illustrious sage Veda Vyas' epic 'Adhyatma Ramayan', we learn that Lord Ram had indeed shot an arrow at Ravana's heart on the advice of Matli, the charioteer of Lord Ram's chariot that was sent by the gods to help in the battle against Ravana—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 61-72.

So, how do we reconcile these two seemingly contradictory versions? Clearly it means that Lord Ram had shot arrows simultaneously at Ravana's 'navel' as well as his 'heart' to ensure his death. They were done almost at the same time, so fast, so swiftly and in quick succession, that the two chroniclers of this legendary history—one being Veda Vyas who documented the progress of the war in his classic Adhyatma Ramayan, and the other being Goswami Tulsidas who narrated the same story in his classic Ram Charit Manas—pointed out the way Ravana was killed according to where his attention was focussed at that instant when Ravana was actually killed. Obviously, Veda Vyas's eyes and mind were focused on Ravana's heart, so he attributed his death to Lord Ram's arrow rupturing his heart, while that of Tulsidas were focused on his navel, which made him document that Ravana was slayed because Lord Ram's arrow hit him in the navel.

We can therefore safely say that both these two classics, viz. Ram Charit Manas of Goswami Tulsidas, and Adhyatma Ramayan of sage Veda Vyas, must be read together to get a comprehensive picture of what may have actually transpired at that period of time long-long ago, for we discover that there seems to be some sort of subtle form of synergy between the two narratives, inasmuch as they compliment each other to fill in the dotted lines.

We conclude that though these two versions may give an impression of contradiction—such as in the present instance, because whereas in Adhyatma Ramayan it is said that Ravana was killed when Lord Ram hit him in his heart (Lanka Kand, Canto 11, verse no. 71), while Ram Charit Manas says he was killed by an arrow shot at his navel (Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 103)—but on close examination it seems that both the things may have happened simultaneously: to wit, Lord Ram must have shot arrows aimed at Ravana's heart as well as his navel to ensure that all precautions are taken to make sure that Ravana is certainly slayed, for the Lord did not want to take any further risk of playing games with him as time was running out, and already all other methods had miserably failed to the demon's life.]

चौ०. अस कहि बहुत भाँति समुझाई । पुनि त्रिजटा निज भवन सिधाई ॥ १ ॥
 राम सुभाउ सुमिरि बैदेही । उपजी बिरह बिथा अति तेही ॥ २ ॥
 caupāī.

asa kahi bahuta bhānti samujhāī. puni trijaṭā nija bhavana sidhāī. 1.
 rāma subhā'u sumiri baidēhī. upajī biraha bithā ati tēhī. 2.

Trijata used many such words (as narrated in the previous set of verses) to try her best to comfort Sita, encouraging her to have patience and faith; thereafter, she went home. (1)

Meanwhile, Sita's grief and the agony of separation from her beloved Lord Ram increased manifold times as she remembered the kind and gracious nature of the Lord¹. (2)

[Note—¹Trijata had just a while ago told Sita that she has a special place in the heart of Ravana, which put simply means that he adores her—apropos: Chaupai line no. 13 that precedes Doha no. 99. Sita knew that Lord Ram too adored her; so what then was the difference? Sita contemplated this aspect deep inside her own mind and heart, and came to the conclusion that Lord Ram was her true well-wisher and lover. There was a stark difference between Lord Ram and Ravana, though both of them enshrined Sita in their hearts. While Ravana had treated her roughly, given her nothing but pain and misery, and had forcibly taken her away from her husband, Lord Ram on the other hand had always taken care that Sita never found any cause for grief and feeling sad for any reason even during the troublesome time they had spent in the forest—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 141; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 142.

The mutual sense of unbound love and profound affection between Lord Ram and Sita was deep-rooted and eternal, for it went back to long days ago when they first met in Janakpur, prior to their marriage; she had fervently prayed to gods and goddesses so that she could marry the Lord^a, and at the time when Lord Ram was preparing to go to the forest she had voluntarily decided to accompany him, staking all her reputation, loyalty and devotion for it, as well as determinedly forgoing all concerns for her comfort and safety^b. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, ^aBaal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 228—to Sortha / Doha no. 236; (ii) Doha no. 248 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it; (iii) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 257—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 259; ^bAyodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 69.}

This was not at all the case with Ravana; Sita loathed him and cursed him as is evident on many occasions. First was at the time of her abduction by Ravana—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 13 that precedes Doha no. 28—to Doha no. 29 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-6, 24 that precede it.

The other such occasion was when Ravana tries to cajole Sita to surrender before his pervert wishes—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-9 that precede Doha no. 9.

And Ravana had openly ordered the female demons who were appointed to guard her to torment her as much as they pleased—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 10 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-9 that precede it.

To wit, it is obvious without doubt that Sita's pained heart longed ever so much for her beloved Lord Ram, and the more she remembered him the more her agony arising out of her separation from the Lord increased, and it further stoked the fire of her grief and misery.

During the long days of her captivity in Lanka, she had become very forlorn and reconciled to her doomed fate; her senses were dulled and rarely would she respond to anyone talking to her. But when Trijata came with the news of the battle, and how Lord Ram was so near yet so far from liberating her from captivity as all his efforts to kill Ravana, her tormentor, were failing, Sita sank in a pool of despair and despondency. She was once again reminded of Lord Ram, and this pleasant memory stoked her emotions afresh and made her extremely sentimental.

Even Ravana's own spy named Suk had acknowledged about Lord Ram's exceptionally gracious and kind nature when he had tried to persuade Ravana to end hostility with the Lord—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 57.

So, Sita was not alone to be overcome with emotions while remembering the most gracious and kind nature of Lord Ram, for besides Suk we read that even Vibhishan and Hanuman were also overwhelmed when they recalled the Lord's nature during their first meeting in Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 7—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 8.]

निसिहि ससिहि निंदति बहु भाँती । जुग सम भई सिराति न राती ॥ ३ ॥

करति बिलाप मनहिं मन भारी । राम बिरहँ जानकी दुखारी ॥ ४ ॥

nisihi sasihi nindati bahu bhāntī. juga sama bha'ī sirāti na rātī. 3.

karati bilāpa manahim mana bhārī. rāma biraham jānakī dukhārī. 4.

She reproached the night¹ and the moon² in various ways, lamenting that the night seems to get longer and longer without end¹. (3)

Janki (Sita) wailed and lamented internally, quietly weeping and grieving silently in many ways, for she was overwhelmed with an intolerable agony of separation from Lord Ram. (4)

[Note—¹Trijata had told Sita that the war for her liberation was in its final leg, and that if all goes well then Lord Ram would succeed in slaying Ravana by shooting him in his heart—apropos: Doha no. 99 herein above. This made Sita so anxious and worried that an hour of the night seemed as an age for her.

²The ‘moon’ is said to aggravate the agony of separation between two lovers; when they look up at the moon the lovers sigh and wail intolerably. Even Lord Ram had been emotional under the light of the full moon when he had remembered Sita after their first meeting in the garden of Janakpur—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 237—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 238.

Meanwhile, the presence of the ‘moon’ indicates that it was a moonlight night, and not a dark night.]

जब अति भयउ बिरह उर दाहू । फरकेउ बाम नयन अरु बाहू ॥ ५ ॥ सगुन बिचारि धरी मन धीरा । अब मिलिहहिं कृपाल रघुबीरा ॥ ६ ॥

jaba ati bhaya'u biraha ura dāhū. pharakē'u bāma nayana aru bāhū. 5.
saguna bicāri dharī mana dhīrā. aba milihahim̐ kṛpāla raghubīrā. 6.

When the pain and agony of separation from her beloved husband Lord Ram became too much for her to bear, burning her heart and tormenting her much, at that moment the left side of her body began to flutter voluntarily (which is considered a good sign, an auspicious omen for a woman¹). (5)

Taking note of this auspicious sign, Sita felt comforted and pleased inside her heart, concluding that surely now all her miseries would come to an end soon, and she will be able to meet the merciful Lord Raghubir (“kṛpāla raghubīrā”; Lord Ram). (60)

[Note—¹When the left side of a woman’s body flutters, it is regarded as a good sign, but in a male it is regarded as a bad omen. The reverse is also true: if the right side of a woman’s body flutters it is bad for her, but for a man it is a good omen.]

इहाँ अर्धनिसि रावनु जागा । निज सारथि सन खीझन लागा ॥ ७ ॥
सठ रनभूमि छड़ाइसि मोही । धिग धिग अधम मंदमति तोही ॥ ८ ॥
तेहिं पद गहि बहु बिधि समुझावा । भोरु भएँ रथ चढ़ि पुनि धावा ॥ ९ ॥ ihāṁ ardhanisi rāvanu jāgā. nija sārathi sana khījhana lāgā. 7.

saṭha ranabhūmi charā'isi mōhī. dhiga dhiga adhama mandamati tōhī. 8.
tēhim̐ pada gahi bahu bidhi samujhāvā. bhōru bha'eṁ ratha caḍhi puni dhāvā.

9.

Here meanwhile, Ravana regained his senses around midnight¹. As soon as he realized what had happened, he began to reproach his charioteer. (7)

Ravana scolded him: ‘Oh you fool; why did you make me leave the battle-field. Woe betide you, oh you contemptible and dumb-witted fellow (for you have given me a bad name for having escaped from the battle-field like a coward, for having succumbed to my enemy like a weakling, for having fallen down in battle while my enemy remained standing on his legs).²’ (8)

The charioteer fell down at Ravana’s feet to beg forgiveness, and explained in different ways the reason why he had done what he did³.

As soon as the day dawned⁴, Ravana made all haste to mount the chariot and dash to the battle ground. (9)

[Note—¹We will recall that Ravana had become unconscious and fell down when Jamvant, the bear chief, had kicked him hard in his chest. Ravana’s charioteer had thought it fit and prudent to bring him back to Lanka, especially as it was getting dark and the battle for the day was to come to an end, and there was neither any sense nor was it safe to remain in the battle-field any longer. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 15 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 98 herein above.}]

²It is regarded as a great dishonour and ignominy for a valiant warrior to fall down in the battle-field during a duel, and being carried away to safety by someone else. He would rather die than do this; he would prefer to walk on his two legs back to his camp inspite of being wounded, than being carried away like a sac by someone else.

Never in his long career had Ravana experienced this objectionable situation. So therefore, as soon as he regained his senses and came to know what had happened, he got angry with his charioteer.

³The charioteer explained to Ravana the circumstances under which he was left with no other choice but to bring him back inside the fort of Lanka. He was gravely wounded and lying as if dead; night was fast approaching and the day’s battle was to end nevertheless; and in the dark of the night it was very dangerous to remain lying unconscious in the middle of the battle-field, surrounded by enemies, for the majority of the demons were killed, and the few remaining had fled in terror as soon as they saw Ravana falling down. Besides this, the charioteer explained, he was merely doing his duty to bring his lord back to safety in the prevailing circumstances.

Ravana felt satisfied with this explanation, and he excused the charioteer.

⁴This was the 8th day of the war; Ravana would be killed on this day.]

सुनि आगवनु दसानन केरा । कपिदल खरभर भयउ घनेरा ॥ १० ॥

जहँ तहँ भूधर बिटप उपारी । धाए कटकटाइ भट भारी ॥ ११ ॥

sunī āgavanu dasānana kērā. kapidala kharabhara bhaya'u ghanērā. 10.
jahaṁ tahaṁ bhūdhara biṭapa upārī. dhā'ē kaṭakaṭā'i bhaṭa bhārī. 11.

Hearing that Ravana had arrived on the battle-field, there was a great turmoil amongst the rank and file of the army of monkeys and bears¹. (10)

They immediately grabbed whatever huge rocks and trees they could lay their hands on, and gnashing and grinding their teeth, they dashed forward to meet (intercept) him. (11)

[Note—¹Why was there turmoil in the monkey army? The reason is this:

Last evening they had seen Ravana sinking down unconscious, as if dead, and then being carried away like a corpse by his charioteer. So they had deduced that either he was dead, and that would be the end of the war, or in case he survived then he was surely so gravely wounded that he will take some time to recover.

But they had least expected that Ravana would emerge so quickly on the battle-field so early in the morning that it seemed he had beaten the rays of the sun in the hurry to reach the ground; he was in his prime fighting mode, and looked most ferocious by his appearance, raging and ranting wildly with a determination for revenge. The monkeys and bears were therefore caught unawares; they scrambled for their weapons and dashed out to meet the challenge in order to intercept Ravana before he comes too close to their camp, as then it would be disastrous for all of them.]

छं०. धाए जो मर्कट बिकट भालु कराल कर भूधर धरा । १ ।
अति कोप करहिं प्रहार मारत भजि चले रजनीचरा ॥ २ ॥
बिचलाइ दल बलवंत कीसन्ह घेरि पुनि रावनु लियो । ३ । चहुं दिसि चपेटन्ह मारि नखन्ह बिदारि तनु व्याकुल कियो ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

dhā'ē jō markāṭa bikaṭa bhālu karāla kara bhūdhara dharā. 1.
ati kōpa karahiṁ prahāra mārata bhaji calē rajanīcarā. 2.
bicalā'i dala balavanta kīsanha ghēri puni rāvanu liyō. 3.
cahuṁ disi capēṭanhi māri nakhanhi bidāri tanu byākula kiyō. 4.

The monkeys and bears who had dashed forward to intercept Ravana and his demon army, were most formidable by their demeanours and fierce in their attack; they had grabbed huge mountain-like rocks and boulders as they rushed to intercept the enemy. (Chanda line no. 1)

They attacked the enemy with vehement anger, hitting it hard and with such great violence that the demon warriors could not face the ferocity of the assault, and fled from the field in terror. (Chanda line no. 2)

After successfully scattering the demon warriors who accompanied Ravana, leaving him all to himself and unprotected, the strong and valorous monkeys and bears then surrounded him from all the sides. (Chanda line no. 3)

The monkey and bear army attacked Ravana from all sides; biting him, kicking him, cuffing, slapping, thrashing and pounding him so violently all at once, and in all possible ways they could devise, that the poor demon king felt cornered and helpless; he became extremely agitated, feeling perplexed and exasperated, as he could not understand how to respond to this sudden burst of violence that completely dazed him. (Chanda line no. 4)

दो०. देखि महा मर्कट प्रबल रावन कीन्ह बिचार ।

अंतरहित होइ निमिष महुँ कृत माया बिस्तार ॥ १०० ॥

dōhā.

dēkhi mahā markṭa prabala rāvana kīnha bicāra.

antarahita hō'i nimiṣa mahum̐ kṛta māyā bistāra. 100.

When Ravana found himself surrounded by a ferocious army of monkey and bears who were determined to tear him apart, he decided that the best course of action for him now was to use the magical tricks, known as 'Maya', he was expert in¹.

With that purpose in mind, he first quickly made himself invisible, and then he created an illusion of a vastly horrifying scene all over the battle-field which would scare off his attackers and completely confound them. (Doha no. 100)

[Note—¹This is the third time that Ravana has employed his Maya to deflect the ferocious attack of monkeys and bears. The other two occasions when Ravana had employed his magical tricks are narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 88; Chaupai line nos. 6-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 89; and again in (ii) Doha no. 95—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 97.

During the first occasion, Ravana's Maya created an illusion that made the monkey and bear warriors see the demon army as consisting of countless numbers of Lord Ram and his brother Laxman, instead of the demon warriors. To wit, all the demons appeared to be images of the two brothers, a sight which would obviously confuse the monkeys and bears.

On the second occasion however, there appeared to be countless Ravana in the battle-field. That also was intended to utterly bewilder the monkeys and bears.

In both the cases we find that Ravana had employed his skills at creating an illusion when he found himself alone and surrounded by ferocious monkeys and bears who were attacking him from all the sides.

This is the third such occasion where Ravana once again uses his skills at Maya when he found himself besieged. On this occasion, he created a terrible sight of ghosts, phantoms, ogres, fiends, spirits and hobgoblins rampaging through the battle ground, howling, roaring, screaming and dancing and stomping in a macabre and blood-curdling scenario of death and destruction, which was further magnified by appearance of fire everywhere. This hair-raising and horrific scene would naturally stun and terrify the army of Lord Ram, stopping it from attacking Ravana any further.]

छं०. जब कीन्ह तेहिं पाषंड । भए प्रगट जंतु प्रचंड ॥ १ ॥

बेताल भूत पिशाच । कर धरें धनु नाराच ॥ २ ॥
 जोगिनि गहें करबाल । एक हाथ मनुज कपाल ॥ ३ ॥
 करि सद्य सोनित पान । नाचहिं करहिं बहु गान ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

jaba kīṇha tēhiṁ pāṣaṇḍa. bha'e pragatā jantu pracanḍa. 1.
 bētāla bhūta pisāca. kara dharēm dhanu nārāca. 2.
 jōgini gahēm karabāla. ēka hātha manuja kapāla. 3.
 kari sadya sōnita pāna. nācahiṁ karahiṁ bahu gāna. 4.

When he (Ravana) spread his spell of delusions and deceit in the battle-field, a fantastic scene of illusions was created. Horrifying creatures with terrible countenances and demeanours were produced instantly. (Chanda line no. 1)

Phantoms, ghosts and hobgoblins of all sorts were created. They held bows and arrows in their hands, and danced the dance-of-death and destruction on the battle ground. (Chanda line no. 2)

Female ogres, holding a sword in one hand¹ and a hollowed out human skull in the other hand, danced and sang in merriment as they drank fresh warm blood collected in the upturned skulls². (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹The word “karabāla” in line no. 3 has two meanings: It may mean a ‘sword held in the hand’, and it may also mean ‘a child held in the hand’. The latter meaning would imply that these female ogres held their young-ones in one hand, while they held the hollow skull to collect blood in the other hand. Then, when blood was collected in this skull-like pot, they would let her child drink some of it, and drink the rest of it herself.

²It seemed that they had been cutting-off the heads of warriors with their swords from which blood dripped, and used the hollowed out skulls to collect the flowing blood which they drank. This made them so happy that they danced and sang in the battle-field, enjoying the feast and rejoicing at the prospect of an abundant supply of victuals in the form of fresh flesh to satisfy their hunger, and warm blood as drink to quench their thirst.

A similar abominable, abhorable, repulsive and macabre scene of rivers of blood and the horrible dance of death has been described earlier too in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chanda line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 87—to Chanda line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 88.]

धरु मारु बोलहिं घोर । रहि पूरि धुनि चहुँ ओर ॥ ५ ॥
 मुख बाड़ धावहिं खान । तब लगे कीस परान ॥ ६ ॥
 जहँ जाहिं मर्कट भागि । तहँ बरत देखहिं आगि ॥ ७ ॥ भए बिकल बानर भालु । पुनि लाग बरषै बालु ॥ ८ ॥

dharu māru bōlahiṃ ghōra. rahi pūri dhuni cahuṃ ōra. 5.
 mukha bā'i dhāvahiṃ khāna. taba lagē kīsa parāna. 6.
 jahaṃ jāhiṃ markāṭa bhāgi. tahaṃ barata dēkhahiṃ āgi. 7.
 bha'e bikala bānara bhālu. puni lāga baraṣai bālu. 8.

The abominable and fearful creatures that appeared all over the battle-field were shouting in a terrifying way, 'catch hold and kill'. Their howls and chilling cries resounded in all the directions¹. (Chanda line no. 5)

They opened their mouths wide and ran behind the monkeys and bears in order to grab and eat them alive, whereat the terrified fellows ran helter-skelter to save themselves². (Chanda line no. 6)

Wherever the monkeys and bears ran to escape and hide from the assault of the devilish fiends who rushed after them, they found themselves facing raging fire which blocked their way. (Chanda line no. 7)

The horrified monkeys and bears were agitated and utterly confounded. Their misery was compounded when sand suddenly began raining over them, thereby effectively blinding their sight³. (Chanda line no. 8)

[Note—¹The ugly ogres, phantoms, ghosts and goblins ran behind the terrified monkeys and bears in order to catch them and eat them up, either alive or dead. These fiends and devilish creatures had wide open mouths, were swinging swords from which blood dripped, had bows strung tight and arrows mounted on them, aiming at the fleeing warriors, and they were gesticulating wildly and shouting terribly as they lunged towards the mortified monkeys and bears.

Remember: It was an illusion created by Ravana, but it was so perfect in its form that everything seemed very real and true.

It is a replication of the scene described earlier in the war—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 53.

²When Kumbhakaran had entered the battle-field, a similar scene unfolded; he too had a most fearful body; he too had rushed forward madly with open mouth and hands extended to grab whoever he could lay his hands on, and then put the terrified victims in his cavernous mouth in order to devour them in hordes. The horrified monkeys and bears had scattered here and there as fast as they could run, trying to escape the colossus demon. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 67; and Doha no. 69.}

³Earlier too, when Meghanad had spread his Maya on the battle-field, he too had created this scenario of blood, flesh, bone-marrow, intestines and sand raining down from the sky to terrify, blind and totally confound the monkey and bear warriors on the ground. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 67.}

जहँ तहँ थकित करि कीस । गर्जेउ बहुरि दससीस ॥ ९ ॥
 लछिमन कपीस समेत । भए सकल बीर अचेत ॥ १० ॥

हा राम हा रघुनाथ । कहि सुभट मीजहिं हाथ ॥ ११ ॥
एहि बिधि सकल बल तोरि । तेहिं कीन्ह कपट बहोरि ॥ १२ ॥ jahaṁ tahaṁ thakita kari kīsa. garjē'u bahuri dasasīsa. 9.

lachimana kapīsa samēta. bha'e sakala bīra acēta. 10.
hā rāma hā raghunātha. kahi subhaṭa mījahim hātha. 11.
ēhi bidhi sakala bala tōri. tēhim kīnha kapaṭa bahōri. 12.

Stupefying and wearing out the monkeys and bears so much that they stood utterly transfixed and dazed at the very place they found themselves in, being unable to move and unable to decide what to and what not to do, the ten-headed monster Ravana thundered derisively. (Chanda line no. 9)

Even Sugriv (the chief of the monkeys) and Laxman (the younger brother of Lord Ram) too became confounded and lost their bearings, alongside the rest of the monkey warriors. (Chanda line no. 10)

Crying out 'Oh Lord Ram; Oh Lord Raghubir' (to seek the Lord's help), the valiant warriors wrung their hands in abject frustration and despair. (Chanda line no. 11)

In this way, having first crushed the valour and morale of the mighty warriors and nullifying their superior strength, he (Ravana) unleashed a fresh round of delusory tricks that would further aggravate the confoundedness of his enemy. [And what did he do? We shall read it in the next set of verses below.] (Chanda line no. 12)

प्रगटेसि बिपुल हनुमान । धाए गहे पाषान ॥ १३ ॥
तिन्ह रामु घेरे जाइ । चहुँ दिसि बरूथ बनाइ ॥ १४ ॥
मारहु धरहु जनि जाइ । कटकटहिं पूँछ उठाइ ॥ १५ ॥ दहँ दिसि लँगूर बिराज । तेहिं मध्य कोसलराज ॥ १६ ॥ pragaṭēsi bipula hanumāna. dhā'ē gahē pāṣāna. 13.

tinha rāmu ghērē jā'i. cahuṁ disi barūtha banā'i. 14.
mārahu dharahu jani jā'i. kaṭakaṭahim pūṁcha uṭhā'i. 15.
dahaṁ disi laṁgūra birāja. tēhim madhya kōsalarāja. 16.

He (Ravana) created an illusion of a large number of Hanumans who held huge mountain-like rocks and boulders in their hands. (Chanda line no. 13)

These false forms of Hanuman formed large groups and dashed towards Lord Ram to surround him from all sides. (Chanda line no. 14)

They raised their tails and swirled them in the air, gnashing their teeth and shrieking: 'Kill him (Lord Ram); go and catch hold of him so that he does not escape'. (Chanda line no. 15)

The effect of this illusion created by Ravana was that the Lord of Kaushal (i.e. Lord Ram) was surrounded on all the sides by these fictitious images of Hanuman waving their long tails, and seemingly baying for the Lord's blood¹. (Chanda line no. 16)

[Note—¹In a similar situation created by Meghanad earlier, Lord Ram had smiled and shot an arrow that ruptured this veil of delusions, clearing the ground of all fake forms—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 52.

In another scene reminiscent of what happened now, Ravana had created an illusion whereby numerous forms of his own self were mysteriously produced in the battle-field all of a sudden, and these fake Ravana's rushed angrily to catch and kill the monkeys and bears. At that time too, Lord Ram had shot an arrow to put an end to this deceit—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 96—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 97.

The only apparent difference between the instance cited above and the present scenario is that in the former case the false forms were of Ravana himself, and these fictitious Ravana's had lunged ferociously at the monkeys and bears to terrify them and make them flee, whilst in the present case the fictitious forms are that of Hanuman, Lord Ram's most trusted aide, and the worst is that Hanuman has begun attacking his own Lord.

Ravana was very clever in deciding to use 'Hanuman's fictitious form' to confuse Lord Ram. He knew how much the Lord trusted and loved Hanuman, and when he discovers that the same Hanuman is now attacking him from all sides, it is sure, so thought Ravana, that the Lord would be taken aback, being extremely shocked and stunned to see that even Hanuman had become his mortal enemy; and this would so much confound and perplex the Lord that for quite some time he would be rendered senseless and unable to decide what to do. The time Lord Ram remains indecisive and inactive because of this unexpected shocker would be a boon for Ravana as, for one, it would give the demon king the much needed breathing time during which he would collect his wits together and plan a new strategy for the attack, and two, it would demoralize and confuse the Lord's own army.

So, what will Lord Ram do now; how will he respond to this new threat created by Ravana? The answer is found herein below in Chanda line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 101.]

छं०. तेहिं मध्य कोसलराज सुंदर स्याम तन सोभा लही । १ ।
 जनु इंद्रधनुष अनेक की बर बारि तुंग तमालही ॥ २ ॥
 प्रभु देखि हरष बिषाद उर सुर बदत जय जय जय करी । ३ । रघुबीर एकहिं तीर कोपि निमेष महुँ माया हरी ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

tēhim madhya kōsalarāja sundara syāma tana sōbhā lahī. 1.
 janu indradhanuṣa anēka kī bara bāri tuṅga tamālahī. 2.
 prabhu dēkhi haraṣa biṣāda ura sura badata jaya jaya jaya karī. 3.
 raghubīra ēkahim tīra kōpi nimēṣa mahuṁ māyā harī. 4.

The handsome and beauteous form of the Lord of Kaushal (i.e. Lord Ram), as he stood surrounded by images of Hanuman waving their long tails over him, gave the impression of a colourful panorama where a tall and dark-coloured catechu tree (tuṅga tamālahī) stands majestically in the midst of many colourful rainbows that form a bower or a parasol over it¹. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

This bewitching sight of the Lord filled the gods with a mixture of joy and sorrow² as they applauded the Lord in unison, saying repeatedly: ‘Hail Lord Ram; Glory be to you; Victory to you.’ (Chanda line no. 3)

Meanwhile, the brave Lord of the Raghus (“raghubīra”; Lord Ram) angrily shot one single arrow by which all the illusions and deceits created by Ravana were eliminated³. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹In this imagery, Lord Ram is likened to the catechu tree because of his dark complexion; the many Hanumans that surrounded the Lord appeared like the tall hedge erected around this tree to protect it, and his long waving tails that covered the Lord appeared like the many rainbows that are formed in the sky in such a way that they form a canopy over this tree.

²Why were the gods happy as well as sorrowful at the same time? They marveled at the beautiful sight that unfolded before them as described herein above; they were happy to see the beautiful form of Lord Ram, and they were sure that the Lord would soon remove this delusion as he had done on previous occasions. So therefore there was no cause of worry.

Even though they assured themselves that everything would be fine, yet they was an underlying cause of fear and uncertainty in their hearts, because of two primary reasons: one, it was a ‘war’, and in a war nothing could be predicted with certainty; and two, they knew the might of Ravana, that he was no ordinary adversary, and that he could do many unimaginable and nasty things about which no one can be certain about. Hence, this factor of uncertainty, coupled with Ravana’s formidable reputation, made the gods a bit restless and anxious. The gods were sorry that their beloved Lord Ram had had to suffer so much for their sake.

³Earlier too, whenever magical spells of illusions and deceits were employed in the battle-field by the demon warriors Meghanad and Ravana, Lord Ram had shot a single arrow to cut through these veils of delusions created by them—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 52 (in case of Meghanad); and (ii) Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 89; and Doha no. 96 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.]

माया बिगत कपि भालु हरषे बिटप गिरि गहि सब फिरे । ५ ।
 सर निकर छाड़े राम रावन बाहु सिर पुनि महि गिरे ॥ ६ ॥
 श्रीराम रावन समर चरित अनेक कल्प जो गावहीं । ७ । सत सेष सारद निगम कबि तेउ तदपि पार न पावहीं ॥ ८ ॥ māyā bigata kapi bhālu haraṣē biṭapa giri gahi saba phirē. 5.

 sara nikara chārē rāma rāvana bāhu sira puni mahi girē. 6.
 śrīrāma rāvana samara carita anēka kalpa jō gāvahīm. 7.
 sata sēṣa sārada nigama kabi tē'u tadapi pāra na pāvahīm. 8.

No sooner than this Maya created by Ravana was eliminated, the monkeys and bears felt exhilarated and rejuvenated. They grabbed huge rocks and trees with renewed enthusiasm, and returned to the frontline of the battle-field (from where they had fled a little while ago). (Chanda line no. 5)

In the mean time, Lord Ram shot a fresh volley of arrows which cut-off Ravana's heads and arms all over again, making them fall on the ground. (Chanda line no. 6)

The war that was fought between Lord Ram and Ravana, and the unbelievable actions that were taken and deeds done during its course, were so astounding, fascinating and astonishing that they can't be sufficiently narrated or described even if thousands of Seshnaths (celestial serpents with their thousands of tongues), goddesses Sharada (the goddess of speech and knowledge), the Vedas (ancient scriptures reputed for their skills in narrating in fine details even the most subtle of things), and a legend of renowned bards and poets would gather together and pool their skills to do it; none would be able to, either on their own or in a concert with each other, would ever be able to fathom its depth or its expanse¹. (Chanda line nos. 7-8)

[Note—¹To wit, the Epic War of Lanka, fought betwixt Lord Ram and Ravana, has been described by so many countless poets, bards and chroniclers down the ages, but none had been able to claim that his narration is exhaustive and comprehensive. Each narrator had done his best, but still the narration was incomplete.

The idea is that the narrative that we read at present is one of the many versions by which this legendary story has been described. The war was of an epic proportion, and the like of which never occurred in this world, either aforetime or ever after.]

दो०. ताके गुन गन कछु कहे जड़मति तुलसीदास ।
 जिमि निज बल अनुरूप ते माछी उड़इ अकास ॥ १०१ (क) ॥
 काटे सिर भुज बार बहु मरत न भट लंकेस ।
 प्रभु क्रीड़त सुर सिद्ध मुनि व्याकुल देखि कलेस ॥ १०१ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

tākē guna gana kachu kahē jaṛamati tulasīdāsa.
 jimi nija bala anurūpa tē māchī uṛa'i akāsa. 101 (a).
 kāṭē sira bhuja bāra bahu marata na bhaṭa laṅkēsa.
 prabhu krīṛata sura sid'dha muni byākula dēkhi kalēsa. 101 (b).

That epic war has been narrated to some extent by Tulsidas (the poet who wrote this classic Book named 'Ram Charit Manas') according to his limited abilities, as he lacks the skills of a competent poet or narrator to do proper justice to this epic legendary Story.

Nevertheless, his attempt is just like a mosquito or an insect that tries to fly in the sky to reach a height according to its ability¹. (Doha no. 101-a)

Meanwhile, the valorous and invincible Lord of Lanka (“bhaṭa laṅkāsa”; Ravana) would not die even after his heads and arms were chopped-off repeatedly.

This was a play that Lord Ram was playing in the battle-field, but this play made the gods and mystics (who were watching the proceedings from their stations in the sky) worried and anxious². (Doha no. 101-b)

[Note—¹A similar idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 91.

²The gods and the rest became worried and exasperated because it seemed that the war would drag endlessly on, without an end in sight. They were becoming anxious as Lord Ram had so far failed to kill their tormentor, the demon king Ravana. They were worried that in case the worst happens, that Ravana manages to evade death and Lord Ram too becomes weary of trying to kill him by-and-by, and he finally decides to end the war by making some kind of compromise, then all the planning and hopes of the gods of getting rid of Ravana would come shattering down like a house of cards.

They feared that in case Ravana somehow survived this war, he would not only become truly invincible, but would certainly also unleash his fiery revenge upon the gods and sages, with aggravated fury and viciousness, to punish them for teaming against him and asking Lord Vishnu to come down as Lord Ram to kill him.

This prospect sent shivers down their spines as they found that the war is dragging on endlessly, for they remembered how they were beaten and ill-treated by Ravana earlier, a precursor to a worse future to come.]

चौ०. काटत बढ़हिं सीस समुदाई । जिमि प्रति लाभ लोभ अधिकाई ॥ १ ॥

मरइ न रिपु श्रम भयउ बिसेषा । राम बिभीषन तन तब देखा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kāṭata baṛhahiṁ sīsa samudāī. jimi prati lābha lōbha adhikāī. 1.

mara'i na ripu śrama bhaya'u bisēṣā. rāma bibhīṣana tana taba dēkhā. 2.

His (Ravana's) heads went on multiplying and replacing themselves rapidly the more they were cut-off (by Lord Ram) in the same way as greed and rapacity for gain and profit go on increasing exponentially with each success or each reward attained in one's endeavours towards fulfillment of his desires or objectives¹. (1)

The enemy couldn't be vanquished and got rid of in this conventional manner (of cutting of heads), and this prospect worried and confounded Lord Ram immensely, for by this time he was getting weary of repeatedly trying this method in vain².

Amazed and perplexed at this uncommon development, Lord Ram glanced at Vibhishan³. (2)

[Note—¹To wit, the more a person gains something that he wants, the more his efforts bear fruits towards achieving his objectives, the more profits he makes by doing something, the more success he achieves in his enterprise, the more he would want to have it; for the endless sky seems to be the end for desires, yearnings and needs, and there is verily no end to greed and rapacity for they are never ever contented.

The idea is that Ravana's heads went on increasing exponentially in numbers the more they were cut by Lord Ram. There seemed to be no end to re-growth of newer heads on his body; for no sooner was one set chopped off than a new crop of heads sprang up on his shoulders.

²Lord Ram was tired of shooting arrows and chopping heads and arms of Ravana, for this strategy proved in vain. He thought to himself, bemused and perplexed: "It's so wondrous that Ravana's heads grow like mushrooms in the rainy season, as the more I cut them the more they grow, and as rapidly as they are cut. Hence, I have to devise some other device to eliminate Ravana, for it is a waste of time and effort trying to kill him by cutting off his heads repeatedly. What am I to do now?"

Then the Lord glanced at Vibhishan who was standing by his side, in the hope of any hint, any help from him.

³Why did Lord Ram look at Vibhishan? The Lord was out of his wits in trying to eliminate Ravana by trying all conventional methods that one would normally think of by which someone can be killed, which was to cut off Ravana's head; but unfortunately and mysteriously all such attempts had failed. So the Lord glanced at Vibhishan to explore the possibility of his confiding some secret way to circumvent this hurdle in eliminating Ravana, because the Lord rightly guessed, as will be seen shortly, that Vibhishan must be privy to some secret formula to help rid Ravana as he was his sibling, his younger brother, and so it could be correctly guessed that he might know certain things which others didn't.

Here, Lord Ram also wished to test Vibhishan's vows of loyalty and submission to him, for now if Vibhishan helped the Lord to kill his own brother it would certainly prove his allegiance and fidelity towards his new Master; otherwise a huge question mark would be there regarding his real intentions in coming to join Lord Ram's camp against his brother Ravana, which would put all his proclamations and assertions regarding his submission before the Lord under a dark cloud of doubt.

Remember: Lord Ram was no ordinary prince; he was an incarnation or a manifestation of the Supreme Being himself. This being the case, it is not possible that things were hidden from him, as the Lord is "all-knowing and omniscient (sarabagya)", a virtue that Vibhishan himself would acknowledge in verse no. 4 herein below. But the Lord did not kill Ravana even though he knew the way he should be killed, but waited till Vibhishan would disclose this method to him. Why? Because the Lord wanted to test Vibhishan's honesty and sincerity regarding his loud proclamations and vows of loyalty, allegiance, devotion, faith and submission towards the Lord—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 45.

Why did Lord Ram have cause for doubt in Vibhishan? Well, the answer is this: The war had been going on for so many days; repeated attempts by Lord Ram to slay Ravana by cutting off his head and hands have failed, and yet Vibhishan kept silent. Why didn't Vibhishan disclose the method by which Ravana could be slayed? Did he actually not want him dead; was he playing some game with the Lord? Was his real and secret desire was to wear out Lord Ram so much that ultimately the Lord would wish to save his face by making a compromise deal of some sort with Ravana, which would ensure that Lord Ram got back his wife Sita, and the demon king too survived. Did Vibhishan not want his brother to be killed? In this scenario, what would be the fate of Vibhishan? He hoped that Lord Ram would stand by his words of accepting him unconditionally[#], and so he would take him back to his own kingdom of Ayodhya. {[#]Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 43—to Doha no. 44; and Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 48.}

So therefore, Lord Ram wished to give Vibhishan the chance to prove himself, to show that he was honest when he had pledged his loyalty and faith in the Lord.

There is another spin to this episode: Lord Ram wished to give credit—or rather a ‘discredit’—for the slaying of Ravana to Vibhishan, for he would go down in history as a betrayer of his own clan, an ignominious appendage to someone’s character and a dark taint in reputation that would stick to him as long as he would live. Lord Ram had a subtle message for the world: that simply being, or claiming to be the Lord’s devotee, as Vibhishan surely did, would not absolve a person of the wrongs he had done.

This deep scar of betraying one’s family and brother, the guilt of treason and disloyalty towards one’s own country and race, the bad quality of selfishness that would lead Vibhishan to disclose the secret by which his own elder brother would be killed, for only when Ravana was out of the way would he get the throne of Lanka, stuck to him so fast down the ages that no one names a child born in the family by his name, as ‘Vibhishan’—though Lord Ram’s other devotees such as Hanuman, Angad etc. who had helped him in this epic war did lend their names to new-born babies down the path of history.

उमा काल मर जाकीं ईछा । सो प्रभु जन कर प्रीति परीछा ॥ ३ ॥

सुनु सरबग्य चराचर नायक । प्रनतपाल सुर मुनि सुखदायक ॥ ४ ॥

umā kāla mara jākīṁ īchā. sō prabhu jana kara prīti parīchā. 3.

sunu sarabagya carācara nāyaka. pranatapāla sura muni sukhadāyaka. 4.

[Lord Shiva said to his consort goddess Uma, who was listening to this fascinating story in rapt attention:-]

‘Oh Uma! The Lord whose mere wish can cause the end of Death itself, was testing the affection and vows of loyalty and allegiance that Vibhishan had proclaimed in his favour (when he had met Hanuman earlier, as well as at the time of seeking the Lord’s protection when he was kicked out by Ravana)¹. (3)

Vibhishan understood Lord Ram’s intention, and so he submitted: ‘Oh Lord who is all-knowing and omniscient (sarabagya), who is the Lord of both the animate as well as the inanimate aspects of this creation (carācara nāyaka), who is the protector of those who have surrendered before you (pranatapāla), and who is a bestower of happiness and joy to the gods and sages (sura muni sukhadāyaka). (4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (a) Hanuman’s meeting with Vibhishan: Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precedes Doha no. 7; (b) Vibhishan being kicked out by Ravana: (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Doha no. 41; and (iii) Doha no. 45.

To wit, Lord Ram was testing whether or not Vibhishan was sincere and honest in his proclamations of allegiance and devotion to Lord Ram, or did he have some other secret agenda in his mind. It would be clear now. The Lord wanted to ascertain if Vibhishan was a pretender, or whether he was truthful.]

नाभिकुण्ड पियूष बस याकें । नाथ जिअत रावनु बल ताकें ॥ ५ ॥ सुनत बिभीषन बचन कृपाला । हरषि गहे कर बान कराला ॥ ६ ॥ nābhikuṇḍa piyūṣa basa yākēṁ. nātha ji'ata rāvanu bala tākēṁ. 5.

sunata bibhīṣana bacana kṛpālā. haraṣi gahē kara bāna karālā. 6.

The nectar or the elixir that bestows life to him (Ravana) is stored in his navel. Oh Lord; it is on its strength that Ravana has managed to live (survive) for so long¹.’ (5)

Upon hearing these words of Vibhishan, the Lord who is merciful, gracious and kind (kṛpālā)², felt glad³ and lifted a fierce arrow in his hand. (6)

[Note—¹According to Yoga philosophy, the region of the navel is the location of the “Nabhi Chakra”, a center of energy that forms the base of life inside the body of a creature. It is also called the “Manipur Chakra”; it is shaped like a gem and is surrounded by the network of Naadis (nerves) called solar plexus. It is also the site of the Sun’s solar energy that focuses on at this point.

Refer also to Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 53-54.

There are said to be five subtle energy centers in the body of a living being; they are called the ‘Chakras’, or circles of energy. Each of these Chakras is associated with one primary element of Nature, of which there are five in number, such as the earth, the water, the fire, the air and the sky elements, in ascending order of subtlety and descending order of grossness.

Now, let us briefly acquaint ourselves with these ‘Chakras’. (a) The lower part of the body has the ‘Muladhar Chakra’, or the root plexus where the ‘earth element’ is dominant. (b) Rising above, the next is the ‘Swadisthan Chakra’, or the sacrum region or the sacral plexus where water dominates. (c) The next is the ‘Nabhi Chakra’ located near the navel and the central part of the body; here the fire element plays a vital role. This Chakra, being the center of the fire element, is also called the solar plexus as it the sun which heats the world and keeps it alive by providing it with much needed energy. (d) The next higher energy center is called the ‘Hridaya Chakra’ or the heart plexus; it is here that the Atma lives. It represents the air element; it is so because the heart and the lungs are located in this region, and these organs help a creature to breathe and circulate air inside the body. (e) Going higher up we meet the ‘Vishudha Chakra’ or the throat plexus. Here the sound is produced as the upward moving wind rubs against the vocal cords. This represents the ether element, which is a subtler form of the air element itself. And finally, (f) we come to the Brahm-randhra Chakra. It is located in at the top of the head, and is so-named because the cosmic Consciousness enters the body of a living being through a split here, and it is from here that it would finally escape at the time of death.

Now, coming to our point with respect to Ravana and the way he would be finally killed, the Nabhi Chakra in his body was the ‘center of the fire element’ that keeps the body warm, and its wind elements heated and active, which in turn makes the physical body perform all its deeds, externally as well as internally. It's like the boiler of a steel plant or a steam engine; if the boiler cools down then no steam is produced and the working of the machinery would stop.

This is why Ravana kept on living while this Nabhi Chakra managed to keep his wind elements heated and active; it also enabled Ravana to perform miraculous deeds of dare-devilry.

When his heads were cut, they grew back instantly; it meant that the wind element, known as the 'Pran' that kept his body active, could not escape by that way. Growing of a new head the instant the earlier one was cut-off kind of hermetically sealed the rupture the very moment it was created.

We shall read below, in verse nos. 1 and 4 that precede Doha no. 103 that when Lord Ram shot a final arrow at Ravana's navel, he had tottered and swooned violently before collapsing to the ground. This brought about his end—because while he was protected from death by cutting of heads as they would re-grow the moment they were cut, no such boon was available to him regarding the navel; there was no provision that any rupture made in his navel would be immediately sealed.

So therefore, while his Pran, the vital wind element that kept his body alive, could not leave through the path of the mouth as the head grew back instantly, it could leave his body through the ruptured navel when an arrow hit and pierced it, for there was no provision for sealing it instantaneously.

That understood, we come to the next vital point. Remember: The Nabhi Chakra is the center of the 'fire element' that heats the water and the wind elements present inside the body of a creature. The gases and the steam in the body of Ravana escaped with a violence blast when the seal of the navel was broken.

The 'abdomen', where the navel is located, is not hard like a boiler of an engine or the blast furnace of a steel mill, but rather it is softer, flexible and stretchable like a balloon filled with hot air. This is why we breathe; the muscles of the abdomen expand and contract to help us breathe.

Now visualize what would happen in practice if a hot air balloon is pricked by an arrow or any sharp instrument at one point on its side—as soon as a hole is made, the trapped hot air, which is already under intense pressure exerted on it from all the sides of the balloon as its rubber skin tries to shrink back to its original size after air is pumped inside it, would naturally escape out from the hole in the form of a jet of hot air; it would make a mighty hissing sound, or may escape with a fiery blast from this hole, depending upon the size of the aperture made.

Visualize another scene. What would happen if a hole is suddenly made in kettle full of boiling water or a cooker in which food is being cooked over an oven? Along with the jet of the escaping hot air, the contents of the kettle or the cooker would also escape.

And in which direction would this 'jet of hot air and boiling things go'? It would go in the same direction in which the hole is made; it's as simple and obvious as that. And anyone coming in the way, especially if he is not far away, would be struck violently with the blast of the hot air, and drenched with the hot liquid that is shot out along with it, leaving him scorched and dazed.

This is what exactly might have happened during the moments Ravana died. His 'Pran', i.e. his heated wind element that sustained life inside his body, suddenly escaped from the rupture made in his navel by the arrow shot by Lord Ram. It was exceptionally hot, because Ravana was agitated, angry and frantic, breathing heavily and engaged in violent muscular activity as a fierce war was underway; it was no leisure time when the internal winds are cooler.

So therefore, the blast of air escaping from his gigantic body made huge sound as the abdomen suddenly collapsed; and this air was so hot that it appeared like a flame of fire leaping out of Ravana's colossus body. It escaped out in a fiery jet in the direction of Lord Ram, for the simple reason that the hole was made in the navel while Ravana was facing the Lord, and it was the only exit point of the body through which the hot air escaped. Naturally it gushed out in the straight direction where the Lord was standing, opposite Ravana,

The scene was so astoundingly amazing and never heard of earlier that for a moment Lord Ram stood with an open mouth, in awe and wonder. And so what happened? This hot and flaming air was inhaled by him—which the poets and bards who chronicled this Story depicted by saying “a brilliant shaft of light and energy representing Ravana's soul escaped from his body and entered the body of Lord Ram”. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.}

Ravana had been all the while shrieking and yelling at Lord Ram, and then suddenly there was a mighty blast as his heated wind element escaped from his navel. It was a deafening sound; and then suddenly everything fell quiet. This eerie moment and its preceding chaos has been depicted by the same poets and bards by saying “Ravana roared violently: where is Lord Ram whom I wish to defeat in battle” before he collapsed and fell to the ground. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 103.}

A question now arises: From where did this ‘Amrit’, or the elixir of life, come to be stored in the navel of Ravana? The answer is this: Ravana used to practice Yoga, and was an expert in it. During his practice, he used to perform certain Aasans (postures) which helped to rejuvenate his body and stir the reservoir of subtle energy present inside his body. Since the Nabhi Chakra is the center of solar energy, it was used to heat his body from the inside; it was virtually like the ‘power station’ of his body. When Lord Ram's arrow struck it, it got short-circuited like any electricity grid would, and this short-circuit blew out the fuse that kept his body energized, charged and active; which meant simply that he died due to this outage in electric current that kept his body and its internal organs, such as his heart, alive and active.

According to Patanjali's Yoga Sutra, Vibhuti Paad, verse nos. 29-33, when one practices Yoga then Amrit drips from one's tongue, gets sucked up into the Brahm-randhra, the upper-most part of the skull, from where it travels downwards and gets sucked up and stored at the bottom of the body around the navel. The heat of the navel keeps this Amrit from freezing, and this warm subtle source of energy, which can be likened to ‘honey’ stored by honey bees, forms the basis of keeping the body alive.

This is what must have actually happened in the case of Ravana. Vibhishan knew that his brother used to do regular Yoga practice, and what kind of Aasans he did. So he was the best person to know the key by which Ravana's seemingly inexhaustible source of energy could be neutralized.

²It seems absurd and incongruous to call Lord Ram “merciful and kind” especially when he is determined to kill Ravana. But the fact is that what externally seems to be ‘killing of Ravana’ was actually ‘liberating and delivering his soul from the trap of a demon body in which it was caught’. By committing so many sins, Ravana had unwillingly and unwittingly and unintentionally and inadvertently, created such a hard shell around his soul—which is also known as the Atma that is inherently pure and holy, as well as consciousness that is the true self of all living beings, including Ravana—that it became impossible for this soul to break free from the hardened crust of sins symbolized by Ravana’s physical body in order to attain deliverance. Hence, in order to grant emancipation and salvation to this soul of Ravana, it became imperative to hit his body hard with such a forceful blow that it would rupture and enable the pure consciousness to escape from it. It was no easy task, because Ravana was no ordinary creature. Just like special diseases need specialized cure, Ravana too needed the Supreme Being to come and kill him so that his soul could be delivered.

To wit, Lord Ram was actually doing Ravana a favour by killing his gross mortal body covered by a thick crust of sins and evils so that his subtle Atma could be freed from this trap and find emancipation and salvation that would grant him eternal peace and beatitude. As the things turned out, this is actually what happened, for at the end Ravana’s glorious soul emerged from his body in a radiant shaft of light to merge with the Supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram, which was effected when this brilliant light entered the body of the Lord—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.

Surely then, it was a kind and merciful deed done by Lord Ram as it gave eternal peace and rest to Ravana’s soul, which would have otherwise continued to commit sins and suffer their consequences forever.

³So well; why did Lord Ram feel “glad”? The Lord felt happy that Vibhishan has stood true to his vows of loyalty and allegiance to him; that Vibhishan has reciprocated the Lord’s graciousness in accepting him unconditionally inspite of knowing that he was Ravana’s brother, and inspite of Sugriv, the king of the monkeys and the Lord’s chief advisor, advising the Lord not to accept him for he might be a spy. Say, what answer would the Lord have given to Sugriv and others who were against his accepting Vibhishan if the latter had not proved his integrity and loyalty at this crucial juncture of the war when his help was sought to vanquish Ravana? Surely it would have been embarrassing for the Lord if Vibhishan had double-crossed him now.]

असुभ होन लागे तब नाना । रोवहिं खर सृकाल बहु स्वाना ॥ ७ ॥
 बोलहिं खग जग आरति हेतू । प्रगट भए नभ जहँ तहँ केतू ॥ ८ ॥
 दस दिसि दाह होन अति लागा । भयउ परब बिनु रबि उपरागा ॥ ९ ॥ मंदोदरि उर कंपति भारी । प्रतिमा स्रवहिं नयन मग बारी ॥ १० ॥ asubha hōna lāgē taba nānā. rōvahiṁ khara sṛkāla bahu svānā. 7.

 bōlahiṁ khaga jaga ārati hētū. pragaṭa bha'ē nabha jahaṁ tahaṁ kētū. 8.
 dasa disi dāha hōna ati lāgā. bhaya'u paraba binu rabi uparāgā. 9.
 mandōdari ura kampati bhārī. pratimā sravahiṁ nayana maga bārī. 10.

All sorts of bad signs and ill omens began to appear then¹. Large numbers of jackals, donkeys and dogs began howling mournfully. (7)

Birds that are regarded as inauspicious (such as crow, owls, vultures etc.) made their own horrifying sounds portending doom. Comets (indicating bad omen) suddenly appeared and streaked past in the sky here and there. (8)

There was an unnatural deathly glow and intense heat in all the ten directions of the world². [To wit, the sky became red and the temperature rose everywhere as if there was an upcoming deadly heat wave that would roast everything alive.] (9)

Mandodari's (Ravana's wife) heart trembled with great fear (at the prospect of a calamity striking her husband). Statues began shedding a lot of tears. (10)

[Note—¹Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 86.

²The ten directions are: north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, zenith and nadir.]

छं०. प्रतिमा रुदहिं पबिपात नभ अति बात बह डोलति मही । १ ।
 बरषहिं बलाहक रुधिर कच रज असुभ अति सक को कही ॥ २ ॥
 उतपात अमित बिलोकि नभ सुर बिकल बोलहिं जय जए । ३ । सुर सभय जानि कृपाल रघुपति चाप सर जोरत भए ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

pratimā rudahiṁ pabipāta nabha ati bāta baha ḍōlati mahī. 1.
 baraṣahiṁ balāhaka rudhira kaca raja asubha ati saka kō kahī. 2.
 utapāta amita bilōki nabha sura bikala bōlahiṁ jaya ja'ē. 3.
 sura sabhaya jāni kṛpāla raghupati cāpa sara jōrata bha'ē. 4.

Statues wept; lightening struck and thunder covered the sky; a fierce storm began raging; the earth shook; (Chanda line no. 1)

The clouds rained down blood, hairs and sand. Verily, there were so many ill signs that no one can fully enumerate them. (Chanda line no. 2)

Indeed, countless bad signs and inauspicious signals indicative of a grave calamity and disaster descending on the world prevailed everywhere. Seeing them, however, the gods cried out in unison "Victory; victory"¹. (Chanda line no. 3)

When the merciful Lord Ram observed that the gods were horrified, he assembled an array of arrows on his bow². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹The gods, though terrified at these horrible signs, yet shouted 'victory', because they judged that inspite of initial horrors created by these evil signs they indicate that the end of Ravana was near, and Lord Ram would finally attain victory.

Hence, they welcomed these ill omens as being a good sign. One would not fail to observe the ways of this selfish world: what is ruin for one is a boon for another! Ravana's ruin was a welcome gift for the gods.

²Lord Ram would shoot thirty-one arrows almost simultaneously; ten would cut-off Ravana's ten heads, twenty arrows would sever his twenty arms, and the thirty-first arrow would hit his navel and dry up its nectar-of-life which had kept Ravana alive—apropos: Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 103 herein below.]

दो०. खैंचि सरासन श्रवन लागि छाड़े सर एकतीस । रघुनायक सायक चले मानहुँ काल फनीस ॥ १०२ ॥

dōhā.

khaiñci sarāsana śravana lagi chārē sara ēkatīsa.
raghunāyaka sāyaka calē mānahuṁ kāla phanīsa. 102.

Lord Ram pulled the string of his bow right back upto his ears, and shot thirty-one arrows rapidly.

The fierce arrows of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) darted towards their target as if so many deadly serpents were flying towards their prey. (Doha no. 102)

चौ०. सायक एक नाभि सर सोषा । अपर लगे भुज सिर करि रोषा ॥ १ ॥
लै सिर बाहु चले नाराचा । सिर भुज हीन रुंड महि नाचा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sāyaka ēka nābhi sara sōṣā. apara lagē bhuja sira kari rōṣā. 1.
lai sira bāhu calē nārācā. sira bhuja hīna ruṇḍa mahi nācā. 2.

One of the (thirty-one) arrows dried up the source of the life-giving elixir stored in Ravana's navel¹; and the rest of the thirty arrows swiftly severed his ten heads and twenty arms. (1)

The severed heads and arms got stuck to the arrows that had pierced through them, and were carried away by the arrows as they continued to fly speedily ahead in the sky by the virtue of their momentum.

Meanwhile, the trunk of Ravana's body, from which the heads and arms were ripped away, remained agitated and active in the battle-field for some more time as it lurched and reeled madly in every direction (stepping to the right and the left, to the front and the backwards) giving the impression that it was enacting the steps of the last dance of death. (2)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5 that precedes Doha no. 102, and a note appended to it.

It ought to be particularly noted here that Lord Ram had not shot any arrow at Ravana's heart. Why did the Lord avoid it? The answer to it is given by Trijata when she told Sita that the Lord desists from shooting an arrow at Ravana's heart as she is present there—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 12-13 that precede Doha no. 99. I have elaborately explained this aspect as a note appended to these verses.

Besides what Trijata said, there is another aspect to it. The Lord did not hit the heart because Ravana's Atma, his pure conscious soul, lived there. Lord Ram had come to provide deliverance to this soul, which is a holy and pure entity as it is pure consciousness; this soul or Atma of Ravana was suffering intensely because it was trapped inside the gross body of a demon. Since the main objective of Lord Ram was to grant liberation and deliverance to Ravana's soul, to provide him with emancipation and salvation, he would not harm this soul by hitting it with an arrow.

Lord Ram was not an ordinary prince who was fighting his enemy to rescue his kidnapped wife; he was the Supreme Being who wished to grant rest and peace to the tormented soul of a sinful creature represented by Ravana. The Lord is forgiving and merciful; he is not vengeful and unkind. He had come to liberate Ravana's soul and deliver it from its sufferings, he had come to grant the unfortunate creature known as Ravana with the spiritual benefits of emancipation and salvation by killing his gross body to enable the trapped soul to make its escape and attain peace; the Lord had not come to send it to hell. This is a crucial factor which must always be kept in mind to judge and analyze all the events of the Story of the Ramayan.

So the Lord chose to avoid the heart and select an alternative method to kill Ravana—and it was by hitting his body in the navel to enable his Pran to escape. Once the Pran escaped, there was no question of Ravana surviving any longer in his physical form. But his 'soul' survived, because the soul is eternal and imperishable. Yet the Lord wished to make certain that the soul of Ravana gets its final rest, and it may not suffer any longer in the absence of a permanent place to rest, for if it is not given its final rest then it would enter any other body and take a rebirth to become a demon once again.

That is why Lord Ram would make it so happen that Ravana's soul emerged from his body and entered the body of Lord Ram: a remarkable development indeed. We shall read more about it in verse no. 9 herein below.

The way Ravana was finally killed has been narrated differently in "Ram Charit Manas" of Tulsidas, and "Adhyatma Ramayan" of Veda Vyas. We read in Adhyatma Ramayan that Matli—the charioteer of Lord Ram's chariot, who was sent by the gods to help the Lord in the war—had advised the Lord that Ravana would be killed only by shooting an arrow at his heart. On hearing this advice, the Lord had shot an arrow directly at Ravana's heart, bringing about his end. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 61-72.}

Though seemingly contradicting each other, the fact is that both the narratives are correct—for it is indeed possible that Lord Ram has shot arrows aimed at Ravana's heart as well as his navel to ensure that all precautions are taken to make sure that Ravana is certainly slayed, for the Lord did not want to take any further risk of playing games with him as time was running out, and already all other methods had miserably failed to the demon's life.

The apparent dichotomy in the actual way how Ravana was finally slayed appears to be caused due to the difference in the way the attention of the two chroniclers of the Story—i.e. Tulsidas and Veda Vyas—was focused. To wit, Tulsidas' attention was focused on what Vibhishan had advised, i.e. he documented about the arrow that hit Ravana in his navel, while Veda Vyas's attention was on Ravana's heart where Matli said Lord Ram ought to shoot the arrow, and consequently he attributed Ravana's death to this arrow.

The fact is a combination of both—Lord Ram shooting arrows simultaneously at Ravana's heart and navel to ensure his death; for time was running out and the Lord did now wish to let any means escape to bring about Ravana's end. This was because all other means had failed miserably, and when two different methods were advised for Ravana's death—one by Vibhishan who said that the Lord ought to shoot an arrow at Ravana's navel, and by Matli who said that the arrow ought to be aimed at Ravana's heart—the Lord determined that it would be wise to do both at the same instant; which was to shoot arrows aimed both at Ravana's heart as well as his navel simultaneously.

This was done almost at the same time, so quickly that it could not be separately judged which arrow caused the actual death of Ravana. To wit, from the practical point of view, both the versions of how Ravana was killed are true: the primary objective of bringing about the end of the demon king was achieved, and whether it was achieved by the arrow that hit his heart or by the one that hit his navel is only of secondary or peripheral importance.

This particular instance where we read about two apparently different ways as to how Ravana was finally slayed, and both the versions are from authentic sources, viz. Adhyatma Ramayan of the illustrious sage Veda Vyas, and Ram Charit Manas of the renowned saint-poet Tulsidas, both equally revered and equally authoritative, explains why I, the author of the present Book which my esteemed readers have now in their hands and are currently reading, chose to cite more than one version of this classic Story of Lord Ram, universally known as the 'Ramayana' but given a specific name by the narrator of a particular version, to pen my own narrative—as this approach helps one to get a comprehensive and a wide-angled understanding of the entire Story in general, and any given episode of it in particular.

This therefore is the reason why I have quoted in full two well-respected, authoritative and acclaimed versions of the Ramayana, viz. 'Ram Charit Manas' and 'Adhyatma Ramayan'. Besides these two, I have also included, as the reader must have noticed by now, two other magnificent narratives of Tulsidas, viz. 'Geetawali Ramayan' and 'Kavitawali Ramayan'. It is because these two latter classical Books describe selected episodes of the Story in fine detail, pausing every now and then to look at it from different angles in a slow-motion mode, as compared to the other two versions of the same Story (i.e. Ram Charit Manas and Adhyatma Ramayan) which are continuous in their narrative of the events in a chronological fashion, without pausing to focus attention on any given episode.]

धरनि धसइ धर धाव प्रचंडा । तब सर हति प्रभु कृत दुइ खंडा ॥ ३ ॥

गर्जेउ मरत घोर रव भारी । कहाँ रामु रन हतौं पचारी ॥ ४ ॥

dharani dhasa'i dhara dhāva pracaṇḍā. taba sara hati prabhu kṛta du'i khaṇḍā. 3.

garjē'u marata ghōra rava bhārī. kahāṁ rāmu rana hataurṇ pacārī. 4.

The earth started caving in with the force of the heavy steps with which his trunk stomped and tottered on the ground, moving in a bewildered state of confusion (before collapsing).

Lord Ram then shot another fierce arrow that slammed into the trunk and cut it into two halves¹. (3)

At the time of his death, he (Ravana) thundered with a terrible roar², 'Where is Lord Ram that I may challenge and slay him in battle³.' (4)

[Note—¹The death of Ravana reminds one of the way Kumbhakaran was killed and his colossal body collapsed in the battle-field, which was almost in the same way as it happened with Ravana. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 70—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 71.}]

²A very remarkable thing has happened here. Remember that Ravana's heads were already cut-off, so how come he 'roared and thundered' without his mouths its tongues?

Well, the answer is this: The head of any living being, along with its mouth and tongue, is like any other organ of the creature's gross physical body, such as the hands and legs, the eye, the nose and the skin. These individual parts have no independent life of their own; they remain active and give the impression of being alive only as long as the creature lives and is conscious of his surroundings, for as soon as it 'dies' or becomes 'senseless', these same organs become 'lifeless' or 'senseless'.

That means that there is some other factor that is called 'life' present inside the body of a living being, for surely it is not the gross organs of this body as they do not have any life of their own. This independent entity that infuses 'life' in the otherwise inane and lifeless gross body is called the "Pran", the life-giving force present inside the body, which makes a body 'living' and differentiates it from a 'dead body'. According to the Upanishads, this 'Pran' factor is an aspect of the Wind Element that drives the body, keeps it active, and helps it to carry out all its different functions, both externally and internally. When a creature dies, this Pran, that is present inside the gross body, escapes from it to merge with the open 'air' outside, to become one with it.

It is like the case of air present inside and outside of an earthen pitcher. As long as the pitcher is there, we artificially distinguish the air within and without it by using the body of the pitcher as the demarcation line. When the pitcher is broken, the air within merges with the air outside seamlessly, without any ado.

Now, take another example. Suppose there is an air-filled balloon. If its air is allowed to escape slowly it won't make any sound, but if a hole is pricked in it with a needle, then what happens? It 'bursts with a loud bang', as the wind trapped inside suddenly meets the wind outside, and there is a clash of two opposite pressures.

This is what happened in the case of Ravana too. The life-giving wind element, called the Pran that was present inside his body, suddenly escaped when the arrow pierced his navel, like a pin pricking a hole in a balloon. This caused a snapping sound, but it was no ordinary sound and no ordinary wind. Ravana had a colossus body, so the quantity of wind must have been huge, and besides it the wind was agitated by the heat of war. So it must have escaped with a mighty sound, like a bomb exploding.

Then there is one other factor: There are two types of sounds, one which is heard by the ear, and the one which isn't. The first type of sound is called 'Baikhari', and the other is called 'Pashyanti'. For example, when we talk with each other, we use the 'Baikhari' form of sound as our ears can hear what we speak; but the sound that is transmitted by radio stations or mobile towers is called 'Pashyanti' as our ears can't hear it directly. The Baikhari form of sound is grosser, while the Pashyanti form is subtler by nature. Living beings such as us humans can hear the Baikhari words, while the gods can hear the Pashyanti words.

But, 'who' is that entity that actually 'speaks'? Is it the gross body or even its life-giving Pran? No, neither of them. The entity that actually speaks is the living being, and this living being is neither the body nor the Pran; it is an independent entity known as the 'self', which is its 'Atma'. What is this Atma? It is the 'pure consciousness' that lives inside the gross body of a creature; it is also known as the 'soul'. This Atma is a sublime, ethereal and a subtlest form of element that exists, and it is the entity that is the 'true self and the true identity' of any living being. If there is no Atma or consciousness present in the body, then the mere presence of the 'wind element' won't make a body alive. A balloon also has a wind inside it, it hops and moves around, it can fly and make a sound when rubbed, but not even a mad man would call it a 'living being'.

To wit, the Atma and the Pran, both of them invisible and subtle elements, act together in a tango to make what is known as a living being. The Pran is a manifestation of the dynamic energy of the Atma that makes a creature a living being; the 'Atma' is the Master that instructs the 'Pran', which in turn drives the 'body' towards the creature's desired destination.

In the case of Ravana, his Pran escaped first, and it made a loud sound while escaping from his gross body because it is a form of wind. After the Pran left the gross body, the Atma too left it. So then, what happened to this Atma? We shall read about it in verse no. 9 herein below.

³When Marich, the demon who had been forced by Ravana to assume the form of a golden deer so that Sita could be abducted, had died when hit by the arrow shot by Lord Ram, he too had called out aloud first the name of Laxman and then that of Lord Ram. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 14-15 that precede Doha no. 27.}

Similarly, when Meghanad had died, he too had cried aloud the names of Laxman and Lord Ram. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 76 along with Chaupai line no. 16 that precedes it.}]

डोली भूमि गिरत दसकंधर । छुभित सिंधु सरि दिग्गज भूधर ॥ ५ ॥ धरनि परेउ द्वौ खंड बड़ाई । चापि भालु मर्कट समुदाई ॥ ६ ॥

ḍōlī bhūmi girata dasakandhara. chubhita sindhu sari diggaja bhūdharma. 5.
dharani parē'u dvau khaṇḍa baṛhāī. cāpi bhālu markṭa samudāī. 6.

When Ravana, the one with ten shoulders (dasakandhara), finally fell down on the ground with a mighty thud, the earth shook, the ocean developed huge splashing waves, the rivers had violent currents, while the Diggas (the elephants who are supposed to support the earth from its corners) turned and shifted in their positions, and the mountains trembled too due to the excessive pressure and jolting vibrations caused by the falling of Ravana's huge body. (5)

The two halves of his colossus body collapsed on the ground, and while doing so it crushed underneath large numbers of monkeys and bears¹. (6)

[Note—¹This scene is reminiscent of Kumbhakaran dying as narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 71.]

मंदोदरि आगें भुज सीसा । धरि सर चले जहाँ जगदीसा ॥ ७ ॥ प्रबिसे सब निषंग महु जाई । देखि सुरन्ह दुंदुभीं बजाई ॥ ८ ॥ mandōdari āgēm̐ bhuja sīsā. dhari sara calē jahām̐ jagadīsā. 7.

 prabisē saba niṣaṅga mahu jā'ī. dēkhi suranha dundubhīm̐ bajā'ī. 8.

The arrows put (or rather dropped) the severed heads and arms of Ravana at the place where Mandodari (his queen) was (i.e. inside Ravana's palace)¹; and then these arrows went back to Lord Ram, the Lord of the world (jagadīsā). (7)

These arrows returned and entered the Lord's quiver², seeing which the gods played their musical drums in the heaven³. (8)

[Note—¹When Kumbhakaran was killed, his head flew and fell down in the front of Ravana, though it is not clearly mentioned during the narration as to how it was carried there—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 71.

Lord Ram has been universally praised as being gracious and magnanimous. He wished to give Ravana an honourable death, and therefore would not cause anything to happen that would undermine the dignity and respect of Ravana's glorious soul, his stature as a great king of the demon race, as well as of being a valiant warrior the like of which the world had never seen heretofore, and would never see hereafter. If his heads would have fallen to the ground in the battle-field, there were chances that jackals, dogs, hyenas, vultures and other flesh eating birds and animals would pounce on them at once, which would be insulting to Ravana's memory. Lord Ram did not wish that to happen.

Remember: Lord Ram himself was a great king of a great kingdom of Ayodhya, and so he was aware of the sort of treatment that ought to be given to another king of great stature. A gallant warrior fights his adversary with all energy and fury, but once the latter falls or surrenders, the former would not do anything to cause insult to his dead body, or to the vanquished opponent, as the case may be.

²One would not fail to marvel at the weapon technology known during those days. The arrows were like reusable missiles; they hit their targets with precision and then came back to the shooter. A similar scene of the arrows coming back to Lord Ram is witnessed elsewhere in the war also: for instance, we read the same thing happening at the time when Kumbhakaran was slayed—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 68.

³The gods were now certain that Ravana was dead, because his body collapsed and no newer heads and arms grew again on it. So they celebrated.]

तासु तेज समान प्रभु आनन । हरषे देखि संभु चतुरानन ॥ ९ ॥
 जय जय धुनि पूरी ब्रह्मंडा । जय रघुबीर प्रबल भुजदंडा ॥ १० ॥
 बरषहिं सुमन देव मुनि बृंदा । जय कृपाल जय जयति मुकुंदा ॥ ११ ॥ tāsu tēja samāna prabhu ānana. haraṣē dēkhi sambhu caturānana. 9.

 jaya jaya dhuni pūrī brahmaṇḍā. jaya raghubīra prabala bhujadaṇḍā. 10.
 baraṣahim sumana dēva muni bṛndā. jaya kṛpāla jaya jayati mukundā. 611.

His (Ravana's) 'Tej' (i.e. his pure consciousness, his true self, his energy of life) escaped from his gross body and emerged in the form of a brilliant shaft of light that went straight to Lord Ram and entered him (through the Lord's mouth or nostrils)¹.

When Lord Shiva and the four-headed Creator (Brahma) observed it, they felt very glad². (9)

A loud chorus of 'Victory, victory' resonated throughout the universe. Everyone applauded Lord Ram and proclaimed his glory by saying: 'Gory and Victory to Lord Ram, who has stupendous valour and astounding powers in his two arms.' (10)

The gods and the sages (who were watching the war from their respective stations in the sky) showered a rain of flowers, repeatedly praising Lord Ram: 'Glory to the merciful Lord; victory to him who grants liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the soul (mukundā)³' (11)

[Note—¹The Soul of a living being is pure consciousness. It is glorious and self-illuminated with the light of knowledge, called being enlightened. The individual creature's soul is an image of the supreme Soul of this creation; the former is called the 'Atma', while the latter is called the 'Parmatma'.

It is just like the case of a pot filled with water of the ocean. The water inside the pot is the Atma of an individual; the pot itself is like the gross body of that individual; the ocean is the Parmatma or the Supreme Atma as it consists of an endless source of water from which countless pots can be filled without exhausting its supply of water, which in this metaphor is the Supreme Atma, the primary Atma or the cosmic Consciousness that pervades throughout this creation.

So therefore, when Ravana died, his own Atma emerged from his gross body to enter the body of Lord Ram who was the Supreme Being, the Parmatma, to merge and become one with the Supreme Atma present inside the body of Lord Ram just like the case when the water-pot breaks and its content (water) falls back into the ocean, to become one and inseparable with the latter.

This was truly a great honour that Lord Ram bestowed upon Ravana, for he had granted Ravana's soul permanent peace by accepting it within his own Self. That is why these two gods, Shiva and Brahma, rejoiced.

From the spiritual perspective, and in accordance with the philosophy as enunciated in and espoused by the Upanishads, the best destination for the Atma, or the soul of the individual creature, is its merger with the cosmic Atma, the Supreme Atma, or the cosmic Soul, as it grants the individual creature eternal rest and peace; it is the ultimate and the final destination of the Atma; it is that destiny that grants eternal bliss, beatitude and felicity. It is this destination that was granted to Ravana's Atma, for it left his gross body that was physically in the form of a demon, to enter the holy body of Lord Ram who was none but the Supreme Being himself, to become one with the latter.

By accepting Ravana's soul within his own self, Lord Ram clearly signaled to the world that he actually had no ill-will or anger against him, for whatever he did by way of waging a fierce war with the apparent objective of killing Ravana was merely a show, for the Lord's actual intention was to grant deliverance to Ravana and peace to his soul.

Heaven is not the ultimate destination for a soul, just like hell which does not mean eternal condemnation. These two, heaven or hell, are only transitory stations where the soul would reside for sometimes before it steps onto the next phase in its journey. It stays in heaven to enjoy the rewards of its meritorious deeds done in its previous life, and in hell to undergo punishment for its mischief. How long the soul stays in either heaven or hell depends upon the quantum of its reward or punishment respectively. So therefore, when the reward or the punishment is done with, the soul is bound to move on, either back to this mortal world to take a rebirth, or to move higher to attain Moksha, or the state of eternity, the state of permanent bliss, peace, beatitude and felicity. This is attained when the 'individual soul' loses its individuality and dissolves itself into the 'cosmic Soul' to become one with the latter.

Since the soul, or the Atma of an individual, is pure consciousness, it can be said that true Moksha is when the individual's consciousness merges with the cosmic Consciousness. In our present case, it is depicted in Ravana's soul merging with the cosmic Soul represented by Lord Ram.

Verily, the way Ravana died fulfilled his desire to attain eternal peace and beatitude for which he was so eager. For remember, he knew very well that there is no way he can attain this exalted destiny on his own account because of the quantum of sins that he had done throughout his life, not realizing what the consequences would be for him in the long run at the time when he was recklessly doing mischief; and by the time he realized what horrors he had created for his own self, it was too late. So he decided that the only way out for him was to continue with his way of life, for it was too late to make amends and change his habits, and patiently wait for the time when the merciful and compassionate Supreme Being, reading the innermost thoughts of his heart that yearned for deliverance and emancipation, would decide to fulfill his wishes by coming himself to free his Atma, and the only way it can be done was to break the hardened shell in which the Atma was trapped.

And what was this hardened shell that trapped Ravana's Atma? It was his demonic body which had become so thick and stiff with layers and layers of accumulated sins and evil deeds done over time that it only could be broken by someone skilled in it, and not by ordinary means. This is what had happened in reality in this war, and this is why Lord Ram has been praised as being 'merciful, compassionate, kind, gracious, magnanimous and benevolent' as he had granted a sinful creature the grand reward of spiritual liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation inspite of knowing that the creature, in this case Ravana, had been to most sinful and disgraceful fellow in his creation.

Come to think of it—Lord Ram was so gracious, magnanimous and forgiving that he granted deliverance to the souls of all the demon warriors, and not Ravana alone. But to honour Ravana and treat him with dignity befitting his stature as the king of the demon race, the Lord granted him a special seat alongside his own self by accepting his soul within himself. Even the gods had appreciated this fact that all the demons had been granted emancipation and salvation by Lord Ram, and that Ravana was shown a special privilege that even great sages would envy. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.}

We can therefore safely conclude that inspite of all the ignominy and infamy that Ravana got, after all his soul was as holy and pure as it should have been, and not sinful and evil as it was made out to be by the external actions and deeds that his demonic body was engaged in doing, for otherwise Lord Ram would never have honoured him by giving his soul a place within his own self—which is like a great king welcoming another great king and showing the latter great honour by making the guest king sit by his side on his own throne! What more can be said in favour of and in honour of Ravana?

²When Ravana's soul entered Lord Ram's body, Lords Brahma and Shiva felt happy. This is because Ravana had done tough Tapasya and got boons from Brahma, and he also was a great devotee of Lord Shiva. Therefore they both felt happy that their devotee has been given Sayujya Moksha- ultimate Mukti by Lord Rama.

³The fact that Lord Ram granted deliverance and emancipation to Ravana's soul, instead of condemning him to hell for his sins, and inspite of knowing that he was the one who had kidnapped his wife Sita, was noted by all the assembled gods and sages, who blessed and praised the Lord for his gracious and merciful nature as well as for this glorious and noble deed of his.

Ravana—whom the world always took to be an embodiment of sins and evil—was indeed singularly fortunate and very blessed soul to have attained such an exalted death because the Supreme Being had himself come to his doorstep to grant him eternal liberation and deliverance, to bless him with emancipation and salvation.

The fact that Ravana's soul or Atma was accepted by Lord Ram and granted a place within himself proves how much the Lord respected the purity and holiness of his soul. Forsooth and without any gainsay, verily, Lord Ram realized that the Ravana whom the world so much loathed and reviled was actually his gross physical body, and not his Atma which was his 'true self', the Atma which was as holy and pure as it ought to be. And therefore, the just and kind and all-knowing Supreme Lord of the world, who judges each individual very minutely, by taking everything and every aspect into consideration before passing a judgment against or in favour of anyone, decided that Ravana does not deserve to be condemned to eternal hell to suffer.

The Lord determined that whatever Ravana he had done was done as a 'demon', and the word 'demon' refers to his gross physical body but not definitely to his Atma, and this physical body was made to give its due penalty by being sacrificed in the war, for it was mutilated and decapitated in the final hours of the war before being killed. This was a sufficient sacrifice for Ravana, and once it was offered his soul had the right to redemption.

The question arises: Why did Lord Ram accept Ravana's soul within his own self? The answer is this: (i) To show the world that the Lord was exceptionally forgiving, merciful, compassionate, gracious, kind, understanding, magnanimous and benevolent so much so that he is ready to go to any extent to welcome anyone who wishes to come to him, overlooking all other things that would normally hinder such warm welcome. (ii) To show the world that the Lord had no personal ill-will against Ravana, and was merely punishing him for his misdeeds. (iii) To tell the world that a wise, just and enlightened judge is one who applies intelligence and always looks deeper before passing a judgment for or against anyone, for oftentimes what meets the eye is very deceptive—as was clearly the case with Ravana, for the world treated him as a vile person, whereas his 'true self', his Atma, was as holy and pure as it ought to be, and it was for this reason that Lord Ram had no second thoughts in accepting Ravana's Atma within his own self. (iv) To give a cue to the world as to why valiant warriors who prefer to die fighting their adversaries in the battle-field are said to go to heaven—because by dying they would have made the ultimate sacrifice, and once a self-sacrifice is made the soul has the rightful claim to deliverance and eternal peace, which must be granted to it.

There is another reason also—Ravana was so loathed and feared by the Gods that they would never give his soul permission to ascend to heaven; so going to the heaven was ruled out. As for going to hell for his sins, that was also not possible for Ravana because the lord of hell, i.e. Yam, too hated and feared him as much as his brethren in the heaven. To wit, both the Gods in heaven and Yam in hell refused to accept Ravana. So Lord Ram thought: “Doesn’t matter; I will grant Ravana a place where no one can object, for it is my own sanctuary. I have made him pay for his misdeeds, so now it is obligatory for me to give his soul a place to abide. If the Gods and Yam won’t accept him, well and good; I myself would accept him! And no one can say anything as to this abode for Ravana’s soul, because I have a right to grant admission to anyone in my personal chambers.” Say, how gracious and loving Lord Sri Ram, our Lord, is, indeed!]

छं०. जय कृपा कंद मुकुंद द्वंद हरन सरन सुखप्रद प्रभो । १ ।
 खल दल बिदारन परम कारन कारुणीक सदा बिभो ॥ २ ॥
 सुर सुमन बरषहिं हरष संकुल बाज दुंदुभि गहगही । ३ । संग्राम अंगन राम अंग अनंग बहु सोभा लही ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

jaya kṛpā kanda mukunda dvanda harana sarana sukhaprada prabhō. 1.
 khala dala bidārana parama kārana kārunīka sadā bibhō. 2.
 sura sumana baraṣahim haraṣa saṅkula bāja dundubhi gahagahī. 3.
 saṅgrāma aṅgana rāma aṅga anaṅga bahu sōbhā lahī. 4.

The gods and sages lavishly honoured and praised Lord Ram, praying as follows: ‘Glory to Lord Ram who is an embodiment of mercy, kindness and compassion (kṛpā kanda), who is a bestower of liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation to the soul of a creature (mukunda), who is a remover or dispeller of all confusions, doubts and perplexities (dvanda harana), who grants happiness and joy to those who seek refuge in his holy feet (sarana sukhaprada) --- (Chanda line no. 1)

---Who is an eliminator of hordes of wicked and evil creatures (khala dala bidārana), who is the primary cause of everything coming into being (“parama kārana kārunīka”, as he is Brahm, the Supreme Being who has created this world), who is eternal and absolute (sadā), and who is the almighty Lord of this creation (bibhō).’ (Chanda line no. 2)

Praising Lord Ram in this way, and overwhelmed with gratitude and joy, all the gods showered a rain of flowers upon him from the sky; they simultaneously played their kettle-drums to celebrate the occasion. (Chanda line no. 3)

Meanwhile, Lord Ram looked so handsome, beauteous and charming in the battle-field as if he was an embodiment of millions of Kamdeo, the god of beauty and charm. (Chanda line no. 4)

सिर जटा मुकुट प्रसून बिच बिच अति मनोहर राजहीं । ५ ।
 जनु नीलगिरि पर तड़ित पटल समेत उडुगन भ्राजहीं ॥ ६ ॥
 भुजदंड सर कोदंड फेरत रुधिर कन तन अति बने । ७ । जनु रायमुनीं तमाल पर बैठीं बिपुल सुख आपने ॥ ८ ॥

sira jaṭā mukuṭa prasūna bica bica ati manōhara rājahīm. 5.
 janu nīlagiri para taḍita paṭala samēta uḍugana bhrājahīm. 6.
 bhujadaṇḍa sara kōdaṇḍa phērata rudhira kana tana ati banē. 7.
 janu rāyamunīm tamāla para baiṭhīm bipula sukha āpanē. 8.

[These verses describe the physical beauty of Lord Ram.]

The Lord looked bewitchingly charming with a crown of matted hairs on his head (sira jaṭā mukuṭa) in which flowers were tucked here and there (prasūna bica bica)¹. (Chanda line no. 5)

The sight reminded one of the ‘Blue Mountain’ (nīlagiri) over which lightening dazzled in the sky (taḍita paṭala) along with the stars that twinkled here and there as soon as they could peep thorough the gap in the clouds (samēta uḍugana)². (Chanda line no. 6)

The Lord was moving his hands over his bow and arrows (bhujadaṇḍa sara kōdaṇḍa phērata)³. Drops of blood that were sprinkled over his body too added to the beauty of his form (rudhira kana tana ati banē)⁴. (Chanda line no. 7)

This fascinating sight was like so many birds of red colour sitting here and there on a dark catechu plant⁵. (Chanda line no. 8)

[Note—¹At the time of leaving for the battle-field, we have already read that Lord Ram had been so relaxed that he had spent some time to tuck in flowers in the lock of his hairs on his head—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-9 that precede Doha no. 86.

²In this imagery, the crown of matted hairs on Lord Ram’s head is like the blue mountain because of his dark complexion, the ear rings that shine as he moves his head is the dazzle of lightening, and the flowers tucked in the layers of hairs are the many stars that are seen in the sky.

³This line can also be read as “Lord Ram was turning or moving the bow and arrows in his two hands.”

⁴It was a battle-field, and not a royal court. A warrior who has just a while ago vanquished his enemy in a bloody duel is bound to be splattered with blood, and not sprinkled with scented water. Everything has its proper place where it finds its glory; while blood would be at odds in the ceremonial environment of pomp and pageantry of a royal court, it fits in perfectly well in the background of a battle-field.

⁵Here, the dark complexioned body of Lord Ram is compared to the catechu plant, and the drops of blood on his body to the bird with red feathers.]

दो०. कृपादृष्टि करि बृष्टि प्रभु अभय किए सुर बृंद । भालु कीस सब हरषे जय सुख धाम मुकुंद ॥ १०३ ॥

dōhā.

krpādr̥ṣṭi kari br̥ṣṭi prabhu abhaya ki'ē sura br̥nda.
bhālu kīsa saba haraṣē jaya sukha dhāma mukunda. 103.

Lord Ram glanced gracefully at the gods as if he was showering his blessing of fearlessness upon all of them.

All the monkeys and bears too felt exhilarated, applauding the Lord and saying: 'Glory to the Lord, Victory to you who is an embodiment of happiness, and a provider of joy and freedom from fears to others'. (Doha no. 103)

[Note—This is the 8th day that marks the end of the Epic War of Lanka. Now let us quickly recapitulate the verses of Ram Charit Manas that help us to trace the progress of the war and count the number of days it lasted.]

Chronology of the War of Lanka:

1st day of war—RCM, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 39—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 48.

2nd day of war—RCM, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 49—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precede Doha no. 55.

3rd day of war—RCM, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 64—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 72.

4th day of war—RCM, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 72—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 75. {Meghanad fights during the day and does a fire sacrifice in the night.}

5th day of war—RCM, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 75—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 78. {Meghanad killed by Laxman.}

6th day of war—RCM, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 78—to Doha no. 84. {Ravana enters the battle field; he performs a fire sacrifice in the evening.}

7th day of the war—RCM, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 85—to Doha no. 98.

The intervening night of the 7th and 8th day of the war—RCM, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 100.

8th day of the war (Ravana's death)—RCM, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 100—to Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 103.]

-----**-----

Section 18.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 9, verse no. 59—to Canto 11, verse nos. 1-88.

Before proceeding further and reading what happened after Ravana was dead, let us pause for a little while to read how sage Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan describes the events that culminated in Ravana's death. These are narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, from Canto 9, verse no. 59—to Canto 11, verse no. 88.

Section 18.2.1: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 59-68:-

मेघनादं हतं श्रुत्वा लक्ष्मणेन महाबलम् ।
रावणः पतितो भूमौ मूर्च्छितः पुनरुत्थितः । विललापातिदीनात्मा पुत्रशोकेन रावणः ॥ ५९॥ meghanādaṃ hataṃ śrutvā lakṣmaṇena mahābalaṃ । rāvaṇaḥ patito bhumau mūrccitaḥ punarutthitaḥ । vilalāpātīdīnātmā putraśokena rāvaṇaḥ ॥ 59॥

Hearing that the most brave, strong and courageous Meghnad has been killed by Laxman, Ravana fainted and fell on the ground. When he regained his consciousness, he lamented, mourned and wailed woefully, grieving gravely for his dead son (59).

पुत्रस्य गुणकर्माणि संस्मरन् पर्यदेवयत् ।
अद्य देवगणाः सर्वे लोकपाला महर्षयः ॥ ६०॥
हतमिन्द्रजितं ज्ञात्वा सुखं स्वप्स्यन्ति निर्भयाः ।
इत्यादि बहुशः पुत्रलालसो विललाप ह ॥ ६१॥
ततः परमसङ्कुद्धो रावणो राक्षसाधिपः । उवाच राक्षसान् सर्वान्निनाशयिषुराहवे ॥ ६२॥ putrasya guṇakarmāṇi saṁsmaran paryadevayat । adya devagaṇāḥ sarve lokapālā maharṣayaḥ ॥ 60॥ hatamindrajitam jñātvā sukhaṁ svapsyanti nirbhayāḥ । ityādi bahuśaḥ putralālaso vilalāpa ha ॥ 61॥ tataḥ paramasaṅkruddho rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ । uvāca rākṣasān sarvānnināśayiṣurāhave ॥ 62॥

60-62. Recalling the great qualities, the unique characters, the rare virtues and the valiant deeds of his son, Ravana began grieving and mourning a lot. 'Today, all the Gods, Lokpals (custodians of the Lokas or the various worlds) and great sages and hermits (60) shall sleep happily and fearlessly knowing that Indrajeet (my son) has been killed'—in this sarcastic manner, he lamented for his son in various ways, overwhelmed as he was by affection for his late son (61).

Thence, after sometimes, the king of demons, Ravana, recovered himself; he became extremely furious with anger and indignation. He discussed with all his ministers how to destroy the enemy in the war (62).

स पुत्रवधसन्तप्तः शूरः क्रोधवशं गतः ।
 संवीक्ष्य रावणो बुद्ध्या हन्तुं सीतां प्रदुद्रुवे ॥ ६३॥
 खड्गपाणिमथायान्तं क्रुद्धं दृष्ट्वा दशाननम् । राक्षसीमध्यगा सीता भयशोकाकुलाभवत् ॥ ६४॥ sa putravadhasantaptaḥ śūraḥ krodhavaśaṁ gataḥ । saṁvīkṣya rāvaṇo buddhyā hantum sītāṁ pradudruve ॥ 63॥ khaḍgapāṇimathāyāntaṁ kruddhaṁ drṣṭvā daśānanam । rākṣasīmadhyagā sītā bhayaśokākulābhavat ॥ 64॥

63-64. Then the brave and courageous Ravana, being overwhelmed by remorse and grief at the death of his son, thought of something, and then he angrily rushed to kill Sita¹ (63).

Seeing the 10-headed demon rushing wrathfully and full of vengeance towards herself with a sword drawn in his hands, Sita—who was sitting surrounded by demonesses—became terrified by fear (64).

[Note—¹What did Ravana suddenly think that made him spring up and dash for Sita like a mad man? He thought for a while and came to the conclusion that it was she who was the cause of this war in which his dear son Meghnad was killed. This thought filled him with a burning desire to kill her, to avenge his son's death, for he concluded that even if his enemy wins the war and enters Lanka as a conqueror, he will find the trophy, for which all this havoc was perpetrated, gone.

Ravana decided that he will never let his enemy win hands down; and if nothing else then at least he would ensure that he fails to get back Sita for whom he had waged this destructive war.

So the mere thought that it was Sita who was responsible for all the disaster and the ruin that had befallen on the demon race, and the desire to defeat his enemy by default, filled him with wrathful vengeance against her; and in order to vent his ire, he madly dashed to her, with all the ferocity at his command and the objective of killing her.]

एतस्मिन्नन्तरे तस्य सचिवो बुद्धिमान् शुचिः । सुपाश्वो नाम मेधावी रावणं वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ६५॥
 ननु नाम दशग्रीव साक्षाद्वैश्रवणानुजः । वेदविद्याव्रतस्नातः स्वकर्मपरिनिष्ठितः ॥ ६६॥ etasminnantare tasya sacivo buddhimān śuciḥ । supārśvo nāma medhāvī rāvaṇaṁ vākyamabravīt ॥ 65॥ nanu nāma daśagrīva sākṣādvaiśravaṇānujaḥ । vedavidyāvratasnātaḥ svakarmapariniṣṭhitaḥ ॥ 66॥

65-66. Just at that time, one of his ministers named Supaarshava, who was intelligent, wise, pure-hearted and scholarly, intervened and said (65), 'Oh the Lord with ten necks (daśagrīva)! What is this? What are you doing? You are a younger brother of Kuber, the son of the illustrious sage Visrawa. You are an expert in the tenets of the Vedas, and you diligently observe all the rules and regulations prescribed by them—such as bathing at the end of sacrifices etc. (to purify yourself), observing fast, and in general doing all other such things that are ordained by the scriptures for a person of your stature and birth¹. (66)

[Note—¹To wit, you diligently follow all the tenets of the scriptures known as the Vedas, and are very particular about adhering to them. You must remember that you are not an ordinary demon, but have a great sage named Visrawa as your father. This being the case, thou art also a Brahmin by birth, and by the same relationship thou art are a brother of Kuber, the treasurer of gods and the son of the same sage by another wife, and hence thou art related to both Kuber as well as the gods. So therefore, thou ought to be careful with what thou doest.

Why truly, if thou wert like other demons, thou wouldn't have bothered to follow the instructions of the Vedas, for demons are against them as a general rule. It shows that thou are aware of thine noble birth and lineage. So then, what has happened to thee now that thou act so rashly and against thine own very nature? Why do thou give an excuse to Fate to push thee to the fire of hell by doing aught in reckless anger that violates the limits of tolerance and nullifies all the merit that has accrued to thee for thy diligently observing the tenets of the Vedas and performing great fire sacrifices all thine life?

Ponder over what I have said; weigh all the pros and cons, the losses and the gains, before acting rashly in any manner, for me thinks that thou hast much to lose and little to gain, and thou therefore ought naught to do something without due diligence.]

अनेकगुणसम्पन्नः कथं स्त्रीवधमिच्छसि ।
 अस्माभिः सहितो युद्धे हत्वा रामं च लक्ष्मणम् ।
 प्राप्स्यसे जानकीं शीघ्रमित्युक्तः स न्यवर्तत ॥ ६७॥

ततो दुरात्मा सुहृदा निवेदितं वचः सुधर्म्यं प्रतिगृह्य रावणः ।
गृहं जगामाशु शुचा विमूढधीः पुनः सभां च प्रययौ सुहृदृतः ॥ ६८॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे नवमः सर्गः ॥ ९॥

anekaguṇasampannaḥ katham strīvadhamicchasi । asmābhiḥ sahito yuddhe hatvā rāmaṁ ca lakṣmaṇam । prāpsyase jānakīm śīghramityuktaḥ sa nyavartata ॥ 67॥ tato durātmā suhrdā niveditaṁ vacaḥ sudharmaṁ pratigrhya rāvaṇaḥ । grhaṁ jagāmāśu śucā vimūḍhadhīḥ punaḥ sabhāṁ ca prayayau suhrdvṛtaḥ ॥ 68॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe navamaḥ
sargaḥ ॥ 9॥

67-68. Being endowed with so many virtues and respecting so many moral values, how can you ever think of killing a woman (specially when she is unarmed and already distressed)? Accompanied by all of us, you will soon kill Sri Ram and Laxman in the war, and then you can have Janki (Sita) (as a trophy of war).

[To wit, if you can have Sita by conquest, why should you dirty your hands by killing a woman? Will it not make you infamous in the world; will it not give your name a blot that you vented your frustration on an unarmed lady when you could not vanquish her husband in the battle-field? Would it not nullify instantly the glory that you have so diligently acquired by your famed conquests when you had successfully trounced even the mighty gods? Have patience for a while. Be sure that we, the mighty demons, will soon defeat your enemy, and then you can rightly claim that lady for whom you had taken so much trouble. You will lose your trophy if you act recklessly now. What's the use?]¹

When Ravana was thus dissuaded by his minister from acting rashly in haste, he checked himself and returned back (67).

The wicked and pervert Ravana, being greatly confounded, disturbed and confused by the developments, as he was already under great mental stress and overwhelmed with grief at the loss of his son Meghnad, could not think rationally himself. So he meekly accepted whatever advice that was given to him by his well-wisher (the minister Suparshava), all the more because this advice seemed logical to him, and was in accordance with established rules of behaviour and code of conduct meant for a person of his stature and birth.

Thereafter, he went back home. Next day he went to the royal court; he was accompanied by his well-wishers (68).

Thus ends Canto 9 of Lanka Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan, that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and his consort goddess Uma.

Section 18.2.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 1-61:-

॥दशमः सर्गः ॥
 श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।
 स विचार्य सभामध्ये राक्षसैः सह मन्त्रिभिः ।
 निर्ययौ येऽवशिष्टास्तै राक्षसैः सह राघवम् ॥ १॥
 शलभः शलभैर्युक्तः पूज्वलन्तमिवानलम् ।
 ततो रामेण निहताः सर्वे ते राक्षसा युधि ॥ २॥
 स्वयं रामेण निहतस्तीक्ष्णबाणेन वक्षसि ।
 व्यथितस्त्वरितं लङ्कां प्रविवेश दशाननः ॥ ३॥

॥daśamaḥ sargaḥ ॥
 śrīmahādeva uvāca ।
 sa vicārya sabhāmadhye rākṣasaiḥ saha mantribhiḥ । niriyayau ye'vaśiṣṭāstai rākṣasaiḥ saha rāghavam ॥ 1॥ śalabhaḥ śalabhairiyuktaḥ prajvalantamivānalam । tato rāmeṇa nihatāḥ sarve te rākṣasā yudhi ॥ 2॥ svayaṃ rāmeṇa nihatastīkṣṇabāṇena vakṣasi । vyathitastvaritaṃ laṅkāṃ praviveśa daśānanaḥ ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Then he (Ravana) discussed the situation with other demons and ministers present in the court. Deciding on a final course of action, he collected all the remaining demons that had survived the war till now, and headed to the battle-field to face Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) (1), just like the moth is accompanied by other insects when it heads towards a flame to get burnt in the fire.

Lord Ram engaged all the demons who had accompanied Ravana and killed them in the battle that followed. (2)

The 10-headed one (Ravana) was gravely hurt himself by sharp arrows shot by Sri Ram which hit him in his chest. Being thus gravely wounded, Ravana immediately returned back to the fort of Lanka (3).

दृष्ट्वा रामस्य बहुशः पौरुषं चाप्यमानुषम् ।
 रावणो मारुतेश्चैव शीघ्रं शुक्रान्तिकं ययौ ॥ ४॥
 नमस्कृत्य दशग्रीवः शुक्रं प्राञ्जलिब्रवीत् । भगवन् राघवेणैवं लङ्का राक्षसयुथपैः ॥ ५॥
 विनाशिता महादैत्या निहताः पुत्रबान्धवाः । कथं मे दुःखसन्दोहस्त्वयि तिष्ठति सद्गुरौ ॥ ६॥

dr̥ṣṭvā rāmasya bahuśaḥ pauruṣaṃ cāpyamānuṣam । rāvaṇo māruteścaiva śīghraṃ śukrāntikaṃ yayau ॥ 4॥ namaskṛtya daśagrīvaḥ śukraṃ prāñjalirabravit । bhagavan rāghaveṇaivamaṃ laṅkā rākṣasayuthapaiḥ ॥ 5॥

vināsitā mahādaityā nihatāḥ putrabāndhavāḥ । katham me duḥkhasandohastvayi tiṣṭhati sadgurau ॥ 6॥

4-6. Awed and dumbfounded when he noted that both Lord Sri Ram and Maruti (Hanuman) were doing countless super-human deeds that defied his imagination¹, Ravana wasted no time as he hurriedly went to his Guru Sukracharya (to seek his advice on the future course of action) (4).

The 10-necked Ravana (daśagrīvaḥ) bowed before him with reverence and said with folded hands, 'Oh Lord! Raghav (Sri Ram) has destroyed the whole city of Lanka along with the chief commanders of the demon army, great demon warriors, their sons, relatives and friends. How come we have reached such a miserable and sorrowful state of affairs while having you as our true Guru²? (5-6).

[Note—¹Ravana was utterly confused and at his wits end to observe how easily his mighty demon army, that was reputed to be virtually invincible, was being routed so quickly by Lord Ram and Hanuman. So he rushed to his Guru named Sukracharya to report the matter and seek advice.

²Ravana politely admonished his guru Sukracharya, saying that the latter is doing nothing to prevent such a catastrophic sequence of events from happening. Why is he not doing or devising some way to help the demons as a true and honest guru ought to do; why is not being loyal to the race which has always revered him as its guide and well-wisher?

Remember: Sukracharya is said to be the Guru, a moral preceptor, teacher and advisor, of the demon race, just like Brihaspati is for the Gods.]

इति विज्ञापितो दैत्यगुरुः प्राह दशाननम् ।
होमं कुरु प्रयत्नेन रहसि त्वं दशानन ॥ ७॥
यदि विघ्नो न चेद्धोमे तर्हि होमानलोत्थितः ॥ ८॥
महान् रथश्च वाहाश्च चापतूणीरसायकाः ।
सम्भविष्यन्ति तैर्युक्तस्त्वमजेयो भविष्यसि ॥ ९॥ iti vijñāpito daityaguruḥ prāha daśānanam । homaṁ kuru prayatnena rahasi tvaṁ daśānana ॥ 7॥ yadi vighno na ceddhome tarhi homānalotthitaḥ ॥ 8॥ mahān rathaśca vāhāśca cāpatūṇīrasāyakāḥ । sambhaviṣyanti tairyuktastvamajeyo bhaviṣyasi ॥ 9॥

7-9. When the 10-headed Ravana (daśānana) pleaded remorsefully in this manner, the Guru of demons decided to help his disciple. So he prescribed the following way (by which Ravana could fulfill his objectives and achieve success in his endeavours): 'Oh the 10-headed one! In whatever way it is possible for you, go to a secluded place and perform a fire sacrifice (7). If there is no interference in it (i.e. if you are able to complete the fire sacrifice successfully), then out of it shall emerge a large chariot, horses, a bow, a quiver and arrows. Once you get them, you would become unconquerable and invincible. [So go immediately, and perform this victory begetting fire sacrifice.] (8-9).

गृहाण मन्त्रान् मदतान् गच्छ होमं कुरु द्रुतम् ।
 इत्युक्तस्त्वरितं गत्वा रावणो राक्षसाधिपः ॥ १०॥
 गुहां पातालसदृशीं मन्दिरे स्वे चकार ह ।
 लङ्काद्वारकपाटादि बद्ध्वा सर्वत्र यत्नतः ॥ ११॥
 होमद्रव्याणि सम्पाद्य यान्युक्तान्याभिचारिके । गुहां प्रविश्य चैकान्ते मौनी होमं प्रचक्रमे ॥ १२॥

grhāṇa mantrān maddattān gaccha homaṁ kuru drutam । ityuktastvaritaṁ gatvā rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ ॥ 10॥ guhāṁ pātālasadrśīṁ mandire sve cakāra ha । laṅkādvāarakapāṭādi baddhvā sarvatra yatnataḥ ॥ 11॥ homadravyāṇi sampādyā yānyuktānyābhicārike । guhāṁ praviśya caikānte maunī homaṁ pracakrame ॥ 12॥

10-12. Accept the Mantras (a group of letters, syllables, words or phrases having magical powers) which I give you for this purpose, and go and perform the fire sacrifice using them immediately'.

When Sukracharya had advised this to Ravana, the king of demons (10), the latter went away and returned to his palace, where he got a deep pit (in the form of an underground bunker or a cavern) constructed underneath it.

Then he got all the gates and entrance points firmly closed shut (i.e. he ensured that they were properly bolted and sealed, double-checked and secured them, and then appointed guards to man them) (11).

Having done this, he thoughtfully collected all the different items required for doing such fire sacrifices as prescribed in the scriptures, and then entered the cave he had got ready.

Once inside, he selected a remote part of the cavern, and sitting down quietly there, he engaged himself in performing the prescribed sacrifice by observing due diligence and remaining focused on the task at hand (12).

उत्थितं धूममालोक्य महान्तं रावणानुजः ।
 रामाय दर्शयामास होमधूमं भयाकुलः ॥ १३॥
 पश्य राम दशग्रीवो होमं कर्तुं समारभत् । यदि होमः समाप्तः स्यात्तदाऽजेयो भविष्यति ॥ १४॥ utthitaṁ dhūmamālokyā mahāntaṁ rāvaṇānujaḥ । rāmāya darśayāmāsa homadhūmaṁ bhayākulaḥ ॥ 13॥ paśya rāma daśagrīvo homaṁ kartuṁ samārabhat । yadi homaḥ samāptaḥ syāttadā'jeyo bhaviṣyati ॥ 14॥

13-14. Then Ravana's younger brother (Vibhishan) saw a huge column of smoke rising in the sky¹, and he became alarmed (because it clearly hinted to him that Ravana was doing a sacrifice to gain victory in the war).

He showed that plume of smoke coming out of the fire sacrifice to Sri Ram (13). He (Vibhishan) said, 'Oh Lord Sri Ram! Look there; the 10-necked Ravana has started performing a fire sacrifice. If it is completed successfully, without any interference or hindrance, then he shall become unconquerable and invincible² (14).

[Note—¹The cave, cavern or pit had a chimney or vent to let the smoke emanating from the fire of the sacrifice to escape. This plume of smoke was seen by Vibhishan. It may also have been drifting towards Sri Ram's camp because of wind blowing that way. The aromatic herbs used as offering to the fire further confirmed the fact that it was not an accidental fire somewhere in Lanka, but a sacrificial ritual. Vibhishan got alarmed as he knew such things well, and was also aware that Ravana used to perform such sacrifices when he was faced with uncertainties in his many military campaigns.

Earlier, it is the same way that Vibhishan had realized that Meghnad was performing a fire sacrifice to gain victory in the battle. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 57-60.

²In Section 18.1 of this Chapter, that describes the death and deliverance of Ravana as narrated in Tulsidas' epic 'Ram Charit Manas', we have also read that Ravana performed a fire sacrifice to gain victory in the war, and that Vibhishan had got wind of it and immediately alerted Lord Ram about it. But there is no mention about 'who advised Ravana to do this fire sacrifice, what would he gain by doing it, and how Vibhishan came to know of it'. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 84—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 85.

These questions are answered here—(i) It was advised by Ravana's Guru Sukracharya; (ii) It would provide him with certain war paraphernalia, such as a chariot, horses, bows, arrows, quiver etc., that would make him invincible if he succeeds in completing the sacrifice, and (iii) Vibhishan got a hint of this sacrifice when he saw a thick plume of smoke rising high in the sky, and also when he could smell the aroma of certain herbs used for the purpose of making offerings in the sacrifice when the wind blew the smoke in the direction of Lord Ram's camp.]

अतो विघ्नाय होमस्य प्रेषयाशु हरीश्वरान् ।
तथेति रामः सुग्रीवसम्मतेनाङ्गदं कपिम् ॥ १५॥
हनूमत्प्रमुखान् वीरानादिदेश महाबलान् ।
प्राकारं लङ्घयित्वा ते गत्वा रावणमन्दिरम् ॥ १६॥ ato vighnāya homasya preṣayāśu harīśvarān । tatheti rāmaḥ sugrīvasammatenāṅgadaṁ kapim ॥ 15॥ hanūmatpramukhān vīrānādideśa mahābalān । prākāraṁ laṅghayitvā te gatvā rāvaṇamandiram ॥ 16॥

15-16. Hence, it is prudent and necessary for you to dispatch the commanders of the monkey army as soon as possible to create obstacles in the completion of the fire sacrifice (for otherwise Ravana would never be defeated)'.

Saying 'alright', Sri Ram consulted Sugriv, and ordered Angad, Hanuman and other great, valiant and strong warriors to proceed forthwith on the mission¹. All of them leapt across the ramparts of the city wall (i.e. the fort of Lanka), and quickly reached Ravan's palace (15-16).

[Note—¹It will be noted that Ravana and Meghnad had got a taste of their own medicine. They were used to defiling the fire sacrifices of sages, hermits and seers. Though this ordering of destruction of a fire sacrifice was not a good act for Lord Ram to do, as he was an upholder of righteousness and supporter of good deeds, but we must remember that he was fighting a war with a cunning and evil enemy, and that wars have different set of rules as compared to peaceful times when conditions are normal.

Besides this, the Lord wished to give a message that a thorn has to be plucked out by another thorn or a needle; it was a literal tit-for-tat for the demons who had been relentlessly defiling fire sacrifices of sages.

It also shows that when all means to avoid confrontation were exhausted, when the wicked, the pervert, the rascal and the unrighteous evil fellows who were embodiments of every imaginable forms of sin and cruelty, would not see reason and mend their ways, then for the larger good of the world, in the larger interest of restoring order and peace in this world, the Lord had no other alternative but to administer a bitter medicine to the demons to which they were so accustomed. Drastic situations need equally drastic remedies, for oftentimes it does become imperative to use harsh methods for the larger interest of the society and humanity. If the carrot doesn't work, the stick has to be oftentimes used.

If the Lord would have shown mercy and compassion—which is actually his habit and wont—on these cruel demons, then it would have meant that multitudes would have continued to suffer due to the wickedness of a handful of evil creatures. So it was better to sacrifice such cruel creatures and salvage the boat of peaceful and harmonious existence rather than pretending to be righteous and let the humanity at large suffer. Being a King and Lord of the universe and a caretaker of its inhabitants, it was morally bound on Sri Ram to protect his suffering subjects from the cruelty and tyranny unleashed by Ravana and his kith and kin.

So the ordering of the destruction of Ravana's fire sacrifice should be seen in this context.]

दशकोट्यः प्लवङ्गानां गत्वा मन्दिररक्षकान् ।
 चूर्णयामासुरश्वांश्च गजांश्च न्यहनन् क्षणात् ॥ १७॥
 ततश्च सरमा नाम प्रभाते हस्तसञ्ज्ञया । विभीषणस्य भार्या सा होमस्थानमसूचयत् ॥ १८॥ daśakoṭyaḥ plavaṅgānāṃ gatvā mandirarakṣakān । cūrṇayāmāsuraśvāṃśca gajāṃśca nyahanan kṣaṇāt ॥ 17॥ tataśca saramā nāma prabhāte hastasanjñayā । vibhīṣaṇasya bhāryā sā homasthānamasūcayat ॥ 18॥

17-18. Those 10 crore¹ monkeys crushed (trounced and defeated) the guards of the palace, and killed numerous horses and elephants in a very short while (17).

[There was a great tumult throughout the night in Lanka as the monkeys rampaged wildly through the city.] As soon as it was dawn, the wife of Vibhishan, whose name was Sarma, indicated the place of the sacrifice by a gesture of her hands. [To wit, Sarma showed the monkeys the trap-door leading to the cavern where Ravana was doing his fire sacrifice.]² (18).

[Note—¹1 Crore = 10 million. Poets and bards are accustomed to using hyperbole while describing events. So what actually is meant here is ‘multitudes of monkey warriors’; or ‘a large number of monkey warriors’; or ‘hundreds of monkey warriors’.

²This is how ‘the enemy within’ betrays. Ravana's bad times had made him forget about Sarma, or perhaps he regarded her as irrelevant, someone who did not require any special attention. It proved fatal for him. Ravana should have imprisoned her as soon as he kicked Vibhishan out of Lanka. This slight miss in his radar of prudence, coupled with a faulty strategy of neglecting a traitor's wife, resulted in the whole planning to win a ruthless war came tumbling down like a pack of cards. He should have, at the least, put her under strict guard of trusted female demons to monitor all her activities; he should have suspected her because her husband, Vibhishan, had turned out to be a traitor. This was a big blunder from the strategic point of view that Ravana made and never lived to regret.

But at the same time it also proves how tolerant and accepting he was. Vibhishan had offended him, so there was no reason he had though why he should punish his wife for it. If we be neutral observers then this point must not miss us, and we will be inclined to empathise with Ravana that when the time was in his favour everyone raised a toast for his health, but when the tide of time turned against him then even those whom he never offended or harmed or suspected turned against him, such as Sarma in this case who was not punished or harmed in any way just because her husband Vibhishan had become a betrayer and a traitor by turning hostile to his own brother Ravana, who was also the king of the demon race.]

गुहापिधानपाषाणमङ्गदः पादघट्टनैः ।
 चूर्णयित्वा महासत्त्वः प्रविवेश महागुहाम् ॥ १९॥
 दृष्ट्वा दशाननं तत्र मीलिताक्षं दृढासनम् ।
 ततोऽङ्गदाज्ञया सर्वे वानरा विविशुर्द्रुतम् ॥ २०॥ guhāpidhānapāṣāṇamaṅgadaḥ pādaghaṭṭanaiḥ । cūrṇayitvā mahāsattvaḥ praviveśa mahāguhām ॥ 19॥ dr̥ṣṭvā daśānanam tatra mīlitākṣam dṛḍhāsanam । tato'ṅgadājñayā sarve vānarā viviśurdrutam ॥ 20॥

19-20. The most strong and valorous Angad kicked aside and broke to pieces the heavy stone which was put at the entrance of the cave to block it. Then he entered the deep pit or cavern (where Ravana was performing his fire sacrifice) (19).

There he saw the 10-headed one (Ravana) sitting cross-legged in a meditative posture with closed eyes. Then, on the orders of Angad, all the monkeys quickly trooped inside the cave (20).

तत्र कोलाहलं चक्रुस्ताडयन्तश्च सेवकान् ।
 सम्भारांश्चिद्विपुस्तस्य होमकुण्डे समन्ततः ॥ २१॥
 सुवमाच्छिद्य हस्तात्त्वं रावणस्य बलादुषा । तेनैव सञ्जघानाशु हनूमान् प्लवगाग्रणीः ॥ २२॥ tatra kolāhalaṃ cakrustāḍayantaśca sevakān । sambhārāṃścikṣipustasya homakuṇḍe samantataḥ ॥ 21॥ sruvamācchidya hastācca rāvaṇasya balāduṣā । tenaiva sañjaghānāśu hanūmān plavagāgrāṇiḥ ॥ 22॥

21-22. The monkeys barged inside the grotto and went berserk, ransacking the cave. They started thrashing the servants and attendants, and created a great ruckus. They threw all the different items kept there for the fire sacrifice in the fire pit (21).

Hanuman, who was leading the monkeys, snatched the ladle forcefully from the hands of Ravana, and hit him hard with it (using it as a baton) (22).

घ्नन्ति दन्तैश्च काष्ठैश्च वानरास्तमितस्ततः ।
 न जहौ रावणो ध्यानं हतोऽपि विजिगीषया ॥ २३॥
 प्रविश्यान्तःपुरे वेष्टमन्यङ्गदो वेगवत्तरः । समानयत्केशबन्धे धृत्वा मन्दोदरीं शुभाम् ॥ २४॥

ghnanti dantaisca kāṣṭhaisca vānarāstamitastataḥ । na jahau rāvaṇo dhyānaṃ hato'pi vijigīṣayā ॥ 23॥ praviśyāntaḥpure veśmānyaṅgado vegavattaraḥ । samānayatkēśabandhe dhṛtvā mandodarīm śubhām ॥ 24॥

23-24. The monkeys were attacking Ravana from all sides, biting him with their teeth and hammering him with sticks. But he did not stop meditating inspite of being so fiercely attacked, hoping for ultimate victory (if he managed to successfully complete the sacrifice in the face of such aggravated insult to his self-respect) (23).

[When they had failed to provoke him or disturb him from doing his meditation and continuing with the fire sacrifice, then—] Angad swiftly went inside the royal palace and dragged the chaste Mandodari, Ravana's queen, out by pulling at her hairs; he brought her inside the cave where Ravana was doing the sacrificial ritual. (24).

रावणस्यैव पुरतो विलपन्तीमनाथवत् ।
 विददाराङ्गदस्तस्याः कञ्जुकं रत्नभूषितम् ॥ २५॥
 मुक्ता विमुक्ताः पतिताः समन्ताद्ग्लानसञ्चयैः ।
 श्लोणिसूत्रं निपतितं तुटितं रत्नचित्रितम् ॥ २६॥ rāvaṇasyaiva purato vilapantīmanāthavat ।

vidadārāṅgadastasyāḥ kañjukam ratnabhūṣitam ॥ 25॥ muktā vimuktāḥ patitāḥ samantādratnasañcayaiḥ । śroṇisūtram nipatitam truṭitam ratnacitritam ॥ 26॥

25-26. After hauling Mandodari inside the cave, Angad tore her clothes in front of Ravana. First he ripped off her bodice which was studded with different kinds of precious stones. Meanwhile, Mandodari wailed and lamented woefully and helplessly like a destitute (25).

The pearls of the bodice came off; they scattered here and there on the ground along with the other gems that too had been ripped off. In a similar way, the gem-studded chastity-belt also snapped and fell on the ground¹ (26)

[Note—¹When all other means to make Ravana abandon his fire sacrifice had failed, Angad decided to do something so reprehensible and denigrating for the dignity and honour of Ravana that no matter how much he would try to restrain his anger he will no longer be able to control himself.

So Angad went inside the royal palace and dragged his chief queen Mandodari out by pulling at her hairs. He hauled her inside the cave and disrobed her before her husband while the rest of his friends watched in amusement, and perhaps some of the close bodyguards of Ravana too watched in horror.

Angad did it on purpose as he judged that it would be such a singularly horrifying act of insult that Ravana would be forced to break his vows and get up from his seat. This would mean that his fire sacrifice was disrupted.]

कटिप्रदेशाद्विरस्ता नीवी तस्यैव पश्यतः ।
 भूषणानि च सर्वाणि पतितानि समन्ततः ॥ २७॥
 देवगन्धर्वकन्याश्च नीता हृष्टैः प्लवङ्गमैः । मन्दोदरी रुरोदाथ रावणस्याग्रतो भृशम् ॥ २८॥ kaṭipradeśādvistrastā nīvī tasyaiva paśyataḥ । bhūṣaṇāni ca sarvāṇi patitāni samantataḥ ॥ 27॥ devagandharvakanyāśca nītā hrṣṭaiḥ plavaṅgamaiḥ । mandodarī rurodātha rāvaṇasyāgrato bhr̥śam ॥ 28॥

27-28. The garment worn by her on the lower half of her body became loose from the waist, and even while Ravana watched, stunned and appalled in horror, and overwhelmed with excess of indignation, it slid down from her waist. All her ornaments fell down and scattered everywhere (27).

Similarly, out of jest and mischief, other monkeys gleefully brought there from the royal palace numerous other maidens belonging to the Gods and Gandharvas (who had been forcefully kept by Ravana as his mistresses).

At the sight of this awful spectacle of mass disrobing and dishonouring of the women of the royal household, Mandodari began weeping and lamenting gravely in front of Ravana (28).

[Note—Angad tried to violate the modesty of Mandodari to instigate Ravana. Though it was a most outrageous and shocking incident to have been perpetrated by Angad, it was part of the job to cause hindrance in the completion of Ravana's fire sacrifice. Success in stopping Ravana from completing the fire sacrifice was of paramount importance, because it was a do or die situation in a war, and no chances could be taken. So goes the saying: "Everything is fair in war and love". Caution and scruples is always a casualty in these two situations.]

क्रोशन्ती करुणं दीना जगाद दशकन्धरम् ।
 निर्लज्जोऽसि परैरेवं केशपाशे विकृष्यते ॥ २९॥
 भार्या तवैव पुरतः किं जुहोषि न लज्जसे ।
 हन्यते पश्यतो यस्य भार्या पापैश्च शत्रुभिः ॥ ३०॥
 मर्तव्यं तेन तत्रैव जीवितान्मरणं वरम् । हा मेघनाद ते माता विलश्यते बत वानरैः ॥ ३१॥ krośanti karuṇaṃ dīnā jagāda daśakandharam । nirlajjo'si parairevaṃ keśapāśe vikṛṣyate ॥ 29॥ bhāryā tavaiva purataḥ kiṃ juhoṣi na lajjase । hanyate paśyato yasya bhāryā pāpaiśca śatrubhiḥ ॥ 30॥ martavyaṃ tena tatraiva jīvitānmaraṇaṃ varam । hā meghanāda te mātā kliśyate bata vānaraiḥ ॥ 31॥

29-31. She (Mandodari) became horrified; she felt helpless and hapless, miserable and pitiful, and wept and wailed most woefully. She shuddered in anger as she minced no words to sternly rebuke her 10-shouldered husband Ravana (daśakandharam), saying contemptuously: 'Alas! You are very shameless fellow. Your enemies are pulling your wife by her hairs, and you are trying to complete your fire sacrifice as if nothing matters. Aren't you ashamed of yourself? A person whose wife is humiliated and insulted in public, and her modesty so openly violated by his enemies committing such a ignoble act right in front of the person who calls himself her husband, while he watches such a heinous crime being perpetrated right before his nose, such an impotent husband should die then and there, for he has no right to live.

Oh Meghnad, my dear son! Alas, today your mother is being subjected to such horrible humiliation at the hands of these wicked monkeys (and your father does nothing to save her honour)! [I say on oath that had you been alive, this would not have happened. But alas, you are no more with me to protect your poor mother, and I am left to the mercy of fate. Why didn't I die the moment you left me; why didn't you take me along with you to the other world?] (29-31).

त्वयि जीवति मे दुःखमीदृशं च कथं भवेत् ।
 भार्या लज्जा च सन्त्यक्ता भार्त्रा मे जीविताशया ॥ ३२॥
 श्रुत्वा तद्देवितं राजा मन्दोदर्या दशाननः । उत्तस्थौ खड्गमादाय त्यज देवीमिति बुवन् ॥ ३३॥

tvayi jīvati me duḥkhamīdrśaṃ ca kathaṃ bhavet । bhāryā lajjā ca santyaktā bhartrā me jīvitāśayā ॥ 32॥

śrutvā taddevitaṃ rājā mandodaryā daśānanah । uttasthau khaḍgamādāya tyaja devīmiti bruvan ॥ 33॥

32-33. (Oh son!) If you had been alive, why would I have had to suffer so much? My husband has turned his face away from shame as well as from his wife in order to save his own life (because he thinks that by completing the fire sacrifice and appeasing the goddess Nikumbhi he would become invincible, so that his enemy may not kill him even if the same enemy would have no compunctions in disrobing his wife and dishonouring her right before his eyes)' (32).

Hearing this acerbic taunt and the mournful laments of Mandodari, the 10-headed Ravana (daśānanah) lost his patience, and stood up indignantly with a sword in hand, saying disgustfully: 'Oh you rascals! Leave this lady alone.' (33).

जयानाङ्गदमव्यग्रः कटिदेशे दशाननः ।
तदोत्सृज्य ययुः सर्वे विध्वंस्य हवनं महत् ॥ ३४॥
रामपार्श्वमुपागम्य तस्थुः सर्वे प्रहर्षिताः ॥ ३५॥ jaghānāṅgadamavyagraḥ kaṭideśe daśānanah । tadotsrjya yayuḥ sarve vidhvaṃsya havanam mahat ॥ 34॥ rāmapārśvamupāgamy tasthuḥ sarve praharṣitāḥ ॥ 35॥

34-35. As soon as he got up, the 10-headed one Ravana kicked Angad violently on the small of his back. Meanwhile, all other monkeys ransacked the fire sacrifice, and departed immediately from there (34).

Successfully completing their mission, all of them presented themselves before Sri Ram; they were very cheerful and elated at their success (35).

[Note—As soon as Ravana got up from his seat, which meant that his meditation and the strict vows that he was supposed to keep while performing the fire sacrifice were disrupted, the monkeys immediately stopped harassing Mandodari and other ladies of his royal household. It implies that they had no real intention of outraging their modesty, for they had done so only to provoke Ravana and make him stop his fire sacrifice. They had no actual intent to violate the chastity and modesty of Ravana's women, but what they did, though truly a reprehensible act, was surely a tactic of war. Though disgusting, this measure had become necessary for Angad because otherwise Ravana's fire sacrifice could not have been stopped, and then he would have become invincible in the theatre of war.]

रवणस्तु ततो भार्यामुवाच परिसान्त्वयन् ।
दैवाधीनमिदं भदे जीवता किं न दृश्यते ।
त्यज शोकं विशालाक्षि ज्ञानमालम्ब्य निश्चितम् ॥ ३६॥
अज्ञानपूभवः शोकः शोको ज्ञानविनाशकृत् । अज्ञानपूभवाहन्धीः शरीरादिष्वनात्मसु ॥ ३७॥ rāvaṇastu tato bhāryāmuvāca parisāntvayan ।

daivādhīnamidaṃ bhadre jīvatā kiṃ na dṛśyate । tyaja śokaṃ viśālākṣi jñānamālambya niścitam ॥ 36॥ ajñānaprabhavaḥ śokaḥ śoko jñānavināśakṛt । ajñānaprabhavāhandhīḥ śarīrādiṣvanātmasu ॥ 37॥

36-37. Ravana became philosophical as he consoled his wife, saying: 'Oh Bhadre (i.e. a gentle and chaste lady)! All this sorrow and joy are dependent upon destiny; it ought to be obvious to any wise living being. Oh my lady with wide charming eyes (viśālākṣi)! By becoming aware of this established wisdom, you must stop lamenting, regretting, feeling remorseful and sorrowful¹ (36).

All sorts of sorrows, sadness, remorse, misery, gloom, dismay etc., have their origin in ignorance; they arise because the creature is unaware of the reality and he lacks true wisdom. For in all sooth, ignorance and lack of wisdom creates a false sense of attachment with the gross body and its sense organs, for the truth is that these entities are not conscious entities like one's Atma, one's 'self', is; and therefore this false sense of attachment unnecessarily makes the 'true self' of the creature feel affected by what happens to the body² (37)

[Note—¹Destiny decides what would happen in one's life. It is hard to change it. So it is futile to cry over misfortunes and rejoice over good fortunes. One must accept both with equanimity, fortitude, calmness and poise. This attitude will help a creature to tide over the greatest of misfortunes and adverse circumstances. Wailing and lamenting and cursing are of no avail, for what is destined to happen will happen. Stoic forbearance and tolerance is the bold way out, not buckling to the pressure tactics of Destiny as it would mean weakness of character.

²To wit, the body of a creature is gross, while the Atma, which is the true self of the creature, is subtle and sublime. The body is perishable, while the Atma is eternal. The Atma is eternally blissful, while the body is full of misery and pain. The body is not the true identity of a living being; his true identity is his Atma which is pure consciousness.

So therefore, only a fool would think that he is feeling miserable and suffering from pain as these negative emotions are limited to his gross body alone, and they do not affect his Atma, which is not only his 'true self' but is also eternally blissful and happy.

To regard these two entities, the body and the Atma, as one and the same is the root cause of all pain and misery. A wise man would understand that they are two independent entities; while the Atma is his true self and pure consciousness, the body is gross and inane.]

तन्मूलः पुत्रदारादिसम्बन्धः संसृतिस्ततः ।
 हर्षशोकभयक्रोधलोभमोहस्पृहादयः ॥ ३८॥
 अज्ञानप्रभवा ह्येते जन्ममृत्युजरादयः ।
 आत्मा तु केवलं शुद्धो व्यतिरिक्तो ह्यलेपकः ॥ ३९॥ tanmūlaḥ putradārādisambandhaḥ saṃsṛtistataḥ । harṣaśokabhayakrodhalobhamohasprhādayaḥ ॥ 38॥

ajñānaprabhavā hyete janmamṛtyujarādayaḥ । ātmā tu kevalaṃ śuddho vyatirikto hyalepakaḥ ॥ 39॥

38-39. This false sense of belonging or identification of the soul with the external, gross body is at the root of all illusions that create all deceptive relationships that exist in the mortal world of transmigration, such as of one being someone's son, wife or any other kind of kinship.

These relations and the attachments they create are the cause of all emotions, such as that of joy and happiness on one hand, and of grief, sorrow, regret, misery and lamentation on the other hand. It also leads to other negative traits such as anger, greed, delusions, envy and jealousy (38).

The stages in a creature's life, such as birth, death and decay (i.e. old age and its related problems of the body) are all due to ignorance—because the ignorant creature thinks the body to be his 'true self' or his true identity, whereas the fact is that it is not his gross body but his Atma (pure conscious soul) that is his true identity. And this Atma never takes a birth, gets old or dies as it is an eternal and constant entity. So therefore, where is the cause of one having 'three stages of life'?

Similarly, the Atma is eternally blissful and happy, so where is the cause of one suffering from sorrows and grief? And consequently, where is the cause of the Atma separately feeling happy or cheerful when it is inherently possessed of these virtues? (39).

आनन्दरूपो ज्ञानात्मा सर्वभावविवर्जितः ।
न संयोगो वियोगो वा विद्यते केनचित्सतः ॥ ४०॥
एवं ज्ञात्वा स्वमात्मानं त्यज शोकमनिन्दिते । इदानीमेव गच्छामि हत्वा रामं सलक्ष्मणम् ॥ ४१॥
आगमिष्यामि नो चेन्मां दारयिष्यति सायकैः । श्रीरामो वज्रकल्पैश्च ततो गच्छामि तत्पदम् ॥ ४२॥ ānandarūpo jñānātmā sarvabhāvavivarjitaḥ । na saṃyogo viyogo vā vidyate kenacitsataḥ ॥ 40॥ evaṃ jñātvā svamātmānaṃ tyaja śokamanindite । idānīmeva gacchāmi hatvā rāmaṃ salakṣmaṇam ॥ 41॥ āgamiṣyāmi no cenmāṃ dārayiṣyati sāyakaiḥ । śrīrāmo vajrakalpaiśca tato gacchāmi tatpadam ॥ 42॥

40-42. That Atma is an embodiment of wisdom and enlightenment; it is blissful and graceful; it is free from all feelings, emotions or sentiments pertaining to this mortal world. That Atma, which is an embodiment of Truth, does not have a union or separation with anybody or anything (and hence it does not suffer in any way) (40).

Oh the eternal, blissful one (a reference to Mandodari, albeit to her Ama which was her true identity, and not her physical body)¹! Forsake all your emotions of sorrow, lamentations, grieving, mourning and gloom of all kind (tyaja śokamanindite)! Realise the true nature of your soul (Atma), and become cheerful.

I am going right now to the battle-field. Either I shall return victorious after killing my enemy Sri Ram and Laxman (his brother) (41), or Sri Ram will perforate me and cut me into pieces (kill me) by his arrows which are as strong as Vajra (also “Bajra”; Indra's weapon). If the latter happens, then I shall attain emancipation and deliverance by going to the Lord's own abode and residing near his holy feet (gacchāmi tatpadam)² (42).

[Note—¹Ravana is addressing the ‘true self’ of Mandodari, which in the context of his discourse is obviously her Atma, and not her physical body. And since the Atma is eternal and blissful, Ravana addresses her with these epithets to remind her to abandon her grieving, and become happy.

²Ravana is very clear in his mind. It is that either he would win the war by getting rid of his enemy, or dying himself like a valiant warrior. In the latter case, he is sure to go to heaven. Why is he so sure of ‘going to heaven’ when everyone knows that he was a sinful demon?

Well, herein lies the wonderful trick! Anyone who has carefully read and understood his discourse for Mandodari would easily understand what he means. All the sins and evil deeds were done by Ravana's ‘gross body which was in the form of a demon’, but this body was ‘not his true self’. Who or what was his ‘true self’ or ‘true identity’? It was his ‘Atma, his soul’ which is pure consciousness, holy and divine.

So therefore, though seemingly committing great sins and evil deeds by his gross body of a demon, Ravana's soul remained pure within, and it is of this soul that he is now talking about going to heaven. Once his demonic gross body was fell by the arrows of Lord Ram, his Atma would be freed from the cage in which it had been trapped, and once out of it, the Atma would revert to its primary form of cosmic Consciousness. This is what Ravana hints at here.]

तदा त्वया मे कर्तव्या क्रिया मच्छासनात्प्रिये ।
सीतां हत्वा मया सार्धं त्वं प्रवेक्ष्यसि पावकम् ॥ ४३॥
एवं श्रुत्वा वचस्तस्य रावणस्यातिदुःखिता । उवाच नाथ मे वाक्यं शृणु सत्यं तथा कुरु ॥ ४४॥

tadā tvayā me kartavyā kriyā macchāsanātpriye । sītāṃ hatvā mayā sārdhaṃ tvaṃ pravekṣyasi pāvakam ॥ 43॥ evaṃ śrutvā vacastasya rāvaṇasyātiduḥkhitā । uvāca nātha me vākyaṃ śṛṇu satyaṃ tathā kuru ॥ 44॥

43-44. [Expressing his last wish, in case he dies in the battle-field, Ravana tells Mandodari—] ‘Oh my dear! If by mischance I die in the battle-field, I command you to do one thing, and treat it as my last wish. You must kill Sita¹ and then enter the funeral pyre with my dead body².’ (43)

Hearing these words of Ravana, Mandodari became very distressed, dismayed and gloomy. She said, ‘Oh my Lord! I tell you what is proper and fit under the present circumstances. Please pay heed to my advise and be wise to do accordingly³ (44).

[Note—¹There is nothing surprising in this wish of Ravana. This is a strategy usually followed by kings who are despots and tyrants—let not the enemy get what is considered a prized trophy of war; let not the enemy gain complete victory by denying him access of something for which he had fought the war.

By getting rid of Sita, Ravana wished to ensure that Sri Ram would be wringing his hands in utmost disgust, abject frustration, excessive of distress and dismay after the initial euphoria of winning the battle when he finds that Sita is dead. It would prove disastrous for the victor Sri Ram—for inspite of having won physical victory over Ravana in the battle, he would have actually lost the war because Sita, for whom the war was waged, would not be found alive.

²Ravana also wished to ensure that Mandodari is not subjected to grave insult and torture when the invading army finds out that Sita— for whom the whole war took place in the first place—is no more. It is very possible that they would wreak vengeance on Mandodari. Ravana's assumptions are not out of place after what Angad and his companions did to her to disrupt Ravana's fire sacrifices in verse nos. 24-28. Ravana feared for the worst.

But as it eventually happened, Mandodari did not keep his last wish. This is probably because Ravana had said so in a fit of disgust and rage, not with a cool head and rational thinking. It was a reckless instruction given at the time when he was under great emotional stress, and on the verge of losing everything. At such times one is apt to become irrational in one's thinking and words.

One is left to wonder the course the story of Ramayan would have taken had Mandodari carried out Ravana's last wish of killing Sita and burning herself in his funeral pyre! What would have then happened? How would Lord Ram return triumphantly and victoriously to Ayodhya after 14 years of exile during which he was proclaimed to have won a vicious war of Lanka that so much glorified him? Surely, if Sita would have been killed by Mandodari to honour her husband's last wish, the story would have ended in a complete different note.

But one thing cannot be denied: Mandodari had committed an error by not obeying the last wish of her husband. Though ordering of 'killing of Sita' was a wrong wish of Ravana, as it only indicated his frustration and perverted mind, and nothing else, so it was okay that Mandodari neglected it. But at least she could have carried out the other part of his instructions that was proper and fit, and certainly not out of order—which was 'to burn herself along with his dead body'. It is because for a chaste wife of a warrior king, life after her husband dies in a war is not worth an honourable living; the scriptures that deal with such matters as well as established traditions endorse it. It is thus prescribed so that her dignity, chastity, honour and self-respect are not compromised in the least after her husband is no more to protect her. It is to protect her honour from prying eyes of other ill-intentioned men who care little about propriety and probity as long as their passions are satisfied, and a helpless widow is their easy target.

³Please refer to verse nos. 55-61 herein below which clearly state the reason why Ravana did not pay heed to Mandodari's entreaty and advice to cease hostility. It also shows that he was certain of death, even determined to embrace it, and lays down the reasons why he wished Mandodari to die with him. He wished that all those who were associated with him must be killed in the presence of Sri Ram about whom he was convinced was the supreme Lord himself.

With this thinking as a backdrop of the war, one concludes that Ravana was being very wise in all his actions and deeds. In fact, by getting the sinful demons killed at the hands of the Lord God in the physical form of Lord Sri Ram, Ravana had ensured their spiritual well-being and eternal life; he had laid the ground for liberation and deliverance of his whole race which otherwise would have continued to suffer due to the excess of sinful life its members had been leading. The souls of the demons were cleaned of all the sins and the consequences of the evil deeds done by them when they were killed in the war with Lord Ram, as a result of which all of them attained emancipation and salvation. Their souls found eternal peace and rest.]

शक्यो न राघवो जेतुं त्वया चान्यैः कदाचन ।
 रामो देववरः साक्षात्प्रधानपुरुषेश्वरः ॥ ४५॥
 मत्स्यो भूत्वा पुरा कल्पे मनुं वैवस्वतं प्रभुः । ररक्ष सकलापद्भ्यो राघवो भक्तवत्सलः ॥ ४६॥

śakyo na rāghavo jetuṃ tvayā cānyaiḥ kadācana । rāmo devavaraḥ sākṣātpradhānapuruṣeśvaraḥ ॥ 45॥ matsyo bhūtvā purā kalpe manuṃ vaivasvataṃ prabhuḥ । rarakṣa sakalāpadbhyo rāghavo bhaktavatsalaḥ ॥ 46॥

45-46. Raghav (Sri Ram) cannot be conquered by you or anybody else at any time. Sri Ram is the supreme and the almighty Lord of the world; he is supreme Purush (the cosmic Being; the Supreme Lord); and he is the Lord of all the Gods (45).

Raghav (Sri Ram), who is beloved of his devotees, and he is benevolent and munificent towards them, had assumed the form of the legendary Fish and protected Vaivastamanu¹ from all his troubles at the beginning of this Kalpa (one cycle of creation and destruction) (46).

[Note—¹It refers to the Fish incarnation of Lord Vishnu; it is called the ‘Matsya Avatar’. In this incarnation as a Fish or Matsya, which is the first of ten divine incarnations of Vishnu, the Lord is said to have saved Manu, the progenitor of mankind, and the Saptarishis (the seven mental sons of the creator Brahma) along with their wives during the dooms-day deluge. They were made to board a boat which was pulled by this Fish and saved from being drowned. They re-populated the world later on. It is a story identical to the Biblical story of the Noah’s Arc.]

रामः कूर्मोऽभवत्पूर्वं लक्षयोजनविस्तृतः ।
 समुद्रमथने पृष्ठे दधार कनकाचलम् ॥ ४७॥
 हिरण्याक्षोऽतिदुर्वृतो हतोऽनेन महात्मना । क्रोडरूपेण वपुषा क्षोणीमुद्धरता क्वचित् ॥ ४८॥

rāmaḥ kūrmo'bhavatpūrvam lakṣayojanavistr̥taḥ । samudramathane pṛṣṭhe dadhāra kanakācalam ॥ 47॥ hiraṇyākṣo'tidurvṛtto hato'nena mahātmanā । kroḍarūpeṇa vapuṣā kṣoṇīmuddharatā kvacit ॥ 48॥

47-48. Lord Sri Ram was the one who had become (or manifested himself as) the legendary Tortoise¹ with a body extending up to 1 lakh (100 thousand) Yojans (i.e.

800 thousand miles approximately). At the time of the churning of the legendary ocean, it was he (in the form of the Tortoise) who had borne the huge mountain called Sumeru on his back (47).

During another of the earlier (ancient) times, he had assumed the form of the legendary Boar², and this great Soul had slayed the demon Hiranyaksha, who was very wicked and pervert, to liberate the earth from his clutches (48).

[Note—¹It is the second incarnation of Vishnu. The Lord had supported the legendary Mountain called Mandara, also known as Sumeru, which had started sinking during the churning of the ocean by the Gods and the Demons in search of Amrit, the elixir of eternal and life.

²It is the third incarnation of Vishnu in which he killed the demon Hiranyaaksha and lifted the earth from the flood water where it had vanished. According to some versions, this demon had hidden the earth in the bowls of the ocean. This extrication and resurrection of the earth is a symbolic way of saying that the Lord saves the creation from being submerged in the vast ocean of sins and evil. An Upanishad preached by Lord Varaaha appears in the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition as its 30th Upanishad. The female aspect of Varaaha is known as Goddess Vaaraahi.]

त्रिलोककण्टकं दैत्यं हिरण्यकशिपुं पुरा ।
हतावन्नारसिंहेन वपुषा रघुनन्दनः ॥ ४९॥
विक्रमैस्त्रिभिरेवासौ बलिं बद्ध्वा जगत्त्रयम् ।
आक्रम्यादात्सुरेन्द्राय भृत्याय रघुसत्तमः ॥ ५०॥ trilokakaṇṭakaṃ daityaṃ hiraṇyakaśipuṃ purā । hatavānnārasimhena vapuṣā raghunandanaḥ ॥ 49॥ vikramaistribhirevāsau baliṃ baddhvā jagattrayam । ākramyādātsurendrāya bhr̥tyāya raghusattamaḥ ॥ 50॥

49-50. This Raghunandan (Lord Sri Ram) had killed the cruel demon Hiranyakshipu, who was like a thorn for all the three divisions of the world (celestial, terrestrial and subterranean worlds), by assuming the body of half-man half-lion¹. [This incarnation of the Lord was called 'Narsingh' or 'Nir Singh'.] (49).

The same one who is the most exalted in king Raghu's race of Ayodhya (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) had tied king Bali², measured the whole of the world in his three giants steps, and then returned it to Indra, the king of gods, who was the Lord's follower, being the Lord's subordinate and servant. [This refers to the Dwarf incarnation of Lord Vishnu.] (50).

[Note—¹Lord Nrisingh or Narsingh is the half lion and half man incarnation of Lord Vishnu to slay the demon Hiranyakashipu who had been tormenting Prahalad, his son, because the latter worshipped and had devotion for Lord Vishnu whom the demon loathed. In this incarnation, the Lord appeared from the pillar to which the innocent lad was tied by the demon to prove to him the omnipresence and all-pervading form of the Supreme Being. Nrisingh is a personification of the grand virtues of dynamism, power, energy, valour and strength, and hence is worshipped by warriors and rulers in general. The Mantra of this Lord is believed to be very powerful and effective against enemies and opponents.

Lord Nrisingh is the fourth incarnation of the Supreme Being who had taken various forms to ward off and overcome evil forces in creation when they become ascendant and overcame the good and the righteous. The Lord did this to maintain order in the creation which is like his offspring.

²This is the fifth incarnation of Vishnu and an ancient one, for it took place in Sata Yuga, the 1st era of the 4-era cycle of creation and destruction according to Hindu scriptures. The Sata Yuga is also called the age of the Vedas as it was during this epoch the ancient scriptures known as the Vedas came into being and their hymns were primarily used to perform sacred fire sacrifices.

Hence, being an ancient incarnation of Lord Vishnu, Vaaman finds mention in the Vedas too—e.g. in Shatpath Brahman, 1/1/5; Taittiriya Brahman, 1/6/1; and Taittiriya Sanhita, 2/1/3.

When the great King Bali, the grandson of Prahalad for whom Vishnu had incarnated as Nrisingh, conquered the entire world and deprived Indra, the king of Gods who ruled over the heavens, Vishnu had taken the dwarfish form of a Brahmin mendicant to retrieve the heaven for Indra when he was requested by Aditi, the mother of Gods, to do so. He approached Bali, who was famous for his charities, as a ‘Vaaman’ or a dwarf, and begged him for ground sufficient enough to be covered by his three small steps. When the unsuspecting Bali agreed, Vaaman measured the entire earth and the nether world with one step, the heaven with the second step, and for the third step he measured Bali’s own head symbolizing the crown of the kingdom of Bali.

To wit, when Bali found that he was cornered as he could not fulfil the word given to a Brahmin, because the land for the third step was not available, he offered himself to be tied and enslaved by Lord Vaaman as a punishment for unfulfilled vow. So Lord Vaaman gracefully put his third step on Bali’s head, which though appeared to be a punishment but was actually a blessing in disguise.

From then onwards, Lord Vishnu is also called ‘Trivikram’—one who conquered the three worlds in three steps.

However, the Lord was very pleased with Bali’s principles of keeping one’s words even at the cost of allowing himself to be a slave of the Lord. So even though Lord Vaaman put his leg on Bali’s head, thereby pushing him into the nether world, yet the Lord is so kind and gracious that he saw the injustice that was done to Bali, a magnanimous and righteous King who had stood firm in his vow of making charity, and never rescinded on his commitment inspite of losing his crown and self-respect.

So therefore, the Lord made him the king of the nether world, and himself took up the job of protecting him there as his gate-keeper.]

रक्षसाः क्षत्रियाकारा जाता भूमेर्भरावहाः ।

तान् हत्वा बहुशो रामो भुवं जित्वा ह्यदान्मुनेः ॥ ५१॥

स एव साम्प्रतं जातो रघुवंशे परात्परः ।

भवदर्थे रघुश्रेष्ठो मानुषत्वमुपागतः ॥ ५२॥ rākṣasāḥ kṣatriyākārā jātā bhūmerbharāvahāḥ ।

tān hatvā bahuśo rāmo bhuvam jitvā hyadānmuneḥ ॥ 51॥

sa eva sāmpratam jāto raghuvaṃśe parātparaḥ । bhavadarthe raghuśreṣṭho mānuṣatvamupāgataḥ ॥ 52॥

51-52. When the demons assumed the form of Kshatriyas (warrior kings) and began tormenting mother earth, then the Lord manifested himself as sage Parashuram¹, killed them many times in battle, and having won (or snatched) the earth from their domination (or clutches) he handed it over to sage Kashyap (a Brahmin) (51).

Presently the same almighty Lord God of creation, who is eternal, infinite, almighty and unconquerable, has manifested himself as a human prince in the race of king Raghu of Ayodhya. He has done so for your sake².

[To wit, Lord Vishnu has come down as Lord Ram to punish you for the mischief you have been committing throughout your life just like he had done on other occasions I mention above.] (52)

[Note—¹This is the sixth incarnation of Vishnu. Parashuram was the youngest of the five sons of sage Jamdagni and his wife Renuka. He had subdued the haughty Kshatriya race or the warrior race led by king Kaartavirya who had become tyrannical and were oppressing others. The story goes that once Jamdagni doubted the infidelity of his wife Renuka and therefore asked his sons to behead her. The four sons refused and were cursed by him, but Parashuram did as told. The father was pleased and asked Parashuram to request for a boon, upon which the latter requested that his mother be revived, his brothers be pardoned, and Jamdagni should discard his angry temperament. The father agreed to all.

Jamdagni was killed by Shursena, the son of Kaartavirya-Arjuna, because the sage had refused to hand over the celestial cow known as Kapila to him. Extremely peeved by the Kshatriya race to which this king belonged, Parashuram vowed to eliminate the entire race from the surface of the earth as a revenge for the killing of his father. This was the reason why Parashuram had fought and killed thousands of Kshatriya to avenge the killing of his father by Kaartavirya-Arjuna.

²Mandodari had not realised what was in the mind of her husband. She was not privy to his internal thoughts, which made him so outwardly stubborn. Ravana had decided that he would attain emancipation and salvation by the only way he knew as a demon—which was to wage a fierce war and get himself killed by the Supreme Being, instead of having to endure the long-drawn process of attaining the same objective by other peaceful, righteous and auspicious means as prescribed by the scriptures.

There is no doubt as to this when we consider his conversation with Marich (Aranya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 30-35), his instructions to female demons whom he had appointed to guard Sita (Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65), his thoughts when he heard of the slaying of Khar and Dushan (Sundar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 15-19), as well as what he thinks in verse nos. 55-61 herein below.]

तस्य भार्या किमर्थं वा हता सीता वनाद्गता ।
मम पुत्रविनाशार्थं स्वस्यापि निधनाय च ॥ ५३॥
इतः परं वा वैदेहीं प्रेषयस्व रघूत्तमे । विभीषणाय राज्यं तु दत्त्वा गच्छामहे वनम् ॥ ५४॥

tasya bhāryā kimartham vā hr̥tā sītā vanādbalāt । mama putravināśārtham svasyāpi nidhanāya ca ॥ 53॥ itaḥ param vā vaidehīm preṣayasva raghūttame । vibhīṣaṇāya rājyaṁ tu dattvā gacchāmahe vanam ॥ 54॥

53-54. Why did you abduct his wife Sita from the Tapovan (Panchvati) to get my son (Meghanad) killed and get yourself killed too? (53).

[It is till not too late to make amends. At least you are alive. So listen to what I have to say—] You should send Vaidehi (Sita) back to Lord Sri Ram even at this late hour. Then you will do a wise thing by anointing your brother Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka. After that, we two, you and me, will go to the forest as Vanprastha (to spend the rest of our lives doing penances and austerities for the welfare of our souls as ordained by the scriptures, for it would prepare us for making an honourable exit from the world when our end comes)' (54).

मन्दोदरीवचः श्रुत्वा रावणो वाक्यमब्रवीत् ।
 कथं भद्रे रणे पुत्रान् भ्रातृन् राक्षसमण्डलम् ॥ ५३॥
 घातयित्वा राघवेण जीवामि वनगोचरः ।
 रामेण सह योत्स्यामि रामबाणैः सुशीघ्रणैः ॥ ५४॥
 विदार्यमाणो यास्यामि तद्विष्णोः परमं पदम् ।
 जानामि राघवं विष्णुं लक्ष्मीं जानामि जानकीम् ।
 ज्ञात्वैव जानकी सीता मयानीता वनाद्धृतात् ॥ ५५॥
 रामेण निधनं प्राप्य यास्यामीति परं पदम् ।
 विमुच्य त्वां तु संसाराद्गमिष्यामि सह प्रिये ॥ ५६॥ mandodarīvacaḥ śrutvā rāvaṇo vākyamabravīt । katham bhadre raṇe putrān bhrātṛn rākṣasamaṇḍalam ॥ 55॥ ghātayitvā rāghaveṇa jīvāmi vanagocaraḥ । rāmeṇa saha yotsyāmi rāmabāṇaiḥ suśīghragaiḥ ॥ 56॥ vidāryamāṇo yāsyāmi tadviṣṇoḥ paramaṁ padam । jñānāmi rāghavaṁ viṣṇuṁ lakṣmīm jñānāmi jānakīm । jñātvaiḥ jānakī sītā mayānītā vanādbalāt ॥ 57॥ rāmeṇa nidhanaṁ prāpya yāsyāmīti paramaṁ padam । vimucya tvāṁ tu saṁsārādgamiṣyāmi saha priye ॥ 58॥

55-58. Hearing the words of Mandodari, Ravana said 'Oh noble lady (bhadre)! After having had my sons (i.e., Akshay Kumar, Meghanad), brother (Kumbhakarna) and all the demon warriors slayed in the battle, how can I ever dream of spending my life in the forest as a forest-dwelling hermit doing penances?

There is no choice left for me now but to fight to the end with Sri Ram. I know that I shall be wounded and pierced by his swift arrows. But that would ensure I go to the abode of Lord Vishnu (i.e. to heaven).

I understand and I recognise that Raghav (Sri Ram) is Lord Vishnu himself, and Janki (Sita) is goddess Laxmi (the consort of Lord Vishnu). With this full understanding, and being well aware of it, I had purposely brought Sita forcibly from the forest (55-57) so that I can die at the hands of Sri Ram, and as a consequence attain his (Lord Vishnu's) supreme abode.

Oh dear! Now I shall take your leave and exit from this mundane delusory world of transmigration very happily and gladly and willingly. Nay, I will not go alone, but I shall take along with me all my faithful followers (i.e. the demons) who had been loyal to me all through (58).

[Note—¹This is Ravana's open confession. It shows that he was firm in his resolve to get all the male demons attain liberation and deliverance for their tormented souls by making them fight unto death in this war.

It also shows that he was not a selfish king who would seek spiritual rewards only for himself, but a generous and magnanimous ruler who wished to share with his fellow citizens this great reward like the way he had shared with them the spoils of his previous wars.

The question is: what happened to the female demons who survived their male companions? Well, many of them had perished in the fierce fire lit by Hanuman when he was burning Lanka—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 43-44. As a result, only the righteous members of the demon race had survived this cruel war; they were the citizens of the new Lanka which would be ruled by Vibhishan who ascended its throne. Once peace returned, prosperity followed, and the population multiplied to re-populate this majestic kingdom once again.]

परानन्दमयी शुद्धा सेव्यते या मुमुक्षुभिः ।
तां गतिं तु गमिष्यामि हतो रामेण संयुगे ॥ ५९॥
प्राप्त्य कल्मषाणीह मुक्तिं यास्यामि दुर्लभाम् ॥ ६०॥ parānandamayī śuddhā sevyate yā mumukṣubhiḥ । tām gatiṁ tu gamiṣyāmi hato rāmeṇa saṁyuge ॥ 59॥ prakṣālya kalmaṣāṇīha muktiṁ yāsyāmi durlabhām ॥ 60॥

59-60. The supreme state of pure and eternal bliss, the eternal state of peace and tranquility that spiritual aspirants and seekers of emancipation and salvation expect to enjoy, I shall get that stellar opportunity by voluntarily getting killed at the hands of Sri Ram (59).

In this manner, by washing (purging, cleaning) away all my sins, evils, misdeeds and vices that have tarnished my soul, I shall achieve the rarest of rare state of purity that would finally grant me liberation from the cycle of birth and death that entangles a creature to this gross mundane world of transmigration, along with its attendant delusions, horrors and miseries (60).

वलेशादिपञ्चकतरङ्गयुतं भूमादयं
दारात्मजासधनबन्धुञ्जपाभियुक्तम् ।
और्वानलाभनिजरोषमनङ्गजालं
संसारसागरमतीत्य हरिं वृजामि ॥ ६१॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे दशमः
सर्गः ॥ १०॥

kleśādipañcakataraṅgayutaṁ bhramāḍhyaṁ dārātmajāptadhanabandhujhaṣābhiyuktam । aurvānalābhanijaroṣamanaṅgajālaṁ saṁsārasāgaramatītya hariṁ vrajāmi ॥ 61॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe daśamaḥ
sargaḥ ॥ 10॥

61. I shall finally cross the world-like ocean that traps the creature endlessly in its whirlpools of delusions and false charms.

This huge ocean has five great tormentors or trouble-givers¹ in the form of its gigantic waves; its swirling whirlpools are symbolised by the countless deceits, shams, illusions and deceptions that are prevalent in this world; the many relationships that one develops in this artificial world are the many varieties of fish that dwell in the water of this ocean; anger, wrathfulness and vengeance are the many fires that rage here; and the net which keeps the creature trapped inside this ocean is symbolized by Kaam, the overbearing emotions of passion, lust, desires and longing for pleasure and comfort of the sense organs that dominate the mental horizon of all its inhabitants.

Well, how lucky and fortunate I am indeed that now I shall cross over this huge and intractable ocean that has trapped by soul, and go to the other side to find my way to the abode of Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu; i.e. to heaven).² (61).

[Note—¹The five tormenters referred in verse no. 61 that keep the creature miserable in this world are the following—(a) Avidya (ignorance); (b) Asmita (to regard Atma and the subtle body consisting of mind-intellect complex as one; also means pride, ego, haughtiness, hypocrisy, arrogance—or Ahankar; (c) Raag (attachment, infatuation, desire etc.); (d) Dwesh (ill-will, enmity, malice, hatred, confrontationist attitude etc.) and (e) Abhinivesh (fear of death).

²Verse nos. 55-61 are eye-openers for all those who doubt Ravana's intentions for waging this war. These verses explicitly tell that Ravana was well aware of what he was doing. His intention was noble and holy to the core. The external tantrums that he had thrown were just to mislead other demons—otherwise they wouldn't have fought at all. Like a true and benevolent king, he wanted all his men to share the largesse of emancipation and salvation which has literally come a-begging to be accepted at their very doorstep.

Please also refer to Uttar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 31-42, 58-59.]

Thus ends Canto 10 of Adhyatma Ramayan, narrating the conversation between Lord Shiva and his consort goddess Uma.

Section 18.2.3: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 1-88:-

[This Canto describes the battle between Lord Ram and Ravana, and the latter's final deliverance when he dies in the battle-field and his soul emerges from his gross demonic body to enter the holy body of the Lord to find eternal rest.]

॥एकादशः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

इत्युक्त्वा वचनं प्रेम्णा राज्ञीं मन्दोदरीं तदा ।

रावणः प्रययौ योद्धुं रामेण सह संयुगे ॥ १॥

दृढं स्यन्दनमास्थाय वृतो घोरैर्निशाचरैः ।

चक्रैः षोडशभिर्युक्तं सवरूथं सकूबरम् ॥ २॥

पिशाचवदनैर्घोरैः खरैर्युक्तं भयावहम् ।

सर्वास्त्रशस्त्रसहितं सर्वोपस्करसंयुतम् ॥ ३॥

॥ekādaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

ityuktvā vacanaṁ premṇā rājñīṁ mandodarīm tadā ।

rāvaṇaḥ prayayau yoddhum rāmeṇa saha saṁyuge ॥ 1॥

dṛḍhaṁ syandanamāsthāya vṛto ghorairniśācaraiḥ ।

cakraiḥ ṣoḍaśabhiryuktaṁ savarūthaṁ sakūbaram ॥ 2॥ piśācavadanairghoraiḥ kharairyuktaṁ bhayāvaham ।

sarvāstraśastrasahitaṁ sarvopaskarasamyutam ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Having affectionately consoled the chief queen Mandodari as described above, Ravana started off for the battle-field to fight the final battle with Sri Ram (1).

He mounted a sturdy and strong chariot which was surrounded by most formidable, ferocious and fierce demons. That chariot had 16 wheels, protective reinforced armour called a 'Baruth', and a 'Kubar' (a part of the chariot through which all the reins of the animals used to pull the chariot pass) (2).

Horrifying mules—which had faces like that of Satan or the Devil—were yoked to it¹. This made the chariot appear grotesque, very fearful, inauspicious and terrible to behold. It was provided with all types of arms and armaments, and was well equipped with all the paraphernalia and accoutrements needed for war (3).

[Note—¹Instead of horses or bulls, Ravana's chariot had mules to pull it.]

निश्चक्रामाथ सहसा रावणो भीषणाकृतिः ।

आयान्तं रावणं दृष्ट्वा भीषणं रणकर्कशम् ॥ ४॥

सन्त्रस्ताभूतदा सेना वानरी रामपालिता ॥ ५॥ niścakrāmātha sahasā rāvaṇo bhīṣaṇākṛtiḥ । āyāntaṃ rāvaṇaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā bhīṣaṇaṃ raṇakarkaśaṃ ॥ 4॥ santrastābhūttadā senā vānarī rāmapālītā ॥ 5॥

4-5. In this manner, Ravana came out of the city presenting a most formidable, horrifying and scary sight. Seeing that the most ferocious, ruthless and battle-hardened war veteran Ravana was approaching with a vengeance (4), the monkey army, though under Lord Sri Ram's protection, was nevertheless extremely terrified (5).

हनूमानथ चोत्प्लुत्य रावणं योद्धुमाययौ ।
आगत्य हनुमान् रक्षोवक्षस्यतुलविक्रमः ॥ ६॥
मुष्टिबन्धं दृढं बद्ध्वा ताडयामास वेगतः । तेन मुष्टिप्रहारेण जानुभ्यामपतद्रथे ॥ ७॥ hanūmānatha cotplutya rāvaṇaṃ yoddhumāyayau । āgatya hanumān rakṣovakṣasyatulavikramaḥ ॥ 6॥ muṣṭibandhaṃ dr̥ḍhaṃ baddhvā tāḍayāmāsa vegataḥ । tena muṣṭiprahāreṇa jānubhyāmapatadrathe ॥ 7॥

6-7. Then Hanuman leapt at once to the front to face Ravana and engage him in battle. As soon as he came there (in front of Ravana), the most valiant and valorous Hanuman (6) clenched his fists firmly and hit him swiftly hard on the chest. No sooner had he been hit by the blow of Hanuman's clenched fist, than he (Ravana) swooned and fell down on his knees on the chariot (7).

मूर्च्छितोऽथ मुहूर्तेन रावणः पुनरुत्थितः । उवाच च हनूमन्तं शूरोऽसि मम सम्मतः ॥ ८॥
हनूमानाह तं धिक्त्वा यस्त्वं जीवसि रावण । त्वं तावन्मुष्टिना वक्षो मम ताडय रावण ॥ ९॥ mūrcchito'tha muhūrtena rāvaṇaḥ punarutthitaḥ । uvāca ca hanūmantaṃ śūro'si mama sammataḥ ॥ 8॥ hanūmānāha taṃ dhiṇmāṃ yastvaṃ jīvasi rāvaṇa । tvaṃ tāvanmuṣṭinā vakṣo mama tāḍaya rāvaṇa ॥ 9॥

8-9. He remained unconscious for 1 Muhurt (literally for a short while), and then regained his senses once again. Then he praised Hanuman's valour and strength by saying: 'Oh Hanuman! I accept that you are very strong, agile, powerful, potent, valorous, bold and courageous; there is no doubt about it.' (8).

Hanuman replied, 'Oh Ravana! It is shameful for me that inspite of my hitting you with my fists you have still survived. Alright, now you hit me on my chest'¹ (9).

[Note—¹This is truly remarkable and show how two valiant warriors meet each other. Here we read that first Ravana has no compunctions in lauding Hanuman's valour, and then Hanuaman offers himself to be hit as hard as he had hit Ravana on the chest as a reciprocal gesture to set the account straight and give Ravana a chance to feel satisfied.

They told each other: “Well buddy; we are fighting an honourable duel, and in such an engagement it’s expected of a valiant warrior to acknowledge his adversary’s valour and strength, and at the same time it’s equally honourable for them to give each other an opportunity to try his own hands to show how valiant and strong he is, for its not honourable and worthy of any of the two warriors to vanquish a fallen hero.”

So therefore, Hanuman thanked Ravana for his gesture of praising him and made this offer: “Since you are noble enough to publicly acknowledge my strength, instead of cursing me for hitting you so hard that you swooned and fell down with a single blow of my fist, I will now offer myself to you to give me an equal punch on my chest to settle this first bout of the duel in a draw. Come, you’re welcome.”]

पश्चान्मया हतः प्राणान्मोक्ष्यसे नात्र संशयः ।
तथेति मुष्टिना वक्षो रावणेनापि ताडितः ॥ १०॥
विघूर्णमाननयनः किञ्चित्कश्मलमाययौ । सञ्ज्ञामवाप्य कपिराद् रावणं हन्तुमुद्यतः ॥ ११॥

paścānmayā hataḥ prāṇānmokṣyase nātra saṁśayaḥ । tatheti muṣṭinā vakṣo rāvaṇenāpi tāḍitaḥ ॥ 10॥ vighūrṇamānanayanaḥ kiñcitkaśmalamāyayau । sanjñāmavāpya kapirāḍ rāvaṇaṁ hantumudyataḥ ॥ 11॥

10-11. After that (i.e. after you have hit me, and then I retaliate by hitting you back) there is no doubt that you shall die with my next fist with which I shall hit you'.

Then Ravana said 'alright' and accepted the challenge; he hit Hanuman hard on his chest with his clenched fist (10).

Hanuman braced himself for the blow, but when he was hit, his eyes went round in circles; he felt giddy, swooned a bit, and became disoriented and uneasy.

Then, when he had recovered himself, the great monkey prepared himself to make a counter-attack at Ravana (11).

ततोऽन्यत्र गतो भीत्या रावणो राक्षसाधिपः । हनूमानङ्गदश्चैव नलो नीलस्तथैव च ॥ १२॥
चत्वारः समवेत्याग्रे दृष्ट्वा राक्षसपुङ्गवान् ।
अग्निवर्णं तथा सर्परोमाणं खड्गरोमकम् ॥ १३॥ तथा वृश्चिकरोमाणं निर्जघ्नुः क्रमशोऽसुरान् ।
चत्वारश्चतुरो हत्वा राक्षसान् भीमविक्रमान् । सिंहनादं पृथक् कृत्वा रामपार्श्वमुपागताः ॥ १४॥ tato'nyatra gato bhītyā rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ । hanūmānaṅgadaścaiva nalo nīlastathaiva ca ॥ 12॥

catvāraḥ samavetyāgre dr̥ṣṭvā rākṣasapuṅgavān । agnivarṇaṃ tathā sarparomāṇaṃ khaḍgaromakam ॥ 13॥ tathā vṛścikaromāṇaṃ nirjaghnūḥ kramaśo'surān । catvāraścaturō hatvā rākṣasān bhīmavikramān । siṃhanādaṃ pr̥thak kṛtvā rāmapārśvamupāgatāḥ ॥ 14॥

12-14. The king of demons Ravana became very astonished¹, as well as apprehensive and terrified²; so he made good his escape from there to go to some other place³.

Meanwhile, Hanuman, Angad, Nala and Neel presently found (12) that four demons, who were the best amongst the demon warriors, and whose names were Agnivarna, Sarparoma, Khangroma (13) and Vrishchikarom respectively, were standing in front of them. Then those four brave monkeys killed those four most valiant and powerful demons who stood facing them to challenge them and block their way, one by one⁴.

Thereafter, roaring individually at this victory, they came back and stood in front of Sri Ram (14).

[Note—¹Why was Ravana astonished? It is because he had hit Hanuman with all his might, putting all the strength that he possessed in the force of that single strike; and Ravana's might and strength were no small things, as he had even vanquished the famed gods by the might and strength of the same arms of his with which he had hit Hanuman hard. So he was surprised as to how this blow did not have its desired effect on Hanuman; he wondered how the latter managed to bear it with just a bit of swooning and tottering, for Hanuman had recovered soon to hit back at Ravana. This was not a small feat for Hanuman, and it dumbfounded Ravana, for the latter had expected that his adversary would lay unconscious on the ground for quite some time if at all he managed to survive the force of the blow.

²Why did Ravana become apprehensive and got terrified? It is because now he feared for the worse from Hanuman. He had had a first hand experience of what Hanuman could do if he became wrathful and decided to take revenge, for the events in Lanka when Hanuman had killed so many of his brave demons and burnt the city were fresh in his memory.

³Why did Ravana run away from there? He felt scared what Hanuman would do to him now that he has been hurt. He feared for the worst from an angry Hanuman, so he decided to escape from while there was time to avert Hanuman's wrath, for he was sure that it would be a fiery wrath, and if he fell down once again under Hanuman's beating it would humiliate him in front of his own demon warriors. This would have a cascading affect on their morale, and the whole demon army would be too scared to fight even before the battle-royal with Lord Sri Ram actually begins.

⁴To wit, each monkey warrior killed the demon who was before him, as the latter not only challenged the former to settle scores with them on behalf of Ravana but also blocked their way.

Hence, Hanuman killed the demon Agnivarna who was facing him; Angad slayed Sarparoma who was standing in his front; Nala did away with the demon Khangroma; and Neela killed the last of them, the demon Vrishchikarom who stood opposite him.]

ततः क्रुद्धो दशग्रीवः सन्दश्य दशनच्छदम् ॥ १५॥
 विवृत्य नयने क्रूरो राममेवान्वधावत ।
 दशग्रीवो रथस्थस्तु रामं वज्रोपमैः शरैः ॥ १६॥
 आजघान महाघोरैर्धाराभिरिव तोयदः । रामस्य पुरतः सर्वान् वानरानपि विव्यधे ॥ १७॥ tataḥ kruddho daśagrīvaḥ sandaśya daśanacchadam ॥ 15॥ vivṛtya nayane krūro rāmamevānvadhāvata । daśagrīvo rathasthastu rāmaṁ vajropamaiḥ śaraiḥ ॥ 16॥ ājaghāna mahāghorairdhārābhiriva toyadaḥ । rāmasya purataḥ sarvān vānarānapi vivyadhe ॥ 17॥

15-17. After this, the 10-shouldered Ravana became very angry and furious; he bit all his ten lips with his teeth (in indignation, resentment and dismay, that his four great warriors were so quickly killed) (15).

That cruel and ferocious fellow glared at Sri Ram and lunged at him angrily. The 10-headed one (Ravana) was on a chariot, while unfortunately Lord Sri Ram was on foot. Finding that his opponent was in a disadvantageous position, Ravana began raining a hail of Vajra-like arrows¹ on Lord Sri Ram (16) just like clouds rain torrential rain on the ground². He wounded all the monkeys even as Sri Ram watched (17).

[Note—¹Vajra or Bajra is the weapon of Indra, the king of gods. The word also means refers to any other thing that is extremely hard, sharp, strong and powerful enough to pierce through any obstacle. Here the arrows shot by Ravana are called ‘Vajra-like’ as they were very sharp, strong and able to either kill or at least severely wound their target.

²Here it means that the arrows were shot by Ravana so swiftly and in quick succession that they first appeared to fill the sky and obstruct the sun before falling down upon the ground in the form of a blanket of nails, injuring those on the battle-field, just like hail or sleet falls along with lashing rain during a severe thunder-storm, to injure all those who are exposed to it.]

ततः पावकसङ्काशैः शरैः काञ्चनभूषणैः ।
 अभ्यवर्षद्रुणे रामो दशग्रीवं समाहितः ॥ १८॥
 रथस्थं रावणं दृष्ट्वा भूमिष्ठं रघुनन्दनम् । आहूय मातलिं शक्रो वचनं चेदमब्रवीत् ॥ १९॥ tataḥ pāvakasankāśaiḥ śaraiḥ kāñcanabhūṣṇaiḥ । abhyavarṣadrūṇe rāmo daśagrīvaṁ samāhitaḥ ॥ 18॥ rathasthaṁ rāvaṇaṁ drṣṭvā bhūmiṣṭhaṁ raghunandanam । āhūya mātaliṁ śakro vacanaṁ cedamabravīt ॥ 19॥

18-19. Then Sri Ram became alert and began showering gold-plated arrows at the demons; these arrows were glowing like fire¹ (18).

When Indra (the king of gods) saw that Ravana was on a chariot while Raghunandan (Sri Ram) was on the ground (i.e. on foot), he called his charioteer Matli and said (19)—

[Note—¹To wit, these arrows shot by Lord Ram were energized; they radiated their energy just like fire glows in its fiery brilliance. They were also gold-plated, which meant that they dazzled in sunlight and shot beams of light that were reflected from their polished surfaces as they streaked in the sky towards their target.

It appeared that countless fiery streaks of flame had suddenly flared up on the battle-field from the spot where Lord Ram stood, and were dashing across the sky towards the demons.]

रथेन मम भूमिष्ठं शीघ्रं याहि रघूत्तमम् ।
 त्वरितं भूतलं गत्वा कुरु कार्यं ममानघ ॥ २०॥
 एवमुक्तोऽथ तं नत्वा मातलिर्देवसारथिः ।
 ततो हयैश्च संयोज्य हरितैः स्यन्दनोत्तमम् ॥ २१॥
 स्वर्गाज्जयार्थं रामस्य ह्युपचक्राम मातलिः ।
 प्राञ्जलिर्देवराजेन प्रेषितोऽस्मि रघूत्तम ॥ २२॥

rathena mama bhūmiṣṭhaṁ śīghraṁ yāhi raghūttamam । tvaritaṁ bhūtalaṁ gatvā kuru kāryaṁ mamānagha ॥ 20॥ evamukto'tha taṁ natvā mātaliṛdevasārathiḥ ।
 tato hayaiśca saṁyojya haritaiḥ syandanottamam ॥ 21॥ svargājjayārthaṁ rāmasya hyupacakrāma mātaliḥ । prāñjalirdevarājena preṣito'smi raghūttama ॥ 22॥

20-22. 'Oh Anagh¹! Look, the most exalted Raghu (Sri Ram) is standing on the ground, on foot (while our enemy Ravana has the benefit of a war chariot). So please take my chariot and go to the earth immediately, and do this work for me with all haste' (20).

Having received his orders, the charioteer of the gods named 'Matli', bowed his head before Indra; he expeditiously yoked green coloured horses to his excellent chariot (21), and came down from the heavens for the purpose of serving Lord Sri Ram and helping him attain victory.

He presented himself before the Lord and said to him with folded hands, 'Oh the most exalted of the Raghus! I have been sent by the king of gods (to place myself in your service) (22).

[Note—¹The word 'Anagh' literally means an exalted person who has no faults and has done no sins. Here it is a polite way of address that Indra uses for Matli just like we say "My honourable gentleman".]

रथोऽयं देवराजस्य विजयाय तव प्रभो ।
 प्रेषितश्च महाराज धनुरैन्द्रं च भूषितम् ॥ २३॥
 अभेद्यं कवचं खड्गं दिव्यतूणीयुगं तथा ।
 आरुह्य च रथं राम रावणं जहि राक्षसम् ॥ २४॥
 मया सारथिना देव वृत्रं देवपतिर्यथा ।
 इत्युक्तस्तं परिक्रम्य नमस्कृत्य रथोत्तमम् ॥ २५॥ ratho'yaṃ devarājasya vijayāya tava prabho । preṣitaśca mahārāja dhanuraindraṃ ca bhūṣitam ॥ 23॥ abhedyaṃ kavacaṃ khaḍgaṃ divyatūṇīyugaṃ tathā । āruhya ca rathaṃ rāma rāvaṇaṃ jahi rākṣasam ॥ 24॥ mayā sārathinā deva vṛtraṃ devapatiriyathā । ityuktastam parikramya namaskṛtya rathottamam ॥ 25॥

23-25. Oh Lord! This is the king of god's chariot, and he has sent it for your service so that victory can be easily attained by you.

Oh Lord! He has also sent you some of his own weapons. Here are they: this is his bow (23); and here is the impregnable armour, a sword, and two divine quivers (from which an endless stock of arrows are got)¹.

Oh Sri Ram! Mount this chariot and slay the demon Ravana (24) even as the Lord of Gods (Indra) had killed the demon Vrittasur² with me as his charioteer'.

When Matli had said so, Lord Sri Ram circumambulated the excellent chariot and bowed before it (to show his respect to the divine chariot as it belonged to the gods; it was also done to give thanks to the gods for extending help to him) (25).

[Note—¹Here the version of Adhyatma Ramayan varies from that of Ram Charit Manas. As we find here, Lord Ram was armed with weapons sent to him by Indra, the king of gods, and it is with these arms that he fought Ravana. But in Ram Charit Manas no such thing has happened; there Indra has sent his chariot alone, and the Lord fought and won the war with the weapons that he traditionally used, i.e. a bow and arrows.

Of course it is true that the chariot sent by Indra was well equipped with all sorts of arms and ammunitions, and so it was taken for granted that Lord Ram would have the benefit of their use, and so it was needless to mention them separately. So in Ram Charit Manas their special mention was skipped.

²Demon Vrittasur, though having an evil body of a demon, was at heart a great devotee of the Lord and an enlightened soul. During the battle with Indra, his enunciations on devotion and wisdom are worth their weight in gold. (This episode appears in Bhagwat Mahapuran). To kill him, the God asked sage Dadhichi to give his bones which were used to mould the Vajra (thunderbolt; the weapon of Indra), and it was used to kill him.]

आरुरोह रथं रामो लोकान्लक्ष्म्या नियोजयन् ।
 ततोऽभवन्महायुद्धं भैरवं रोमहर्षणम् ॥ २६॥
 महात्मनो राघवस्य रावणस्य च धीमतः ।

आग्नेयेन च आग्नेयं दैवं दैवेन राघवः ॥ २७॥
 अस्त्रं राक्षसराजस्य जघान परमास्त्रवित् । ततस्तु ससृजे घोरं राक्षसं चास्त्रमस्त्रवित् । क्रोधेन महताविष्टो रामस्योपरि रावणः ॥ २८॥ āruroha ratham rāmo lokānllakṣmyā niyojayan । tato'bhavanmahāyuddham bhairavam romaharṣaṇam ॥ 26॥ mahātmano rāghavasya rāvaṇasya ca dhīmataḥ । āgneyena ca āgneyam daivam daivena rāghavaḥ ॥ 27॥ astram rākṣasarājasya jaghāna paramāstravit । tatastu sasrje ghoram rākṣasam cāstramastravit । krodhena mahatāviṣṭo rāmasyopari rāvaṇaḥ ॥ 28॥

26-28. Sri Ram mounted the chariot of the gods sent to him by Indra. It was a magnificent sight to behold the Lord on this divine chariot; it was a sight that heralded hope, good fortunes and auspiciousness for the whole world.

[The final duel between Lord Sri Ram and Ravana started now—]

Then the final spectacularly fierce, ruthless and no-holds-barred great duel, which was chillingly exciting, nail biting, hair raising and thrilling to the core (26) started between the great and most exalted Raghav (Sri Ram) and Ravana who, though being a demon by birth, was however wise and intelligent (rāvaṇasya dhīmataḥ)¹.

Raghav (Sri Ram)—who was an expert in the art of warfare and singularly adept in the use of weapons—cut down Ravana's weapon known as 'Agneyastra' (a missile-like weapon tipped with fire) with a matching 'Agneyastra' and 'Devastra' (a weapon shot after invoking separate patron Gods to make it very potent) and other similar weapons of his own.

Then Ravana—who was well versed in the art of use of weapons—became very furious, and he shot a most formidable weapon known as 'Rakshashastra' (a weapon that was exclusively used by demons) at Sri Ram (27-28).

[Note—¹Why is Ravana honoured by the epithet of “dhīmataḥ”, i.e. someone who is wise and intelligent? Well, the answer is not far to be sought.

He is praised as being wise and intelligent because not only did he find the spiritual reward of deliverance for his own soul but also for the entire demon race, but he also saved his honour and self-respect as well as that of his race by not surrendering before his enemy in a war, but preferring to die like a valiant warrior, fighting his enemy and falling in the battle-field instead of either running away like a coward or making compromises out of fear of life.

He is honoured because he has used this opportunity of waging a war with Lord Ram to provide himself as well as all other members of his demon race a golden chance to attain liberation and deliverance of their souls. He knew that it is not possible for any of them to find deliverance by the usual method as prescribed by the scriptures, such as living a pious and noble way of life, doing good deeds, worshipping god, doing penances and austerities, making charities etc., being merciful to others, observing the laws of Dharma (propriety, probity, righteousness, ethics and meritorious deeds), and in general leading a life that would help them to accumulate some spiritual merit that would grant them emancipation and salvation as a reward. It was out of the question.

That meant that if he missed this chance then his entire race would be eternally condemned to live an evil life of sin and vices, from which there would be redemption. He also knew that Lord Ram was none but Lord Vishnu, and if he died at the hands of the Lord then it was sure that neither he nor his race would be condemned to hell as the Lord was so merciful and gracious by his nature that he was bound to show his compassion on these tormented souls and grant them deliverance, emancipation and salvation. Ravana has minced no words in expressing his mind clearly on this subject while conversing with his queen Mandodari—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 55-61.

To wit, he had killed two birds with the same arrow: he kept his dignity as a valorous warrior who never bowed before his enemy, and he easily attained deliverance of his soul inspite of having led a life full of sins, vices and evil deeds.

Even the gods, who all the while had bethought Ravana to be a vile and pervert demon, were astonished at his spiritual attainment when his soul had exited his gross body in the form of a brilliant shaft of light to enter the divine and holy body of Lord Ram to find a place of eternal rest there, as his soul merged with the cosmic Soul represented by the Lord—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 78-82.]

रावणस्य धनुर्मुक्ताः सर्पा भूत्वा महाविषाः ।
शयः काञ्चनपुङ्खाभा राघवं परितोऽपतन् ॥ २९॥
तैः शरैः सर्पवदनैर्वमद्भिरनलं मुखैः । दिशश्च विदिशश्चैव व्याप्तास्तत्र तदाभवन् ॥ ३०॥

rāvaṇasya dhanurmuktāḥ śarpā bhūtvā mahāviṣāḥ । śarāḥ kāñcanapuṅkhābhā rāghavaṃ parito'patan ॥ 29॥ taiḥ śaraiḥ śarpavadanairvamadbhiranalam mukhaiḥ । diśaśca vidiśaścaiva vyāptāstatra tadābhavan ॥ 30॥

29-30. The arrows shot from the bow of Ravana had fins made of golden strands, and when they fell all around Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) they transformed themselves into very poisonous and fierce snakes (29).

All the directions of the compass were saturated by arrows shot by Ravana; these missiles had flames of fire leaping up and spreading in all the directions from their tips, giving the impression of so many flying dragons with wide open mouths from which tongues of fire leapt out¹ (30).

[Note—¹To wit, the arrows shot by Ravana transformed themselves by magical powers employed by Ravana instantly into poisonous dragons squirting flame, brimstone and fire, and they covered the ground all around Sri Ram in the battle-field. It appeared that hot balls of fire were raining down from the sky, with flames emanating from them trailing in the rear in the form of their tails.]

रामः सर्पास्ततो दृष्ट्वा समन्तात्परिपूरितान् ।

सौपर्णमस्तुं तद्गोरं पुरः प्रावर्तयद्रणे ॥ ३१॥
 रामेण मुक्तास्ते बाणा भूत्वा गरुडरूपिणः ।
 चिच्छिदुः सर्पबाणांस्तान् समन्तात् सर्पशत्रुवः ॥ ३२॥ rāmaḥ sarpāṁstato drṣṭvā samantātparipūrītān । sauparṇamastraṁ tadghoraṁ puraḥ prāvartayadraṇe ॥ 31॥ rāmeṇa muktāste bāṇā bhūtvā garuḍarūpiṇaḥ । cicchiduh sarpabāṇāmstān samantāt sarpaśatravaḥ ॥ 32॥

31-32. When Sri Ram observed that the whole area (of the battle-field) was covered by serpents resembling fierce dragons, he shot the most potent and formidable weapon called ‘Garudastra’, so called because on being shot, it metamorphosed into Garud, the legendary Eagle who is said to be the mount of Lord Vishnu (31).

Those arrows launched by Sri Ram immediately began cutting down or neutralizing the serpent-like or dragon-like magical arrows that had spread everywhere¹ (32).

[Note—¹Ravana had shot arrows that transmuted themselves into serpents. To counter them, Lord Ram shot his arrows that became Garud, the legendary Eagle who is reputed to devour serpents. So in effect what happened was this: Lord Ram’s arrows neutralized those shot by Ravana by becoming Garuds who easily devoured the serpents that Ravana’s arrows had become, thereby clearing the battle-field of this illusion.]

अस्त्रे प्रतिहते युद्धे रामेण दशकन्धरः ।
 अभ्यवर्षततो रामं घोराभिः शरवृष्टिभिः ॥ ३३॥
 ततः पुनः शरानीकै राममक्लिष्टकारिणम् । अर्दयित्वा तु घोरेण मातलिं प्रत्यविध्यत ॥ ३४॥ astre pratihate yuddhe rāmeṇa daśakandharaḥ । abhyavarṣattato rāmaṁ ghorābhiḥ śaravṛṣṭibhiḥ ॥ 33॥ tataḥ punaḥ śarāṇīkai rāmamakliṣṭakāriṇam । ardayitvā tu ghoreṇa mātaliṁ pratyavidhyata ॥ 34॥

33-34. When the 10-shouldered Ravana found that all his magical weapons had been nullified and made ineffective by Sri Ram in the battle, he showered a fresh volley of fierce arrows on the latter (33).

As a result, he once again caused immense trouble for Sri Ram by peppering him with sharp arrows, besides wounding his charioteer Matli (34).

पातयित्वा रथोपरथे रथकेतुं च काञ्चनम् ।
 ऐन्द्रानश्वानभ्यहनद्रावणः क्रोधमूर्च्छितः ॥ ३५॥
 विषेदुर्देवगन्धर्वाश्चरणाः पितरस्तथा ।
 आर्ताकारं हरिं दृष्ट्वा व्यथिताश्च महर्षयः ॥ ३६॥ pāṭayitvā rathopasthe rathaketuṃ ca kāñcanam । aindrāśvānabhyahanadrāvaṇaḥ krodhamūrcchitaḥ ॥ 35॥ viṣedurdevagandharvāścāraṇāḥ pitarastathā । ārtākāraṃ harim dr̥ṣṭvā vyathitāśca maharṣayaḥ ॥ 36॥

35-36. Not satisfied by it, Ravana—who was mad with anger and indignation—severed the golden flag (the war standard) of Sri Ram's chariot that fell down at the back; he also wounded the horses of Indra (who were driving the chariot) (35).

Seeing that Hari (another name for Lord Sri Ram) was in great trouble, the Gods, Gandharvas (celestial semi-Gods; regarded as musicians of heaven), Charans (celestial bards) and Pittars (dead ancestors in spirit form) became remorseful and gloomy, while the great sages and hermits lamented gravely in their hearts¹ (36).

[Note—¹Falling of the flag flying atop a king's chariot in the battle-field is considered to be a bad sign; it is tantamount to his virtual defeat. It also breaks the morale of his army as they regard it as a sign that their enemy is having an upper hand in the war.

In the present case, there is a direct confrontation between Lord Ram and Ravana, while their respective armies are watching the duel. So when the flag atop Lord Ram's chariot was broken by Ravana and it tumbled down, those who supported the Lord in this war, such as the gods, the gandharvas, the charans, the hermits and the sages, were bound to be worried.]

व्यथिता वानरेन्द्राश्च बभूवुः सविभीषणाः ।
 दशास्यो विंशतिभुजः प्रगृहीतशरासनः ॥ ३७॥
 ददृशे रावणस्तत्र मैनाक इव पर्वतः ।
 रामस्तु भ्रुकुटिं बद्ध्वा क्रोधसंरक्तलोचनः ॥ ३८॥
 कोपं चकार सदृशं निर्दहन्निव राक्षसम् ।
 धनुरादाय देवेन्द्रधनुराकारमद्भुतम् ॥ ३९॥
 गृहीत्वा पाणिना बाणं कालानलसमप्रभम् ।
 निर्दहन्निव चक्षुर्भ्यां ददृशे रिपुमन्तिके ॥ ४०॥ vyathitā vānarendrāśca babhūvuḥ savibhīṣaṇāḥ । daśāsyō viṃśatibhujāḥ pragṛhītaśarāsanāḥ ॥ 37॥ dadṛśe rāvaṇastatra maināka iva parvataḥ । rāmastu bhrukuṭiṃ baddhvā krodhasamraktalocanāḥ ॥ 38॥ kopam cakāra sadṛśam nirdahanniva rākṣasam । dhanurādāya devendradhanurākāramadbhutam ॥ 39॥

 gr̥hītvā pāṇinā bāṇam kālānalasamaprabham । nirdahanniva cakṣurbhyām dadṛśe ripumantike ॥ 40॥

37-40. All the commanders and chiefs of the monkey army, as well as Vibhishan, became very worried and confounded. At that time, Ravana, with his 10-heads and 20-arms, and holding bows and arrows (37), looked formidably fearful and colossus in form like a personified Mainak Mountain.

Meanwhile, Lord Sri Ram's eyes became red with anger; his eyebrows curved like a bow in his annoyance and anger (38). Fiercely glaring at the demon as if he would burn him to death, he (Sri Ram) picked up another great and magnificent bow that was like the 'rainbow', the majestic bow of Indra (39), and picking up an arrow that was as splendid, radiant and glowing as 'the fiery dart of death' used by Kaal, the god of death, in his hands, the Lord looked at his enemy with such fierce eyes as if he would reduce him to ashes (40).

पराक्रमं दर्शयितुं तेजसा प्रज्वलन्निव ।
प्रचक्रमे कालरूपी सर्वलोकस्य पश्यतः ॥ ४१॥
विकृष्य चापं रामस्तु रावणं प्रतिविध्य च । हर्षयन् वानरानीकं कालान्तक इवाबभौ ॥ ४२॥ parākramaṃ darśayitum tejasā prajvalanniva । pracakrame kālarūpī sarvalokasya paśyataḥ ॥ 41॥ vikṛṣya cāpaṃ rāmastu rāvaṇaṃ pratividhya ca । harṣayan vānarāṇīkaṃ kālāntaka ivābabhau ॥ 42॥

41-42. Lord Sri Ram, who presently looked as if was a personified form of Kaal, the god of death, became so intensely furious that his entire form glowed like fire. He now determined to exhibit his valour and gallantry before the whole world that would watch the proceedings in awe and amazement (41).

He pulled the string of his bow and perforated Ravana with his arrows. The Lord looked majestic, awe-inspiring and formidable as Kaal himself was personified in his ferocious form; all the monkeys and bears once again became hopeful of victory, making them feel cheerful, exhilarant and elated at this favourable turn of events on the battle-field¹ (42).

[Note—¹ Just a while ago there was gloom everywhere when the flag atop Lord Ram's chariot was broken by Ravana. Now, when the Lord retaliated fiercely and peppered Ravana with his arrows, a cry of jubilation rang out in the ranks of the army of monkeys and bears.]

क्रुद्धं रामस्य वदनं दृष्ट्वा शत्रुं प्रधावतः ।
तत्रसुः सर्वभूतानि चचाल च वसुन्धरा ॥ ४३॥
रामं दृष्ट्वा महारौद्रमुत्पातांश्च सुदारुणान् । त्रस्तानि सर्वभूतानि रावणं चाविशद्भयम् ॥ ४४॥

kruddhaṃ rāmasya vadaṇaṃ drṣṭvā śatruṃ pradhāvataḥ । tatraśuḥ sarvabhūtāni cacāla ca vasundharā ॥ 43॥ rāmaṃ drṣṭvā mahāraudramutpātāṃśca sudāruṇān । trastāni sarvabhūtāni rāvaṇaṃ cāviśadbhayaṃ ॥ 44॥

43-44. Looking at the fearsome angry face of Sri Ram while he attacked the enemy, all the creatures became terrified, while the earth shook and trembled (43).

Observing Lord Ram's ferocious, uncompromising and extremely wrathful countenance, as well as these greatly ominous, violent and patently dangerous developments that unfolded in the battle-field, panic, dismay and distress that come with uncertainty gripped the creatures of the world, while terror and awe took firm roots in the heart of Ravana¹ (44).

[Note—¹It was a ferocious war the world had never ever witnessed so far. The tide of war swung so widely, once in favour of Lord Ram and then in favour of Ravana, that it created an atmosphere of uncertainty. This made the world worried and terrified, because wars are so unpredictable that no one could say with surety that Lord Ram would win it.

But Ravana was wiser; he knew his weaknesses, and as a veteran warrior he could also discern the subtle signs that indicated the way the tide of war seemed to be moving, and from all indications it was not going in his favour. This alarmed him.]

विमानस्था सुरगणाः सिद्धगन्धर्वकिन्नराः ।
ददृशुः सुमहायुद्धं लोकसंवर्तकोपमम् ।
ऐन्द्रमस्त्रं समादाय रावणस्य शिरोऽच्छिनत् ॥ ४५॥
मूर्धन्यो रावणस्याथ बहवो रुधिरोक्षिताः । गगनात्प्रपतन्ति स्म तालादिव फलानि हि ॥ ४६॥ vimānasthā suragaṇāḥ siddhagandharvakinnarāḥ । dadṛśuḥ sumahāyuddhaṁ lokasaṁvartakopamam । aindramastram samādāya rāvaṇasya śīro'cchinat ॥ 45॥ mūrdhāno rāvaṇasyātha bahavo rudhirokṣitāḥ । gaganātprapatanti sma tālādiva phalāni hi ॥ 46॥

45-46. At that time all the Gods, Siddhas (mystics), Gandharvas (celestial musicians), Kinnars (celestial dancers and singers; a form of god with the head of a horse) etc. rode their air vehicles and watched this great and epic war, which resembled the all-hell-broke-loose scenario of dooms day, from their stations in the sky.

Meanwhile, Lord Sri Ram shot the 'Aendrastra' (a weapon used by Indra) and chopped off the head of Ravana (45).

The numerous blood-soaked heads of Ravana began falling from the sky just like the fruits of the palm tree fall from it (when a fierce wind shakes the tree violently and rips the fruits off its branches, or when they are ripe and fall on the ground on their own account) (46).

न दिनं न च वै रात्रिर्न सन्ध्यां न दिशोऽपि वा ।
प्रकाशन्ते न तद्रूपं दृश्यते तत् सङ्गरे ॥ ४७॥ ततो रामो बभूवाथ विस्मयाविष्टमानसः । शतमेकोत्तरं छिन्नं शिरसां चैकवर्चसाम् ॥ ४८॥

na dinam na ca vai rātrirna sandhyām na diśo'pi vā । prakāśante na tadrūpaṃ drśyate tatra saṅgare ॥ 47॥ tato rāmo babhūvātha vismayāviṣṭamānasah । śatamekottaraṃ chinnaṃ śirasām caikavarcaśām ॥ 48॥

47-48. At that time, the whole place was so filled with the hideous sight of blood-soaked severed heads of Ravana flying here and there in the sky in all directions and falling to the ground everywhere that they obscured everything else, for one was so dazed and confounded that it was not possible to distinguish between day and night, or determine what time it was, or between the different directions of the compass.

The situation was so grave that not even the physical presence of Ravana could be seen by anyone. [To wit, the falling heads of Ravana so completely obscured everyone's sight in the battle-field that no one could see Ravana present there.]¹ (47)

This magical development mightily astonished Lord Sri Ram; he thought to himself in amazement: 'I have chopped-off one hundred one heads of Ravana, all of which are equal in their radiance'² (48).

[Note—¹The falling heads of Ravana covered the sky and obscured the sun, and even made it impossible to see anything a little away on the ground. The sight resembled a thick blanket of dark of clouds in the sky that makes it difficult to determine the time of the day as the sun is obscured from view; and the falling heads were so numerous in numbers that they reminded one of hail and rain falling so heavily on the ground that one is unable to see anywhere.

²Ravana had ten heads. So it means that Lord Ram had cut-off his heads ten times in quick succession. $10 \times 10 = 100$ heads. The extra head in this counting, i.e. the one hundred and first head (śatamekottaraṃ), refers to one primary head of Ravana with which he was born, the others being extra heads that he had got as a boons.

Lord Ram was amazed because it seemed incredulous that any living being would survive if his heads were severed so quickly, and yet Ravana seemed not to be affected at all. What was the mystery of his survival, wondered the Lord; why didn't he die? It was indeed very surprising that Ravana should continue to live and newer heads grow on his body, as it means that getting rid of him by this method would be in vain. So the Lord thought, some other alternative has to be swiftly discovered.]

न चैव रावणः शान्तो दृश्यते जीवितक्षयात् । ततः सर्वास्तूविद्धीरः कौसल्यानन्दवर्धनः ॥ ४९॥
 अस्तैश्च बहुभिर्युक्तश्चिन्तयामास राघवः ।
 यैर्यैर्बाणैर्हता दैत्या महासत्त्वपराक्रमाः ॥ ५०॥
 त एते निष्फलं याता रावणस्य निपातने ।
 इति चिन्ताकुले रामे समीपस्थो विभीषणः ॥ ५१॥
 उवाच राघवं वाक्यं ब्रह्मदत्तवरो ह्यसौ ।
 विच्छिन्ना बाहवोऽप्यस्य विच्छिन्नानि शिरांसि च ॥ ५२॥
 उत्पत्स्यन्ति पुनः शीघ्रमित्याह भगवानजः । नाभिदेशेऽमृतं तस्य कुण्डलाकारसंस्थितम् ॥ ५३॥ na caiva rāvaṇaḥ śānto dr̥śyate jīvitakṣayāt । tataḥ sarvāstraviddhīraḥ kausalyānandavardhanaḥ ॥ 49॥ astraiśca bahubhīryuktaścintayāmāsa rāghavaḥ । yairyairbāṇairhatā daityā mahāsattvaparākramāḥ ॥ 50॥ ta ete niṣphalaṃ yātā rāvaṇasya nipātane । iti cintākule rāme samīpastho vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 51॥ uvāca rāghavaṃ vākyaṃ brahmadattavaro hyasau । vicchinnā bāhavo'pyasya vicchinnāni śīrāṃsi ca ॥ 52॥ utpatsyanti punaḥ śīghramityāha bhagavānajaḥ । nābhideśe'mṛtaṃ tasya kuṇḍalākārasaṃsthitam ॥ 53॥

49-53. But still Ravana does not appear to calm down by the loss of his vitality and life (i.e., he continues to live inspite of his heads being severed repeatedly)'.
 Then Lord Ram—who was a son of Kaushalya, an expert in the art of using all types of weapons, who was steadfast, courageous, strong and brave in the battle-field (49), and who had all types of weapons at his disposal—thought to himself: 'All those arrows which I had previously used to slay demons renowned for their might, valour, strength and courage (50), have failed to kill this fellow Ravana, and they have become ineffective against him.'

Seeing that Sri Ram was very worried, confounded and perturbed, Vibhishan—who was standing near him (51)—said, 'Oh Raghav (Sri Ram)! Lord Brahma (the creator) had given Ravana a boon, and at that time he (Brahma) had said that all his (Ravana's) heads and arms will grow back immediately as soon as they are cut-off. Oh Lord! Amrit (the elixir of life that keeps him alive) is kept securely in a circular patch in his navel¹ (52-53).

[Note—¹This is the Nabhi Chakra, the circular center of subtle energy that sustains life inside the body of a creature; it is stored near the navel. It can also refer to the Kundalini, the source of subtle but dynamic energy of the body that is located near the navel, and is shaped like a coiled serpent or a coiled rope. According to Yoga philosophy, an ascetic who practices Yoga or meditation can excite this source of energy to enable him attain stupendous mystical powers and do supernatural things that are normally not within the reach of ordinary persons.

Ravana was an expert in Yoga; so he had activated this secret source of life, which in turn kept him alive inspite of him suffering the severance of any part of his physical body.

Vibhishan was his brother, and so he was privy to some information that no one else knew. And this was one: that Ravana managed to survive because he had successfully been able to harness the eternal source of energy that sustains life, and this source is stored in the Nabhi Chakra or the Kundalini. It means that if this source of vital energy is disrupted, or the electric current that keeps him going is short-circuited at its major junction point, then he would die.]

तच्छोषयानलास्त्रेण तस्य मृत्युस्ततो भवेत् ।
 विभीषणवचः श्रुत्वा रामः शीघ्रपराअक्रमः ॥ ५४॥
 पावकास्त्रेण संयोज्य नाभिं विव्याध रक्षसः ।

अनन्तरं च विच्छेद शिरांसि च महाबलः ॥ ५५॥
 बाहूनापि च संरब्धो रावणस्य रघूतमः ।
 ततो घोरां महाशक्तिमादाय दशकन्धरः ॥ ५६॥
 विभीषणवधार्थाय चिक्षेप क्रोधविह्वलः । विच्छेद राघवो बाणैस्तां शितैर्हमभूषितैः ॥ ५७॥ tacchoṣayānalāstreṇa tasya mṛtyustato bhavet । vibhīṣaṇavacaḥ śrutvā rāmaḥ śighraparākramaḥ ॥ 54॥ pāvakāstreṇa saṃyojya nābhiṃ vivyādha rakṣasaḥ । anantaram ca ciccheda śirāṃsi ca mahābalaḥ ॥ 55॥ bāhūnapi ca saṃrabdho rāvaṇasya raghūttamaḥ । tato ghorāṃ mahāśaktimādāya daśakandharaḥ ॥ 56॥ vibhīṣaṇavadhārthāya cikṣepa krodhavihvalaḥ । ciccheda rāghavo bāṇaistāṃ śitairhemabhūṣitaiḥ ॥ 57॥

54-57. So therefore oh Lord, dry it up with your fire-weapon. That is the only way to bring about his death'.

Hearing these words of Vibhishan, Lord Ram acted immediately. He made a bold decision (54), mounted the fire-weapon on his bow, and shot it at the navel of the demon Ravana.

After that, the valiant Lord Sri Ram severed the demon's head and arms in quick succession.

At this, betrayed by Vibhishan, the 10-headed Ravana aimed a very fierce weapon called Mahashakti (55-56) at Vibhishan to kill him, because he (Ravana) was extremely agitated, annoyed, peeved and angry at the Vibhishan (for having betrayed him)¹.

But Raghav (Sri Ram) immediately intercepted this missile shot by Ravana to kill his treacherous brother Vibhishan, and cut it down by shooting his own arrow that was gold-plated and had a sharp tip (57).

[Note—¹Indeed, Vibhishan was never able to wash his hands off the epithet of a 'betrayor', as well as the ignominious charge of treason, treachery, regicide and fratricide ever since. In fact, his name has been synonymous with these bad traits in the character of any individual—selfishness, betrayal, treachery, treason, fratricide and regicide, notwithstanding the expediency of his actions, such as the necessity of fulfillment of his vows of loyalty to Lord Ram.

From this point of view, if we view things neutrally and dispassionately, Kumbhakarn, Vibhishan's elder brother, stands out as a noble, honourable and great demon warriors who did not betray his brother-and-king Ravana inspite of being aware that the latter was in the wrong; nor did he betray his family or the demon race; for he preferred to die like a gallant warrior fighting an invading army (of Lord Ram) to defend his king (Ravana) and his kingdom (of Lanka) than to preserve his life by means of deceit and betrayal, or think of surrender—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 51-70; and Canto 8, verse nos. 1-30.]

दशग्रीवशिरश्छेदात्तदा तेजो विनिर्गतम् ।

म्लानरूपो बभूवाथ छिन्नैः शीर्षैर्भयङ्करैः ॥ ५८॥
 एकेन मुख्यशिरसा बाहुभ्यां रावणो बभौ ।
 रावणस्तु पुनः क्रुद्धो नानाशस्त्रास्त्रवृष्टिभिः ॥ ५९॥
 वर्ष वर्षं तं रामस्तथा बाणैर्वर्ष च । ततो युद्धमभूद्धोरे तुमुलं लोमहर्षणम् ॥ ६०॥ daśagrīvaśiraśchedāttadā tejo vinirgatam । mlānarūpo babhūvātha chinnaiḥ śīrṣairbhayaṅkaraiḥ ॥ 58॥ ekena mukhyaśirasā bāhubhyāṃ rāvaṇo babhau । rāvaṇastu punaḥ kruddho nānāśastrāstravṛṣṭibhiḥ ॥ 59॥ vavarṣa rāmaṃ taṃ rāmastathā bāṇairvavarṣa ca । tato yuddhamabhūdghoraṃ tumulaṃ lomaharṣaṇam ॥ 60॥

58-60. No sooner than the extra heads of the 10-necked Ravana (daśagrīva) were severed from his body, making him look like a hideous monster, his 'Tej' (i.e. his energy, dynamism, dare-devilry, and the will to fight and win) too escaped from his body¹ (58).

With the severance of all other extra heads and arms that Ravana possessed, only his primary head and the two arms (with which he was born) remained on his body². Excessively exasperated and angry, Ravana became all the more vicious and wrathful; he began shooting all sorts of powerful weapons he had in his possession on Lord Sri Ram.

Sri Ram retaliated in equal measure by shooting volleys of formidable arrows on Ravana. It was the moment when a fierce and no-holds-barred duel between two powerful and valiant warriors took place on the battle-field. (59-60)

[Note—¹The word 'Tej' refers to the forces of life present inside the body of Ravana. It refers to his energy, dynamism, and the will to fight and win the war. 'Tej' can be visualized in the form of a splendorous source of brilliant light and the radiance of blazing fire. It refers to Ravana's domineering, majestic and authoritative presence in the battle-field, with his colossus figure of ten large heads and twenty long muscular arms extending out from his body dominating all other things there.

With all extra heads and arms yanked off, he presented a dull and dark shadow of his former majestic and dynamic self. Till this point his heads and arms grew back as soon as they were severed, but now the source of energy that had kept him alive, that had rejuvenated him and aided in his swift recovery, was well-nigh exhausted. His life was ebbing away fast, and he was like an oil lamp in which the oil had been exhausted. During its final moments, the flame of the lamp leaps up high and bright from the burning wick, before it flickers and dies away.

This is what is meant here. When the last tranche of his heads and arms fell off, and there were no chances of his getting them back, Ravana lost all hopes of survival. He felt crestfallen, forlorn, gloomy and dejected. But nevertheless, and indeed to give credit to Ravana, he kept a brave face, and like a gallant warrior aware of his reputation and honour, he continued his battle as fiercely as before, and as if nothing had mattered to him.

²Remember: Ravana was famed to have 'ten heads' and 'twenty arms'. So when only 'one head and two arms' remained on his body during his last moments, it simply means that the surplus heads and arms that he had obtained by the virtue of his boons were severed, but the single head and the two arms with which he was born still remained attached to his body.]

अथ संस्मरयामास मातली राघवं तदा ।
 विसृजास्त्रं वधायास्य ब्राह्मं शीघ्रं रघूत्तम ॥ ६१॥
 विनाशकालः प्रथितो यः सुरैः सोऽद्य वर्तते ।
 उत्तमाङ्गं न चैतस्य छेत्तव्यं राघव त्वया ॥ ६२॥ नैव शीर्ष्णि प्रभो वध्यो वध्य एव हि मर्मणि । ततः संस्मारितो रामस्तेन वाक्येन मातलेः ॥ ६३॥ atha saṁsmārayāmāsa mātālī rāghavaṁ tadā । visrjāstraṁ vadhāyāsyā brāhmaṁ śīghraṁ raghūttama ॥ 61॥ vināśakālaḥ prathito yaḥ suraiḥ so'dya vartate । uttamāṅgaṁ na caitasya chettavyaṁ rāghava tvayā ॥ 62॥ naiva śīrṣṇi prabho vadhyo vadhya eva hi marmaṇi । tataḥ saṁsmārīto rāmastena vākyaena mātaleḥ ॥ 63॥

61-63. At that point, Matli (the charioteer) reminded (saṁsmārayāmāsa) Raghav (Sri Ram): 'Oh the most exalted of the Raghus! To kill him, you must shoot the Brahmastra (a weapon shot by invoking Lord Brahma) forthwith (61), because the time determined by the Gods for the destruction of the monster Ravana is present now. [And if there is any delay, this window will close, and perhaps then it may not be possible to slay him ever.]

So therefore oh Raghav (Sri Ram), you must not waste time in severing his head (62), because, oh Lord, he cannot be killed by cutting it off. His end can be brought about only by piercing his core or vital organ (i.e. his heart).'

These words of Matli reminded Sri Ram of what Vibhishan had told him earlier as to the impossibility of slaying Ravana by merely cutting off his heads¹ (63).

[Note—¹A point to note here is that the way Ravana was finally slayed has been depicted in two different ways as follows:-

According to Tulsidas' 'Ram Charit Manas', Ravana was killed when Lord Ram, on the advice of Vibhishan, had shot an arrow at his navel where the source of his eternal life was stored in the form of Amrit, the ambrosia of life—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 102 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede it, and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.

In 'Adhyatma Ramayan', we read that Vibhishan has made a similar suggestion—apropos: verse nos. 51-53 herein above. But here the similarity ends—because the way in which Ravana was actually killed was based on the advice given to Lord Ram by Matli, the charioteer of the divine chariot of gods that was sent by Indra to help Lord Ram in the war, and not in accordance with the advice of Vibhishan.

Vibhishan had suggested that Ravana could only be killed if the Amrit stored in his navel was dried up, but we read that Matli told Lord Ram that he could be killed only if his vital organ or the core of his body was pierced by a powerful arrow. What was this ‘vital organ’? It was Ravana’s “heart”—as it would be clear in verse no. 71 herein below.

Another point to note is this: In Ram Charit Manas we have read about Trijata’s conversation with Sita, wherein the former had also suggested that Ravana would be finally done in when Lord Ram shoots an arrow at his heart—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 99 along with Chaupai line nos. 12-13 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.]

जग्राह स शरं दीप्तं निःश्वसन्तमिवोरगम् ।
यस्य पार्श्वे तु पवनः फले भास्करपावकौ ॥ ६४॥
शरीरमाकाशमयं गौरवे मेरुमन्दरौ । पर्वस्वपि च विन्यस्ता लोकपाला महौजसः ॥ ६५॥ jagrāha sa śaraṁ dīptaṁ niḥśvasantamivoragam । yasya pārśve tu pavanaḥ phale bhāskarapāvakau ॥ 64॥ śarīramākāśamayaṁ gaurave merumandarau । parvasvapi ca vinyastā lokapālā mahaujasah ॥ 65॥

64-65. At Matli’s suggestion, Lord Sri Ram took out an arrow that was very powerful and radiant like glowing fire; with its fiery tip, red-hot shaft and flaming fins, it resembled a serpent or a dragon that was hissing ferociously as it prepared to fly towards its prey.

That arrow was unique and strange; it possessed great mystical powers, and was singularly majestic to behold: it had the force of wind that propelled it from the rear; its tip was splendorous and fiery as the sun and the fire; it was as heavy as Mt. Sumeru or Mt. Mandrachal; its joints were supported by the powerful Lokpals (the custodians of the world); and its dimension and expanse were as vast and extensive as the sky itself. (64-65)

जाज्वल्यमानं वपुषा भातं भास्करवर्चसा ।
तमुग्रमस्त्रं लोकानां भयनाशनमद्भुतम् ॥ ६६॥
अभिमन्त्र्य ततो रामस्तं महेषुं महाभुजः । वेदप्रोक्तेन विधिना सन्दधे कर्मके बली ॥ ६७॥ jājvalyamānaṁ vapuṣā bhātaṁ bhāskaravarcaśā । tamugramastraṁ lokānāṁ bhayanāśanamadbhutam ॥ 66॥ abhimantrya tato rāmastaṁ maheṣuṁ mahābhujah । vedaproktena vidhinā sandadhe karmuke balī ॥ 67॥

66-67. Since this majestic arrow was supernatural, divine and brilliant in shape and size, it resembled the sun in its splendour, brilliance, magnificence and dazzle.

In order to vanquish and eliminate the fear and torments of all the worlds, this arrow—which was very violent, potent, sharp and effective, as well as most strange, mysterious, wonderful, splendid and stupendous in its prowess, magnificence and majesty (66)—was employed by Sri Ram who was very brave and had strong arms.

The Lord empowered the arrow by invoking certain Mantras (mystical formula that acted as a charm that lent special power to this arrow by concentrating cosmic energy in it) as prescribed in the Vedas (that deal with the art and science of archery). Then he mounted this special arrow on his strong bow, and readied it to shoot (67).

तस्मिन् सन्धीयमाने तु राघवेण शरोत्तमे ।
सर्वभूतानि वित्रेसुश्चाल च वसुन्धरा ॥ ६८॥
स रावणाय सङ्कुद्धो भृशमानम्य कार्मुकम् । विक्षेप परमायत्तस्तमस्त्रं मर्मघातिनम् ॥ ६९॥ tasmin sandhīyamāne tu rāghaveṇa śarottame । sarvabhūtāni vitresuścacāla ca vasundharā ॥ 68॥ sa rāvaṇāya saṅkrudho bhr̥śamānamya karmukam । cikṣepa paramāyattastamastraṁ marmaghātinam ॥ 69॥

68-69. When Raghav (Sri Ram) raised that excellent arrow, which was the best amongst all the arrows, and readied it to shoot, all the creatures became terrified, while the earth shook and trembled (68).

He became very angry, pulled the string of the bow tight, and aiming carefully he shot the arrow which was powerful enough to rupture the vital organ of Ravana (i.e. the organ in his body that had sustained his life till now) (69).

स वज्र इव दुर्धर्षो वज्रपाणिविसर्जितः । कृतान्त इव घोरास्यो न्यपतद्रावणोरसि ॥ ७०॥
स निमग््नो महाघोरः शरीरान्तकरः परः ।
बिभेद हृदयं तूर्णं रावणस्य महात्मनः ॥ ७१॥
रावणस्याहरत्प्राणान् विवेश धरणितले । स शरो रावणं हत्वा रामतूणीरमाविशत् ॥ ७२॥ sa vajra iva durdharṣo vajrapāṇivisarjitaḥ । kṛtānta iva ghorāsyō nyapatadrāvaṇorasi ॥ 70॥ sa nimagno mahāghoraḥ śarīrāntakaraḥ paraḥ । bibheda hr̥dayaṁ tūrṇaṁ rāvaṇasya mahātmanaḥ ॥ 71॥ rāvaṇasyāharatprāṇān viveśa dharaṇitale । sa śaro rāvaṇaṁ hatvā rāmatūṇīramāviśat ॥ 72॥

70-72. That arrow—which was most formidable, mighty, severe and uncompromising like the Vajra or Bajra (thunderbolt) throne by ‘Bajrapani’ (i.e. Indra, the one who holds the Vajra / Bajra), which resembled the fierce and horror-full mouth of Death, and which was formidably ferocious—hit Ravana on his chest (70).

That most formidable, severe, uncompromising, unrelenting, powerful and fatal arrow (mahāghoraḥ)—which was empowered with a special quality enabling it to slay the body of an individual whom it struck (śarīrāntakaraḥ)—entered the body of the great Ravana (rāvaṇasya mahātmanah)¹, and ruptured his heart (bibheda hrdayam)² (71).

It ended (terminated) the life of Ravana, and after having done its assigned task it (emerged from the other side of his body) and bored (drilled) itself into the earth³. In this way, having slayed Ravana, the arrow returned back to the quiver of Sri Ram⁴ (72).

[Note—¹The use of the prefix “mahātmanah”, i.e., the ‘great soul’ for Ravana in verse no. 71 shows that his killing should be viewed in the correct perspective. For far from being an ordinary pervert and vile sinner, he was indeed a great soul, a realized individual who had acquired this outwardly evil body due to his past misdeeds and misdemeanours, but he was nevertheless an enlightened and wise soul. There are umpteen numbers of verses highlighting this aspect of his character—such as for example Canto 10, verse nos. 55-61 of Lanka Kand itself. Even the Gods—who were always tormented by Ravana and were behind his death—had to concede that Ravana was indeed a great and privileged soul. See verse nos. 78-82 below.

²The way Ravana has been finally killed has been narrated differently in Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas: Here there is no mention of Matli, the charioteer, advising Lord Ram anything about how Ravana should be slayed, and the Lord has relied on Vibhishan’s advice of shooting an arrow at Ravana’s navel to dry up the source of Amrit that was sustaining his life—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 102; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 103.

But there is a strange coincidence worthy to be noted here: In Ram Charit Manas we read that Trijata, the demoness appointed by Ravana to guard Sita, has told the latter that Ravana would be finally killed when “Lord Ram shoots an arrow at his heart”—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 99.

We can therefore safely say that both these two classics, viz. Ram Charit Manas of Goswami Tulsidas, and Adhyatma Ramayan of sage Veda Vyas, must be read to get a comprehensive picture of what may have actually transpired at that period of time long-long ago, for we discover that there seems to be some sort of subtle form of synergy between the two narratives, inasmuch as they compliment each other to fill in the dotted lines.

Though these two versions may give an impression of contradiction—because whereas in Adhyatma Ramayan it is said that Ravana was killed when Lord Ram hit him in his heart (verse no. 71), while Ram Charit Manas says he was killed by an arrow shot at his navel (Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 103)—but on close examination it seems that both the things may have happened simultaneously: to wit, Lord Ram must have shot arrows aimed at Ravana’s heart as well as his navel to ensure that all precautions are taken to make sure that Ravana is certainly slayed, for the Lord did not want to take any further risk of playing games with him as time was running out, and already all other methods had miserably failed to the demon’s life.

³The arrow literally drilled its way through Ravana’s armour. Since Ravana knew that the most sensitive part of his body were his navel (verse nos. 53-54) and his heart (verse nos. 63, 71), he surely must have secured them to the best of his ability. This arrow penetrated through the thick shield of armour that Ravana wore, bored through the thickness of his flesh and bones, went through his heart, and emerged from the other side of his body to enter the earth. In modern parlance it could have been an armour penetrating missile. For that matter, all the special arrows or projectiles shot by both of them, Ravana and Lord Ram, at each other—such as the Indrastra, the Brahmastra, the Agneyastra etc.—could have been state-of-the-art, technologically advanced war heads.

⁴The technology of recovering the arrows and other projectiles once shot for re-use was the primary reason why big battles were fought with only one or two quivers in stock. There was no need for fresh supply of arrows because all the arrows could be retrieved. The skill lay in using these technologically advanced weapons on the enemy meticulously and properly, with correct timing and aim, so that they could be effective and properly controlled.

The question now arises: It is said here that this special arrow which finally killed Ravana had emerged from the other side of his body, after having pierced through his heart, and then drilled itself into the earth. And then it is said that it returned to the quiver of Lord Ram. These two things don't seem to add up; how was it possible that the arrow was retrieved by Lord Ram after it had drilled itself into the earth?

Well, this mystery can be answered in the following way: The term 'earth' refers to the gross physical body of an individual, because his skin, bones, muscles etc. are said to be made of the 'earth element'. This term, 'earth', is especially applicable to a 'dead body', a body from which life has exited. Hence, the moment Ravana was 'dead', his body was nothing but the 'earth' element in its grossness. So therefore, at the time of attack the arrow had entered a 'living body' on an individual whose name was Ravana, but after having killed him it emerged through his 'dead body' by piercing it on the back, and thence returned back to the quiver of Lord Ram just like a re-usable missile, as explained herein above in this note. The 'dead body' represents the 'earth element'. So therefore, for all practical purposes, the arrow had 'entered the body of Ravana', and when he was dead the instant the arrow ruptured his heart, the arrow 'pierced or drilled through the earth element' symbolized by the dead body of Ravana. After having emerged from it, the arrow went back to the place from where it was shot—viz. the quiver of Lord Ram, for it was designed that way, to return to the place from where it was shot.]

तस्य हस्तात्पपाताशु सशरं कार्मुकं महत् ।
गतासुर्भूमिवेगेन राक्षसेन्द्रोऽपतद्भुवि ॥ ७३॥
तं दृष्ट्वा पतितं भूमौ हतशेषाश्च राक्षसाः । हतनाथा भयत्रस्ता दुद्रुवुः सर्वतोदिशम् ॥ ७४॥ tasya hastātpapātāśu saśaraṃ karmukam mahat । gatāsurbhramivegena rākṣasendro'patadbhuvi ॥ 73॥ taṃ dr̥ṣṭvā patitaṃ bhūmau hataśeṣāśca rākṣasāḥ । hatanāthā bhayatrastā dudruvuḥ sarvatodiśam ॥ 74॥

73-74. As soon as the arrow hit him, Ravana's huge bow as well as his arrow fell down from his hand. He swooned and tottered, and the great king of the demons collapsed to the ground (73).

Seeing him lying on the ground, the remaining demons who had survived death till now became without a Lord (or King); so they lost all hopes (of victory) and fled everywhere from the battle-field, terrified and defeated (74).

दशग्रीवस्य निधनं विजयं राघवस्य च ।
ततो विनेदुः संहृष्टा वानरा जितकाशिनः ॥ ७५॥
वदन्तो रामविजयं रावणस्य च तद्वधम् ।
अथान्तरिक्षे व्यनदत्सौम्यस्त्रिदशदुन्दुभिः ॥ ७६॥ daśagrīvasya nidhanam vijayam rāghavasya ca । tato vineduḥ saṁhr̥ṣṭā vānarā jita-kāśinaḥ ॥ 75॥ vadanto rāma-vijayam rāvaṇasya ca tad-vadham । athāntarikṣe vyanadatsaumyastridaśadundubhiḥ ॥ 76॥

75-76. 'The 10-necked Ravana has died (daśagrīvasya nidhanam), and Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) has been victorious (vijayam rāghavasya ca)'—exclaimed the elated monkeys who were jubilant and ecstatic with joy at this glorious victory (75).

They praised and applauded the victory of Sri Ram (vadanto rāma-vijayam) over the sinful Ravana (rāvaṇasya tad-vadham). In the sky, there was a thunderous sound of kettle-drums and trumpets that were played by the assembled gods to celebrate this singularly happy occasion (76).

पपात पुष्पवृष्टिश्च समन्ताद्वाघवोपरि ।
तुष्टुवुर्मुनयः सिद्धाश्चारणाश्च दिवौकसः ॥ ७७॥
अथान्तरिक्षे ननृतुः सर्वतोऽप्सरसो मुदा ।
रावणस्य च देहोत्थं ज्योतिरादित्यवत्स्फुरत् ॥ ७८॥
प्रविवेश रघुश्रेष्ठं देवानां पश्यतां सताम् । देवा ऊचुरहो भाग्यं रावणस्य महात्मनः ॥ ७९॥ papāta puṣpavṛṣṭiśca samantādrāghavopari । tuṣṭuvurmunaḥ siddhāścāraṇāśca divaukaśaḥ ॥ 77॥ athāntarikṣe nanṛtuḥ sarvato'psaraso mudā । rāvaṇasya ca dehottham jyotirādityavatsphurat ॥ 78॥ praviveśa raghuśreṣṭham devānām paśyatām satām । devā ūcuraho bhāgyam rāvaṇasya mahātmanaḥ ॥ 79॥

77-79. Flowers were showered on Lord Sri Ram from all directions, while the sages, hermits, ascetics, mystics, bards and the gods all joined together to sing the Lord's glory and say their prayers to him (77).

Then the Apsaras (celestial damsels) began dancing merrily in the sky (heavens) to celebrate this auspicious occasion. Just at that time, a shaft or ball of splendourous, dazzling effulgence of light, which was blinding, brilliant and as magnificent as the sun, emerged from the body of Ravana (78) and entered the body of the most exalted Raghu (Lord Sri Ram)¹ even as the Gods watched in awe and wonder. Seeing this wonderful and rarest of rare spectacle, the gods were very amazed; they exclaimed, 'Oh! The great soul Ravana is indeed very fortunate and privileged² (79).

[Note—¹This brilliant effulgence of light that exited from Ravana's gross body to enter the body of Lord Sri Ram was the 'soul' or the Atma of the demon king. This Atma is pure consciousness; it is self-illuminated; it is eternally enlightened; and it is inherently pure, divine and holy; and it is the 'true-self' of an individual. The gross physical body of a creature can be sinful and evil due to the bad deeds the creature does, but the Atma always remains pure and holy irrespective of what the body does. According to the metaphysical principles expounded in the Upanishads, this is the quintessential Truth of the Atma of any living being.

Now, an individual's Atma is a microcosmic form of the cosmic Atma, which is its macrocosmic counterpart. While the former is known as a 'creature' or a 'living being' or an 'individual', the latter is known as the 'Parmatma' or the Supreme Being.

The final rest or destination of the individual's Atma is when it becomes one with the Supreme Atma, the Parmatma.

This is what has indeed happened here with Ravana. His Atma had found its eternal rest and beatitude when it entered the body of Lord Ram, who was none else but the Parmatma, to become one with the latter.

²This is why it is said that Ravana was truly very fortunate and privileged inasmuch as 'he'—in the form of his 'true self' known as the Atma—has attained deliverance, emancipation and salvation inspite of him having the evil body of a 'demon' so easily, even without doing any religious service or any meritorious deed worth the name all through his life.

This is also why Lord Ram has been lauded and applauded repeatedly as being as ocean of kindness, of being merciful, compassionate, benevolent, gracious and magnanimous, for the Lord has not taken any of Ravana's evil deeds into consideration when the Lord discovered that his soul, his Atma, was yearning eagerly for deliverance. The Lord has clearly indicated that he has no personal ill-will or malice against Ravana—because the Lord is omniscient and all-knowing, and he is enlightened about the hidden wish of Ravana that he hopes to find emancipation and salvation for himself in a way he is comfortable with in his birth as a 'demon'; for a 'demon' is not expected to live a pious and holy life like that of a hermit or an ascetic or a sage, but that should not come in the way of the deliverance of his soul if this individual sincerely wishes for liberation from the body of a demon in which his soul is unfortunately trapped due to certain circumstances in the past, but for which he is full of regret and remorse at present. So such a tormented soul must be given a fair chance of redemption by invoking the virtue of forgiveness—which Lord Ram has actually done in the case of Ravana. These metaphysical and spiritual Truths are explicitly expressed in Tulsidas' epic Story of Lord Ram as narrated in 'Ram Charit Manas', Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 104 along with Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede it; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.]

वयं तु सात्विका देवा विष्णोः कारुण्यभाजनाः ।

भयदुःखादिभिर्व्याप्ताः संसारे परिवर्तिनः ॥ ८०॥

अयं तु राक्षसः कूरो ब्रह्महाऽतीव तामसः ।
 परदाररतो विष्णुद्वेषी तापसहिंसकः ॥ ८१॥
 पश्यत्सु सर्वभूतेषु राममेव प्रविष्टवान् ।
 एवं ब्रुवत्सु देवेषु नारदः प्राह सुस्मितः ॥ ८२॥

vayaṃ tu sātṭvikā devā viṣṇoḥ kāruṇyabhājanāḥ । bhayaduḥkhādibhirvyāptāḥ saṃsāre parivartinaḥ ॥ 80॥ ayaṃ tu rākṣasaḥ krūro brahmahā'tīva tāmasaḥ । paradārarato viṣṇudveṣī tāpasahiṃsakaḥ ॥ 81॥ paśyatsu sarvabhūteṣu rāmameva praviṣṭavān । evaṃ bruvatsu deveṣu nāradaḥ prāha susmitaḥ ॥ 82॥

80-82. We Gods primarily have good virtues and noble characteristics in abundance, and we are the favourites (or preferred ones) of Lord Vishnu, but still we wander in this world surrounded and tormented by fears, sorrows etc. of different sorts (80).

Compared to this, he (Ravana) was very cruel, pervert and merciless, a murderer (literally a slayer) of Brahmins, one who possessed the most lowly and detestable characteristics one can imagine, such as being a repository of all sorts of sins, vices and evils. He was lascivious, promiscuous, insincere and unchaste; he was opposed to the Lord God; he was a heretic, an infidel; he harboured an abiding malice towards Lord Vishnu; and he was a tormentor of those who were doing penances and austerities (Tapa) (81).

But what a wonder-of-wonders it is that while all the world watched in amazement and awe, he has been so singularly fortunate that his soul has found its eternal bliss, peace, beatitude and felicity by merging with the Supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram (who is none else but the Supreme Being himself in his form)¹.

When the assembled Gods were thus wondering in amazement, the celestial sage Narad smiled and said (82)—

[Note—¹The Gods were astonished because they had never expected Ravana—whom they had always thought to be an embodiment of sins and evil—to attain such an exalted death because the Supreme Being would himself come to his doorstep to grant him eternal liberation and deliverance, to bless him with emancipation and salvation.

The fact that Ravana's soul or Atma was accepted by Lord Ram and granted a place within himself proves how much the Lord respected the purity and holiness of his soul. Forsooth and without any gainsay, verily, Lord Ram realized that the Ravana whom the world so much loathed and reviled was actually his gross physical body, and not his Atma which was his 'true self', the Atma which was as holy and pure as it ought to be. And therefore, the just and kind and all-knowing Supreme Lord of the world, who judges each individual very minutely, by taking everything and every aspect into consideration before passing a judgment against or in favour of anyone, decided that Ravana does not deserve to be condemned to eternal hell to suffer.

The Lord determined that whatever Ravana he had done was done as a 'demon', and the word 'demon' refers to his gross physical body but not definitely to his Atma, and this physical body was made to give its due penalty by being sacrificed in the war, for it was mutilated and decapitated in the final hours of the war before being killed. This was a sufficient sacrifice for Ravana, and once it was offered his soul had the right to redemption.

The question arises: Why did Lord Ram accept Ravana's soul within his own self? The answer is this: (i) To show the world that the Lord was exceptionally forgiving, merciful, compassionate, gracious, kind, understanding, magnanimous and benevolent so much so that he is ready to go to any extent to welcome anyone who wishes to come to him, overlooking all other things that would normally hinder such warm welcome. (ii) To show the world that the Lord had no personal ill-will against Ravana, and was merely punishing him for his misdeeds. (iii) To tell the world that a wise, just and enlightened judge is one who applies intelligence and always looks deeper before passing a judgment for or against anyone, for oftentimes what meets the eye is very deceptive—as was clearly the case with Ravana, for the world treated him as a vile person, whereas his 'true self', his Atma, was as holy and pure as it ought to be, and it was for this reason that Lord Ram had no second thoughts in accepting Ravana's Atma within his own self. (iv) To give a cue to the world as to why valiant warriors who prefer to die fighting their adversaries in the battle-field are said to go to heaven—because by dying they would have made the ultimate sacrifice, and once a self-sacrifice is made the soul has the rightful claim to deliverance and eternal peace, which must be granted to it.

There is another reason also—Ravana was so loathed and feared by the Gods that they would never give his soul permission to ascend to heaven; so going to the heaven was ruled out. As for going to hell for his sins, that was also not possible for Ravana because the lord of hell, i.e. Yam, too hated and feared him as much as his brethren in the heaven. To wit, both the Gods in heaven and Yam in hell refused to accept Ravana. So Lord Ram thought: "Doesn't matter; I will grant Ravana a place where no one can object, for it is my own sanctuary. I have made him pay for his misdeeds, so now it is obligatory for me to give his soul a place to abide. If the Gods and Yam won't accept him, well and good; I myself would accept him! And no one can say anything as to this abode for Ravana's soul, because I have a right to grant admission to anyone in my personal chambers." Say, how gracious and loving Lord Sri Ram, our Lord, is, indeed!]

शृणुतात् सुरा यूयं धर्मतत्त्वविचक्षणाः ।
 रावणो राघवद्वेषादनिशं हृदि भावयन् ॥ ८३॥
 भृत्यैः सह सदा रामचरितं द्वेषसंयुतः ।
 श्रुत्वा रामात्स्वनिधनं भयात्सर्वत्र राघवम् ॥ ८४॥
 पश्यन्ननुदिनं स्वप्ने राममेवानुपश्यति । क्रोधोऽपि रावणस्याशु गुरुबोधाधिकोऽभवत् ॥ ८५॥ śṛṇutātra surā yūyaṃ dharmatattvavicakṣaṇāḥ । rāvaṇo rāghavadveṣādaniśaṃ hṛdi bhāvayan ॥ 83॥ bhr̥tyaiḥ saha sadā rāmacaritaṃ dveṣasaṃyutaḥ । śrutvā rāmātsvanidhanaṃ bhayātsarvatra rāghavam ॥ 84॥ paśyannanudināṃ svapne rāmamevānupaśyati । krodho'pi rāvaṇasyāśu gurubodhādhiko'bhavat ॥ 85॥

83-85. [Narad said to the gods—] 'Oh my dear Gods! Listen to my views. All of you are well-versed in the essential wisdom of Dharma (i.e. the principles that govern the destiny of the soul). Since Ravana was opposed to Sri Ram, he constantly thought of him day and night, albeit with enmity and malice (83).

He was not alone in this remembrance, for all his dependants, such as his warriors, ministers, servants etc., too were constantly thinking of Lord Sri Ram. When Ravana heard that he was destined to die at the hands of Lord Sri Ram, he was so mentally terrified of the Lord that he constantly saw (i.e., imagined, visualized, thought of) Raghav (Sri Ram) every moment of his life; he saw Lord Ram everywhere (84) so much so that he even dreamt of him in the night when he slept.

In this way, Ravana's anger and vengeance became his reward or boon, and it proved to be more fruitful and useful for him (as it provided deliverance to his soul) than all the teachings and preaching of Guru (a spiritual teacher) would have ever benefited him (85).

रामेण निहतश्चान्ते निर्धूताशेषकल्मषः । रामसायुज्यमेवाप रावणो मुक्तबन्धनः ॥ ८६॥ rāmeṇa nihataścānte nirdhūtāśeṣakalmaṣaḥ । rāmasāyujyamevāpa rāvaṇo muktabandhanaḥ ॥ 86॥

86. In the end, being killed at the hands of Sri Ram himself, all his residual sins and their attendant negative effects were washed away; his soul was cleaned and of all his sins.

As a result, being freed or liberated from all the fetters (of sins and evil deeds), Ravana attained the supreme stature of being one with the Supreme Being who had come to provide him deliverance in the form of Lord Sri Ram (86).

पापिष्ठो वा दुरात्मा परधनपरदारेषु सक्तो यदि स्या- न्नित्यं स्नेहाद्भयाद्वा रघुकुलतिलकं भावयन् सम्परेतः ।
भूत्वा शुद्धान्तरङ्गो भवशतजनितानेकदोषैर्विमुक्तः सद्यो रामस्य विष्णोः सुखरविनुतं याति वैकुण्ठमाद्यम् ॥ ८७॥

pāpiṣṭho vā durātmā paradhanaparadāreṣu sakto yadi syānnityaṁ snehādbhayādvā raghukulatilakaṁ bhāvayan samparetaḥ । bhūtvā śuddhāntaraṅgo bhavaśatajanitānekadoṣairvimuktaḥ sadyo rāmasya viṣṇoḥ suravaravinutaṁ yāti vaikunṭhamādyam ॥ 87॥

87. [Now in this verse, Narad prescribes the method for the creatures of this world to attain salvation—] Even though a person had been a sinner, wicked, pervert and evil, or he had been rapacious towards the wealth and women of others—if he still remembers Lord Sri Ram, constantly, persistently and consistently, either by way of devotion or out of fear (i.e. willingly out of devotion and faith, or fearfully out of fear of hell and retribution for his sins and misdeeds), and should he die this way, then surely he is deemed to have become purified in his mind and heart. This entitles him to attain freedom from all spiritual torments, for he is surely liberated from all his sufferings caused by his sins and misdeeds that may have accumulated over numerous births.

Consequently, this purified creature is granted access to the heaven where holy souls who have been cleansed of all spiritual impurities are destined to go. This 'heaven' is the eternal abode of Lord Vishnu whose incarnation is in the person of Lord Sri Ram.

Verily indeed, forsooth and without any gainsay, Lord Sri Ram no one else but Lord Vishnu himself.

The exalted abode of Lord Vishnu is known as 'Vaikuntha'; it is praised and honoured even by Indra (the king of Gods)¹ (87).

[Note—¹It clearly means that the heaven which is referred to here as 'Vaikuntha', where Lord Vishnu lives, is superior to the general 'heaven' where those souls who have lived a good and meritorious life would usually go after death of their bodies. Vaikuntha is attained by that individual who dies while remembering Lord Ram—for it is said that "the soul of a creature attains a destiny of which it has been thinking at the time of death of the creature".

So therefore, if a dying person thinks of this world, then his soul would come back to this world, i.e. it will take a re-birth. In which form it takes a re-birth would then be determined by what stands to the credit or debit in the account of his past life, which depends on the net result that is obtained by balancing the account of his past life's actions and deeds.

But should he surrender his soul to the thoughts of the Lord God at the time of his death, sincerely regretting his evil deeds and sinful actions, and prays to the Lord to forgive him and grant redemption to his soul, then let him be assured that he will rise higher than even the ordinary 'heaven', for the merciful and compassionate Lord God welcomes him in his own abode in 'Vaikuntha' with open arms.

This in brief is the message of Narad in these verses.]

हत्वा युद्धे दशास्यं त्रिभुवनविषमं वामहस्तेन चापं
भुमौ विष्टभ्य तिष्ठन्नितरकरधृतं भ्रामयन् बाणमेकम् ।
आरक्तोपान्तनेत्रः शरदलितवपुः सूर्यकोटिप्रकाशो
वीरश्रीबन्धुराङ्गस्त्रिदशपतिनुतः पातु मां वीररामः ॥ ८८॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे एकादशः सर्गः ॥ ११॥

hatvā yuddhe daśāsyam tribhuvanaviṣamaṁ vāmahastena cāpaṁ bhumau viṣṭabhya tiṣṭhannitarakaradhṛtaṁ bhrāmayan bāṇamekaṁ । āraktopāntanetraḥ śaradalitavapuḥ sūryakoṭiprakāśo vīraśrībāndhurāṅgastridaśapatinutaḥ pātu māṁ vīrarāmaḥ ॥ 88॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe ekādaśaḥ
sargaḥ ॥ 11॥

88. [Now, Narad describes the divine and heavenly view of Lord Sri Ram after he has just obtained victory over Ravana—]

'Having killed the 10-headed Ravana—who was tormenting the three worlds¹—in the battle, he (Sri Ram) is standing majestically in the battle-field, holding in his left hand his bow one end of which rests on the ground, while he is gently moving his arrow that he holds in the other (right) hand (as if to show his grace upon it with his caresses).

The corners of his eyes are red; and his body—which has been peppered with arrows and sprinkled with blood—looks radiant, splendid and glorious like millions of suns shining at the same time. His muscular, well built and handsome body is crowned by the Glory of Victory.

He is being praised, honoured and shown due reverence by Indra, the king of Gods.

Oh the most valorous, gallant and majestic Lord Sri Ram, please grant me your abiding protection' (88).

[Note—¹The “three worlds” refer to the three divisions of the living world: the heaven, the earth and the nether world.]

Thus ends Canto 11 of Adhyatma Ramayan that describes the conversation between Lord Shiva and goddess Uma, his consort.

{This brings to an end the Epic War of Lanka. In the next Chapter we shall read what happened in the wake of Ravana’s death and Lord Ram’s victory.}

-----**-----

Part 6

The War Ends with Victory for Lord Ram’s Forces; Mandodari grieves for her husband Ravana; Vibhishan made the New King of Lanka; Sita is Re-United with Lord Ram; The Return of Lord Ram with His Companions back to His Capital at Ayodhya.

Introduction:

This is the Final Part of our Book. Here we shall read what happened after Ravana was killed in the War of Lanka and Lord Ram attained victory, and then about Sita’s reunion with the Lord, followed by the Lord’s triumphant return to his capital city of Ayodhya at the end of his 14-years of forest sojourn.

We shall round off our narrative by quickly going over the entire Story of the Ramayana, by way of recapitulation. For this purpose too, we shall be reading relevant verses directly from Ram Charit Manas, for these verses are especially dedicated to this quick reading of the whole Story presented in brief.

For the purpose of our narrative, we have divided this Part no. 6 into following Chapters and their Sections as detailed herein below:-

Chapter 19: The War Ends with Victory for Lord Ram's Forces; Jubilation in the ranks of the Gods and their Praise of Lord Ram; Appointment of Vibhishan as the New King of Lanka:

Section 19.1 Geetawali Ramayan

Section 19.2 Kavitalawali Ramayan

Section 19.3 Ram Charit Manas

Section 19.4 Adhyatma Ramayan

Chapter 20: Sita Re-United with Lord Ram:

Section 20.1 Ram Charit Manas

Section 20.2 Adhyatma Ramayan

Chapter 21: Epilogue—

Lord Ram Embarks on His Journey Back Home to Ayodhya with His Companions onboard the Air-Plane called Pushpak; Lord Ram's Arrival in Ayodhya to a warm and tumultuous Welcome; Lord Ram's ascending the Throne of Ayodhya as a King and the Lord Emperor; Lord Ram's guests from Kishkindha and Lanka return to their respective kingdoms:

Section 21.1 (sub-section 21.1.1—21.1.5) Ram Charit Manas

Section 21.2 (sub-section 21.2.1—21.2.2) Adhyatma Ramayan

Section 21.3 (sub-section 21.3.1—21.3.2) Geetawali Ramayan

Chapter 22: The whole Story of the "Ramayana"—Recapitulated and Told Quickly in a 'Fast Motion' mode from 'Ram Charit Manas' of Goswami Tulsidas.

So now, let us start our narrative.

Chapter 19

The War Ends with Victory for Lord Ram's Forces; Jubilation in the ranks of the Gods and their Praise of Lord Ram; Appointment of Vibhishan as the New King of Lanka.

Section 19.1: Geetawali Ramayan

Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse no. 16

Lord Ram has finally been victorious in the epic War of Lanka. He has vanquished the evil demons and has ended their terror in the world; all living beings were relieved of their horrors. The prayers of Mother Earth and the Gods were answered. Sages, ascetics, hermits and all other holy persons, who were constantly under threat from the demons, felt very happy. The balance of Gunas (virtues and characters) was restored in favour of Dharma (principles of righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety, good and ethical conduct, and general adherence to norms of meritorious life as advised by the scriptures). There was cheer and happiness all around; a new dawn of peace and rule-of-law dawned.

But all these benefits were for the world; what about the demons who were killed in this ferocious war? Forsooth and without gainsay, they too had their share of good fortune, as each and every demon who died in this war found instant liberation and deliverance for his soul; everyone of the demons attained emancipation and salvation; every one of them found beatitude and felicity for their souls. Why so if they were so cruel and nasty? This particular aspect is what makes Lord Ram so great and exalted: for the Lord is so exceptionally merciful, kind, gracious, magnanimous, benevolent and compassionate, as well as forgiving and tolerant that he decided to liberate the souls of all these sinful creatures, to provide them with salvation, and ensure that all of them are granted deliverance and emancipation—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7, 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114.

Now, let us go back to the Battle-Field of Lanka and have a look around to see what is taking place there.

After the war ended with Ravana's soul being granted deliverance from his demon-body, a sudden calm descended on the arena of this ferocious war. The victorious Lord Ram stood in the middle of the battle-field, looking gallant, majestic and charming.

The illustrious and blessed poet-saint Goswami Tulsidas describes the Lord's beauty and the singular charm of his form in Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse no. 16. Let us read it quickly as follows:-

विजयी राम

राग कान्हरा

(6 / 16)

राजत राम काम-सत-सुंदर ।

रिपु रन जीति अनुज सँग सोभित, फेरत चाप-बिसिष बनरुह-कर ॥ 1 ॥

स्याम सरीर रुचिर श्रम-सीकर, सोनित-कन बिच बीच मनोहर ।

जनु खद्योत-निकर, हरिहित-गन, भ्राजत मरकत-सैल-सिखरपर ॥ 2 ॥

घायल बीर बिराजत चहुँ दिसि, हरषित सकल रिच्छ अरु बनचर ।

कुसुमित किंसुक-तरु समूह महँ, तरुन तमाल बिसाल बिटप बर ॥ 3 ॥

राजिव-नयन बिलोकि कृपा करि, किए अभय मुनि-नाग, बिबुध-नर ।

तुलसिदास यह रूप अनूपम हिय-सरोज बसि दुसह बिपतिहर ॥ 4 ॥ vijayī rāma

rāga kānharā

(6/16)

rājata rāma kāma-sata-sundara.

ripu rana jīti anuja saṁga sōbhita, phērata cāpa-bisiṣa banaruha-kara.. 1..

syāma sarīra rucira śrama-sīkara, sōnita-kana bica bīca manōhara.

janu khadyōta-nikara, harihita-gana, bhrājata marakata-saila-sikharapara.. 2..

ghāyala bīra birājata cahuṁ disi, haraṣita sakala riccha aru banacara.

kusumita kinsuka-taru samūha mahaṁ, taruna tamāla bisāla biṭapa bara.. 3..

rājiva-nayana bilōki kṛpā kari, ki'ē abhaya muni-nāga, bibudha-nara.

tulasidāsa yaha rūpa anūpama hiya-sarōja basi dusaha bipatihara.. 4..

Victorious Lord Ram

Verse no. 6/16—[As had been already noted in an introduction to verse no. 6/5 herein above, Tulsidas has preferred to skip the details of the War of Lanka in this book Geetawali. The probable reasons are also outlined therein.

So, he comes straight to the point of time when the demons were defeated and Lord Ram won the war. This point of time in the story—Lord Ram's victory—is also narrated in (i) Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/56—6/58; and (ii) Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 103 along with Chaupai line nos. 10-11 and Chanda line nos. 1-8 that precede it.]

Having conquered his enemy, victorious Lord Ram is present in the battle-field with his brother Laxman. He appears most charming and magnificent like thousands of Kamdeos (cupids) appearing in his person at once. He is moving his hands on his bows and arrows (1).

Sweat drops interspersed with blood drops are glistening on his dark complexioned body as if red creepers look magnificent surrounded by hordes of glow-worms on the summit of Mt. Markat Mani (i.e. a mountain of emerald)¹ (2).

[¹Here, the dark complexioned body of Lord Ram is likened to Mt. Markat Mani; the streams of blood flowing from his body to the 'creepers of red colour' that drape the sides of this mountain; and the glistening sweat drops to the 'glow worms'.]

Wounded warriors are sitting around him. All those monkeys and bears are extremely happy. Lord Ram looks as magnificent as a large and young but huge Tamaal Tree (taruna tamāla bisāla biṭapa bara) amongst smaller Kinskuk Trees that have blooming flowers (kusumita kinsuka-taru samūha mahaṁ)² (3).

[²The "Tamaal tree" is the Black Catechu tree (Xanthocymus epictorius); the "Kinsuk tree" is the Butea Frondosa tree which bears beautiful flowers.

Here, Lord Ram is likened to the Black Catechu tree because of his dark complexion, and the monkeys who sit around him in a jubilant mood to the countless flowers that bloom on the comparatively smaller tree called Butea Frondosa.]

At that moment, that lotus-eyed Lord glanced at the gods, hermits, legendary serpents and men, and made them fearless³.

Tulsidas prays that this vision of peerless beauty which vanquishes all mighty troubles of the heart and torments of the mind, should ever reside in his heart (4).

[³Refer: (a) Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/22, stanza no. 2; and (b) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 103.]

-----**-----

Section 19.2: Kavita wali Ramayan

Kavita wali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 56-58

Like in the case of Geetawali Ramayan, Lord Ram's exceptional charm and beauty as he stood victorious in the battle-field of Lanka has been described by Tulsidas in Kavita wali Ramayan too, the difference being in the style of composition—for whereas Geetawali is in the form of a 'Geet', meaning a "song", Kavita wali is in the form of a 'Kavita', meaning a "poetry".

A 'song' is sung, and one who is an expert in this skill is called a singer, while 'poetry' is recited, and one who recites it is a poet. Basically these two styles of composition are the same as they touch the heart of the listener and are pleasing to the ears, though technically there may be some form of subtle difference between the two formats and styles of renderings.

Now, after we have read how Lord Ram's beauty and charm have been described in Geetawali Ramayan once the war ended, and before we move ahead with our narrative of what subsequently happened in Lanka in the wake of Lord Ram's victory in this war, let us briefly recapitulate the 'landmark events' of this epic war as narrated in Kavita wali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 56-58:-

The War Ends

बाप दियो काननु, भो आननु सुभाननु सो, बैरी भो दसाननु सो, तीयको हरनु भो ।
 बालि बलसालि दलि, पालि कपिराजको,
 बिभीषनु नेवाजि, सेत सागर-तरनु भो ॥
 घोर रारि हेरि त्रिपुरारि-बिधि हारे हिउँ, घायल लखन बीर बानर बरनु भो ।
 ऐसे सोकमें तिलोकु कै बिसोक पलही में, सबही को तुलसीको साहेबु सरनु भो ॥ 56 ॥

56. bāpa diyō kānanu, bhō ānanu subhānanu sō, bairī bhō dasānanu sō, tiyakō haranu bhō.
 bāli balasāli dali, pāli kapirājakō, bibhīśanu nēvāji, sēta sāgara-taranu bhō..
 ghōra rāri hēri tripurāri-bidhi hārē hi'ēñ, ghāyala lakhana bīra bānara baranu bhō.
 aisē sōkamēm tilōku kai bisōka palahī mēm, sabahī kō tulasīkō sāhēbu saranu bhō..56..

Verse no. 6/56—“Lord Ram’s face never showed anger, remorse, annoyance or dejection and any other negative signs even though his father exiled him, or a warrior as brave as Ravana became his enemy and kidnapped Sita. He protected Sugriv by killing his enemy and arch rival, the powerful Bali, had mercy on Vibhishan, crossed the ocean by constructing a bridge across it, fought such a furious war that even Brahma and Shiva shuddered and had lost all hopes of victory in their hearts, and his brother Laxman was wounded in the battle, got so much smeared with blood and dust that his countenance resembled those of red-faced monkeys.

Even in the face of such adversities and misfortunes, he could redeem the three Lokas (by vanquishing the fear of the Gods)—Tulsidas says that his Lord is such that he gives refuge to all and obliges them fully.”

[Note—Verse nos. 56—58 sort of recapitulates the story of Lord Ram since his coming to the forest till the time the epic war of Lanka ended and the Lord was victorious.]

कुंभकरन्नु हन्यो रन राम, दल्यो दसकंधरु कंधर तोरे।
पूषनबंस बिभूषन-पूषन-तेज-प्रताप गरे अरि-ओरे॥
देव निसान बजावत, गावत, साँवतु गो मनभावत भो रे।
नाचत-बानर-भालु सबै ‘तुलसी’ कहि ‘हा रे! हहा भै अहो रे’॥ 57॥

57. kumbhakarannu han'yō rana rāma, dalyō dasakandharu kandhara tōrē.
pūśanabansa bibhūśana-pūśana-tēja-pratāpa garē ari-ōrē..
dēva nisāna bajāvata, gāvata, sām̐vatu gō manabhāvata bhō rē.
nācata-bānara-bhālu sabai ‘tulasī’ kahi ‘hā rē! hahā bhai ahō rē’.. 57..

Verse no. 6/57—Lord Ram killed Kumbhkaran and Ravana by breaking the latter's neck in the war. In this way the hail (enemy) melted by the heat of the sun (the glory of Lord Ram) (1).

The Gods sing and beat their trumpets and drums because their dependence on Ravana ended and their wishes were fulfilled. Even the monkeys and bears are dancing with joy, cheering, ‘Oh what a wonder! How great! Fantastic!’ (2).”

मारे रन रातिचर रावनु सकुल दलि, अनुकूल देव-मुनि फूल बरषतु हैं।
नाग, नर, किन्नर, बिराँचि, हरि, हरु हेरि
पुलक सरीर हिउँ हेतु हरषतु हैं॥
बाम ओर जानकी कृपानिधानके बिराजै, देखत बिषादु मिटै, मोदु करषतु हैं।
आयसु भो, लोकनि सिधारे लोकपाल सबै, ‘तुलसी’ निहाल कै कै दिये सरखतु हैं॥ 58॥

58. mārē rana rāticara rāvanu sakula dali, anukūla dēva-muni phūla barāśatu haiṁ.
nāga, nara, kinnara, birañci, hari, haru hēri pulaka sarīra hi'ēṁ hētu haraśatu haiṁ..
bāma ōra jānakī kṛpānidhānakē birājaiṁ, dēkhata biśādu miṭai, mōdu karaśatu hairi.

 āyasu bhō, lōkani sidhārē lōkapāla sabai, ‘tulasi’ nihāla kai kai diyē sarakhatu hairi..58..

Verse no. 6/58—Lord Ram crushed Ravana along with his kin and other demons in the war. Exhilarated and ecstatic at the victory, the gods and sages showered flowers upon the Lord (from the sky / heaven). Watching the scene, the terrestrial serpents, humans, ‘Kinnars’ (dancers and singers) as well as Lords Brahma, Shiva and Vishnu became thrilled, and their hearts overflowed with joy, delight, love and affection.

The merciful (Lord Ram) has Sita on his left¹, the very vision of which results in (provides) freedom from sorrows and enhances happiness. All the Lokpals (guardians) took leave and went to their respective posts (Lokas).

Tulsidas says that the Lord Ram made everyone happy and contented, and declared that now onwards they should all be fearless.”

[Note—¹This stanza prepares us for the next phase of this marvelous and fascinating Story of Lord Ram’s victory over the demon forces, led by their king Ravana, in the Epic War of Lanka—for it refers to “Sita standing to the left of Lord Ram”, which obviously means that she has been freed from her captivity in Lanka after Ravana’s death.

What transpired during the time between Ravana’s death and her restoration to Lord Ram is the subject matter of our reading in the pages that follow.]

-----**-----

Section 19.3: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 104—to Doha no. 106.

{Note—After the brief pause of Sections 19.1 (Geetawali Ramayan) and 19.2 (Kavitawali Ramayan), now we shall resume our narrative in this Section no. 19.3 by picking up the thread from where we had left it earlier in Chapter 18, Section 18.1.}

The severed heads of Ravana fell before his chief queen Mandodari. Though she grieved and lamented sorely at the death of her husband Ravana, she also lauded the grace and magnanimity of Lord Ram that he had been exceptionally and singularly kind and gracious to grant emancipation and salvation to the soul of Ravana in spite of his being very sinful, pervert, vile and evil. When the assembled gods and sages heard her, they very much appreciated Mandodari’s wisdom and enlightened thoughts because her praise of Lord Ram showed that she understood that the Lord had not actually ‘killed’ her husband with any sort of animosity and malice in his heart, but the fact was quite the contrary, for the Lord had provided her husband’s soul the rare blessing of ‘liberation from the demonic body in which it was trapped, granting it deliverance, emancipation and salvation' which Ravana would never have got if he was allowed to live a life on his own terms as a 'demon'. The greatness and magnanimity of Lord Ram, of whom Mandodari was certain was none but the Supreme Being himself*, lay in this very thing—that the Lord had taken the trouble to suffer himself so much in order to free her husband's soul from the swamp of sins and evil deeds that it was trapped in by the virtue of the body of a demon in which this soul lived, by 'killing' the sinful body as it paved the way for the soul of her dear husband to escape from it and find its freedom, just like a prisoner who is suddenly freed from a prison from which he had never imagined he would ever be freed. Forsooth, this therefore was not 'killing of her husband by Lord Ram', but it was a mighty blessing in disguise for him; it was a blessing that had left even the gods and sages amazed at Ravana's good fortune, and made them laud him for the exalted destiny that his soul had attained in spite of his spending his life sinfully#.

{*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15.

#Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-11 that precede Doha no. 103; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 79-88.}

However, from the perspective of this gross world, we see everyone in Ravana's family grieving and lamenting on his death. Even Vibhishan was emotionally upset and sad when he saw everyone in his bereaved family weeping and wailing so sorrowfully. Laxman stepped forward to condole Vibhishan and assuage his feelings. After that, Lord Ram summoned his chief ministers and instructed them to go to Lanka with Vibhishan, and anoint him as the kingdom's new King.

These episodes have been described in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 104—to Doha no. 106.

Let us now commence to read what happened immediately after the demise of Ravana, the great king of the demon race. First we shall read that as soon as it was clear that Ravana was dead, a thick pall of gloom descended on his family; his chief queen Mandodari as well as all others in the royal household lamented and grieved most woefully. Then Vibhishan too grieved at the death of his brother, and Laxman comforted him. Finally we shall see Lord Ram fulfilling his promise given to Vibhishan: that at the end of the war he would make the latter a King of Lanka. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 along with Chaupai line nos. 8-10 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.}

चौ०. पति सिर देखत मंदोदरी । मुरुछित बिकल धरनि खसि परी ॥ १ ॥

जुबति बृंद रोवत उठि धाई । तेहि उठाइ रावन पहि आई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

pati sira dēkhata mandōdarī. muruchita bikala dharani khasi parī. 1.

jubati br̥nda rōvata uṭhi dhā'īm. tēhi uṭhā'i rāvana pahim ā'īm. 2.

No sooner had Mandodari seen her husband's head falling right before her¹, than she swooned and fell down unconscious on the ground. (1)

The women folk of the royal household (maids, servitors, guards and other royal attendants) too broke down, weeping and grieving along with Mandodari at the death of their lord (Ravana). They lifted Mandodari up from the ground, and brought her to the place (in the battle-field) where Ravana's body lay on the ground². (2)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 103.

²They all came to the battle-field to see Ravana's dead body for the last time, and pay their last respects to him.

They also wanted to verify if Ravana was actually dead, for merely seeing his heads was no guarantee that he was really dead. During the course of the war, his heads were severed many times by Lord Ram, and all these heads had flown here and there in the sky, and after sometimes they must have landed somewhere. So therefore, the palace women could not be absolutely certain that Ravana was dead by merely seeing his severed heads. Hence, they wished to ascertain the facts by visiting the battle-ground and seeing for themselves that Ravana was indeed dead.]

पति गति देखि ते करहिं पुकारा । छूटे कच नहिं बपुष सँभारा ॥ ३ ॥
उर ताड़ना करहिं बिधि नाना । रोवत करहिं प्रताप बखाना ॥ ४ ॥

pati gati dēkhi tē karahim pukārā. chūṭē kaca nahim bapuṣa saṁbhārā. 3.
ura tāṛana karahim bidhi nānā. rōvata karahim pratāpa bakhānā. 4.

When they (Mandodari as well as all other ladies who accompanied her) saw the condition of their lord (“pati”; i.e. Ravana)¹ (lying prostrate and motionless on the ground, with all his heads and limbs cut-off, and covered with a thick cake of dust mixed with dried blood), they wailed and lamented most woefully, crying in agony of grief, dismay and distress.

Their long tresses were disheveled and in complete disorder; they weren't in control of themselves and their bodies. (3)

All of them woefully beat their chests and felt utterly miserable in their hearts while remembering their lord's greatness and glories, which they, led by their grieving queen Mandodari, enumerated in laudable terms, praising him for his outstanding achievements for which he was so famed and acclaimed³. (4)

[Note—¹The word used in the text for Ravana is “pati”: it has a dual meaning: for Mandodari it meant her ‘husband’, and for the rest of the ladies it meant their ‘lord’.

²The ladies were in great grief and overcome with remorse. No matter how bad, evil and cruel Ravana may have been for the rest of the world, for them he was their caretaker who provided them their security, their needs and their comforts; and with his death they had lost their lord and master. They stared at a morbid, gloomy and uncertain future, for they did not know what was in store for them, and how the new ruler would treat them. They feared for the worse as they already had a very bitter experience of how an invading army behaves on several occasions during the war, but more specifically when recently the small detachment of monkeys, who were sent to stop Ravana's fire sacrifice, had ill-treated and humiliated them by dragging them by their hairs and pulling them out from the inside of the palace. {Apropos: (i) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 85; and (ii) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 24-32.}

They guessed that after this victory, Vibhishan would surely ascend the throne of Lanka, as he was the next in line of natural succession. With the memory of how roughly his brother Ravana had treated him in full court and then kicked him out of the kingdom very unceremoniously, there were fair chances of his squaring up the account of the insults that he had been subjected to by avenging his anger on Ravana's ladies; if not physically ravishing them in the worst scenario, then at the best by treating them as his mistresses and concubines on-call, who would be expected to gratify his pleasures at his will, or else face punishment, thereby robbing them of their freedom, honour, dignity and self-respect that all of them had hitherto enjoyed under their lord Ravana.

³When a person is dead, it is a matter of courtesy and civility and good manners that only his goodness and achievements are recounted, and not his sins and evilness; this is the standard way obituaries are written. No one, not even those who had malice against him while he was alive, would say in public that the dead man was a vile person; for with his death his sins also die with his dead body. What survived Ravana was his soul, and this soul is eternally pure and holy, and hence without blemishes.

If outsiders refrain from criticizing a dead person, how can his kith and kin, his close family members such as his wife and brother, durst ever gather courage to insinuate him, for in case they do so then they themselves become objects of scorn and ridicule in this world?

It is forsooth an undeniable fact that there was no greater warrior at that time than Ravana who had conquered the whole world with the formidable strength of his arms. He was not only invincible in the battle-field but also a great performer of sacrifices, as well as scholar in his own right. Even the almighty gods were vanquished by him; he had performed many a great sacrifices by the virtue of which Brahma, the creator, and Lord Shiva, the concluder of this creation, had themselves been so pleased with him that they had granted him several boons; and as for scholarship, Ravana was well-versed in the scriptures and their Mantras, and his prayer, called "Shiva Tandava Stotra" in honour of Lord Shiva, who incidentally was his patron deity, has no match in Sanskrit literature. He also did severe penances, observed austerities, practiced meditation and contemplation, and taken all-in-all, he was a learned and wise soul.

As to the question "why did he do so many sins", the answer is: it was not 'he', i.e. his true self known as his Atma (pure consciousness) that commit any sin, but it was his gross body of a demon that did it.

And further, if we examine the circumstances of his getting a demonic body, we find that it was not because of some grave sin or evil deed of his own doing, but because of a nasty scheme laid out by one of his enemies in his previous life that led to Brahmins falsely holding him guilty and cursing him to become a demon for a grave sin that he had not at all committed. We have already read this story earlier in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 153—to Doha no. 176.

So therefore, to be honest to Ravana, the real blame for all his sufferings was not his own misdeeds, but the over-jealous Brahmins who had misused their powers to curse him without finding out the truth.]

तव बल नाथ डोल नित धरनी । तेज हीन पावक ससि तरनी ॥ ५ ॥ सेष कमठ सहि सकहिं न भारा । सो तनु भूमि परेउ भरि छारा ॥ ६ ॥ tava bala nātha ḍōla nita dharanī. tēja hīna pāvaka sasi taranī. 5.

 sēṣa kamaṭha sahi sakahim na bhārā. sō tanu bhūmi parē'u bhari chārā. 6.

Mandodari, who was all the more sad and remorseful at the loss of her dear husband, honoured her departed lord by lauding his achievements in the following words: 'Oh Lord! The earth shook by the might of your valorous arms. The Fire God, the Moon and the Sun faded in comparison to your grand majesty and astounding glory. (3)

It is such an irony that you, who once were so mighty and great that the Tortoise and Seshnath (who are said to support the earth and the world on their back and hoods respectively) shook and shuddered when you walked majestically¹, now lie fallen on the ground covered with dust! (4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 182; and (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 25.]

बरुन कुबेर सुरेस समीरा । रन सन्मुख धरि काहुँ न धीरा ॥ ७ ॥ भुजबल जितेहु काल जम साई । आजु परेहु अनाथ की नाई ॥ ८ ॥ baruna kubēra surēsa samīrā. rana sanmukha dhari kāhuṁ na dhīrā. 7.

 bhujabala jitēhu kāla jama sā'īm. āju parēhu anātha kī nā'īm. 8.

Varun (the patron god of water), Kuber (the treasurer of gods), Suresh (the king of gods; Indra), and Samira (the wind god)¹—none of them dare to stand before you in the battle-field. (7)

Oh Lord; you had vanquished even Kaal, the god of death, by the force of your powerful arms².

Alas! It is so unfortunate that today you are lying helplessly on the ground as if you are without any support; as if your legendary valour, gallantry, strength and power have altogether abandoned you. (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 8

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand, Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-13 that precede it; and (b) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 96.]

जगत बिदित तुम्हारि प्रभुताई । सुत परिजन बल बरनि न जाई ॥ ९ ॥

राम बिमुख अस हाल तुम्हारा । रहा न कोउ कुल रोवनिहारा ॥ १० ॥ jagata bidita tumhāri prabhutāī. suta parijana bala barani na jāī. 9.

rāma bimukha asa hāla tumhārā. rahā na kō'u kula rōvanihārā. 10.

Your (Ravana's) majesty, greatness, achievements, gallantry and glories are famed throughout the world; the strength and valour of your kith and kin were so immense that they could not be sufficiently enumerated and praised by anyone. (9)

But alas, such a woeful has been your fate by being hostile towards and harbouring animosity with Lord Ram that no one is left in your race (and family) to at least weep for you on your demise¹. (10)

[Note—¹It is surely a biting and bitter taunt on Vibhishan—for everyone knows that he was Ravana's brother, and when the ladies said that “no one lives in Ravana's family to weep for him after he died”, a finger of scorn and contempt is pointed directly at his brother Vibhishan. Ravana's ladies blame Vibhishan for their lord's death, and for all practical purposes they indicate that they treat him as an outcaste from the demon race.

It was sure to pinch Vibhishan's conscience sorely, and he would understand that in the final analysis of history he would never be forgiven for his betrayal and for being an agent to bring about the ruin of his own family.]

तव बस बिधि प्रपंच सब नाथा । सभय दिसिप नित नावहिं माथा ॥ ११ ॥
अब तव सिर भुज जंबुक खाहीं । राम बिमुख यह अनुचित नाहीं ॥ १२ ॥ काल बिबस पति कहा न माना । अग जग नाथु मनुज करि जाना ॥ १३ ॥

tava basa bidhi prapañca saba nāthā. sabhaya disipa nita nāvahiṁ māthā. 11.
aba tava sira bhuja jambuka khāhīm. rāma bimukha yaha anucita nāhīm. 12.
kāla bibasa pati kahā na mānā. aga jaga nāthu manuja kari jānā. 13.

Oh Lord (nāthā)! The entire world, which the creator Brahma had created, was under your domain and command. The Lokpals (the gods who are appointed as custodians of the world) used to bow their heads before you daily to pay their respects to your majesty. (11)

What a paradox and an irony of fate it is that now your majesty's heads and arms are being eaten by jackals. [Why has this come to be?]

But there is no wonder that this has come to be your fate because it is not unexpected as a punishment for your being against Lord Ram. (12)

[Mandodari laments—] Oh my dear husband (pati)! You were under the influence of Kaal (death) because you had not paid heed to my advice that I had proffered to you repeatedly in this regard (that you were committing a grave folly by being hostile to Lord Ram, and that you must make peace with him at any cost)¹.

This Kaal had so much deluded your wisdom that inspite of my entreaties you had been so stubborn that you thought Lord Ram to be a human prince. (13)

[Note—¹There are several occasions when Mandodari had tried to persuade Ravana to end hostility with Lord Ram and make his peace with him, but he stubbornly refused.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, Doha no. 36 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-10 that precede it; (b) Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8; (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15; (iii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Doha no. 37.]

छं०. जान्यो मनुज करि दनुज कानन दहन पावक हरि स्वयं । १ ।
जेहि नमत सिव ब्रह्मादि सुर पिय भजेहु नहिं करुनामयं ॥ २ ॥
आजन्म ते परद्रोह रत पापौघमय तव तनु अयं । ३ ।
तुम्हहू दियो निज धाम राम नमामि ब्रह्म निरामयं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

jān'yō manuja kari danuja kānana dahana pāvaka hari svayaṁ. 1.
jēhi namata siva brahmādi sura piya bhajēhu nahim karunāmayam. 2.
ājanma tē paradrōha rata pāpaughamaya tava tanu ayam. 3.
tumhahū diyō nija dhāma rāma namāmi brahma nirāmayam. 4.

[Regretting her husband's stubborn attitude that he did not pay any attention to her entreaties to him to make peace with Lord Ram, which culminated in his death, Mandodari laments woefully—]

What an irony of fate it is that you had been so deluded as to have treated the great Lord God as an ordinary human being, for you did not realize (inspite of my warnings) that Lord Ram is no one else but Lord Hari (Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being) himself in this form, and that he is like a great wild-fire that would reduce to ashes the huge forest symbolized by the great demon race. (Chanda line no. 1)

Oh my dear husband (piya)! It is so unfortunate and regrettable that you had failed to worship Lord Ram before whom all the gods, including Lords Shiva and Brahma (the two great gods of the Trinity), bow their heads in reverence. (Chanda line no. 2)

From the time of your birth you had always been hostile towards others, harbouring malice and ill-will for one and all. Indeed, your body was an embodiment of sins and evilness. (Chanda line no. 3)

But inspite of all these shortcomings of yours, it is such a mighty wonder and a great good fortune for you that Lord Ram had bestowed you with the boon of being able to live in his own place¹. [To wit, the merciful and compassionate Lord Ram has forgiven you for all your sins and misdeeds, and instead of condemning you to suffer eternally in hell, he has granted your soul eternal peace and beatitude. Verily and in all sooth, the gracious Lord has bestowed your soul with the reward of deliverance, emancipation and salvation that you could never have ever expected in your life.]

So therefore, I most sincerely, and with the greatest of honesty that I can command, pay my reverence to such a benevolent Lord Ram who is none but the eternal and faultless supreme Brahm, the Supreme Being, himself personified².

(Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹We have read earlier that the Atma, or the soul, of Ravana had emerged from his body to go and enter directly in the holy body of Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.

This is why Mandodari says that “Lord Ram has given her husband a residence very close to the Lord himself”, because a person’s heart is a place where those who are very close and dear to him find a place to dwell in a subtle way, in a symbolic manner.

How did Mandodari come to know of this development that took place in the battle-field, far away from the inner chambers of the royal palace where she was at that time? This bit of knowledge that she had shows that whatever transpired in the battle-field was instantly communicated to her inside the palace by a network of informers and spies. After all, wars can’t be fought without having real time intelligence of the enemy’s strategies, and so every king had his own way of gathering it.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15 where Mandodari has told her husband Ravana exactly this thing—that Lord Ram is none but the Supreme Being himself.]

दो०. अहह नाथ रघुनाथ सम कृपासिंधु नहिं आन ।

जोगि बृंद दुर्लभ गति तोहि दीन्हि भगवान ॥ १०४ ॥

dōhā.

ahaha nātha raghunātha sama krpāsindhu nahim āna.
jōgi br̥nda durlabha gati tōhi dīnhi bhagavāna. 104.

[Expressing her regret and sadness that her lord, i.e. her husband Ravana, had not paid his attention to her, Mandodari praises Lord Ram for his graciousness and compassionate nature by saying—]

Ah indeed, there is no Lord in this world such as Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) who is an ocean (or an embodiment) of the virtues of mercy, compassion, kindness, grace, benevolence and magnanimity—for he has granted you a destiny that is even difficult for great sages, hermits and ascetics to attain¹.’ (Doha no. 104)

[Note—¹Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede Doha no. 114 where the gods have said the same thing.

Presently, Mandodari explains why she praises Lord Ram. She was a wise and prudent woman, and so she obviously understood that she has to live under a changed situation. Her husband was dead; her brother-in-law, Vibhishan, will most certainly not have a kind view of her; and she was now surrounded by those who were hostile to her husband.

Even inside the city of Lanka, once Ravana was dead, all those who survived the war would side with the new sovereign, simply because it would serve them right to be in his good books. Some of Ravana’s trusted ministers, such as Malyawant# for example, had already expressed their resentment at Ravana's behaviour openly {#Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 40; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5 that precedes Doha no. 48—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 49.}

So therefore, Mandodari thought it wise and prudent to express her praise for Lord Ram in public at this crucial juncture to erase all traces of remaining animosity and ill-will that may linger even after the war ended. After all, she had always held the view that Lord Ram was the Supreme Being, and that he was very kind and gracious, but till this point of time her views were known only to Ravana. So she thought that it was the right time now that she should come out publicly with her thoughts, as it would make her an instant favourite with Lord Ram and his army, as well as with the new sovereign whoso he might be.

This favourable view of hers for Lord Ram, and she hoped which would be graciously reciprocated by the Lord himself, would definitely ensure her peace under the new dispensation that would rule Lanka after the war.]

चौ०. मंदोदरी बचन सुनि काना । सुर मुनि सिद्ध सबन्हि सुख माना ॥ १ ॥
 अज महेस नारद सनकादी । जे मुनिबर परमारथबादी ॥ २ ॥
 भरि लोचन रघुपतिहि निहारी । प्रेम मगन सब भए सुखारी ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

mandōdarī bacana suni kānā. sura muni sid'dha sabanhi sukha mānā. 1.
 aja mahēsa nārada sanakādī. jē munibara paramārathabādī. 2.
 bhari lōcana raghupatihi nihārī. prēma magana saba bha'ē sukhārī. 3.

Hearing these gratuitous words of Mandodari, all the gods, sages and mystics felt very happy¹. (1)

The creator Brahma (aja), Lord Shiva (mahēsa), the celestial sages Narad and Sankadi, as well as all other sages and ascetics who were learned, wise and enlightened --- (2),

--- All of them watched the glorious form of Lord Ram till their eyes were satisfied. The magnificent sight of the Lord (smiling and looking calm) made them feel exhilarant in their hearts so much that they became overwhelmed with emotions. (3)

[Note—¹They felt happy that since Mandodari was favourably inclined to Lord Ram, there was no chance of any resumption of hostility, for if she, being the queen of the demon race, decided against surrender, she could have led a fresh wave of revolt against the Lord by gathering all the remaining demon warriors—who had vowed their allegiance in favour of her husband, and who would now willingly side with her if she chose to lead them against the invading army, as well as against Vibhishan whom all of them held in contempt for being a traitor—to launch a second round of this destructive war.

A war that destroys everything is not liked by anyone; so when the gods, sages and mystics found Mandodari in favour of Lord Ram, that she harbours no ill-will against the Lord, they rejoiced that at last peace would reign on earth.]

रुदन करत देखीं सब नारी । गयउ बिभीषनु मन दुख भारी ॥ ४ ॥
 बंधु दसा बिलोकि दुख कीन्हा । तब प्रभु अनुजहि आयसु दीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥ लछिमन तेहि बहु बिधि समुझायो । बहुरि बिभीषन प्रभु पहिं आयो ॥ ६ ॥ rudana karata dēkhīm saba nārī. gaya'u bibhīṣanu mana dukha bhārī. 4.

 bandhu dasā bilōki dukha kīnhā. taba prabhu anujahi āyasu dīnhā. 5.
 lachimana tēhi bahu bidhi samujhāyō. bahuri bibhīṣana prabhu pahim āyō. 6.

[Vibhishan at last was moved by remorse and guilt. Blood is said to be always thicker than water. So when he saw the ladies of his brother's family, who obviously were closely related to him as well, weeping and grieving for his elder brother Ravana, he became emotional.]

When Vibhishan saw the ladies of the royal household weeping, lamenting and grieving sorely (for his dead brother Ravana), he was moved emotionally, and felt very sad and sorry.

Then Vibhishan went there (“gaya'u bibhīṣanu”; i.e. Vibhishan went to the place near the dead body of his brother Ravana where these ladies had gathered to grieve for him)¹. (4)

So, seeing the condition and fate of his dead brother Ravana, Vibhishan expressed his grief and remorse.

At this juncture, Lord Ram called his younger brother (Laxman) and instructed him according to the prevailing situation. [To wit, Lord Ram asked Laxman to go and comfort Vibhishan.] (5)

Laxman went and comforted Vibhishan in many ways². Then he came back to the Lord, bringing Vibhishan along with him³. (6)

[Note—¹This means that till now Vibhishan was standing away from the spot where Ravana's body lay on the ground, for he was near Lord Ram.

The sight of the ladies weeping over the dead body of his elder brother Ravana at last made Vibhishan emotional as he was overcome with pangs of guilt and shame. He bethought to himself:

“If I do not express any sort of sorrow at this juncture, it will be a tremendous scandal, and it will make the whole world scorn at me for my rudeness and showing irreverence for a departed soul, which is a contemptible thing to do by all accounts. I have already achieved my objective of getting rid of my cruel brother who had tormented the world for so long, who had relentlessly been committing all sorts of sinful deeds, who had so impudently abducted Sita, who was like a thorn for the world, and who had insulted me in public when I was being sincere in my advice to him to abandon his hostile attitude towards Lord Ram and make peace with him. But now he is dead, and in spite of all his drawbacks and shortcomings, after all, he was my elder brother who had sustained me all my life till that unfortunate moment when he kicked me out of the kingdom in a fit of rage. I must now forgive him; I must show my respects to him as my brother—this the world expects from me.

Lord Ram is closely watching me and my actions. Say, what would he think of me and my character if I do not show any remorse for my dead brother, if I do not pay my last respects to his soul? Surely, I would fall in his esteem; he will think that I am a selfish and a pervert demon in heart, no better than Ravana. Should this idea sprout in the Lord's heart against me, it would be disastrous for my own future.

So therefore it is prudent and advisable for me to show remorse and sadness for my dead brother, and at least make an external show of sympathy for the grieving ladies of our household."

²Let us see what may have transpired between Laxman and Vibhishan. To begin with, Laxman went through the usual things one says while condoling someone who has been bereaved. He told Vibhishan: "My dear friend. Don't thou grieve for Ravana; for dost thou wot naught that Ravana's body was evil and sinful, and aren't thou well enough enlightened to know that the gross body of any living being in this world, no matter how great he is, is mortal, and this body has to perish by way of dying one or the other day in order to release the trapped soul. Being sinful, evil, vile and cruel, the body of Ravana was destined to suffer severe punishment in hell; so what thou seest of Ravana's gross physical body is what his body hadst deserved.

As for Ravana himself, aren't thou wise enough to know also that the gross body of any individual is not his 'true self'; for it is the Atma, the pure consciousness also known as the soul, that is truly that individual's 'self'. And haven't thou seen thyself that Ravana's soul has attained eternal deliverance; haven't thou witnessed how the Atma of Ravana emerged from his sinful body to find an abiding rest in the holy body of Lord Ram who is none but the Supreme Being himself? Dost thou wot naught that? So why dost thou grieve; there is no reason for thee to doest that? The fact of the matter is that Ravana has been very fortunate that inspite of living a life of sensual pleasures, doing what he thought fit to gratify his senses, doing nothing worthy to be called meritorious that would entitle him for any spiritual reward, yet he foundest a destiny that is rare even for learned and illustrious sages, hermits and ascetics to attain.

Have thou not heard thyself that thine sister-in-law Mandodari has herself acknowledged that her husband has been exceptionally fortunate because his soul has been bestowed with an exalted and singularly rare destiny that even the greatest of sages and hermits yearn for? Why dost thou grieve for Ravana then, for he hast attained deliverance, he hast achieved eternal beatitude and felicity, which he wouldn't have ever attained if allowed to live a life of sin and cruelty to which he was accustomed? There is no need for thee even to pray for his soul, as people usually do when remembering and grieving for a dead person, for that destiny of the soul hast already been achieved by Ravana. Forsooth therefore, instead of grieving and lamenting and feeling remorseful, it wouldst be in fitness of things for thee to become calm, and make arrangements for his funeral."

After finishing this formal discourse to comfort Vibhishan, Laxman came to the main point for which Lord Ram had so hurriedly sent him to follow Vibhishan. Laxman instinctively and intuitively realized what was going on in Lord Ram's mind. He had an apprehension that there are fare chances of Vibhishan suddenly having a change of heart when he sees his family members sorely weeping and grieving for his dead brother, as also the fact that since 'blood is always thicker than water' he might think that after all the demons are related to him by blood, that he is 'one of them', whereas the 'others', Lord Ram and his companions, are outsiders; these 'outsiders' had invaded his kingdom, they have killed his brother, ruined his kingdom, and may be now their chief, i.e. Lord Ram, would appoint any trusted minister of his, say Sugriv, the king of the monkeys, as a governor of Lanka, and assign some secondary role to Vibhishan just to keep him happy. It was also possible that Vibhishan, with these and other such thoughts churning his mind, would be prone to become more sympathetic to his demons than the Lord could expect.

After all, with Ravana dead, Vibhishan's objective in joining Lord Ram's camp was fulfilled; there were chances of his thinking: "Well, after all I will be welcomed by my friends in Lanka if I explain to them the circumstances why I abandoned them earlier. Lord Ram is only concerned with retrieving his wife Sita, and that done he would go away to his own kingdom far away in the north, in the city of Ayodhya. I have to live here amongst these demons. So it will be wise and prudent for me to make quick amends with the demons who have survived this war and tell them that I am one like them, I am one of them; that I have more to do with them than the invaders."

This was an unsavoury scenario that Lord Ram wished to avoid at all costs. So therefore, Laxman called Vibhishan aside and whispered in his ears: "Look my dear friend. Thou wilt be wise to come along with me to Lord Ram. See, the demon brothers of thine thinkest that Ravana was slayed by Lord Ram, ain't it? Well, suppose they are told the truth that it was thee who had divulged the secret of Ravana's death to Lord Ram—that he ought to shoot an arrow at Ravana's navel in order to kill him. Dost thou thinkest that then thine dear demon friends wouldst welcome thee warmly? All bonhomie that thou hope wouldst be there for thee in Lanka shouldst thou decide to go back to Lanka with these grieving ladies of the royal household, then perish the thought if thou hast it. Bless thine self if the demons wouldst naught kill thee mercilessly instantly for thy being a traitor who hast betrayed thine own race.

Remember friend, thou art to be anointed as the next king of Lanka; Lord Ram hast already promised this reward to thee, and the Lord is singularly true to his words. Since Lord Ram has been victorious in this war, no one wouldst durst oppose thee if thou are appointed king by the Lord himself, under his auspices. On the contrary, imagine thine doomed fate if the demon race comest to know that it is thee who hast been actually responsible for Ravana's death by divulging the secret way to kill him. Thou wouldst be loathed by one and all; thou wouldst be neither here nor there, and left high and dry; thou wouldst have no face to show to Lord Ram then and seek his intervention on thine behalf. Hence, it's in thine own interests to come along with me to Lord Ram forthwith. Thy wilt be absolutely safe that way and assured of gaining the crown of the kingdom of Lanka."

Obviously, Vibhishan was terrified at these prospects; if he had secretly harboured any thoughts of returning to Lanka at this point of time, such thoughts flew away fast from him as a dry leaf that is swept away in a gust of wind.

Meanwhile, the chronicler of this magnificent Story, the author of this Book, wishes to bring on record that the above narrative documents only the lighter part of what actually transpired between Laxman and Vibhishan at that point of time; for after this initial talk done in a lighter vein to dissuade Vibhishan from getting distracted by weeping ladies and his own heart that was overcome with remorse, Laxman became a little more serious and consoled Vibhishan by invoking metaphysical knowledge as expounded in the Upanishads, because this knowledge helps the grieving person to overcome the sadness of his heart and remove any guilt that his conscience may harbour.

What Laxman told Vibhishan next, according to Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 12, verse nos. 9-30, is this in brief: “My dear friend. Look, you are a wise soul, so I believe that you understand that the gross body of any living being is not his ‘true self’, that the ‘true self’ is his Atma, his soul, which is pure consciousness. You must know that the gross body has many faults and is perishable, while the Atma is eternal and pure. I am sure you must also be aware that the Atma has no relationships; all relationships that exist in this world are limited to the gross body. Tell me, for whom are you grieving? Is it for your brother Ravana? See for yourself how wrong you are. Your brother’s real identity is his Atma, and this Atma knows no relationships. Further, this Atma of your brother Ravana hasn’t died; on the contrary it has been freed from the cage of a sinful body of a demon in which it was trapped, to find liberation and deliverance.

Since the Atma is your brother Ravana’s true self or true identity, since the Atma does not die as it is an eternal entity, and since the Atma is sublime, holy and divine because it is pure consciousness, where is the cause of your lamenting at the death of you brother? It’s merely your imagination that Ravana has died; for the Atma never dies. You ought to rejoice instead of grieving because your brother’s Atma has found deliverance, emancipation and salvation; because it has been freed from the cage of a demonic body in which it was trapped. The longer Ravana’s Atma had lived in his body, the more it would have suffered, because his body was that of a ‘demon’ and so it would have continued to do what was normal for it to do, which means doing sinful and evil deeds. Again, since every action has its result, it would be natural to expect that Ravana’s Atma would have been burdened more and more by the sins he committed by his demon body.

So therefore, you must rather thank Lord Ram that he has blessed Ravana’s Atma by providing it liberation from the quagmire of sins and their consequences by killing his body so that the Atma that was trapped inside it can find its freedom.

What’s more glorious than anything else is that Ravana’s Atma has found a destination that even exalted sages and ascetics find it difficult to attain; it has been accepted by the Supreme Being himself. Have you not witnessed that Ravana’s Atma had exited from his sinful body in the form of a shaft of light to enter the holy body of Lord Ram, implying that the Lord has accepted Ravana’s Atma and made it indistinguishable and inseparable from his own Atma (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103).

Vibhishan, just imagine how fortunate and blessed your brother Ravana is; he does not deserve weeping and grieving; rather he deserves a salute from you. You ought to be proud in calling yourself Ravana’s brother, because remember that not everyone is fortunate to find a place inside Lord Ram’s heart as your brother has found.

And as for Ravana’s body, here it lies before you. It was sinful and evil. Tell me honestly, would any man in his right senses like to weep and lament at the loss of such a vile thing as was the body of Ravana? Its good riddance rather, ain’t it? So therefore, feel comforted; stop lamenting and feeling remorseful like an ignorant person. Get up and do what you are now expected to do for Ravana whom you call your brother: perform his last rites and pay your obeisance to him. That is the proper thing for you to do under the present circumstance. Grieving, lamenting, feeling remorseful and guilty for something over which you have no control does not behave of a wise soul like you.

³Lord Ram closely observed Vibhishan's behaviour. So the Lord decided quickly to send Laxman to Vibhishan with two purposes in mind: The first reason was obviously to comfort Vibhishan like a true friend should do in times of distress. The second reason was more subtle. It was to ensure that Vibhishan should not suddenly have a change of heart once Ravana was dead, and turn against the Lord by joining the demons who were, after all, related to him by blood.

It is to be noted here that when Vibhishan went forward to join the royal ladies grieving by the side of the dead body of Ravana, he had not taken Lord Ram's permission. Vibhishan had gone there impulsively, for he was overcome with remorse and shame. This raised certain doubts in the Lord's mind about his intentions.

Lord Ram felt that he could not take chances; there was a certain degree of risk in leaving Vibhishan too long with the ladies of his dead brother so that they can have a conference. Perhaps Vibhishan would now suddenly have a change of heart—because Ravana, with whom he wanted to settle personal scores for the insult that the latter had inflicted upon him, was now dead, and with his death Vibhishan's mind was freed of all fears from his brother. So there were chances that he may turn his back on his protector and patron Lord Ram now, thinking: "Since my chief objective in joining the Lord's camp has been achieved, why should I now remain under his sovereignty. Now I am a king of Lanka, and the demons are related to me by blood. After all, Lord Ram and his army are invaders. They are enemies of Lanka and the demon race; how can they be my true friends? They needed me to help them against Ravana and the demon army as I could provide them with vital information and clues as how to win the war, as much as I needed them to protect me against my inimical brother who was baying for my blood. We both have served our respective purposes. Enemies who have fought deadly wars can never be true friends in the long run, so goes the saying. I am a demon by birth, and no matter how much I try to prove my integrity and allegiance in favour of Lord Ram, to whom I truly feel obliged and submissive, yet I doubt that few in the monkey army would truly believe me and have faith in me, for they will always treat me as Ravana's brother.

And now that I have openly shown my remorse and grief at my brother's death, which was spontaneous and natural for me to do, the doubt about my integrity and loyalty for Lord Ram that anyone in the Lord's company has had for me would be reinforced and aggravated. What should I do now? Shall I excuse myself from Lord Ram and explain to him that I must return to the city of Lanka with these ladies in order to restore order there, as a void has been created with Ravana's death and the throne is empty. Or should I wait to see if Lord Ram fulfils his promise of making me the king of Lanka at the end of the war. But supposing the Lord changes his mind once his objective of vanquishing Ravana has been accomplished; suppose he decides to appoint someone else as Lanka's governor before returning to his own kingdom of Ayodhya? What would I do then? If I oppose, the monkeys would catch me and put me in shackles. So, should I join these ladies and accompany them back to the fort while there is still time for me? Surely, Lord Ram would not be as ungracious and incourteous as to show any rudeness in the front of these ladies; which will provide me a safety net to escape. Say, what am I ought to do?"

Laxman was quickly by Vibhishan's side, leaving no time for him to enter into any consultation with either the grieving ladies or the remaining demon warriors who stood guarding the dead body of Ravana. After usual condolences and formalities for such occasions as noted herein above in note no. 2, Laxman diplomatically prevailed upon Vibhishan to bring him to Lord Ram.]

कृपादृष्टि प्रभु ताहि बिलोका । करहु क्रिया परिहरि सब सोका ॥ ७ ॥ कीन्हि क्रिया प्रभु आयसु मानी । बिधिवत देस काल जियँ जानी ॥ ८ ॥ krpādr̥ṣṭi prabhu tāhi bilōkā. karahu kriyā parihari saba sōkā. 7.

kīnhi kriyā prabhu āyasu mānī. bidhivata dēsa kāla jiyam̐ jānī. 8.

Lord Ram looked at Vibhishan very gracefully and courteously (to reassure him that the Lord has a great degree of respect for him, and that he should never doubt Lord Ram's abiding faith in him, as well as the Lord's promise of abiding friendship with him).

Then Lord Ram advised Vibhishan to discard all grief and do his duty of performing the last rites of Ravana¹. (7)

Whereat, Vibhishan obeyed the instructions of Lord Ram and performed the last rites of Ravana in accordance with the circumstances of place and time², and as prescribed by the scriptures. (8)

[Note—¹It is so praiseworthy and an honourable act for Lord Ram that he should take care that Ravana's mortal remains was properly laid to rest. Rarely would any conqueror think in this righteous and laudable way—that he would pay special attention that those who have fallen dead during the war were given a proper funeral.

Vibhishan was Ravana's brother, and so being related with blood to the dead king, he was the right person to perform Ravana's last rites.

²The circumstances of place and time of Ravana's death were not ordinary. It was a battle-field; it was the country of demons who had their own system of dealing with their dead; it was almost the end of the day and time of eventide when the war finally ended; the whole ground was littered with dead warriors.

So therefore Ravana's last rites were performed by Vibhishan in the best manner he could under these circumstances. There couldn't be elaborate rituals befitting the funeral of a king; everything had to be done in brief. Nevertheless, all basics as prescribed by the scriptures were observed.

How did Vibhishan perform the last rites of Ravana? This question is answered in Veda Vyas' "Adhyatma Ramayan", Lanka Kand, Canto 12, verse nos. 36-37.

This is what is narrated there:

चित्यां निवेश्य विधिवत्पितृमेधविधानतः ।
आहिताग्नेर्यथा कार्यं रावणस्य विभीषणः ॥ ३६॥
तथैव सर्वमकरोद्धन्धुभिः सह मन्त्रिभिः ।
ददौ च पावकं तस्य विधियुक्तं विभीषणः ॥ ३७॥
स्नात्वा चैवार्द्रवस्त्रेण तिलान् दर्भाभिमिश्रितान् ।
उदकेन च सम्मिश्रान् पूदाय विधिपूर्वकम् ॥ ३८॥
पूदाय चोदकं तस्मै मुध्ना चैनं पूणम्य च ।
ताः स्त्रियोऽनुनयामास सान्त्वमुक्त्वा पुनः पुनः ॥ ३९॥ cityāṃ niveśya vidhivatpitṛmedhavidhānataḥ । āhitāgneryathā kāryaṃ rāvaṇasya vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 36॥

 tathaiva sarvamakarodbandhubhiḥ saha mantribhiḥ ।
 dadau ca pāvakaṃ tasya vidhiyuktaṃ vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 37॥
 snātvā caivārdravastreṇa tilān darbhābhimiśritān ।
 udakena ca sammiśrān pradāya vidhipūrvakam ॥ 38॥ pradāya codakaṃ tasmai murdhnā cainaṃ praṇamya ca ।
 tāḥ striyo'nunayāmāsa sāntvamuktvā punaḥ punaḥ ॥ 39॥

36-39. Vibhishan laid the corpse of Ravana on the funeral pyre by observing all the traditional regulations and rules that are prescribed for the cremation of a father¹. Then he duly consigned the body of Ravana to the flames by lighting the funeral pile in the prescribed manner (36).

In these rituals, he was accompanied by his surviving relatives and ministers of the demon kingdom. He also duly completed the ‘offering of the fire’ ritual (dadau ca pāvakaṃ tasya)² in a traditional and sanctified manner (37)#.

Then he (Vibhishan) took a purifying bath as part of the ritual of ablution, and with wet clothes still on his body, he offered a palm-full of water having some sesame seeds and a few blades of grass in it to the departed soul as per established tradition for performing of last rites (38).

After offering his oblations in this way, he put his head to the ground as a token of respect and reverence to the departed soul, and then repeatedly consoled those grieving women (of Ravana's household) by using soothing words of consolation and condolence² (39).

{Note—¹To the credit of Vibhishan, he showed all respects to Ravana and performed his last rites like a son would do for his father. All past animosity and hatred was buried and burnt with the burning of the body of Ravana.

This verse is crucial in the sense that since Vibhishan had performed the last rites of his dead brother as a ‘son would do for his father’, he cleared for himself all obstacles that may have risen against him for his right to the throne of the kingdom of Lanka—because a son has the right to the crown after his father, the king, is dead.

²The ‘offering of the fire’ ritual is a last rite when the eldest son or nearest male relative of the deceased puts the fire to ignite the funeral pile. When the body is almost burnt, he punctures the skull with a wooden spike and puts a globule of fire into it so as to complete the cremation process. Often times, this fire is put in the mouth of the deceased. This is called “Agnidaan”.

²Another point worth noting here is that no mention is made anywhere of whatever happened to the dead bodies of Kumbhakarn, Meghnad etc. It appears that their funeral rites were done quickly by Ravana himself as is usually done in war times. ‘Quickly’—because there was no time for elaborate funeral rituals for a dead individual, and they were cremated along with the other casualties of the day in a mass funeral.”}]

दो०. मंदोदरी आदि सब देइ तिलांजलि ताहि ।

भवन गई रघुपति गुन गन बरनत मन माहि ॥ १०५ ॥

dōhā.

mandōdarī ādi saba dē'i tilāñjali tāhi.

bhavana ga'īm raghupati guna gana baranata mana māhi. 105.

Mandodari and other ladies paid their last respects to Ravana by offering sesame seeds and water for the peace of the departed soul (as prescribed by the scriptures for such occasions)¹.

Thereafter, all of them went back to their palace, all the while recounting the glories and majesty of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram)². (Doha no. 105)

[Note—¹According to established tradition, a dead body is first cremated, and then those who are closely related to the dead person take a purifying bath, hold some water with sesame seeds in the hollow of the palm, and sprinkle it on the pyre while praying for peace of the departed soul. This last rite is called “tilāñjali”.

Valmiki's Ramayan says Vibhishan performed Ravana's last rites in this manner—refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 111, verse nos. 120-122.

But from a practical point of view this elaborate ritual seems difficult to have been actually observed, as Ravana had died in the middle of a battle-field, and though a funeral pyre could be lit to cremate his body, but taking a purifying bath and finding sesame seeds, as well as a priest to preside over such rites, seems quite impossible there. This is why our chronicler, Goswami Tulsidas, whose book Ram Charit Manas we are presently reading, chose to say “Vibhishan did the last rites of Ravana in accordance with the circumstances of time and place”—apropos: Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes this Doha.

It means that Vibhishan did what could best be done under the given situation. He may have cremated the body of Ravana, bowed his head, raised his two hands before his chest while their palms touched each other, and stood silently for a while to say a quiet prayer for peace and rest of the departed soul of Ravana.

Then the ladies went back to the fort of Lanka, and Vibhishan came to Lord Ram.

²It is quite normal that after the last rites of a person are over, those who attend the funeral would go home while saying prayers and talking of God. Hence, the ladies were actually remembering the Lord God when they praised the glories of Lord Ram, for it was known to Mandodari that the Lord was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being. This is what is implied here.]

चौ०. आइ बिभीषन पुनि सिरु नायो । कृपासिंधु तब अनुज बोलायो ॥ १ ॥

तुम्ह कपीस अंगद नल नीला । जामवंत मारुति नयसीला ॥ २ ॥

सब मिलि जाहु बिभीषन साथ । सारेहु तिलक कहेउ रघुनाथा ॥ ३ ॥

पिता बचन में नगर न आवउँ । आपु सरिस कपि अनुज पठावउँ ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

ā'i bibhīṣana puni siru nāyō. kṛpāsindhu taba anuja bōlāyō. 1.

tumha kapīsa aṅgada nala nīlā. jāmavanta māruti nayasīlā. 2.

saba mili jāhu bibhīṣana sāthā. sārēhu tilaka kahē'u raghunāthā. 3.
pitā bacana mairṁ nagara na āva'uṁ. āpu sarisa kapi anuja paṭhāva'uṁ. 4.

Vibhishan came back to Lord Ram and bowed his head. Then, the gracious Lord called his younger brother Laxman (1) ---

---And instructed him: 'You, as well as the king of the monkeys Sugriv, Angad, Nala, Neela, Jamvant (the king of bears), Marut (Hanuman; the son of the wind-god)—all of whom are wise, sagacious and intelligent (2) ---

---All of you go with Vibhishan and anoint him on the throne of Lanka as its next King¹. (3)

[Addressing the group, Lord Ram said—] I refrain from going personally as I have to honour the words I gave to my father whereby I am not supposed to visit a city till the time of my forest exile is over².

So therefore, I am sending my younger brother on my behalf; he will represent me in the ceremony of Vibhishan's appointment as the King of Lanka. (4)

[Note—¹A similar thing had happened when Sugriv was appointed on the throne of Kishkindha, the kingdom of monkeys. At that time too Lord Ram had deputed Laxman to anoint Sugriv on his behalf. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 11 along with Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede it.

²Lord Ram had given a word of honour to king Dasrath, his father, that he would live in forest for a period of 14 years as demanded from him by Kaikeyi, the Lord's step-mother—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29.

Some time was still left before this period ended; and so Lord Ram did not wish to do anything which would violate this oath.]

तुरत चले कपि सुनि प्रभु बचना । कीन्ही जाइ तिलक की रचना ॥ ५ ॥ सादर सिंहासन बैठारी । तिलक सारि अस्तुति अनुसारी ॥ ६ ॥ turata calē kapi suni prabhu bacanā. kīnhī jā'i tilaka kī racanā. 5.

sādara simhāsana baiṭhārī. tilaka sārī astuti anusārī. 6.

As soon as the Kapis (i.e. Sugriv, Angad, Nala, Neela, Hanuman, as well as Jamvant) heard the words (instructions) of Lord Ram (to accompany Laxman and go with Vibhishan to anoint him on the throne of Lanka as its next king), they set off immediately to carry out the Lord's instructions. They went and made all arrangements for the ceremony to appoint Vibhishan as the King of Lanka. (5)

They respectfully made Vibhishan sit on the royal throne and anointed him by making a Tilak Mark on his forehead. After that, they praised him and recited some verses to laud and glorify him¹. (6)

[Note—¹When a new king is installed on the throne of a kingdom, all nobles of the realm assemble and put a ceremonial mark, called a ‘Tilak Mark’, on his forehead as a token of their acceptance of him as their king. In the case of Vibhishan, however, there was a difference: He had gone into exile after Ravana, the late king of Lanka and his elder brother, had disinherited him by kicking him out of the city. So under normal circumstances, Vibhishan had forfeited his right to the throne of Lanka; and had there been no war, the nobles of the demon race would have called a conference to decide who would be the next king. But that would have been the case if Ravana had died a natural death, or the throne had fallen vacant for some other reason.

However, the situation here was different; there had been a war in which the demons had lost, and in this circumstance it is the king or the general of conquering army who decides whom to make a king of the conquered kingdom or country; for the vanquished, as the tradition is, lose their right to decide on this matter.

Therefore, it was at Lord Ram’s discretion to decide whom to make the next king of Lanka. The Lord had already promised Vibhishan that the latter would be the next king after Ravana was vanquished—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 along with Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede it.

So now Lord Ram keeps his words by sending his representatives to appoint Vibhishan as the King of Lanka in a formal ceremony. Since Vibhishan was appointed by the conquering general (Lord Ram in this case), no one in Lanka dared to resist or oppose him, even if they did not fully support him, for fear of severe reprisal under the changed circumstances wherein a new dispensation has been put in place in the wake of defeat of their erstwhile king Ravana. Hence, all demons accepted Vibhishan as their new King, willingly or grudgingly, but nevertheless vowing their allegiance to him.

Once formally declared a ‘King of Lanka’, Vibhishan had to be shown all respects and dignities behooving of a king. Now he was not an ordinary member of the demon race; now he was not an ordinary companion of the monkeys and bears with whom they can show common friendliness: for now he was a ‘King’ of a great and renowned kingdom of Lanka, and hence he commanded due respect and reverence. Now he could not be addressed simply as ‘my dear Vibhishan; or my dear friend’, but must be addressed as ‘Your Majesty; Your Royal Highness’ etc. Now if anyone comes to him, even his former friends in Lord Ram’s army, they must respect his stature; they just can’t walk in and put their arms around his shoulder, saying ‘Oh chum; how art thou?’ They would have to seek permission to present themselves before his majesty; and once ushered in they were expected to bow and pay their respect before saying any word.

So therefore, once Vibhishan was duly appointed as the King of Lanka, the ambassadors of Lord Ram paid their due respects to him as befitting a King.]

जोरि पानि सबहीं सिर नाए । सहित बिभीषन प्रभु पहिं आए ॥ ७ ॥

तब रघुबीर बोलि कपि लीन्हे । कहि प्रिय बचन सुखी सब कीन्हे ॥ ८ ॥ jōri pāni sabahīm sira nā'ē. sahita bibhīṣana prabhu pahim ā'ē. 7.

taba raghubīra bōli kapi līnhē. kahi priya bacana sukhī saba kīnhē. 8.

All of them (Lord Ram’s ambassadors) joined their palms and bowed their heads before him (Vibhishan) to pay their respects to him.

After these formalities were over, all of them, including Vibhishan, came back to Lord Ram. (7)

Then, Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) called all the Kapis (monkeys and bears) near him and said words that pleased them all. [What did the Lord say? We shall read about it in the next set of verses.] (8)

छं०. किए सुखी कहि बानी सुधा सम बल तुम्हारे रिपु हयो । १ ।
पायो बिभीषन राज तिहुँ पुर जसु तुम्हारो नित नयो ॥ २ ॥
मोहि सहित सुभ कीरति तुम्हारी परम प्रीति जो गाइहैं । ३ ।
संसार सिंधु अपार पार प्रयास बिनु नर पाइहैं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ki'ē sukhī kahi bānī sudhā sama bala tumhārēm ripu hayō. 1.
pāyō bibhīṣana rāja tihuṁ pura jasu tumhārō nita nayō. 2.
mōhi sahita subha kīrati tumhārī parama prīti jō gā'ihaim. 3.
sansāra sindhu apāra pāra prayāsa binu nara pā'ihaim. 4.

Lord Ram spoke sweet words which seemed to be like nectar; and these words mightily pleased all those who listened to them.

[Lord Ram expresses his profound sense of thankfulness and gratitude for the service every individual did to him. He said he was very grateful to them in the following words:-]

‘It is by your strength, full help and unquestioned support that the enemy has been vanquished. (Chanda line no. 1)

Vibhishan had got the throne of the kingdom of Lanka.

Verily indeed, in all sooth, and without gainsay, these achievements have made your glory eternal, and have immortalized your fame in all the three divisions of the world (i.e. in the heaven, on the earth and in the nether world). (Chanda line no. 2)

Those who would sing (remember and tell others about) the good and honourable deeds that you have done along with those of mine, with due respect and faith in their remembrance of these events (instead of scoffing at them, treating them with scorn, or attempting to find unnecessary faults with them) --- (Chanda line no. 3)

--- Such persons would verily be able to easily cross (i.e. find deliverance from) this mundane mortal world which is like a huge ocean². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram means that people must not read this history as a war launched by one prince to get back his wife who was abducted by some villain. It has to read in the correct context, with the right mind, and proper perspective. It is the history of how the merciful Supreme Being showed his grace upon unfortunate creatures who had committed grave sins in their lives, but who nevertheless yearned for deliverance for their souls. The Lord came down to earth to provide liberation to the souls of these poor creatures by killing their sinful bodies.

It is also the history that teaches one to have courage and resilience in times of adversity; of what great things can be achieved by strength of will and firmness of resolution; of what selfless service and true friendship consists of; of how evil never succeeding in the long run; of the universal truth that no matter how powerful and mighty one may become at a point of time, yet a day comes when everything becomes a naught; of how oftentimes even the humblest of individuals can perform stupendous feats (as exemplified by Hanuman's glorious achievements), and how such individuals can provide help when needed by someone much superior in the social and evolutionary hierarchy to them (as was the case of the monkeys and bears helping Lord Ram to defeat the mighty forces of Ravana whom even the almighty gods feared like the plague), implying that no one should be judged by his appearances.

²To wit, by singing Lord Ram's glories and remembering that the Lord God is always willing to come to the help of his devotees, a person would never feel alone, hapless and helpless in this world even if he is surrounded by seemingly insurmountable difficulties.

This stanza also assures the devotee that even if he has committed any sins and errors in his life, there is still hope for him for getting redemption; he must have courage and purity of intentions, he must have faith and trust in the Lord God, for if he prays to the Lord for his deliverance, if he is sincere and honest in his prayers, then the Lord would fulfill his wishes as he had done for Ravana and the rest of the demons, all of whom were granted the fruit of emancipation and salvation inspite of their being sinful and evil—for the Lord is very merciful and forgiving.

Reading this enchanting Story that beguiles the heart and evokes wonder in the mind, reading it with the right perspective and thinking, will bring out its subtle goodness and the auspicious messages of exemplary spiritual and secular value that are incorporated in it.]

दो०. प्रभु के बचन श्रवन सुनि नहिं अघाहिं कपि पुंज ।

बार बार सिर नावहिं गहहिं सकल पद कंज ॥ १०६ ॥

dōhā.

prabhu kē bacana śravana suni nahim aghāhim kapi puñja.
bāra bāra sira nāvahim gahahim sakala pada kañja. 106.

Hearing such nice and gracious words from Lord Ram, the monkeys and bears were overwhelmed with emotions of gratitude towards the Lord.

All of them bowed their heads repeatedly before the Lord and touched his feet to express their joy and thankfulness to him¹ for being so kind, gracious and obliging as to publicly praise them and acknowledge their services. (Doha no.106)

[Note—¹Later on in the Story of the Ramayan, we read that once the citizens of Ayodhya were also so filled with joy and gratitude towards Lord Ram that they too had bowed their heads and touched the Lord's feet to express their happiness at the Lord's kind nature and gracious attitude—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precedes Doha no. 47.

Again, when Garud felt extremely glad upon hearing the Story of Lord Ram as narrated by the saintly crow Kaagbhusund, he too had expressed his joy by bowing his head repeatedly before the latter—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 125.]

-----**-----

Section 19.4: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand,
Canto 12, verse nos. 1-50.

Let us once again pause for a little while and read this episode as narrated in Veda Vyas' classic 'Adhyatma Ramayan' before moving ahead with our narration. The episode of Mandodari's lamentations over the dead body of Ravana and of Vibhishan being appointed as the new King of Lanka has been described in Adhyatma Ramayan's Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 12, verse nos. 1-50 as follows:-

॥द्वादशः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।
रामो विभीषणं दृष्ट्वा हनूमन्तं तथाङ्गदम् ।
लक्ष्मणं कपिराजं च जाम्बवन्तं तथा परान् ॥ १॥
परितुष्टेन मनसा सर्वानेवाब्रवीद्वचः ।
भवतां बाहुवीर्येण निहतो रावणो मया ॥ २॥

॥dvādaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।
rāmo vibhīṣaṇaṁ dr̥ṣṭvā hanūmantam tathāṅgadam । lakṣmaṇaṁ kapirājaṁ ca jāmbavantaṁ tathā parān ॥ 1॥ parituṣṭena manasā sarvānevābravīdvacaḥ । bhavatāṁ bāhuvīryeṇa nihato rāvaṇo mayā ॥ 2॥

Canto 12

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Sri Ram looked (compassionately, gratefully and thankfully) at Hanuman, Angad, Sugriv, Jamvant and others (1).

The Lord was satisfied and happy at the developments. Then he expressed his deep appreciation for their help in vanquishing Ravana when he said to them: 'I have killed Ravana today on the strength of your arms!' (2).

कीर्तिः स्थास्यति वः पुण्या यावच्चन्द्रदिवाकरौ
कीर्तयिष्यन्ति भवतां कथां तैलोक्यपावनीम् ॥ ३॥

मयोपेतां कलिहरां यास्यन्ति परमां गतिम् । एतस्मिन्नन्तरे दृष्ट्वा रावणं पतितं भुवि ॥ ४॥
 मन्दोदरीमुखाः सर्वाः स्त्रियो रावणपालिताः । पतिता रावणस्याग्रे शोचन्त्यः पर्यदेवयन् ॥ ५॥ kīrtiḥ sthāsyati vaḥ puṇyā yāvaccandrādivākaraḥ kīrtayiṣyanti bhavatām kathām trailokyapāvanīm ॥ 3॥ mayopetām kaliharām yāsyanti paramām gatim । etasminnantare dr̥ṣṭvā rāvaṇam patitam bhuvi ॥ 4॥ mandodarīmukhāḥ sarvāḥ striyo rāvaṇapālītāḥ । patitā rāvaṇasyāgre śocantyāḥ paryadevayan ॥ 5॥

3-5. Your great glories and astounding feats shall remain established in this world as long as there is the sun and the moon shining here. Those creatures who shall sing these glories and narrate the wonderful stories pertaining to both myself and all of you, stories which will enchant all the three divisions of this world and grant happiness to all the creatures, stories that have the potential to vanquish all the blemishes and faults (such as fears and doubts) associated with Kaliyug—such creatures shall attain the supreme state of emancipation and salvation; their souls shall find beatitude and rest by attaining my holy feet, a goal which is the ultimate destination for the soul.'

Just about that time, as was expected, seeing that Ravana was lying dead on the ground [3-4], Mandodari and all other women of Ravana's household who were protected and taken care of by him, came there, fell down before him (i.e. his dead body), and began mourning and lamenting in grief [5]. (3-5)

विभीषणः शुशोचार्तः शोकेन महतावृतः । पतितो रावणस्याग्रे बहुधा पर्यदेवयत् ॥ ६॥
 रामस्तु लक्ष्मणं प्राह बोधयस्व विभीषणम् ।
 करोतु भ्रातृसंस्कारं किं विलम्बेन मानद ॥ ७॥
 स्त्रियो मन्दोदरीमुख्याः पतिता विलपन्ति च । निवारयतु ताः सर्वा रक्षसी रावणप्रियाः ॥ ८॥ vibhīṣaṇaḥ śuśocārtaḥ śokena mahatāvṛtaḥ । patito rāvaṇasyāgre bahudhā paryadevayat ॥ 6॥ rāmastu lakṣmaṇam prāha bodhayasva vibhīṣaṇam । karotu bhrātr̥saṁskāram kiṁ vilambena mānada ॥ 7॥ striyo mandodarīmukhyāḥ patitā vilapanti ca । nivārayatu tāḥ sarvā rākṣasī rāvaṇapriyāḥ ॥ 8॥

6-8. Even Vibhishan was overwhelmed with remorse, and was greatly distressed, melancholic and worried¹. He fell down before Ravana and lamented most woefully² (6).

Then Sri Ram called Laxman near and said, 'Oh honourable gentleman (mānada; one who has vanquished pride, ego and vanity)! Go and console Vibhishan so that he does not waste any more time in performing the last rites of his brother. What is the good served now in unnecessarily delaying the funeral by wasting time in futile lamentations and show of grief?

Look, the beloved female demons of Ravana, the chief among them being Mandodari, are falling to the ground and woefully lamenting; go and stop them from doing it.' (8).

[Note—¹Why was Vibhishan “worried”? He was upset about his future prospects in Lanka. He was aware that everyone in the city would dislike him, treating him as a traitor and one who is responsible for bringing the death of the great king of Lanka, Ravana. He feared an internal rebellion; he feared that he would be quietly poisoned or publicly assassinated by disgruntled subjects. His conscience was loaded with guilt. He had committed treason, fratricide and regicide. He had sided with an invading army to suit his vested interests; he wished to usurp the crown of Lanka. None of these thoughts were encouraging for him; and he feared for the worse.

²After all, ‘blood is thicker than water’, so goes the good old adage. Perhaps it was this reason that Vibhishan was filled with remorse and grief, or perhaps he made a show of expressing grief at the death of his brother to gain some rudimentary form of sympathy from the demons who stood watching the developments, those who had either accompanied Mandodari when she came to the battle-field to pay her last respects to her dead husband, or those who survived the battle and presently stood guarding Ravana’s dead body. In the latter case, surely Vibhishan seems to shedding ‘crocodile tears’.]

एवमुक्तोऽथ रामेण लक्ष्मणोऽगादिभीषणम् ।
उवाच मृतकोपान्ते पतितं मृतकोपमम् ॥ ९॥
शोकेन महताविष्टं सौमित्रिरिदमब्रवीत् । यं शोचसि त्वं दुःखेन कोऽयं तव विभीषण ॥ १०॥ evamukto'tha rāmeṇa lakṣmaṇo'gādvibhīṣaṇam । uvāca mṛtakopānte patitaṁ mṛtakopamam ॥ 9॥ śokena mahatāviṣṭaṁ saumitriridamabravīt । yaṁ śocasi tvaṁ duḥkhena ko'yaṁ tava vibhīṣaṇa ॥ 10॥

9-10. When Sri Ram had instructed Laxman in this way, the latter came to Vibhishan who was lying motionless, as if himself dead, near the corpse of Ravana (9).

Vibhishan was overcome with immense grief, contrition and remorse. The son of Sumitra (i.e. Laxman) said, 'Oh Vibhishan! One for whom you are grieving and lamenting—who is he to you? (10).

त्वं वास्य कतमः सृष्टेः पुरेदानीमतः परम् ।
यद्वक्तव्योऽपतिताः सिकता यान्ति तदृशाः ॥ ११॥

संयुज्यन्ते वियुज्यन्ते तथा कालेन देहिनः ।
 यथा धानासु वै धाना भवन्ति न भवन्ति च ॥ १२॥
 एवं भूतेषु भूतानि प्रेरितानीशमायया । त्वं चेमे वयमन्ये च तुल्याः कालवशोद्भवाः ॥ १३॥

tvam vāśya katamaḥ sṛṣṭeḥ puredānīmataḥ param । yadvattoyaughapatitāḥ sikatā yānti tadvaśāḥ ॥ 11॥ samyujyante viyujyante tathā kālena dehinaḥ । yathā dhānāsu vai dhānā bhavanti na bhavanti ca ॥ 12॥ evaṁ bhūteṣu bhūtāni preritānīśamāyayā । tvam ceme vayamanye ca tulyāḥ kālavaśodbhavāḥ ॥ 13॥

11-13. Further, what were you to him in the previous birth, or even in this birth, or in the future? Try to understand what I am saying. Just like a particle of sand is shifted around on the beach by the waves of the ocean or the sea, being here now and gone the next moment to a different location [11], in a similar fashion all the living beings who have assumed a physical body too are subjected to either union or separation from one another under the influence of Kaal (i.e. factors of time, circumstances, death and birth).

Even as it is normal that seeds are produced from other seeds, and on the other hand it is also possible that some of the seeds may die or decay without producing new ones [12], all the creatures are produced from other creatures (as off-springs or progenies), and some may die without producing any off-spring, for it is an universal truth that all those who are born must enter the cycle of birth and death under the command of the Lord's Maya (i.e. the Supreme Being's wish to keep the wheel of creation turning endlessly at his pleasure).

To wit, all of us—you, we, he, they and all others—are born as per the wish of Kaal (i.e. all living beings are guided by the wish of the Supreme Being who exercises control over the factors of time and circumstances at the macrocosmic as well as microcosmic level of existence) [13]. (11-13).

जन्ममृत्यु यदा यस्मात्तदा तस्माद्भविष्यतः ।
 ईश्वरः सर्वभूतानि भूतैः सृजति हन्त्यजः ॥ १४॥
 आत्मसृष्टैस्त्वतन्त्रैर्निरपेक्षोऽपि बालवत् ।
 देहेन देहिनो जीवा देहादेहोऽभिजायते ॥ १५॥
 बीजादेव यथा बीजं देहान्य इव शाश्वतः । देहिदेहविभागोऽयमविवेककृतः पुरा ॥ १६॥ janmamṛtyū yadā yasmāttadā tasmādbhaviṣyataḥ । īśvaraḥ sarvabhūtāni bhūtaiḥ sṛjati hantyaajāḥ ॥ 14॥ ātmasṛṣṭairasvatantrainirapekṣo'pi bālavat । dehena dehino jīvā dehādeho'bhijāyate ॥ 15॥ bījādeva yathā bījaṁ dehānya iva śāśvataḥ । dehidehavibhāgo'yamavivekakṛtaḥ purā ॥ 16॥

14-16. Birth and death are pre-destined; anybody who is destined to be instrumental in their happening would do what he is bound to do. To wit, anyone who is destined to become a parent of someone will be so; and likewise if someone is destined to die at the hands of anyone would also die this way.

[To wit, one cannot control who would be one's parents. Similarly, one cannot control who will be the cause of his death. These things are controlled by Kaal acting on behalf of the Supreme Being.]

For in all sooth, it is the 'Ishwar' (the supreme Lord God) who creates or destroys all the creatures (and everything besides) in this world playfully just like a child who involves himself in playful activities just for the fun of it.

[To wit, the Supreme Being creates and ends this world as if it was a mere sport for him; without any effort or exertion; just for the pleasure of his wish; just for the fun of doing it; just for a bit of diversion—just as a child would employ himself while playing around with his toys.]

The 'Atma', i.e. the pure cosmic Consciousness, is an eternal, ethereal, subtle and sublime entity that has neither a birth nor death. But this same Atma becomes a mortal 'creature' by allowing itself to be associated with a gross body—a body that takes a birth and dies. The Atma and the body of a creature are separate and independent entities. But unfortunately, under the influence of ignorance, the Atma becomes deluded and begins to identify itself with the gross body. The obvious result is that the Atma thinks that it takes a birth and dies because the gross body follows this cycle as a routine matter.

[The 'Atma' is the true 'self' of a creature, but under the influence of ignorance and delusions, the creature begins to think that his gross body is his 'self'. The Atma is imperishable and eternal, having no birth or death; but the body is quite the contrary, for it takes a birth and dies too. Hence, the cause of all grief associated with someone dying, or joy at someone taking birth are based on total ignorance of the reality.] (14-16)

नानात्वं जन्म नाशश्च क्षयो वृद्धिः क्रियाफलम् ।
द्रष्टुरभान्त्यतद्धर्मा यथान्नेर्दारुविक्रियाः ॥ १७॥
त इमे देहसंयोगादात्मना भान्त्यसद्ग्राहात् ।
यथा यथा तथा चान्यद्ध्यायतोऽसत्सदाग्रहात् ॥ १८॥
प्रसुप्तस्यानहम्भावात्तदा भाति न संसृतिः । जीवतोऽपि तथा तद्वद्विमुक्तस्यानहङ्कृतेः ॥ १९॥ nānātvam janma nāśaśca kṣayo vṛddhiḥ kriyāphalam । draṣṭurābhāntyataddharmā yathāgnerdāruvikriyāḥ ॥ 17॥ ta ime dehasaṃyogādātmanā bhāntyasadgrahāt । yathā yathā tathā cānyaddhyāyato'satsadāgrahāt ॥ 18॥ prasuptasyānahambhāvāttadā bhāti na saṃsṛtiḥ । jīvato'pi tathā tadvadvimuktasyānahāṅkr̥teḥ ॥ 19॥

17-19. Even as the various faults or shortcomings that are present in a sample of fire wood as represented by its impurities (such as moisture, textural defects, hollowness or solidness, its decay caused by germs and insects such as white-ant etc.) become visible or evident only when the wood is put in a fire¹, the different faults that get associated with the Atma, that is otherwise pure, holy, constant and eternal, become evident in the way it begins to treat its self by thinking or believing that it has different forms, that it takes a birth and dies, that it can become old and can be subjected to decay in its form, that it rises or falls, that it does deeds and either enjoys or suffers from their consequences, and so on². The fact is that the Atma has no such things associated with it. (17)

For an ignorant creature who erroneously thinks that the Atma and the body are inseparable from one another, all sorts of problems pertaining to this gross world, such as the pain of separation and sufferance from doing deeds, would affect him.

On the other hand, a creature who is free from this delusion, who realizes that his Atma and body are two independent and separate entities, there is no grief or misery of any kind whatsoever. For such an illustrious creature, all things that may normally appear to cause pain, grief and misery are merely imaginary as they do not affect him just like a bad dream that does not actually affect a person once he wakes up from his nightmare. (18)

Hence, just like a person who dreams of something while asleep is not at all actually affected by it when he wakes up, a wise, self-realised and enlightened person remains immune to all influences of this gross mortal world³. (19)

[Note—¹When the firewood is lighted, only then one can determine its quality. If it has moisture, if it is not perfectly dry, then it would give a lot of smoke. Likewise, the smell of the burning wood would tell from which kind of tree it has come. If it is solid wood it will burn longer; if it is hollow from the inside then it would quickly turn to ash.

²In a similar way, how enlightened and wise a creature is becomes evident in the way he understands about himself, about his Atma that is his 'true self'. If the creature is self-enlightened then he would remain calm and suffer no emotional changes under different circumstances as he would know that these changes affect only his gross body, which is not his true self. On the contrary, an ignorant person gets easily influenced by circumstances, such as weeping at a loss or dancing in joy at some achievement as he erroneously thinks that 'he' is suffering or enjoying it.

He forgets that his 'self' is his Atma and not the body that is affected by external things; the Atma remains undisturbed and uniform under all circumstances.

The soul is pure and these things have got nothing to do with it. But because there is the false belief that the creature is the gross body and not the pure consciousness and pure self which is called the soul or Atma, all the external actions done by the body appears to have been done by the creature which, in fact, is an erroneous conclusion.

³To wit, for all practical purposes, such a person is as good as asleep as far as the external world is concerned. A sleeping person forgets all about the outside world because his sense of belonging to it ends while he sleeps. He snaps all his relations with everyone in the external world as long as he sleeps. If someone dies during his sleep, he is not bothered. All senses of the anything being mine and your, of having love or hatred, of attachment or detachment, of animosity or friendship, of happiness or grief—all such emotions vanish with his sleep.

Similarly, a person who does not have Ahankar in him, a person who is free from ego and does not feel that something belongs to him, would be freed from such emotions as anger or grief at a loss, or happiness at an acquisition.

In brief, Laxman intends to tell Vibhishan that all such relations as someone being a brother, or the grief that someone related to me has died, or the sad feeling that I have been the cause of his death directly or indirectly—all such emotions and thought are misplaced and unwise. The reality is that the Atma has no relations; that the body may die but the Atma never dies; that what is destined to happen would happen. So therefore, Vibhishan should not grieve for Ravana—as his body was not his ‘true self’, it was his Atma; and this Atma of Ravana is eternal; it has found its deliverance and beatitude; it has found a peaceful destination after exiting from the body; it has not died like the body. So what is the cause of grief and feeling sad?]

तस्मान्मायामनोधर्मं जह्यहम्ममताभ्रमम् ।
रामभद्रे भगवति मनो धेह्यात्मनीश्वरे ॥ २०॥
सर्वभूतात्मनि परे मायामानुषरूपिणि ।
बाह्येन्द्रियार्थसम्बन्धात्याजयित्वा मनः शनैः ॥ २१॥ tasmānmāyāmanodharmaṃ jahyahammamatābhramam । rāmabhadre bhagavati mano dhehyātmanīśvare ॥ 20॥ sarvabhūtātmani pare māyāmānuṣarūpiṇi । bāhyendriyārthasambandhāttyājayitvā manaḥ śanaiḥ ॥ 21॥

20-21. So you must forsake all delusions and erroneous thoughts that create a sense of ego and false attachment with things pertaining to this perishable world, which in their turn cause distraction for the mind and intellect.

You must gradually learn to restrain your sense organs from being attracted towards their respective objects in this world by practicing renunciation and self-control over their natural inclinations. To wit, detach yourself from the external world of sense objects, and slowly learn to turn your mind inwards so that it can focus on your ‘true self’, which is pure consciousness known as the Atma.

You must also know that this Atma is an image of the Supreme Atma represented by Lord Ram. This Supreme Atma is a universal entity; it lives inside every living being as his true self; and it is this same Supreme Atma that has manifested itself in a visible form in the person of Lord Ram.

Hence, withdraw your mind from the gross world that is untrue, and then focus it on the universal truth represented by the Supreme Atma that is visible in the form of Lord Ram¹. (20-21)

[Note—¹To wit, you must first detach yourself from falsehood by realizing that all relations, such as a brother, wife, son etc., are limited to the gross world which itself is false. Then you must focus your mind and intellect on something that is ‘true’; the entity that is universally truthful is the Atma. This Atma has two aspects: at the microcosmic level it is represented by an individual living being, and at the cosmic level it is represented by the Supreme Being, who has revealed himself as Lord Ram.

Hence, you must meditate on Lord Ram with a clear understanding that you are meditating on the Supreme Atma, or the cosmic Consciousness.

Don't think that the person who is standing in front of you is any ordinary human prince by the name of Lord Ram, but understand that he is a manifestation of the Supreme Being himself.]

तत्र दोषान् दर्शयित्वा रामानन्दे नियोजय ।
 देहबुद्ध्या भवेद्भ्राता पिता माता सुहृत्प्रियः ॥ २२॥
 विलक्षणं यदा देहाज्जानात्यात्मानमात्मना ।
 तदा कः कस्य वा बन्धुर्भ्राता माता पिता सुहृत् ॥ २३॥ tatra doṣān darśayitvā rāmānande niyojaya । dehabuddhyā bhavedbhrātā pitā mātā suhṛtpriyaḥ ॥ 22॥ vilakṣaṇaṁ yadā dehājjānātyātmānamātmānā । tadā kaḥ kasya vā bandhurbhrātā mātā pitā suhṛt ॥ 23॥

22-23. Show the mind-intellect complex the various faults, defects, shortcomings and blemishes in the outside world consisting of sensual objects, and appoint it (i.e. fix it, divert it and assign it) instead to the blissful, peaceful, serene and tranquil form of Sri Ram.

All these relationships—mother, father, brother, kith and kin, well-wishers etc.—exist because of the body (for the soul has no relations) (22).

At the instant a creature becomes enlightened and understands the universal truth that his soul (Atma) is a different entity than the body (i.e. these two are separate and distinct things altogether)—and this understanding must come from within, with pure wisdom, complete faith and full conviction—he realises that no one is his mother, father, brother, friend, relative, kin or well-wisher¹ (23).

[Note—¹To wit, all relationships that exist in this world are limited to a creature's gross body; for the Atma of the creature has no relationships.]

मिथ्याज्ञानवशाज्जाता दारागारादयः सदा ।
 शब्दादयश्च विषया विविधाश्चैव सम्पदः ॥ २४॥
 बलं कोशो भृत्यवर्गो राज्यं भूमिः सुतादयः । अज्ञानजत्वात्सर्वे ते क्षणसङ्गमभङ्गुराः ॥ २५॥ mithyājñānavaśājjātā dārāgārādayaḥ sadā । śabdādayaśca viṣayā vividhāścaiva sampadaḥ ॥ 24॥ balaṁ kośo bhr̥tyavargo rājyaṁ bhūmiḥ sutādayaḥ । ajñānajatvātsarve te kṣaṇasaṅgamabhaṅgurāḥ ॥ 25॥

24-25. Having their origin in false, erroneous and misleading knowledge, or being based on illusions and deceptive conceptions, the feeling of attachment to a wife and household, the pride of having expertise in oratory and speech (i.e. bookish knowledge and the haughtiness of being educated and knowledgeable of voluminous texts, and quoting and preaching from them), the sense of possessing the various objects of this world, such as property, wealth and prosperity (24), the pride in one's strength, valour and courage, the pride of having a treasury full of riches, or a retinue of servants and attendants, or of a kingdom and vast realm, or of land and property, or of sons and daughters etc.—all such things are tentative and impermanent like a bubble of water because of their temporary, transitory and unstable nature as well as an imaginary origin¹ (25).

[Note—¹To wit, a wise person realizes that all things related to this world are transient and impermanent—because the 'body' of a creature which has such relationships or possesses any kind of asset is perishable and it would die one day, and so would the world in which these relationships or things exist.]

अथोत्तिष्ठ हृदा रामं भावयन् भक्तिभावितम् ।
 अनुवर्तस्व राज्यादि भुञ्जन् प्रारब्धमन्वहम् ॥ २६॥
 भूतं भविष्यदभजन् वर्तमानमथाचरन् । विहरस्व यथान्यायं भवदोषैर्न लिप्यसे ॥ २७॥

athottiṣṭha hṛdā rāmaṃ bhāvayan bhaktibhāvitam । anuvartasva rājyādi bhuñjan prārabdhamanvaham ॥ 26॥ bhūtaṃ bhaviṣyadabhajan vartamānamathācaran । viharasva yathānyāyaṃ bhavadōṣairna lipyase ॥ 27॥

26-27. Hence, stop grieving unnecessarily for someone (i.e. Ravana) with whom your Atma has no connection. [The one with whom it should be connected is Lord Ram, and the Lord is waiting for you.]

So get up. Remember: Lord Sri Ram is attainable only by sincere devotion and purity of emotions. You must diligently engage yourself to look after the affairs of the kingdom as it is your moral duty, as this responsibility has come to you as a result of your destiny and a reward of your past deeds (26).

Not worrying about the past or the future which you cannot change, you must concentrate on the present that is in your own hands (as this can definitely change the course of your fate). But be careful that while doing what you choose to do in the present you must follow the laws and tenets of Dharma (that are based on the principles of probity, propriety, righteousness, auspiciousness, ethics, and nobility of intentions, actions and thoughts).

By doing so, you shall not get involved, attached or affected by the various faults and blemishes associated with this mundane world of delusions and different kinds of spiritual traps (27).

[Note—¹What has been said by Laxman to Vibhishan in verse nos. 10-27 serve as a seminal guide for us to help us decide how to live in this world and interact with it in our daily lives. If we follow what has been said in these verses, there will be no cause for anxiety of any kind, or for any remorse and worries. We shall be at peace with ourselves as we shall not be attached with anything or anyone in this world. Further, since we would follow the laws of Dharma, our lives would become holy, purified and divine, which in turn would purify our inner-selves, and bestow us with eternal peace, bliss and happiness.]

आज्ञापयति रामस्त्वां यद्भ्रातुः साम्परायिकम् ।
 तत्कुरुष्व यथाशास्त्रं रुदतीश्चापि योषितः ॥ २८॥
 निवारय महाबुद्धे लङ्कां गच्छन्तु मा चिरम् ।
 श्रुत्वा यथावद्वचनं लक्ष्मणस्य विभीषणः ॥ २९॥
 त्यक्त्वा शोकं च मोहं च रामपार्श्वमुपागमत् ।
 विमृश्य बुद्ध्या धर्मज्ञो धर्मार्थसहितं वचः ॥ ३०॥ ājñāpayati rāmastvāṃ yadbhrātuḥ sāmparāyikam । tatkuruṣva yathāśāstraṃ rudatīścāpi yoṣitaḥ ॥ 28॥ nivāraya mahābuddhe laṅkāṃ gacchantu mā ciram । śrutvā yathāvadvacanaṃ lakṣmaṇasya vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 29॥ tyaktvā śokaṃ ca mohaṃ ca rāmapārśvamupāgamat । vimṛśya buddhyā dharmajñō dharmārthasahitaṃ vacaḥ ॥ 30॥

28-30. [After assuaging Vibhishan's sad feelings at the death of his brother Ravana, Laxman instructed him as follows—]

Lord Sri Ram orders you to perform the funeral rites of your brother as prescribed by the scriptures, and remove all these grieving and weeping women from here. My dear, you are wise and intelligent and prudent (mahābuddhe)! Let them go back to (the fort of) Lanka (from this battle-field). Do not delay in it'.

Hearing the words of wisdom from Laxman (that briefly expounded on the basic principles of metaphysics regarding the true identity of a living being, the eternity of the Atma, its independence from the gross body of a creature, and the truth of existence as espoused by the Upanishads and other scriptures), Vibhishan stopped feeling remorseful and unnecessarily grieving for Ravana. He overcame his delusions which made him think that Ravana was his brother, that Mandodari has been widowed, and the erroneous feeling that he was instrumental in the death of his brother or that he has lost all his relatives in the war.

Becoming enlightened about the reality, he regained his composure; he felt calm and poised as he was earlier. Then he came to where Lord Sri Ram was waiting for his return.

Vibhishan, who was temporarily affected by delusions which had made him show signs of a person who is not aware of the tenets of metaphysics and spiritualism, was nonetheless intelligent, wise and enlightened; he was an expert in the tenets of Dharma (principles of righteousness, probity, propriety, noble conduct, wise thoughts).

So he spoke words after giving due thought to them (i.e. after considering the pros and cons of what he was about to say)¹ (30).

[Note—¹Vibhishan thought to himself before speaking to Lord Ram: “It is wise and prudent for me now to speak what would not offend the Lord, for any hint otherwise would be detrimental to my own interests. I had myself been very critical of Ravana, and the world knew him as a sinful demon who had a bad character. Hence, I must not speak otherwise, for if I do so it will look very bad now, for it would be construed as my being very selfish by first favouring Lord Ram's cause to get my brother eliminated, and once my objective was achieved I have shown my true colour and the strength of filial ties by praising him once he was dead, implying that he was wrongly killed by an invading army led by Lord Ram. Should a wrong meaning be understood from any of my words and gestures, I would surely be condemned to death, and I have no means to escape as I am surrounded by the mighty forces of the monkeys and bears who are ready to grab me by my throat at the slightest signal from Lord Ram.

I must be cautious and farsighted; I must speak what Lord Ram and the conquering Generals of his army wish to hear from me. The world would spit on my face and treat me with utter scorn if I show any sympathy for Ravana now after being instrumental in his death. Woe to me; hadn't I disclosed the secret of his death by telling Lord Ram to shoot an arrow at my brother's navel so as to dry up the source of life that was preventing his death? Truly, I had been disloyal to my brother, but bygones are bygones. No purpose will be served now to regret that, except to ruin my own prospects. Circumstances have changed, and changed so drastically and irreversibly that it is wiser for me to sing the tune which would please my new friends.”]

रामस्यैवानुवृत्त्यर्थमुत्तरं पर्यभाषत ।
 नृशंसमनृतं क्रूरं त्यक्तधर्मवृतं प्रभो ॥ ३१॥
 नाहोऽस्मि देव संस्कर्तुं परदारभिमर्शिनम् ।
 श्रुत्वा तद्वचनं प्रीतो रामो वचनमब्रवीत् ॥ ३२॥
 मरणान्तानि वैराणि निवृतं नः प्रयोजनम् । कियतामस्य संस्कारो ममाप्येष यथा तव ॥ ३३॥ rāmasyaivānuvṛttyarthamuttaram paryabhāṣata । nṛśaṁsamanṛtaṁ krūraṁ tyaktadharmavratam prabho ॥ 31॥ nārho'smi deva saṁskartuṁ paradārābhimarśinam । śrutvā tadvacanam prīto rāmo vacanamabravīt ॥ 32॥ maraṇāntāni vairāṇi nivṛttaṁ naḥ prayojanam । kriyatāmasya saṁskāro mamāpyeṣa yathā tava ॥ 33॥

31-33. Vibhishan was very clever and prudent, so he said the following words which would be most acceptable and pleasant to hear for Sri Ram—'Oh Lord! This fellow Ravana was wicked, evil and pervert; he was tyrannical, cruel and merciless; he was a liar and devoid of all that is considered righteous, proper and ethical (31).

Oh Lord! I am not willing to do the last rites of this promiscuous adulterer'.

Hearing his words, Sri Ram felt pleased (i.e. he had expected Vibhishan to say something of the sort). Sri Ram said (32): 'Animosity, ill-will, malice, hatred, enmity etc. exist only up till the time of death. Our objective has been achieved, i.e. we have finished our job of killing him (i.e. killing his gross physical body). Since he is dead, there is therefore no further cause of animosity or ill-will. Now, he belongs to you as much as he belongs to me¹. Hence, you must do his last rites (33).

[Note—¹This is because the Atma, the soul, is pure consciousness; it is pure, holy, divine and free from all taints and blemishes. The Atma is a universal entity; it is the same in all creatures. What distinguishes one creature from the other the gross physical body, and not the Atma. Hence, with the body of Ravana dead, all animosity and ill-will with him are also dead. There must not be any such negative thoughts vis-à-vis the Atma.

We must also note the following points regarding Vibhishan:-

(i) Verse no. 30 tells us that Vibhishan pondered over what to tell Sri Ram. Just a few moments ago, he was weeping and grieving on the death of his brother (verse no. 6) and suddenly he changed track to criticise him (verse no. 31). He realised that the odds were heavily stacked against him if he dared to show any sympathy for Ravana at the present time, and he must not say anything to Sri Ram that would alarm him or annoy him, for there was still a chance that having got rid of Ravana, Sri Ram might think of eliminating this betrayer also just to avoid any chance of back-stabbing or revolt at the last minute. Having seen Sri Ram's prowess and potent in the battle field, he feared for his life. This turn-coat attitude of Vibhishan is very apparent and glaring here.

(ii) He got the cue from Laxman himself in verse nos. 26-29. He had to decide quickly. Being a practical, prudent and sagacious man, he decided that the best course of action for him and the remainder of the demons under the present dispensation was not to displease Sri Ram in any way. That his criticism of Ravana pleased Sri Ram (verse no. 32) is evidence enough of his correct interpretation of the course of events and his coming to the decision to change tack and say things which are pleasing to Sri Ram (i.e. criticising Ravana).

(iii) But Sri Ram's reply is very interesting in this context. By saying that 'he (Ravana) is as much yours as he is mine', Sri Ram has emphasised the fact that the soul/Atma of all the creatures are pure and faultless. It is the body which indulges in all worldly deeds, and it is now dead, gross and useless. The entity called 'Ravana' is different from the body lying in the battle field. Sri Ram, in effect, tells Vibhishan what Laxman had said in verse nos. 10-25 a little while earlier. But this fool Vibhishan could not or did not grasp the subtle message—because had he realised the essential truth, he would not have cursed Ravana as he did and criticise an already dead person, nor would he have refused to perform his last rites, especially when Laxman had ordered him to do so (verse no. 28).]

रमाज्ञां शिरसा धृत्वा शीघ्रमेव विभीषणः ।
 सान्त्ववाक्यैर्महाबुद्धिं राज्ञीं मन्दोदरीं तदा ॥ ३४॥
 सान्त्वयामास धर्मात्मा धर्मबुद्धिर्विभीषणः ।
 त्वयामास धर्मज्ञः संस्कारार्थं स्वबान्धवान् ॥ ३५॥ rāmājñāṃ śirasā dhṛtvā śīghrameva vibhīṣaṇaḥ । sāntvavākyaairmahābuddhiṃ rājñīṃ mandodarīṃ tadā ॥ 34॥ sāntvayāmāsa dharmātmā dharmabuddhirvibhīṣaṇaḥ । tvarayāmāsa dharmajñaḥ saṃskārārthaṃ svabāndhavān ॥ 35॥

34-35. Then Vibhishan respectfully and swiftly carried out the instructions of Sri Ram. He consoled the wise queen Mandodari with a calm and soothing voice. After that (34), Vibhishan—who was of a righteous mind, was a noble soul, and was an expert in principles of probity and propriety—advised his relatives, compatriots and others (who had survived the war) to arrange for the funeral of Ravana as soon as possible (35).

चित्यां निवेश्य विधिवत्पितृमेधविधानतः ।
 आहिताग्नेर्यथा कार्यं रावणस्य विभीषणः ॥ ३६॥
 तथैव सर्वमकरोद्धन्धुभिः सह मन्त्रिभिः ।
 ददौ च पावकं तस्य विधियुक्तं विभीषणः ॥ ३७॥

cityāṃ niveśya vidhivatpitrmedhavidhānataḥ ।
 āhitāgneryathā kāryaṃ rāvaṇasya vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 36॥
 tathaiva sarvamakarodbandhubhiḥ saha mantribhiḥ ।
 dadau ca pāvakaṃ tasya vidhiyuktaṃ vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 37॥

36-37. Vibhishan laid the corpse of Ravana on the funeral pyre by observing all the traditional regulations and rules that are prescribed for the cremation of a father¹. Then he duly consigned the body of Ravana to the flames by lighting the funeral pile in the prescribed manner (36).

In these rituals, he was accompanied by his surviving relatives and ministers of the demon kingdom. He also duly completed the ‘offering of the fire’ ritual (dadau ca pāvakaṃ tasya)² in a traditional and sanctified manner (37)#.

[Note—¹To the credit of Vibhishan, he showed all respects to Ravana and performed his last rites like a son would do for his father. All past animosity and hatred was buried and burnt with the burning of the body of Ravana.

This verse is crucial in the sense that since Vibhishan had performed the last rites of his dead brother as a ‘son would do for his father’, he cleared for himself all obstacles that may have risen against him for his right to the throne of the kingdom of Lanka—because a son has the right to the crown after his father, the king, is dead.

²The ‘offering of the fire’ ritual is a last rite when the eldest son or nearest male relative of the deceased puts the fire to ignite the funeral pile. When the body is almost burnt, he punctures the skull with a wooden spike and puts a globule of fire into it so as to complete the cremation process. Often times, this fire is put in the mouth of the deceased. This is called “Agnidaan”.

#Another point worth noting here is that no mention is made anywhere of whatever happened to the dead bodies of Kumbhakarn, Meghnad etc. It appears that their funeral rites were done quickly by Ravana himself as is usually done in war times. ‘Quickly’—because there was no time for elaborate funeral rituals for a dead individual, and they were cremated along with the other casualties of the day in a mass funeral.]

स्नात्वा चैवार्द्रवस्त्रेण तिलान् दर्भाभिमिश्रितान् ।
 उदकेन च सम्मिश्रान् प्रदाय विधिपूर्वकम् ॥ ३८॥
 प्रदाय चोदकं तस्मै मुध्ना चैनं पूणम्य च ।
 ताः स्त्रियोऽनुनयामास सान्त्वमुक्त्वा पुनः पुनः ॥ ३९॥

snātvā caivārdravastreṇa tilān darbhābhimiśritān ।
 udakena ca sammiśrān pradāya vidhipūrvakam ॥ 38॥
 pradāya codakam tasmai murdhnā cainaṃ praṇamya ca ।
 tāḥ striyo'nunayāmāsa sāntvamuktivā punaḥ punaḥ ॥ 39॥

38-39. Then he (Vibhishan) took a purifying bath as part of the ritual of ablution, and with wet clothes still on his body, he offered a palm-full of water having some sesame seeds and a few blades of grass in it to the departed soul as per established tradition for performing of last rites (38).

After offering his oblations in this way, he put his head to the ground as a token of respect and reverence to the departed soul, and then repeatedly condoled those grieving women (of Ravana's household) by using soothing words of consolation and condolence (39).

गम्यतामिति ताः सर्वा विविशुर्नगरं तदा ।
 प्रविष्टासु च सर्वासु राक्षसीषु विभीषणः ॥ ४०॥
 रामपार्श्वमुपागत्य तदातिष्ठद्विनीतवत् ।
 रामोऽपि सह सैन्येन ससुग्रीवः सलक्ष्मणः ॥ ४१॥
 हर्षं लेभे रिपून् हत्वा यथा वृत्तं शतक्रतुः ।
 मातलिश्च तदा रामं परिक्रम्या अभिवन्द्य च ॥ ४२॥
 अनुज्ञातश्च रामेण ययौ स्वर्गं विहायसा । ततो हृष्टमना रामो लक्ष्मणं चेदमब्रवीत् ॥ ४३॥ gamyatāmiti tāḥ sarvā viviśurnagaram tadā । praviṣṭāsu ca sarvāsu rākṣasīṣu vibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 40॥ rāmapārśvamupāgatya tadātiṣṭhadviniṭavat । rāmo'pi saha sainyena sasugrīvaḥ salakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 41॥ harṣaṃ lebhe ripūn hatvā yathā vṛtraṃ śatakratuḥ । mātaliśca tadā rāmaṃ parikramyāabhivandya ca ॥ 42॥ anujñātaśca rāmeṇa yayau svargaṃ vihāyasā । tato hr̥ṣṭamanā rāmo lakṣmaṇaṃ cedamabravīt ॥ 43॥

40-43. He instructed those women—'You should all go back now'. Then all of them went back to the city. When all the demonesses (of Ravana's household and sundry others whose husbands had been killed in the battle-field) had gone back to the city, Vibhishan (40) came near Lord Sri Ram and stood before him most politely and humbly. Sri Ram along with his army, Sugriv and Laxman (41) was very cheerful on having eliminated the enemy just like Indra felt after he had slayed the demon Vrittasur¹.

Thence, Matli (the charioteer of Indra who was sent to help Lord Ram in the war of Lanka) circumambulated Sri Ram and bowed before him (42), and getting his permission to leave, he went back to the heavens.

Then Sri Ram said cheerfully to Laxman (43)—

[Note—¹Demon Vrittasur, though having an evil body of a demon, was at heart a great devotee of the Lord and an enlightened soul. During the battle with Indra, his enunciations on devotion and wisdom are worth their weight in gold. This episode appears in Bhagwat Mahapurāṇ. To kill him, the God asked sage Dadhichi to give his bones which were used to mould the Bajra (thunderbolt; the weapon of Indra), and it was used to kill him.]

विभीषणाय मे लङ्कायाज्यं दत्तं पुरैव हि ।
 इदानीमपि गत्वा त्वं लङ्कामध्ये विभीषणम् ॥ ४४॥
 अभिषेचय विप्रैश्च मन्त्रवद्विधिपूर्वकम् । इत्युक्तो लक्ष्मणस्तूर्णं जगाम सह वानरैः ॥ ४५॥
 लङ्कां सुवर्णकलशैः समुद्रजलसंयुतैः । अभिषेकं शुभं चक्रे राक्षसेन्द्रस्य धीमतः ॥ ४६॥ vibhīṣaṇāya me laṅkārajyaṃ dattaṃ puraiva hi । idānīmapi gatvā tvaṃ laṅkāmadhye vibhīṣaṇam ॥ 44॥ abhiṣecaya vipraiśca mantravadvidhipūrvakam । ityukto lakṣmaṇastūrṇaṃ jagāma saha vānaraiḥ ॥ 45॥ laṅkāṃ suvarṇakalaśaiḥ samudrajalasaṃyutaiḥ । abhiṣekaṃ śubhaṃ cakre rākṣasendrasya dhīmataḥ ॥ 46॥

44-46. 'I have already given the kingdom of Lanka to Vibhishan (see Lanka Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 43-45). Still, you must go to Lanka with him (44) and get him duly anointed on the throne of the kingdom as its next King in a proper, formal way by chanting of Mantras by Brahmins¹.'

Getting these instructions from Lord Sri Ram, Laxman, accompanied by other prominent monkey commanders (45), went to Lanka and anointed Vibhishan, who was wise and intelligent, as the King of the demon race by installing him on the throne of the kingdom at an auspicious moment. He sprinkled on him, for the purpose of his anointment, the water of the ocean that was especially brought in for this ceremony in a golden pot² (46).

[Note—¹This verse clearly hints that there were Brahmins in the city of Lanka. But how come they were there amongst the anti-Brahmin demons? The two plausible answers are—

(a) Multitudes of Brahmins were kept in Ravana's captivity, perhaps under shackles, and they were summoned by him anytime when he used to perform the various fire sacrifices and other religious rituals that necessitated the recital of Mantras by learned Brahmins. These rituals and sacrifices were performed by Ravana to serve his self interest—whether it was the conquest of Gods, or for winning the war against Lord Ram.

(b) Since Ravana himself was a Brahmin by birth, being the son of Visrasrava who was a Brahmin and a sage, and was a grandson of sage Pulastya, he spared the people of his own race from death if they pleaded mercy and vowed allegiance to him.

Otherwise, there is no question of getting Brahmins to chant the Mantras so quickly, because Lanka was situated in the middle of the ocean and approximately 800 miles from the mainland of India where Brahmins lived.

²Verse no. 46 indicates that at that time, there were no rivers in the island of Lanka—it was surrounded by the ocean in all the directions, was south of the equator, and had no glaciers etc. to support any network of rivers. So this is why the water of the ocean was brought for anointment ceremony. Ordinarily, water from a river is used for this ritual.]

ततः पौरजनैः सार्धं नानोपायनपाणिभिः ।
 विभीषणः ससौमित्रिरुपायनपुरस्कृतः ॥ ४७॥ दण्डपूणाममकरोद्रामस्याविलष्टकर्मणः ।
 रामो विभीषणं दृष्ट्वा प्राप्तं राज्यं मुदान्वितः ॥ ४८॥
 कृतकृत्यमिवात्मानममन्यत सहानुजः ।
 सुग्रीवं च समालिङ्ग्य रामो वाक्यमथाब्रवीत् ॥ ४९॥
 सहायेन त्वया वीर जितो मे रावणो महान् ।
 विभीषणोऽपि लङ्कायामभिषिक्तो मया नघ ॥ ५०॥ tataḥ pauraṇaiḥ sārḍhaṃ nānopāyanapāṇibhiḥ । vibhīṣaṇaḥ sasaumitrirupāyanapuraskṛtaḥ ॥ 47॥ daṇḍapraṇāmaṃ karoḍrāmasya viliṣṭakarmaṇaḥ । rāmo vibhīṣaṇaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā prāptarājyaṃ mudānvitaḥ ॥ 48॥ kṛtakṛtyamivātmānamamanyata sahānujaḥ । sugrīvaṃ ca samāliṅgya rāmo vākyaṃ mathābravīt ॥ 49॥ sahāyena tvayā vīra jito me rāvaṇo mahān । vibhīṣaṇo'pi laṅkāyāmaḥiṣikto mayānagha ॥ 50॥

47-50. After that, accompanied by a large crowd of residents of the city holding numerous varieties of gifts in their hands as tributes for Lord Ram, Vibhishan accompanied Laxman (47) to come back to the Lord. Once there, Vibhishan prostrated himself before the Lord by falling down like a stick, to pay his obeisance and respects to him. He placed all those gifts in front of Lord Sri Ram whose deeds and actions are very difficult to understand (i.e. the Lord's ways are very mysterious and strange for everyone to understand).

On the other hand, Sri Ram was very pleased on seeing that Vibhishan has got the reign of the kingdom which the Lord had promised him (48).

Indeed, Lord Sri Ram and his younger brother (Laxman) felt highly satisfied and happy at the turn of events¹.

Then Sri Ram embraced Sugriv (the king of the monkeys) and said (49)—'Oh the brave one (tvayā vīra)! It is only due to your assistance and help that I have been able to conquer the great Ravana, and oh Anagh ("anagha"; one who is pure in heart and faultless in his deeds), it is also because of it (your help) that Vibhishan has been appointed to the throne of Lanka. [To wit, I am very thankful and obliged to you.]' (50).

[Note—¹That is because the Lord could fulfill the promise he had made to Vibhishan that he would put him on the throne of Lanka. Surely, Sri Ram felt highly relieved at the turn of events, for otherwise, he would not have been able to live up to his reputation of being true to his words.]

-----**-----

Chapter 20

Sita Re-United with Lord Ram

After Vibhishan's appointment as the new King of Lanka, the next important thing that was to be done was to reunite Sita with Lord Ram. In this Chapter no. 20 we shall read about this episode in the following two Sections:

Section 20.1 Ram Charit Manas

Section 20.2 Adhyatma Ramayan

Section 20.1: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 107—to Doha no. 109.

चौ०. पुनि प्रभु बोलि लियउ हनुमाना । लंका जाहु कहेउ भगवाना ॥ १ ॥
समाचार जानकिहि सुनावहु । तासु कुसल लै तुम्ह चलि आवहु ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

puni prabhu bōli liya'u hanumānā. laṅkā jāhu kahē'u bhagavānā. 1.
samācāra jānakihi sunāvahu. tāsu kusala lai tumha cali āvahu. 2.

After that, the Lord called Hanuman and instructed him thus: 'You go to Lanka [1] and convey to Janki (Sita) all that has happened¹. Then come back immediately with the news of her own welfare. [2]' (1-2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram instructed Hanuman to convey the good news to Sita that the Lord has been victorious in the war, that Ravana was dead, that Vibhishan had been appointed as the new King of Lanka, and that the time has finally arrived for her reunion with Lord Ram, a moment for which she had been longing and waiting for so long.

Why did Lord Ram choose Hanuman as his messenger to Sita? It is because Hanuman had been to Lanka earlier too and had personally met Sita[#]; so she would immediately recognize him, which she indeed does as we shall read in verse no. 5 herein below. {#Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 13—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 17.}

It must be remembered that when Hanuman had met her earlier, he had urged her to stop worrying, for sooner rather than later Lord Ram would come with a mighty army of monkeys and bears to free her*. His prophesy has now come true, and so he deserves, and has the right, to receive any blessings and gifts that Sita would like to bestow upon him. {*Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 15—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 16.}

And we shall soon see in the verses that follow herein below that he was indeed profusely blessed by Mother Sita for bringing the good news to her.]

तब हनुमंत नगर महुँ आए । सुनि निसिचरी निसाचर धाए ॥ ३ ॥

बहु प्रकार तिन्ह पूजा कीन्ही । जनकसुता देखाइ पुनि दीन्ही ॥ ४ ॥ taba hanumanta nagara mahum̐ ā'ē. suni nisicarī nisācara dhā'ē. 3.

bahu prakāra tinha pūjā kīnhī. janakasutā dēkhā'i puni dīnhī. 4.

Then Hanuman went to the city of Lanka. No sooner the male and female demon residents of the city came to know that he has come, than all of them rushed forward [3] to welcome him and show their respects to him by worshipping and paying their obeisance to him¹. Then they quickly showed him the place where Sita was confined². [4] (3-4)

[Note—¹Hanuman was now visiting the city as a representative of a conqueror. He went in Lanka with a head raised in pride, with a broad smile on his face, with the demeanours and the stride of a victorious warrior. The situation had now completely changed since his last visit when he was an enemy's spy, an intruder, a trespasser. At that time he was put in shackles, and the citizens had poked fun at him, kicked and punched him, and made merry at his discomfiture. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 25.}

But now all of them went out of their way, and literally went over backwards to welcome Hanuman and be in his good looks. This is the way how people change colours like chameleons to suit their own interests. These same demons had earlier been praising and paying their respects to Ravana, and now all of a sudden they forgot all that he had done for them, and instead of feeling any remorse for their great king Ravana, and showing any contempt for Hanuman, they collected in large numbers to bow their heads before the latter, knowing fully well that a few days ago Hanuman was one of their most hated and despised enemy, for let us not forget the havoc that Hanuman and Angad had unleashed on Lanka during the initial phases of the war. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-4 that precede Doha no. 42; Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 43—to Doha no. 44.}

²Sita was confined in the royal garden of Lanka, known as the 'Ashok Van'—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8.]

दूरिहि ते प्रनाम कपि कीन्हा । रघुपति दूत जानकीं चीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥ कहहु तात प्रभु कृपानिकेता । कुसल अनुज कपि सेन समेता ॥ ६ ॥ dūrihi tē pranāma kapi kīnhā. raghupati dūta jānakīm cīnhā. 5.

kahahu tāta prabhu kṛpānikētā. kusala anuja kapi sēna samētā. 6.

The Kapi (i.e. Hanuman) bowed his head to Sita from a distance¹. She immediately recognized him as a messenger of Lord Ram (because she had already met him and conversed with him)². (5)

She asked: ‘Say my dear son (tāta)³; how is the Lord who is an embodiment of mercy and compassion (prabhu kṛpānikētā)? Tell me about his own welfare, as well as that of his younger brother (Laxman) and the army of monkeys that accompanies him⁴.’ (6)

[Note—¹When Hanuman had met Sita for the first time during his mission of reconnaissance to Lanka to find where she was held captive, he had gone quite near to her. Sita was jolted with fright and was so sore affright at seeing him, as she had least expected a stranger of the form of Hanuman creeping up to her so secretly, that she withdrew herself as much as she could and turned her back to him—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 13.

So therefore, Hanuman wished to take precautions now; he did not wish to alarm her by his sudden presence. Hence, he stood at a reasonable distance and bowed his head before her.

Another reason of his standing at a distance now instead of going closer is this: During his previous visit he had to maintain secrecy and speak as softly as possible, so that his conversation with Sita remained out of earshot of the demon guards. But now that was not needed; he could stand at a distance and announce himself loudly—and this is what he did.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 13 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.

³During his last visit to Sita, she had affectionately addressed Hanuman many times with this title “tāta”, which with reference to Hanuman means someone who is very dear to her like her own son—for example, we have the following verses in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand: Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 14; Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 16; Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 17; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 27.

⁴Hanuman had himself told Sita during that visit that Lord Ram had befriended the monkey race and was all poised to come with their army to free her. So Sita was in the knowing that the Lord had monkeys as his companions. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 16.]

सब बिधि कुसल कोसलाधीसा । मातु समर जीत्यो दससीसा ॥ ७ ॥
अबिचल राजु बिभीषन पायो । सुनि कपि बचन हरष उर छायो ॥ ८ ॥ saba bidhi kusala kōsalādhīsā. mātu samara jītyō dasasīsā. 7.

abicala rāju bibhīṣana pāyō. suni kapi bacana haraṣa ura chāyō. 8.

Hanuman replied cheerfully: ‘The Lord of Kaushal (“kōsalādhīsā”; i.e. Lord Ram, the Lord of Ayodhya, the great kingdom which was also known as ‘Kaushal’) is fine and happy in all possible ways¹. Mother², he has vanquished the ten-headed Ravana in the war. (7)

Vibhishan has been crowned as a King of Lanka; he has attained everlasting sovereignty over his kingdom.³

Hearing these pleasant words of the Kapi (Hanuman), exhilaration and joy overwhelmed the heart of Sita. (8)

[Note—¹This answers Sita’s question: ‘How is Lord Ram, his brother Laxman, and the army of monkeys that accompanies them?’ Hanuman sums up by saying ‘everything is fine with the Lord’.

²We can recall here that during his first visit to Sita, Hanuman had also addressed her as ‘mother’—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 13; Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 15; Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27.

³We have read earlier that the old demoness named Trijata, who was appointed by Ravana to guard Sita, had become very friendly to her. She used to update Sita about the development in the war. So it is quite natural that as soon as Ravana was slayed, and a little while later Vibhishan was made the king of Lanka, Trijata must have hurried to give the good tidings to Sita. But Sita was suspicious of everything; she doubted when Trijata told her of Lord Ram’s victory etc., for she feared that it was some new trick by her tormentors to tease her.

When Hanuman told her of the Lord’s victory as well as of Vibhishan’s appointment as the new king, then only was Sita convinced of the veracity of the news.]

छं०. अति हरष मन तन पुलक लोचन सजल कह पुनि पुनि रमा । १ ।
का देउँ तोहि त्रैलोक महँ कपि किमपि नहिं बानी समा ॥ २ ॥
सुनु मातु मैं पायो अखिल जग राजु आजु न संसयं । ३ । रन जीति रिपुदल बंधु जुत पस्यामि राममनामयं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ati haraṣa mana tana pulaka lōcana sajala kaha puni puni ramā. 1.
kā dē'uṁ tōhi trailōka mahūṁ kapi kimapi nahim bānī samā. 2.
sunu mātu mairṁ pāyō akhila jaga rāju āju na sansayaṁ. 3.

rana jīti ripudala bandhu juta pasyāmi rāmamanāmayam. 4.

With great exhilaration in her heart, with her body thrilled with joy, and with tears of happiness filling her eyes, Rama¹ (“ramā”; i.e. Sita) said repeatedly --- (Chanda line no. 1)

‘Oh Kapi! For me, there is nothing in the three divisions of the world which is as sweet and pleasant to hear as the words you have spoken. [To wit, the news that you brought to me is the sweetest thing I had ever heard of.]’ (Chanda line no. 2)

Hanuman replied: ‘Oh Mother, listen! I am very fortunate and feel singularly privileged today, for I have had the good fortune of being symbolically granted the sovereignty of the whole world; there is no doubt about it. [To wit, since you are the Mother Goddess, being so affectionately blessed by you makes me exceptionally happy and delighted as if I have been made the king of the whole world.]’ (Chanda line no. 3)

Verily indeed, forsooth and without gainsay, it’s an honour and a great blessing for me that I am a witness of Lord Ram’s victory over the enemy and his army, and I see the Lord and his brother safe and sound after the ordeal of a horrifying war.’ (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹The word “ramā” is used for goddess Laxmi, the divine consort of Lord Vishnu. Since Lord Ram was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, it follows that Sita was a manifestation of goddess Laxmi.

दो०. सुनु सुत सदगुन सकल तव हृदयँ बसहुँ हनुमंत ।

सानुकूल कोसलपति रहहुँ समेत अनंत ॥ १०७ ॥

dōhā.

sunu suta sadaguna sakala tava hr̥dayam̐ basahuṁ hanumanta.
sānukūla kōsalapati rahahuṁ samēta ananta. 107.

Sita blessed Hanuman as follows: ‘Listen my son Hanuman (sunu suta -- hanumanta)! Let all the good virtues and auspicious qualities dwell in your heart.

Let Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal, and Laxman (Anant) be ever pleased with you, and have eternal affection for you.’ (Doha no. 107)

चौ०. अब सोइ जतन करहु तुम्ह ताता । देखौं नयन स्याम मृदु गाता ॥ १ ॥

तब हनुमान राम पहिं जाई । जनकसुता कै कुसल सुनाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

aba sō'i jatana karahu tumha tātā. dēkhaur̥m̐ nayana syāma mṛdu gātā. 1.
taba hanumāna rāma pahim̐ jā'ī. janakasutā kai kusala sunā'ī. 2.

[Sita continued—] ‘My dear son (tātā)! Now make haste to devise a method by which I can see with my own eyes¹ the pleasant dark-complexioned form of the Lord (Sri Ram).’ (1)

Then Hanuman immediately went back to Lord Ram and told him about the welfare of Sita, the daughter of king Janak (janakasutā). (2)

[Note—¹Sita meant that though it is absolutely true she had all this while been remembering Lord Ram and keeping his divine form before her mental eyes constantly, never forgetting him for a single moment of her existence in captivity in Lanka*, but it is also true that she had always been longing to see the Lord’s form physically, with her physical eyes#.

{*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 8 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.

#Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14.}]

सुनि संदेसु भानुकुलभूषण । बोलि लिए जुबराज बिभीषण ॥ ३ ॥

मारुतसुत के संग सिधावहु । सादर जनकसुतहि लै आवहु ॥ ४ ॥ sunī sandēsu bhānukulabhūṣana. bōli li'ē jubarāja bibhīṣana. 3.

mārutasuta kē saṅga sidhāvahu. sādara janakasutahi lai āvahu. 4.

When Lord Ram, who was like an adornment of the Solar race (bhānukulabhūṣana)¹, heard the message of Sita (that she was longing to see him), he summoned Angad, the prince of the monkey race (jubarāja), and Vibhishan (the newly appointed king of Lanka). (3)

The Lord instructed them: ‘Both of you immediately go with Hanuman, the son of the wind god, and bring Sita, the daughter of Janak, here most honourably, by showing great respect to her, and ensuring that all manners of royal protocol and dignity are observed for her.’² (4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram was a descendant in the line of illustrious kings belonging to the Solar Race of Ayodhya. The epithet “adornment of the Solar race” means simply that Lord Ram was the most renowned and the most glorious King of this race.

²Lord Ram implied that Sita ought to be brought to him in a ceremonial and dignified way that suits her majestic stature. Put simply, the Lord wished that Sita should come to him like a noble lady who has been freed from her captivity; she should be properly escorted by female demon guards to show her the way to Lord Ram’s camp.

The Lord was very careful when he gave this instruction, for he guessed that it was quite possible that his messengers, Hanuman, Angad and Vibhishan, would not know, and therefore unable to decide as to how to bring her to the Lord under the present circumstances where his camp was situated on the other side of the battle-field, far away from the main city of Lanka. They might wonder as to what the Lord wants to be done to her, and what would please him: whether he wishes that Sita be brought to him in a palanquin, or in some other way they were used to transporting their own noble women, or simply like any lady released from prison and being restored to her husband. Was she to be taken to the Lord in the way she had actually lived as a captive in Lanka, or was she to be given royal treatment, dressed and adorned with ornaments like a queen, and then led to Lord Ram in a regal procession, with all the pomp and pageantry that accompanies such occasions?

Lord Ram's instructions were brief, and it was to bring Sita with due respect, honour and dignity being shown to her, though it was not clearly mentioned by him as to what he meant by what he said.

In their zeal and enthusiasm to please the Lord and celebrate this happy moment, his messengers over-reacted; they thought that the Lord means that Sita was to be brought to him with due observance of royal protocol and dignity reserved for queens and noble ladies—which implied that Sita must first be bathed and sprayed with perfumes, then she must be attired like a queen and adorned in regal paraphernalia, and then she must be taken out in a royal procession in a decorated palanquin carried aloft by royal demon guards dressed in full regal regalia, with royal escorts and guards leading the way for the procession, accompanied by all the royal pomp and pageantry that are reserved for such occasions.

And this was how Sita was actually brought to Lord Ram by his messengers—she was first made to take a bath, adorn herself with fresh clothes and ornaments befitting a queen, and then carried to the Lord in a palanquin in ceremonial procession escorted by royal guards and heralds of the demon kingdom. We shall read about it in the verses which follow herein below. {Apropos: Chaupai line nos. 5-9 that precede Doha no. 108.}

Perhaps Hanuman, Angad and Vibhishan had, in their enthusiasm, overdone their preparations of bringing Sita to Lord Ram—because the first impression of Sita that Lord Ram got as she approached him from a distance was that of a well decked-up queen, fully decorated in regal regalia and smiling cheerfully with happiness, as if she had not undergone any suffering or pain at all; the Lord observed that she was being carried in a decorated carriage aloft the shoulders of royal guards and soldiers of the demon kingdom as if she was a 'queen of the demon kingdom going to meet some honoured guest', rather than 'a lady who had been long suffering from pain and misery at separation from her beloved husband, a lady who had become weak and emaciated by the mental torture and agony incurred during the long time she had been forcibly kept in captivity by a cruel abductor, who being finally freed, forgets about everything else as she rushes to meet her dear husband with quick and eager steps, and with tears of joy gushing out from her eyes'.

The watchful Lord observed that Sita showed no such signs. He also observed that all his companions in the army, the monkeys and bears, were fixedly looking in the direction from where the royal procession carrying Sita was coming towards them, and even the minutest detail wouldn't escape their scrutiny—apropos: Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 108 herein below.

These monkey and bear warriors were seeing Sita for the first time, and they would surely wonder at this incredulous sight of hers coming majestically like a queen attired in the finest of royal regalia, very happy and cheerful, showing no signs of pain and suffering. Surely, this would be an unexpected sight for all of them; it was totally incompatible with and at complete odds with the mental image they must have had of Sita based on the description given by Hanuman to Lord Ram after his return from the reconnaissance mission to Lanka earlier: as a sad, miserable, forlorn and despondent lady who had undergone long time of suffering and grief while living away from her dear husband, in the captivity of a cruel demon; who was supposed to be under great stress and pain inflicted upon her for a long time since she was separated from her husband, and was not sure if she would ever be free again; who was not eating properly, thereby becoming thin and weak; who spent her time weeping and lamenting and grieving at her doomed fate. In brief, the sight of Sita coming bedecked in fine royal attire and accompanied by pomp and show did not at all fit-in with the miserable picture of hers that was given by Hanuman to Lord Ram#. {#Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 32.}

The Lord was not happy that Sita should be brought to him in a royal procession like a queen, because it gave a very wrong impression of her amongst his army chiefs and warriors—and it would be clear below when he expressly asked his messengers, whom he affectionately called his ‘friends’, to make her come on foot. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 108 herein below.}

This is also one of the primary reasons why Lord Ram would be compelled to put Sita through the ‘fire test’ to clear her of any imaginary doubt regarding her integrity, honour, self-respect, dignity and loyalty to Lord Ram, a doubt that may taint her immaculate character for all times to come, that might crop up in the mind of anyone observing her demeanours, her clothes and her external form, about which we shall read soon. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 108—to Chanda line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 109.}

It is clear that though the Lord had ordered that Sita be brought to him with due respect, he had not actually meant that she be brought to him like a queen being carried in a palanquin in a royal procession; he had meant that she be brought with dignity and honour behooving of a noble lady, in a simple and dignified manner. A simple procession would be alright, but a procession of pomp and show was odd for the moment. Lord Ram had not expected that his messengers would overreact in their enthusiasm to please him, or misunderstand him, by bringing Sita in such a royal procession, with Sita fully decorated in royal regalia, and coming to with all pomp and ceremony. Her sight did not go down well with Lord Ram at all—markedly because he and his companions, i.e. his wife Sita and his brother Laxman, were to dress and live like a ‘hermit’ during the time that they lived in forest for 14 years to fulfill the words the Lord had given to his father Dasrath at the time of his departure to the forest—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29; Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 79.

In this background, Sita coming in a royal procession like a queen bedecked in all regal finery and wearing glittering ornaments was incongruous and completely out of order. Hence, instead of being pleased, the Lord took offence at it. He was also silently angry with Sita for being so careless as to allow herself being so decorated; had she forgotten her vows to live like her husband would in the forest; had she forgotten that the time of the forest exile was not yet over and her Lord was still dressed like a hermit. How could she then allow herself to be so finely decorated? The Lord decided that after undergoing so much hardship for so long a period of 14 years just to uphold the dignity and honour of his words, Sita’s single act of indiscretion undid all. The Lord felt very sad and unhappy. He had not expected Sita to be so careless and imprudent. So he decided she must be punished for her impertinent and careless behaviour.

Glory to Lord Ram who was so strict an adherent to, and an upholder of, the principles of Dharma, the laws that govern right conduct, right thought, probity, propriety, ethics and righteousness—wherein not a single error and transgression was acceptable by the Lord. So therefore, the Lord decided to punish Sita by putting her to the 'fire test'.]

तुरतहिं सकल गए जहँ सीता । सेवहिं सब निसिचरीं बिनीता ॥ ५ ॥
 बेगि बिभीषन तिन्हहि सिखायो । तिन्ह बहु बिधि मज्जन करवायो ॥ ६ ॥
 बहु प्रकार भूषन पहिराए । सिबिका रुचिर साजि पुनि ल्याए ॥ ७ ॥
 ता पर हरषि चढ़ी बैदेही । सुमिरि राम सुखधाम सनेही ॥ ८ ॥
 बेतपानि रच्छक चहुँ पासा । चले सकल मन परम हुलासा ॥ ९ ॥ turatahiṁ sakala ga'e jahaṁ sītā. sēvahiṁ saba nisicarīṁ binītā. 5.

 bēgi bibhīṣana tinhaḥi sikhāyō. tinha bahu bidhi majjana karavāyō. 6.
 bahu prakāra bhūṣana pahirā'ē. sibikā rucira sāji puni lyā'ē. 7.
 tā para haraṣi caṛhī baidēhī. sumiri rāma sukhadhāma sanēhī. 8.
 bētapāni racchaka cahuṁ pāsā. calē sakala mana parama hulāsā. 9.

They (Hanuman, Angad and Vibhishan) immediately went to meet Sita who was now being served very politely and obediently by her female guards¹. (5)

Vibhishan gave them quick instructions, advising them as to how to treat Sita with great dignity, and prepare her for being taken to Lord Ram with due honour.

Thereafter, the female demon guards made Sita take a bath and clean herself in various ways (using soap and perfumes etc.). (6)

Then they adorned her with different kinds of ornaments. After that, a decorated palanquin was brought in for her to board it. (7)

Vaidehi (Sita, the daughter of king Videha, another name of her father king Janak; "baidēhī") then boarded it (the decorated palanquin) after remembering and paying her mental obeisance to Lord Ram who was an embodiment of (and a bestower of) bliss, joy and happiness². (8)

Holding batons in their hands, countless demon guards surrounded the palanquin and escorted it as it moved forward. All of them were very cheerfully and felt privileged to have gotten the chance to be the escorts of Sita. (9)

[Note—¹These were the same female guards who had been terrorizing Sita earlier—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 10.

²To wit, Sita thanked Lord Ram for finally ending her misery and giving her peace, by invoking the merciful Lord's virtue of granting bliss, joy and happiness to all those who remember him.]

देखन भालु कीस सब आए । रच्छक कोपि निवारन धाए ॥ १० ॥
 कह रघुबीर कहा मम मानहु । सीतहि सखा पयादें आनहु ॥ ११ ॥

देखहुँ कपि जननी की नाई । बिहसि कहा रघुनाथ गोसाई ॥ १२ ॥

dēkhana bhālu kīsa saba ā'ē. racchaka kōpi nivārana dhā'ē. 10.

kaha raghubīra kahā mama mānahu. sītahi sakhā payādēm ānahu. 11.

dēkhahum kapi janani kī nā'īm. bihasi kahā raghunātha gōsā'īm. 12.

The monkeys and bears rushed forward to have a glimpse of Sita. There was a huge crowd of onlookers, jostling and pushing forward, compelling the guards who were escorting her to angrily push them back. (10)

Lord Ram ("raghubīra"; literally the brave warrior of the Raghu line of kings) called out to his messengers and said affectionately: 'My friends (sakhā); please pay heed to what I say; bring Sita on foot¹.' (11)

Turning to all the monkey and bear warriors who were eagerly craning their necks to have a glance of Sita, the wise Lord smiled in amusement (bihasi)² and instructed them as follows: 'Oh Kapis! Look at her as if she was your mother; perceive her to be like your own mother.³' (12)

[Note—¹Lord Ram chided his messengers for misunderstanding his instruction of bringing Sita to him with due respect, in a dignified and modest way, by showing unwarranted zeal and enthusiasm in bringing her astride a palanquin like a queen. It is immodest and impudent for her to be brought to the Lord in such a manner of pomp and pageantry—as it violates outright the vows they had taken at the time of leaving their kingdom fourteen years ago, that they will live an austere life in the forest like that of a hermit. The sight of Sita coming to him in a regal state procession accompanied by royal paraphernalia, with its attendant pomp and show, annoyed and upset the Lord very much.

So he politely admonished his messengers and said: "My friends, listen. Let Sita walk to me instead of riding in a carriage. We have taken a vow to live like hermits during the fourteen years of our forest sojourn. It is highly immodest and uncivil for her to come to me astride a palanquin while I stand on foot, and it violates the sanctity of the vow that we had made at the time of leaving our kingdom of Ayodhya that we would live the life of a forest-dwelling hermit for fourteen years. I have diligently followed this injunction all through this time, but unfortunately Sita has fallen prey to temptations and fallen astray by violating the vows of an austere life by conceding to ride on a carriage, a palanquin in this case, which all of you would agree is not what is expected from the loyal, obedient, faithful and diligent wife of a hermit. Anyhow, the damage has been done, but let us now rectify it as best as we can. So therefore, let Sita step out of the palanquin and walk the remaining distance to me on foot like a wife of a hermit. There is no cause of shame in it, and there is no reason why she would be reluctant in walking now—for hadn't she traveled all the way on foot from Ayodhya, thousands of miles away, walking through the villages and hamlets that fell on the way, through the lonely and fearful forest, visiting many hermitages of sages on the way? So, what is odd in it if she walks a few meters now?

Besides this, these monkey and bear friends of mine are so eager to have a glimpse of her; don't you see that they are craning their heads and shoving each other to get closer to the carriage? Well, let them have a chance to see their mother directly. There should be no hindrance in it. Let them see how miserable she has become during her captivity in Lanka. Being a 'mother', let her see how her children are so eager to welcome her back, how glad and joyous they are to see her; let her bless them all with her benevolent and gracious smile, and let her glance at them to bless them all with her grace like the soothing spray of rainwater that falls on everyone equally, without making any distinction.

See, these warriors have left their homes and hearths in Kishkindha for my sake, and so it is obligatory for me to respect to them by honouring their wishes and treat them all as my family. And since every child has a right to see his mother, especially after she had suffered so much for so long, and these children had exerted themselves so strenuously to liberate her from her miseries, there should be no formalities now; there ought to be aught naught between these warriors and their mother Sita.

Hence, let Sita step out of the carriage onto the ground, and let her show modesty, prudence, wisdom and decency of behaviour by adhering to the vows that we had taken earlier that we will live an austere life of a forest-dwelling hermit for fourteen years, by walking to me on foot rather than riding on a palanquin.”

Now, let us examine the reasons why Lord Ram preferred that Sita should walk to him instead of riding a palanquin.

First, this would remove the danger of the palanquin toppling over in the chaos.

Second, it would forestall chances of a fight between the demon guards protecting Sita and the surging crowd of monkeys and bears trying to get close and look at her.

Third, it would give the eager friends of the Lord an easy chance to see Sita as she walks on foot as compared to her sitting in the palanquin with small windows with curtains drawn.

Fourth, by making her walk on foot, the terms of his forest exile, whereby he and his companions, Sita and Laxman, were to live as a hermit who travels on foot and not on a carriage, would be fulfilled.

Fifth, the Lord wished to remind Sita that she had done a wrong thing by allowing herself to be so finely decorated and riding in a palanquin, for did she forget that she was supposed to live like the wife of a hermit? It was inexcusable, and she must be strongly chided and adequately punished for her impertinent behaviour.

Sixth, the Lord owed enough gratitude to his monkey and bear friends to let them have the privilege of feeling like the Lord's own family members, and like children eager to meet their mother ought naught to be barred from this privilege, joy and pleasure, these monkeys and bears too had the right to see Sita openly and without any restrictions, albeit as their mother and not as a novelty.

But then, there was a simultaneous risk to her safety if she left the security of the palanquin and walked on foot, for there was a huge crowd anxious to see her, pushing and shoving closer, and they might rough-handle her in their eagerness and enthusiasm. So therefore, the Lord devised a clever and wise device to get over this risk—by asking all the monkeys and bears to look upon Sita as their 'mother'! This indeed pre-empted any imprudent behaviour on their part, and imposed a sense of self-discipline and restraint in them.

²Why did Lord Ram 'laugh' or 'smile' (bihasi) when he saw the approaching carriage bearing Sita and the huge crowd milling around it? When he saw the way the monkeys and bears were jostling and pushing and elbowing each other just to have a glimpse of Sita, he was amused as well as alarmed. The impression that the unruly crowd gave was that they were looking at something novel and wished to be the one who would claim later to have had the first chance to cast his eye on this novelty; that they wished to see who this lady was for whom such a violent war was raged; that they broke all protocol and good manners of keeping a dignified distance while approaching Sita and the palanquin she was in; that there was the risk of a chaos and a riot as the demon guards tried to push back the eager monkeys and bears by use of force, and at certain point of time there were chances that these monkeys and bears would lose their control and a fight would ensue. It was a dangerous prospect; but Lord Ram smiled as this itself was a novel and interesting sight to behold, a sight that was sufficiently funny as to amuse the Lord.

³When he observed that the things were going out of hand, he decided to intervene by asking the monkeys and bears to observe self-restraint and good manners by treating Sita as a “mother”, which meant two things simultaneously—one, that she must not be treated as a trophy of war or a novelty, but regarded with full honour and respect that one would reserve for one’s mother; and two, that since a son inherently enjoys a certain degree of freedom while approaching his mother, so it would be alright for the monkeys and bears to come close to Sita to a limit, but they are expected to maintain a dignified and respectful distance from her.]

सुनि प्रभु बचन भालु कपि हरषे । नभ ते सुरन्ह सुमन बहु बरषे ॥ १३ ॥
सीता प्रथम अनल महुँ राखी । प्रगट कीन्हि चह अंतर साखी ॥ १४ ॥ sunī prabhu bacana bhālu kapi haraṣē. nabha tē suranha sumana bahu baraṣē. 13.

sītā prathama anala mahum̐ rākhī. pragaṭa kīnhi caha antara sākhī. 14.

Hearing the words of the Lord, the bears and the monkeys felt very glad¹; and the gods showered flowers from the sky (heaven)². (13)

Lord Ram had kept Sita in the safe custody of the fire god on an earlier occasion³. Now it was time to retrieve Sita’s original form that was presently invisible and subtle, so that she could be physically present, in flesh and blood, by the side of the Lord in a tangible form⁴. (14)

[Note—¹Why were the bears and monkeys happy? Till now Sita was sitting inside the palanquin, making it difficult for the Lord’s companions to have a glimpse of her. Now that the Lord ordered her to come on foot, she stepped out of the carriage. This enabled everyone to see her directly. They always had had the greatest of respects for Lord Ram, and so now they felt so fortunate that they were finally able to have a divine sight of Sita, the Lord’s consort. With Sita stepping out of the palanquin and walking on foot to Lord Ram, the need for jostling and pushing ended.

²Not only the monkeys and bears, this also gave the gods an opportunity to pay their respects to Sita; they too felt exhilarated and expressed their joy by showering flowers upon her.

³Prior to Sita's abduction by Ravana, Lord Ram had put her in the safe custody of the fire god to preserve her purity and secure her safety—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 24.

After Sita's original form vanished from sight when she entered the fire element, the patron deity of which was the 'fire god', what was left behind was a 'shadow'. Now it was time to bring her back from her safe haven; to retrieve her from the subtle existence in which she had lived during this period, and make her reveal her physical gross form that the world knows as 'Sita'.

So it was necessary to reverse the process by which she had been put into the safe custody of the fire god. What could that process be? It was to light a fire and burn the shadow in it, while at the same time inviting the original Sita, who lived in an invisible-subtle form till now, to emerge from behind the curtain formed by the brilliant light of the burning fire, and step out into the physical-visible world. Surely it was a fantastic development and a magical feat so astounding in proportion that our mind, with its limited abilities to comprehend certain mystical happenings that occur at the transcendental level of existence, fails to fully understand as to how it actually must have happened.

In order to do this, Lord Ram had to devise a clever device which would serve a dual purpose: first, it should bring the original Sita back to the physical world, and second, it should ensure that no taint would ever be cast by anyone on her immaculacy and purity of character. What this device was, we shall read about it in the following Doha no. 108.]

दो०. तेहि कारन करुनानिधि कहे कछुक दुर्बाद । सुनत जातुधानीं सब लागीं करै बिषाद ॥ १०८ ॥

dōhā.

tēhi kārana karunānidhi kahē kachuka durbāda.
sunata jātudhānīm saba lāgīm karai biṣāda. 108.

That is why Lord Ram, who was like an ocean of mercy and compassion (karunānidhi), said some harsh words (against Sita, or for Sita)¹.

The female demons (jātudhānīm) who had accompanied Sita felt very sad and sorry when they heard the Lord's words, and began lamenting². (Doha no. 108)

[Note—¹The epithet "karunānidhi" has been used to qualify Lord Ram to emphasize that he is indeed very kind, compassionate, merciful and gracious by nature though what he was constrained to do now seems to be a very harsh form of treatment imposed upon Sita by him, especially after her long suffering and her being sinless and innocent of any crime.

Sita was made to undertake the 'fire test of purity'. This was obviously a harsh measure; it painted Lord Ram in a negative colour of being heartless and cruel upon his poor wife who was immaculate, chaste, pure, faithful, and loyal to him.

So, lest the world should form a negative opinion of Lord Ram as being heartless, merciless, cruel and over zealous for using harsh words for Sita and forcing her to undertake the fire test of purity, it is said here that it would be wrong to make such a erroneous surmise about him—for in reality the Lord was not harsh as he was forced by the circumstances to appear to be, but on the contrary he was very soft-spoken, gracious, tender in heart, merciful, compassionate, benevolent and kind.

What could have Lord Ram said about Sita, either directly to her or indirectly by implication, that could be deemed as being harsh and seemingly unwarranted? Well, let us see.

Lord Ram addressed Sita with a heavy heart; he said: “Listen honourable lady! If thou art pure, holy, untouched by evil and loyal to thine husband as thee profess to be, and as I expect and hope thee to be, then prove it to be so. Prove thy self by the sacred fire god as a witness; invoke the fire god to bear witness of thine inviolable virtues and untarnished character; prove that thou art above and beyond reproach and scandals. In the good interest of both of us, it is prudent and wise to settle this matter once and for all since you have been living in a polluted environment for quite a while, and it necessitates that you ought to be sanitized first before being accepted by me, for I do not wish a even a whiff of a scandal to tarnish either my name and reputation or that of yours.”

“Sita”, further admonished the Lord with a sad heart, “You have committed a serious error. Are you the one whom I call ‘my beloved Sita’? I don’t think so from your appearances; you don’t seem to be the ‘Sita’ for whom I suffered so much, and for whose sake I took so much trouble myself and put my friends here into equal trouble. The ‘Sita’ I know was dressed like the wife of a hermit, modestly and in a most austere way^{#1}. The ‘Sita’ I know is the one whose sorrowful, pitiful and sad picture Hanuman had given me after his return from Lanka where he had met her as a captive of the demon king ^{#2}. The ‘Sita’ I know had walked hundreds of miles in the forest with me, never once hinting that she needed a carriage to carry her onwards on her journey.

{^{#1}apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 79 along with Chaupai line nos. 2 and 8 that precede it; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29; and Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 94.

^{#2}apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 32.}

But I don’t see any of these signs in you. You are decked up in regal finery; you come in a royal procession with pomp and pageantry, astride a carriage carried on the shoulders of demon guards; your countenance is cheerful and quite the opposite of what I had expected it to be, and not only me but even my dear monkey and bear friends too had expected, based on Hanuman’s account of the Sita he saw in Lanka. So all those who are present here, tell me: how can I trust this lady that she is the same ‘Sita’ I loved and adored so much, and for whom I have called upon my monkey and bear friends to look up as their mother? With what face would I accept her as my loyal, faithful and chaste wife, and what face would I show in Ayodhya when I return there with a lady so regally attired as if she was a queen of the demon race, and not the honourable wife of a recluse Ram who had gone to the forest to live an austere life like a hermit for fourteen long years? I’ll make an utter fool of myself; I’ll subject myself to ridicule and scorn; and therefore it’s better for me to return to my capital city of Ayodhya without Sita than to carry this incredibly ridiculous and a glamorous shadow by my side as my wife.

Woe to you Sita; what have thy done? How durst thou even thinkest of adorning thyself in this ostentatious manner? Woes betide you and me if I ever accept thee in the manner thou hast presented thine self before mine horrified and unbelieving eyes.

Tell me, how can I be sure of the sincerity of your love for me; how can I ascertain that you had suffered in silence in my memory when it appears from all appearances that thou hast lived a life of luxury. How imprudent and impertinent and irreverent thou hast been for allowing thy self to break the vows of austere living by allowing thee to be decorated in royal regalia and carried on a palanquin, whilst your husband stands on foot dressed like a hermit? Shame should bear heavily upon thine head and make thee bow it low. Thy behaviour is completely unacceptable for me.

Nevertheless, I still wish to give thee a chance for repentance and offer penitence, for remember everyone who is present here, that I am the most forgiving and compassionate Lord the world has ever had and would ever know in the future. But to become eligible for forgiveness and acceptance, first it is expected that thee should prove thine integrity and purity and faithfulness by undertaking a test; and it has to be an acid test, for I don't want scurrilous scandals and wagging tongues dogging me for the rest of my life.

So therefore, be prepared to prove thine honesty and integrity by the 'fire test' as it would leave no scope for the smallest of doubts and existence of loopholes that might allow wrong impressions and ideas to flourish, that may eventually tarnish my own character and integrity, as well as that of my chaste wife Sita whom I indeed adore and love so much, to ever wiggle in and sour my reputation."

Lord Ram further chastised Sita by saying: "Thy honourable Lady! Do thee not remember that thou hadst cast aspersions on my beloved brother Laxman's character and intentions when he tried to dissuade thee from forcing him to leave thee alone in my hermitage in Panchvati and come to me while I was away chasing that golden deer which thy rapacity hadst forced me to go and capture for thy pleasure? {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 28.}

Well now, repent for it; I pay thee back with the same coin by casting aspersions on thine character and integrity. Feel the pain and agony that Laxman may have suffered at that time due to thy uncontrollable tongue; now taste the same bitter pill that Laxman had had to swallow."

²The demonesses, i.e. the female demon guards who had kept vigil on Sita during her captivity in Lanka, and who had escorted Sita from the fort of Lanka to the battle-field where she would meet Lord Ram, felt astonished and extremely sad by what Lord Ram had said about Sita; they were stunned at the Lord's doubting Sita and using some unwarranted statements against her that were harsh and insinuating even by the standards of the demons who were accustomed to such things. It is because they had been first-hand witnesses of how Sita had suffered during the period of her captivity, and of her immaculate character. They had seen how she rebuffed all provocative gestures of Ravana, who had even threatened her with death if she did not relent and agree to surrender herself to his evil designs, and the harsh treatment she was subjected to. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 9—to Doha no. 10.}

These demonesses had guarded Sita all the while when she was a captive in Lanka, and they were witnesses and could vouchsafe for her chastity, integrity, inviolability, and purity of character. So they were stunned and rendered speechless when Lord Ram, of anyone else, should say certain things that were best unsaid. They felt extremely distressed and sad themselves, and they empathized with Sita and shared her pain and grief when they saw the colour of her face change from that of happiness at the chance of her reunion with her beloved husband, to that of utter sadness, grief, shame and dismay.

*Laxman felt flabbergasted and extremely sad. He had never imagined that Lord Ram would be so harsh with Sita; it was incompatible with the Lord's inherent nature and merciful character. So this unexpected behaviour of Lord Ram much perplexed Laxman.

Laxman was unaware that the main reason for Lord Ram undertaking such a hazardous enterprise as ridiculing Sita's character in public and compelling her to go through the rigours of the "fire test" was this: That the 'real Sita' had been kept in the safe custody of the fire god, that Ravana had abducted only a false form of Sita, i.e. merely her shadow, and that, with the objective of eliminating the cruel demons having been finally achieved, it was necessary for Lord Ram now to retrieve the 'original Sita' from the custody of the fire god, and burn her dark shadow which was a 'false form of Sita'. This event of keeping Sita in the safe custody of the fire god was done so secretly by Lord Ram that Laxman had no idea of it; and so Laxman can't be faulted if he did not know the actual cause of Lord Ram subjecting Sita to the 'fire test' in order to burn her false form and retrieve her true form. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 24.}

The drama that unfolded on the battle-field of Lanka whereby Lord Ram casts doubts about the character and integrity of Sita, whom he and everyone else knew very well to be absolutely chaste, immaculate, pure and faithful to the Lord, reminds me, the author of this fascinating Story, of an episode in the classic tale of "Don Quixote" by the celebrated author Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra, which is narrated in its Book IV, Chapter VI, titled 'The Novel of the Curious Impertinent'. In this tale it is narrated that there were two fast and close friends named Anselmo and Lothario. Anselmo had a beautiful wife named Camilla. She was a perfect lady in beauty and character. But somehow, unfortunately, Anselmo got into his head to doubt her character. He prevailed upon his friend Lothario to become an instrument in testing his wife's integrity and loyalty. Lothario tried his best to show Anselmo the futility of this foolish enterprise and point out his folly; but Anselmo was so stubborn in his mind that he wouldn't listen to his dear friend's entreaties, for he had become determined to carry on with his hazardous venture even if it culminates in his ruin.

Now imagining how Lothario did his best to dissuade his friend Anselmo to abandon this stupid idea of testing his wife Camilla's integrity and loyalty to him, for it would prove ruinous for all, for himself, for his friend and for his wife, let us visualize in our minds how Laxman could have himself reacted at Lord Ram's suggestions regarding Sita, and how he could have tried to persuade the Lord to abandon this idea of testing Sita by the fire test, and what he might have said to the Lord in this connection as follows:

Laxman drew closer to Lord Ram and spoke to him softly and politely:

"My dear Lord and most respected Brother. I prithee to please pay attention to what I have to say to you before you decide to do what you wish to do. I beg that I don't agree with you. What you intend to do is a folly out of proportions. Remember this: a wife is the other half of her husband; so by casting aspersions on her character the husband is ruining his own reputation; and to rob a man of his reputation is akin to death for him. Why don't you see the ridiculous nature of what you propose to do: by casting doubts on Sita's character you would kill her, for to live a life of infamy is worse than death; and therefore by ruining Sita's reputation you are voluntarily trying to kill her, and by corollary trying to kill your own self. Your desire is so strange and foreign to all manner of reasoning that it defies comprehension and logic.

My dear brother. If I didn't love you as I do, I would have left you to pursue your matter as you wish, but I know it would lead to certain ruin, to which I resist.

When a woman was given to man in marriage, heaven ordered that they were made and pronounced as one flesh with two forms. To wit, the husband is a piece of his wife, and vice versa. Whatever affects her affects him too, because he is a part of her as much as she is of him. For in all sooth, the whole body suffers the pain of any one part, and the head feels the pain of the foot. So the husband is touched by his wife's infamy because she is a part of him.

Say my brother; do you wot naught that Sita is so immensely honourable, immaculate, pure, chaste and faithful to you? And if you know that your wife is possessed of these noble characters and auspicious qualifications, what have you more to inquire after her by putting her to such great embarrassment, by subjecting her to this harassment? And believe me, she is impregnable; the fire would do her no harm whatsoever. But nevertheless, the very act of doubting her is a taint in itself, and though she would definitely emerge unscathed from the fire, what will the world say about you; have you considered it? What face would you then show Sita once she is proved true by the fire test; wouldn't it put you in the dock and shame you for having doubted her?

What gain will you get, I don't understand. What I fear the most is that unwillingly I would be forced to be an accomplice in this absurd affair, for being the next of kin to you it is but natural that I would be the one who is asked to carry out your orders to light the fire and walk Sita to it. What will Sita think of me? How will she ever excuse me? How will I ever explain to her my innocence? She has always loved me like her son, but what am I doing to her to repay her affection—helping her to step on her own funeral pyre? How will I ever convince her that I was not at fault; that I had no choice, for if I refused I would have disobeyed my Lord, that is you, and it would have been a sin of disobedience in its own right?

Come to think of it my dear and respected brother: All three of us are losers in this venture. Sita would ever remain emotionally affected by this humiliation though on the other hand it would clear her of all taints; You would never be able to excuse yourself for this harshness inflicted upon her innocence self, and this guilt would dog you for the rest of your life; and as for myself, I would be the worst loser who would be forced to roast in shame and guilt for all times to come, for if I refuse to carry out your orders I am offending you, and if I accept your orders I would be offending Sita.

You call me your dear brother whom you love like a son, and yet you would rob me of my honour; nay, you stop not there, for you oblige me to destroy yours too along with mine. It's such a ridiculous situation that defies all comprehension.

Suppose my dear brother, you had a brilliant piece of diamond that was priceless and rare, and the purity, quality and value of which was vouchsafed and guaranteed by the best of gem-testers and jewelers. Would you not be satisfied by their opinion; would it be wise of you to try its hardness by putting it on the anvil and using a hammer to hit it? You must own that should it be survive your blows, it would not be one jot more valuable and hard than really it was prior to your foolish trials and rashness. But consider this: should it break, or otherwise develop some scratch-mark due to the severity of your blows, the jewel would be entirely lost, and so would be the reputation of its owner, who would be so much the poorer for his impudent and silly act.

Sita is this rarest diamond; she ought to be held in the highest esteem of all, and that includes you. I don't understand, by any fanciful flight of my imagination, that why then should you imprudently put her in the danger of falling, for in all sooth, your trial will add no greater value to her than she already has? But, god forbid, if she should succumb to the harshness of the trial that you propose for her because of her frail and weak frame, reflect with yourself on the danger you put your own self in, the life-long infamy and gloom that would descend on you like an all-engulfing shadow of doom. Nay, not only this, but you would never be absolved of the sin of causing Sita's doom too, not to mention my own. What sense does it make?

Consider this: A woman's best asset is her reputation that is held high in the opinion of the world. Sita's reputation is matchless; her immaculacy and honour are undisputed and unquestioned. Why say then would you, of all others, and with no purpose served, question her righteousness and auspiciousness yourself, by calling the reality of these virtues in question?

Take another example. The virtues and reputation of an honourable woman is like a mirror of crystal. A mirror has the risk of being cracked if one uses a hammer against it, and it would be dimmed and stained by breathing too much upon it. Sita must be treated like a reliquary of saints, which ought to be adored and worshipped but not touched and tainted.

My most respected and beloved elder brother, in conclusion I can only say this much that it is highly impertinent for you who are so exceptionally compassionate, merciful, gracious, kind, forgiving, magnanimous, charitable, and noble in heart and mind by your very nature to question Sita's integrity, virtuousness, honour and righteousness by casting aspersions on her character by first using harsh words for her, and then adding salt to her wounds by insinuating her to prove her by the fire-test as if this test would establish something that is not already well known and vouchsafed with regard to her.

So therefore my Lord I beg of you to abandon this uncalled for and totally incredulous way you propose to prosecute the innocent Sita for some imaginary misdemeanours which she is falsely and erroneously being accused and held guilty of, something which thee wish to set right even at the tremendous cost that thou would incur for thine own honour and reputation, because I have already told thee that a wife is an equal part of her husband, and if any half of a body suffers then the whole of it suffers.

I know you love me more than anyone in this world, and I am aware how you lamented and grieved woefully for me when I had lain wounded on the battle-field after being shot by Meghanad's shaft (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-17 that precede Doha no. 61). How come I know it? Well, one of our close friends here told me everything that happened during those moments. This unbound love betwixt us had given me the courage to speak up before you, for I am sure you will not take offence at me for questioning your wisdom and prudence in asking Sita to prove her innocence and integrity after her painful ordeal of separation from you when she suffered immense torment and grief. Why do you wish to compound her pain?

I and you share a unique bond of mutual trust, faith, love and affection, like no one else does. You have always treated me more like a dear friend than a younger brother, for you have confided with me your most private of thoughts that one would easily share with a friend but rarely with a brother, such as those related to your charm for Sita prior to her marriage with you (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 230—to Doha no. 231; and Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 237—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precede Doha no. 239).

On my part, I was up in arms whenever I perceived any threat to your reputation, honour and safety, as was the case first when Parashuram came angrily to punish you for breaking Lord Shiva's bow as a condition for marrying Sita^{#1}, and second when Bharat had come with his army to take you back from the forest, but I had misconstrued his intentions and thought he had come to fight and kill you so that he can usurp the crown of the kingdom^{#2}.

{^{#1}-- Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 271—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 280.

^{#2} -- Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 227—to Doha no. 230.}

This bond and trust betwixt us had encouraged me to tell thee what I thought, which no one else would durst have done. With this, I bring to a close my humble submission before thee. I will carry out whatever thine orders art for me now that I am satisfied that I have done my duty to express my reservations about what thou propose to do, and after thee has lent a patient hearing to me which ensures that thou would weigh all the pros and cons before arriving at a final decision.

My beloved brother; I once again pray to you to calmly consider your decision before proceeding ahead. I have nothing more to say.”

At this honest and sincere expression of his thoughts by Laxman, Lord Ram smiled; he put his reassuring hands on Laxman's shoulder, patted it most affectionately, and with love and warmth in his voice the Lord told Laxman:

“Laxman, I am exceptionally happy today. I have realised how much you love me. I listened to your submission with all attention, and every part of what you have said convinces me of your unbound and unrestricted love for me, and the greatness of your heart and wisdom. I thank you from the core of my heart for the honesty and love and consideration you have shown to me and Sita. I am fortunate to have you as my brother, for you are no less than the diamond you have cited for me. My dearest Laxman, rest assured that what I propose to do is in the best interests of all of us. There are certain things that have many facets and also have far reaching consequences, and a king has to consider all such aspects and weigh all the pros and cons of a given situation, as you have yourself advised me to do, before arriving at a decision, which may at times seem cruel, or incredulous and irrational to a lay observer, but for a king his decision has some definite purpose, it is taken by him with some far reaching consequences in mind, and it has a value that off-sets immediate criticism that a particular decision of his may evoke.

Brother, there are many things I have to keep in mind. I am a responsible person, and I have a reputation to maintain as you yourself say. Do you think that I am an irresponsible person who would act rashly, without thinking about the rationale and consequences of my actions? Perish the thought; there is no one wiser than me.

There are many things you aren't aware of, and it is better not to insist in knowing about them (such as the fact that the 'Sita' you see is not the real Sita, but a shadow of hers, for the 'real Sita' is in safe custody of the fire god, and I have to retrieve her).

Sita had insulted you and harmed your reputation by doubting your intentions and integrity at the time she forced you to leave her alone in the hermitage in Panchvati in defiance of my instructions not to do so. I could feel your distress and agony when I chided you for disobeying me and leaving Sita alone, at which you had expressed your helplessness because she had forced you to come to me by saying things she oughtn't have uttered. Being a neutral judge of everyone, how can you expect me to excuse her for this insinuation? {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 28; and Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 30.}

See, she has violated the terms of our forest-living, where we three are expected to live an austere life of a hermit. She has come to me bedecked in royal finery, like a queen, and to add insult to injury she had the temerity to ride a palanquin while I and you are standing on the ground attired like hermits. Tell me, is this excusable; do you want me to condone it? If the world begins to criticize me for not punishing Sita for all these misdemeanours just because she happens to be my wife, what right would I have to sit in fair judgment over similar and related wrong-doings of the subjects of the kingdom when I ascend the throne upon our return to Ayodhya and assume the role of its King?

My dear Laxman; I have an immaculate reputation to uphold; I am looked upon by the world as a bearer of the flag of Dharma (principles of righteousness, probity, propriety, noble conduct and thought, ethics and morality etc.), and I have to be extra cautious in my actions and behaviour. I must not set a wrong precedent; I must ensure that no scandalous story is weaved later on about Sita and my own self at a time when I would not be able to change or rectify the events that would have become history by that time, though I would then regret I should have acted more prudently and wisely while there was yet time for it.

Remember: Gold is never tainted or dulled by putting it in fire; rather the fire purifies it further and removes all doubts about its quality. So is the case with Sita. Once she emerges unscathed from the 'fire test', her virtues of purity, holiness and divinity would be all the more shiny and radiant with glory, not any wee whit dulled as you might fear. I don't want a doubtful, shadowy character by my side.

So don't worry at all. Everything would be fine and end on a happy note. Be rest assured and trust me. Now, that said, I expect you to do obediently what I plan to do, like a faithful companion and a loving brother for whom his elder brother's wishes are paramount and sacrosanct, especially when that elder brother treats him as his own son.

As to your worry that you will fall in Sita's opinion for being instrumental in carrying out my instruction of putting her through the rigours of the fire test, nothing of the sort will happen as I myself would explain to her the circumstances of what had happened. Tell me: Do you wish somebody else should touch Sita and carry out my wishes of putting her through the fire test while you stand mutely by my side? Would it not in itself be a scandal that you had refused my orders?

My loving brother and son Laxman; don't worry at all. Have faith in me, that I shall do nothing that would injure either you or Sita in the least. But at the same time, I have to pretend to be harsh to ride over the wave of criticisms and scandals that would lash our shores in the future time. Remember and consider this: Sita had lived for too long a time in a tainted territory, a place infested with demons. They were flesh eaters; they were lascivious and rapaciously passionate; they were embodiments of all the vices and all manners of evil characters that one can imagine. So it is easy for anyone to say: 'How can Sita have remained untouched by and immune to such vices when she lived surrounded by them all the time for so long, just like the case of a person's clothes invariably catching the smell of the scent that has been sprayed in the room where he had tarried for some time, or of tobacco that has been smoked by others in a crowded room though he had not smoked anything himself?'

Well, I have to prevent such things at all costs. So be at ease with your self and relax your conscience. Everything would be alright soon.”

Lord Ram paused for a while and glanced at Laxman most affectionately. The Lord patted and gently pressed his remorseful brother's shoulders reassuringly once again, and continued:

“My dear son, I have a special commission for you, like I had for Hanuman and Angad earlier. And like Hanuman and Angad gaining eternal happiness and glory for being my ambassador, you too would realize that you are not an instrument of any ruin for anybody, but the one who brings the tidings that would grant excess of cheer and joy to them. Now pay attention to what I have to say.

When you draw closer to Sita, which you must in order to arrange the pile and light it for the fire test that is proposed for her, and then escort her to it and help her step on it, whisper my message in her ear. Tell her that I wish to remind her, in case she has forgotten it due to her long exposure to hardship, sufferance and grief of separation from me, of that private conversation that I have had with her in our hermitage in Panchavati, just prior to the appearance of Marich who came disguised as the golden deer at the behest of Ravana so that she could be abducted by the demon king. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 24.}

While you convey my message, keep your eyes fixed on her face. You will observe that the countenance and colours of her face would change from sadness, distress and gloom to that of extreme joy, happiness and exhilaration. This metamorphosis would in its self be sufficient to convince you that you are not an instrument that exacerbates her sorrows, but a herald of her happiness and good fortune. To wit, instead of cursing you or being angry at you for becoming a tool of aggravation of her sufferings or humiliation, she would rather bless you profusely like you never can imagine.

Don't worry at all; I shall never do anything that would bring pain either to you or to Sita. You will soon realise it.”

This mysterious commission and the assurance of joy from Lord Ram, who never speaks a lie and is true to his words, helped to overcome Laxman's inhibitions and any reluctance that he has had. So, Laxman obediently bowed his head before the Lord in silence, though his eyes welled-up with tears, even as contradictory emotions of sadness and joy, of helplessness and hope, of reluctance to carry out his orders and the courage to obey them irrespective of their merit, wafted through his distressed heart like a train of waves lapping on the shore of an ocean.]

चौ०. प्रभु के बचन सीस धरि सीता । बोली मन क्रम बचन पुनीता ॥ १ ॥

लछिमन होहु धरम के नेगी । पावक प्रगट करहु तुम्ह बेगी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu kē bacana sīsa dhari sītā. bōlī mana krama bacana punītā. 1.

lachimana hōhu dharama kē nēgī. pāvaka pragaṭa karahu tumha bēgī. 2.

When Sita heard the Lord's words (i.e. when she learnt what the Lord wished her to do; when she came to know his instructions for her)¹, she respectfully accepted them with a bowed head, and spoke with purity and calmness in her mind, heart, demeanours and speech². (1)

[She addressed Laxman and exhorted him to follow the path of Dharma (i.e. that which is righteous and proper to do), and help her prove her innocence.]

‘Laxman’, said Sita, ‘please follow the path of Dharma³ by assuming the role of a priest who presides over a fire sacrifice. Light a fire quickly (so that I can prove my innocence and integrity, and you shall be blessed for being a priest and a witness in this purification rite)’⁴.

[It is clear here that it was Sita herself who proposed that she be put through the Fire Test, and that Lord Ram had not asked for it in express terms.] (2)

[Note—¹We will observe that what has been said earlier in the notes appended to Doha no. 108 and verses that precede it, fit in perfectly well here and explain things in a logical, plausible, and coherent way.

We have read in our notes earlier that Lord had briefed Laxman with what he expects from him and what he was supposed to do. Hence, it was on the Lord’s instructions that Laxman quietly approached Sita and told her in a whisper what Lord Ram had asked him to convey to her. It is how Sita came to know “what the Lord wished her to do, and what was the reason for this request”.

On careful analysis of the verses of the Text we can easily see that Lord Ram has nowhere publicly asked Sita to prove herself by the fire test; he had only said some harsh and pinching words for her, but not anything about the ‘fire test’. So, how did Sita get this idea of conducting the ‘fire test’ on her self, and that too by making Laxman an instrument for it, if Lord Ram remained silent on this matter and not said anything of the sort in public?

The answer is crystal clear when the reader would carefully read the notes appended by this author to the verses earlier. Obviously Sita came to know of Lord Ram’s wish of putting her through the ‘fire test’ because Laxman had conveyed the Lord’s wish to her as his messenger. So she immediately agreed.

²The Lord’s message also reminded her of the private conversation he had with her prior to the episode of the golden deer and her abduction by Ravana. Laxman was unaware what Lord Ram meant because he was not present on the occasion. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.}

Nevertheless, Sita got the hint; she immediately realized that the Lord wished to retrieve her from the custody of the fire god where he had kept her for her own security and safety, because the time had come to eliminate the cruel demons as the Lord had promised the gods and mother earth on an earlier occasion, and to redeem this promise it was necessary to use Sita as a bait. This was surely a most hazardous and risky job, and the Lord wished to protect Sita at all costs. So he decided to lodge her in the custody of the fire god, for it was the safest and most secure place anywhere in the world for her to stay temporarily while Lord Ram carried out his mission of eliminating the demons. That mission having been finally accomplished, it was necessary now to invite the fire god to bring Sita back, in flesh and blood, to Lord Ram, and at the same time burn her shadowy form that she had left behind at the time when the Lord had put her in the safe custody of the fire god. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 24.}

It is very interesting why Lord Ram chose the ‘fire god’ to act as a custodian for Sita. The ‘fire’ is an element that can never be tainted or tarnished; it burns all impurities and leaves things pure and immaculate; it is so fierce and ferocious that it scorches and reduces to ash anyone or anything trying to play fools and act smart with it. If one is required to prove one's innocence, the fire is the only element out of the five primary elements of creation that is invoked to stand witness to it. {The other elements are sky, air, water and earth. They can by mischance be polluted, but not the fire element.}

Lord Ram was a descendent of the 'Solar Race', and everyone knows how fiery the 'sun' is; no one would dare to go near this celestial oven if he wishes to remain alive. So therefore, Sita was safe and secure with the 'fire god'.

Further, Lord Ram himself had the fire god as his de jure ancestor. How come this happened? Well, if we carefully read the Story of the Ramayana, we will observe that his father, king Dasrath, had performed a 'fire sacrifice' to beget a son, and from sacred fire pit emerged the 'fire god' in a personified form. The fire god gave a cup of pudding to Dasrath that he was to give to his queens to partake, and it was from this sacred pudding that they conceived and Lord Ram and his three brothers were born. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 189—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 190.}

By manifesting himself from the 'fire' as his source, Lord Ram wished to convey to the world that no one should ever question the purity of his ancestry and origin. So when he had put Sita in the custody of the fire god, the Lord had actually placed her in the safest place he could think of, in the safe hands of his own ancestor who was very competent, powerful, strong and able to carry out his mandate to protect his daughter-in-law Sita while his son Lord Ram was out on a divine mission.

And since the 'fire god' was Lord Ram's deemed ancestor and Sita's guardian at the same time, so assuredly there was no fear for her to step into the portal of the fire god's visible form, which is the 'lighted fire' as we see it.

This is why Sita became calm and relaxed while asking Laxman to light the fire for her.

³By asking Laxman to follow the path of Dharma and become a flag-bearer of this stellar virtue, and never think of relinquishing his duties in this regard, Sita exhorted him to stop lamenting and regretting about what is destined for him to do. She meant that by helping her to undertake the Fire Test, Laxman would be serving many noble causes at the same time, and glory would be his.

One, he would be obeying Lord Ram who besides being his elder brother was also the commander of the army, and refusal to carry out the Lord's orders, or wishes, would be tantamount to disobedience and violation of the principles of discipline.

Two, he would be helping Sita to obey the Lord's command, and fulfilling her obligation as a loyal, faithful and honourable wife for whom the fulfillment of her husband's wish is the paramount law.

Three, he will be an instrument of redemption of her honour, respect and glory, and a witness of her acquittal of any wrong-doing or misdemeanour for all times to come.

Four, he will help her maintain her honour and dignity by preventing anyone else from carrying out the Fire Test on behalf of Lord Ram, because were he to refuse then it is certain that the Lord would be compelled to appoint someone else from the monkey army to carry out this Test for him, which event would be most scandalous and demeaning for her honour by every count.

Five, by doing what he is called upon to do by Lord Ram, he will obey his own mother Sumitra's commands to him that he ought to do aught naught that would displease Lord Ram and cause uneasiness for him[#], which will be the case if he refuses to carry out the Lord's instructions to put Sita through the Fire Test. {#Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 75.}

So therefore, it can be said that 'Laxman was also being tested along with Sita' during this episode of the 'Fire Test'. Both were being tested to see if they stand tall and with their heads held high in the unsparing judicious court of Dharma which favours none, and is neither prejudiced or biased against anyone.

⁴By asking Laxman to act as a priest of the sacrificial fire lit to prove Sita's honesty and integrity and purity, he was absolved of any sin that he imagined accrued to him in this exercise. A priest is a holy man; the fire rite he presides over is also a holy exercise; and the offering to this fire too becomes sanctified as it is meant for the fire god. So therefore, Laxman and Sita were both deemed to be holy for participating in this holy exercise, Laxman as a presiding priest, and Sita's shadow as the offering.

Just as the offering is burnt when it is put into the fire pit, Sita's shadow too burnt when she entered the lighted fire. And just as fire sacrifice is expected to produce some auspicious reward for the person, the patron, on whose behalf it is done, in the present case the reward is in the form of the 'original, untainted Sita' that is produced for Lord Ram on whose instructions and behalf this ritual was carried out.

Indeed, forsooth and without gainsay, what a fantastic coordination of auspicious things, all conjured up and occurring at the same time!]

सुनि लछिमन सीता कै बानी । बिरह बिबेक धरम निति सानी ॥ ३ ॥

लोचन सजल जोरि कर दोऊ । प्रभु सन कछु कहि सकत न ओऊ ॥ ४ ॥

देखि राम रुख लछिमन धाए । पावक प्रगटि काठ बहु लाए ॥ ५ ॥

sunī lachimana sītā kai bānī. biraha bibēka dharama niti sānī. 3.

lōcana sajala jōri kara dō'ū. prabhu sana kachu kahi sakata na ō'ū. 4.

dēkhi rāma rukha lachimana dhā'ē. pāvaka pragaṭi kāṭha bahu lā'ē. 5.

Laxman heard Sita's words which were imbued with a combination of diverse emotions: they were remorseful and full of sorrows, they were soaked in grief of separation from the Lord, and they were in accordance with the requirements of the principles of Dharma and laws of proper conduct¹. (3)

Laxman's eyes were filled with tears; he joined his palms and stood remorsefully; but he could not muster courage to say anything to Lord Ram². (4)

Realising that Lord Ram indeed wished him to carry out what Sita had asked him to do (which was to light a fire so that she could prove herself innocent and pure), Laxman had no choice left for him. So he immediately went ahead to collect firewood to light the desired fire. (5)

[Note—¹Sita felt remorseful and sad that after enduring all the hardships she was now being questioned and subjected to more suffering.

She feared that should anything go wrong by some remote mischance of fate, then she would be permanently separated from Lord Ram.

But she had no choice before her as she had to adhere to the laws of Dharma and the principles of noble conduct and probity, irrespective of the consequences that might befall on her, if she was to be accepted by Lord Ram.

²Laxman had already had a discourse with Lord Ram in this matter as we have noted in the previous verses. There was nothing more to be said and discussed. His orders and expectations were clear. So therefore, after hesitating for some moments, when Laxman realised that Lord Ram has given his tacit approval to what Sita asked him to do, he went ahead with the task at hand, albeit reluctantly, which was to make the fire ready and let Sita step into it.]

पावक प्रबल देखि बैदेही । हृदयं हरष नहिं भय कछु तेही ॥ ६ ॥

जौं मन बच क्रम मम उर माहीं । तजि रघुबीर आन गति नाहीं ॥ ७ ॥

तौ कृसानु सब कै गति जाना । मो कहूँ होउ श्रीखंड समाना ॥ ८ ॥

pāvaka prabala dēkhi baidēhī. hrdayaṁ haraṣa nahim bhaya kachu tēhī. 6. jaum mana baca krama mama ur māhīm. taji raghubīra āna gati nāhīm. 7. tau kṛsānu saba kai gati jānā. mō kahum hō'u śrīkhaṇḍa samānā. 8.

When Vaideh¹ (Sita) saw the fire burning fiercely and brightly, she had no trace of fear or joy in her heart (because she was calm and poised for this test; because she wished to look dignified and in control of herself; because she did not wish to create an impression on the onlookers that she was scared of the fire as she doubted her own self; that any sign of being forced into the fire against her will would boomerang on her beloved husband Lord Ram, because the world would accuse him of being cruel to her; and because she knew that the fire would do her no harm as its patron god, the ‘fire god’, was himself her guardian and protector). (6)

As she stepped into the fire, she declared on oath: ‘If in my heart and mind, in my spoken words and silent thoughts, and my actions and deeds, I have not considered or remembered anyone else but Lord Ram, if I have no destination or destiny other than Lord Ram, --- (7)

--- Then let the fire element and its patron god, who, being omniscient and all-pervading, is able to know the inner thoughts and the working of the mind of all living beings, become as cool as the paste of sandal-wood for me!

[To wit, let me step into the fire as if it was a cool pond of sandal-wood paste. Let this cool balm sooth my burning heart and offer succour to my suffering body by its graceful acceptance of me. I am pure and holy and untainted; and yet I am questioned. Oh revered Fire God; come to my aid and bear witness of my righteousness and auspiciousness. Have mercy and pity on me; I have been in your custody, so there is no one who can certify my virtues better than you. It’s your moral duty to do it now.]’ (8)

[Note—¹The use of the word “baidēhī”, meaning one who has ‘no physical body’, is very significant here. It clearly implies that the Sita who entered the fire was merely a ‘shadow’; some kind of apparition or specter that is not the real thing, that has no physical presence, that is not there in physical body made of bones, flesh and blood.

That indeed is true, because at the time of Lord Ram keeping her in the safe custody of the fire god, Sita had left behind a shadow that was her mirror image—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 24.]

छं०. श्रीखंड सम पावक प्रबेस कियो सुमिरि प्रभु मैथिली । १ ।
जय कोसलेस महेस बंदित चरन रति अति निर्मली ॥ २ ॥
प्रतिबिंब अरु लौकिक कलंक प्रचंड पावक महूँ जरे । ३ ।
प्रभु चरित काहुँ न लखे नभ सुर सिद्ध मुनि देखहिं खरे ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

śrīkhaṇḍa sama pāvaka prabēsa kiyō sumiri prabhu maithilī. 1.
jaya kōsalēsa mahēsa bandita carana rati ati nirmalī. 2.
pratibimba aru laukika kalaṅka pracaṇḍa pāvaka mahum̐ jarē. 3.
prabhu carita kāhum̐ na lakhē nabha sura sid'dha muni dēkhahim̐ kharē. 4.

By remembering Lord Ram and invoking his grace and mercy, Sita (the daughter of the king of Mithila, i.e. king Janak of Janakpur; “maithilī”) entered the fire as if it was a coolant, as if the scorching flames of the blazing fire had transformed themselves into a cool paste of sandalwood that provides succour to those burnt by the same fire. (Chanda line no. 1)

Glory to Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal (Ayodhya), whose holy feet is worshipped and revered by Lord Shiva (Mahesh) with the greatest of affection, faith and devotion¹! (Chanda line no. 2)

Both Sita’s shadowy form, as well as the social and worldly taint or stigma that were associated with it due to its prolonged presence in an evil environment during her captivity in Lanka, a place infested by evil demons, were burnt in the blazing flames of the fire². (Chanda line no. 3)

Lord Ram’s ways are so strange, magical, mystical and mysterious that no one present at the time, such as the gods, the mystics and sages who were watching everything from the sky (heaven), could perceive and understand what was actually happening³. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹To wit, it was due to Lord Ram’s divine grace and quiet intervention that the fire did not affect Sita in the least. The fire, which has a natural habit of burning anything touching it, magically metamorphosed into a coolant, and did no harm to Sita.

²To wit, what burnt in the fire was the impurity associated with Sita’s form arising out of her symbolic presence in the land of the evil demons. It is very interesting to note how Lord Ram complied with the laws of Nature and Dharma simultaneously. He allowed the ‘fire’ to carry out its natural function and live up to its reputation—which was to burn anything coming in contact with it, to burn only the impurity of gold and leave behind the purified metal, to burn rubbish from a heap of garbage and leave behind solids things of value, such as metals.

By devising this clever device, Lord Ram had ensured that any taint or stigma that might have been associated with Sita would be instantly and visibly eliminated, leaving no trace of doubt in anybody's mind, and that what survived would be her true and immaculate form that could not be questioned for its purity and truth.

³To wit, the gods, mystics and sages could not fathom why Lord Ram had said harsh words to Sita and forced her to undergo the fire test. They could not realize that it was merely a ploy by the Lord to settle all doubts and questions about Sita's purity and integrity, while at the same time destroying her fake form of a shadow and enabling the fire god to appear and produce the original Sita from behind the smokescreen of the glare of the blazing fire as we shall see in the verses herein below.]

धरि रूप पावक पानि गहि श्री सत्य श्रुति जग बिदित जो । ५ ।
जिमि छीरसागर इंदिरा रामहि समर्पी आनि सो ॥ ६ ॥
सो राम बाम बिभाग राजति रुचिर अति सोभा भली । ७ । नव नील नीरज निकट मानहुँ कनक पंकज की कली ॥ ८ ॥ dhari rūpa pāvaka pāni gahi śrī satya śruti jaga bidita jō. 5.

jimi chīrasāgara indirā rāmahi samarpī āni sō. 6.
sō rāma bāma bibhāga rājati rucira ati sōbhā bhalī. 7.
nava nīla nīraja nikaṭa mānahuṁ kanaka paṅkaja kī kalī. 8.

The Fire God revealed himself in a visible form, and holding the original Sita—who has been praised and honoured by the scriptures and famed in the world as the virtues wife of Lord Ram and a divine manifestation of goddess Laxmi—by the hand (as a elderly father or guardian would do for his daughter or ward respectively), he bestowed her to Lord Ram in the same way as the patron deity of the celestial ocean known as 'Kshir Sagar' had manifested himself and bestowed goddess Laxmi to Lord Vishnu (at an ancient time when the ocean was churned by the gods and the demons in search of Amrit, the ambrosia of bliss and eternity)¹. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

She (Sita) came and stood by the left-hand side of Lord Ram². This image was exceptionally beautiful and enthralling for the beholder. (Chanda line no. 3)

This bewitching sight reminded one of a blue-tinged lotus flower by the side of which there is a creeper made of gold³. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹When Lord Ram was married to Sita, a similar analogy is cited wherein it is said that her father Janak had held her hands and gave her in marriage to Lord Ram just like Parvati's father Himwant gave her in marriage to Lord Shiva, and the patron deity of the ocean has appeared himself to give goddess Laxmi to Lord Vishnu. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chanda line nos. 13-14 that precede Doha no. 324.

How did Sita look when she was produced by the Fire God at the end of her fire test? This question is answered in sage Veda Vyas' epic 'Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 19-20.

Let us see what these verses have to say:

श्रुत्वा स्तुतिं लोकगुरोर्विभावसुः स्वाङ्के समादाय विदेहपुत्रिकाम् ।
विभ्राजमानां विमलारुणद्युतिं रक्ताम्बरं दिव्यविभूषणान्विताम् ॥ १९॥
प्रोवाच साक्षी जगतां रघूत्तमं प्रपन्नसर्वार्तिहरं हुताशनः ।
गृहाण देवीं रघुनाथ जानकीं पुरा त्वया मय्यवरोपितां वने ॥ २०॥

śrutvā stutiṃ lokagurorvibhāvasuḥ svāṅke samādāya videhaputrikām ।
vibhrājamānāṃ vimalāruṇadyutiṃ raktāmbarāṃ divyavibhūṣaṇānvitām ॥ 19॥ provāca sākṣī jagatām raghūttamaṃ prapannasarvārtiharaṃ hutāśanaḥ । grhāṇa devīm raghunātha jānakīm purā tvayā mayyavaropitām vane ॥ 20॥

19-20. After Lord Brahma, the creator, had offered his prayers in honour of Lord Ram, the Fire God, who stands witness for the whole world, appeared on the site with the daughter of Videha (Sita) in his lap¹.

She was adorned in divine ornaments and attired in a red garment². Her glorious form was radiant with a reddish hue; she was surrounded by a halo of red splendorous light³.

The Fire God said to Lord Ram, the Lord who is a vanquisher of the sorrows and miseries of all those who seek refuge at his holy feet: 'Oh Lord Raghubir! Please be gracious and kind to accept Janki (Sita) whom you had previously kept in my safe custody in the forest (at Panchvati)⁴ (19-20).

[Note—¹When Sita had entered the fire, she sat down on the pile of firewood in a meditative posture known as 'Padmasan', the lotus posture. It was in this posture she emerged when the flames cooled down, giving a visual impression that she was sitting in the lap of the Fire God.

In this episode Lord Ram has shown two aspects of the 'fire', one is its 'elemental form' which is characterised by its inherent nature of burning whatever is put into it, and the other is its 'personified form' as the Fire God who is calm and cool like all other Gods. The illusionary or shadowy form of Sita was burnt by the elemental form of the fire, whilst her real and truthful form was produced by the deity who is responsible for controlling the fire element, i.e. the Fire God, who was calm and cool.

When king Dasrath of Ayodhya had performed the fire sacrifice to be blessed with sons, at that time too the Fire God had emerged from the sacrificial fire pit to give the king a pot of cool sweet porridge which he was to give to his queen so that she can bear a son—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 189—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 190

This porridge was cool, not hot and boiling, which clearly indicates that the Fire God is cool like any other God or living entity in creation as compared to the element known as 'fire' which he represents.

²A married Hindu woman traditionally wears red coloured garments and ornaments as auspicious signs of her happy marriage. On the other hand, a widow is expected to shed all ornamentation and wear white clothes.

³This refers to the colour of the flames. Since she was in the lap of the Fire God, the red-coloured flames surrounded her. It is the colour of the setting sun, indicating that the flames of the fire were slowly cooling down.

The visualization is remarkable here. When Sita had entered the fire, it was burning fiercerly with leaping flames like a newly lit fire would. But soon the flames subsided, and Sita emerged from the fire like a golden idol that is red like ember and purified by the flames.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.

²According to custom, a wife's place is on the left of her husband.

³In this metaphoric representation, Lord Ram is the 'blue lotus' because the colour of his body is bluish like the colour of the sky, and Sita is like the 'creeper of gold' as her complexion is fair and shiny.]

दो०. बरषहिं सुमन हरषि सुर बाजहिं गगन निसान ।
गावहिं किंनर सुरबधू नाचहिं चढ़ीं बिमान ॥ १०९ (क) ॥ जनकसुता समेत प्रभु सोभा अमित अपार ।
देखि भालु कपि हरषे जय रघुपति सुख सार ॥ १०९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

baraṣahim sumana haraṣi sura bājahim gagana nisāna.
gāvahim kinnara surabadhū nācahim caṛhīm bimāna. 109 (a).
janakasutā samēta prabhu sōbhā amita apāra.
dēkhi bhālu kapi haraṣē jaya raghupati sukha sāra. 109 (b).

The gods were jubilant and exhilarated. To celebrate the occasion and express their joy and happiness, they rained down flowers on the divine couple from their station in the sky, and simultaneously played their kettle-drums.

At the same time, the Kinnars (singers of heaven) sang and the goddesses danced in merriment in their aerial vehicles. (Doha no. 109-a)

Lord Ram, alongside Sita (the daughter of king Janak; "janakasutā samēta prabhu"), looked exceptionally adorable and charming beyond measure.

Beholding this fascinating sight, the bears and monkeys felt very glad and exhilarated. They applauded the divine couple and hailed them with cries of 'Glory to Lord Ram, the Lord of the Raghus, who is like an ocean of joy and bliss.'¹ (Doha no. 109-b)

[Note—¹The bears and monkeys were so charmed and overwhelmed by the beautiful sight of Lord Ram and Sita standing side-by-side that they could no longer restrain their emotions of joy and happiness, breaking out in a loud chorus praising Lord Ram and extolling his virtues of granting happiness to one and all.

They chose this particular virtue of the Lord because just a while ago it seemed that there would be sadness and gloom everywhere, but the sudden positive turn of events convinced them that the Lord does everything that would ultimately bring nothing else but cheer to one and all.]

-----**-----

Section 20.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand,
Canto 12, verse nos. 51-84; Canto 13, verse nos. 1-22.

Now, let us see how the legendary sage Veda Vyas describes this episode of Sita's 'Fire Test' in his classic narration in 'Adhyatma Ramayan', Lanka/Yudha Kand.

This Section has two Sub-sections, viz. (i) Sub-section 20.2.1 that covers Canto 12, verse nos. 51-84, and (ii) Sub-section 20.2.2 that covers Canto 13, verse nos. 1-9; 19-22.

(i) Sub-section 20.2.1: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 12, verse nos. 51-84:

ततः प्राह हनूमन्तं पार्श्वस्थं विनयान्वितम् ।
विभीषणस्यानुमतेर्गच्छ त्वं रावणालयम् ॥ ५१ ॥
जानक्यै सर्वमाख्याहि रावणस्य वधादिकम् । जानक्याः प्रतिवाक्यं मे शीघ्रमेव निवेदय ॥ ५२ ॥

tataḥ prāha hanūmantam pārsvastham vinayānvitam । vibhīṣaṇasyānumatergaccha tvam rāvaṇālayam ॥ 51॥ jānakyai sarvamākhyāhi rāvaṇasya vadhādikam । jānakyāḥ prativākyaṁ me śīghrameva nivedaya ॥ 52॥

51-52. Then Lord Sri Ram turned to Hanuman who was standing nearby with a very humble, prayerful and submissive posture, and said to him, 'Take the consent of Vibhishan and go to the palace of Ravana (rāvaṇālayam)¹ (51).

Convey to Janki (Sita) all the news about the death of Ravana and other events that have unfolded here, and then come back immediately to inform me what reply she gives' (52).

[Note—¹The word “rāvaṇālayam” in verse no. 51 refers to the palace of Ravana; literally the ‘place where Ravana lived’. A king's palace is naturally surrounded by gardens, lawns and parks. So, Sri Ram did not mean the residential quarters of Ravana to find Sita, but the royal garden, called the 'Ashok Van', where Sita was imprisoned.]

एवमाज्ञापितो धीमान् रामेण पवनात्मजः ।
 प्रविवेश पुरीं लङ्कां पूज्यमानो निशाचरैः ॥ ५३॥
 प्रविश्य रावणगृहं शिंशपामूलमाश्रिताम् । ददर्श जानकीं तत्र कृशां दीनामनिन्दिताम् ॥ ५४॥ evamājñāpito dhīmān rāmeṇa pavanātmajaḥ । praviveśa purīm laṅkāṃ pūjyamāno niśācaraiḥ ॥ 53॥ praviśya rāvaṇagrhaṃ śiṃśapāmūlamāśritām । dadarśa jānakīm tatra kṛśāṃ dīnāmaninditām ॥ 54॥

53-54. Having got this instruction from Sri Ram, the most wise and intelligent son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) entered Lanka; he was worshipped and welcomed by the demon citizens¹ (53).

He proceeded ahead and entered the palace of Ravana, and saw Janki (Sita) sitting under the shelter of the Sinshapa (Sesame) tree. She was extremely emaciated, weak, miserable and distressed, but was nevertheless pure, faultless, and without blemishes or taints of any kind (54).

[Note—¹To wit, when Hanuman entered the city of Lanka this time, he entered not as a spy or an ambassador of an invading army, but like a victorious general representing the Lord whose army has just conquered the enemy.

So therefore, Hanuman was shown great respect by the citizens of Lanka who not only warmly welcomed him but also went out of their way to please him in whatever way they could do. When they learnt that he was going to meet Sita, they cleared the path for him and led the way.]

राक्षसीभिः परिवृतां ध्यायन्तीं राममेव हि । विनयावनतो भूत्वा प्रणम्य पवनात्मजः ॥ ५५॥
 कृताञ्जलिपुटो भूत्वा प्रहो भक्त्याऽगूतः स्थितः ।
 तं दृष्ट्वा जानकी तूष्णीं स्थित्वा पूर्वस्मृतिं ययौ ॥ ५६॥ rākṣasībhiḥ parivṛtāṃ dhyāyantīm rāmameva hi । vinayāvanato bhūtvā praṇamya pavanātmajaḥ ॥ 55॥ kṛtāñjalipuṭo bhūtvā prahvo bhaktyā'grataḥ sthitaḥ । taṃ dr̥ṣṭvā jānakī tūṣṇīm sthitvā pūrvasmṛtiṃ yayau ॥ 56॥

55-56. She (Sita) was surrounded by demonesses (eager to serve her); she was constantly thinking of Lord Sri Ram, and meditating upon the Lord's divine form, contemplating when the first chance would come when she would be able to see the Lord with her own eyes. The son of the wind god (Hanuman) bowed before her most respectfully, with palms joined together in a prayerful mode (55).

Then he politely stood in front of her reverentially. Seeing him, Janki (Sita) first remained silent, then she remembered the earlier occasion (when Hanuman had come in search of her, met her, delivered Sri Ram's signet ring, and had burnt Lanka)¹ (56).

[Note—¹Sita was so deeply submerged in her own thoughts that for some moments she did not even realize that someone was standing before her, but by-and-by she could perceive that someone was there, but it took her some more time to recognize that it was Hanuman after she had sieved through her memory and remembered that she had seen him earlier too when he had introduced himself as a messenger of Lord Ram.]

ज्ञात्वा तं रामदूतं सा हर्षात्सौम्यमुखी बभौ ।
 स तां सौम्यमुखीं दृष्ट्वा तस्यै पवननन्दनः ।
 रामस्य भाषितं सर्वमाख्यातुमुपचक्रमे ॥ ५७॥
 देवि रामः ससुग्रीवो विभीषणसहायवान् ।
 कुशली वानराणां च सैन्यैश्च सहलक्ष्मणः ॥ ५८॥
 रावणं ससुतं हत्वा सबलं सह मन्त्रिभिः ।
 त्वामाह कुशलं रामो राज्ये कृत्वा विभीषणम् ॥ ५९॥

jñātvā taṁ rāmadūtaṁ sā harṣātsaumyamukhī babhau । sa tāṁ saumyamukhīm dṛṣṭvā tasyai pavananandanah । rāmasya bhāṣitaṁ sarvamākhyātumupacakrame ॥ 57॥ devi rāmaḥ sasugrīvo vibhīṣaṇasahāyavān । kuśalī vānarāṇāṁ ca sainyaiśca sahalakṣmaṇah ॥ 58॥ rāvaṇaṁ sasutaṁ hatvā sabalaṁ saha mantribhiḥ । tvāmāha kuśalaṁ rāmo rājye kṛtvā vibhīṣaṇam ॥ 59॥

57-59. No sooner than she realized that he was the messenger of Sri Ram, that her face lit up with joy. Seeing her calm and cheerful face, the son of the wind god (Hanuman) began to tell her the message of Lord Sri Ram in full (57).

He said, 'Oh goddess (devi)! Lord Sri Ram, who has been immensely helped by Vibhishan, is very well and fine, as are Laxman, Sugriv and the army of monkeys and bears who accompany the Lord (58).

Ravana has been killed (in the war) along with his sons, army and ministers. Lord Sri Ram has sent me to you with the good tidings of his welfare, as well as with the news that Vibhishan has been anointed on the throne of Lanka as its new king.' (59).

श्रुत्वा भर्तुः प्रियं वाक्यं हर्षगद्गदया गिरा ।
 किं ते प्रियं करोम्यद्य न पश्यामि जगत्त्रये ॥ ६०॥
 समं ते प्रियवाक्यस्य स्तनान्याभरणानि च ।
 एवमुक्तस्तु वैदेह्या प्रत्युवाच प्लवङ्गमः ॥ ६१॥ śrutvā bhartuḥ priyaṃ vākyam harṣagadgadayā girā । kiṃ te priyaṃ karomyadya na paśyāmi jagattraye ॥ 60॥ samaṃ te priyavākyasya ratnānyābharaṇāni ca । evamuktastu vaidehyā pratyuvāca plavaṅgamaḥ ॥ 61॥

60-61. Hearing this pleasant message of her husband, Sita was overwhelmed with delight and felt extremely exhilarated. She said, 'How can I please you (or what reward can I deem fit to give you for this good and happy news; how can I sufficiently bless you to recompense you for bringing this good tiding to sooth my ears)?

Forsooth, I cannot see in the three divisions of world¹ (60) any priceless gem or rare ornament, or any other thing for that matter, which is so valuable that it can be compared with the magnitude of the sweet, pleasant and endearing words that you have just said. [To wit, I cannot adequately reward you for these most auspicious and honey-like words that you have just spoken. Nothing in this world is as valuable for me as the good news that you have brought. I don't perceive how I can repay you for your service to me.]²

When Vaidehi (Sita) said so, the exalted monkey (Hanuman) replied (61)—

[Note—¹The three divisions of the world are the heaven, the earth, and the nether world.

²Sita was so overwhelmed with joy that she told Hanuman that there is no gift in the entire world that is so valuable that it may be worthy and suitable to be given as a reward for Hanuman's service to her. So therefore, she would prefer to simply bless him, as this is the rarest of rare boon that a divine goddess can grant someone with whom she is extremely pleased.]

रत्नौघाद्विविधाद्वापि देवराज्याद्विशिष्यते ।
 हतशत्रुं विजयिनं रामं पश्यामि सुस्थिरम् ॥ ६२॥
 तस्य तद्वचनं श्रुत्वा मैथिली प्राह मारुतिम् ।
 सर्वे सौम्या गुणा सौम्य त्वय्येव परिनिष्ठिताः ॥ ६३॥
 रामं द्रक्ष्यामि शीघ्रं मामाज्ञापयतु राघवः ।
 तथेति तां नमस्कृत्य ययौ द्रष्टुं रघूत्तमम् ॥ ६४॥ ratnaughādvividhādvāpi devarājyādvīṣyate । hataśatruṃ vijayinaṃ rāmaṃ paśyāmi susthiram ॥ 62॥ tasya tadvacanam śrutvā maithilī prāha mārutim । sarve saumyā guṇā saumya tvayyeva pariniṣṭhitāḥ ॥ 63॥ rāmaṃ drakṣyāmi śīghraṃ māmājñāpayatu rāghavaḥ । tatheti tāṃ namaskṛty yayau draṣṭuṃ raghūttamam ॥ 64॥

62-64. 'More important and valuable than the combined treasure of all the gems and jewels of the world as well as the kingdom of Gods for me is the fact that I can see Lord Sri Ram victorious in the war against his enemy, having finally attained the peace of his mind and feeling contented that he has attained success in eliminating the enemy and achieving his objective.' (62).

Hearing these words of Maruti (Hanuman) the daughter of Mithila (Sita) said to him, 'Oh Gracious One ("saumyā"; one who is polite, courteous, gentlemanly and good mannered)! All the auspicious qualities, characters, values and virtues that exist in the world (guṇā saumya) are present in you (63).

Now I shall be certainly able see Lord Sri Ram as soon as Raghav (Sri Ram) gives such orders for me.'

Hanuman said 'alright' to her, bowed before her, and then returned with all haste to meet the most exalted of the Raghus ("raghūttamam"; Sri Ram) to convey her message to him (64).

जानक्या भाषितं सर्वं रामस्याग्रे न्यवेदयत् ।
यन्निमित्तोऽयमारम्भः कर्मणां च फलोदयः ॥ ६५॥
तां देवीं शोकसन्तप्तां द्रष्टुमर्हसि मैथिलीम् ।
एवमुक्त्वा हनुमता रामो ज्ञानवतां वरः ॥ ६६॥
मायासीतां परित्यक्तुं जानकीमनले स्थिताम् । आदातुं मनसा ध्यात्वा रामः प्राह विभीषणम् ॥ ६७॥

jānakyā bhāṣitaṃ sarvaṃ rāmasyāgre nyavedayat । yannimitto'yamārambhaḥ karmaṇāṃ ca phalodayaḥ ॥ 65॥ tāṃ devīm śokasantaptāṃ draṣṭumarhasi maithilīm । evamukto hanumatā rāmo jñānavatāṃ varaḥ ॥ 66॥ māyāsītāṃ parityaktuṃ jānakīmanale sthitām । ādātuṃ manasā dhyātvā rāmaḥ prāha vibhīṣaṇam ॥ 67॥

65-67. He (Hanuman) told Lord Sri Ram verbatim whatever Sita had said. Then Hanuman exhorted Lord Ram to not waste any more time in calling Sita to him: 'For whom all these actions such as the war etc. were commenced, and who represents the fruit or the reward of all those strenuous efforts and hazardous actions (65)—now the time has come for you to see (or meet) that goddess named Maithili (Sita) who is much tormented and overcome by miseries, sorrows, anguish and grief.'

Hearing this advice of Hanuman, the most wise, sagacious, erudite and all-knowing Lord Sri Ram (rāmo jñānavatāṃ varaḥ) (66) decided to leave aside that form of Sita which was an illusionary, deceptive and shadowy form of hers, and instead to retrieve and accept Sita in her original form that had been entrusted by him earlier in the safe keeping of the fire god.

The Lord began to ponder how to bring this about; he contemplated on the device that must now be devised so as to make it happen.

After some thoughts he summoned Vibhishan and said to him (67)—

[Note—¹Lord Ram had placed Sita in the custody of the fire god for safe keeping as narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 1-3. Sita's original form was replaced by a shadow, and it was this false or illusionary Sita that was abducted by Ravana.]

गच्छ राजन् जनकजामानयाशु ममान्तिकम् ।
 रनातां विरजवस्त्राद्यां सर्वाभरणभूषिताम् ॥ ६८॥
 विभीषणोऽपि तच्छ्रुत्वा जगाम सहमारुतिः ।
 राक्षसीभिः सुवृद्धाभिः स्नापयित्वा तु मैथिलीम् ॥ ६९॥
 सर्वाभरणसम्पन्नमारोप्य शिबिकोत्तमे ।
 याष्टीकैर्बहुभिर्गुप्तां कञ्चुकोष्णीषिभिः शुभाम् ॥ ७०॥ gaccha rājan janakajāmānayāśu mamāntikam । snātām virajavastrāḍhyām sarvābharaṇabhūṣitām ॥ 68॥ vibhīṣaṇo'pi tacchrutvā jagāma sahamārutiḥ । rākṣasibhiḥ suvṛddhābhiḥ snāpayitvā tu maithilīm ॥ 69॥ sarvābharaṇasampannāmāropya śibikottame । yāṣṭikairbahubhīrguṣṭāṃ kañcukosṇīṣibhiḥ śubhām ॥ 70॥

68-70. 'Oh King! You go immediately, get the daughter of Janak (Sita) bathed, clothe her in clean and fine clothes, adorn her fully with all types of ornaments befitting her stature, and then bring her to me with all respect and honour to her' (68).

Hearing this, Vibhishan took Maruti (Hanuman) along with him, and immediately set off. Deputing old and aged demonesses for the job, he got Maithili (Sita) bathed (69), decorated with various ornaments and adorned in magnificent robes, and then seated her in a beautiful palanquin¹. He appointed numerous well-dressed and turned-up guards, wearing jackets and head gear, and holding royal ceremonial batons, to protect the palanquin and escort the procession.

Leading the ceremonial procession, Vibhishan came to where Sri Ram waited for him (70).

[Note—¹A palanquin was a well appointed wooden carriage in which noble ladies, or lady guests of honour, were transported from one place to another in ancient times. It was carried on the shoulders of trained palanquin bearers with the help of long horizontal poles, usually made of bamboo. This carriage had curtains drawn up at the openings to guard the lady from inquisitive eyes. The ensemble was accompanied by armed guards for protection, as well as personal attendants of the lady in question who walked alongside.

In the present case, Sita was taken with all royal ceremony and pageantry in a grand procession befitting a queen.]

तां द्रष्टुमागताः सर्वे वानरा जनकात्मजाम् ।
 तान् वास्यन्तो बहवः सर्वतो वेत्तुपाणयः ॥ ७१॥
 कोलाहलं प्रकुर्वन्तो रामपार्श्वमुपाययुः । दृष्ट्वा तां शिबिकारूढां दूरादथ स्मृतमः ॥ ७२॥ tām draṣṭumāgatāḥ sarve vānarā janakātmajām । tān vārayanto bahavaḥ sarvato vetrapāṇayaḥ ॥ 71॥ kolāhalaṃ prakurvanto rāmapārśvamupāyayuh ।

dr̥ṣṭvā tām śibikārūḍhām dūrādatha raghūttamaḥ ॥ 72॥

71-72. At that time, all the monkeys and bears came rushing forward to have a look at the daughter of Janak (Sita). Holding them at bay by their sticks and canes in all the directions, and amidst a lot of cacophony and tumult, the retinue of guards accompanying the procession finally brought her near Sri Ram.

Seeing Sita astride the palanquin from a distance, the best amongst the Raghus (“raghūttamaḥ”; Lord Sri Ram) said (71-72)—

विभीषण किमर्थं ते वानरान् वारयन्ति हि ।
पश्यन्तु वानराः सर्वे मैथिलीं मातरं यथा ॥ ७३॥
पादचारेण साऽऽयातु जानकी मम सन्निधिम् । श्रुत्वा तद्रामवचनं शिबिकादवरुह्य सा ॥ ७४॥ vibhīṣaṇa kimarthaṁ te vānarān vārayanti hi । paśyantu vānarāḥ sarve maithilīm mātaraṁ yathā ॥ 73॥ pādacāreṇa sā'yātu jānakī mama sannidhim । śrutvā tadrāmavacanaṁ śibikādaruhya sā ॥ 74॥

73-74. 'Oh Vibhishan! Why are they (the guards) preventing the monkeys and the bears from getting closer to Sita so that they can see her? Let all the monkeys and bears look at Maithili (Sita) as if she were their mother (73).

Not only that, let Janki (Sita) come to me on foot (i.e. let her walk down to me)¹.

Hearing the Lord's words, she (Sita) got down from the palanquin (74).

[Note—¹Obviously, Lord Ram was neither pleased nor amused by the sight of Sita coming to him astride a palanquin like a queen, instead of like the wife of a hermit that she was supposed to be at the time, because Lord Ram was attired as a hermit and lived an austere life of a hermit as promised by him to his father Dasrath at the time of coming to the forest. Sita violated this promise of the Lord by first allowing herself to be attired in royal costume and decorated in jewelry, and then coming in a royal procession astride a palanquin as if she was some queen, instead of like a hermitress which she was expected to be. This error on her part annoyed Lord Ram.]

पादचारेण शनकैरागता रामसन्निधिम् ।
रामोऽपि दृष्ट्वा तां मायासीतां कार्यार्थनिर्मिताम् ॥ ७५॥
अवाच्यवादान् बहुशः प्रह तां रघुनन्दनः ।
अमृष्यमाणा सा सीता वचनं राघवोदितम् ॥ ७६॥
लक्ष्मणं प्रह मे शीघ्रं प्रज्वालय हुताशनम् ।
विश्वासार्थं हि रामस्य लोकानां प्रत्ययाय च ॥ ७७॥ pādacāreṇa śanakairāgatā rāmasannidhim । rāmo'pi dr̥ṣṭvā tām māyāsītāṁ kāryārthanirmitām ॥ 75॥ avācyavādān bahuśaḥ prāha tām raghunandanah । amr̥ṣyamāṇā sā sītā vacanaṃ rāghavoditam ॥ 76॥ lakṣmaṇaṃ prāha me śīghraṃ prajvālaya hutāśanam । viśvāsārthaṃ hi rāmasya lokānāṃ pratyayāya ca ॥ 77॥

75-77. Sita walked slowly on foot and came near Lord Sri Ram. Seeing the illusionary or shadowy Sita, who was created to accomplish certain tasks (i.e. to eliminate the demons) (75), Raghunandan (“raghunandanah”; Lord Sri Ram, the son of the illustrious family of king Raghu) said many insinuating and contemptible things regarding her which are not worthy to be repeated and mentioned again¹.

Sita was stunned and exasperated; she just could not stand (or tolerate) those caustic, taunting, insulting, unwarranted and uncalled-for words of Raghav (Sri Ram) (76).

So she said to Laxman, 'Oh Laxman! Please light a fire soon so that I can convince Sri Ram and make the world sure of my integrity, purity, honour and virtuousness, leaving no doubt about it' (77).

[Note—¹Lord Ram made many derogatory comments about her character, and cast aspersions on her sincerity, loyalty, chastity, purity, truthfulness, honesty, trustworthiness, integrity and honour, which raised questions about her eligibility for being accepted by him.]

राघवस्य मतं ज्ञात्वा लक्ष्मणोऽपि तदैव हि । महाकाष्ठचयं कृत्वा ज्वालयित्वा हुताशनम् ॥ ७८॥
 रामपार्श्वमुपागम्य तस्थौ तूष्णीमरिन्दमः । ततः सीता परिक्रम्य राघवं भक्तिसंयुता ॥ ७९॥

rāghavasya mataṃ jñātvā lakṣmaṇo'pi tadaiva hi । mahākāṣṭhacayaṃ kṛtvā jvālayitvā hutāśanam ॥ 78॥ rāmapārśvamupāgamyā tasthau tūṣṇīmarindamah । tataḥ sītā parikramya rāghavaṃ bhaktisaṃyutā ॥ 79॥

78-79. Assuming that Raghav (Sri Ram) also wants this to happen (i.e. that Sita should prove her integrity by the fire test to satisfy the skeptical world), Laxman assembled a huge pile of fire wood and lit it (78).

Then Laxman, who was a vanquisher of enemies (tūṣṇīmarindamah), came and stood silently besides Lord Sri Ram.

After that, Sita reverentially circumambulated Raghav (Sri Ram) to pay her homage to the Lord and silently seek his blessings (79).

पश्यतां सर्वलोकानां देवराक्षसयोषिताम् ।
 पूणम्य देवताभ्यश्च ब्राह्मणेभ्यश्च मैथिली ॥ ८०॥
 बद्धाञ्जलिपुट्य चेदमुवाचाग्निसमीपगा ।
 यथा मे हृदयं नित्यं नापसर्पति राघवात् ॥ ८१॥

तथा लोकस्य साक्षी मां सर्वतः पातु पावकः ।
 एवमुक्त्वा तदा सीता परिक्रम्य हुताशनम् ॥ ८२॥ विवेश ज्वलनं दीप्तं निर्भयेन हृदा सती ॥ ८३॥ paśyatām sarvalokānām devarākṣasayoṣitām । praṇamya devatābhyaśca brāhmaṇebhyaśca maithilī ॥ 80॥ baddhāñjalipuṭā cedamuvācāgnisamīpagā । yathā me hr̥dayam nityam nāpasarpati rāghavāt ॥ 81॥ tathā lokasya sākṣī mām sarvataḥ pātu pāvakaḥ । evamuktvā tadā sītā parikramya hutāśanam ॥ 82॥ viveśa jvalanam dīptam nirbhayena hr̥dā satī ॥ 83॥

80-83. Then the daughter of Mithila (Sita) bowed before the Gods and Brahmins, while the women folk of the Gods and demons, and all the rest of the world, watched the proceedings in stunned silence as everyone was overcome with awe and wonder (80).

She went to the fire and said to the fire god with palms of both the hands joined together in prayerful mode: 'On revered Fire God! If my heart never wanders anywhere except the thoughts of Raghav (Sri Ram)—i.e. if I harbour no other emotions in my heart except those of affection and reverence for Lord Ram, if I have never for once allowed my heart to wander anywhere else except the thoughts of Lord Ram (81) — then, oh the Fire God, who bears witness to all that is true and holy in this world, I pray to you and beseech you to grant me your protection from all the sides. [I beg you to secure me and help me prove my innocence by protecting me from being burnt, for if it happens then I will be deemed to be guilty of a crime that I haven't committed, as you know well.]'

Saying this, Sita circumambulated the fire (82) and entered the fiercely burning pile without any kind of fear in her heart as a true 'Sati' (an honourable woman who is chaste, pure and loyal to her husband; a woman of immaculate integrity who is very honest towards her husband; who worships her husband as a living god) (83).

दृष्ट्वा ततो भूतगणाः ससिद्धाः सीतां महावह्निगतां भृशार्ताः ।
 परस्परं प्राहुरहो स सीतां रामः श्रियं स्वां कथमत्यजज्ज्ञः ॥ ८४॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे
 द्वादशः सर्गः ॥ १२॥

dr̥ṣṭvā tato bhūtagaṇāḥ sasiddhāḥ sītām mahāvahnigatām bhr̥śārtāḥ । parasparam prāhuraho sa sītām rāmaḥ śriyam svām kathamatyajajñāḥ ॥ 84॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmaramāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
 dvādaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 12॥

84. Seeing Sita enter the fiercely burning fire, all the Siddhas (mystics) and Spirits (here meaning sages and seers and other divine beings who were witnessing the development in a subtle form) became very agitated, anxious, worried and confounded.

They said to each other in utter dismay: 'Alas! In spite of knowing the truth of everything, how come that Lord Sri Ram has decided to forsake Sita who is like a personified form of goddess Laxmi for him?'¹ (84).

[Note—¹All those who watched the proceedings were stunned at Lord Ram's decision to let Sita undertake the fire test to prove her innocence and virtues, because no one doubted her, and everyone knew that she was beyond reproach.

But of course they did not know the real reason for Lord Ram's apparently harsh decision, for he had to retrieve the original Sita from the custody of the fire god, and in order to do it, it was obligatory to first invoke the fire god and request him to manifest himself in his dazzling, radiant and splendid form symbolized by the brilliant flames of a raging fire, then get rid of the shadowy Sita by burning it, and finally revealing the original Sita as she would emerge from the 'lap of the fire', which was a manifested form of the 'fire god', once the flames cooled down.

The reference to goddess Laxmi means that a person's wife is his best and most valuable asset for him, and she is worthy of respect and honour like goddess Laxmi who is the divine consort of Lord Vishnu.]

Thus ends Canto 12 of Uddha Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and Uma, his consort.

(ii) Sub-section 20.2.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Lanka Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 1-9; 19-22.

॥त्रयोदशः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

ततः शक्रः सहस्राक्षो यमश्च वरुणस्तथा ।

कुबेरश्च महातेजाः पिनाकी वृषवाहनः ॥ १॥

ब्रह्मा ब्रह्मविदां श्रेष्ठो मुनिभिः सिद्धचारणैः ।

ऋषयः पितरः साध्या गन्धर्वाप्सरसोरगाः ॥ २॥

एते चान्ये विमानाढ्यैराजगम्यन्तु राघवः ।

अब्रुवन् परमात्मानं रामं पूजयन्तश्च ते ॥ ३॥

॥trayodaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

tataḥ śakraḥ sahasrākṣo yamaśca varuṇastathā ।

kuberaśca mahātejāḥ pinākī vṛṣavāhanaḥ ॥ 1॥

brahmā brahmavidāṃ śreṣṭho munibhiḥ siddhacāraṇaiḥ ।

ṛṣayaḥ pitaraḥ sādhyā gandharvāpsarasoragāḥ ॥ 2॥

ete cānye vimānāgryairājagmuryatra rāghavaḥ । abruvan paramātmānaṃ rāmaṃ prāñjalayaśca te ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! About this time, a huge gathering of celestial beings assembled in the sky to pray to Lord Ram.

They included the thousand-eyed Indra (the king of gods), Yama (the god of death), Varuna (the god of water), Kuber (the treasurer of gods), Lord Pinaki (Lord Shiva, so called because the bow he held was known as 'Pinak'), the Lord who is most splendid and radiant with divine energy, and who rides a bull (1), Lord Brahma (the creator), who is the best amongst those who are enlightened and well-versed in the knowledge of the supreme Truth and the absolute Reality of creation, and who is very wise and exalted, the Siddhas and Chaarans (the mystics and celestial bards), sages and hermits, the ancestors in their spirit form, seekers of spiritualism, emancipation and salvation, Gandharvas and Apsaras (celestial musicians and damsels or courtesans of Indra's court) as well as the Serpents (the creatures of the subterranean kingdoms) (2), and many other exalted spirits, gods and demi-gods—all of them came in their respective aerial planes to the place where Lord Ram (Raghav) stood in the battle-field.

Each of them joined the palms of his hands as a gesture of reverence and submission before the Lord as all of them prayed together as follows (3)—

कर्ता त्वं सर्वलोकानां साक्षी विज्ञानविग्रहः ।
वसूनामष्टमोऽसि त्वं रुद्राणां शङ्करो भवान् ॥ ४॥
आदिकर्तासि लोकानां ब्रह्मा त्वं चतुराननः । अश्विनौ घृणभूतौ ते चक्षुषी चन्द्रभास्करौ ॥ ५॥ kartā tvam sarvalokānām sākṣī vijñānavigrahaḥ । vasūnāmaṣṭamo'si tvam rudrāṇām śaṅkaro bhavān ॥ 4॥ ādikartāsi lokānām brahmā tvam caturānanaḥ । aśvinau ghrāṇabhūtau te cakṣuṣī candrabhāskarau ॥ 5॥

4-5. 'Oh Lord! You are the one who does everything in this world, the doer as well as the driving force that gets things done; you are a witness for all; you are an embodiment of pure and truthful knowledge, wisdom and enlightenment.

Indeed and in all sooth, amongst the Vasus you are a manifestation of the eighth Vasu (i.e. the best of the eight Vasus)¹; and amongst the Rudras you are like Lord Mahadev (the great god Lord Shiva, the best of the eleven Rudras)². (4)

Verily, you are indeed the Lord who had created this visible world in your manifestation as the four-headed Creator known as Brahma.

Similarly, the Ashwini Kumars³ are your nose; and the Sun and the Moon are your two eyes⁴. (5)

[Note—¹There are eight semi-gods called Vasus. The word Vasu refers to the eight most essential things or elements in the world without which life is not sustainable, and the cosmic forces of Nature that govern each of these eight elements are represented in the form of a 'God' who is named after the element or thing which he represents.

The 8 Vasus and their importance are mentioned in the following Upanishads:

(i) Atharva Veda's Atharva Shikha Upanishad, Kandika 1; Brihajjabal Upanishad, Brahman 4, verse no. 16, Brahman 6, verse no. 12; Nrisingh Tapni Upanishad, Canto 1, verse no. 3; Ram Uttar Tapini Upanishad, Canto 5, verse no. 4/32; Devi Upanishad, verse no. 4.

(ii) Krishna Yajur Veda's Ekakchar Upanishad, verse no. 7.

These Vasus are the various patron gods who preside over the essential elements of life. They are—Vishnu who is the sustainer, Shiva who is the annihilator, Kuber who is the treasurer of the wealth of the gods, the Sun, Water, Fire, Wealth represented by gems and gold, and 'Ray' representing glory and fame. The element 'Fire' is the most potent, prominent and essential force in creation, because without fire the world would freeze to death. Hence, the Fire-God is said to be the chief amongst the Vasus. The 'fire' element is the active force in creation and is primarily responsible for kindling the cosmic cauldron that set in motion the process, and once having set it in motion it then sustained it and would finally annihilate it by burning it to cinders. On the other hand, Lord Vishnu is the passive force of creation represented by his other form of Viraat Purush which is the primary male aspect of creation. Lord Vishnu, who is the sustainer of the creation, is the Lord of Laxmi who is the Goddess of wealth, and is the supreme creator because Brahma, the old patriarch of creation who created the visible world and its creatures, was himself born atop the divine lotus that emerged from the navel of Lord Vishnu. Lord Vishnu utilizes the services of Laxmi who is the personification of the active forces of creation to create, sustain and annihilate the world. The Vasus are symbolic Gods who represent those essentials aspects of creation without which life would be difficult to conceive and sustain and finally conclude.

The Ram Uttar Tapini Upanishad of the Atharva Veda, Canto 5, verse no. 4/32 says that the Vasus are none but manifestations of Lord Ram who himself is the supreme transcendental Brahm himself.

The eight Vasus are the gods who provide succour and a dwelling place for the whole creation. They symbolise those primary necessities of life without which existence is not possible. They are— (i) Kuber (the God of wealth and prosperity), (ii) the Sun God (who provides energy and food) and his rays and radiance (i.e. sunlight and the energy that it provides), (iii) Shiva (the concluder or annihilator of the creation), (iv) Vishnu (the sustainer), (v) the Water God (called Varun), (vi) the Fire God (called Agni), (vii) any body of water such as a pond, a river etc., and (viii) holy and pious people (who give advice and guidance to the creatures of the creation).

According to Brihad Aranyak Upanishad 3/9/3, the Vasus are the following—Fire, Earth, Air, Antariksha (the space of the solar system), Aditya (Sun), Duloka (heavens), the Moon, and the Nakshatras (the stars and the planets).

According to Purans, the eight Vasus are the following—Dhruv, Dhar, Som/Soma (the sap of an elixir-providing plant called Som/Soma which is used during religious ceremonies as sanctified liquid offered to the Gods; it is white in colour and is said to be stored in the moon), Aapha (water), Anil (wind), Anal (fire), Pratush, and Prabhaas.

The Ekakchar Upanishad of Krishna Yajur Veda, in its verse no. 7, says that these Vasus are manifestations of Brahm, the Supreme Being, in order to provide the creation with the necessities of life.

²Lord Shiva has eleven forms called Rudras, and the best of all these forms is called 'Mahadeva', the 'Great God', which is another name used for Lord Shiva himself.

Here it implies that Lord Ram is the best of all the forms that the Supreme Being has assumed in this creation.

³The Ashwini Kumars are twins, and sons of the Sun God. They are the medicine-men of the heavens and the gods. They are so great experts in the science related to medicinal herbs that they can select the right herb by merely smelling it.

⁴By referring to the Sun and the Moon as being Lord Ram's eyes, it is implied that the Lord's Supreme Macrocosmic Form is being invoked here.]

लूकानामादिरन्तोऽसि नित्य एकः सदोदितः ।
सदा शुद्धः सदा बुद्धः सदा मुक्तोऽगुणोऽद्वयः ॥ ६॥
त्वन्मायासंवृतानां त्वं भासि मानुषविग्रहः । त्वन्नाम स्मरतां राम सदा भासि चिदात्मकः ॥ ७॥ lūkānāmādiranto'si nitya ekaḥ sadoditaḥ । sadā śuddhaḥ sadā buddhaḥ sadā mukto'guṇo'dvayaḥ ॥ 6॥ tvanmāyāsaṁvṛtānāṁ tvaṁ bhāsi mānuṣavigrahaḥ । tvannāma smaratāṁ rāma sadā bhāsi cidātmakaḥ ॥ 7॥

6-7. You are the beginning and end of the creation; you are eternal, everlasting and unchanging; you have no birth or death; you are an image of eternal divine light; you are inherently pure, uncorrupt, without any blemishes and faults; you are always wise, erudite, sagacious and enlightened; you are always free and liberated (from all the delusions, entrapments and all other snares so characteristic of this mundane, gross world); you are Nirguna (i.e. you are without attributes; you are neutral); and you are peerless, matchless, unique and without any parallel (6).

Oh divine Lord Sri Ram! For those who are surrounded (i.e. are under the influence of) your Maya (the Lord's cosmic powers that create delusions), you appear to be an ordinary man with a physical gross body, but those who are wise and enlightened always remember your divine cosmic form by invoking your holy name (as it neutralizes the effects of Maya). Such wise, erudite and sagacious souls realise that you are no one else but the Supreme Being himself, the Parmatma, the Lord who is known as Brahm, the Cosmic Soul that represents the pure cosmic Consciousness (7).

रावणेन हतं स्थानमस्माकं तेजसा सह ।
त्वयाद्य निहतो दुष्टः पुनः प्राप्तं पदं स्वकम् ॥ ८॥
एवं स्तुवत्सु देवेषु ब्रह्मा साक्षात्पितामहः । अब्रवीत्पूजतो भूत्वा रामं सत्यपथे स्थितम् ॥ ९॥ rāvaṇena hṛtaṁ sthānamasmākaṁ tejasā saha । tvayādya nihato duṣṭaḥ punaḥ prāptaṁ padaṁ svakam ॥ 8॥ evaṁ stuvatsu deveṣu brahmā sāksātpitāmahaḥ । abravitpraṇato bhūtvā rāmaṁ satyapathe sthitam ॥ 9॥

8-9. Ravana had snatched our powers, and had deprived us of our respect and status. Today, that wicked and evil fellow has died at your hands, and we have got back our lost position and honour¹.

When the gods had finished praying as described above, the grandfather Brahma himself prayed to Lord Sri Ram who is steady on the path of righteousness, truth, probity and propriety (9).

[Note—¹The gods were more concerned about their own position and status rather than sufferings of ordinary creatures due to the tyranny that Ravana had unleashed on them. This indicates that the gods are quite selfish in their outlook, and this characteristic of the gods has found resonance in a verse of Ram Charit Manas, the venerated Story of Lord Ram penned by the learned saint-poet Goswami Tulsidas in Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 110, wherein he says: “the Gods are always very selfish but they speak words as if they are very benevolent and worried about the welfare of others”.]

श्रुत्वा स्तुतिं लोकगुरोर्विभावसुः स्वाङ्के समादाय विदेहपुत्रिकाम् ।
विभ्राजमानां विमलारुणद्युतिं रक्ताम्बरं दिव्यविभूषणान्विताम् ॥ १९॥
प्रोवाच साक्षी जगतां रघूत्तमं प्रपन्नसर्वार्तिहरं हुताशनः ।
गृहाण देवीं रघुनाथ जानकीं पुरा त्वया मय्यवरोपितां वने ॥ २०॥

śrutvā stutiṃ lokagurorvibhāvasuḥ svāṅke samādāya videhaputrikām ।
vibhrājamānāṃ vimalāruṇadyutiṃ raktāmbarāṃ divyavibhūṣaṇānvitām ॥ 19॥ provāca sākṣī jagatāṃ raghūttamaṃ prapannasarvārtiharamḥ hutāśanaḥ । grhāṇa devīmḥ raghunātha jānakīm purā tvayā mayyavaropitām vane ॥ 20॥

19-20. After Lord Brahma, the creator, had offered his prayers in honour of Lord Ram, the Fire God, who stands witness for the whole world, appeared on the site with the daughter of Videha (Sita) in his lap¹.

She was adorned in divine ornaments and attired in a red garment². Her glorious form was radiant with a reddish hue; she was surrounded by a halo of red splendorous light³.

The Fire God said to Lord Ram, the Lord who is a vanquisher of the sorrows and miseries of all those who seek refuge at his holy feet: ‘Oh Lord Raghubir! Please be gracious and kind to accept Janki (Sita) whom you had previously kept in my safe custody in the forest (at Panchvati)⁴ (19-20).

[Note—¹When Sita had entered the fire, she sat down on the pile of firewood in a meditative posture known as ‘Padmasan’, the lotus posture. It was in this posture she emerged when the flames cooled down, giving a visual impression that she was sitting in the lap of the Fire God.

In this episode Lord Ram has shown two aspects of the ‘fire’, one is its ‘elemental form’ which is characterised by its inherent nature of burning whatever is put into it, and the other is its ‘personified form’ as the Fire God who is calm and cool like all other Gods. The illusionary or shadowy form of Sita was burnt by the elemental form of the fire, whilst her real and truthful form was produced by the deity who is responsible for controlling the fire element, i.e. the Fire God, who was calm and cool.

When king Dasrath of Ayodhya had performed the fire sacrifice to be blessed with sons, at that time too the Fire God had emerged from the sacrificial fire pit to give the king a pot of cool sweet porridge which he was to give to his queen so that she can bear a son—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 1-8.

This porridge was cool, not hot and boiling, which clearly indicates that the Fire God is cool like any other God or living entity in creation as compared to the element known as 'fire' which he represents.

²A married Hindu woman traditionally wears red coloured garments and ornaments as auspicious signs of her happy marriage. On the other hand, a widow is expected to shed all ornamentation and wear white clothes.

³This refers to the colour of the flames. Since she was in the lap of the Fire God, the red-coloured flames surrounded her. It is the colour of the setting sun, indicating that the flames of the fire were slowly cooling down.

The visualization is remarkable here. When Sita had entered the fire, it was burning fiercerly with leaping flames like a newly lit fire would. But soon the flames subsided, and Sita emerged from the fire like a golden idol that is red like ember and purified by the flames.

⁴Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 2-4.]

विधाय मायाजनकात्मजां हरे दशाननपूणविनाशनाय च ।
हतो दशास्यः सह पुत्रबान्धवैर्निराकृतोऽनेन भरो भुवः प्रभो ॥ २१॥
तिरोहिता सा प्रतिबिम्बरूपिणी कृता यदर्थं कृतकृत्यतां गता ।
ततोऽतिहृष्टां परिगृह्य जानकीं रामः प्रहृष्टः प्रतिपूज्य पावकम् ॥ २२॥ vidhāya māyājanakātmajāṃ hare daśānanaprāṇavināśanāya ca । hato daśāsyaḥ saha putrabāndhavairnirākṛto'nena bharo bhuvaḥ prabho ॥ 21॥ tirohitā sā pratibimbarūpiṇī kṛtā yadartham kṛtakṛtyatām gatā । tato'tihṛṣṭāṃ parigrhya jānakīm rāmaḥ prahrṣṭaḥ pratipūjya pāvakam ॥ 22॥

21-22. 'Oh Hari (Sri Ram)! You had created an illusionary, a shadowy Sita for the express purpose of eliminating Ravana along with his sons and other evil demons who accompanied him, who aided in his evil designs.

Oh Lord! By doing so, you have removed the burden of this earth (21).

The illusionary and shadowy form of Sita that was like an image of her real self, has now vanished after having accomplished the task for which it was created.'

Hearing these words of the Fire God, Sri Ram worshipped and honoured him with great delight and a joyful heart.

The Lord then gladly accepted Janki (Sita) who was extremely exhilarated and joyous at this happy turn of events (22).

[Note—So this is how Sita was reunited with Lord Ram at the end of the Epic War of Lanka.]

-----**-----

Chapter 21

Epilogue

Lord Ram Embarks on His Journey Back Home to Ayodhya with His Companions onboard the Air-Plane called Pushpak; Lord Ram's Arrival in Ayodhya to a warm and tumultuous Welcome; Lord Ram's ascending the Throne of Ayodhya as a King and the Lord Emperor.

After Sita was reunited with Lord Ram, the Lord was worshipped and honoured by all the gods and others who had assembled in the sky to pay their homage and thanks to him. The Spirit of king Dasrath, the worldly father of Lord Ram, too appeared to bless him.

After these formal eulogies and praises were over, the Lord asked Indra to rain Amrit, the ambrosia of life, from heaven so that the monkey and bear warriors who were either seriously wounded or even dead could be revived back to life. Simultaneously, the souls of all the demon warriors were granted deliverance by the gracious Lord Ram; each one of them attained emancipation and salvation by the grace of the Lord.

Then Vibhishan expressed his thankful gratitude to the Lord by offering tributes in the form of an abundance of costly gifts, which the Lord asked him to give the monkeys and bears instead by riding his Pushpak plane and showering these gifts on the army from the sky so that the monkeys and bears could pick whatever they liked to have for themselves.

Finally the moment came for Lord Ram's departure from Lanka to go back to his kingdom of Ayodhya. He boarded the Pushpak plane with Sita and Laxman, and his close companions who had helped him during the campaign of Lanka too accompanied the Lord on his journey back home. The rest of the army was given a warm send off and asked to return to their respective homes in Kishkindha and other places from whence they had come.

The Lord's party arrived in Ayodhya to a rousing and emotional welcome. There were mass celebrations in the capital city. Soon thereafter, Lord Ram was crowned on the throne of Ayodhya as the renowned kingdom's great King-Emperor.

After the Lord's coronation festivities were over, his honoured guests from Kishkindha and Lanka, i.e. the chiefs of the monkey and bear race as well as Vibhishan and his companions, who had come to Ayodhya on the Pushpak plane, were given a warm send-off by Lord Ram, and they returned to their homes full of praises for the Lord, with happy memories of their companionship with Lord Ram forever enshrined in their hearts.

Thus ends our most fascinating, marvellous, captivating and enthralling “Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka”.

For narrating these final episodes, we shall quote from:

(a) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 110 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-12 that precede it; (ii) Doha no. 112 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it; (iii) Doha no. 113—to Doha no. 114; (iv) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 116—to Doha no. 121; (v) Uttar Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-4 and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 12; (vi) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 15—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 20.

(b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 40-60; Canto 14, verse nos. 1-100; and Canto 15, verse nos. 1-50, 70-75.

(c) Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 17-23.

Since we shall be reading from the aforementioned three classics, we shall divide this Chapter into three Sections as follows:

Section 21.1 (sub-section 21.1.1—21.1.6) Ram Charit Manas

Section 21.2 (sub-section 21.2.1—21.2.3) Adhyatma Ramayan

Section 21.3 Geetawali Ramayan

That said, let us now resume our narration.

Section 21.1: Ram Charit Manas

(i) Sub-section 21.1.1: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 110 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-12 that precede it:

चौ०. तब रघुपति अनुसासन पाई । मातलि चलेउ चरन सिरु नाई ॥ १ ॥

आए देव सदा स्वारथी । बचन कहहिं जनु परमारथी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

taba raghupati anusāsana pā'ī. māṭali calē'u carana siru nā'ī. 1.

ā'e dēva sadā svārathī. bacana kahahim janu paramārathī. 2.

Then, after receiving Lord Raghupati's (Lord Ram's) permission, Matali (the charioteer of Indra who was sent by the latter to help Lord Ram in the battle against Ravana) bowed his head most reverentially before the Lord and departed from there (to return to heaven). (1)

Meanwhile, the gods, who are by nature very self-centered and concerned only with their own interests¹, came there (to pay their homage to Lord Ram). They spoke words as if they were very selfless and sought the good of others like those who are seekers of spiritualism². (2)

[Note—¹Here, the poet-saint Tulsidas is alluding to the universal truth of this world, that everyone, even the high gods, are driven by selfishness; every living being, from the lowly to the most high as symbolized by the gods, mind their own interest first and foremost, and then think of anything else.

There are verses in Ram Charit Manas that aver to this universal principle of creation. If the gods, who are supposed to be spiritually evolved and stand on a high moral ground, being the leaders of the world and its guide, can be selfish, then there is no wonder that ordinary creatures are self-centered and selfish. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 295 and Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes it; (ii) Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 12.

Even one's parents are not exempt from this universal principle which says that everyone in this world develops friendship with another person if it suits one's own self-interest, and no one thinks of the welfare of others if it does not fit in well with his own agenda—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 47.

²Only saintly persons would think in a selfless manner. One of the grand characteristic of saints is that they would not mind their own welfare if their suffering can help others in any way. This is clearly hinted in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 38; and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 41.

Besides saints, it is only Lord Ram, the merciful, kind and compassionate Lord God, who would think of the welfare of others no matter what happens—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 47.]

दीन बंधु दयाल रघुराया । देव कीन्हि देवन्ह पर दाया ॥ ३ ॥

बिस्व द्रोह रत यह खल कामी । निज अघ गयउ कुमारगामी ॥ ४ ॥ dīna bandhu dayāla raghurāyā. dēva kīnhi dēvanha para dāyā. 3.

bisva drōha rata yaha khala kāmī. nija agha gaya'u kumāragāmī. 4.

The assembled gods paid their obeisance to Lord Ram and prayed as follows: 'Oh Lord of the Raghus (Lord Ram) who are a friend of the distressed, the meek and the miserable, and a Lord who is most merciful, gracious, kind and compassionate by nature!

Oh Lord, you have been very kind and merciful upon us, the gods. (3)

This fellow (Ravana) was inimical for the whole world; he was always engaged in hostility with all; he was a wicked creature who enjoyed pursuing his worldly passions relentlessly, without qualms.

He has gone the way his sinful ways naturally led him to; he has perished due to his own sins; he is responsible for his own undoing.

[To wit, he has died a horrifying death by having his body dismembered, and falling to the ground covered in dust and blood, as a result of his sinful deeds. He who once ruled the world now lies dead on the ground in such a humiliating manner because of the evil deeds that he did in his life, evil deeds that brought this evil fate to him.] (4)

तुम्ह समरूप ब्रह्म अबिनासी । सदा एकरस सहज उदासी ॥ ५ ॥

अकल अगुन अज अनघ अनामय । अजित अमोघसक्ति करुनामय ॥ ६ ॥ tumha samarūpa brahma abināsī. sadā ēkarasa sahaja udāsī. 5.

akala aguna aja anagha anāmaya. ajita amōghasakti karunāmaya. 6.

[Lauding the grand virtues of Lord Ram, the gods continued—] Oh Lord! You have equanimity and treat all alike (samarūpa). You are Brahm¹, the Supreme Being, who is eternal and imperishable (brahma abināsī); who remains unchanging and uniform (sadā ēkarasa); and who is by his nature dispassionate and impartial (sahaja udāsī)². (5)

You (as Brahm) are one of your own kind, having no parallel (akala); you are without any attributes and their associated characteristics (aguna); you are without any birth (because you are eternal and immutable, having no end or beginning) (aja); you are faultless and free from any taints and blemishes associated with this gross world (anagha anāmaya); you are invincible (ajita); your astounding powers are unfailing (amōghasakti); and you are an embodiment of mercy, compassion, kindness and benevolence (karunāmaya). (6)

[Note—¹Lord Ram as Brahm personified: refer to Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 93; (ii) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 48; (iii) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 116.

²If Lord Ram has equanimity and treats all alike, if he is dispassionate and impartial, then the question is ‘why did he kill Ravana’? The answer is provided by the gods themselves in the previous verse where they said that Ravana attained this fate due to his own sinful deeds.

This fact, that one reaps the harvest like the seed one has sown, is reiterated elsewhere also in Ram Charit Manas—refer: Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 219.

To wit, Ravana died an ignominious death as a result of the sort of sinful life he had lived. No one is to be held responsible for it. Lord Ram, being the Lord of this world, has a duty to be just to all, and therefore it was obligatory for the Lord to punish Ravana for the way he and his cruel demons had been tormenting the world; the Lord was morally bound to punish Ravana for his evilness and transgression of the laws of Dharma, the laws that govern good conduct in this creation. For if the Lord had not punished Ravana for his wickedness then he would be doing injustice to other humble creatures, which would not be acceptable. So therefore, the Lord had no choice.]

मीन कमठ सूकर नरहरी । बामन परसुराम बपु धरी ॥ ७ ॥
जब जब नाथ सुरन्ह दुखु पायो । नाना तनु धरि तुझई नसायो ॥ ८ ॥ mīna kamaṭha sūkara naraharī. bāmana parasurāma bapu dharī. 7.

jaba jaba nātha suranha dukhu pāyō. nānā tanu dhari tumha'īm nasāyō. 8.

It was you, in your primary form as Lord Vishnu, who had assumed the form of a Fish¹, a Tortoise², a Boar³, Lord Narhari⁴ (Nrisingh or Narsingh, the half lion and half man incarnation of Lord Vishnu), Lord Vaaman⁵ (the legendary Dwarf), and sage Parashuram⁶ (the warrior sage with an axe as his trademark)*. (7)

Oh Lord! Whenever the gods were subjected to sufferings and felt distressed, it was you who had come to their help and eliminated the cause of their miseries by assuming various forms as occasioned by prevailing circumstances⁷. (8)

[Note--*These are the various incarnations of Lord Vishnu. Briefly, they are as follows:

¹Fish: Also known as 'Matsya'. This is the first of ten divine incarnations of Vishnu. In this form, the Lord is said to have saved Manu, the progenitor of mankind, and the Saptarishis (the seven mental sons of the creator Brahma) along with their wives during the dooms-day deluge. They were made to board a boat which was pulled by this Fish and saved from being drowned. They re-populated the world later on. It is a story identical to the Biblical story of the Noah's Arc.

²Tortoise: Also known as 'Kurma'. It is the second incarnation of Vishnu. The Lord had supported the legendary Mountain called Mandara which had started sinking during the churning of the ocean by the Gods and the Demons in search of Amrit, the elixir of eternal and life.

³Boar: Also known as 'Varaaha'. It is the third incarnation of Vishnu in which he killed the demon Hiranyaaksha and lifted the earth from the flood water where it had vanished. According to some versions, this demon had hidden the earth in the bowls of the ocean. This extrication and resurrection of the earth is a symbolic way of saying that the Lord saves the creation from being submerged in the vast ocean of sins and evil. An Upanishad preached by Lord Varaaha appears in the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition as its 30th Upanishad. The female aspect of Varaaha is known as Goddess Vaaraahi.

⁴Narsingh or Nrisingh: Lord Nrisingh or Narsingh is the half lion and half man incarnation of Lord Vishnu to slay the demon Hiranyakashipu who had been tormenting Prahalad, his son, because the latter worshipped and had devotion for Lord Vishnu whom the demon loathed. After having killed the demon, Nrisingh started roaming in the forests, striking terror in the hearts of all the creatures. It was then that Shiva, the universal Lord who has been honoured with the epithet of 'Mahadev' as he is the greatest and supreme God, had assumed the form of Sharav, the killer, and liberated Vishnu from the body of Nrisingh. [Refer Sharav Upanishad of Atharva Veda, verse no. 8.] Thus liberated, Vishnu had thanked him a lot (refer Sharav Upanishad of Atharva Veda, verse no. 19) and went to his divine abode called Vaikunth. So this ferocious form of Shiva known as Sharav was also called 'Rudra', the angry and ferocious form of the Lord. One can imagine the fight that might have raged between Nrisingh and Rudra, and obviously Rudra must have been more ferocious than Nrisingh in order to subdue the latter.

This 'half lion and half man' form of the Lord is a visible image that has a cosmic counterpart as the 'half man and half female' manifestation of the Lord that is known as 'Ardha-Narishwar'. This cosmic form of Brahm as Ardha-Narishwar has two components—the right half is depicted in iconography as being a male representing Shiva, the great God, the other half is female representing his divine Shakti known as Parvati or Uma. This Shakti represents the dynamic energy of Shiva. When this applies to Brahm, the male aspect refers to the Supreme Being himself while the female aspect applies to Maya which is the dynamic power that Brahm employed to initiate this magical creation. This depiction is basically envisioned to drive home the point that Brahm and Shakti are inseparable in the context of the creation of the world. This elementary method of reproduction is known as 'asexual reproduction' and is depicted by many asexual plants and animals even today. For instance, the one-celled amoeba reproduces itself by cleavage. On the other hand, if we were to regard Brahm in its purest form as the cosmic Consciousness, then Brahm would not need the other half of the Maya, and would only be one and universal entity which has no definite and describable form and shape, it has no characteristic features, attributes and qualities. This form of the sublime and most subtle Brahm is known as either the Hiranyagarbha or the Viraat Purush depending upon the level of subtlety and grossness which is assigned to it, the former being more subtle than the latter.

The 'lion' part is a metaphor for the grand qualities of unmatched authority, stupendous strength, physical prowess and complete and unchallenged sway over the entire domain of creation just like a lion has over the forest and its inhabitant wild animals. This term is symbolic of the inherent stupendous might of the supreme Brahm as the unquestioned and powerful Lord of this forest-like world inhabited by myriad varieties of living beings, called the Jivas, just like a dense forest infested by wild animals. Similarly, the 'man' part symbolizes the fact that Brahm is the most highly placed Lord much like a human being who represents the highest level in the ladder of evolution.

In other words, even as the lion is the unquestioned lord of the wilds and the man is of all the living beings, the supreme transcendental Brahm is the unquestioned Lord of all that exists with all its variations in this creation, whether in its primary form represented by the wild and primitive animals of the jungle or in its more evolved and developed form represented by the man, with all the other stages of creation included in between these two.

Lord Nrisingh is the fourth incarnation of the Supreme Being who had taken various forms to ward off and overcome evil forces in creation when they become ascendant and overcame the good and the righteous. The Lord did this to maintain order in the creation which is like his offspring.

So when one of his great devotees known as Prahalaad was being extremely tormented by his own father, the demon Hiranyakashipu, the Lord appeared as Nrisingh—or as a half lion and half man form—from the pillar to which the innocent lad was tied by the demon to prove to him the omnipresence and all-pervading form of the Supreme Being. Nrisingh is a personification of the grand virtues of dynamism, power, energy, valour and strength, and hence is worshipped by warriors and rulers in general. The Mantra of this Lord is believed to be very powerful and effective against enemies and opponents.

⁵Vaaman or the Dwarf: This is the fifth incarnation of Vishnu and an ancient one, for it took place in Sata Yuga, the 1st era of the 4-era cycle of creation and destruction according to Hindu scriptures. The Sata Yuga is also called the age of the Vedas as it was during this epoch the ancient scriptures known as the Vedas came into being and their hymns were primarily used to perform sacred fire sacrifices.

Hence, being an ancient incarnation of Lord Vishnu, Vaaman finds mention in the Vedas too—e.g. in Shatpath Brahman, 1/1/5; Taittiriya Brahman, 1/6/1; and Taittiriya Sanhita, 2/1/3.

When the great King Bali, the grandson of Prahalad for whom Vishnu had incarnated as Nrisingh, conquered the entire world and deprived Indra, the king of Gods who ruled over the heavens, Vishnu had taken the dwarfish form of a Brahmin mendicant to retrieve the heaven for Indra when he was requested by Aditi, the mother of Gods, to do so. He approached Bali, who was famous for his charities, as a 'Vaaman' or a dwarf, and begged him for ground sufficient enough to be covered by his three small steps. When the unsuspecting Bali agreed, Vaaman measured the entire earth and the nether world with one step, the heaven with the second step, and for the third step he measured Bali's own head symbolizing the crown of the kingdom of Bali.

To wit, when Bali found that he was cornered as he could not fulfil the word given to a Brahmin, because the land for the third step was not available, he offered himself to be tied and enslaved by Lord Vaaman as a punishment for unfulfilled vow. So Lord Vaaman gracefully put his third step on Bali's head, which though appeared to be a punishment but was actually a blessing in disguise.

From then onwards, Lord Vishnu is also called 'Trivikram'—one who conquered the three worlds in three steps.

However, the Lord was very pleased with Bali's principles of keeping one's words even at the cost of allowing himself to be a slave of the Lord. So even though Lord Vaaman put his leg on Bali's head, thereby pushing him into the nether world, yet the Lord is so kind and gracious that he saw the injustice that was done to Bali, a magnanimous and righteous King who had stood firm in his vow of making charity, and never rescinded on his commitment inspite of losing his crown and self-respect.

So therefore, the Lord made him the king of the nether world, and himself took up the job of protecting him there as his gate-keeper. This incarnation of Lord Vishnu is his fifth and followed the Nrisingh form which was the fourth. The idea behind this Vaaman incarnation is that even the most humble looking man, represented by the diminutive Vaaman in this story, can indeed have the stupendous power of the Spirit that even the most powerful gods and kings lack.

An episode is narrated in Tulsidas' epic 'Ram Charit Manas' where Jamvant, the old bear chief, refers to this incarnation of Lord Vaaman and says that at that time he (Jamvant) was young and in his youthful days, and that he had performed seven rounds (clockwise circumambulations) of the colossus form of Lord Vaaman to pay his homage to the latter. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 29 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.

⁶Parashuram: This is the sixth incarnation of Vishnu. Parashuram was the youngest of the five sons of sage Jamdaagni and his wife Renuka. He had subdued the haughty Kshatriya race or the warrior race led by king Kaartavirya who had become tyrannical and were oppressing others. The story goes that once Jamdagni doubted the infidelity of his wife Renuka and therefore asked his sons to behead her. The four sons refused and were cursed by him, but Parashuram did as told. The father was pleased and asked Parashuram to request for a boon, upon which the latter requested that his mother be revived, his brothers be pardoned, and Jamdagni should discard his angry temperament. The father agreed to all.

Jamdagni was killed by Shursena, the son of Kaartavirya-Arjuna, because the sage had refused to hand over the celestial cow known as Kapila to him. Extremely peeved by the Kshatriya race to which this king belonged, Parashuram vowed to eliminate the entire race from the surface of the earth as a revenge for the killing of his father. This was the reason why Parashuram had fought and killed thousands of Kshatriya to avenge the killing of his father by Kaartavirya-Arjuna.

⁷Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 121 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it.]

यह खल मलिन सदा सुरद्रोही । काम लोभ मद रत अति कोही ॥ ९ ॥ अधम सिरोमनि तव पद पावा । यह हमरें मन बिसमय आवा ॥ १० ॥

yaha khala malina sadā suradrōhī. kāma lōbha mada rata ati kōhī. 9.
adhama sirōmani tava pada pāvā. yaha hamarēṁ mana bisamaya āvā. 10.

This fellow (i.e. Ravana) was very wicked and evil, was always hostile to the gods, was very passionate and lustful, was highly greedy and rapacious, was engrossed in pursuit of his sensual pleasures, and was haughty, arrogant and angry by nature. (9)

He was an epitome of sins, vices and evil, yet he attained an exalted stature by attaining salvation and emancipation at the time of his death—this singular achievement by him has left us amazed and full of wonderment¹. (10)

[Note—¹To wit, we are astonished that such a sinful creature as Ravana seemed to be would be so fortunate and blessed that he would attain an abode so near to your holy feet that made him achieve an honourable and exalted stature that is equivalent to your own holy state of existence. Forsooth, this has perplexed us and left us wondering, as to how it came about, and how lucky and blessed Ravana indeed was.

This single development has shown us without doubt how exceptionally benevolent, forgiving, kind, gracious, magnanimous and compassionate you really are, that you would forgive Ravana for all his misdemeanours and mischief, and instead grant his soul the rare privilege of attaining deliverance, salvation and emancipation. It's a rare achievement for Ravana; it's an objective for which the greatest of sages, ascetics and hermits undertake the severest of spiritual practices, but rarely succeed in achieving. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103; and (ii) Doha no. 104 along with Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede it.]

हम देवता परम अधिकारी । स्वार्थ रत प्रभु भगति बिसारी ॥ ११ ॥

भव प्रबाहँ संतत हम परे । अब प्रभु पाहि सरन अनुसरे ॥ १२ ॥ hama dēvatā parama adhikārī. svāratha rata prabhu bhagati bisārī. 11.

bhava prabāhaṁ santata hama parē. aba prabhu pāhi sarana anusarē. 12.

We gods, though entitled to attain your holy abode and to be closest to you (i.e. attain deliverance, emancipation and salvation by reaching higher echelons of spiritual attainment rather than being contented with being a ‘god’), as we are deemed to superior to and more able than all others in this creation, yet it is so unfortunate a paradox that (due to the influence of Maya, or delusions) we miss this opportunity, as we are driven more by self-interests and less by spiritual objectives, which in its turn has led us astray by distracting us so much that we have neglected having full and exemplary level of devotion for your holy Self¹. (11)

Instead of attaining beatitude and eternal bliss, we remain trapped in the flow of the world by remaining engrossed in worldly affairs as its Regulatory Authorities.

Oh Lord! We seek the shelter of your holy feet and request you to grant us your grace so that we can be protected from falling in the trap of delusions like ordinary creatures do.², (12)

[Note—¹This goes to the credit of the gods that at least they acknowledged their shortcomings. From the perspective of the Upanishads, these gods are manifestations of the various aspects of creation and the forces that govern its functioning. From the macrocosmic point of view, these gods represent various aspects or facets of Nature and the forces that regulate their functioning in a proper and systematic way, while from the microcosmic perspective they represent the various aspects of an individual creature’s nature.

For instance, the Sun God is responsible for giving light and energy to this world at the macro level, and the same God is responsible for enabling a creature to see things as he is the patron god of sight at the individual’s level, the micro level of creation.

Another example is that of Indra. From the macrocosmic perspective, Indra is the King of heaven and of the gods, and he is a personified form of an Authority who drives all the cosmic forces that control the functioning of the world. However, from the microcosmic perspective, Indra derives his name from the word “indri”, meaning the sense organs of a living being which helps the individual to interact with the world. Therefore, Indra in the latter case would be a deity that controls all the senses and their respective organs in a living being’s body, and would reflect their natural habits and characters.

The ultimate spiritual goal of all living beings is to attain deliverance, emancipation and salvation for their souls, which entitles a spiritual seeker to attain eternal peace, bliss, rest, beatitude and felicity. This state of existence is not the way gods live in heaven; the gods are busy in enjoying their privileges and guarding their realms of influence. If they fear someone is trying to overstep their domain, they get upset.

In short, the gods don’t enjoy spiritual bliss and peace though they live in heaven, in the way they could have done or are expected to do, by the virtue of being close to Divinity represented by Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being.

So in a way they are less privileged than Ravana who had attained deliverance, emancipation and salvation by having his soul merge with the Supreme Soul of this creation personified as Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.

²The Gods prayed to Lord Ram that since they are simply obeying the Lord's command, which is to carry out their respective duties of regulating the different functions and aspects of this vast and varied creation, so they be excused if they make some mistakes and transgressions here and there during the course of their lives. The Lord should forgive them, and bless them with his grace and mercy.]

दो०. करि बिनती सुर सिद्ध सब रहे जहँ तहँ कर जोरि ।
अति सप्रेम तन पुलकि बिधि अस्तुति करत बहोरि ॥ ११० ॥
dōhā.

kari binatī sura sid'dha saba rahē jahaṁ tahaṁ kara jōri.
ati saprēma tana pulaki bidhi astuti karata bahōri. 110.

After the Gods and the Siddhas (mystics; the attained ones) had thus offered their prayers to Lord Ram, they stood aside where they were, each of them joining his palms as a gesture of respect and reverence for Lord Ram.

Then the creator Brahma came forward to offer his obeisance to Lord Ram by praying to him with a lot of affection and a thrilled body. (Doha no. 110)

(ii) Sub-section 21.1.2: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 112 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it:

After the Gods and the creator Brahma had said their respective prayers honouring Lord Ram and paying their obeisance to him, the late king Dasrath, the worldly father of Lord Ram and the erstwhile king of Ayodhya, who had assumed a spirit form after his death, came to the battle-field to bless Lord Ram in the role of the latter being Dasrath's son, as well as to seek the Lord's blessings and grace for being the Supreme Being himself personified.

चौ०. तेहि अवसर दसरथ तहँ आए । तनय बिलोकि नयन जल छाए ॥ १ ॥
अनुज सहित प्रभु बंदन कीन्हा । आसिरबाद पिताँ तब दीन्हा ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

tēhi avasara dasaratha tahaṁ ā'ē. tanaya bilōki nayana jala chā'ē. 1.
anuja sahita prabhu bandana kīnhā. āsirabāda pitāṁ taba dīnhā. 2.

On that occasion, Dasrath (the erstwhile king of Ayodhya and Lord Ram's worldly father, who was now in a spirit form after his death), came there (at Lord Ram's camp on the fringes of the battle-field of Lanka).

When he beheld his son, his eyes were filled with tears (of excess of joy and delight, of overflowing love and affection)¹. (1)

Lord Ram, together with his younger brother (Laxman) and wife (Sita), paid their obeisance to their father, at which the latter blessed the three of them². (2)

[Note—¹It was a natural emotional reaction of a loving father to see his beloved son emerging victorious in a war, against all odds. At the time of his death, Dasrath had died longing to see Lord Ram after he left the city of Ayodhya for the forest; Dasrath had wailed and lamented most gravely, feeling guilty that he had been the of causing so much suffering to Lord Ram, his wife Sita, and his brother Laxman, by compelling them to go to the forest for 14 long years# just to honour a word that the king had given to his queen Kaikeyi some long time ago, and which she exploited for her self-interest, which was to make her own son Bharat the heir apparent and the regent of Ayodhya*, instead of Lord Ram, the eldest of the four brothers, who had the natural right to get the crown and ascend the throne of the kingdom.

{#Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 33; Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 34; Doha no. 38 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it; Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 153—to Doha no. 155.

*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 29.}

Dasrath was overwhelmed with delight and love. He had tears of joy that also indicated emotions of affection that overflowed in his heart.

²When late king Dasrath's spirit saw Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman bowing before it and paying their obeisance to their late father, it, i.e. the 'spirit of Dasrath', blessed them all.]

तात सकल तव पुन्य प्रभाऊ । जीत्यों अजय निसाचर राऊ ॥ ३ ॥

सुनि सुत बचन प्रीति अति बाढ़ी । नयन सलिल रोमावलि ठाढ़ी ॥ ४ ॥ tāta sakala tava pun'ya prabhā'ū. jītyōm ajaya nisācara rā'ū. 3.

sunī suta bacana prīti atī bāṛhī. nayana salila rōmāvali ṭhāṛhī. 4.

Lord Ram said to Dasrath, 'My dear father (tāta)! It is due to the good rewards accruing to you for the auspicious deeds that you had done in life that I, your son, have been blessed to be able to vanquish the king of the demon race who was otherwise invincible and difficult to overcome¹.' (3)

Hearing such polite and gracious words of his son (Lord Ram), words that showed no trace of anger or regret at all that had happened, Dasrath was overwhelmed with affections; his love and adoration for the Lord increased manifold times so much so that tears began flowing from his eyes and his body became thrilled². (4)

[Note—¹This is a polite and modest way of Lord Ram for honoring Dasrath. The Lord gives credit to his father's good deeds and their accrued rewards that stood in good stead for him during the war. The gracious Lord does not take any credit himself for the victory over Ravana and the powerful demon army, but owes the victory to his father's blessings like a good and obedient son. Lord Ram's courteousness is exemplary here. He shows no rancour and ill-will towards his father for sending him to the forest for 14 years, for the Lord knew that Dasrath was bound by his words of honour that he had given to Kaikeyi, that he had lamented and repented for those words but couldn't help, and that he had done his best to stop the Lord from going to the forest even till the last moment, fainting repeatedly out of grief and shock.

{Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 76—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 78; (ii) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 79; (iii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 81—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 82.}

²This shows that Dasrath's "spirit" had assumed a visible form when it appeared before the Lord on the battle-field. Dasrath appeared alongside other gods, and he had a divine form like these gods. It is because at the time of his death, Dasrath had gone to heaven where the gods live—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 155.

He had watched the proceedings alongside the gods, and when they came to pray to Lord Ram he too accompanied them.]

रघुपति प्रथम प्रेम अनुमाना । चितइ पितहि दीन्हेउ दृढ़ ग्याना ॥ ५ ॥
ताते उमा मोच्छ नहिं पायो । दसरथ भेद भगति मन लायो ॥ ६ ॥
सगुनोपासक मोच्छ न लेहीं । तिन्ह कहूँ राम भगति निज देहीं ॥ ७ ॥
बार बार करि प्रभुहि प्रनामा । दसरथ हरषि गए सुरधामा ॥ ८ ॥ raghupati prathama prēma anumānā. cita'i pitahi dīnhē'u dṛṛha gyānā. 5.

tātē umā mōccha nahim pāyō. dasaratha bhēda bhagati mana lāyō. 6.
sagunōpāsaka mōccha na lēhīm. tinha kahuṁ rāma bhagati nija dēhīm. 7.
bāra bāra kari prabhuhi pranāmā. dasaratha haraṣi ga'ē suradhāmā. 8.

Lord Raghupati (i.e. Lord Ram) remembered his father's extreme level of love for him (and that it was due to this outstanding love that Dasrath had died in grief of separation when the Lord had left for the forest). He glanced at his father Dasrath very affectionately and graced the latter with sound 'Gyan (gyānā)'¹. (5)

[Lord Shiva, who was narrating this Story to goddess Uma, his divine consort, told her—] Uma, Dasrath did not attain Moksha (deliverance, emancipation and salvation; eternal beatitude and felicity, bliss and peace of the soul) because though he had unquestioned devotion for Lord Ram and loved him, it was because he treated the latter as 'his son' rather than as a 'personified form of the Supreme Being'. Dasrath had a deluded or a distorted view of devotion for Lord Ram, which prevented him from attaining final deliverance and beatitude for his soul².

[By providing 'Gyan', Lord Ram removed this delusion in the mind of Dasrath, entitling him to attain final peace for his soul. For a truly realized soul, there is no such thing as having 'tears in eyes and body being thrilled' for any cause whatsoever. Since Dasrath showed these signs, he was not enlightened enough before Lord Ram gave him the necessary wisdom.] (6)

Verily, those who worship the Lord in his visible form (sagunōpāsaka) find bliss in this form of devotion for the Lord, and therefore they have no desire to attain Moksha (mōccha na lēhīm; i.e. deliverance, emancipation and salvation; beatitude and felicity; merger of the individual's soul with the cosmic Supreme Soul).

To such devotees who prefer to worship and have devotion for the visible and known form of the Supreme Being, the Lord grants such devotees their wish by gracing them with the boon of having devotion for his visible form (rather than his cosmic invisible form)³. (7)

[Since Dasrath preferred to have devotion for the visible form of the Supreme Being, rather than for the Lord's cosmic and invisible form known as Brahm, the cosmic transcendental Consciousness that is formless and without attributes, Lord Ram fulfilled his father's wish by granting him an abode in the heaven where Lord Vishnu, the primary form of Lord Ram, lives.]

Dasrath repeatedly bowed his head before the Lord and cheerfully went to the heaven where exalted Gods live (dasaratha haraṣi ga'e suradhāmā).

[More specifically, Dasrath went to Vaikuntha, the abode of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being. It is because Lord Ram himself would go back to Vaikuntha after his obligations in this world were fulfilled. There, Dasrath hoped to meet his 'son' Lord Ram once again when the Lord resumes his primary form as Lord Vishnu. In this form, Dasrath wished to shower his love upon Lord Ram by way of worshipping and having devotion for Lord Vishnu.]⁴ (8)

[Note—¹To wit, Lord Ram granted Dasrath spiritual knowledge that made the latter understand who the Lord was, that no one is anybody's son or father, that all such relationships are limited to the gross mortal world, that the soul has no relations, that love and affections, grief and joy etc. are matters of mortal world and not of the spiritual world, that every creature suffers or enjoys because of his own deeds, that dispassion and renunciation are the best virtues for a wise, enlightened and self-realised person. And therefore, Dasrath ought not to regret at all.

Lord Ram further enlightened Dasrath that life in heaven is not the final goal or destination of the soul; at best it may be a sort of a rest-house where the soul tarries for a while before moving ahead on its journey. So then what should be the goal that Dasrath should aim at? It is attainment of emancipation and salvation by merging the individual's soul with the Supreme Soul of creation known as the Parmatma, a goal that grants eternal rest, peace, bliss, beatitude and felicity to the living being.

This final destination of the soul is called 'Moksha'—it is a destination for eternal rest, from where there is no return to the cycle of birth and death with its attendant miseries in this mundane gross world.

²To wit, Dasrath's devotion and love for Lord Ram was based on an erroneous premise from the perspective of spiritualism and metaphysics. Dasrath was deluded; he thought that Lord Ram was his 'son', and he loved and adored and died in grief of his 'son'. Had he been wise and enlightened as he should have been, he would have remained dispassionate towards and detached from the physical world, and would rather have devoted his time and efforts in meditating upon the divine form of Lord Ram, worshipping him and paying his homage to the Lord, feeling privileged to have the Supreme Being living so close to him. Dasrath would not have died weeping and wailing for his 'son Ram' because he would have understood that Lord Ram is not his ‘son’ but the ‘Supreme Being in the form of Ram’, that the Lord has come down to honour the wishes of the gods and mother earth to eliminate the evil demons, and therefore there was no reasonable cause to lament and weep when the Lord went to the forest as part of his divine mission.

This is what is meant by saying that Dasrath had a deluded or a distorted view of devotion for Lord Ram, which prevented him from attaining final deliverance of his soul; it prevented him from attaining emancipation, salvation, beatitude and eternity for his soul, and made him live in heaven instead.

³To wit, the bliss, beatitude and felicity that is attained by the soul on attaining emancipation and salvation when the individual’s soul merges and becomes one with the cosmic form of the Soul, the Supreme Soul or the Parmatma, which is known as attaining ‘Moksha of the soul’, because then the soul finds eternal peace and bliss as it does not have to return to the cycle of birth and death in this gross world, does not seem attractive to those who derive happiness and joy in worshipping the Lord’s physical and visible form. So the Lord too prefers not to insist in giving them knowledge of the form of devotion that relates to the invisible form of the Lord.

There are two types of devotees of Lord God—one who is called ‘Saguna Bhakta’, i.e. a devotee who worships the form of the Lord that has a describable and verifiable physical form, a form that is visible and has certain attributes; the other is the ‘Nirguna Bhakta’, i.e. a devotee who worships the cosmic form of the Lord that is invisible, all-pervading and without specific attributes.

The cosmic form of the Lord God is known as Brahm; it is nothing but pure cosmic Consciousness that has a universal existence; this is ‘Nirguna Brahm’. When the same cosmic Consciousness assumes a visible and known form at the micro level of creation, it is known as ‘Saguna Brahm’.

⁴Dasrath fell into the latter category, one who worshipped the Saguna form of Brahm as Lord Ram. So therefore, though Lord Ram first graced Dasrath with knowledge pertaining to Moksha of his soul, known as granting of ‘Gyan’, or granting of ‘truthful knowledge; gnosis’, Dasrath did not wish to have it. Hence, in deference to his father’s wishes, the Lord sent him to his own abode in the heaven, known as ‘Vaikuntha’, the abode of Lord Vishnu. There, Dasrath would have ample opportunity to fulfill his desire to shower abundance of love and affection on Lord Ram, to make up for its lack in this gross physical world because his desires were cut short by the fiat of fate and the cruel whip of destiny that brought about separation of Dasrath from his beloved son Lord Ram when the latter went to the forest. Dasrath wished that in the guise of loving his son Lord Ram, he would be actually worshipping and paying his obeisance to Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being and the Lord of the world.

This opportunity was more appealing to Dasrath than attaining Moksha.]

दो०. अनुज जानकी सहित प्रभु कुसल कोसलाधीस ।

सोभा देखि हरषि मन अस्तुति कर सुर ईस ॥ ११२ ॥

dōhā.

anuja jānakī sahita prabhu kusala kōsalādhīsa.

sōbhā dēkhi haraṣi mana astuti kara sura īsa. 112.

Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal (Ayodhya), looked adorable alongside his younger brother Laxman and wife Janki (Sita).

When the Lord (or the king) of the gods, i.e. Indra, observed that the three were safe and happy, he felt exhilarated in his heart and mind; lauding their charming forms and extolling Lord Ram's virtues and glories, he offered his prayers to the Lord. (Doha no. 112)

(iii) Sub-section 21.1.3: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 113—to Doha no. 114:

दो०. अब करि कृपा बिलोकि मोहि आयसु देहु कृपाल । काह करौं सुनि प्रिय बचन बोले दीनदयाल ॥ ११३ ॥
dōhā.

aba kari krpā bilōki mōhi āyasu dēhu krpāla.
kāha karaum suni priya bacana bōlē dīnadayāla. 113.

After saying his prayers, Indra said to Lord Ram: 'Lord, please glance at me gracefully for once, and then, oh merciful Lord, tell me what I should do.'

Hearing these pleasing words of Indra, the Lord, who is benevolent and compassionate towards those who are meek and miserable, said --- (Doha no. 113)

चौ०. सुनु सुरपति कपि भालु हमारे । परे भूमि निसिचरन्हि जे मारे ॥ १ ॥
मम हित लागि तजे इन्ह प्राणा । सकल जिआउ सुरेस सुजाना ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

sunu surapati kapi bhālu hamārē. parē bhūmi nisicaranhi jē mārē. 1.
mama hita lāgi tajē inha prānā. sakala ji'ā'u surēsa sujānā. 2.

Lord Ram requested Indra, the king of gods, as follows: 'Listen oh king of gods (sunu surapati)! Our monkey and bear warriors, who were killed by the demons, are lying on the ground in the battle-field. (1)

They had laid down their lives for my sake. So I request you, the able and wise king of gods (surēsa sujānā)¹, to make them come back to life once again.² (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram reminded Indra that he must remember that these monkeys and bears were not ordinary creatures, but off-springs of the gods, for the gods had decided to come down to earth and assume the forms of monkeys and bears to help Lord Vishnu when he manifests himself as Lord Ram in order to eliminate the cruel demons and their king Ravana on the request of these same gods as well as mother earth. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.}

So therefore, it was Indra's moral obligation to revive these monkeys and bears, as they had laid down their lives actually for the sake of the gods and mother earth, as much as it was of Lord Ram's because it was he who had been instrumental in leading the campaign of eliminating the demons by bringing these monkeys and bears to the battle-field of Lanka to give effect to the fulfillment of the wishes of the gods and mother earth.

²Indra, being the Lord of heaven and the gods, had access to Amrit, the elixir of life. He is also the 'god who controls rains'. Hence, what Lord Ram wanted Indra to do, and which Indra indeed did, was to rain Amrit on the battle-field so that the monkeys and bears, who lay as if dead on the ground, could be revived.

Indra had prayed to Lord Ram and asked him if he could do anything for the latter, at which the Lord asked him shower a rain of Amrit so that those warriors who had laid down their lives for his cause can be revived.

So what happened? Indra rained down Amrit from the sky, and all the wounded and dead monkeys and bears got up instantly as if nothing had happened to them. The result was that Lord Ram's army had the same number of monkeys and bears at the end of the war as it had at the start, which in turn means that when this colossus army returned to its home place in Kishkindha, no one amongst their kith and kin had any cause to grieve and lament at losing their dear ones in any war. The army returned victorious from a campaign that would make them legendary and famous in history, with the crown of gallantry and valour and courage and daring adorning their proud heads. Their marvelous and glorious exploits during the war of Lanka became fabled and legendary for their rare achievements; the individual warriors became objects of great adulation and honour throughout the kingdom of Kishkindha; they were lauded and applauded wherever they went; their families became singularly proud of them and did not tire asking them to recount the awe-inspiring events that unfolded in that far-away land across the ocean.

To wit, Lord Ram, the Lord who is graceful, compassionate, merciful and kind, as well as very prudent and wise, did not give anyone in Kishkindha a chance to complain and regret that one of their kith and kin had lost his life for the Lord in a war that did not concern them directly, for every single monkey and bear, who had left Kishkindha to join the army of Lord Ram, returned safe and sound to his homeland.

सुनु खगेस प्रभु कै यह बानी । अति अगाध जानहिं मुनि ग्यानी ॥ ३ ॥

प्रभु सक त्रिभुअन मारि जिआई । केवल सक्रहि दीन्हि बड़ाई ॥ ४ ॥

sunu khagēsa prabhu kai yaha bānī. atī agādha jānahim muni gyānī. 3.
prabhu saka tribhu'ana māri ji'āī. kēvala sakrahi dīnhi barāī. 4.

[The saintly crow Kaagbhusund, who was one of the other chief narrators of this wonderful Story of 'Ram Charit Manas' besides Lord Shiva, told his listener Garud, the celestial Eagle and the king of birds as well as the mount of Lord Vishnu, who had come to the hermitage of the saint to hear this Story being told¹, as follows:-]

'Listen oh king of birds (sunu khagēsa)! These words of Lord Ram (asking Indra to revive the fallen monkeys and bears) were profoundly mysterious and intriguing.

Their true import and full of meaning is known only to enlightened and wise sages².
(3)

Lord Ram has the authority and the ability to make anyone live after he has died³, but he only wished to give some credit and honour to Indra (known also as ‘Sakra’) by asking him to revive the fallen monkeys and bears.’ (4)

[Note—¹The whole conversation betwixt Kaagbhusund and Garud form the subject matter of the second half of the seventh Canto of Ram Charit Manas, known as Uttar Kand. It is narrated in Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 63—to Doha no. 125.

²Why is Lord Ram’s request to Indra to revive the monkeys and bears so mysterious and intriguing that only a few selected sages would know its true meaning?

The answer is given by Kaagbhusund himself in the very next verse no. 4.

Ordinary people think that Lord Ram was a human being, and so he lacked the mystical ability needed to revive those who were dead, and so he asked Indra to do it for him. But wise sages understand why the Lord did not do it himself—it was because Lord Ram wished to play his role as a human being to perfection; he did not want raise eyebrows by doing something that can be called a miracle, especially openly when everyone was watching.

Besides this factor, Lord Ram wished to give Indra his due share of the glory, to thank him for sending his own chariot to help the Lord in the war against Ravana, and to honour Indra’s authority as the king of gods. By reviving the monkeys and bears Indra would be remembered in history for this noble deed, and his act would make him share the joy of helping Lord Vishnu to reinstate all those who had sacrificed their lives for a greater and nobler cause of the gods and mother earth, which was the elimination of the cruel demons and restoring the law of Dharma in this world.

Being all-able Lord of the world, it was a noble gesture for Lord Ram to let Indra get the credit of reviving the fallen heroes of this epic war; those who are great and exalted Lords do not hesitate to give credit to those who are junior or subordinate to them for doing some good deed that can grant the latter some sort of recognition and satisfaction of being helpful to their Lord.

Hence, Lord Ram wished to give Indra some sort of satisfaction of being helpful to him and contributing to fulfillment of the Lord’s wish by reviving the monkeys and bears, for the Lord himself had done a lot for the sake of the gods and mother earth, and Indra, being the king of gods, owed so much to Lord Ram.

³Lord Ram has himself reiterated this ability of his on two occasions. The first was when he asked Jatau, the vulture who had laid down his life trying to save Sita, that if he so wished, the Lord can grant him eternal life—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 31.

The second occasion was when he asked Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv and the king of Kishkindha, that if he wished to live then the Lord can grant him an eternal life—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 10.]

सुधा बरषि कपि भालु जिआए । हरषि उठे सब प्रभु पहि आए ॥ ५ ॥

सुधाबृष्टि भै दुहु दल ऊपर । जिए भालु कपि नहिं रजनीचर ॥ ६ ॥
 रामाकार भए तिन्ह के मन । मुक्त भए छूटे भव बंधन ॥ ७ ॥
 सुर अंसिक सब कपि अरु रीछा । जिए सकल रघुपति कीं ईछा ॥ ८ ॥ sudhā baraṣi kapi bhālu ji'ā'ē. haraṣi uṭhē saba prabhu pahim ā'ē. 5.

 sudhābrṣṭi bhai duhu dala ūpara. ji'ē bhālu kapi nahim rajanīcara. 6.
 rāmākāra bha'ē tinha kē mana. mukta bha'ē chūṭē bhava bandhana. 7.
 sura ansika saba kapi aru rīchā. ji'ē sakala raghupati kīm īchā. 8.

Indra rained down Amrit (the ambrosia of life) on the battle-field, thereby bringing to life the monkeys and bears. They got up instantly and cheered. Then all of them came to where Lord Ram was. (5)

The Amrit was showered all over the battle-field, over both the warring armies, but only the bears and monkeys were revived, and not the demons. (6)

The reason why the demons could not be revived was that their mind and heart had been so focused on Lord Ram (because they thought of nothing but the Lord all through the war) that they lost awareness of everything else, becoming exclusively focused on the Lord¹.

The spiritual benefit that naturally accrued to them as a result of this involuntary focusing of their mind and heart on Lord Ram was that they souls attained the fruit of deliverance from this world; they became entitled to obtain emancipation and salvation. Hence, all their worldly ties that would have otherwise attached their souls to this mortal world were snapped, as a result of which they found liberation from this world and attained eternal beatitude and felicity; they attained Mukti². (7)

The monkeys and bears were born from fractions of different gods, and so they could be allowed to die (as it would bereave the gods). Therefore, Lord Ram so wished that they be revived and brought back to life³. (8)

[Note—¹The demons on the one hand, and the monkeys and the bears on the other hand, had very opposite thoughts in their minds. While the monkeys and bears were always thinking and talking about their chief enemy Ravana, the demons on the other hand were thinking and talking of Lord Ram. This was very important from the perspective of spiritualism—because constant remembrance of Lord Ram was tantamount to doing contemplation and meditation on the Lord's divine form and name, which in its turn rewarded the demons with the benefit of deliverance of their souls. Hence, the fallen demon warriors had become entitled to attain emancipation and salvation by constantly thinking about Lord Ram because the Lord was a personified form of the Supreme Being.

We ought to note here that this is also the chief reason that Ravana too attained deliverance at the time of his death by having his soul merge with the Supreme Soul represented by Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.

On the other hand, the monkeys and bears missed this chance as they had focused their attention on their enemy Ravana. But there is a marvelous spin to this development—and it is this: since Ravana himself was so blessed and honoured that his soul was accepted by Lord Ram himself and given an abode right where the Lord's own Soul was, some sort of reward became due to these poor monkeys and bears too for being focused on someone, in this case Ravana, whom Lord Ram had himself given such high honour.

The second reason for the monkeys and bears becoming entitled to some kind of reward was that they had laid down their lives serving Lord Ram and the noble cause for which this war was fought. Hence, Lord Ram rewarded them with a new life; the Lord entitled them to have glory and fame for winning a great war.

Thirdly, the Lord also did not want them to die because that would mean bereaving countless families in Kishkindha, something the merciful Lord couldn't bear to happen.

²It has been recorded earlier that Lord Ram had ensured that the demon commanders who came face to face with him were provided with the spiritual reward of attaining his heavenly abode—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 45. It is clearly explained here “why Lord Ram granted them this exalted stature”: it is because these demons remembered the Lord and his holy name ‘Ram’ constantly, albeit not as a friend or a revered deity but as someone hostile to them, but nevertheless they did it, and this entitled them to receive its natural reward.

So when it came to deciding the fate of the fallen demon warriors in the battle-field, Lord Ram thought if he had been so gracious and kind as to grant an abode in heaven to the demon commanders, then he ought to extend this privilege to the ordinary demon soldiers too as they were merely following their duty of obeying their commanders, and had no personal animosity with the Lord. Not sending them to heaven would be tantamount to doing injustice to these poor fellows. Since Lord Ram was very mindful of his obligations to one and all, he decided that these ordinary demon warriors would go to his abode as well.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.

This is another primary reason why Lord Ram wished that the monkeys and bears be brought back to life, besides the reasons cited herein above.]

राम सरिस को दीन हितकारी । कीन्हे मुकुत निसाचर झारी ॥ ९ ॥

खल मल धाम काम रत रावन । गति पाई जो मुनिबर पाव न ॥ १० ॥ rāma sarisa kō dīna hitakārī. kīnhē mukuta nisācara jhārī. 9.

khala mala dhāma kāma rata rāvana. gati pā'ī jō munibara pāva na. 10.

Verily indeed, for sooth and without any gainsay, who is so kind, gracious, benevolent and mindful of the welfare of those who are humble and lowly as Lord Ram is, for the Lord provided ‘Mukti’, i.e. liberation from sufferings that are part of life in this mortal gross world and deliverance from the cycle of transmigration, to even the ordinary demons, not one or two or more selected ones from amongst the demon hordes, but all of them en masse! (9)

Not to mention the meek and humble ordinary demon warriors, the most kind and gracious Lord Ram took care of even the vilest of them, the demon king Ravana who was very wicked, passionate and lustful, and epitomized all that can be categorized as being evil, vile and sins combined, by granting his soul access to a destination which even great sages, hermits and ascetics find it difficult to attain¹. (10)

[Note—¹Ravana was the leader and the king of the demons, and from the perspective of what cruelty he inflicted on the creatures of this world and the terror he unleashed on it, he can be called the ‘king of all that is categorized as sin, vile and evil’. But in spite of all these transgressions of the Law of Dharma, Lord Ram was so merciful as to forgive him and accept his soul within his own Self, which in meaningful terms translated into granting Ravana’s soul the rare privilege of achieving its merger with the cosmic supreme Soul of creation represented by Lord Ram himself, thereby providing a superior destination to Ravana befitting his stature as the ‘king of the demons’. This merger of Ravana’s soul with the cosmic Soul represented by Lord Ram ended forever the cycle of transmigration for him, and provided him with the spiritual reward of emancipation and salvation that granted him eternal beatitude and felicity and bliss. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.}

This privilege is rare even for the greatest of sages, hermits and ascetics to attain, and this is what they all aim for.]

दो०. सुमन बरषि सब सुर चले चढ़ि चढ़ि रुचिर बिमान ।
देखि सुअवसर प्रभु पहिं आयउ संभु सुजान ॥ ११४ (क) ॥
परम प्रीति कर जोरि जुग नलिन नयन भरि बारि । पुलकित तन गदगद गिराँ बिनय करत त्रिपुरारि ॥ ११४ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

sumana baraṣi saba sura calē caḍhi caḍhi rucira bimāna.
dēkhi su'avasara prabhu pahim āya'u sambhu sujāna. 114 (a). parama prīti kara jōri juga nalina nayana bhari bāri.
pulakita tana gadagada girāṁ binaya karata tripurāri. 114 (b).

The assembled gods were elated and thrilled; they showered flowers upon the Lord from the sky. Then mounted their respective vehicles and went their way.

After the gods had gone their way, the wise and erudite Lord Shiva found that it was a good opportunity to approach Lord Ram; so Shiva came near the Lord (to offer his prayers to him)¹. (Doha no. 144-a)

He was overwhelmed with excess of affection for Lord Ram. Joining the palms of his hands, with tears filling his lotus-like eyes, body thrilled and the voice choked with emotions, Lord Tripurari (Shiva)² offered his obeisance and prayers to Lord Ram. (Doha no. 144-b)

[Note—¹Lord Shiva loved and adored Lord Ram and held the latter very dear to his heart; Shiva worshipped Lord Ram, revered him, treated the latter as his chosen deity, and used Lord Ram’s holy name ‘Ram’ as a Mantra (a divine spiritual formula) for the purpose of chanting and doing meditation with. In fact, the whole Story of ‘Ram Charit Manas’ which we are currently reading, was conceived by Lord Shiva in his Mana (heart and mind) during mediation and contemplation. There is no other God who reveres Lord Ram more and knows the secrets of the Lord as Shiva does.

{Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 3, 8 that precede Doha no. 19; (ii) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 29; (iii) Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 35; (iv) Doha no. 46 and Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes it; (v) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 108.}

So, Lord Shiva wished to approach his beloved Lord Ram when the crowd of gods had gone away, so that he can keep his emotions secret from them all. Lord Shiva is a patron deity of ascetics; he did not wish to advertise his adoration and worship of Lord Ram, as he believed in keeping such relationships as that exist betwixt a devotee and his revered Lord something personal and free from prying eyes of the world, as broadcasting such private emotions would undermine their depth and sincerity. A true devotee does not seek praise or adulation for his spiritual efforts; he wishes to keep it to himself, a private affair.

We have read that the gods have been called ‘selfish’—apropos: Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 110. So therefore, if Lord Shiva had joined their ranks to offer his prayers and thanks to Lord Ram, he would have fallen in the trap of aligning himself with these ‘selfish gods’. Hence, Shiva, being ‘wise and erudite’, thought it prudent to wait till the other gods had gone away before he would come to pay his personal respects to his beloved Lord Ram. This would also give Shiva an opportunity to develop immediate rapport with the Lord he worships, and at the same time Lord Ram too would be able to share a private moment with his devotee Shiva.

Remember: There was a unique relationship between the two of them; Lord Ram too worshipped Shiva as much as Shiva worshipped the Lord. This is amply made clear by Lord Ram himself when he worshipped Shiva at the start of his campaign of Lanka. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 2 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede it.}

Hence, Lord Shiva wished to thank Lord Ram for this gracious gesture and declaration of the latter’s affection and respect for him by deciding to approach Lord Ram when the crowd of gods had gone away and the Lord would be alone.

²Lord Shiva is called ‘Tripurari’ for two primary reasons: One is that he had vanquished a demon named ‘Tripurasur’; and the second reason is it signifies that he is a vanquisher of all that is evil and sinful in ‘all the three divisions of the world, i.e. heaven, earth and the nether world, as well as its Lord’.]

(iv) Sub-section 21.1.4: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 116—to Doha no. 121:

चौ०. करि बिनती जब संभु सिधाए । तब प्रभु निकट बिभीषनु आए ॥ १ ॥

नाइ चरन सिरु कह मृदु बानी । बिनय सुनहु प्रभु सारंगपानी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kari binatī jaba sambhu sidhā'ē. taba prabhu nikaṭa bibhīṣanu ā'ē. 1.

nā'i carana siru kaha mṛdu bānī. binaya sunahu prabhu sārāṅgapānī. 2.

After Lord Shiva (sambhu) had offered his prayers and departed from the place, Vibhishan came to Lord Ram. (1)

He bowed his head before the holy feet of the Lord and said in a pleasing voice: 'Oh Lord who holds the Sarang Bow. Please listen to my humble request. (2)

सकुल सदल प्रभु रावन मार्यो । पावन जस त्रिभुवन बिस्तार्यो ॥ ३ ॥
दीन मलीन हीन मति जाती । मो पर कृपा कीन्हि बहु भाँती ॥ ४ ॥ sakula sadala prabhu rāvana māryō. pāvana jasa tribhuvana bistāryō. 3.

dīna malīna hīna mati jātī. mō para kṛpā kīnhi bahu bhāntī. 4.

Oh Lord, you have eliminated Ravana with his horde of demons, an act that helped to spread and establish your fame and glory in all the three divisions of the world (i.e. everywhere in this world). (3)

I was especially blessed with grace and kindness by your highness in all possible ways, inspite of my being most meek, humble and lowly, as well as being devoid of any goodness and virtues, and of a low birth as I am born in the demon race. (4)

अब जन गृह पुनीत प्रभु कीजे । मज्जनु करिअ समर श्रम छीजे ॥ ५ ॥
देखि कोस मंदिर संपदा । देहु कृपाल कपिन्ह कहूँ मुदा ॥ ६ ॥
सब बिधि नाथ मोहि अपनाइअ । पुनि मोहि सहित अवधपुर जाइअ ॥ ७ ॥
सुनत बचन मृदु दीनदयाला । सजल भए द्वौ नयन बिसाला ॥ ८ ॥ aba jana gr̥ha punīta prabhu kījē. majjanu kari'a samara śrama chijē. 5.

dēkhi kōsa mandira sampadā. dēhu kṛpāla kapinha kahuṁ mudā. 6.
saba bidhi nātha mōhi apanā'i'a. puni mōhi sahita avadhapura jā'i'a. 7.
sunata bacana mṛdu dīnadayālā. sajala bha'ē dvau nayana bisālā. 8.

Now oh Lord, please bless my household and consecrate it by paying a visit to it. Have a bath and refresh yourself a little, as I feel you must be tired after this grueling war. (5)

Pay a visit to the treasury of our demon race; have a look at our homes and the rest of our properties.

[To wit, I invite you to come and visit the city of Lanka to personally grace it now. You have been gracious enough to make me its king, but I feel something is missing as till now you have not once visited Lanka. Now that this city has a friendly king in my person, it will be in fitness of things that you come there as an honoured guest of mine. So please Lord, oblige me by your gracious presence in the city of Lanka even for a short while. This will give me excess of pleasure, and it will also enable the citizen to pay their respects to you as well.]

After that, you can cheerfully (and without any bit of hesitation) give the monkeys (and bears) whatever you deem fit for them as a gift and reward for their effort and contribution. (6)

Oh Lord, I pray thee to please accept me unconditionally as one who is your very own, in all possible and imaginable ways. After that, proceed to Ayodhya, taking me along with you.¹ (7)

When Lord Ram heard these kind and gracious words of Vibhishan, he was very pleased; the Lord's two wide eyes (which were like petals of the lotus flower) welled up with tears. (8)

[Note—¹Vibhishan wished to express his heartfelt gratitude to Lord Ram for not only extending his protection to him when his own brother Ravana was baying for his blood, but also making him the new king of Lanka. Usually it so happens that a conqueror appoints his own governor, which under normal circumstances Lord Ram could have easily done, and it was almost certain that the Lord would have chosen Sugriv, the king of the monkey race and the ruler of Kishkindha, for this role, because Sugriv's crucial help had made it possible for Lord Ram to assemble the army which aided him in the war against Ravana and defeating the mighty demon forces. So to reward Sugriv with the governorship of Lanka, if not outright its kingdom, was a foregone conclusion.

But Lord Ram desisted from doing it, and this refrain of the Lord of not appointing anyone else but Vibhishan as the new king of Lanka was not lost on the latter, and he recognized its significance. So therefore, Vibhishan wished to express his sincere thanks and highest gratitude to Lord Ram by inviting him to the city to grace it by his presence.

And to express his thanks to Sugriv, Angad, Hanuman, Jamvant, Nala, Neela and other as senior commanders of the Lord's army, as well as the rest of the monkeys and bears of the army who helped Lord Ram to win the war against Ravana, which in turn paved the way for Vibhishan being made the new king of the kingdom of Lanka, he requested Lord Ram to grant as much largesse as he wished to give as a reward to his friends in the monkey and bear army, from the rich treasury of Lanka.

This offer of Vibhishan also shows that the kingdom of the demons was so rich and prosperous that even after the ruinous war a handsome treasury still survived.

And there is another significant point worth noting: it is that after the final victory in the war, there was no plundering and looting and mad rampaging of Lanka by the conquerors—such was the exemplary discipline of Lord Ram, and such were the high principles of noble conduct followed during those ancient times! All aggressiveness and hostility and bitterness ended as soon as the war ended. All were friends once again.

Vibhishan even offered to accompany Lord Ram to Ayodhya so that their mutual friendship can be further cemented. Perhaps this paved the way for trade and military ties and cultural exchanges between the three mighty kingdoms of the time, i.e. Ayodhya in the north, Kishkindha in the south, and island of Lanka further down in the middle of the ocean.]

दो०. तोर कोस गृह मोर सब सत्य बचन सुनु भ्रात ।

भरत दसा सुमिरत मोहि निमिष कल्प सम जात ॥ ११६ (क) ॥

तापस बेष गात कृस जपत निरंतर मोहि ।

देखौं बेगि सो जतनु करु सखा निहोरउँ तोहि ॥ ११६ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

tōra kōsa gr̥ha mōra saba satya bacana sunu bhrāta.

bharata dasā sumirata mōhi nimīṣa kalpa sama jāta. 116 (a).

tāpasa bēṣa gāta kṛsa japata nirantara mōhi.

dēkhaum̐ bēgi sō jatanu karu sakhā nihōra'um̐ tōhi. 116 (b).

Lord Ram affectionately replied to Vibhishan: ‘Listen my dear brother (sunu bhrāta)! I say truthfully that your treasury, your home and the rest of the things that you possess can be deemed to belong to me (because I regard you as my dear friend and brother: sakhā, bhrāta).

But in the meanwhile, when I remember the (sad and miserable) condition of Bharat (my younger brother who lives in Ayodhya and grieves at my absence), even a fraction of a moment seems to be like an age for me. (Doha no. 116-a)

He lives in a hermit’s attire; his body has become emaciated; and he constantly remembers me¹.

So therefore, my dear friend (sakhā), I request you to make arrangements so that I can see him as soon as it is possible². (Doha no. 116-b)

[Note—¹How did Lord Ram know the condition of Bharat? Well, it was Hanuman who gave a graphic description of how Bharat lived when he returned to Lord Ram with the herb sought for the treatment of wounded Laxman in the battle-field of Lanka. Hanuman had met Bharat on his way back from the northern mountains where he had gone searching for the herb. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 55; (ii) Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 60.}

And how did Bharat live? This question is answered in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 324—to Doha no. 326.

²Lord Ram deftly deflected Vibhishan’s request to visit the city of Lanka and bless his family and citizens. One reason which the Lord gives in avoiding going to the city within the fort was that time was running out for him as he must reach his own city Ayodhya expeditiously, because if he delays for even a day then his dear brother Bharat would end his life. It’s definitely true, because if the Lord had gone to the city then obviously there would be a grand royal ceremony and welcome formalities extended to him, which would consume precious time. Lord Ram wished to make haste to return, as is clear from his own words, and therefore expending time in things that could be avoided was a prudent way forward in the current exigency.

Besides this reason, there was one other, and this second reason was cited by the Lord himself when he declined to attend the ceremony to crown Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka, and instead deputed his brother Laxman to represent him. The reason was this: that he had to keep the words of honour that he had given his father Dasrath, that he would live like a hermit for full 14 years in the forest, and a hermit is not supposed to visit a populated place, such as a city or a town or a village, especially to attend some ceremony or feast, or to be honoured and praised for some deed done.

{Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 106.}

Earlier too, during Sugriv's anointment on the throne of Kishkindha, Lord Ram declined to attend personally, and instead sent his younger brother Laxman to represent him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 11.}

At that time too the Lord had explained to Sugriv the reason for his inability to attend his coronation personally, because he was bound not to visit any city for 14 years while he lived in the forest. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 12.}

The third probable reason for Lord Ram avoiding to enter the city of Lanka was that he did not want a show around himself; he wished to avoid limelight and pomp and pageantry; he did not want that he be raised on a ceremonial pedestal at the head of a victory procession like a conquering general walking triumphantly to his vanquished subjects, the chances of which were ripe should he agree to visit the city of Lanka, as it was quite certain that Vibhishan would go out of his way, and bend over backwards, to shower praises and royal honours on the Lord as a gesture of his thanksgiving to him. Remember: Lord Ram was very modest and unpretentious; so it would be extremely embarrassing for him if this happened.

And finally, it would be too embarrassing for Lord Ram, who was known for his virtues of upholding the laws of Dharma that deal with the principles of righteousness, probity and propriety, as well as for his gracefulness and equanimity, to enter a city the king of which he had just slayed and put his rival on the throne, as this unavoidable coincidence designed by Providence and a fiat of Fate had made Lord Ram highly uncomfortable with the development. It was certain that not everyone in the city of Lanka would appreciate Lord Ram's actions, and though they had no choice but to keep their mouths shut under the changed situation, the Lord himself did not wish to offend them any more by visiting Lanka in a victory procession.]

बीतें अवधि जाउँ जौं जिअत न पावउँ बीर ।

सुमिरत अनुज प्रीति प्रभु पुनि पुनि पुलक सरीर ॥ ११६ (ग) ॥

करेहु कल्प भरि राजु तुम्ह मोहि सुमिरेहु मन माहिं ।

पुनि मम धाम पाइहहु जहाँ संत सब जाहिं ॥ ११६ (घ) ॥

bītēṁ avadhi jā'uṁ jāuṁ ji'ata na pāva'uṁ bīra.

sumirata anuja prīti prabhu puni puni pulaka sarīra. 116 (c).

karēhu kalpa bhari rāju tumha mōhi sumirēhu mana māhiṁ.

puni mama dhāma pā'ihahu jahāṁ santa saba jāhiṁ. 116 (d).

If I go there after the expiry of the term of my forest sojourn (which is exactly 14 years) then it is certain that I won't find that brave one alive¹.

Lord Ram's body became thrilled with repeated waves of emotions which surged inside his heart when he remembered the exemplary level of affection his younger brother Bharat had for him. (Doha no. 116-c)

Vibhishan, be blessed with a happy rule over your kingdom till the end of this Kalpa (one complete cycle of 4 eras known as Sata Yuga, Treta Yuga, Dwarpa Yuga and Kali Yuga), and always remember me.

At the end of this period, you will go to my abode in the heaven where all saintly souls go.' (Doha no. 116-d)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 313 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it; and (ii) Uttar Kand, Doha no. 1 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

How many days were left for this period of 14 years of forest living by Lord Ram to end? Answer: Only one day was left—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1.

This is why Lord Ram was in a hurry to return to Ayodhya.

And how did he manage to do it, to reach the far away Ayodhya within such a short span of time of one single day? Well, the Lord and his party reached Ayodhya in time as they rode the Pushpak Plane that Vibhishan inherited from Ravana. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 117; and Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 119; (b) Uttar Kand, Doha no. 4-a.]

चौ०. सुनत बिभीषन बचन राम के । हरषि गहे पद कृपाधाम के ॥ १ ॥

बानर भालु सकल हरषाने । गहि प्रभु पद गुन बिमल बखाने ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunata bibhīṣana bacana rāma kē. haraṣi gahē pada kṛpādhāma kē. 1.
bānara bhālu sakala haraṣānē. gahi prabhu pada guna bimala bakhānē. 2.

Hearing such gracious words of Lord Ram who was an embodiment of mercy and grace, Vibhishan felt exceedingly happy, and he fell down at the Lord's feet and clasped them affectionately. (1)

The monkeys and bears too felt very happy and exhilarated; they too fell down and clasped the feet of Lord Ram to express their joy, and to extol his glories and virtues. (2)

[Note—All those who heard Lord Ram explaining why he would not visit the city of Lanka were all praises for him; they felt so happy that the Lord was extremely gracious and modest and unpretentious that he would not like to be honoured and shown royal ceremony by visiting Lanka as a conquering general walking in a victory procession; that he was an upholder of the bond of brotherhood and recognized true worth of affection as was evident by his concern for Bharat, even though the latter was the apparent cause for the Lord's long sufferings and tribulations in the forest, because Bharat's mother Kaikeyi wanted that her son should become a king of Ayodhya instead of Lord Ram, and contrived a crooked means to have the Lord banished to the forest for 14 years so that Bharat could reinforce his grip over the affairs of the mighty kingdom during the Lord's absence. But it was so singularly noble and glorious for Lord Ram not to pay heed to the intrigues of Kaikeyi, and instead see the truthfulness and depth of Bharat's love for him.

Verily indeed, forsooth and without gainsay, all those present at the time celebrated and rejoiced that they have at last found in Lord Ram a true Lord and Friend for themselves!]

बहुरि बिभीषन भवन सिधायो । मनि गन बसन बिमान भरायो ॥ ३ ॥
 लै पुष्पक प्रभु आगें राखा । हँसि करि कृपासिंधु तब भाषा ॥ ४ ॥ चढ़ि बिमान सुनु सखा बिभीषन । गगन जाइ बरषहु पट भूषन ॥ ५ ॥ bahuri bibhīṣana bhavana sidhāyō. mani gana basana bimāna bharāyō. 3.

 lai puṣpaka prabhu āgēm rākhā. haṁsi kari kṛpāsindhu taba bhāṣā. 4.
 caḍhi bimāna sunu sakhā bibhīṣana. gagana jā'i barāṣahu paṭa bhūṣana. 5.

After that (i.e. after expressing his joy and satisfaction by falling reverentially at the feet of Lord Ram and bowing before him), Vibhishan went to his palace. He got the air-plane (the Pushpak, which he had inherited from his brother Ravana), filled with precious gems and costly apparels. (3)

He came with all these things and placed the Pushpak plane before Lord Ram (as a token of his tribute and gift for the Lord).

Lord Ram, who was like an ocean of the virtues of kindness, grace, benevolence and magnanimity, politely laughed in an approving manner, and said --- (4)

‘My friend Vibhishan, ride on this plane and go up in the sky, and from there shower upon the ground all the gifts in the way of clothes and ornaments that you have brought here.’ (5)

नभ पर जाइ बिभीषन तबही । बरषि दिए मनि अंबर सबही ॥ ६ ॥
 जोड़ जोड़ मन भावइ सोइ लेहीं । मनि मुख मेलि डारि कपि देहीं ॥ ७ ॥ हँसे रामु श्री अनुज समेता । परम कौतुकी कृपा निकेता ॥ ८ ॥ nabha para jā'i bibhīṣana tabahī. barāṣi di'ē mani ambara sabahī. 6.

 jō'i jō'i mana bhāva'i sō'i lēhīm. mani mukha mēli ḍāri kapi dēhīm. 7.
 haṁsē rāmu śrī anuja samētā. parama kautukī kṛpā nikētā. 8.

As soon as Vibhishan heard Lord Ram's instructions he went up into the sky aboard the plane, and from there he showered on the ground below every piece of gem and apparel that he had brought. (6)

The monkeys and bears who had been watching everything with amusement, marveled at this novel spectacle. They were filled with glee and merriment; they scrambled forward in joy and grabbed whatever they fancied for and could lay their hands on.

The innocent monkeys thought that the gems were some kind of eatables, so they would first put the pieces of priceless stones, falling from the sky like so many fruits, into their mouths, but soon realizing that they weren't what they thought them to be, they immediately spat the gems out! (7)

It was a very entertaining scene which amused Lord Ram a lot. The Lord and his younger brother Laxman smiled (and cheered at the fascinated monkeys).

Verily indeed, the maverick Lord was inclined to play innocent tricks and harmless games that would amuse everyone around¹. (8)

[Note—¹It was a very charming sight indeed. But at the same time Lord Ram wished to send a subtle message to Vibhishan, and by extension to all of us. The Lord implied that what Vibhishan thought was so valuable and worthy, like the priceless gems, ornaments and clothes, was of no worth and consequence for others. To wit, what one person values, is of no value for another.

When extended and applied to this material world, the hidden spiritual and metaphysical meaning is stunningly clear—that what attracts a worldly man, something for which he would go to any length to acquire and then endeavour to retain at all costs, is worthless and pointless for a person who has renunciation and dispassion in his heart! How wonderful and fantastic is this grand spiritual message that Lord Ram conveyed for posterity by employing such a jovial means.]

दो०. मुनि जेहि ध्यान न पावहिं नेति नेति कह बेद ।

कृपासिंधु सोइ कपिन्ह सन करत अनेक बिनोद ॥ ११७ (क) ॥

dōhā.

muni jēhi dhyāna na pāvahiṁ nēti nēti kaha bēda.

krpāsindhu sō'i kapinha sana karata anēka binōda. 117 (a).

It is such a great wonder that the Lord who is difficult to attain even by exalted sages who do their best to focus their minds upon him, and who even the Vedas (primary scriptures) fail to comprehend when they say “not this, not this” in their attempt to explain who the Lord is and what are his visible forms—this same merciful and kind Supreme Lord Ram plays and jests with the humble monkeys and bears in order to entertain them and himself. (Doha no. 117-a)

उमा जोग जप दान तप नाना मख ब्रत नेम ।

राम कृपा नहिं करहिं तसि जसि निष्केवल प्रेम ॥ ११७ (ख) ॥ umā jōga japa dāna tapa nānā makha brata nēma.

rāma krpā nahim karahim tasi jasi niṣkēvala prēma. 117 (b).

[Lord Shiva tells his consort Uma who was listening to this wonderful Story—]

‘Oh Uma! Lord Ram does not show the extent of his full grace by trying to please him in the form of doing Japa (repetition of holy Mantras or spiritual formulas), Daan (making charity), Tapa (austerity and penance), and many other forms of spiritual practices such as Makha (fire sacrifices), Vrat and Nema (keeping a fast and observing various religious vows)—as much as he does by having purest form of affection and love for him.¹ (Doha no. 117-b)

[Note—¹Put simply, Lord Shiva advises the creatures of this world that the easiest way to Lord Ram's heart is through the medium of love and affection for him. To this can be added the virtues of devotion, faith and trust, for all these virtues act together in helping a devotee to gain the Lord's favour.

Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 136 and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it, where the same idea is affirmed.

Here we ought to note about the importance of simple gestures of love and affection as they are held more dear by Lord Ram in his heart than the finest recitals of the Vedas. We can cite examples from the Story of Ram Charit Manas itself to reiterate this fact. For instance, when the innocent people of the forest-dwelling tribes of Chitrakoot had paid their obeisance to Lord Ram in the simple ways they were accustomed to, and had shown excess of joy and pleasure in serving Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman for the brief period they stayed with them, the Lord had graciously reciprocated their kind gestures by showing them equal affection. The Lord had talked with them courteously; he had cheerfully accepted their humble offerings of food and hospitality, and blessed them. All this is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 135—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 337.

Even prior to the Lord meeting these humble people and showing his grace upon them, we read that he had extended a similar grace upon the countless village folks and travellers whom he had met while on his way to the forest from Ayodhya. Lord Ram's loving nature and gracious manners had overwhelmed each and everyone he met on the way so much that he left a trail of people who cherished their meeting with the Lord and enshrined him in their hearts for all times to come. Once again, all this is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 112—to Doha no. 122.]

चौ०. भालु कपिन्ह पट भूषन पाए । पहिरि पहिरि रघुपति पहिं आए ॥ १ ॥

नाना जिनस देखि सब कीसा । पुनि पुनि हँसत कोसलाधीसा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bhālu kapinha paṭa bhūṣana pā'ē. pahiri pahiri raghupati pahim ā'ē. 1.

nānā jinasa dēkhi saba kīsā. puni puni haṁsata kōsalādhīsā. 2.

When the monkeys and bears got the sort of apparel they had fancied, they wore them and came to Lord Ram to show him how they looked in these new clothes. (1)

Observing this funny spectacle, with so many monkeys and bears attired in a wide assortment of colourful clothes, some oddly fitting and others hanging loose on their bodies, Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal (Ayodhya) smiled and laughed at this fascinating sight as he was highly amused with it¹. (2)

[Note—¹Imagine the scene. Like so many children who had never worn fine clothes in their lives were suddenly given multitudes of colourful dresses to choose from and wear them to suit their fancy, and then these overjoyed innocent children would dance and hop with excess of joy at this marvelous opportunity as they put on whatever catches their fancy, after which they rush home to show their wonderstruck parents what they had got as gifts and how they looked in these fine new clothes, these humble monkeys and bears first adorned themselves as best as they could, though it was all awkward fittings for them, and then the whole group danced and sang its way to Lord Ram so that the overjoyed monkeys and bears could exhibit their newly acquired gifts to their beloved Lord, because for all of them Lord Ram was as dear and near as if he was their parent and loving friend.

Indeed, what a wonderful and heart-touching scene it must have been, my dear readers, just close your eyes and imagine! For remember, soon they will part with their beloved Lord and Friend, Lord Sri Ram, for in a few moments time the time of departure for Ayodhya would arrive, and though Lord Ram took along with him the senior monkeys and bears, he obviously could not take such a huge army back to Ayodhya for the practical reason that there wasn't sufficient space in the Pushpak plane to accommodate everyone. So in a way these were the moments of bidding farewell to all, and therefore it was all the more emotionally fulfilling for both the sides, the ever thankful Lord Ram on one side, and the equally thankful monkeys and bears on the other side. Lord Ram was thankful to them for their help in freeing Sita from the captivity of the demons, and the humble monkeys and bears were thankful to Lord Ram for showing such grace upon them and declaring them all as their friend without condition or distinction.

So therefore, like overjoyed children thronging their doting father when they are given some nice things to wear, the enthusiastic and overjoyed monkeys and bears crowded around Lord Ram affectionately, each vying with the other to draw the Lord's kind attention on himself. And sure enough, the gracious Lord Ram acknowledged them all by smiling at them and looking them with blessing in his glances.]

चितइ सबन्हि पर कीन्ही दाया । बोले मृदुल बचन रघुराया ॥ ३ ॥

तुम्हरे बल मैं रावनु मार्यो । तिलक बिभीषन कहँ पुनि सार्यो ॥ ४ ॥

निज निज गृह अब तुम्ह सब जाहू । सुमिरेहु मोहि डरपहु जनि काहू ॥ ५ ॥ cita'i sabanhi para kīnhī dāyā. bōlē mṛdula bacana raghurāyā. 3.

tumharēm bala mair̥m rāvanu māryō. tilaka bibhīṣana kahaṁ puni sāryō. 4.
nija nija gr̥ha aba tumha saba jāhū. sumirēhu mōhi ḍarapahu jani kāhū. 5.

The Lord looked at the assembled monkeys and bears in such a way that each individual thought that the Lord was looking at him and made an eye contact with him, and by this means the munificent Lord pleased and blessed them all with his kind grace and benevolence.

Then Lord of the Raghus, i.e. Lord Ram, addressed the assembly with sweet words that were pleasant to hear. He said: --- (3)

‘I have succeeded in slaying Ravana by relying on your matchless abilities and strength, and after that I was able to anoint Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka as its new king.

[To wit, I am very obliged to you, and I affirm that I owe all my achievements to you. Verily, it may be known that I can never forget you and the help you gave me when I needed it most. I have no sufficient words to properly express my thanks to you, for your selfless help and the kind of friendship that you all have extended to me. I will remember it all through my life, I promise.] (4)

Now, all of you go back to your respective homes, and remember me. Don't be afraid of anyone or anything (because I will be always there to help you, in thick and thin, no matter what happens).¹ (5)

[Note—¹The time of saying 'good bye' had arrived. It was a very poignant moment for both the sides, and surely everyone's heart was heavy. The monkeys and bears, by this time, had developed such a close bond with Lord Ram, and he with them, that to part with each other was something they wouldn't have liked to happen if it was avoidable. But it was not practically possible to do so. Yes, Lord Ram could have taken the whole army back to Ayodhya, but there was no space in the Pushpak plane to accommodate hundreds and thousands of monkeys and bears. At best, their senior commanders and chiefs could be taken along, which Lord Ram actually did.

But the Lord promised them eternal bond of friendship and help. Ordinarily a king or a noble man would extend such privilege to those who are his equal in rank, but Lord Ram was such a magnanimous and kind Lord that he treated even the lowest in the rank of the army as his friend and companion, not distinguishing between any of them for their rank or title. Verily indeed, for Lord Ram the only eligibility that entitles one to receive his grace and blessings is having love, affection, devotion and faith in him, and the monkeys and bears, all of them without exception, qualified on this mark without a trace of doubt.

It's not written in any of the versions of the grand and magnificent Story of the Ramayana, but one can well imagine the emotional aspect of those moments when the time had come for departure of Lord Ram for Ayodhya, and his requesting the army of monkeys and bears to go back to their homeland. Everyone stood speechless, with tears in their eyes, with their throats choked, with their hearts heavy as lead, with their legs as if paralyzed, with their bodies thrilled, and their lips quivering as if they were just about to burst out crying.

But in this sad hour of parting, there was a silver lining to the gloomy cloud of separation: Lord Ram had promised every single individual monkey and bear of his friendship and affection for life; he has asked them not to forget him. But the latter request made by Lord Ram—that they must always remember him—was simply a formal one, for even if the Lord had not asked these humble monkeys and bears to do so, they would have nonetheless never ever had forgotten the Lord for the grace and kindness that they had got so much from him. They even owed their lives to Lord Ram—because the Lord had ensured that all the monkeys and bears who lay wounded or dead in the battle-field were brought back to life when he asked Indra to shower Amrit on all of them (apropos: Chaupai line nos. 1-2 and 5 that precede Doha no. 114).

The fact that the monkeys and bears would have liked to stay with Lord Ram for all times to come if that was at all feasible and practical, even if it meant to go to far-away kingdom of Ayodhya, or to bring Lord Ram to Kishkindha itself, and that they were not much inclined to return home, will be evident in the following verses.]

सुनत बचन प्रेमाकुल बानर । जोरि पानि बोले सब सादर ॥ ६ ॥
 प्रभु जोड़ कहहु तुम्हहि सब सोहा । हमरें होत बचन सुनि मोहा ॥ ७ ॥
 दीन जानि कपि किए सनाथा । तुम्ह त्रैलोक ईस रघुनाथा ॥ ८ ॥
 सुनि प्रभु बचन लाज हम मरहीं । मसक कहूँ खगपति हित करहीं ॥ ९ ॥
 देखि राम रुख बानर रीछा । प्रेम मगन नहिं गृह कै ईछा ॥ १० ॥ sunata bacana prēmākula bānara. jōri pāni bōlē saba sādara. 6.

 prabhu jō'i kahahu tumhahi saba sōhā. hamarēm hōta bacana suni mōhā. 7.
 dīna jāni kapi ki'ē sanāthā. tumha trailōka īsa raghunāthā. 8.
 suni prabhu bacana lāja hama marahīm. masaka kahūṁ khagapati hita karahīm. 9.
 dēkhi rāma rukha bānara rīchā. prēma magana nahīm gr̥ha kai īchā. 10.

Hearing the words of Lord Ram, the monkeys (and bears) became agitated as they were overwhelmed with emotions of affection for the Lord. They joined their palms and replied most respectfully (and in a manner that clearly showed their love for the Lord) --- (6)

‘Oh Lord! Whatever you say is well spoken and well becomes of you, but on our part we become mystified by them. (7)

We are humble and lowly creatures, while oh Lord Raghubar, you are the great and exalted Lord of the whole world and its three divisions (heaven, earth and nether world). So it was out of your excess of grace, kindness and mercy that you chose to grant us the opportunity to serve you, thereby making us feel honoured and privileged to be able to do so.

[So therefore, it is we who owe the greatest of thanks to you, and not you to us.] (8)

Oh kind and gracious Lord! When we hear your kind words (praising us for our valour and the help we gave you which enabled you to slay Ravana and make Vibhishan the new king of Lanka), we all feel as if buried in shyness (for we don't deserve such praise whatsoever).

Say, can a humble and lowly mosquito ever be so great as to help the mighty king of birds?

[To wit, oh Lord, we are simple and humble forest-dwelling beings, and you are a great Lord, the Supreme Being and the Lord of the world himself in a personified form. So just like a mosquito is in comparison to the mighty eagle, the king of the birds, there is no comparison between us and your exalted highness. So therefore, we feel humbled and shy when we hear you shower so much praise upon us. However, we are truly very grateful to you that inspite of being so high and exalted you still prefer to show honour to us and call us your friends. It is much more than we had ever expected in our lives, and for this gracious gesture of yours, we shall ever, forever indeed, remain indebted to you. Glory to our loving Lord! All hats off to our Lord and his loving nature!]' (9)

Lord Ram could easily perceive that they were all overwhelmed with surging waves of emotions of love and affection for him, and consequently had no desire to go back home¹. (10)

[Note—¹Refer to note appended to Chaupai line nos. 3-5 herein above.

Lord Ram discerned that the whole army was not inclined to leave his company; they would rather have him accompany them to Kishkindha if it was at all feasible and possible. But for obvious reasons it could not be that way. Lord Ram had to return to Ayodhya, and he would not do anything that would look like he was trying to impose himself on any other kingdom or infringe on the right of its king. So therefore, either to think of living in Lanka or in Kishkindha was out of the question. It was all the more unthinkable for Lord Ram because back in Ayodhya, Bharat was eagerly waiting for his arrival, and if he did not return in time then Bharat would die. Besides this, the Lord had promised the citizens of Ayodhya that he would come to them as soon as the period of 14 years expired. The people of Ayodhya loved him no less than the monkeys and bears, and since he was the prince of that kingdom, it was obligatory upon him to take that into consideration the emotions and needs of his subjects first and foremost, for the kingdom of Ayodhya needed his presence urgently as its throne was lying vacant as compared to kingdoms of Kishkindha and Lanka, because both of them had their respective kings, Sugriv and Vibhishan, to look after their interests.

So therefore, Lord Ram very politely, and with all the courteousness and civility he could muster, prevailed upon the monkeys and bears to return to their homelands, although both Lord Ram and the monkeys and bears felt very sad and sorry at this parting.]

दो०. प्रभु प्रेरित कपि भालु सब राम रूप उर राखि ।

हरष बिषाद सहित चले बिनय बिबिध बिधि भाषि ॥ ११८ (क) ॥

dōhā.

prabhu prērita kapi bhālu saba rāma rūpa ura rākhi.

haraṣa biṣāda sahita calē binaya bibidha bidhi bhāṣi. 118 (a).

Inspired by Lord Ram and in deference to his wishes (as the monkeys and bears were unable to disobey him and refuse to honour his commands), all the monkeys and bears enshrined the divine form (image) of Lord Ram inside their hearts (as one consecrates a deity in the sanctum of a shrine), and overwhelmed with grief and sadness (at parting with the Lord) on the one hand, and joy and happiness (at being able to serve the Lord and having had the privilege to be able to call the Lord as their everlasting friend and Lord) on the other hand, they offered their emotional prayers and heart-felt obeisance to the Lord in various ways (each one pouring out his heart in the best language and way he could do), and then started off on their journey back home¹. (Doha no. 118-a)

[Note—¹In this context we can recall Lord Ram's meeting with the villagers and travelers he met on the way to the forest, as well as the tribal people who came to meet him when he decided to stay in Chitrakoot. A very similar set of emotions are discovered there too. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Doha no. 108—

to Doha no. 122; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 135—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 137.}]

कपिपति नील रीछपति अंगद नल हनुमान ।
 सहित बिभीषन अपर जे जूथप कपि बलवान ॥ ११८ (ख) ॥
 कहि न सकहिं कछु प्रेम बस भरि भरि लोचन बारि । सन्मुख चितवहिं राम तन नयन निमेष निवारि ॥ ११८ (ग) ॥ kapipati nīla rīchapati aṅgada nala hanumāna.

 sahita bibhīṣana apara jē jūthapa kapi balavāna. 118 (b).
 kahi na sakahiṁ kachu prēma basa bhari bhari lōcana bāri.
 sanmukha citavahiṁ rāma tana nayana nimēṣa nivāri. 118 (c).

Sugriv, the lord of the monkeys, Nila, Jamvant, the lord of the bears, Angad (the prince of the monkeys), Nala, Hanuman, along with Vibhishan and other senior commanders of both the armies (i.e. the monkey army of Sugriv, as well as the demon army that supported Vibhishan) who were strong and mighty warriors in their own rights, --- (Doha no. 118-b)

--- All of them stood speechless with tears in their eyes as they were so overwhelmed with emotions that words failed them and they did not know how to react. They stood motionless before Lord Ram with their prayerful eyes fixed on the Lord¹. (Doha no. 118-c)

[Note—¹These noblemen of both the sides, the monkeys and bears on one side, and the demons on the other side, did not know what to say or do; they were in a fix as they would not like to disobey the Lord who commanded everyone to return home, while at the same time they had a great desire to accompany the Lord to his kingdom and witness his ascension to the throne, as well as to forge a deeper and stronger formal bond of friendship that is usually made between great kings, a bond that would bear a stamp of authority and create eternal ties between their great kingdoms in a formal way.

They had all heard of the famed glories and the greatness of the kingdom of Ayodhya, and hence had a sincere wish to visit it.

Lord Ram observed them and knew intuitively what was in their minds. The gracious Lord did not wish to dishonour or neglect their wishes, especially when it was so sincere and came from selfless friends who had staked everything they had to serve the Lord and his cause. Lord Ram remembered that Vibhishan had already expressed his desire to go to Ayodhya—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 116.

So therefore, Lord Ram agreed to take them all along with him to Ayodhya.]

चौ०. अतिसय प्रीति देखि रघुआई । लीन्हे सकल बिमान चढ़ाई ॥ १ ॥
 मन महुँ बिप्र चरन सिरु नायो । उत्तर दिसिहि बिमान चलायो ॥ २ ॥
 caupāī.

atisaya prīti dēkhi raghurā'ī. līnhē sakala bimāna caṛhā'ī. 1.
mana mahum̐ bipra carana siru nāyō. utara disihi bimāna calāyō. 2.

Lord Ram (raghurā'ī), perceiving that all of them were overwhelmed with affection for him (and would like to accompany him back home to Ayodhya to witness his happy union with his subjects and appointment as the sovereign of the kingdom), he gave his consent and welcomed them all aboard the plane¹. (1)

Then the Lord mentally bowed his head at the feet of Vipras (elderly Brahmins) and ordered the plane to fly in northward direction². (2)

[Note—¹This plane, the Pushpak, was placed at Lord Ram's disposal by Vibhishan—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 117.

²One thing is to be noted here, and it is that this Pushpak plane was not an ordinary aircraft. It had two unique features—One, that it could be remote controlled; even a voice command could help to steer it. And two, that it could expand its capacity to accommodate passengers, though of course within certain limits. For example, it could grow large enough to, say, accommodate senior commanders of the two armies who were asked by Lord Ram to come aboard, but it would be practically impossible to adjust the whole army of monkeys and bears numbering into hundreds of thousands, for had it been possible then it is quite sure Lord Ram would have obliged all of them by taking them all to Ayodhya like he did with these few selected senior commanders.]

चलत बिमान कोलाहल होई । जय रघुबीर कहइ सबु कोई ॥ ३ ॥
सिंहासन अति उच्च मनोहर । श्री समेत प्रभु बैठे ता पर ॥ ४ ॥ राजत रामु सहित भामिनी । मेरु संगु जनु घन दामिनी ॥ ५ ॥ calata bimāna kōlāhala hō'ī. jaya raghubīra kaha'i sabu kō'ī. 3.

simhāsana ati ucca manōhara. śrī samēta prabhu baiṭhē tā para. 4.
rājata rāmu sahita bhāminī. mēru sṛṅga janu ghana dāminī. 5.

No sooner had the plane become airborne and headed northwards to Ayodhya, than there was a spontaneous expression of joy and exhilaration from all those on board who cheered and applauded loudly in chorus. They exclaimed thunderously: 'Glory to Lord Ram; Hail the Lord of the Raghus; Long live the Lord.' (3)

There was a raised platform on this plane in the form of a magnificent throne, and Lord Ram sat on it with his consort Sita by his side. (4)

Lord Ram looked most adorable and majestic as he sat on this wonderful throne; it was like the beautiful scene of dark clouds with streaks of lightening lighting them up as they crowned the summit and hovered on the top of the wonderful Sumeru mountain¹. (5)

[Note—¹Here in this imagery, Lord Ram's dark-complexioned body is compared to the dark clouds; the lightening represents Sita as she is fair complexioned; and the summit of Mt. Sumeru is symbolized by the magnificent throne on Pushpak plane as the throne is high and distinguished.]

रुचिर बिमान चलेउ अति आतुर । कीन्ही सुमन बृष्टि हरषे सुर ॥ ६ ॥
 परम सुखद चलि त्रिबिध बयारी । सागर सर सरि निर्मल बारी ॥ ७ ॥
 सगुन होहि सुंदर चहुँ पासा । मन प्रसन्न निर्मल नभ आसा ॥ ८ ॥ rucira bimāna calē'u ati ātura. kīnhī sumana br̥ṣṭi haraṣē sura. 6.

 parama sukhada cali tribidha bayārī. sāgara sara sari nirmala bārī. 7.
 saguna hōhim sundara cahum̐ pāsā. mana prasanna nirmala nabha āsā. 8.

The magnificent plane moved with speed across the sky even as the exhilarated gods showered an abundance of flowers on it. (6)

A very pleasant breeze blew; it had all the three qualities that are known to grant pleasantness to wind¹.

The ocean, the rivers and the lakes—all seemed to be filled with crystal clear and sweet water. (7)

All sorts of auspicious signs were visible in all the four directions. Everyone's mind and heart were filled with joy and happiness. The firmament and the directions—everywhere it seemed to be clear and bright². (8)

[Note—¹The three qualities that make the air pleasant are the following: it should be cool, it should be fragrant, and it should be blowing softly.

²To wit, it was a bright sunny day. The sky and the air were clear; one could see distinctly in the far away horizon. There was a soft, cool and fragrant breeze wafting across the land and caressing all aboard the plane. From high up in the sky where the Pushpak cruised, all water bodies down below on the earth looked clear and calm. And taken all in all, every thing seemed to have acquired an auspicious hue.]

कह रघुबीर देखु रन सीता । लछिमान इहाँ हत्यो इंद्रजीता ॥ ९ ॥
 हनूमान अंगद के मारे । रन महि परे निसाचर भारे ॥ १० ॥ कुंभकरन रावन द्वौ भाई । इहाँ हते सुर मुनि दुखदाई ॥ ११ ॥

kaha raghubīra dēkhu rana sītā. lachimana ihāṁ hatyō im̐drajītā. 9.
 hanūmāna aṅgada kē mārē. rana mahi parē nisācara bhārē. 10.
 kumbhakarana rāvana dvau bhāī. ihāṁ hatē sura muni dukhadāī. 11.

[Meanwhile, Lord Ram pointed out to Sita some of the landmarks down on the ground below as the plane lifted and became airborne on its way to Ayodhya.]

‘Look Sita’, said Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) as he pointed out to her the different places of importance down below on the ground, ‘This is the place where Laxman had slayed Indrajeet (Meghand)¹. (9)

This below is the place where the two brothers Kumbhakaran² and Ravana³, who had been tormentors of pious sages, were eliminated. (10)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 76 along with Chaupai line nos. 14-16 that precede it.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 70—to Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 71.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 102—to Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103.]

दो०. इहाँ सेतु बाँध्यों अरु थापेउँ सिव सुख धाम ।
सीता सहित कृपानिधि संभुहि कीन्ह प्रनाम ॥ ११९ (क) ॥ जहँ जहँ कृपासिंधु बन कीन्ह बास बिश्राम ।
सकल देखाए जानकिहि कहे सबन्हि के नाम ॥ ११९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

ihāṁ sētu bāṁdhyōm aru thāpē'uṁ siva sukha dhāma.
sītā sahita kṛpānidhi sambhuhi kīnha pranāma. 119 (a).
jahāṁ jahāṁ kṛpāsindhu bana kīnha bāsa bisrāma.
sakala dēkhā'ē jānakihi kahē sabanhi kē nāma. 119 (b).

‘This is the site where I had got the bridge constructed to tame the ocean¹ and here below is where I consecrated Lord Shiva’s image and worshipped him².’

Seeing Lord Shiva’s holy Icon below, Lord Ram, who was like a treasury of the virtues of mercy, grace and kindness (kṛpānidhi), bowed his head along with Sita to pay his respects to Lord Shiva. (Doha no. 119-a)

As the plane crossed the ocean and moved northwards across the mainland, Lord Ram pointed to Sita and told her the names of all the different places he had visited and abided for some time during his long journey southwards from Panchavati from where she was abducted by Ravana³. (Doha no. 119-b)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 1 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 2.

³To wit, Lord Ram was retracing his steps as he pointed out to Sita all the places he had visited and stayed while searching for her.

First came to sight the city and the kingdom of Kishkindha, and the Prabarshan hill where he stayed for four months during the rainy season before the campaign to find Sita was launched. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-10 that precede Doha no. 12.

Next came into view Mt. Rishyamook where Lord Ram had met Hanuman and Sugriv for the first time. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 44.

Now, as the plane cruised over Kishkindha, passing over the capital city, over the nearby Mt. Prabarshan and Mt. Rishyamook, Lord Ram's monkey and bear friends erupted in joy. Lord Ram ordered the plane to slow down and descend in height so that Sugriv, Jamvant, Angad, Hanuman, Nala, Neela etc. could have a bird's eye view of their homeland, the landscape of which looked so grand and majestic from the sky, what with its natural beauty and charming range of undulating hills and deep valleys, verdant forests and green meadows, crystal clear brooks and streams, and all other bounties of Mother Nature that this place was abundantly graced with. As the plane hovered overhead, the citizens of Kishkindha rushed out to marvel at this spectacle, whereat Sugriv and the rest waved at them enthusiastically from the sky while those on the ground cheered back in approval. It is quite possible that Sugriv and Angad and the rest of the monkey chieftains must have dropped some kind of message from the plane for their subjects standing on the ground below, telling them that everything was fine, that they are going to Ayodhya to join the celebrations marking Lord Ram's appointment as the king of that great kingdom, and that their kith and kin who had gone to Lanka as part of the mighty army are all on their way back, and will arrive very soon.

Sita too joined in these moments of joy and happiness as she remembered that it was at Rishyamook that she had seen some monkeys sitting on its summit, and that she had dropped some part of her torn clothes and ornaments to them from the chariot in which Ravana was taking her away to Lanka, so that should Lord Ram come that way these monkeys would show these things to the Lord, which in turn would convince the Lord that she was indeed taken in this direction. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 25 that precedes Doha no. 29; and Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 5.

After a brief pause over Kishkindha, the plane moved ahead northwards to reach the place where Lord Ram had met and given a brief discourse to sage Narad near a pleasant lake. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 41—to Chanda line nos. 1-4 precede Doha no. 46.

Then, after passing over the pleasant forest north of this lake, the plane came to the place where Lord Ram had blessed Sabari. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 37.

Further north came the place where Lord Ram had met the wounded vulture king Jatayu and provided him with deliverance. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 33.

And finally, the plane reached the sky above Panchavati, the hermitage from where Sita was abducted by Ravana. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Doha no. 13; (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Doha no. 28.]

चौ०. तुरत बिमान तहाँ चलि आवा । दंडक बन जहँ परम सुहावा ॥ १ ॥

कुंभजादि मुनिनायक नाना । गए रामु सब कें अस्थाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

turata bimāna tahāṁ cali āvā. daṇḍaka bana jahaṁ parama suhāvā. 1.
kumbhajādi munināyaka nānā. ga'ē rāmu saba kēṁ asthānā. 2.

The plane soon arrived over the pleasant Dandak forest¹. (1)

Lord Ram visited the hermitages of the many sages who lived here, such as sage Kumbhaj (sage Agastya) and others². (2)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 16 that precedes Doha no. 13—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 14.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-11 that precede Doha no. 12.

Besides sage Agastya, Lord Ram had met many other sages, such as Atri*1, Sarbhanga*2 and Sutikshan*3, during his outward journey to the forest, and so it was natural that during this visit when he was returning to Ayodhya he must have paid a visit to all these sages to seek their blessings.

{*1Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 3.

*2Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 7.

*3Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 10 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-24 that precede it.}

One important thing that is to be noted here is that the Pushapk plane had landed on the ground, for otherwise it was not possible for Lord Ram to visit the hermitages of these sages.

Another point is that it must have been brief visits, as Lord Ram had but little time left in his hands to reach Ayodhya as he has himself told Vibhishan about it a little while earlier—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 116.]

सकल रिषिन्ह सन पाइ असीसा । चित्रकूट आए जगदीसा ॥ ३ ॥

तहँ करि मुनिन्ह केर संतोषा । चला बिमानु तहाँ ते चोखा ॥ ४ ॥ sakala riṣinha sana pā'i asīsā. citrakūṭa ā'ē jagadīsā. 3.

tahaṁ kari muninha kēra santōṣā. calā bimānu tahāṁ tē cōkhā. 4.

After receiving blessings and permission from all the sages, the Lord of the world ("jagadīsā"; Lord Ram) arrived at Chitrakoot¹. (3)

After the Lord met and provided satisfaction to the sages and hermits living there², the plane began its onwards journey from there. (4)

[Note—Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 132—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 134.]

It was at Chitrakoot that Bharat had come to try and take Lord Ram back to Ayodhya. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 239—to Doha no. 319.}

It naturally follows that the sight of Chitrakoot filled Lord Ram's heart with sadness as he recalled those days when Bharat had come there to take him back to Ayodhya. It made him more eager to reach Ayodhya as soon as it was possible.

This is the reason why Lord Ram did not make a stopover at Chitrakoot, as he had done earlier at the Dandak forest where he met sage Agastya etc. (refer: Chaupai line nos. 1-2 herein above), to meet the sages living there, such as sage Atri and his wife Anasuiya, but preferred to continue on his journey to Ayodhya. This is also the main reason why the Lord did not stop at sage Valmiki's hermitage beyond Chitrakoot, nor at sage Bharadwaj's hermitage at Prayag, but merely bowed his head, and made Sita and others to bow theirs too, from the sky as they beheld the two holy rivers Yamuna and Ganges at Triveni, while continuing with the onwards journey to Ayodhya, without stopping the plane or reducing its speed.

²Amongst the great sages who lived in the neighbourhood of Chitrakoot was the prominent sage Atri. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 132.}

When Lord Ram established his modest hut there to tarry a while before moving ahead on his journey to the deeper parts of the forest, and onwards to Lanka, all the sages, hermits and ascetics who abided in Chitrakoot to do Tapa (penances and other spiritual practices) had come to visit the Lord and pay their obeisance to him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 134 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.}

बहुरि राम जानकिहि देखाई । जमुना कलि मल हरनि सुहाई ॥ ५ ॥
पुनि देखी सुरसरी पुनीता । राम कहा प्रनाम करु सीता ॥ ६ ॥ bahuri rāma jānakihi dēkhā'ī. jamunā kali mala harani suhā'ī. 5.

puni dēkhī surasarī punītā. rāma kahā pranāma karu sītā. 6.

After that, Lord Ram showed Janki (Sita; the daughter of king Janak), the holy river Jamuna¹, which has the mystical ability to wash away all sorts of impurities associated with the age of Kaliyug (the present era of the four-era cycle of creation and destruction). (5)

Soon they saw the purifying holy river of the gods, known as Ganges². When this river came into view, Lord Ram asked Sita to bow her head to it to pay her obeisance to the holy river. (6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 322.]

When Bharat was going back to Ayodhya from Chitrakoot, this was the exact sequence of rivers that he had crossed. First he crossed Jamuna, and then Ganges. The confluence of these two great rivers and a third one known as Saraswati is a great place for pilgrimage, and it is known as Triveni as well as Prayag. Sage Bharadwaj lived nearby.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 322.

So, the plane also passed over river Yamuna first, and Ganges next. To wit, the plane was now over Triveni—as we shall read in the next two verses.]

तीरथपति पुनि देखु प्रयागा । निरखत जन्म कोटि अघ भागा ॥ ७ ॥
देखु परम पावनि पुनि बेनी । हरनि सोक हरि लोक निसेनी ॥ ८ ॥ पुनि देखु अवधपुरी अति पावनि । त्रिबिध ताप भव रोग नसावनि ॥ ९ ॥ tīrathapati puni dēkhu prayāgā. nirakhata janma kōṭi agha bhāgā. 7.

dēkhu parama pāvani puni bēnī. harani sōka hari lōka nisēnī. 8.
puni dēkhu avadhapurī ati pāvani. tribidha tāpa bhava rōga nasāvani. 9.

[Lord Ram told Sita—] Now look at Prayag which is called a ‘king of holy places (tīrathapati)’. It is so holy that by merely looking at it all the sins and spiritual faults of a creature that has been accumulated over countless previous births simply run away¹. (7)

Look ahead; there you can see the confluence of the three holy rivers (Ganges, Yamuna and Saraswati) that is renowned as ‘Triveni’. It can eliminate and dispel all worldly sorrows and grief; it is also like a ladder that can transport a creature to heaven². (8)

Again, see there—you can behold the pleasant and sacred city of Ayodhya. It is able to eliminate the three types of agonies that torment a living being, as well as the pain and misery associated with the gross world of transmigration that the creature suffers from.³ (9)

[Note—¹Prayag is honoured by the epithet ‘King of all holy places’ because it can eliminate all spiritual faults of a creature, not only of the present birth but of many previous births combined.

²These repeated honours and laurels for this broad geographical area known Prayag, that consists of the confluence of the three great rivers and its adjoining areas where sages and hermit had their hermitages, is because it is regarded as a very holy place in Hinduism. Verse nos. 5-8 are devoted to this holy place.

Sage Bharadwaj had his hermitage here. Now the question is: Did Lord Ram visit the sage to pay his respects to the latter? Yes, he did; we shall read about it soon in Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 121 herein below.

No mention is made in the Text regarding sage Valmiki’s hermitage which lay between sage Bharadwaj’s place in Prayag and Chitrakoot. Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman had visited the sage during their outward journey into the depth of the forest, and it was on Valmiki’s advice that the Lord stayed in Chitrakoot. {Refer: Ram Charit

Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 124—to Doha no. 132.}

So it apparently looks like the Pushpak plane had skirted sage Valmiki's hermitage while on its way to Ayodhya; it is probably because it was situated at a location that was little way off from the straight-line aerial path that the plane was ordered to take to Ayodhya to save time.

³The three types of agonies are: 'Daihik'—that associated with the creature's own body; 'Daivik'—that associated with unfavourable Gods and Nature; and 'Bhautik'—that associated with the physical world outside.

Freedom from the cycle of birth and death, with torments and miseries associated with the latter, is obtained by the positive spiritual effects of the sacred city of Ayodhya by the virtue of its being the place where Lord Ram, a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, took birth and lived.]

दो०. सीता सहित अवध कहूँ कीन्ह कृपाल प्रनाम ।

सजल नयन तन पुलकित पुनि पुनि हरषित राम ॥१२०(क)॥

dōhā.

sītā sahita avadha kahuṁ kīnha krpāla pranāma.

sajala nayana tana pulakita puni puni haraṣita rāma.120(a).

As soon as the holy city of Ayodhya hove into view, the merciful Lord Ram, along with Sita (and of course with Laxman and others who were accompanying him aboard the plane) bowed his head to this city.

The sight of Ayodhya overwhelmed Lord Ram so much so that his eyes welled up with tears and his body was repeatedly thrilled with a waves of affectionate emotions (as he remembered the past days and the love and affection that was bestowed upon him by every single resident of the city)¹. (Doha no. 120-a)

[Note—¹Lord Ram was overcome with nostalgia; he remembered his childhood days, his friends, his loving subjects who loved him so immensely that when he was leaving the city for the forest, the entire city had followed him on foot, vowing not to leave him and accompanying him to wherever he goes, declaring that they have nothing to do with a city, no matter how prosperous and comfortable it may have been, when their beloved Lord has decided to leave it behind. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 81—to Doha no. 86.}

It ought to be noted here that Lord Ram had bowed his head to Ayodhya even at the time when he was leaving the city for the forest (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 83).

Another point to note here is that it is mentioned everywhere that 'Lord Ram bowed at this place and that place himself and asked Sita to do as well', but no mention is made of others, such as his own brother Laxman, as well as his honoured guests who were on the plane. The answer is this: In Hinduism, a person is expected to perform all sacred deeds and rites with his wife if she happens to be with him on the occasion. In our case, Sita was with Lord Ram, and so it was obligatory for him to follow this rule. It does not mean that others did not accompany the Lord to bow their heads to Ayodhya here, or to the holy rivers Yamuna and Ganges earlier at Triveni, or to the various sages the Lord had stopped his plane to meet and pay his obeisance to.

From a practical point of view, many things are understood by application of one's common sense, and it should not be expected from anyone, no matter how erudite and detailed a chronicler is, to list every person's name attending an event in his narration of it.]

पुनि प्रभु आइ त्रिबेनीं हरषित मज्जनु कीन्ह ।

कपिन्ह सहित बिप्रन्ह कहूँ दान बिबिध बिधि दीन्ह ॥ १२० (ख) ॥ puni prabhu ā'i tribēnīm haraṣita majjanu kīnha.

kapinha sahita bipranha kahuṁ dāna bibidha bidhi dīnha. 120 (b).

The Lord once again returned to Triveni (the confluence of rivers Yamuna, Ganges and Saraswati, at Prayag). He descended and took a bath at the place where the three rivers meet.

Lord Ram, along with his Kapi friends (the monkeys and bears), made charities here and gave donations to Brahmins in various ways (as ordained by religious scriptures)¹. (Doha no. 120-b)

[Note—¹An interesting question arises here: From where, and how, did Lord Ram and his companions make charities and manage to give donations to the Brahmins when apparently they had no wealth with them at that time, as they were coming directly from Lanka aboard a plane that too belonged to the kingdom of Lanka?

The answer is this: We have already read that Vibhishan had filled his Pushpak plane with priceless jewels and clothes and placed them before Lord Ram as a tribute to him, whereat the Lord had asked Vibhishan to go up in the sky and shower these things on the army so that the monkeys and bears could pick up what they fancied. So this is how the great monkey and bear commanders aboard the plane had access to some valuables that they would not donate to the Brahmins as expected from them.

As for Lord Ram, in all probability he made a promise to the alms seekers and the Brahmins at that time, that as soon as he is crowned on the throne of Ayodhya he would send them all that he has promised to them now. Well, everyone recognized the Lord, and surely they were willing to bless the Lord as profusely as if they had actually received their desired gifts. They all knew that Lord Ram had nothing with him then, and they could see that he was still attired like a hermit.

And as for Sita, we have already noted earlier, at the time of her 'fire test', that though Vibhishan had erred in adoring her with jewels and royal robes as a mark of respect, yet Lord Ram had made her shun all these things as they, Lord Ram as well as Sita, were still expected to live and attire as forest dwellers. And we have also noted that this was a primary reason which had made Lord Ram very angry at Sita. So therefore, she too didn't have anything with her to donate to these alms seekers.]

चौ०. प्रभु हनुमंतहि कहा बुझाई । धरि बटु रूप अवधपुर जाई ॥ १ ॥

भरतहि कुसल हमारि सुनाएहु । समाचार लै तुम्ह चलि आएहु ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu hanumantahi kahā bujhā'ī. dhari baṭu rūpa avadhapura jā'ī. 1.
bharatahi kusala hamāri sunā'ēhu. samācāra lai tumha cali ā'ēhu. 2.

Lord Ram called Hanuman and advised him as follows: 'Assume the form of a young Brahmin student (baṭu)¹ and go to the city of Ayodhya. (1)

Tell Bharat about our well-being, and come back to me with the news that you collect there.' (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram chose Hanuman for this work because of the following primary reasons:

One, the Lord knew that Hanuman could assume any form that he wished, especially as a Brahmin, because he had first met the Lord at the foot of Mt. Rishyamook in this form when Sugriv asked him to go and meet the Lord to find out who he was—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4 and 6 that precede Doha no. 1.

It was necessary to be disguised as a Brahmin, especially a young Brahmin student, as this form is shown respect by everyone, and it would therefore help Hanuman to have easy access to Ayodhya and meet Bharat to convey the Lord's message to him without arousing any alarm or suspicion in the mind of the guards who were appointed to secure the hermitage where Bharat abided in Nandigram on the outskirts of Ayodhya.

Two, Hanuman was able to cruise in the sky very swiftly as was proved on two prominent occasions earlier—once was when he had gone to the northern mountains to bring the herb needed to revive Laxman, and on another occasion when he had sailed over the mighty ocean to reach Lanka in search of Sita. Lord Ram needed someone who would silently and unnoticed sail through the sky very swiftly, and return back as swiftly after meeting Bharat and conveying the good news of the Lord's return from the forest.

Three, Lord Ram knew that Hanuman was highly intelligent and able to handle unexpected developments. The Lord wanted to find out if he was actually welcomed back in Ayodhya, of how Bharat would receive this news of his arrival—as is apparent in verse no. 2. Hanuman was clever enough to handle any difficult situation should it arise, and also wise enough to maneuver himself out of a sticky situation in case it unfortunately turned out that way. He was able in every respect—bodily he was strong and agile, mentally he was intelligent and wise, emotionally he was stable, was very polite and courteous in his mannerism, was basically warm at heart yet cold if dealing with a hostile correspondent, and in every way well qualified to be an excellent ambassador for his Lord.

Four, Hanuman had already met Bharat while bringing the herb to revive Laxman. So it would be very easy for him to go straight to the place where Bharat lived, as well as to recognize him. Besides this, Bharat too would easily recognize Hanuman after the latter formally introduces himself and reminds Bharat of their previous meeting by citing some part of its conversation in order to convince Bharat of his authenticity. No other member of the Lord's company had this benefit with him; none knew Bharat personally, nor did Bharat know any one of them.

Five, the Lord still had some time left in his hands before the exact time of 14 years of forest exile ended; a full day's time was still left (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1). Lord Ram wished to use this time to visit sage Bharadwaj, as well as Nishad, his friend of the boatman community, which he did not do while heading straight to Ayodhya because he was in a hurry to reach it in case he missed the deadline of 14 years to the dot. By sending Hanuman to inform Bharat that the Lord had arrived, the fear of Bharat harming himself, should there be some delay while the Lord spent some time with sage Bharadwaj and Nishad, was dispelled. Once Hanuman tells Bharat that the Lord has actually arrived but has gone back to pay his respects to sage Bharadwaj and then meet Nishad before coming to Ayodhya, Bharat would not do anything reckless, for surely he would have no objection at the Lord going back for a while to meet his acquaintances and friends who stood him in good stead in the forest.

Six, the Lord's plane had approached the city of Ayodhya from the southern direction, roughly the same direction where Bharat had established his hermitage at a place known as Nandigram on the southern outskirts of the city, and had been abiding there for the last 14 years. As the Pushpak plane approached the city and hovered over the sky, Lord Ram could clearly perceive Bharat's place, as well as the fact that everything appeared to be quiet and normal on the ground within the city itself; there were no hectic activities, which in turn meant that there was no cause of alarm and hurry to descend. Since one day's time was still left in hand before the expiry of an exact period of 14 years, Lord Ram decided to use it more prudently by paying a visit to sage Bharadwaj and Nishad even as Hanuman goes to give an advance notice to Bharat of the Lord's arrival.]

तुरत पवनसुत गवनत भयऊ । तब प्रभु भरद्वाज पहिं गयऊ ॥ ३ ॥
 नाना बिधि मुनि पूजा कीन्ही । अस्तुति करि पुनि आसिष दीन्ही ॥ ४ ॥ मुनि पद बंदि जुगल कर जोरी । चढ़ि बिमान प्रभु चले बहोरी ॥ ५ ॥ turata pavanasuta gavanata bhaya'ū. taba prabhu bharadvāja pahim̐ gaya'ū.

 3.

nānā bidhi muni pūjā kīnhī. astuti kari puni āsiṣa dīnhī. 4.
 muni pada bandi jugala kara jōrī. caḍhi bimāna prabhu calē bahōrī. 5.

No sooner had the Lord given him instructions then Hanuman went off on his mission.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram went to meet sage Bharadwaj¹. (3)

The sage worshipped Lord Ram in a variety of ways, offering his prayers and obeisance to the Lord, as well as blessing him². (4)

After their affectionate meeting, Lord Ram joined the palms of his hand in a gesture of reverence as he took his leave from the sage.

The Lord boarded the plane once again and headed to his next destination. (5)

[Note—¹Sage Bharadwaj's hermitage was situated at Prayag, the site of Triveni, the confluence of the three holy rivers Yamuna, Ganges and Saraswati. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 106; and (b) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 44.}]

It means that after sending Hanuman on errand, Lord Ram ordered the plane to turn back and return to Prayag.

An interesting observation is to be made at this juncture: The Pushpak plane had not landed yet; it was still airborne. It follows that after Lord Ram had instructed Hanuman to go to Bharat and tell him the good news that the Lord has arrived, Hanuman had gone on his assignment directly from the sky. We are aware of his ability to 'fly' or 'cruise' or 'sail' in the air, as he has done it in the past on at least two prominent occasions: once when crossing the ocean to search Sita, and the second time when he had gone to the northern mountains to bring the herb to revive Laxman who lay wounded in the battle-field of Lanka. This helped the Lord to order the plane to turn back mid-air, as it saved a lot of time, to fulfill his wishes to go and meet sage Bharadwaj and the chief of the boatman community, Nishad.

We have read that the Lord instructed Hanuman to disguise himself as a young Brahmin; so what Hanuman must have done was to land at some distant from Bharat's hermitage in Nandigram and transmute himself into a Brahmin before walking to the hermitage. If any guard stopped him and asked who he was, Hanuman would have told him that he has come to meet Bharat with an important message. Since he was in the physical form of a Brahmin, a form that is universally respected, no one would have questioned him further. It is in this way that Hanuman could have an easy access to Bharat. When they met, of course, Hanuman told Bharat who he actually was.

²Sage Bharadwaj offered his prayers and obeisance to Lord Ram as the latter was the 'Lord of the world', and he blessed the Lord because he was a very revered, a senior and an illustrious sage of great learning.

When Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman had visited sage Bharadwaj on their way to the forest, at that time too the sage had done the same thing—he had worshipped the Lord, prayed to him, and blessed him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 106 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.}

इहाँ निषाद सुना प्रभु आए । नाव नाव कहँ लोग बोलाए ॥ ६ ॥
सुरसरि नाघि जान तब आयो । उतरेउ तट प्रभु आयसु पायो ॥ ७ ॥ ihāṁ niṣāda sunā prabhu ā'ē. nāva nāva kahaṁ lōga bōlā'ē. 6.

surasari nāghi jāna taba āyō. utarē'u taṭa prabhu āyasu pāyō. 7.

Here, when Nishad heard that Lord Ram is arriving, he immediately sent out a message to all the members of the boatman community (of which he was the chief) and summoned them to assemble on the banks of river Ganges. (6)

The plane crossed the river Ganges and arrived on this side (where Nishad was waiting for the Lord). The plane was then ordered by Lord Ram to land on the bank of the river. (7)

तब सीताँ पूजी सुरसरी । बहु प्रकार पुनि चरनन्हि परी ॥ ८ ॥ दीन्हि असीस हरषि मन गंगा । सुंदरि तव अहिवात अभंगा ॥ ९ ॥ taba sītāṃ pūjī surasarī. bahu prakāra puni carananhi parī. 8.

dīnhi asīsa haraṣi mana gaṅgā. sundari tava ahivāta abhaṅgā. 9.

Then Sita offered her worship to the holy river Ganges, the river of the gods (surasarī) in various ways, and then prostrated at the feet of the deity of the river to pay her obeisance¹. (8)

River Ganges, in a personified form, felt very happy, and blessed Sita profusely, saying: ‘Oh fair lady! May you be blessed with a happy married life for an eternal time.’ (9)

[Note—¹Sita had offered her worship to the deity of river Ganges on her way out to the forest and sought the deity’s blessings for protection and safety for herself, her husband Lord Ram, and her brother-in-law Laxman during their period of trial in the forest, promising the deity that she would come again to pay her respects to the latter on the return journey back to Ayodhya. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 103 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede it.}]

It was one main reason why Lord Ram decided to turn back from Ayodhya to go to the same place to enable Sita to keep her vows made to the holy river.]

सुनत गुहा धायउ प्रेमाकुल । आयउ निकट परम सुख संकुल ॥ १० ॥
प्रभुहि सहित बिलोकि बैदेही । परेउ अवनि तन सुधि नहिं तेही ॥ ११ ॥
प्रीति परम बिलोकि रघुराई । हरषि उठाइ लियो उर लाई ॥ १२ ॥

sunata guhā dhāya'u prēmākula. āya'u nikata parama sukha saṅkula. 10.
prabhuhi sahita bilōki baidēhī. parē'u avani tana sudhi nahim tēhī. 11.
prīti parama bilōki raghurāī. haraṣi uṭhā'i liyō ura lāī. 12.

As soon as Nishad (whose other name was “Guha”; “guhā”) heard that Lord Ram has landed, he rushed forward to meet and welcome the Lord. He went near the Lord with emotions of extreme joy and happiness overwhelming him. (10)

When he beheld Lord Ram along with Vaidehi (Sita), he felt so thrilled and exhilarated that he lost awareness of his body as he fell down on the ground before the Lord (to express his joy and show reverence for the Lord). (11)

When Lord Ram, the Lord of the Raghus (raghurāī), observed Nishad’s immense affection for him, the Lord became very emotional even as he lifted Nishad up from the ground and embraced him most lovingly¹. (12)

[Note—¹A special bond of friendship and affection had developed between Lord Ram and Nishad. When the Lord was on his way to the forest, he reached Sringeripur where Nishad lived. There the two met, and Nishad, along with his entire family and friends, had offered his worship to the Lord, and given him sweet fruits and edible roots as refreshment. Nishad had kept vigil as Lord Ram and Sita slept under a tree during the night. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 87—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 92.}]

Though it is not clearly mentioned in the main Text of ‘Ram Charit Manas’ about till when Nishad accompanied Lord Ram into the forest, but in all probability it was till Chitrakoot. This would be evident on close analysis of the Text—for when we reach the point in the narrative of Lord Ram’s journey into the forest and his establishing a small hermitage at Chitrakoot, the Text says that Nishad returned home, and on the way he found Sumantra, the chief minister of Ayodhya who had brought Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman in a chariot on the instructions of king Dasrath, still somewhere near the banks of river Ganges, grieving for the Lord. It was here that Sumantra was left by Lord Ram as he crossed the river on a boat to reach the other side and continue with his onwards journey. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 142.}

छं०. लियो हृदयँ लाइ कृपा निधान सुजान रायँ रमापती । १ ।
 बैठारि परम समीप बूझी कुसल सो कर बीनती ॥ २ ॥
 अब कुसल पद पंकज बिलोकि बिरंचि संकर सेव्य जे । ३ । सुख धाम पूरनकाम राम नमामि राम नमामि ते ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

liyō hr̥dayaṁ lā'i kṛpā nidhāna sujāna rāyaṁ ramāpatī. 1.
 baiṭhāri parama samīpa būjhī kusala sō kara bīnatī. 2.
 aba kusala pada paṅkaja bilōki birañci saṅkara sēbya jē. 3.
 sukha dhāma pūranakāma rāma namāmi rāma namāmi tē. 4.

Lord Ram—who is a veritable treasury of the glorious virtues of grace, mercy, kindness and compassion (kṛpā nidhāna), who is an exemplary gentleman (sujāna), the Lord of the world (rāyaṁ), and Lord Vishnu, the divine husband of goddess Rama (also known as Laxmi; “ramāpatī”)—picked up and clasped Nishad affectionately to his bosom. (Chanda line no. 1)

Then the Lord made Nishad sit very close to him (signaling that the Lord treated Nishad as a dear friend), and asked the latter about his welfare. (Chanda line no. 2)

Nishad replied, ‘Oh Lord! Now that I have seen the lotus-like feet of yours, feet that are served and worshipped by the creator Brahma and the concluder Shiva, everything is fine with me. (Chanda line no. 3)

Oh Lord Ram who is an abode of joy, happiness and bliss (sukha dhāma), and who is a fulfiller of all wishes (pūranakāma)! I repeatedly bow my head before your majesty (rāma namāmi rāma namāmi tē). (Chanda line no. 4)

सब भाँति अधम निषाद सो हरि भरत ज्यों उर लाइयो । ५ ।
 मतिमंद तुलसीदास सो प्रभु मोह बस बिसराइयो ॥ ६ ॥
 यह रावनारि चरित्र पावन राम पद रतिप्रद सदा । ७ । कामादिहर बिग्यानकर सुर सिद्ध मुनि गावहिं मुदा ॥ ८ ॥ saba bhāṁti adhama niṣāda sō hari bharata jyōm ura lā'iyō. 5.

 matimanda tulasīdāsa sō prabhu mōha basa bisarā'iyō. 6.
 yaha rāvanāri caritra pāvana rāma pada ratiprada sadā. 7.
 kāmādhara bigyānakara sura sid'dha muni gāvahim mudā. 8.

I am a lowly person by all accounts, but you are so gracious and kind that you have so affectionately embraced me as if I was like your own dear brother Bharat¹.’ (Chanda line no. 5)

[Goswami Tulsidas, the poet-saint who first penned the divine Story of ‘Ram Charit Manas’ as we know of it today, addresses himself and says—]

“Oh Tulsidas! Say how stupid you are to have forgotten such a magnanimous and gracious Lord as Lord Ram (who had gone out of his way to show so much love for even a lowly person as a boatman, treating him as if he was very dear to him and elevating him to the same pedestal as his own brother Bharat).²” (Chanda line no. 6)

This Story relating the life of Lord Ram who had slayed Ravana is spiritually purifying and elevating for the soul of a living being, for it grants a person the benefit of having eternal devotion for the holy feet of the Lord who is no one else but a personified form of the Supreme Being. (Chanda line no. 7)

This divine Story helps to eliminate all worldly enemies such as Kaam (passions) etc. that torment a creature; it also blesses one with spiritual enlightenment and wisdom.

This is why illustrious sages, the exalted gods and great mystics sing it most enthusiastically. (Chanda line no. 8)

[Note—¹When Bharat had gone to Chitrakoot to bring Lord Ram back to Ayodhya, Nishad had accompanied him. It was Nishad who had guided Bharat to the Lord’s hermitage. Nishad was also a witness of the most loving way Lord Ram had clasped Bharat to his bosom when the two brothers finally met. At that time, Lord Ram had embraced Nishad too.

{Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 198; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 203; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 216; (iv) Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 225; (v) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 237—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 239; (vi) Doha no. 240 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede it; (vii) Doha no. 241.}

So, all this memory was fresh in Nishad’s mind; he became overwhelmed with gratitude and thankfulness when he realized that Lord Ram took a special detour just to come and meet him.

²Tulsidas warns himself never to forget Lord Ram, as he will never find any other Lord as gracious and kind as Lord Ram is.]

दो०. समर बिजय रघुबीर के चरित जे सुनहिं सुजान ।

बिजय बिबेक बिजूति नित तिन्हहि देहिं भगवान ॥ १२१ (क) ॥

dōhā.

samara bijaya raghubīra kē carita jē sunahim sujāna.
bijaya bibēka bibhūti nita tinahi dēhim bhagavāna. 121 (a).

Those wise gentlemen with good understanding and high intellect who hear this magnificent story of Lord Rughbir's victory in the epic war (of Lanka) are always blessed by the Lord (Sri Ram) with the boon of victory in all the endeavours in their lives, as well as by the virtues of wisdom and attainment of worldly prosperity¹. (Doha no. 121-a) [Note—¹A similar idea is affirmed by the saintly crow Kaagbhusund in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 120 while explaining the importance of the company of saints where the divine Story of Lord Ram is recited and discoursed upon.

The great rewards that accrue to a spiritual seeker by hearing Lord Ram's divine Story are elaborately enumerated in Ram Charit Manas at a number of places. Some of these are the following verses: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Uttar Kand, Doha no. 128—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 129; Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 126; Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 53; and (b) Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 31—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 33.]

यह कलिकाल मलायतन मन करि देखु बिचार । श्रीरघुनाथ नाम तजि नाहिन आन अधार ॥ १२१ (ख) ॥

yaha kalikāla malāyatana mana kari dēkhu bicāra.
śrīraghunātha nāma taji nāhina āna adhāra. 121 (b).

[In this verse, Tulsidas addresses his own self and says—]

‘Oh my Mana (my inner-self; my heart and sub-conscious mind)! Ponder over the matter wisely and patiently, and arrive at the unequivocal Truth yourself. The present age of Kaliyug is a veritable den of all sorts of sins, mischief, vices and other evil devices. In this spiritual quagmire, the only source of succour and solace for the trapped creature is to be found in the holy name of Lord Raghubir, which is “Ram” (pronounced as Raam; or ‘Rām’)¹, for in all sooth and without gainsay there is no other way.’ (Doha no. 121-b)

[Note—¹The great spiritual significance of the holy name of Lord Ram, i.e. the word “Rām”, especially with reference to Kaliyug, is detailed elsewhere in Ram Charit Manas. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand, Doha no. 27 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-9 that precede it and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it; and (b) Uttar Kand, Doha no. 103 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it; and Chaupai line nos. 5-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 130.

Meanwhile, a whole set of verses in Baal Kand of Ram Charit Manas are dedicated to extolling the glories of Lord Ram's holy name: apropos—from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 28.]

(v) Sub-section 21.1.5: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-4 and Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 12:

दो०. रहा एक दिन अवधि कर अति आरत पुर लोग । जहँ तहँ सोचहिं नारि नर कृस तन राम बियोग ॥ क ॥

dōhā.

rahā ēka dina avadhi kara ati ārata pura lōga.
jaham̐ taham̐ sōcahim̐ nāri nara kṛsa tana rāma biyōga. a .

One day was left before the exact period of 14 years (during which Lord Ram was to live in the forest in accordance to the word given by him to his late father king Dasrath) would finally come to end.

The anxious citizens of Ayodhya, both the males and the females, were extremely eager to see the Lord back home by that time. They had all been so overcome with grief and sorrows during the Lord's long absence that they had become weak in their bodies and fidgety in their minds, especially because there was apprehension as to what would happen now if the Lord did not return in time¹. (Doha-a) [Note—¹When Lord Ram was on his way to the forest 14 years ago, the citizens had become overwhelmed with grief and sorrows at that time too. They had abandoned the prosperous city of Ayodhya and their own comfortable homesteads with a firm determination to follow the Lord and live wherever he decides to live in the forest. But since this was impractical, and it would cause a lot of problems to the citizens themselves, so Lord Ram was forced to, much against his will and with a heavy heart, devise a way to leave the grief-stricken citizens while they were sleeping during the night, and quietly move ahead into the forest on a path which they wouldn't be able to follow.

Remorse and pain of separation descended the subjects like a heavy mist of grief when they discovered in the morning that the Lord was nowhere to be found. Crestfallen, distraught, forlorn and broken in heart, the poor citizens had no option but to return to Ayodhya and somehow wait for the period of 14 years to end, for they were so sure of Lord's words that they knew for certain that even if the heaven and hell break loose from their moorings, Lord Ram can never rescind on his words that he would be back in Ayodhya just when the period of 14 years ended, which made them absolutely sure that the Lord would be with them after this period.

But this was a painfully long and a burdensome wait, and though the citizens had been left with no other choice but to go through the needs of routine life, yet they did it mechanically like someone dumb and deaf is yoked to a plough. The nearer the end of the period 14 years approached, the greater became their anxiety and eagerness and nervousness. The only talk was about Lord Ram's arrival; everyone was on the lookout for any news of the Lord. Bharat must have surely appointed spies all along the route which the Lord was in all probability to take, the same path which Bharat himself had traveled on his way to and back from Chitrakoot. But as of date, there was no news. This exacerbated the people's anxiety and made them very apprehensive. No one could guess that Lord Ram was coming by the aerial route; there was no way they could have known it.

Surely then, when the news of the Lord's arrival was actually conveyed to Bharat by Hanuman, and then by Bharat to the citizens, there must have been a spontaneous and tumultuous applause, and a thunderous cry of joy that reverberated in all the directions.

Meanwhile, auspicious signs heralding good times were discernible, and those who were wise and sagacious in these matters could see that it meant positive tidings. They comforted the grieving people and assured them that Lord Ram was sure to come.]

सगुन होहिं सुंदर सकल मन प्रसन्न सब केर ।

प्रभु आगवन जनाव जनु नगर रञ्ज चहुं फेर ॥ ख ॥ saguna hōhim sundara sakala mana prasanna saba kēra.

prabhu āgavana janāva janu nagara ramya cahuñ phēra. b.

Auspicious signs and good omens appeared in abundance, portending lucky tidings¹. Seeing them filled the heart of everyone with joy and happiness.

These positive signs were very encouraging, and they were indicating to the citizens that Lord Ram was soon to arrive. The city of Ayodhya, which was hitherto gloomy and overcast with a thick mist of grief, too appeared to suddenly become pleasant and charming in all its directions (as if the sun of good hope had emerged from behind a bank of dark cloud symbolizing hopelessness and helplessness)². (Doha-b)

[Note—¹Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 7.

²Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 3.]

कौसल्यादि मातु सब मन अनंद अस होइ ।

आयउ प्रभु श्री अनुज जुत कहन चहत अब कोइ ॥ ग ॥ kausalyādi mātu saba mana ananda asa hō'i.

āya'u prabhu śrī anuja juta kahana cahata aba kō'i. c.

Mother Kaushalya and others¹ felt extremely exhilarated in their hearts. They felt that anytime now some messenger would come to them with the good news that Lord Ram has arrived with his wife Sita and younger brother Laxman². (Doha-c)

[Note—¹King Dasrath had three queens; the chief was Kaushalya, the mother of Lord Ram, and the other two were Sumitra, the mother of Laxman and Shatrughan, and Kaikeyi, the mother of Bharat.

²A similar scene is narrated in Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 17-20.]

भरत नयन भुज दच्छिन फरकत बारहिं बार । जानि सगुन मन हरष अति लागे करन बिचार ॥ घ ॥ bharata nayana bhuja dacchina pharakata bārahim bāra.

jāni saguna mana haraṣa ati lāgē karana bicāra. d.

Meanwhile, the right arms and eyelid of Bharat began fluttering repeatedly¹. Realising that these were auspicious signs and lucky omens, Bharat felt joyful in his heart. He began thinking as to what it means. (Doha-d)

[Note—¹The fluttering of different parts of the body is regarded as good or bad sign depending on which part flutters. For men, the fluttering of right side of the body is considered auspicious and good, while for a woman the reverse is true, i.e. the fluttering of the left side of her body is regarded as good.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 231; (b) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-7 that precedes Doha no. 7.]

चौ०. रहेउ एक दिन अवधि अधारा । समुझत मन दुख भयउ अपारा ॥ १ ॥
कारन कवन नाथ नहिं आयउ । जानि कुटिल किधौं मोहि बिसरायउ ॥ २ ॥
अहह धन्य लछिमन बड़भागी । राम पदारबिंदु अनुरागी ॥ ३ ॥
कपटी कुटिल मोहि प्रभु चीन्हा । ताते नाथ संग नहिं लीन्हा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

rahē'u ēka dina avadhi adhārā. samujhata mana dukha bhaya'u apārā. 1.
kāraṇa kavana nātha nahim āya'u. jāni kuṭila kidhaurm mōhi bisarāya'u. 2.
ahaha dhan'ya lachimana barabhāgī. rāma padārabindu anurāgī. 3.
kapaṭī kuṭila mōhi prabhu cīnhā. tāte nātha saṅga nahim līnhā. 4.

Realising that only one day was left for completion of 14 years, Bharat felt very sad; his heart and mind were overcome with extreme anxiety, worry and grief. (1)

He pondered poignantly: 'What is the reason why Lord Ram has yet not arrived? Is it possible that it because he perceived me to be wicked and scheming in my heart¹, and therefore the Lord decided to forsake me; has he decided to get me off his mind and memory, and just forget me altogether? (2)

Ah! How fortunate and lucky has Laxman been that he has had extreme affection for the lotus-like feet of the Lord². (3)

Surely the Lord discerned me to be wicked and evil in my heart, false and pervert, and this is the reason why the Lord did not take me along with him further on in his journey into the forest³. (4)

[Note—¹Bharat's deep sense of regret, grief and sadness are evident in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand. Some of the verses that give a comprehensive picture of the intensity of his remorse and sense of guilt are the following: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Doha no. 160; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 164; (iii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precede Doha no. 167—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precede Doha no. 168; (iv) Doha no. 177—to Doha no. 183.

²Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 182; and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 200 where Bharat is all praises for Laxman and his good fortune that he decided to discard everything else to serve Lord Ram selflessly.

³Bharat has said the same thing earlier too in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 205.

When Bharat had gone to Chitrakoot in an attempt to bring Lord Ram back to Ayodhya, he had offered that if the Lord thinks it not wise to return as it would violate the words he had given to his late father, then let it be so. But Laxman was not bound by any such vows; so Bharat offered an option: why not send Laxman back home, and in his place Bharat would accompany the Lord for the remaining period in the forest. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 268 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.}

So therefore, Bharat laments woefully, with a lot of remorse in his grief-stricken heart: "I am sure that it is this reason why the Lord took Laxman along with him, and decided not to entertain my pleas when I requested him to come back to Ayodhya, or take me along with him on his onwards journey into the forest. The Lord knew that Laxman loved him and was dedicated to him more than I was; nay, the Lord realized that I was wicked and scheming in my heart. Is it not obvious—because was it not due to me that the Lord had to go to the forest in the first place, as my wicked mother Kaikeyi had devised this nasty plan all on her own, as I had nothing to do with it, so that I could ascend the throne and be a king of Ayodhya? Woe to me and my ill mother and my doomed fate! I can't and won't ever be able to convince the Lord that I am not guilty."

Bharat's sense of remorse, regret and guilt are expressed by him in explicit terms on previous occasions also, such as when he laments that he has no doubt that it is he who is at the center of all the misfortunes that have befallen on the kingdom and which culminated in Lord Ram being sent to the forest: apropos—Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3 and 5 that precede Doha no. 179.]

जौं करनी समुझै प्रभु मोरी । नहिं निस्तार कलप सत कोरी ॥ ५ ॥

जन अवगुन प्रभु मान न काऊ । दीन बंधु अति मृदुल सुभाऊ ॥ ६ ॥

jaum karanī samujhai prabhu mōrī. nahim nistāra kalapa sata kōrī. 5.

jana avaguna prabhu māna na kā'ū. dīna bandhu ati mṛdula subhā'ū. 6.

Should the Lord take into account my doings (and the horrible mischief perpetrated by my evil mother in the fallacious belief that she is furthering my imaginary interests), then there is no chance of my ever getting redemption even in countless cycles of my births and deaths (i.e. for eternity)¹. (5)

[But I am sure it is not that way, for I know very well the nature of my dear brother that—] The lord does not mind the faults and shortcomings of his devotees and servants; it is because he is extremely and absolutely kind, compassionate, benevolent, gracious and forgiving by his very nature. Verily indeed, without gainsay and in all sooth, he is also a dear friend of those who are meek and lowly because of inherent nature which is very kind and sweet². (6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 179 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede it.

To wit, Bharat says that if one were to decide his fate merely on physical developments, without considering whether or not he was guilty of any misdoings, what were his internal feelings towards Lord Ram, and how much he has lamented and grieved due to these developments to which he was not a party at all, and which he had tried to remedy in the best possible way he could think of though he could not undo the fiat of fate, then there is no doubt that he would be doomed and condemned forever.

But still there is hope for him, and this hope lies in the stellar nature of Lord Ram which he knew by experience to be most kind, gracious, compassionate, merciful, loving, benevolent, magnanimous, munificent, forgiving and tolerant. Bharat was certain that Lord Ram would embrace him and never abandon him, no matter what comes.

His confidence in this regard is clear when he tells Lord Ram in Chitrakoot that he knows how much the Lord loves him—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 260. Here Bharat says that during their childhood days, the Lord would lose a game in order to make Bharat win it, as this win would make Bharat rejoice, and Bharat's cheerful countenance would in turn make Lord Ram himself rejoice! What more proof is needed of how much the Lord loved Bharat.

²A similar idea is expressed by Bharat himself in unequivocal terms earlier too—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 183; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 234; (iii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 260; (iv) Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 299.]

मोरे जियँ भरोस दूढ़ सोई । मिलिहहिं राम सगुन सुभ होई ॥ ७ ॥

बीतेँ अवधि रहहिं जौँ प्राणा । अधम कवन जग मोहि समाना ॥ ८ ॥

mōrē jiyam̐ bharōsa dūṛha sō'ī. milihahim̐ rāma saguna subha hō'ī. 7.
bītēm̐ avadhi rahahim̐ jaurm̐ prānā. adhama kavana jaga mōhi samānā. 8.

‘I am confident and absolutely certain that’, said Bharat to himself, ‘Lord Ram would meet me (or, conversely, I will meet him) as there are ample good omens and auspicious signs indicative of it¹. (7)

If I live beyond the time limit set for the Lord's return (which is exactly 14 years from the day he departed for the forest), then all the woes befall upon me, for then there would be no one as contemptible and despicable and sinful as me.² (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Doha line nos. b to d herein above.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 234.

²Bharat was overcome with surging waves of intense grief and insurmountable remorse. He was in such an emotional state of mind, and on edge, that he clung to all signs of hope that Lord Ram would return in time that he could think of. The good omens and auspicious signs which he perceived filled his heart with positive hope, but soon apprehension took the better hold of him and he began to think negatively.

It was a virtual roller-coaster emotional drive for Bharat: in one instant he was on the crest of a wave of joy because his long wait for the Lord's return was about to come to an end and there were ample signs of Nature that good news was in the offing, but soon he descended into a deep trough of sadness and depression when apprehension of something going unexpectedly wrong pulled him down and dashed his hopes.

This mental state of uncertainty is seen earlier also when Bharat was heading to meet Lord Ram at Chitrakoot. At one instant he would walk briskly towards Lord Ram's hermitage as he was certain that the Lord would come rushing to embrace him as soon as he hears that Bharat has come, and the next instant he felt gloomy and forlorn as he apprehended that when the Lord hears that Bharat was approaching his hermitage, he would immediately leave it and go somewhere else in order to avoid meeting Bharat.

This above emotional state of Bharat is clearly stated in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 233—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 234.]

दो०. राम बिरह सागर महँ भरत मगन मन होत ।

बिप्र रूप धरि पवन सुत आइ गयउ जनु पोत ॥ १ (क) ॥

बैठे देखि कुसासन जटा मुकुट कृस गात ।

राम राम रघुपति जपत स्रवत नयन जलजात ॥ १ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

rāma biraha sāgara maham̐ bharata magana mana hōta.

bipra rūpa dhari pavana suta ā'i gaya'u janu pōta. 1 (a).

baiṭhē dēkhi kusāsana jaṭā mukuṭa kṛsa gāta.

rāma rāma raghupati japata sravata nayana jalajāta. 1 (b).

In the symbolic ocean of grief and sorrows caused by separation from Lord Ram, Bharat's mind was violently wobbling, tossing and spinning around as if it was about to sink in it, when Hanuman, the son of the wind god, came to Bharat disguised as a young Brahmin student. His arrival was like a boat that comes to help a drowning man by the latter's good fortune, for it immediately provided succour and solace to the sinking spirits of Bharat. (Doha no. 1-a)

Hanuman found Bharat sitting on a mat of reeds; his matted hairs were coiled on the top of his head like a crown, and his body was emaciated. He (Bharat) was constantly repeating the name of Lord Ram, muttering ‘Ram-Ram’ incessantly, and tears rolled down his eyes in an endless stream¹. (Doha no. 1-b)

[Note—¹A similar portrait of Bharat is described elaborately in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 324—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 326.]

चौ०. देखत हनूमान अति हरषेउ । पुलक गात लोचन जल बरषेउ ॥ १ ॥
मन महँ बहुत भाँति सुख मानी । बोलेउ श्रवन सुधा सम बानी ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

dēkhata hanūmāna ati haraṣē'u. pulaka gāta lōcana jala baraṣē'u. 1.
mana maham̐ bahuta bhāṁti sukha mānī. bōlē'u śravana sudhā sama bānī. 2.

When Hanuman saw Bharat, he was extremely delighted; his body became thrilled and tears of joy rolled down his eyes.*

[*This verse can be read in another way too as follows: “No sooner did Bharat see Hanuman than he felt extremely exhilarated; his body was thrilled and a stream of tears rolled down from his eyes.” But taking into consideration what follows next, this interpretation does not fit in well. So therefore, the interpretation in the main text herein above should be regarded as the correct one.] (1)

He (Hanuman) felt extremely delighted in his heart and mind (Mana), and spoke words that were very sweet and pleasant to hear as if they were soaked in ambrosia. (2)

जासु बिरहँ सोचहु दिन राती । रटहु निरंतर गुन गन पाँती ॥ ३ ॥ रघुकुल तिलक सुजन सुखदाता । आयउ कुसल देव मुनि त्राता ॥ ४ ॥ jāsu biraham̐ sōcahu dina rātī. raṭahu nirantara guna gana pām̐tī. 3.

raghukula tilaka sujana sukhadātā. āya'u kusala dēva muni trātā. 4.

Hanuman said to Bharat: ‘The Lord (Sri Ram) for whom you lament so much, whose glories and virtues you constantly remember, that Lord who is the most exalted in the line of illustrious kings descending from king Raghu (raghukula tilaka), and the Lord who dispels the torments and worries of gods as well as sages—verily indeed, he has come back safely, hale and hearty. (3-4)

रिपु रन जीति सुजस सुर गावत । सीता सहित अनुज प्रभु आवत ॥ ५ ॥ सुनत बचन बिसरे सब दूखा । तृषावंत जिमि पाइ पियूषा ॥ ६ ॥ ripu rana jīti sujasa sura gāvata. sītā sahita anuja prabhu āvata. 5.

sunata bacana bisarē saba dūkhā. tṛṣāvanta jimi pā'i piyūṣā. 6.

He has vanquished the enemy in the battle-field, and his resounding glories are being sung even by the gods. The Lord is coming along with Sita and his younger brother (Laxman).’ (5)

As soon as Bharat heard these pleasant and comforting words, all his grief and sadness vanished as if a thirsty person has found a fount of nectar. (6)

को तुम्ह तात कहाँ ते आए । मोहि परम प्रिय बचन सुनाए ॥ ७ ॥
मारुत सुत मैं कपि हनुमाना । नाम मोर सुनु कृपानिधाना ॥ ८ ॥
दीनबंधु रघुपति कर किंकर । सुनत भरत भेंटै उठि सादर ॥ ९ ॥ kō tumha tāta kahāñ tē ā'ē. mōhi parama priya bacana sunā'ē. 7.

māruta suta mair̥m kapi hanumānā. nāmu mōra sunu kṛpānidhānā. 8.
dīnabandhu raghupati kara kiñkara. sunata bharata bhēṇṭē'u uṭhi sādara. 9.

[When Bharat heard the news of Lord Ram's arrival safely back to Ayodhya, he was overjoyed; the words announcing these good tidings filled Bharat's heart with excess of delight. He asked the messenger who conveyed this good news to him to introduce himself.]

Bharat asked, 'My dear (tāta), say who art thou, and from whence hast thou comest? Verily indeed and without gainsay, the words which thou hast just said are exceptionally dear to me (and to hear which I hadst been longing for so long).’ (7)

Hanuman replied, 'Oh an embodiment of grace and kindness (kṛpānidhānā)! Listen, I am the son of the wind god (māruta suta), and my name is Hanuman, the Kapi (literally, a member of the monkey race; mair̥m kapi hanumānā). (8)

I am a humble servant (kiñkara) of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram, the Lord of the Raghu race) who is a friend of the humble, the lowly, the miserable and the meek (dīnabandhu raghupati).’

As soon as Bharat heard these words, he got up instantly and met Hanuman very reverentially (with great affection in his overjoyed heart). (9)

मिलत प्रेम नहिं हृदयँ समाता । नयन स्रवत जल पुलकित गाता ॥ १० ॥
कपि तव दरस सकल दुख बीते । मिले आजु मोहि राम पिरीते ॥ ११ ॥
बार बार बूझी कुसलाता । तो कहूँ देउँ काह सुनु भ्राता ॥ १२ ॥
एहि संदेस सरिस जग माहीं । करि बिचार देखेउँ कछु नाहीं ॥ १३ ॥
नाहिन तात उरिन मैं तोही । अब प्रभु चरित सुनावहु मोही ॥ १४ ॥ milata prēma nahim̐ hr̥dayaṁ samātā. nayana sravata jala pulakita gātā. 10.

kapi tava darasa sakala dukha bitē. milē āju mōhi rāma pirītē. 11.
bāra bāra būjhī kusalātā. tō kahuṁ dē'uṁ kāha sunu bhrātā. 12.
ēhi sandēsa sarisa jaga māhīm̐. kari bicāra dēkhē'uṁ kachu nāhīm̐. 13.

nāhina tāta urina mair̥m tōhī. aba prabhu carita sunāvahu mōhī. 14.

Bharat met Hanuman very emotionally and embraced him; his heart overflowed with love and affection for the latter so much so that it seemed to fail to contain it, and this burst of spontaneous emotion revealed itself in a stream of tears of joy that ran out of Bharat's eyes as well as the thrill that spread over his entire body. (10)

Bharat said, 'Oh Kapi! By having the good fortune of seeing you all my woes, all my grief and miseries are dispelled forthwith. I am so lucky that I have met someone today who is as dear to Lord Ram as you are (milē āju mōhi rāma pirītē)¹.' (11)

As he said these words, Bharat was so highly overwhelmed with affection for Hanuman so much so that he repeatedly (embraced him and) asked him about his welfare, saying, 'Listen my dear brother (sunu bhrātā); tell me what can I give thee today in return of the good news that thou have brought hither to me? (12)

This message of Lord Ram's safe arrival is so great and welcome a news for me that while pondering over the matter I find myself at a loss to discover anything that is worthy of being given to you as a reward for bringing this glad tidings². [To wit, I don't know what to grant you as a memorable gift to express my deep sense of thanks to you, and how much I am obliged to you for bringing this good news of the Lord's safe arrival today.] (13)

My dear (tāta)! I will ever remain indebted to you². Now, I request you to tell me about the Lord and the various deeds that he has done. [Tell me about the developments that took place since our last meeting when you were going back to Lanka with the mountain containing the herb required to revive Laxman. Update me about all that had happened since then.]' (14)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 3.

²Lord Ram too has expressed similar emotions for Hanuman in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 32.]

तब हनुमंत नाइ पद माथा । कहे सकल रघुपति गुन गाथा ॥ १५ ॥

कहु कपि कबहुँ कृपाल गोसाई । सुमिरहिं मोहि दास की नाई ॥ १६ ॥ taba hanumanta nā'i pada māthā. kahē sakala raghupati guna gāthā. 15.

kahu kapi kabahuṁ kṛpāla gōsā'ir̥m. sumirahir̥m mōhi dāsa kī nā'ir̥m. 16.

Then Hanuman bowed his head reverentially at the feet of Bharat, and narrated all glorious and meritorious deeds done by Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram)¹. (15)

After hearing out Hanuman, Bharat asked him: 'Say Kapi, did the merciful and gracious Lord was ever kind enough to remember me as a devoted and loyal servant of his?²' (16)

[Note—¹To wit, Hanuman narrated briefly how the war against Ravana was fought and won by Lord Ram, about the appointment of Vibhishan as the new king of Lanka, how Sita was reunited with the Lord, how the Lord boarded the Pushpak plane with his chief commanders of both the demon army and the monkey army as he flew back to Ayodhya, and how, after sending Hanuman to meet Bharat and convey the news of his arrival, the Lord has presently gone back for a while to meet some of his acquaintances in the forest that he missed while coming to Ayodhya in a hurry to meet the deadline of coming back after 14 years of forest exile.

²Sita has asked Hanuman a similar question when the latter had gone in search for her in Lanka; she enquired: “Tell me dear, whether Lord Ram ever remembered me kindly”? Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 14.]

छं०. निज दास ज्यों रघुबंसभूषन कबहुँ मम सुमिरन कर्यो । १ ।
 सुनि भरत बचन बिनीत अति कपि पुलकि तन चरनन्हि पश्यो ॥ २ ॥
 रघुबीर निज मुख जासु गुन गन कहत अग जग नाथ जो । ३ । काहे न होइ बिनीत परम पुनीत सदगुन सिंधु सो ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

nija dāsa jyōm raghubansabhūṣana kabahuṁ mama sumirana karyō. 1.
 suni bharata bacana binīta ati kapi pulaki tana carananhi paryō. 2.
 raghubīra nija mukha jāsū guna gana kahata aga jaga nātha jō. 3.
 kāhē na hō'i binīta parama punīta sadaguna sindhu sō. 4.

[Bharat asked Hanuman once again—] ‘Did Lord Ram, who is like a jewel in the illustrious king Raghu’s family, ever remember me as being one of his own (loyal, faithful and devoted) servants?’ (Chaupai line no. 1)

Hearing such modest and humble words of Bharat, Hanuman was overcome with joy even as he fell at Bharat’s feet with a thrill spreading over his body. (Chaupai line no. 2)

Hanuman praised Bharat for his virtues and excellent nature when he thought to himself: ‘Indeed, he whose good nature and excellent virtues have been so lavishly praised by Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram), who is the Lord of the entire world, himself --- (Chaupai line no. 3)

--- What wonder is there then that Bharat would be so exceptionally modest, humble, gracious and courteous, as well as an embodiment of all the divine virtues, as he truly is?’ (Chaupai line no. 4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 231—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 233. In these verses, Lord Ram has praised Bharat and extolled his virtues, declaring that there is no one who is purer in his heart, who possesses better virtues and character, and who is more good natured than Bharat is in this world. Not only Lord Ram, even the gods in the heaven had praised Bharat on this occasion and affirmed his holy nature by way of a unanimous declaration made by them in the form of a voice from the sky.

We read that in Chitrakoot, Lord Ram had praised Bharat and said that he was ready to do what Bharat wished, even if that meant breaking his own vows. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 259; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 263—to Doha no. 264.}

When we read further the Story of the Ram Charit Manas, we find that Bharat has been lavishly praised by everyone who came in contact with him according to the occasion. For instance, the citizens of Ayodhya, the mothers, the ministers, the sages and guru Vashistha—all had great respect for Bharat and praised him profusely. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 184; Chaupai line no. 2 that precede Doha no. 185.}

Then we have the great sage Bharadwaj who had heaped great honours and praises on Bharat when they met while Bharat was on his way to Chitrakoot to try and persuade Lord Ram to return to Ayodhya. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 208—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 210.}

On the way to Chitrakoot, every one of the villagers and ordinary country folk had nothing but praise for Bharat. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 233 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it, and Chaupai line nos. 1 and 6 that follow it.}

At Chitrakoot itself, we read that the illustrious sage Vasistha was bowled over by Bharat's devotion and affection for Lord Ram, as well as by Bharat's humility and excellent virtues. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 257; Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 258; Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 259.}

King Janak had also lauded the excellent character of Bharat when he was informed by messengers about the developments in Ayodhya, and that Bharat had gone to Chitrakoot to fetch Lord Ram. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 272.}

Once again at Chitrakoot itself, mother Kaushalya had extolled Bharat in glorious terms before king Janak's wife, queen Sunayana, the mother of Sita. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 283.}

When king Janak came to know in detail how Bharat had behaved and about his noble character, the king was overwhelmed with respect for Bharat and praised him profusely while discussing the matter with his wife, queen Sunayana. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 288—to {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 290.}

To wit, every one who came in contact with Bharat on any occasion, had nothing but praise for him, so therefore there is no wonder here that Hanuman too would be overwhelmed by the holy and virtuous nature, and the excellent and noble character of Bharat.]

दो०. राम प्रान प्रिय नाथ तुम्ह सत्य बचन मम तात ।

पुनि पुनि मिलत भरत सुनि हरष न हृदयँ समात ॥ २ (क) ॥

dōhā.

rāma prāna priya nātha tumha satya bacana mama tāta.
puni puni milata bharata suni haraṣa na hṛdayaṁ samāta. 2 (a).

The overwhelmed Hanuman replied to Bharat: ‘Oh Lord (nātha), believe me that you are dear to Lord Ram as his own life. My dear (tāta), honestly I tell you that my words are nothing but the truth (satya bacana mama).’

When he heard these reassuring words that gave him great comfort, the exhilarated Bharat embraced Hanuman repeatedly even as his heart overflowed with emotions of joy and happiness that were so intense and profound by their nature that the heart failed to contain them (and it seemed that the tide of emotions swamped Bharat’s entire being)¹. (Doha no. 2-a) [Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 2 herein above.

Lord Ram was very eager to be reunited with Bharat at the end of the war of Lanka when he said that “the remembrance of Bharat and his miserable condition fills me with such sorrows that a moment that passes seems to be like an age for me”. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, line no. 2 of Doha no. 116-a as well as Doha no. 116-c.}]

सो०. भरत चरन सिरु नाइ तुरित गयउ कपि राम पहिं ।

कही कुसल सब जाइ हरषि चलेउ प्रभु जान चढ़ि ॥ २ (ख) ॥

sōraṭhā.

bharata carana siru nā'i turita gaya'u kapi rāma pahim.
kahī kusala saba jā'i haraṣi calē'u prabhu jāna caḍhi. 2 (b).

Hanuman (the Kapi) bowed his head reverentially at Bharat’s feet and immediately left the place to go back to Lord Ram.

Once there, he narrated all the good news to the Lord. As soon as the Lord heard that everything was fine, he immediately boarded the plane and cheerfully started towards his destination (Ayodhya)¹. (Sortha no. 2-b)

[Note—¹This verse clearly and unambiguously indicates that Lord Ram had not directly descended to land in Ayodhya earlier, but had preferred to send Hanuman instead while he took a turn to go back to meet sage Bharadwaj and Nishad, the chief of the boatman community, because the Lord wished to find out what the ground realities were like in Ayodhya.

Lord Ram wished to discern whether or not he was actually welcome in the city; and also to find out what was Bharat’s attitude towards him—did he still have the same degree of love and loyalty towards the Lord, or was there any change in him during the period that elapsed between his going to Chitrakoot and now that the time of the Lord’s arrival has actually arrived. Lord Ram wished to avoid any unpleasant situation; he did not want to offend Bharat in any way. So should it turn out that Bharat’s warmth and love for the Lord has cooled down, and there were some evil designs waiting for him on his return, then the Lord decided in his mind that he would find some excuse to remain away and let Bharat ascend the throne of Ayodhya.

There is no doubt about it for two obvious reasons. One, it was precisely this purpose for which Hanuman was sent by him as an emissary to Bharat (refer: Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 121). And two, as soon as Hanuman brought the good news regarding Bharat—that he was very much the same Bharat as he was fourteen years ago and there is no change in his attitude at all, that his affection and devotion for the Lord had not diminished even a wee whit, and that he is eagerly awaiting Lord Ram’s arrival, and that the Lord ought naught to have any apprehensions of any kind whatsoever on his account—the Lord “immediately boarded the plane to go to his destination”, without wasting any more time.]

चौ०. हरषि भरत कोसलपुर आए । समाचार सब गुरहि सुनाए ॥ १ ॥
 पुनि मंदिर महँ बात जनाई । आवत नगर कुसल रघुराई ॥ २ ॥
 सुनत सकल जननीं उठि धाई । कहि प्रभु कुसल भरत समुझाई ॥ ३ ॥
 समाचार पुरबासिन्ह पाए । नर अरु नारि हरषि सब धाए ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

haraṣi bharata kōsalapura ā'ē. samācāra saba gurahi sunā'ē. 1.
 puni mandira maham̐ bāta janā'ī. āvata nagara kusala raghurā'ī. 2.
 sunata sakala jananiṁ uṭhi dhā'īm. kahi prabhu kusala bharata samujhā'īm. 3.
 samācāra purabāsinha pā'ē. nara aru nāri haraṣi saba dhā'ē. 4.

The jubilant Bharat came to the capital city of the kingdom of Ayodhya, known as ‘kōsalapura’, and conveyed the happy tidings to his guru, sage Vashitha. (1)

Then he sent a similar message to the palace, that Lord of the Raghus, Lord Ram, is coming back to the city safely. (2)

No sooner the mothers heard this good news, than they got up and rushed to meet Bharat and enquire as to the truth of it. Bharat personally explained everything to them about the Lord’s welfare¹. (3)

As soon as the citizens heard this excellent news that spread like wildfire in the city, everyone, the males as well as the females, got up immediately and sprinted out excitedly to confirm the happy tidings². (4)

[Note—¹When the eager mothers, Kaushalya, the mother of Lord Ram, and Sumitra, the mother of Laxman, heard the good news, they rushed out of their palaces to meet Bharat and ask him details. Bharat told them about his meeting with Hanuman, and what the latter had told him about Lord Ram’s happy return. This good news, for which the mothers had been eagerly waiting to hear for the past so many years, filled them with utmost joy; their worried, sad and despondent countenances marked by a cloud of uncertainty and despair, suddenly changed their colour into that of delight, cheer and joy, as if the bright sunshine has made its rejuvenating appearance from behind a curtain of dark gloomy clouds.

²The good tidings of Lord Ram’s safe and happy arrival sent a wave of jubilation and cheer through the streets and avenues of the great capital city of Ayodhya as if some life-saving drug has been injected into the veins of a very sick person, invigorating him and infusing a new dawn of hope in his heart that was stricken with the disease of hopelessness and helplessness just a while ago. The citizens rushed out of their homes and workplaces, leaving behind whatever they were engaged in, and in whatever condition they were in (apropos: verse no. 7 herein below). First they couldn't believe their ears and good fortune, but as the truth of the news sank in, there was a spontaneous eruption of applause, cheering and thanksgiving throughout the city. It appeared that after the grey and gloomy days of chill and snowy winter, spring has finally appeared with a splash of colours of all hues of the rainbow.]

दधि दुर्बा रोचन फल फूला । नव तुलसी दल मंगल मूला ॥ ५ ॥
 भरि भरि हेम थार भामिनी । गावत चलिं सिंधुरगामिनी ॥ ६ ॥
 जे जैसेहिं तैसेहिं उठि धावहिं । बाल बृद्ध कहँ संग न लावहिं ॥ ७ ॥ एक एकन्ह कहँ बूझहिं भाई । तुम्ह देखे दयाल रघुराई ॥ ८ ॥ dadhi durbā rōcana phala phūlā. nava tulasī dala maṅgala mūlā. 5.

 bhari bhari hēma thāra bhāminī. gāvata calim sindhuragāminī. 6.
 jē jaisēhim taisēhim uṭhi dhāvahim. bāla br̥d'dha kahaṁ saṅga na lāvahim. 7.
 ēka ēkanha kahaṁ būjhahim bhāī. tumha dēkhē dayāla raghurāī. 8.

To mark the most auspicious news, there were widespread celebrations in the city. The honourable ladies of the city arranged auspicious articles in golden plates, things such as small pots filled with fresh curd, blades of green grass, the yellow pigment known as 'Gorochan'¹, fruits and flowers of various kinds, and freshly plucked leaves of the sacred Tulsi (basil) plant, and came out of their homes, walking majestically with a swaying gait like adult elephants (walking down avenues during a royal ceremony), singing auspicious songs befitting the happy occasion. (5-6)

These honourable ladies got up and proceeded forth from their homes immediately upon hearing the good news, in whatever manner they happened to be at that moment, leaving aside whatever chores they were engaged in at that time, and they were so overcome with delight that they sallied out alone spontaneously, shunning their children and old people of the household². (7)

Everyone asked his neighbour whom he or she met: 'My dear, hast thou seen Lord Ram anywhere?'³ (8)

[Note—¹The 'Gorochan' is a yellow coloured viscous liquid; it is basically bile that is secreted by a cow. It is collected and used as a pigment for religious ceremonies.

²Usually it is a practice in respectable households that whenever women folk venture out into the streets and market places, they are expected to be accompanied by their children or some senior member of the family. But such formalities and niceties were kept aside for the time being; the whole city erupted as a single mass of people overwhelmed with joy and engaged in rapturous celebration. Everyone became a kin of his neighbour; every child and senior citizen became a family member of the women folk singing merrily on the street. All distinctions were obliterated; all differences of age and gender vanished; all greeted everyone else who he or she met anywhere as if they had known each other for ages.

Ayodhya was, at the time, one large family that was celebrating the welcome arrival of one of their dear members who had gone out on an adventure to an unknown land long time ago, and who has now returned safe, hale and hearty, triumphantly and victoriously, with a lot of merit and acclaim added to his already rich repertory of glory and fame.

³The news of Lord Ram's arrival had come, and that was enough to send the cheering people out into the streets. There was confusion as to where the Lord has actually arrived, or who has actually seen him. No one knew the exact answer in the tumult; so everyone asked everyone else if he or she has seen the Lord somewhere.

The glad tidings of Lord Ram's arrival punctured a hole in the pitcher of patience that the sad citizens had somehow held on to for fourteen long years, and now their patience ran out in a wild stream of impatience as they were all eager and anxious to see their beloved Lord standing right in their midst at the shortest possible time. The ecstasy and exuberance amongst the citizens of Ayodhya, ignited by the thought that finally they would meet their beloved Lord Ram once again, was so overwhelming and intense that the milling crowd created more confusion than give any clear answer to the question 'where actually Lord Ram was then?'.]

अवधपुरी प्रभु आवत जानी । भई सकल सोभा कै खानी ॥ ९ ॥

बहइ सुहावन त्रिबिध समीरा । भइ सरजू अति निर्मल नीरा ॥ १० ॥

avadhapurī prabhu āvata jānī. bha'ī sakala sōbhā kai khānī. 9.
baha'i suhāvana tribidha samīrā. bha'i sarajū ati nirmala nīrā. 10.

As soon as the news of Lord Ram's arrival reached the City of Ayodhya, deriving its name from the vast kingdom known as 'Avadha' (avadhapurī), it transformed into a most magnificent and pleasant city, an enchanting city that was like an embodiment of everything that is beautiful, pleasant and charming¹. (9)

A pleasant breeze having the three qualities of excellence² blew softly across it; and clear water flowed in the holy river Saryu that flanked the city on its north. (10)

[Note—¹When Lord Ram took birth, a similar transformation was seen in Ayodhya. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4, and 8 that precede Doha no. 194—to Doha no. 195.

²The three qualities that make a breeze pleasant are the following: it must be soft, it must be scented or have a sweet fragrance, and it must be cool.]

दो०. हरषित गुर परिजन अनुज भूसुर बृंद समेत ।

चले भरत मन प्रेम अति सन्मुख कृपानिकेत ॥ ३ (क) ॥

dōhā.

haraṣita gura parijana anuja bhūśura bṛnda samēta.
calē bharata mana prēma ati sanmukha kṛpānikēta. 3 (a).

Every single person was jubilant and ecstatic. Accompanied by the guru (sage Vasistha), kith and kin, all the subjects of the kingdom, the younger brother (i.e. Shatrughan), and all the sages and Brahmins living there, Bharat, whose heart was brimming over with affection, set off to meet and welcome the Lord (Sri Ram) who is an abode of grace, compassion and kindness. (Doha no. 3-a)

बहुतक चढ़ीं अटारिन्ह निरखहिं गगन बिमान । देखि मधुर सुर हरषित करहिं सुमंगल गान ॥ ३ (ख) ॥ bahutaka caṛhīm aṭārinha nirakhahīm gagana bimāna.

dēkhi madhura sura haraṣita karahīm sumaṅgala gāna. 3 (b).

Many of the women folk went up on the terraces of their homes and watched as the plane came into view in the sky.

As soon as they saw the plane approach, they spontaneously started singing in sweet voices melodious songs that were auspicious and suitable for such occasions. (Doha no. 3-b)

राका ससि रघुपति पुर सिंधु देखि हरषान । बढ़्यो कोलाहल करत जनु नारि तरंग समान ॥ ३ (ग) ॥

rākā sasi raghupati pura sindhu dēkhi haraṣāna.
baṛhyō kōlāhala karata janu nāri taraṅga samāna. 3 (c).

Verily indeed, on that occasion it appeared that Lord Ram was like a full moon, and Ayodhya was like an ocean.

Just as the ocean heaves and produces high tides when the full moon shines over it, Ayodhya exulted with waves of excitement that overwhelmed its ecstatic residents who surged ahead with bubbling enthusiasm as soon as Lord Ram was sighted overhead in the sky. In this surging crowd of jubilant citizens, the women folk were like the waves of the ocean that move forward as soon as it sights the moon above. (Doha no. 3-c)

[Note—In this imagery, Lord Ram is compared to the moon as presently he is seen aboard the plane that is airborne, just like the moon that is seen at its station in the sky. On the ground below, the huge crowd of cheering citizens surging forward to meet the Lord is compared to the ocean that has high tides when a full moon is overhead, and the waves move inland in a particular direction just as the excited citizens are moving in the direction where the plane seems to be headed to make a landing.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 1.]

चौ०. इहाँ भानुकुल कमल दिवाकर । कपिन्ह देखावत नगर मनोहर ॥ १ ॥

सुनु कपीस अंगद लंकेसा । पावन पुरी रुचिर यह देसा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ihāṁ bhānukula kamala divākara. kapinha dēkhāvata nagara manōhara. 1.
sunu kapīsa aṅgada laṅkēsā. pāvana purī rucira yaha dēsā. 2.

[Meanwhile, when Hanuman conveyed the good news to Lord Ram that everything was fine with Bharat, and the Lord should have no hesitation in proceeding to Ayodhya forthwith as he would be affectionately and warmly received, the Lord immediately boarded the Pushpak plane and headed to his destination. As the plane neared Ayodhya, the Lord cheerfully pointed out the beauty of the sprawling city to his companions who were accompanying him on board the plane.]

Here, Lord Ram, who was like a Sun that made the lotus flower representing the Solar race bloom¹, showed his Kapi friends the charming city of Ayodhya that spread on the ground below. (1)

Lord Ram said: ‘Listen Sugriv (kapīsa), Angad and Vibhishan (laṅkēsā)! This city itself is holy, and it grants holiness to them who view it. The countryside surrounding it, as well as the country of which it is the capital city (i.e. the kingdom of ‘Ayodhya’), are as charming as the city itself². (2)

[Note—¹In this metaphor, Lord Ram is likened to the ‘sun’, and the solar race that ruled over the kingdom of Ayodhya and in which the Lord was born, to the ‘lotus flower’. The lotus flower is known to open its petals and bloom when the sun rises in the sky. So as soon as Lord Ram appeared in a plane over the city of Ayodhya just as the sun rises in the sky, the whole family of the Lord, as well as the city where they lived, felt happy and exuberant as if a lotus has opened its petals at the sight of the overhead sun.

²The Lord means that the capital city of Ayodhya, along with the surrounding countryside and the kingdom of which the city is the capital, and from which it derives its name ‘Ayodhya’ or ‘Avadh’ or ‘Kaushal Puri’, are all equally charming and wonderful to behold. The kingdom of Ayodhya was also known as Avadh or Kaushal, and hence its capital city had various names, such as ‘Ayodhya’, ‘Avadh’ or ‘Kaushal Puri’.]

जद्यपि सब बैकुंठ बखाना । बेद पुरान बिदित जगु जाना ॥ ३ ॥

अवधपुरी सम प्रिय नहिं सोऊ । यह प्रसंग जानइ कोउ कोऊ ॥ ४ ॥ jadyapi saba baikunṭha bakhānā. bēda purāna bidita jagu jānā. 3.

avadhapurī sama priya nahim sō'ū. yaha prasaṅga jāna'i kō'u kō'ū. 4.

Although everyone praises the glories of Vaikuntha (which is the heavenly abode of Lord Vishnu)¹, and it is famed in the Vedas, the Purans as well as the rest of the world

[3], yet it is not dear to me as is the capital city of Ayodhya, known as 'Avadh-puri'². Very few are fortunate to realize this³. [4] (3-4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram is an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being who has his abode in Vaikuntha, that part of heaven where the Lord resides. Heaven has many divisions or sections or areas where different gods live. The part where Indra, the king of gods live, is called 'Indra-loka'. Similarly, there is 'Brahma-loka' where Brahma, the creator, has his abode; Mt. 'Kailash' or 'Shiva-loka' is where Lord Shiva lives, 'Gandharva-loka' where the Gandharvas live, and so on. The highest among these various heavenly abodes is 'Vaikuntha' where Lord Vishnu lives.

The word 'Vaikuntha' is derived from the words 'Kuntha' and 'Vai'. Kuntha means that which decays; and Vai means that which does not. Hence, the word Vaikuntha means 'that which does not decay'; or that which is 'eternal'. Thus, Vaikuntha is the eternal abode of the Supreme Being, or the abode of that Lord who is eternal.

²Ayodhya is dearer to Lord Ram than Vaikuntha because the Lord took birth for the welfare of his devotees in the former city, and since devotees are themselves very dear to the Lord, hence that city which hosted the Lord so that he could deliver countless devotees and provide them endless joy in this world would naturally be dearer to him than a place where the creature goes after his death. Whereas the Lord who lives in Vaikuntha is an invisible Being, and that abode known as Vaikuntha itself is too abstract to be understood by the common man, it is of little or no practical value for an ordinary living being who is toiling throughout his life in this mundane world, hoping to find some means of attaining peace of mind and bliss of the spirit. On the other hand there is Lord Ram who lived in Ayodhya, like an ordinary human being, himself undergoing all the problems associated with life in this mundane world, and yet acting as a beacon of hope and solace for the tormented soul of the creature, promising happiness and salvation to him, then surely the Lord and his abode known as Ayodhya become more practically relevant to the living being. In this context, refer to: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 75; (ii) Chaupai line no. 12 that precede Doha no. 114.

This is the primary reason why the Lord says that 'Ayodhya is dearer to me than Vaikuntha'.

Incidentally, the 'Tripaadvibhuti Mahanarayan Upanishad' describes the existence of seven Vaikunthas in its Canto nos. 6-7. These are the following: Paad-vibhuti Vaikuntha, Vishwaksen Vaikuntha, Brahma-Vidya Vaikuntha, Sri Tulsi Vaikuntha, Bodha-nanda Vaikuntha, Sudarshan Vaikuntha, and Advaitya Vaikuntha which is also known as Tripaadvibhuti Vaikuntha.

³The glories of Ayodhya has been lauded elsewhere too in Ram Charit Manas. For instance, (i) Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 16; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 195; (ii) Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 74; (iii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 120; (iv) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 97; Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede Doha no. 109.]

जन्मभूमि मम पुरी सुहावनि । उत्तर दिसि बह सरजू पावनि ॥ ५ ॥

जा मज्जन ते बिनहिं प्रयासा । मम समीप नर पावहिं बासा ॥ ६ ॥ janmabhūmi mama purī suhāvani. uttara disi baha sarajū pāvani. 5.

jā majjana tē binahim prayāsā. mama samīpa nara pāvahim bāsā. 6.

It (Ayodhya) is my birthplace, and it is a very charming and magnificent city. On its north flows the holy river Saryu [5], and taking a bath in it helps to purify the soul of my devotees and entitles them to have an abode near me¹ [6]. (5-6)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 16; (ii) Doha no. 34 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.

The idea here is that just like the holy river Ganges is said to provide purification to a person when he or she takes a bath in it, the river Saryu too provides a similar benefit to those who bathe in its holy waters.

Since the impurities clinging to the creature's inner-self are symbolically washed off by such bathing, he becomes eligible for attaining deliverance from this world. This translates into his attaining an abode near the Lord God in order to be able to serve him.

When we visit any holy place, such as a temple, it is expected from us that we have first taken a bath. Now, here the same principle applies when one bathes in the river Saryu to first clean himself before visiting the shrines in the pilgrim city of Ayodhya. Taking a physical bath to clean the body before visiting holy shrines is from the perspective of the gross world, but when it is extended to be applied to a higher level of existence, to a more subtle and sublime level, the same principle can be applied to the soul of a creature, meaning that one can attain deliverance, liberation, salvation and emancipation only if one has thoroughly cleaned his inner self.

It ought to be clearly understood here that this bath in the river Saryu, or for that matter even in river Ganges, is just a symbolic gesture to imply that the spiritual aspirant has cleaned his inner-self and is ready to enter the holy portal where the Lord God lives, to accept a communion with the Lord and embrace his goodness in a most sincere way; for mere physical cleaning of the body by just dipping in the river would serve no purpose worthwhile.]

अति प्रिय मोहि इहाँ के बासी । मम धामदा पुरी सुख रासी ॥ ७ ॥

हरषे सब कपि सुनि प्रभु बानी । धन्य अवध जो राम बखानी ॥ ८ ॥

ati priya mōhi ihāṁ kē bāsī. mama dhāmadā purī sukha rāsī. 7.
haraṣē saba kapi suni prabhu bānī. dhan'ya avadha jō rāma bakhānī. 8.

Those who live here are very dear to me. This city is like a storehouse of everything that is pleasant and a giver of comfort. It also blesses those who live here with an opportunity to attain my (heavenly) abode¹. (7)

Upon hearing such words of praise for Ayodhya as spoken by Lord Ram, all the Kapis felt very glad, and exclaimed: 'Glory to Ayodhya which Lord Ram refers to'. (8)

[Note—¹One must understand the text in the correct perspective and context, for mere literal reading is often misleading. The ‘Ayodhya’ that Lord Ram refers to is the city in which Lord Vishnu had taken birth in Treta Yuga. The people whom the Lord so lavishly praises were followers of the principles of Dharma (righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety, ethics and morality), people who were saintly, pious and inherently holy, were devout followers of Lord God and practitioners of good virtues. The auspicious qualities of the residents of Ayodhya of Lord Ram’s time are clearly outlined in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Doha no. 22.

To wit, when Lord Ram says “the residents of Ayodhya are very dear to me”, obviously he refers to such virtuous and people of excellent character as described in the verses cited herein above, but surely the Lord could never mean the people of the Ayodhya as found in the time of Kali-Yuga, people who are no different from those who do not live here, for to tell the truth and to be honest, one would rarely descry in people of Ayodhya of today’s time any such excellent virtues as were present in the residents of Ayodhya of the Lord’s time whom he praises so much. And even if one would not deny that there are surely some virtuous ones still living here, but they are definitely miniscule in number and hard to come by.]

दो०. आवत देखि लोग सब कृपासिंधु भगवान ।
नगर निकट प्रभु प्रेरैउ उतरेउ भूमि बिमान ॥ ४ (क) ॥
उतरि कहेउ प्रभु पुष्पकहि तुम्ह कुबेर पहि जाहु ।
प्रेरित राम चलेउ सो हरषु बिरहु अति ताहु ॥ ४ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

āvata dēkhi lōga saba kṛpāsindhu bhagavāna.
nagara nikaṭa prabhu prērē'u utarē'u bhūmi bimāna. 4 (a).
utari kahē'u prabhu puṣpakahi tumha kubēra pahim jāhu.
prērīta rāma calē'u sō haraṣu birahu ati tāhu. 4 (b).

When Lord Ram, who was an ocean of mercy, compassion, kindness and grace (kṛpāsindhu bhagavāna), observed that the citizens were coming out in multitudes to welcome him¹, he ordered the Pushpak plane to land on the outskirts of the city of Ayodhya. (Doha no. 4-a)

After disembarking from the plane along with all his companions, the Lord asked ‘Pushpak’² to go back to Kuber (the treasurer of the gods to whom this plane belonged)³.

Obedient to the Lord’s command, Pushpak departed from there; it was on the one hand very joyful for being able to return to his Master in the heavens, but on the other hand it was overwhelmed with grief and sadness too for being separated from the Lord⁴. (Doha no. 4-b)

[Note—¹As soon as the news had reached the city from the place where Hanuman met Bharat, which was on the outskirts, some distance away where Bharat had been living in self-imposed exile during the period of Lord Ram’s absence*, at a place that came to be known as ‘Nandigram’, the city erupted in a joyous tumult. Every single person ran in the direction of Bharat's hermitage, excited and exhilarated as ever. From his plane high up in the sky, Lord Ram observed a huge tide of jubilant citizens pouring out of the city and heading speedily in the direction of Bharat's habitat, dancing, singing, waving frantically at the plane, and cheering all the way along, running as fast as their legs would carry them, so eager were the enthusiastic people that everyone wished to be the first one to reach the site of the Lord's landing and likewise be the first one to greet their beloved Lord and welcome him back home, that the road seemed to be chock-a-block with waves after waves of joyful citizens as if a gigantic Tsunami had broken all the dykes of gloom and despair and despondency to run headlong inland at full throttle, roaring and thundering all the way, excited with the energy of joy, and wondering at its good fortune.

This confirmed to the Lord what Hanuman had informed him about the sort of reception he can expect upon arrival—that he was welcome in Ayodhya with the greatest intensity of warmth and affection one can imagine, and this was beyond doubt now.

²One can conjecture at two possibilities here: One is that this word 'Pushpak' applies to the plane as well as its driver or pilot, and both were known by the same name of Pushpak. The other possibility is that the Pushpak plane was a wonder plane running on some sort of mechanism that worked on either the 'voice command' or the 'thought command', being a pilot-less air vehicle running on some sort of highly evolved application of science. It is easy for us to visualize this actually happening because in our modern world of advanced science we have machines working on Artificial Intelligence that respond exactly the same way, though till now such responses are limited to the 'voice command', but a day is not far off when the 'thought command' would also drive machines.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 179. We read here that Ravana had attacked heaven and snatched this remarkable plane from Kuber, the gods' treasurer.

⁴Pushpak felt 'joyful' because at last 'it'—or should we use the pronoun 'he', because we have just read herein above that the word could also refer to the plane's pilot—had found freedom to go back to heaven and join the service of its Master, Kuber.

But at the same time it was very 'sad' because it would miss the opportunity to witness and participate in Lord Ram's warm welcome in the city as well as the ceremony marking his anointment on the throne of Ayodhya as the kingdom's great King.

But Pushpak had no choice as he had to comply with the Lord's orders. So 'he' reluctantly went to heaven to present himself before Kuber.

A similar thing is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 14, verse nos. 98-99.]

चौ०. आएं भरत संग सब लोग । कृस तन श्रीरघुबीर बियोगा ॥ १ ॥

बामदेव बसिष्ठ मुनिनायक । देखे प्रभु महि धरि धनु सायक ॥ २ ॥

धाड़ धरे गुर चरन सरोरुह । अनुज सहित अति पुलक तनोरुह ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

ā'ē bharata saṅga saba lōgā. kṛsa tana śrīraghubīra biyōgā. 1.
bāmadēva basiṣṭa munināyaka. dēkhē prabhu mahi dhari dhanu sāyaka. 2.
dhā'i dharē gura carana sarōruha. anuja sahita ati pulaka tanōruha. 3.

Bharat, accompanied by all the people, came to the place where the plane had landed; all of them had suffered so much in grief and sorrow over the years for being separated from their beloved Lord Ram that all looked emaciated and weak (as if stricken by some serious disease of the body and the mind)¹. (1)

When Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman descried the illustrious sages Vaamdeo and guru Vasistha amongst the many great sages who had come to receive them, the two brothers (Lord Ram and Laxman) put their bows and quivers containing arrows on the ground and dashed forward to meet these sages. (2)

Lord Ram (and Laxman) ran to guru Vasistha and fell down at his feet, clasping them with both their hands (in a gesture of great respect for the family priest and preceptor). As the two brothers paid their respects to their guru, their bodies were filled with great thrill (as they felt very happy and thankful to their guru for his blessings and good wishes that had supported them in their times of adversity, and has finally made it possible for them to return safely back home). (3)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 86 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it—where we read that the citizens spent the time of Lord Ram's absence in observing austerities and doing penances of various kinds to atone for their sins that had brought such horrible misfortunes upon them that they had to be separated from their beloved Lord Ram, and praying that they could once again be united with him.

In Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 158—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 159 we further read that when Bharat returned to Ayodhya upon being urgently summoned by the kingdom's priest, guru Vasistha, he discovered a gloomy city that appeared to be stricken by some grave misfortune, with all its citizens sullen and remorseful, their countenances dark and sunken, and their general demeanours indicating that all were suffering from some serious disease of the mind and the body.

Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 199 where a similar idea is expressed.

As far as Bharat is concerned, his pitiable condition has been summarized in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 325.]

भेंटि कुसल बूझी मुनिराया । हमरें कुसल तुम्हारिहिं दाया ॥ ४ ॥

सकल द्विजन्ह मिलि नायउ माथा । धर्म धुरंधर रघुकुलनाथा ॥ ५ ॥ bhēṇṭi kusala būjhī munirāyā. hamarēm kusala tumhārihiṁ dāyā. 4.

sakala dvijanha mili nāya'u māthā. dharma dhurandhara raghukulanāthā. 5.

The senior sage (Vasistha) asked them about their welfare, and the two brothers replied cheerfully, 'We are well and happy by your grace and blessings'. (4)

The Lord of the Raghus (Lord Ram), who is an expert in observing the principles of Dharma (proper conduct and righteous behaviour) thereafter met all the Brahmins who were present there, and bowed his head before each of them to pay his respects to them all¹. (5)

[Note—¹It would be highly wrong for the Lord to just bow his head before guru Vasistha and sage Vaamdeo, and to skip other Brahmins who were present there. So therefore, Lord Ram took care to pay his obeisance to every senior person of the Brahmin community who present on the occasion.

Lord Ram had always endorsed the view that Brahmins ought to be shown respect as is clear when he himself says so in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 45.]

गहे भरत पुनि प्रभु पद पंकज । नमत जिन्हहि सुर मुनि संकर अज ॥ ६ ॥
 परे भूमि नहिं उठत उठाए । बर करि कृपासिंधु उर लाए ॥ ७ ॥
 स्यामल गात रोम भए ठाढ़े । नव राजीव नयन जल बाढ़े ॥ ८ ॥ gahē bharata puni prabhu pada paṅkaja. namata jinhahi sura muni saṅkara aja. 6.

parē bhūmi nahim̐ uṭhata uṭhā'ē. bara kari kṛpāsindhu ura lā'ē. 7.
 syāmala gāta rōma bha'ē ṭhārḥē. nava rājīva nayana jala bārḥē. 8.

Thence, Bharat rushed to clasp the lotus-like feet of Lord Ram, the holy feet before which even the great gods, the illustrious sages, hermits and ascetics, as well as Lord Shiva and the creator Brahma ('aja') too bow their heads in reverence. (6)

Bharat fell down on the ground before the Lord, and would not get up even after the Lord made several attempts to lift him.

Finally, Lord Ram, the Lord who is an ocean of compassion and kindness (kṛpāsindhu), lifted Bharat forcefully up from the ground where he lay prostrate, and tenderly clasped the latter to his own bosom with all the affection the Lord could muster. (7)

The dark complexioned bodies of both the brothers (Lord Ram and Bharat)¹ were so much exhilarated that they had goose bumps all over, even as streams of tears rolled down their eyes². (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram and Bharat had dark complexions, whereas Laxman and Shatrughan had fair ones. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 198; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 311; and (iii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 327.

²When Lord Ram and Bharat met at Chitrakoot, a similar warmth had effused from them both as they rushed towards each other, as Bharat fell down prostrate before Lord Ram, and as the Lord lifted him and clasped him to his bosom. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 240—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 241.

A wonderfully similar scene of two dear brothers meeting each other after a long-long time is described in Miguel de Carvantes' classic tale of 'Don Quixote', in its Chapter XV of Book IV. It describes the meeting of the Judge named Juan Perez de Viedma and his elder brother Captain Ruy Perez de Viedma. When they first met each other after a long period of separation, and witnessed by their companions, "they rushed into each other's arms, with such affectionate feelings, with such abundance of tears rolling down their eyes that all the spectators sympathized in their loving passions." "The brothers spoke so feelingly, and their mutual affection was so moving, the surprise so wonderful, and their joy so transporting, that it must be left purely to one's imagination to conceive." "Now they tell one another the strange turns and mazes of their fortunes, then renew their caresses to the height of brotherly love and tenderness, --- so touched the whole company of gentlemen and ladies present there was that they all wept for excess of joy."

In the verses that follow herein below, we shall discover how the above portrait fits in well with Lord Ram-Bharat meeting.]

छं०. राजीव लोचन स्रवत जल तन ललित पुलकावलि बनी । १ ।
 अति प्रेम हृदयँ लगाइ अनुजहि मिले प्रभु त्रिभुवन धनी ॥ २ ॥
 प्रभु मिलत अनुजहि सोह मो पहिं जाति नहिं उपमा कही । ३ ।
 जानु प्रेम अरु सिंगार तनु धरि मिले बर सुषमा लही ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

rājīva lōcana sraṇata jala tana lalita pulakāvali banī. 1.
 ati prēma hṛdayaṁ lagā'i anujahi milē prabhu tribhu'ana dhanī. 2.
 prabhu milata anujahi sōha mō pahim jāti nahim upamā kahī. 3.
 janu prēma aru siṅgāra tanu dhari milē bara suṣamā lahī. 4.

Tears of love and affection flow out in abundance from their lotus like eyes; their charming bodies were thrilled and covered with goose bumps caused with pleasant excitement and emotion of extreme joy. (Chanda line no. 1)

Lord Ram, the Lord of the three divisions of the world¹ (prabhu tribhu'ana dhanī), met and embraced his younger brother Bharat very affectionately, clasping him to his bosom very lovingly and with brotherly passion. (Chanda line no. 2)

The scene of Lord Ram meeting his younger brother Bharat was emotionally so wonderful and heart-touching to behold that I (the poet Tulsidas) cannot find an apt comparison to it, nor anything parallel with it so as to sufficiently illustrate the magnitude of their mutual affection for each other or the beauty of the scene. (Chanda line no. 3)

Nevertheless, let me venture to say that it was like two personified forms of the virtues of brotherly love and its inherent beauty of emotions meeting each other very affectionately². (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹The three divisions of the world are heaven, earth and the nether world.

²The poet Tulsidas says that though he cannot give a complete picture of the majesty and beauty of the scene of Lord Ram meeting Bharat, with its high emotional quotient of brotherly love, affection and trust, yet I can make a conjecture by way of making a rough comparison by citing the above two forms just to convey the idea of how wonderful the scene of the two brothers meeting might have been, leaving the rest to the imagination of the reader as everyone must have experienced, in the course of their own lives, such emotional moments of warmth of love, affection and passion sprouting forth from their hearts for those whom they love most dearly.]

बूझत कृपानिधि कुसल भरतहि बचन बेगि न आवई । ५ ।
 सुनु सिवा सो सुख बचन मन ते भिन्न जान जो पावई ॥ ६ ॥
 अब कुसल कौसलनाथ आरत जानि जन दरसन दियो । ७ ।
 बूझत बिरह बारीस कृपानिधान मोहि कर गहि लियो ॥ ८ ॥ būjhata kṛpānidhi kusala bharatahi bacana bēgi na āva'ī. 5.

 sunu sivā sō sukha bacana mana tē bhinna jāna jō pāva'ī. 6.
 aba kusala kausalanātha ārata jāni jana darasana diyō. 7.
 būrata biraha bārīsa kṛpānidhāna mōhi kara gahi liyō. 8.

Lord Ram, who was an embodiment of the virtues of kindness, mercy and compassion (kṛpānidhi), most affectionately asked Bharat about his welfare, but the latter was so overwhelmed with emotions that he could not utter a word in answer¹. (Chanda line no. 5)

[As an interjection, Lord Shiva, who was narrating this divine Story to his consort Uma, told her—]

“Listen Uma”, said Lord Shiva, “The sense of contentment, the feeling of extreme joy and profound bliss that swelled inside Bharat were of such high intensity, and had dimension so great, that it is beyond the scope of the mind and the faculty of speech to describe them. Verily indeed, only those who have had such feelings themselves in their lives, who have had experienced it personally some time in the course of their lives, can only understand how profound and stupendous it might have been; they alone can have an idea of its deep depth and soaring height.” (Chanda line no. 6)

Finally Bharat recovered his composure enough so as to be able to answer Lord Ram in most graceful terms. He said: ‘Oh gracious Lord of Kaushal! Everything is fine and fortunate now that you have been kind enough to realize that I am very humble and meek, thereby granting me the privilege of seeing you once again as you decided that I was eligible for such an honour. (Chanda line no. 7)

I was almost drowned in the ocean of grief caused by separation from you, but just at the right moment thine merciful Lordship hast caught me by thy arms and saved me from doom.’ (Chanda line no. 8)

[Note—¹To wit, Bharat's throat was virtually choked as he was so overcome with emotions and had become so sentimental at that time that he could not speak anything in reply. Even if he had said something in reply, it was so muffled and subdued by the heavy weight of his emotions strangling his voice that it was not more than a whisper or a muttering or a sigh that was not heard by anyone. Remember: Bharat was weeping, and his sobs got so great a hold on him that even if he had tried to answer Lord Ram, he failed.

Similar ideas are expressed elsewhere in Ram Charit Manas. For instance, Vibhishan says this in Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 46; and Nishad in Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 88.]

दो०. पुनि प्रभु हरषि सत्रुहन भेंटें हृदयँ लगाइ । लछिमन भरत मिले तब परम प्रेम दोउ भाइ ॥ ५ ॥

dōhā.

puni prabhu haraṣi satruhana bhēṇṭē hrdayaṁ lagā'i.
lachimana bharata milē taba parama prēma dō'u bhā'i. 5.

Then the Lord (Sri Ram) affectionately met Shatrughan (the youngest of the four brothers), and emotionally clasped him to his bosom¹.

Meanwhile, Bharat and Laxman cheerfully met each other, with both the brothers overwhelmed with mutual brotherly love and affection².* (Doha no. 5)

[Note—¹A very interesting observation can be made here. In neither of the two cases, i.e. Lord Ram meeting Shatrughan, and Bharat meeting Laxman, is there any mention of the younger brother falling at the feet of his elder sibling to pay his respects, as is the norm and tradition, and naturally expected from them. So what may have happened at that time can be imagined as follows:-

When Bharat fell down at the feet of Lord Ram (Chaupai nos. 6-7 that precede this Doha), it is very possible, and even quite natural, that Shatrughan would have accompanied his elder brother Bharat when the latter lay prostrate before Lord Ram. Lord Ram picked up Bharat and embraced him first because he was elder to Shatrughan, and then the Lord pulled Shatrughan close and clasped the latter to his bosom.

²In the case of Bharat and Laxman meeting each other, it can be visualized that as soon as Bharat was freed from Lord Ram's embrace, as the Lord turned towards Shatrughan to clasp him to his bosom, he dashed to Laxman standing close by. Laxman too ran towards Bharat with outstretched arms, and the two brothers fell into each other's arms very emotionally, each tightly embracing and caressing the other repeatedly.

*So here we have a wonderful scene of two pairs of loving brothers, Lord Ram and Shatrughan, and Laxman and Bharat, embracing and caressing each other very movingly, with their bodies thrilled and tears rolling down from their moist eyes.

The pairing is remarkable: Shatrughan and Laxman had similar complexions as both of them were fair, while Lord Ram and Bharat were dark in complexion.

Besides this, there is another significant point to be made here: Lord Ram expressed his gratitude to Shatrughan for taking care of the affairs of the kingdom during the 14 years of his absence, because Bharat had lived like a recluse in Nandigram and the routine administration of the kingdom was handled by Shatrughan. On the other hand, Bharat thanked Laxman profusely for serving Lord Ram in the forest and fighting alongside him in the war of Lanka on behalf of both Bharat and Shatrughan. That is why “the brothers repeatedly embraced and caressed each other”. They asked each other one question, was answered, and then asked another question, and with each reply and subsequent query there was renewed hugging and tapping of the shoulders.

In the verse that follows herein below, we shall read that after meeting Bharat, Laxman met Shatrughan too. In both the cases of Lord Ram and Laxman meeting their brothers Bharat and Shatrughan one after another, we observe that a particular order is followed. Both Lord Ram and Laxman first meet Bharat, and after that they meet Shatrughan. The reason is that Bharat was elder to Shatrughan, and so it was in order that the elder brother is embraced first, followed by the younger one.]

चौ०. भरतानुज लछिमन पुनि भेंटे । दुसह बिरह संभव दुख मेटे ॥ १ ॥

सीता चरन भरत सिरु नावा । अनुज समेत परम सुख पावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bharatānuja lachimana puni bhēṇṭē. dusaha biraha sambhava dukha mēṭē. 1.
sītā carana bharata siru nāvā. anuja samēta parama sukha pāvā. 2.

Laxman subsequently met Bharat’s younger brother Shatrughan.

With this emotional meeting of all the four brothers, all possible causes of any sort of misgivings, sorrows, grief and remorse, that may have existed and secretly lurked somewhere, were dispelled for good¹. (1)

Then Bharat, along with his younger brother Shatrughan, bowed his head at the feet of Sita to pay respects to her, and this gesture gave both the brothers immense joy (as they felt comforted in their hearts)².* (2)

[Note—¹With the affectionate way the four brothers met and repeatedly embraced and caressed each other, with thrilled bodies and wet eyes, all traces of misunderstanding and remorse that may have lurked somewhere in their minds were completely eliminated. The effusing warmth and bonhomie of the way they met also sent out a strong and unequivocal signal to all the citizens observing them that all was well and fine with them once again, that their mutual love and trust had not changed a wee whit over the testing time of 14 long years, and that all the bitterness of the past, if they were any, have been buried and forgotten forever.

The meeting of the four brothers, Lord Ram, Bharat, Laxman and Shatrughan, was marked by such tender feelings of brotherly love, and of mutual affection and respect for each other, that all those who observed them, i.e. the citizens of Ayodhya, the guests who had arrived on the plane with the Lord, as well as Lord Shiva who was narrating this divine Story of Lord Ram to his consort goddess Uma, were mesmerized by it, and it left in an ecstatic state of the mind and heart.

²Bharat and Shatrughan have simultaneously bowed their heads before Sita to seek her blessings. This helped them to feel comforted in their hearts because they had been suffering from excess of remorse and guilty ever since she had gone to the forest with Lord Ram. When they bowed their heads before Sita, she smiled and blessed them, thereby assuaging their sorrowful feelings and redeeming their conscience.

*When Bharat had gone to Chitrakoot earlier to meet Lord Ram and try to bring him back home, the meeting between the four brothers, as well as Bharat and Shatrughan paying their respect to Sita, followed the same pattern as has been described here. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 240—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 242.}

प्रभु बिलोकि हरषे पुरबासी । जनित बियोग बिपति सब नासी ॥ ३ ॥
 प्रेमातुर सब लोग निहारी । कौतुक कीन्ह कृपाल खरारी ॥ ४ ॥ अमित रूप प्रगटे तेहि काला । जथाजोग मिले सबहि कृपाला ॥ ५ ॥ prabhu bilōki haraṣē purabāsī. janita biyōga bipati saba nāsī. 3. prēmātura saba lōga nihārī. kautuka kīnha kṛpāla kharārī. 4.

 amita rūpa pragaṭē tēhi kālā. jathājōga milē sabahi kṛpālā. 5.

The citizens of Ayodhya felt exuberant and exceedingly exhilarated when they saw (their beloved) Lord Ram; all their woes, miseries, grief and misfortunes arising out of separation from the Lord were now eliminated for good¹. (3)

When the compassionate Lord Ram observed that the people were so happy to see him back home, and also that they were very impatient to meet him personally and exchange greetings (if that was at all possible), the merciful, obliging and gracious Lord (kṛpāla), who had slayed the demon Khar (kharārī), performed a miracle of sorts. (4)

[What did he do?] The Lord instantly produced countless images in his own likeness, and met each person individually according to his wishes, and in an appropriate manner². (5)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 81—to Doha no. 86.

²People had different emotions with respect to Lord Ram. Some treated him as their Lord; some as their friend; some others as their brother; still someone else would like to call him a family member; some elderly loved him like a son, and so on. Hence, Lord Ram met everyone in accordance to his wishes: becoming a Lord for one, a brother for another, a friend for the third, a family member for someone, and a son for another, and so on.

A similar event had occurred in Janakpur where the citizens of this city had assembled to witness the marriage ceremony of Lord Ram and Sita. Each person viewed Lord Ram in accordance to his own preferences—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 241—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 242.

Presently, Lord Ram embraced someone, he patted the shoulder of someone else; some he bowed at, some he smiled at; with some he shook hands warmly, with others he exchanged pleasant memories of their childhood days; with some he talked and with some he exchanged sweet glances; some the Lord clasped to his bosom while someone else clasped the Lord to his own; and so on and on went this mutual show of love and affection between the loving citizens on the one hand, and their equally loving Lord Ram on the other hand.

Every single individual thought that Lord Ram has met him personally, and he was so focused on this direct interaction with his beloved Lord that he did not bother about others, nor was he even aware that he was not the only one whom Lord Ram has met, but that the Lord was simultaneously meeting all the assembled citizens at once.]

कृपादृष्टि रघुबीर बिलोकी । किए सकल नर नारि बिसोकी ॥ ६ ॥
छन महि सबहि मिले भगवाना । उमा मरम यह काहुँ न जाना ॥ ७ ॥
एहि बिधि सबहि सुखी करि रामा । आगे चले सील गुन धामा ॥ ८ ॥ कौसल्यादि मातु सब धाई । निरखि बच्छ जनु धेनु लवाई ॥ ९ ॥ krpādr̥ṣṭi raghubīra bilōkī. ki'ē sakala nara nāri bisōkī. 6.

chana mahir̥ sabahi milē bhagavānā. umā marama yaha kāhuṁ na jānā. 7.
ēhi bidhi sabahi sukhī kari rāmā. āgēm calē sīla guna dhāmā. 8.
kausalyādi mātu saba dhā'ī. nirakhi baccha janu dhēnu lavā'ī. 9.

Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) glanced at all the citizens, both the males and the females, with his gracious look full of compassion and mercy, and this sent cheers amongst the citizenry; everyone felt that all his or her sorrows and grief have vanished instantly. (6)

In this way, the Lord (bhagavānā) met each person in a very short time.

Lord Shiva told his consort Uma (who was listening to this divine Story of Lord Ram): “Uma, it was a mystical occurrence, a magical feat of such rarity that no one could know what actually had happened¹. (7)

In this way, after having pleased everyone present on the occasion, Lord Ram, who is an abode of the virtues of courteousness and all other excellent qualities, proceeded ahead (towards the city). (8)

Kaushalya and all other mothers (Sumitra and Kaikeyi²), rushed forward to meet the Lord even as a cow rushes to meet her calf as soon as she sees it coming from a distance³. (9)

[Note—¹Everyone thought that Lord Ram was meeting him or her personally, exchanging greetings and saying pleasantries; but the fact was that within a few moments the Lord had obliged a large crowd by assuming as many forms as there were people, and meeting each person individually. It was a miraculous event, and at that point of time no one could fathom its significance. Everyone was contented that the Lord was so gracious that he went out of his way to personally meet him or her, without realizing that he did it with each person in the crowd that had come to welcome him home.

From a metaphysical perspective, this event was in accordance with the philosophy of the universality of the Lord, of the fact that the ‘Atma’, the cosmic Consciousness that the Lord represents, is omnipresent and all-pervading. The Lord is present everywhere and at all times, and he needs only purity of devotion and love to manifest himself before his devotee. To wit, one need not go anywhere to search for the Supreme Being; he is present here and now if a spiritual seeker has the requisite level of purity of devotion and love for the Lord in his heart, and if he is sincere in his quest for communion with the Lord.

Lord Shiva has himself endorsed this view in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 185—when he advises the gods and the creator Brahma as well as mother earth that they need not go in search for the Supreme Being anywhere, for the Lord would reveal himself right where they are standing at present if only they had the needed level of devotion and affection for him, coupled with an earnest desire to meet him.

²Yes, both Sumitra and Kaikayi, the mothers of Laxman and Bharat respectively, too had joined Kaushalya to go out to meet Lord Ram as will be clear shortly in Doha no. 6 herein below.

³Here, Lord Ram is the ‘calf’, and the mothers are like the ‘cow’. When the cow sees her young calf at the end of the day, she bolts towards her young one. Similarly, when Kaushalya and Sumitra, the mothers of Lord Ram and Laxman respectively, had heard that their beloved sons have come back safely, they had rushed out of their palaces to reach the gates and wait there eagerly for their arrival. Soon the procession of jubilant citizens that accompanied Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman reached the city, and no sooner did the Lord come within sight of the mothers, than the latter abandoned all inhibitions and dashed out on the streets to meet their sons.]

छं०. जनु धेनु बालक बच्छ तजि गृहँ चरन बन परबस गई । १ ।
 दिन अंत पुर रुख स्रवत थन हुंकार करि धावत भई ॥ २ ॥
 अति प्रेम प्रभु सब मातु भेटिं बचन मृदु बहुबिधि कहे । ३ ।
 गइ बिषम बिपति बियोग भव तिन्ह हरष सुख अगनित लहे ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

janu dhēnu bālaka baccha taji grhaṁ carana bana parabasa ga'īm. 1.
 dina anta pura rukha sravata thana huṁkāra kari dhāvata bha'īm. 2.
 ati prēma prabhu saba mātu bhēṭīṁ bacana mṛdu bahubidhi kahē. 3.
 ga'i biṣama bipati biyōga bhava tinha haraṣa sukha aganita lahē. 4.

The way the mothers rushed forward to meet Lord Ram and Laxman was reminiscent of the way a cow, that had recently delivered her calf, would eagerly rush towards the village or the cowshed where she had left her young one earlier in the day when she was forced to go to the forest or a meadow to graze, or for some other reason, mooing lovingly and sprinting forward longingly, with milk oozing from her udders, so that she can be with her calf as quickly as possible. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

Lord Ram met all the mothers very lovingly and with great affection, speaking with them in a sweet voice and talking with them reassuringly in various ways¹. (Chanda line no. 3)

All kinds of misery, torment, grief and pain associated with their long separation from the Lord were dispelled for good now that they could see and meet their beloved son once again. All sense of despondency, dismay, sadness and perplexity was now replaced with that of excess of joy, happiness, cheer and bliss. (Chanda line no. 3)

[Note—¹To wit, Lord Ram told the mothers that he and Sita and Laxman were fine; he asked them how they were, and exchanged other pleasantries in a general way. The Lord hugged the mothers who embraced him tightly in return, kissing him and caressing him repeatedly like a mother would to her son whom she meets after a very long time, especially when their parting was under a very unpleasant and sad situation, and uncertainty marked the chances of their reunion in the future.]

दो०. जेटेउ तनय सुमित्राँ राम चरन रति जानि ।
रामहि मिलत कैकई हृदयँ बहुत सकुचानि ॥ ६ (क) ॥
लछिमन सब मातन्ह मिलि हरषे आसिष पाइ । कैकइ कहँ पुनि पुनि मिले मन कर छोभु न जाइ ॥ ६ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

bhēṭē'u tanaya sumitrāṁ rāma carana rati jāni.
rāmahi milata kaika'ī hṛdayaṁ bahuta sakucāni. 6 (a).
lachimana saba mātanha mili haraṣē āsiṣa pā'i.
kaika'i kahaṁ puni puni milē mana kara chōbhū na jā'i. 6 (b).

Sumitra, the mother of Laxman, met her son very lovingly as she was pleased that he was very committed to serve the holy feet of Lord Ram¹.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram met Kaikeyi who was very remorseful and felt shy in meeting the Lord². (Doha no. 6-a)

Laxman too met all the mothers, and received their cheerful and heartfelt blessings.

Like Lord Ram, Laxman met Kaikeyi and paid his respects to her repeatedly, but his bitter feelings for her would not leave him³. (Doha no. 6-b)

[Note—¹At the time of Lord Ram's departure for the forest 14 years ago, Laxman had gone to his mother Sumitra to seek her permission to let him accompany the Lord to the forest. Sumitra was overwhelmed with sorrows, but she was very glad that her son had chosen to serve the Lord and to be by his side during such adverse time. She not only gladly permitted Laxman to go with Lord Ram but had also advised him to treat Lord Ram and Sita as his parents, and serve them accordingly. She had also said that a mother whose son has devotion and love for Lord Ram is a most fortunate mother.

{Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 73—to Chanda line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 75.}

So therefore, Sumitra was exceptionally happy that her son Laxman had fulfilled her wishes and had done what she expected from him. Remember: The epic “Ram Charit Manas” is a book that has a very high quotient of the virtues of devotion and love for Lord Ram, who was an incarnation of the Supreme Being, incorporated in its texture of its fabric in such an inseparable way that it forms the basic principle on which the entire edifice of the story stands, and this single factor also makes this book singularly valuable from the spiritual perspective. Hence, Sumitra’s appreciation of Laxman for his singular devotion for Lord Ram more than anything else fits in well with the general theme of this classic story.

²It was Kaikeyi who was responsible for sending Lord Ram to 14 years of forest living. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 29.}

So naturally she was overcome with a grave sense of remorse and felt extremely shy while meeting Lord Ram upon his arrival home. It is because though she had been instrumental in sending Lord Ram to the forest and thought that she had played her game very expertly, but all subsequent developments had shown her the gravity of the mistake she has made, and that this mistake was so irreparable and the darkest stain on her life that she would be burdened with guilt and shamed with ignominy for the rest of her living days. She sincerely repented thereafter, but the damage was already done.

Nevertheless, Lord Ram had forgiven her from the very beginning—for the Lord knew that Kaikeyi had done what was necessary to be done, for she had actually helped Lord Ram to fulfill his mission of eliminating the scourge of the cruel demons led by their ferocious king Ravana by sending the Lord to the forest along with Sita and Laxman, so that this mission could be accomplished. Plainly speaking, Kaikeyi had served Lord Ram and had made the single greatest sacrifice amongst all the characters of the story by inviting a life-long burden of shame and ignominy in order to help Lord Ram fulfill his promise made to the gods and mother earth. It was a subtle wish of Lord Ram himself that things must be somehow maneuvered so that he can go to the forest. Taking a cue from Lord Ram, the gods then prevailed upon goddess Saraswati, the goddess of wisdom and speech, to arrange things in such a way that the Lord could go to the forest. So it was actually Saraswati who would, though very reluctantly, turn the mind of Kaikeyi’s maid Manthara, who in turn instigated her mistress Kaikeyi to bring about the Lord’s exit to the forest. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 10; and Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Doha no. 12.}

The fact of the matter is that instead of harbouring any ill-will against Kaikeyi, Lord Ram was actually grateful to her, for had she not made this great sacrifice of her own reputation, and willingly accept a life of humiliation, scorn, ignominy and castigation by the society, as well as by her own son Bharat who is believed not to have talked with her for the rest of her life for being instrumental in sending Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman to the forest*, the demons would have continued to terrorise the world, and the very purpose of Lord Vishnu coming down to earth as Lord Ram would have been defeated. {*Apropos: Geetawali Ramayan, Uttar Kand, verse no. 37.}

Earlier, when Bharat had gone to Chirakoot along with his whole family and a large retinue of citizens of Ayodhya as well as all the chief courtiers and a large army in an attempt to plead with Lord Ram to bring him back to Ayodhya, it is to be noted that at that time too Lord Ram had met mother Kaikeyi first, before meeting other mothers, including Kaushalya and Sumitra. Lord Ram had fell at her feet and assuaged her feeling, telling her not to feel regretful and remorseful as everything is destined and governed by fate, for which no individual should be blamed. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 244.}

So now here, when Lord Ram met Kaikeyi he found that she was very ashamed of herself; so therefore the Lord took extra care to comfort her and assuage her sad heart by speaking lovingly to her, and telling her to cheer up as she had nothing to worry and regret for.

³Laxman could not forgive Kaikeyi, like Bharat, who too could not forgive her. Compare this with Lord Ram who had not only forgiven her but even tried his best to comfort her and make her feel happy.

The reason is that while Lord Ram knew how important and necessary a role Kaikeyi had played in helping him accomplish his mission of eliminating the demons, and the great sacrifice of her own reputation and mental peace that she had made while doing so, making the Lord become rather grateful to her and remain obliged for life, Laxman and Bharat on the other hand treated her with contempt and disdain for being instrumental in causing so much hardship to their dear brother Lord Ram whom they loved so much, and for whom they would do anything in the world to keep him happy.]

चौ०. सासुन्ह सबनि मिली बैदेही । चरनन्हि लागि हरषु अति तेही ॥ १ ॥

देहिं असीस बूझि कुसलाता । होइ अचल तुम्हार अहिवाता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sāsunha sabani milī baidēhī. carananhi lāgi haraṣu ati tēhī. 1.

dēhim asīsa būjhi kusalātā. hō'i acala tumhāra ahivātā. 2.

Sita, the daughter of Videha (king Janak; “baidēhī”) met all her mothers-in-law and felt happy by touching their feet as a gesture of paying her respects to them (and the mothers-in-law too felt equally happy to meet Sita)¹. (1)

All the mothers-in-law enquired about her welfare, and profusely blessed her that her married life be forever happy. (2)

[Note—¹In a similar scene at Chitrakoot, Sita had met all the mothers-in-law, paid her respects to them, and received their blessings in return—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 246 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it.]

सब रघुपति मुख कमल बिलोकहिं । मंगल जानि नयन जल रोकहिं ॥ ३ ॥

कनक थार आरती उतारहिं । बार बार प्रभु गात निहारहिं ॥ ४ ॥

नाना भाँति निछावरि करहीं । परमानंद हरष उर भरहीं ॥ ५ ॥ saba raghupati mukha kamala bilōkahīm. maṅgala jāni nayana jala rōkahīm.

3.

kanaka thāra āratī utārahīm. bāra bāra prabhu gāta nihārahīm. 4.

nānā bhāṁti nichāvari karahīm. paramānanda haraṣa ura bharahīm. 5.

All the mothers gazed at the lotus-like charming face of Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram), and considering it to be an auspicious moment (rather than a sorrowful one when one weeps, as was the case when Lord Ram had departed for the forest), they somehow tried to hold back their tears that were on the verge of dropping down from their wet eyes¹. (3)

The mothers held in their hands golden plates on which were arranged lighted lamps, and they waved these lights in front of Lord Ram (as well as Sita and Laxman who were standing by either side of the Lord) as an auspicious ritual to welcome them and mark their safe arrival back home². (4)

Then the mothers, who were ecstatic with joy and their hearts filled with jubilation, delighted in liberally giving away or scattering different kinds of gifts as alms to seekers and also by way of making charities (nichāvari karahīm)³ for the welfare of the three, i.e. Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman. (5)

[Note—¹These were tears of joy and ecstasy, and not of sorrow or grief. The mothers had become very emotional and were so overwhelmed sentimentally that they had to try hard to hold back their tears that seemed to breach the bank of their eyelids and flow out in a stream. It was not a time to weep, at least openly in full public view; it was an auspicious moment of joy and cheer, for Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman had returned safely from a long absence in the forest. Shedding tears on this occasion would be odd and inauspicious, as tears are usually shed on unhappy and sad occasions, such as on separation from dear ones, but not on the occasion of being reunited with them. But excess of joy and ecstasy also bring out tears of happiness from the eyes as are moments of sorrow and grief. The mothers had a hard time in fighting back their tears which were building up on the margins of their eyes like a great flood ready to breach the bank of a river.

The facial expression of the mothers revealed all; while the pearls of tears dangled from the edges of their eyes, and perhaps some even rolled down unawares on their cheeks, the stiff muscles of their faces and the taut lips, the continuous movement of the muscles in their throats that indicated that they were trying to stifle sobs which they fought to suppress, and their hands holding the end of the scarves pressed against their mouths, showed clearly how emotionally moved all the mothers were.

²This ritual is called ‘Doing Aarti’ of a highly respected person. It is usually done when such a person comes to someone’s home. In a temple however, it is a routine ritual performed before the consecrated Deity to pay respects to the God that the installed idol represents.

Presently, Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman had come home after a very long time of 14 years. So the mothers perform the ritual of the ‘Aarti’ to welcome them in a ceremonious way, as well as to ward off any evil eye of the devil that may, by any misfortune, be lurking somewhere, ready to cast its malicious glance upon them.

A similar sight was also witnessed when Lord Ram and his other brothers returned to the city after their marriage—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 346 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

³On auspicious occasions, people, in accordance with their abilities to give, make liberal charities and give alms to alms-seekers as a gesture of doing some meritorious deed, as it would help in accrual of some auspicious reward for them as well as for those for whom, or on whose behalf, such noble deeds are done. On this occasion, the mothers did it so that Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman are blessed by those who receive such largesse.]

कौसल्या पुनि पुनि रघुबीरहि । चितवति कृपासिंधु रनधीरहि ॥ ६ ॥
हृदयं बिचारति बारहिं बारा । कवन भाँति लंकापति मारा ॥ ७ ॥ अति सुकुमार जुगल मेरे बारे । निसिचर सुभट महाबल भारे ॥ ८ ॥ kausalyā puni puni raghubīrahi. citavati kṛpāsindhu ranadhīrahi. 6.

hr̥dayaṁ bicāratī bārahīm bārā. kavana bhāṁti laṅkāpati mārā. 7.
ati sukumāra jugala mērē bārē. nīsicara subhaṭa mahābala bhārē. 8.

Mother Kaushalya repeatedly glanced, with a lot of affection and wonderment, at Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) who was an ocean of grace, compassion, mercy and kindness (kṛpāsindhu), and an invincible warrior in the battle-field (ranadhīrahi). (6)

She repeatedly contemplated in her heart and wondered in amazement: ‘How did my two sons (“jugala mērē bārē”; i.e. Lord Ram and Laxman)¹, who are still very young and tender (ati sukumāra), have been able to slay the Lord of Lanka (Ravana) and the demons who were all renowned for their ferociousness, bravery and strength of arms?’ (8)

[Note—¹It is to be noted that mother Kaushalya does not distinguish between her own son ‘Lord Ram’ and Laxman who was the son of Sumitra; she treats both the brothers as her own sons.

Not only Lord Ram and Laxman, mother Kaushalya had treated Bharat too with the same degree of affection, though it was for Bharat for whom his mother Kaikeyi had played the devil’s part in sending Lord Ram to the forest so that her son could ascend the throne of the kingdom of Ayodhya unchallenged. This would be evident when we read the story of ‘Ram Charit Manas’ where Bharat goes to meet Kaushalya after his return to Ayodhya and discovering all the misfortunes that had befallen upon the family and the city in the wake of the mischief created by his own mother Kaikeyi, which resulted in the death of his father king Dasrath, and Lord Ram going to the forest with Sita and Laxman. During this meeting, mother Kaushalya showered all the affections she could muster upon the saddened Bharat, comforting him and assuaging his distraught heart, and assuring him by all her gestures that neither she nor Lord Ram harbour any ill-will against him whatever. We also find here that Shatrughan, the younger sibling of Bharat, too was equally affected by the unfortunate events, and he too was shown the same affection by mother Kaushalya.

{Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 163—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 169.]

Nowhere one would discern that Kaushalya has ever made a distinction between the four brothers, Lord Ram, Laxman, Bharat and Shatrughan; she treated them all as her own sons. This was the singular greatness of her heart. Compare this remarkably noble attitude of Kaushalya, and the greatness of her heart, with that of Kaikeyi who was very selfish and cunning to the hilt, as she had slyly schemed to make her son Bharat the king of Ayodhya, while having no compunctions nor any guilty conscience in being instrumental in sending Lord Ram and Laxman to the forest so that all decks could be cleared for Bharat's ascension to the throne without any challenge. That her nefarious designs backfired and served her no gain is a different thing.]

दो०. लछिमन अरु सीता सहित प्रभुहि बिलोकति मातु ।

परमानंद मगन मन पुनि पुनि पुलकित गातु ॥ ७ ॥

dōhā.

lachimana aru sītā sahita prabhuhi bilōkati mātu.

paramānanda magana mana puni puni pulakita gātu. 7.

As mother Kaushalya gazed affectionately at Laxman as well as at Lord Ram standing alongside Sita, her heart brimmed over with joy and ecstasy as she was overwhelmed with extreme sense of felicity and happiness, even as repeated waves of thrill passed over her entire body. (Doha no. 7)

चौ०. लंकापति कपीस नल नीला । जामवंत अंगद सुभसीला ॥ १ ॥

हनुमदादि सब बानर बीरा । धरे मनोहर मनुज सरीरा ॥ २ ॥

भरत सनेह सील ब्रत नेमा । सादर सब बरनहिं अति प्रेमा ॥ ३ ॥

देखि नगरबासिन्ह कै रीती । सकल सराहहिं प्रभु पद प्रीती ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

laṅkāpati kapīsa nala nīlā. jāmavanta aṅgada subhasīlā. 1.

hanumadādi saba bānara bīrā. dharē manōhara manuja sarīrā. 2.

bharata sanēha sīla brata nēmā. sādara saba baranahim ati prēmā. 3.

dēkhi nagarabāsinha kai rītī. sakala sarāhahim prabhu pada prītī. 4.

The Lord of Lanka (i.e. Vibhishan), the Lord of the monkeys (i.e. Sugriv), Nala, Neela, Jamvant (the chief of the bear community), Angad (the crown prince of Kishkindha and the monkey race), Hanuman, and all other monkey warriors having virtuous characters and auspicious nature (who had accompanied Lord Ram on the Pushpak plane), had assumed human forms (when they landed in Ayodhya). (1-2)

As they observed Bharat and the nobility of his attitude and demeanours, they were all in praise of him and his excellent virtues; they lauded him and affectionately applauded him for the virtues of immaculate devotion and love that he had, for his good manners, gracious nature, great civility and courteousness, for his adherence to auspicious vows and upholding his words of honour, and for all other strictness of austerities and penances that he had so diligently observed¹. (3)

Similarly, they also noted the auspicious ways of life, the nobility of attitude, the singularly excellent nature, and the virtuous character of the citizens of Ayodhya. They especially remarked and appreciated the love and devotion that these citizens had for Lord Ram². (4)

[Note—¹The great sage Bharadwaj was all praises for Bharat as is evident in the following selected verses of Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand: (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 207; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 208; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 210.

The deity of the holy pilgrim place known as Triveni had lauded Bharat in glowing terms in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 205 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it.

Lord Ram has himself praised Bharat in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 231—to Doha no. 232.

Gods too had praised Bharat in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precedes Doha no. 233.

Later on, when Bharat decided to live like a recluse on the outskirts of Ayodhya for the entire period that Lord Ram would live like a hermit in the forest, everyone had great praise for Bharat. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 325—to Doha no. 326.

²The excellent nature and characters of the citizens of Ayodhya, as well as of the city of Ayodhya itself, have been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Doha no. 21; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 22; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 25; (iv) Doha no. 26 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it; (v) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Doha no. 30.]

पुनि रघुपति सब सखा बोलाए । मुनि पद लागहु सकल सिखाए ॥ ५ ॥

गुर बसिष्ठ कुलपूज्य हमारे । इन्ह की कृपाँ दनुज रन मारे ॥ ६ ॥

ए सब सखा सुनहु मुनि मेरे । भए समर सागर कहँ बेरे ॥ ७ ॥

मम हित लागि जन्म इन्ह हारे । भरतहु ते मोहि अधिक पिआरे ॥ ८ ॥

सुनि प्रभु बचन मगन सब भए । निमिष निमिष उपजत सुख नए ॥ ९ ॥ puni raghupati saba sakhā bōlā'ē. muni pada lāgahu sakala sikhā'ē. 5.

gura basiṣṭha kulapūjya hamārē. inha kī kṛpāṁ danuja rana mārē. 6.

ē saba sakhā sunahu muni mērē. bha'ē samara sāgara kahaṁ bērē. 7.

mama hita lāgi janma inha hārē. bharatahu tē mōhi adhika pi'ārē. 8.

sunī prabhu bacana magana saba bha'ē. nimiṣa nimiṣa upajata sukha na'ē. 9.

Then Lord Raghupati (Lord Sri Ram) called all his friends and advised them to touch the feet of the sages assembled there. (5)

The Lord specially pointed out his royal priest, sage Vasistha, to them and said: ‘My friends, this is sage Vasistha, our revered family priest and moral preceptor. It is his blessings that we have been successful in slaying the demons in the battle-field.’ (6)

Then the Lord turned to sage Vasistha and introduced his friends to him, saying: ‘Listen my dear sage, all these are my dear friends. They have been like a bridge for me as they have enabled me to cross the symbolic ocean of war by helping me all through it and finally attain victory¹. (7)

They had staked their own lives for my sake. Truly, they are dearer to me than even Bharat is².’ (8)

Hearing such words of praise for themselves, all of them (the Lord’s friends from Lanka and Kishkindha) were overwhelmed with exhilaration and filled with great delight. Each passing moment made them ecstatic and overcome with joy³. (9)

[Note—¹To wit, I owe my victory to them; had it not been for their help it would not have been possible for me to win the war of Lanka and recover Sita. So therefore, just like a bridge that helps a person cross over from one side to the other side of a vast body of water that forms a formidable obstacle before him, blocking his path, almost breaking his spirits and hindering his progress, these friends of mine have made it possible for me to cross the vast ocean of misfortunes and hopelessness that were stacked high up against me, especially with the daunting prospect of winning a war against ferocious enemies such as the demons were and retrieving Sita against all odds. So I am extremely thankful and obliged of them.

²On the face it seems that Lord Ram’s words would have made Bharat feel embarrassed. But relations between the two loving brothers, Lord Ram and Bharat, were too deep and sound to be so easily affected by some causal remark made by Lord Ram just to emphasize the fact that he was very thankful and grateful to his friends from Lanka and Kishkindha who had helped him during severe times of adversity, when the Lord was all alone in an alien land, far away from his own country, family and friends, and faced with a grave situation. Everyone in Ayodhya acknowledged the great help these friends of Lanka and Kishkindha had extended to Lord Ram, and everyone, including Bharat himself, would have thanked them profusely for helping the Lord win the war of Lanka so that he could come back home to them in Ayodhya, safely and happily.

Bharat realized that this remark of Lord Ram was made just to please his friends and it was a gesture of goodwill for them, and nothing else. Bharat was sure that it was not meant to insult him by any means. On Lord Ram’s part, he had so much confidence in Bharat and so sure of his wisdom that the Lord had not a trace of doubt that Bharat would take umbrage at his remark and read it in the wrong light.

³Obviously they were all very thankful to Lord Ram for lavishly praising them for their efforts in full public view.]

दो०. कौसल्या के चरनन्हि पुनि तिन्ह नायउ माथ ।

आसिष दीन्हे हरषि तुम्ह प्रिय मम जिमि रघुनाथ ॥ ८ (क) ॥

सुमन बृष्टि नभ संकुल भवन चले सुखकंद ।
चढ़ी अटारिन्ह देखिंह नगर नारि नर बृंद ॥ ८ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

kausalyā kē carananhi puni tinha nāya'u mātha.
āṣiṣa dīnhē haraṣi tumha priya mama jimi raghunātha. 8 (a).
sumana br̥ṣṭi nabha saṅkula bhavana calē sukhakanda.
caṛhī aṭārinha dēkhahim nagara nāri nara br̥nda. 8 (b).

Next (i.e. after paying their respects to sage Vasistha and others), all of them (Vibhishan, Sugriv, Nala, Neela, Jamvant, Angad, Hanuman and the rest) bowed their heads before mother Kaushalya. She gladly blessed them, saying courteously: 'You are all as dear to me as his Lord Ram.' (Doha no. 8-a)

The whole sky was obscured by a rain of flowers¹ as Lord Ram, who was an embodiment of all that provides joy, happiness, felicity and bliss, wended his way to the royal palace within the city.

The male and female citizens of the city went up on the terraces and balconies of their homes from where they jubilantly observed the celebratory procession that accompanied Lord Ram as he walked slowly towards his home. (Doha no. 8-b)

[Note—¹The flowers were showered from the heavens by the gods, as well as by the citizens who had mounted on the terraces and balconies of their homes from where they showered flowers upon the Lord as he walked through the streets of the city towards the palace.]

चौ०. कंचन कलस बिचित्र सँवारे । सबहिं धरे सजि निज निज द्वारे ॥ १ ॥
बंदनवार पताका केतू । सबन्हि बनाए मंगल हेतू ॥ २ ॥
बीथीं सकल सुगंध सिंचाई । गजमनि रचि बहु चौक पुराई ॥ ३ ॥
नाना भाँति सुमंगल साजे । हरषि नगर निसान बहु बाजे ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

kañcana kalasa bicitra saṁvārē. sabahim dharē saji nija nija dvārē. 1.
bandanavāra patākā kētū. sabanhi banā'ē maṅgala hētū. 2.
bīthim sakala sugandha siñcā'im. gajamani raci bahu cauka purā'im. 3.
nānā bhāmti sumaṅgala sājē. haraṣi nagara nisāna bahu bājē. 4.

Every household of the city placed golden pots that were beautifully decorated and adorned with auspicious materials on the thresholds of their homes. (1)

Colourfully decorated festoons, buntings and flags were made and put up on the doorways of every home by the citizens to celebrate this happy occasion and also as a sign of auspiciousness. (2)

All the streets and lanes were sprinkled with scented water and perfumes. Colourful squares were painted on the ground, as well as those that existed at crossroads in the city, and were decorated with special types of pearl-beads known as ‘Gajmukta’¹. (3)

The whole city was artfully decorated with a variety of auspicious materials and colourful designs. Music began playing from kettle-drums.

To wit, the whole atmosphere was one of mass celebration, as if a large public fete or fair was being organized in the city to welcome Lord Ram back home². (4)

[Note—¹The “Gajmukta” is the dried secretion from the glands on the head of adult elephants. This viscous secretion dries up to form beads, and since they are rare they have a high value. The word “Gaja” means an elephant, and “Mukta” means pearl. Hence, the composite word “Gajmukta” means ‘pearls obtained from an elephant’.

In ancient times, kings had huge numbers of elephants that formed a major section of their armies. So there was no dearth of such Gajmuktas.

They can be compared to corals, and shells of oysters and conches that are obtained from seas and oceans, and used for decorative purposes.

²A similar sight of mass celebrations was seen in Ayodhya when Lord Ram and his three brothers, Laxman, Bharat and Shatrughan, were born. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 195 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede it.

It was also witnessed when Lord Ram and his brothers returned to the city after their marriage—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 344—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 348.]

जहँ तहँ नारि निछावरि करहीं । देहिं असीस हरष उर भरहीं ॥ ५ ॥

कंचन थार आरतीं नाना । जुबतीं सजें करहिं सुभ गाना ॥ ६ ॥

करहिं आरती आरतिहर कें । रघुकुल कमल बिपिन दिनकर कें ॥ ७ ॥ jahaṁ tahaṁ nāri nichāvari karahīm. dēhīm asīsa haraṣa ura bharahīm. 5.

kañcana thāra āratīm nānā. jubatīm sajēm karahīm subha gānā. 6.
karahīm āratī āratihara kēm. raghukula kamala bipina dinakara kēm. 7.

Everywhere the ladies of the city were scattering gifts and making offerings to honour and bless Lord Ram as he slowly walked on the streets towards his home, and while doing so they felt very ecstatic in their hearts (that they could personally participate in the ceremony to mark their beloved Lord’s return home)¹. (5)

The ladies decorated golden plates with a variety of auspicious things and performed Aarti of the Lord while singing auspicious songs to mark the occasion². (6)

To wit, the exhilarated ladies were performing the Aarti of the Lord who is an eliminator of sorrows, miseries, torments and tribulations of everyone (āratihara), of the Lord who is like a sun (dinakara) for the garden of lotus flowers represented by the illustrious family of King Raghu of Ayodhya (raghukula kamala bipina)¹.

[Note—¹To wit, the ecstatic ladies of Ayodhya welcomed Lord Ram by liberally showering gifts of all manners upon him, while blessing the Lord and praying for his happiness. Meanwhile, the scattered gifts were immediately collected by others who were themselves scattering gifts of their own. Everyone participated in this ceremonial way of welcoming the Lord back home. Those who collected such scattered gifts did not do so because they lacked anything, but because they wished to keep them as a souvenir, a memento, a token by which to remember throughout their lives the happy moment of the Lord's arrival.

²When Lord returned to Ayodhya from Janakpur after his marriage, a similar sight is observed at that time too. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 348.

³Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4 where a similar metaphor is used.]

पुर सोभा संपति कल्याणा । निगम सेष सारदा बखाना ॥ ८ ॥
तेउ यह चरित देखि ठगि रहहीं । उमा तासु गुन नर किमि कहहीं ॥ ९ ॥ pura sōbhā sampati kalyānā. nigama sēṣa sārādā bakhānā. 8.

tē'u yaha carita dēkhi ṭhagi rahahīm. umā tāsu guna nara kimi kahahīm. 9.

[Lord Shiva makes the following observation about Ayodhya to goddess Uma, his divine consort, who was listening to this narration—]

‘The singular beauty and the exemplary charm of the fascinatingly wonderful city of Ayodhya, its prosperity and wealth, and its all pervading aura of auspiciousness and all-round welfare, were so remarkable and marked that they were extolled and glorified in laudatory terms by the Vedas (Nigams), Lord Sheshnath (the celestial serpent with a thousand mouths) and goddess Saraswati (the patron goddess of speech and knowledge).¹’ (8)

[Then Shiva asks her—] ‘Verily indeed, when even they (Vedas, Sheshnath and Saraswati) were so spell-bound by the grandeur and excellent qualities of Ayodhya that they stood mesmerized by it, then say Uma, how is it possible for a human being to describe it? [To wit, Ayodhya was so exceptionally charming that no one can describe how beautiful, grand and magnificent it was; how extraordinary it was at the time Lord Ram came back after 14 years of living in the forest.]²’ (9)

[Note—¹Refer: Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 195.

²Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 195; (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 344—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 345; (iii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 361.]

दो०. नारि कुमुदिनीं अवध सर रघुपति बिरह दिनेस ।
अस्त भाँ बिगसत भई निरखि राम राकेस ॥ ९ (क) ॥

होहिं सगुन सुभ बिबिधि बिधि बाजहिं गगन निसान ।
पुर नर नारि सनाथ करि भवन चले भगवान ॥ ९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

nāri kumudinīṁ avadha sara raghupati biraha dinēsa.
asta bha'eṁ bigasata bha'īm nirakhi rāma rākēsa. 9 (a).
hōhiṁ saguna subha bibidhi bidhi bājahiṁ gagana nisāna.
pura nara nāri sanātha kari bhavana calē bhagavāna. 9 (b).

The women-folk, who were like water-lilies growing in a pond symbolized by the city of Ayodhya, had been withered by the scorching sun represented by their separation from Lord Ram, bloomed once again when they saw that sun set and the full moon symbolized by the arrival of Lord Ram rise in the sky of the city. (Doha no. 9-a)

Different types of auspicious signs appeared everywhere on the ground, while various kinds of musical drums were being played in the sky (by the gods).

Spreading cheer and warmth in all the directions, and pleasing and obliging everyone, the male as well as the female citizens who had gathered to welcome him, Lord Ram (bhagavāna) moved towards his own palace in the city. (Doha no. 9-b)

चौ०. प्रभु जानी कैकई लजानी । प्रथम तासु गृह गए भवानी ॥ १ ॥
ताहि प्रबोधि बहुत सुख दीन्हा । पुनि निज भवन गवन हरि कीन्हा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu jānī kaika'ī lajānī. prathama tāsu grha ga'e bhavānī. 1.
tāhi prabōdhi bahuta sukha dīnhā. puni nija bhavana gavana hari kīnhā. 2.

[Lord Shiva continued with his narration. He told goddess Bhavani, so-called as she was the consort of Bhava, another name of Lord Shiva, as follows:-]

'Listen Bhavani (bhavānī)! Lord Ram realized (by way of a hunch) that Kaikeyi (his step-mother) was feeling very remorseful and ashamed of herself. So the Lord decided to go to her first (as soon as he entered the palace grounds)¹. (1)

Lord Ram comforted her in different ways², and made her feel happy and assuaged. After that the Lord went to his own palace³. (2)

[Note—¹The reader would recollect that it was Kaikeyi who had been the cause behind Lord Ram being sent to the forest for fourteen years. {Refer specifically to: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 29.}]

But once she realized the enormity of the mischief she had done, the eternal ignominy, disdain and universal condemnation she had wrought on her own self for no acceptable rhyme or reason, accompanied by the intensity and immensity of grief and pain and sorrows it had let loose on the entire kingdom as well as the illustrious family of king Dasrath, resulting in his sorrowful death caused by grief of separation from Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman, with a thick pall of gloom descending like a heavy cloud of doom spreading upon the entire kingdom of Ayodhya, plunging what was a prosperous and beautiful city into a place no better than a graveyard, with even her son Bharat, for whom she had plotted this evil scheme so that he could ascend the throne of Ayodhya without a challenge from Lord Ram and Laxman, scolding her viciously and vowing never to see her face for the rest of his life—Kaikeyi finally realized the horror she had created. This immense sense of shame and regret did not leave her for the rest of her life; remorse and sadness and depression stifled her forever.

But Lord Ram was extremely forgiving, kind and compassionate. Instead being annoyed or harbouring any ill-will against her, the Lord actually thanked Kaikeyi silently for being instrumental in sending him to the forest, for otherwise his divine mission of eliminating the tyranny of the cruel demons would never have been realized. Remember: Lord Ram was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, and Vishnu had promised the gods and mother earth that he would personally ensure that Ravana and his cruel demon hordes would be eliminated so that the world can live in peace. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 187.}

To wit, amongst all the characters in the story of the Ramayana, if we were to consider all the aspects from all angles and make a judicious pronouncement, then we would arrive at an unanimous conclusion that Kaikeyi had served the cause of Lord Vishnu in the best possible way. She was bold enough to take a courageous step, and had sacrificed her entire reputation and name on the altar of serving Lord Vishnu in his form as Lord Ram. She accepted all-round scorn, castigation, condemnation, ridicule, spite and ignominy just to ensure that Lord Ram's wishes could be fulfilled.

It is true that the gods too had served Lord Ram in their forms as monkeys and bears as ordered by the creator Brahma to do (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188), but none of them did anything that would make a devil out of them as was the case with Kaikeyi (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 47).

The gods gained only praises and applause for their devotion and loyalty to Lord Ram and serving him in their forms as monkeys and bears, but surely not the sort of universal condemnation, extreme disdain and utter contempt that befell Kaikeyi as her share for serving the same Lord, events that scarred her life forever.

Lord Ram realized her grief and pain, as well as a sense of remorse, regret and sorrow that was burning her inner-self; the Lord felt immense pity for her and empathized with her.

So, therefore, the Lord went to meet her first in order to sooth her, to comfort her grieving and lamenting heart, to assuage her emotions by speaking to her courteously, and to tell her that he has the same affection and respect for her now as he had for her in the beginning, and that this affection and respect is not a fraction less than what he has for the other mothers, i.e. mother Kaushalya (his own mother) and mother Sumitra (Laxman's mother).

A similar event occurred earlier in Chitrakoot too—there also Lord Ram made it a point to meet Kaikeyi and pay his respects to her to comfort her first before meeting other mothers. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 244 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.}

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 244.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 348.]

कृपासिंधु जब मंदिर गए । पुर नर नारि सुखी सब भए ॥ ३ ॥
 गुर बसिष्ट द्विज लिए बुलाई । आजु सुघरी सुदिन समुदाई ॥ ४ ॥
 सब द्विज देहु हरषि अनुसासन । रामचंद्र बैठहिं सिंघासन ॥ ५ ॥
 मुनि बसिष्ट के बचन सुहाए । सुनत सकल बिग्रह अति भाए ॥ ६ ॥ krpāsindhu jaba mandira ga'ē. pura nara nāri sukhī saba bha'ē. 3.

 gura basiṣṭa dvija li'ē bulā'ī. āju sugharī sudina samudā'ī. 4.
 saba dvija dēhu haraṣi anusāsana. rāmacandra baiṭhahim siṅghāsana. 5.
 muni basiṣṭa kē bacana suhā'ē. sunata sakala bipranha ati bhā'ē. 6.

When Lord Ram, who was like an ocean of mercy, grace, kindness and compassion (krpāsindhu), entered his palace, the men-folk as well as the women-folk of the city felt very happy and contented. (3)

Thence, guru Vasistha called all the senior Brahmins and told them: 'Today is a very auspicious day, and all good stars have arranged themselves in such a way that they are in harmony with each other. (4)

So therefore, I request all of you Brahmins to cheerfully grant your permission so that Lord Ramchandra could sit on the throne of Ayodhya (and be anointed as its King).' (5)

The pleasant words of guru Vasistha were warmly welcomed by all the Brahmins. (6)

कहहिं बचन मृदु बिप्र अनेका । जग अभिराम राम अभिषेका ॥ ७ ॥
 अब मुनिबर बिलंब नहिं कीजै । महाराज कहँ तिलक करीजै ॥ ८ ॥ kahahim bacana mr̥du bipra anēkā. jaga abhirāma rāma abhiṣekā. 7.

 aba munibara bilamba nahim kijai. mahārāja kahañ tilaka karījai. 8.

A number of Brahmins spoke simultaneously, saying cheerfully and very courteously that they were all unanimously in favour of Lord Ram ascending the throne and anointed as the King. 'Verily indeed, the news of Lord Ram's ascension to the throne and being appointed as the King is a most welcome and auspicious news; there is nothing better one could hear. (7)

Oh great sage (Vasistha). Do not delay now; anoint Lord Ram as a King forthwith.¹ (8)

[Note—¹The elders wished to waste no time in crowning Lord Ram, for they have had a bitter experience earlier when a little delay caused by making elaborate arrangements, decorating the city and planning for celebrations had thrown a spanner in the whole affair when the crooked Fate got a window of opportunity and maneuvered things maliciously in such, and so suddenly turned the tide, that Lord Ram had to go to the forest, and the day that was meant for rejoicing and festivities, when he would sit on the throne, was converted into a day of wailing and grief and lamentations. Devil is very cunning and has an evil nature inasmuch as it derives immense pleasure in spoiling things when least expected, and rejoices when others grieve.

So therefore, the Brahmins advised sage Vasistha, the royal priest, to make haste and anoint Lord Ram as a King-Emperor as quickly as possible, without wasting time on formalities.]

दो०. तब मुनि कहेउ सुमंत्र सन सुनत चलेउ हरषाइ ।
 रथ अनेक बहु बाजि गज तुरत सँवारे जाइ ॥ १० (क) ॥ जहँ तहँ धावन पठइ पुनि मंगल द्रव्य मगाइ ।
 हरष समेत बसिष्ठ पद पुनि सिरु नायउ आइ ॥ १० (ख) ॥

dōhā.

taba muni kahē'u sumantra sana sunata calē'u haraṣā'i.
 ratha anēka bahu bāji gaja turata saṁvārē jā'i. 10 (a).
 jahaṁ tahaṁ dhāvana paṭha'i puni maṅgala drabya magā'i.
 haraṣa samēta basiṣṭa pada puni siru nāya'u ā'i. 10 (b).

After receiving an unanimous permission to go ahead with Lord Ram's crowning ceremony, guru Vasistha summoned the chief minister named Sumantra, and gave him necessary instructions.

As soon as Sumantra received his orders, he cheerfully proceeded to carry out his mandate. He went and readied a number of horses and chariots¹. (Doha no. 10-a)

Meanwhile, messengers and heralds were speedily dispatched in different directions with the errand to bring water from holy places as quickly as possible².

He then came back and bowed his head before guru Vasistha to report to him that all necessary arrangements were being made, and things are speedily being put in place for the Lord's crowning ceremony. (Doha no. 10-b)

[Note—¹The horses and chariots were readied to participate in the ceremonial royal procession that would mark the crowning of Lord Ram as the King of the kingdom of Ayodhya. Since Ayodhya was a vast kingdom with extensive territory, and its domain and sovereignty extended over other smaller principalities, it was no less than an empire, and hence Lord Ram assumed the role of an Emperor too.

²On close observations we conclude that the actual anointment ceremony must have been held a day or two later, because the messengers and heralds must have taken at least a day to come back with holy waters from places far off. No matter how swiftly they went, but they could not perform a magic by going thither and coming hither before the sun set that day.

Therefore, the earliest Lord Ram could have ascended the throne was on the day that followed the day of his arrival; it could also have been two days from the day of his arrival, if not more, if we take into account the necessity of making elaborate arrangements for a royal ascension ceremony of a great kingdom.]

चौ०. अवधपुरी अति रुचिर बनाई । देवन्ह सुमन बृष्टि झरि लाई ॥ १ ॥
 राम कहा सेवकन्ह बुलाई । प्रथम सखन्ह अन्हवावहु जाई ॥ २ ॥
 सुनत बचन जहँ तहँ जन धाए । सुग्रीवादि तुरत अन्हवाए ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

avadhapurī ati rucira banāī. dēvanha sumana br̥ṣṭi jhari lāī. 1.
 rāma kahā sēvakanha bulāī. prathama sakhanha anhavāvahu jāī. 2.
 sunata bacana jhaṁ̃ tahaṁ̃ jana dhā'ē. sugrīvādi turata anhavā'ē. 3.

The capital city of the kingdom of Ayodhya, known as 'Avadh-Puri', was decked up magnificently, in all the best of finery (like a bride) so much that it inspired the gods to shower a rain of an abundance of flowers (of all hues and shapes) on it¹. (1)

Lord Ram called his attendants and instructed them: 'First of all (i.e. on priority basis) go and get all my friends (who had disembarked from the plane with the Lord) to have their baths.'² (2)

Upon receiving the Lord's instructions, the servitors immediately went here and there³ to carry out these orders. They arranged for getting Sugriv and others bathed. (3)

[Note—¹This is the third occasion when Ayodhya is decorated magnificently, in all finery, rendering an exceptional beauty to it, which so much fascinated the gods that they rained down an abundance of flowers of all colours and shapes to express their joy. The first occasion was when Lord Ram and his three brothers were born—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 194; Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede Doha no. 195.

The second occasion is when Lord Ram and his brothers returned to Ayodhya with their brides after their marriage ceremony in Janakpur—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 344—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 345; Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 347.

²Now, these 'friends' from Lanka were Lord Ram's guests of honour. The Lord was extending his warmest hospitality to them, and therefore he first ensured that they were properly lodged and all necessary arrangements were made for them; none of them should ever feel neglected even in the slightest.

³The friends of Lord Ram, Vibhishan, Sugriv, Angad, Jamvant, Nala, Neela, Hanuman etc. (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 8) were so excited and fascinated by the charming city of Ayodhya, and were so overwhelmed by the warmth with which they were received by its citizens, that they had gone here and there to have a view of the fine city, and even visited homes of the citizens who enthusiastically invited them to come in and have some refreshments.

Nay, the citizens not only opened their homes for these special guests but even vied with each other to have one of them visit their homes, as it would bring them honour and give them a lot of pleasure to serve them. Those of the guests who preferred to go around the city for sight-seeing were accompanied by enthusiastic crowds of people, young and old, who gladly showed them around, pointing out to them the landmarks of this famous city and cheerfully acting as expert guides to lead the honourable guests across the streets and squares.

Here and there and everywhere, crowds of joyous citizens thronged them; some trying to shake hands with them or simply to touch them, some trying to hug them, some wishing to talk with them, some asking their names, some offering flowers and fruits and sweet drinks, some cajoling them to step inside their homes and have a little chat, rest and a bite of refreshment, and so on and so forth the infectious warmth of welcome spread, so much so that the guests were virtually swept off their feet and borne aloft in the tidal wave of warmth and affection that swamped them.

So by the time Lord Ram's attendants went out to carry out their orders, they couldn't find these guests at the place the plane had landed, because in the meantime all of them had already spread across the large city—some visiting homes, and others roaming around for sight-seeing, surrounded by a huge jubilant crowd wherever they went.

To wit, these messengers had a tough time to first locate them, and then to push back the zealous citizens so that the guests could be brought to their respective lodging places and advised to take a bath as requested by the Lord.]

पुनि करुनानिधि भरतु हँकारे । निज कर राम जटा निरुआरे ॥ ४ ॥

अन्हवाए प्रभु तीनिउ भाई । भगत बछल कृपाल रघुराई ॥ ५ ॥

भरत भाग्य प्रभु कोमलताई । सेष कोटि सत सकहिं न गाई ॥ ६ ॥

puni karunānidhi bharatu haṁkāre. nija kara rāma jaṭā niru'ārē. 4.
anhavā'ē prabhu tīni'u bhā'ī. bhagata bachala kṛpāla raghurā'ī. 5.
bharata bhāgya prabhu kōmalatā'ī. sēṣa kōṭi sata sakahim na gā'ī. 6.

Then Lord Ram, who was like an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness (karunānidhi) called in Bharat, and with his own hands the Lord disentangled (or unwound; un-girdled; unlocked) his matted lock of hairs¹. (4)

Thence, Lord Ram, the Lord who is extremely gracious and merciful towards his devotees (bhagata bachala) and is the illustrious Lord in the race of King Raghu (raghurā'ī), advised all his three brothers (Laxman, Bharat and Shatrughan) to have their baths. (5)

Verily indeed, even countless Seshnaths (who have thousands of mouths with which they could speak simultaneously) would not be competent enough to praise the good fortunes and glory of Bharat (bharata bhāgya)², and the immensity of Lord Ram's tenderness of heart and softness of feelings (prabhu kōmalatā'ī) in a sufficient way. (6)

[Note—¹After his return from Chitrakoot, Bharat had lived like a hermit on the outskirts of Ayodhya. He had attired himself as a recluse, and this included keeping his lock of hairs matted as a crown on his head* in the same fashion as he had seen

Lord Ram wearing it when the two brothers met in Chitrakoot. {*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 324.}

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 205—where Bharat is praised by the deity of Triveni, the holy pilgrim site of the confluence of three holy rivers; (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 210—where sage Bharadwaj praises Bharat; (iii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 259—where Lord Ram himself praises Bharat; and (iv) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 326—where the citizens of Ayodhya praise Bharat.]

पुनि निज जटा राम बिबराए । गुर अनुसासन मागि नहाए ॥ ७ ॥
करि मज्जन प्रभु भूषन साजे । अंग अनंग देखि सत लाजे ॥ ८ ॥

puni nija jaṭā rāma bibarā'ē. gura anusāsana māgi nahā'ē. 7.
kari majjana prabhu bhūṣana sājē. aṅga anaṅga dēkhi sata lājē. 8.

After that (i.e. after unlocking the hairs of Bharat and getting all the brothers bathed) Lord Ram un-girdled or unlocked his own lock of matted hairs. Then, having obtained permission of his guru (sage Vasistha), the Lord took a bath (and washed his unlocked hairs). (7)

After taking a bath, the Lord attired himself in royal robes and ornaments. The Lord's form looked so exceptionally beauteous and bewitchingly charming that it shamed countless Kamdeos (the patron god of beauty and charm)¹. (8)

[Note—¹Kamdeo is said to have the most charming body amongst the pantheon of gods. This verse simply means that Lord Ram looked so magnificently handsome and charming in his clothes and ornaments that all the pride that Kamdeo might have had regarding his attractive form was crushed, putting him to shame for all his boast and pretensions.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 327; (ii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 220; (iii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 243. All these verses express identical views.]

दो०. सासुन्ह सादर जानकिहि मज्जन तुरत कराइ । दिव्य बसन बर भूषन अँग अँग सजे बनाइ ॥ ११ (क) ॥
राम बाम दिसि सोभति रमा रूप गुन खानि ।
देखि मातु सब हरषीं जन्म सुफल निज जानि ॥ ११ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

sāsunha sādara jānakihi majjana turata karā'i.
dibya basana bara bhūṣana aṅga aṅga sajē banā'i. 11 (a).
rāma bāma disi sōbhati ramā rūpa guna khāni.
dēkhi mātu saba haraṣīṁ janma suphala nija jāni. 11 (b).

Inside the palace, the mothers-in-law first got Janki (Sita) bathed, and then adorned her with beautiful clothes and magnificent ornaments that covered her entire body. (Doha no. 11-a)

Janki, who was an embodiment of beauty and virtues, and a personified form of Rama (goddess Laxmi, the divine consort of Lord Vishnu), looked glorious as she stood to the left of Lord Ram¹.

When the mothers beheld this charming sight, they felt exhilarated, and considered their life fully rewarded². (Doha no. 11-b)

[Note—¹According to established Hindu tradition, a married woman always stands or sits on the left of her husband.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 109.

The heavenly beauty and charm of Sita was legendary. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 323.

Similarly, the sight of Lord Ram and Sita was exceptionally bewitching—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 265; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 325.

²At the time of Lord Ram's marriage with Sita, king Dasrath, the father of the Lord, too had the same feeling. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 325.]

सुनु खगेस तेहि अवसर ब्रह्मा सिव मुनि बृन्द । चढ़ि बिमान आए सब सुर देखन सुखकंद ॥ ११ (ग) ॥

sunu khagēsa tēhi avasara brahmā siva muni bṛnda.
caḍhi bimāna ā'ē saba sura dēkhana sukhakanda. 11 (c).

[The saintly crow named Kaagbhusund, one of the primary narrators of this divine Story, told his listener Garud, the heavenly Bird who is also a mount of Lord Vishnu, as follows:-]

‘Listen oh king of birds (khagēsa)! At that time, Brahma the creator, Shiva the concluder, all the great sages and seers, as well as the gods who arrived in their planes—all of them assembled there to have a heavenly view of Lord Ram, who is indeed an embodiment of bliss and happiness¹. (Doha no. 11-c)

[Note—¹The Gods, Brahma, Shiva and the sages—all came to witness Lord Ram's coronation ceremony and bless him. Earlier too, on every happy occasion they had assembled to see the Lord and bless him—whether it was the occasion of the Lord's birth*, his marriage# or his victory in the war of Lanka$.

*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 196.

#Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 262; Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 323; Doha no. 324; Doha no. 353 etc.

$Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 103; Doha no. 109.]

चौ०. प्रभु बिलोकि मुनि मन अनुरागा । तुरत दिव्य सिंघासन मागा ॥ १ ॥
 रबि सम तेज सो बरनि न जाई । बैठे राम द्विजन्ह सिरु नाई ॥ २ ॥ जनकसुता समेत रघुराई । पेखि प्रहरषे मुनि समुदाई ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

prabhu bilōki muni mana anurāgā. turata dibya siṅghāsana māgā. 1.
 rabi sama tēja sō barani na jāī. baiṭhē rāma dvijanha siru nāī. 2.
 janakasutā samēta raghurāī. pēkhi praharaṣē muni samudāī. 3.

Seeing Lord Ram, the sage's (i.e. Vasistha's) heart brimmed over with affection for him. The exhilarated sage immediately asked for a heavenly throne (which was provided to him instantly). (1)

This magnificent throne was as splendid and radiant as the sun, and it defied all descriptions¹. Lord Ram bowed his head reverentially before the assembled Brahmins and sat down on it. (2)

Observing this beautiful sight of Lord Ram sitting on the throne (of the great kingdom of Ayodhya), with the daughter of Janak (i.e. Sita) by his side, the exalted assembly of illustrious sages and learned elders felt extremely exhilarated. (3)

[Note—¹The throne was made of pure gold, and it was studded with priceless gems that glittered. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 11.]

बेद मंत्र तब द्विजन्ह उचारे । नभ सुर मुनि जय जयति पुकारे ॥ ४ ॥ प्रथम तिलक बसिष्ट मुनि कीन्हा । पुनि सब बिप्रन्ह आयसु दीन्हा ॥ ५ ॥ bēda mantra taba dvijanha ucārē. nabha sura muni jaya jayati pukārē. 4.

 prathama tilaka basiṣṭa muni kīnhā. puni saba bipranha āyasu dīnhā. 5.

Then the Brahmins recited the sacred Mantras from the Vedas (scriptures), while the gods in the sky (heavens) and the sages (on the ground) raised their hands to applaud and bless the Lord, cheering in unison: 'Glory to the Lord; Hail the Lord and Victory be to him'. (4)

As the rituals for the anointment of Lord Ram as the King-Emperor began, it was sage Vasistha who formally started the process by making a 'Tilak Mark' on the Lord's forehead first¹, which was followed by a loud chorus of blessings from all the assembled Brahmins (and elders). (5)

[Note—¹The 'Tilak' is a sacred mark made on the forehead of a newly appointed King as a token of his formal appointment on the throne of the kingdom, and the acceptance of his sovereignty by the subjects of that kingdom during the coronation ceremony.

This ‘Tilak Mark’ is made by using a paste of auspicious ingredients, and the ritual is accompanied by chanting of Veda Mantras and blessings from all the assembled elders of the kingdom.

Sage Vasistha was the chief priest of the kingdom of Ayodhya, and so he would obviously be the one to carry out this ritual.]

सुत बिलोकि हरषीं महतारी । बार बार आरती उत्तारी ॥ ६ ॥

बिप्रन्ह दान बिबिधि बिधि दीन्हे । जाचक सकल अजाचक कीन्हे ॥ ७ ॥

सिंघासन पर त्रिभुअन साईं । देखि सुरन्ह दुंदुभीं बजाई ॥ ८ ॥ suta bilōki haraṣīm mahatārī. bāra bāra āratī utārī. 6.

bipranha dāna bibidhi bidhi dīnhē. jācaka sakala ajācaka kīnhē. 7.

siṅghāsana para tribhu'ana sālīm. dēkhi suranha dundubhīm bajāīm. 8.

Beholding their son (Lord Ram sitting on the throne of Ayodhya), all the mothers (Kaushalya, Sumitra and Kaikeyi) were thrilled and exhilarated¹. They repeatedly performed his ‘Arti’² (i.e. they waved a plate decorated with lighted earthen lamps before him as a token of blessing, for inviting good omen, and deflecting or warding off evil spirits that may perchance think of casting an inauspicious eye on the Lord). (6)

On this auspicious occasion, different types of charities were made and alms given to Brahmins and alms-seekers so liberally that those who received these largesse themselves gave them away to others³. (7)

The Lord of the three worlds (i.e. the heaven, the earth and the nether world; the entire creation; “tribhu'ana sālīm”) was sitting on the Throne⁴. Seeing this most wonderful sight, the gods became ecstatic and played their musical drums and trumpets in the sky. (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 11-b.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 7. Here we read that the plate used to wave auspicious lighted earthen lamps before Lord Ram by the mothers was made of gold. The occasion was the Lord’s arrival in Ayodhya after fourteen years in the forest.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 7. After performing the Lord’s Arti to welcome him back home, liberal charities were distributed by the delighted mothers.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 194. The occasion here was the celebration marking the birth of Lord Ram and his three brothers in the household of the King of Ayodhya, king Dasrath. We observe here too that the receivers of various gifts gave them to others in their turn, for it was an occasion of celebration, and the gifts were meant to mark it. Whoever accepted such gifts kept some of the items with them as a memento for future generations, but they cheerfully gave the rest to others who could not make it to the palace to receive gifts themselves due to the huge crowd that had assembled and packed the palace courtyard chock-a-block. Such citizens were obliged by others who were lucky to go inside and receive the gifts, and the latter willingly shared the gifts with their fellow citizens.

Remember: Ayodhya was a wealthy and prosperous kingdom, and no one had dearth or shortage of anything that he or she would run away with free gifts and hoard them inside their homes.

⁴Till now, Lord Ram was not officially appointed as a 'King'. Now that happy occasion had arrived. The symbolism is obvious: A King is the protector, a well-wisher, a provider of all needs, and like a father to his subjects.

So therefore, when the gods saw that Lord Ram was sitting on the Throne after being appointed a King, they were extremely delighted as now they themselves, as well as the world they are obliged to take care of, could look forward to the Lord's protection; now they had a formal King, their well-wisher and care-taker. The other reason for their joy was that Lord Ram was not an ordinary king of a worldly kingdom, but he was the Supreme Lord of the whole world. Besides this, Lord Ram was exceptionally merciful, compassionate, gracious, kind, forgiving, judicious, benevolent, munificent, courteous and noble in heart.

With such a King at the helm of affairs, what more would the subjects want? Hence, it was indeed a matter for rejoicing and an occasion for celebrations for one and all—which the gods marked by playing their musical instruments.]

छं०. नभ दुंदुभीं बाजहिं बिपुल गंधर्व किंनर गावहीं । १ ।
नाचहिं अपछरा बृंद परमानंद सुर मुनि पावहीं ॥ २ ॥
भरतादि अनुज बिभीषणांगद हनुमदादि समेत ते । ३ ।
गहें छत्र चामर व्यजन धनु असि चर्म सक्ति बिराजते ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

nabha dundubhīm bājahim bipula gandharba kinnara gāvahīm. 1.
nācahīm apacharā br̥nda paramānanda sura muni pāvahīm. 2.
bharatādi anuja bibhīṣanāṅgada hanumadādi samēta tē. 3.
gahēm chatra cāmara byajana dhanu asi carma sakti birājatē. 4.

A large number of kettle-drums sounded in the sky (as the gods beat them enthusiastically), while Gandharvas and Kinnars¹ sang merrily to the tune of this music. (Chanda line no. 1)

Meanwhile, a large crowd of Apsaras (female dancers of heaven) formed groups and danced in merry abundance to accompany the singing by their male counterparts.

To wit, the whole atmosphere was one of blissfulness, of excess of joy and happiness; so all the gods and the sages thoroughly enjoyed it and felt ecstatic. (Chanda line no. 2)

Lord Ram's younger brothers such as Bharat etc. (i.e. Laxman and Shatrughan too), and the Lord's friends such as Vibhishan, Angad, Hanuman etc. (i.e. Sugriv too), stood around the Lord on the dais, holding ceremonial umbrella, whisk, fan, bow, sword, shield, and lancet etc. in their hands². (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹The Ghandharvas and Kinnars are demi-gods; they are the musicians, dancers and singers of heaven.

²The three brothers and the close friends of Lord Ram stood around the throne on the dais, each holding some kind of a ceremonial paraphernalia in his hand, as a sign that that they were very close to the Lord and his close confidantes. When a formal ceremony, such as coronation of a king or the swearing-in of a head of government takes place, only a limited number of selected persons are allowed to go on the dais. These persons are persons of honour, close relatives or special guests of the newly anointed king or the newly appointed head of the government. To stand on the dais on such special occasions is a matter of great privilege and prestige.]

श्री सहित दिनकर बंस भूषन काम बहु छबि सोहई । ५ ।

नव अंबुधर बर गात अंबर पीत सुर मन मोहई ॥ ६ ॥

मुकुटांगदादि बिचित्र भूषन अंग अंगन्हि प्रति सजे । ७ ।

अंभोज नयन बिसाल उर भुज धन्य नर निरखंति जे ॥ ८ ॥

śrī sahita dinakara bansa bhūṣana kāma bahu chabi sōha'ī. 5.
nava ambudhara bara gāta ambara pīta sura mana mōha'ī. 6.
mukutāṅgadādi bicitra bhūṣana aṅga aṅganhi prati sajē. 7.
ambhōja nayana bisāla ura bhuja dhan'ya nara nirakhanti jē. 8.

Lord Ram, who was like a jewel of the Solar race (dinakara bansa bhūṣana), along with Sita, who was a personified form of goddess Laxmi and represented everything that is auspicious and has the quality of richness in it (śrī)—looked so exquisite, majestic and adorable as if he was a personified form of countless Kamdeos (the patron god of beauty and charm). (Chanda line no. 5)

The yellow coloured 'Pitambar' (a length of silk cloth that is wrapped around the body; the garment worn by Lord Vishnu) that was wrapped around the body of Lord Ram, which was dark-complexioned like a newly formed rain-bearing bank of dark clouds (seen during the rainy season), looked so magnificent that it mightily enthralled the gods, and charmed their minds and hearts exceedingly. (Chanda line no. 6)

A crown with a tiara or a diadem, armlets, and other magnificent ornaments adorned every part of the Lord's form. (Chanda line no. 7)

Lord Ram had eyes as large and beautiful as lotus flowers; he had a broad chest and long muscular arms.

Most lucky and privileged were those who had an auspicious view of this divine sight of the Lord's heavenly form. (Chanda line no. 8)

दो०. वह सोभा समाज सुख कहत न बनइ खगेस ।
 बरनहिं सारद सेष श्रुति सो रस जान महेस ॥ १२ (क) ॥
 भिन्न भिन्न अस्तुति करि गए सुर निज निज धाम ।
 बंदी बेष बेद तब आए जहँ श्रीराम ॥ १२ (ज) ॥
 प्रभु सर्बग्य कीन्ह अति आदर कृपानिधान ।
 लखेउ न काहूँ मरम कछु लगे करन गुन गान ॥ १२ (ग) ॥

dōhā.

vaha sōbhā samāja sukha kahata na bana'i khagēsa.
 baranahim sārada sēṣa śruti sō rasa jāna mahēsa. 12 (a).
 bhinna bhinna astuti kari ga'e sura nija nija dhāma.
 bandī bēṣa bēda taba ā'e jahañ śrīrāma. 12 (b).
 prabhu sarbagya kīnha ati ādara kṛpānidhāna.
 lakhē'u na kāhūñ marama kachu lagē karana gāna. 12 (c).

[The saintly crow Kaagbhusund told Garud, his listener—]

‘Oh the king of birds (khagēsa)! The magnificence, the charm, the euphoria and the joy that prevailed and permeated everywhere at that time, was so stupendous and overriding that it defies all description.

Goddess Saraswati, Lord Sheshnath and the Vedas have made attempts to narrate and give a description of those eclectic moments as best as they could, but failed to do so as they could not completely comprehend the depth of its spiritual significance, for the spiritual bliss and ecstasy that it provided is known only to Lord Shiva¹. (Doha no. 12-a)

All the gods offered their prayers to Lord Ram, individually as well as in unison, and then went to their respective abodes in the heaven.

Then came the Vedas disguised as Bards or Minstrels at the place where Lord Ram was (i.e. at the venue of the coronation ceremony). (Doha no. 12-b)

Lord Ram, who is all-knowing and omniscient, immediately recognized them (that they were a personified form of the Vedas)²; so therefore the Lord welcomed them with great respect.

Everyone present there saw them (the Bards; the Minstrels), but none could recognize who they actually were (i.e. no one could understand that they were Vedas).

Meanwhile, these Bards or Minstrels sang the majestic glories of the Lord in laudatory terms. (Doha no. 12-c)

[Note—¹To wit, goddess Saraswati and Lord Sheshnath could only describe the physical beauty and grandeur of the occasion of Lord Ram's coronation, but the real spiritual bliss and ecstasy that it provided could be realized and known only by Lord Shiva.

⁵An important question can be asked here. How many Bards or Minstrels had come to honour Lord Ram with their prayers? The answer is simple: they were five of them. Why? Because the Vedas are five in number as follows: Rig Veda, Shukla Yajur Veda, Krishna Yajur Veda, Sam Veda and Atharva Veda.]

(vi) Sub-section 21.1.6: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 15—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 20:

After the Lord's coronation festivities were over, his honoured guests from Kishkindha and Lanka, i.e. the chiefs of the monkey and bear race as well as Vibhishan and his companions, who had come to Ayodhya on the Pushpak plane, were given a warm send-off by Lord Ram, and they returned to their homes full of praises for the Lord, with happy memories of their companionship with Lord Ram forever enshrined in their hearts.

चौ०. सुनु खगपति यह कथा पावनी । त्रिबिध ताप भव भय दावनी ॥ १ ॥
महाराज कर सुभ अभिषेका । सुनत लहहिं नर बिरति बिबेका ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

sunu khagapati yaha kathā pāvanī. tribidha tāpa bhava bhaya dāvanī. 1.
mahārāja kara subha abhiṣēkā. sunata lahaḥim nara birati bibēkā. 2.

[Continuing with the narration, the saintly crow Kaagbhusund told his listener Garud, the king of birds, as follows—]

‘Listen oh king of birds (sunu khagapati)¹. This Story (of Lord Ram) is very purifying, holy and auspicious (kathā pāvanī). It has the potential to eliminate all the torments associated with this mundane gross world as well as the three great fears associated with it (tribidha tāpa bhava bhaya dāvanī)². (1)

When a person listens to the episode that describes the coronation of Lord Ram, he or she is freed from all such fears and apprehensions³. Such persons get true wisdom and develop renunciation⁴. (2)

[Note—¹The reader must have noticed by now that there are two primary narrators and two primary listeners of this glorious Story. One such narrator and listener is Lord Shiva and his consort Parvati, who is also known by the name of Uma; and the other narrator and listener is the saintly crow Kaagbhusund and Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu.

Presently, it is the latter two who are being cited in this verse. The episode that describes the conversation betwixt Kaagbhusund and Garud, wherein the Story of the Ramayana was narrated, is to be found in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 63—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 68.

²The three great fears associated with this mundane world of transmigration, fears that cause misery to all living beings, are the following: Adhibhautik = fears and problems related to the physical world and its creatures; Adhidaivik = fears and problems created by adverse gods and malignant stars; and Adhyamik = fears related to one's spiritual well-being.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 32.

³When the king of a kingdom is benevolent, kind and merciful, if he is concerned about the welfare of his subjects and ensures that no one in his realm suffers unnecessarily, when the king is known for his gracious and compassionate nature, it is sure then that the people within his domain live a happy and contented life.

This analogy is used here to mean that when the devotee sees Lord Ram as his Lord and Protector, there would be nothing from which he or she would be worried in this world. Lord Ram's coronation as the Sovereign implies that the devotee has a friend in power and authority; a friend who would go out of his way and employ his abilities and resources to ensure that all his other friends are happy and contented, that no one troubles them. So this means that the people of the world can live happily when they put themselves in the safe custody of Lord Ram.

Remember: We are not talking about some great worldly prince or king of any worldly kingdom, but of the Supreme Lord of the world, of the Lord God. Hence, if one relies on the Lord Ram with the firm conviction and faith that he is none but the Supreme Being himself, the Lord God himself, then say what fear can he or she ever have?

⁴With the firm faith that Lord Ram is ready to take care of all the needs in one's life, both worldly as well as spiritual, what is the necessity and the purpose served by hankering after worldly acquisitions or trying to appease gods and stars? With this realization comes renunciation, and this is true spiritual wisdom.]

जे सकाम नर सुनहिं जे गावहिं । सुख संपति नाना बिधि पावहिं ॥ ३ ॥
सुर दुर्लभ सुख करि जग माहीं । अंतकाल रघुपति पुर जाहीं ॥ ४ ॥ jē sakāma nara sunahim jē gāvahim. sukha sampati nānā bidhi pāvahim. 3.

sura durlabha sukha kari jaga māhīm. antakāla raghupati pura jāhīm. 4.

Those who hear and sing or recite this divine Story with some desire in mind, they are blessed with all sorts and different types of happiness and prosperity. [To wit, all their worldly desires are taken care of.] (3)

While alive they live a life of heavenly comfort and happiness that is envy of the gods. And when they die, they attain deliverance and their soul attains the heavenly abode of Lord Raghupati himself. [To wit, upon death, such persons go to heaven.] (4)

[Note—These two lines elaborate on what has been said previously. By relying upon Lord Ram, one is able to live happily in this world, and upon death one goes to heaven. To wit, all worldly as well as spiritual well-being and welfare are taken care of simultaneously.]

सुनहिं बिमुक्त बिरत अरु बिषई । लहहिं भगति गति संपति नई ॥ ५ ॥
 खगपति राम कथा मैं बरनी । स्वमति बिलास त्रास दुख हरनी ॥ ६ ॥
 बिरति बिबेक भगति दूढ़ करनी । मोह नदी कहँ सुंदर तरनी ॥ ७ ॥ sunahim bimukta birata aru biṣa'ī. lahahim bhagati gati sampati na'ī. 5.

 khagapati rāma kathā main baranī. svamati bilāsa trāsa dukha haranī. 6.
 birati bibēka bhagati dūṛha karanī. mōha nadī kahaṁ sundara taranī. 7.

Hearing of this glorious Story grants desired fruits to the listener depending on his attitude, aptitude, subtle inclinations, and mental bearing.

Verily, if this divine Story is heard by those who free from all worldly attachments as well as by those who practice renunciation and dispassion, they are blessed with the fruit of Bhakti (i.e. devotion for Lord God) and Gati (i.e. they find salvation; their souls find deliverance and emancipation).

On the other hand, if it is heard by those who are enamoured by the world and its material things, then they too find their wishes fulfilled by getting newer successes and gains in this material world. (5)

Oh king of birds (khagapati)! I have narrated the divine and glorious Story of Ram (rāma kathā) in accordance with my understanding and knowledge¹. It not only gives immense comfort but also eliminates all torments and tribulations associated with life in this mortal and gross world. (6)

This blessed Story reinforces the virtues of renunciation, detachment and dispassion that a person has in his heart; it further fortifies wisdom and judicious thinking; and it firms up the virtues of devotion and submission to the Lord God that is already present in the heart of a devotee. Forsooth, these grand qualities are made more robust and abiding if a person hears this Story attentively, and with immense faith (as to its mystical powers to grant spiritual rewards as well as fulfillment of wishes).

Verily indeed and without gainsay, this Story of Lord Ram is like a wonderful boat (sundara taranī) that can help a person to easily cross the river of Maya (i.e. the river symbolized by delusions and all its associated problems) without any hassles. (7)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 64—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 68.]

नित नव मंगल कौसलपुरी । हरषित रहहिं लोग सब कुरी ॥ ८ ॥
 नित नइ प्रीति राम पद पंकज । सब कें जिन्हहि नमत सिव मुनि अज ॥ ९ ॥ मंगन बहु प्रकार पहिराए । द्विजन्ह दान नाना बिधि पाए ॥ १० ॥ nita nava maṅgala kausalapurī. haraṣita rahahim lōga saba kurī. 8.

nita na'i prīti rāma pada paṅkaja. saba kēm jinhahi namata siva muni aja. 9.
maṅgana bahu prakāra pahirā'ē. dvijanha dāna nānā bidhi pā'ē. 10.

Meanwhile, there were daily festivities and many kinds of celebrations in Ayodhya (to mark the coronation of Lord Ram, as well as to mark his return from the forest and the success in the epic War of Lanka).

Everyone in the realm, of all castes and denominations, was very happy and exhilarated. (8)

Everyone had great affection and reverence for the lotus-like feet of Lord Ram; everyone adored and paid obeisance to the holy feet of the Lord before which even Lord Shiva, the great sages, as well as the creator Brahma bow their heads. (9)

Alms seekers received liberal gifts of different kinds; Brahmins too received grants and largesse of various sorts. (10)

दो०. ब्रह्मानंद मगन कपि सब कें प्रभु पद प्रीति । जात न जाने दिवस तिन्ह गए मास षट बीति ॥ १५ ॥

dōhā.

brahmānanda magana kapi saba kēm prabhu pada prīti.
jāta na jānē divasa tinha ga'ē māsa ṣaṭa bīti. 15.

All the Kapis (i.e. the monkeys as well as the bears who had come with Lord Ram aboard the plane from the battle-field of Lanka, as his guests and friends) were so much charmed, so enthralled and so captivated by the mass celebrations and extended festivities that marked Lord Ram's return to Ayodhya and his coronation that they virtually lost track of time and forgot who they were—so much so that almost six months passed without them knowing how long it was¹. (Doha no. 15)

[Note—¹It ought to be noted here that when Lord Ram and his brothers were born, a similar thing had happened at that time too—one month passed in festivities and celebrations without anyone realizing how long it had been. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 195 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it, and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.]

चौ०. बिसरे गृह सपनेहुँ सुधि नाहीं । जिमि परद्रोह संत मन माहीं ॥ १ ॥
तब रघुपति सब सखा बोलाए । आइ सबन्हि सादर सिरु नाए ॥ २ ॥
परम प्रीति समीप बैठारे । भगत सुखद मृदु बचन उचारे ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

bisarē gr̥ha sapanēhuṁ sudhi nāhīm. jimi paradrōha santa mana māhīm. 1.
taba raghupati saba sakhā bōlā'ē. ā'i sabanhi sādara siru nā'ē. 2.

parama prīti samīpa baiṭhārē. bhagata sukhada mṛdu bacana ucārē. 3.

All of them (i.e. the ‘Kapis’) forgot everything about their own homes so much so that they didn’t even dream of either their own families back home or about returning back—in the same way as saints do not harbour in their hearts and minds any kind of ill-will or animosity towards their adversaries, nor do they remember any harm or offence anyone has done to them. (1)

By-and-by, one day Lord Ram called all his friends for a meeting. All came and bowed their heads reverentially before the Lord. (2)

He made them sit down close to him most affectionately.

Once they were all seated around him, the Lord spoke very polite words that would be pleasant for his devotees to hear¹. (3)

[Note—¹The Kapis were so loyal and faithful to Lord Ram that besides being the Lord’s close friends and companions they were also his ‘devotees’. That is why it is said here that the Lord spoke so sweetly that his friends and devotees, i.e. the Kapis, felt very happy.]

तुम्ह अति कीन्हि मोरि सेवकाई । मुख पर केहि बिधि करौं बड़ाई ॥ ४ ॥ ताते मोहि तुम्ह अति प्रिय लागे । मम हित लागि भवन सुख त्यागे ॥ ५ ॥ tumha ati kīnhi mōri sēvakā’i. mukha para kēhi bidhi karaum barā’i. 4.

tātē mōhi tumha ati priya lāgē. mama hita lāgi bhavana sukha tyāgē. 5.

You have done great service to me for which I am so highly obliged to you that I can’t find words to express my gratitude in sufficient manner, nor do I know how to praise you all for the services you have rendered me. (4)

I have developed so much affection and a close bond of kinship with you because you have sacrificed your home and hearth, as well as your personal comfort and safety, for my sake¹. [To wit, this voluntary sacrifice of yours that you have done for my sake has endeared you to me for all times to come.] (5)

[Note—¹Here Lord Ram gives immense thanks to the Kapis and gratefully acknowledges their help in the search for Sita and then the war of Lanka. In the course of these developments it goes without saying that the monkeys and bears suffered themselves a lot; so the Lord now expresses his gratitude to them—telling them that these developments have had a positive effect inasmuch as that now he has an abiding friendship with them and has developed affection for them, which he shall cherish in his heart for eternity.]

अनुज राज संपति बैदेही । देह गेह परिवार सनेही ॥ ६ ॥
सब मम प्रिय नहिं तुम्हहि समाना । मृषा न कहउँ मोर यह बाना ॥ ७ ॥
सब कें प्रिय सेवक यह नीती । मोरें अधिक दास पर प्रीती ॥ ८ ॥ anuja rāja sampati baidēhī. dēha gēha parivāra sanēhī. 6.

 saba mama priya nahim tumhahi samānā. mṛṣā na kaha'um̐ mōra yaha bānā.
 7.
 saba kēm priya sēvaka yaha nītī. mōrēm adhika dāsa para prītī. 8.

[Elaborating further and highlighting how much he cherishes their friendship and acquaintance in his heart, Lord Ram stresses—]

My brothers, my kingdom, my wealth, and my wife Sita (Vaidehi), nay, even my own body, my home, my whole family, my kith and kin – (6)

-- Verily I love them all, but truly not more than you! I don't speak a lie, and this is my affirmation¹. (7)

It is an established principle that a faithful, loyal and diligent servant (who would do everything within his might to serve his lord, and that too selflessly) is always loved by his master; but I go a step further in upholding this maxim—because I am all the more inclined to have greater affection for all those who serve me and follow me; I love them and am favourably inclined to them (and go out of my way to take care of them) far more than what I am expected to do². (8)

[Note—¹It is not that Lord Ram did not love all those he has mentioned here; the only point he wished to stress is that he loves his friends from Kishkindha much more than he loves anyone else. The reason is simple and obvious—during the testing times of his life when he was facing the wrath of a malicious Fate, when he was forlorn, almost lost and desperate, when it was a swing between life and death, when everything seemed to be lost for him after his wife Sita was stolen by the ferocious demon king Ravana, defeating whom was well nigh impossible, then at that time it were the Kapis of Kishkindha who had come to his aid, and no one else. How can he forget it?

²Lord Ram says: “Though it is normal that a master would naturally have special affection for a servant who serves him faithfully and diligently, but in my case this affection is exceptional; it is steady, abiding, and of the highest degree. The ordinary master may get angry at his favourite servant in a situation where the servant might fail to serve him on any occasion for any reason whatsoever, but I never ever get angry at my devotees, no matter what happens or what the provocation is.”

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 183; (ii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 260; and (b) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 1 (where Bharat endorses this view).]

दो०. अब गृह जाहु सखा सब भजेहु मोहि दृढ़ नेम । सदा सर्वगत सर्वहित जानि करेहु अति प्रेम ॥ १६ ॥
 dōhā.

aba gr̥ha jāhu sakhā saba bhajēhu mōhi dr̥ṣha nēma.
sadā sarbagata sarbahita jāni karēhu ati prēma. 16.

Now my dear friend, go home. Remember me; have an abiding affection and devotion for me by remembering that I am always present everywhere (to help you), that I am always ready to look after the welfare of all, and that I always think good of others.' (Doha no. 16)

चौ०. सुनि प्रभु बचन मगन सब भए । को हम कहाँ बिसरि तन गए ॥ १ ॥
एकटक रहे जोरि कर आगे । सकहिं न कछु कहि अति अनुरागे ॥ २ ॥
परम प्रेम तिन्ह कर प्रभु देखा । कहा बिबिधि बिधि ग्यान बिसेषा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

sunī prabhu bacana magana saba bha'e. kō hama kahāñ bisari tana ga'e. 1.
ēkaṭaka rahē jōri kara āgē. sakahiñ na kachu kahi ati anurāgē. 2.
parama prēma tinha kara prabhu dēkhā. kahā bibidhi bidhi gyāna bisēṣā. 3.

Hearing the words of Lord Ram, all the Kapis were overwhelmed; they became so overcome with emotions that for sometime they lost awareness of themselves and their surroundings—of who they were, where they were, from whence they had come and whither they are expected to go. (1)

They stood stunned and dumbfounded with their joined palms before the Lord, looking at him transfixed. They were so overcome with emotions of affection and love for the Lord that they were rendered speechless¹. (2)

When the Lord observed the intensity of their love and affection (as well as devotion) for him, he assuaged their feelings and comforted them in various ways by enlightening them about the realities of this world and practical aspects of life². (3)

[Note—¹Love is such an intense emotional feeling that when someone you love dearly asks you to go away, then for sometime you would not know what to say and how to respond. The time of separation had come, and it was un-nerving for Lord Ram's dear friends. They had wished to live with him more; they did not want to go back. The Lord had shown them so much favour and attention and affection that they would rather prefer to spend the rest of their lives in Ayodhya, serving him, than going back home. They wished to settle down in Ayodhya and make it their new home.

So, when Lord Ram asked them to go back to their respective homes in Kishkindha, it came as a shock to them all.

²Lord Ram acknowledged their devotion and love for him. Then he explained to them many practical things of life, such as the necessity of attending to their obligations and responsibilities that they had towards their own families and people back home. The Lord enlightened them about what true relationship and true love are, that physical distance matters not if one has true love for anyone in his heart, that the strength of relationship is proved when two loving people live apart from one another rather than together, because distance helps to test this strength, to test whether the bond is fragile or strong.

The Lord also explained to them that it is a maxim that when two persons live close to each other, no matter how dear and fond they are of each other, but a day comes when some sort of friction or misunderstanding between the two is sure to raise its ugly head, souring their otherwise sweet relationship. This mishap is taken care of by living apart.

There were many other such small and big issues of life that the Lord explained to them in an effort to comfort them and persuade them to return home.]

प्रभु सन्मुख कछु कहन न पारहिं । पुनि पुनि चरन सरोज निहारहिं ॥ ४ ॥ तब प्रभु भूषन बसन मगाए । नाना रंग अनूप सुहाए ॥ ५ ॥ prabhu sanmukha kachu kahana na pārahim̐. puni puni carana sarōja nihārahim̐. 4.

taba prabhu bhūṣana basana magā'ē. nānā raṅga anūpa suhā'ē. 5.

None of them could muster courage to say anything before the Lord; they could not even utter a word. [To wit, all the guests of Lord Ram, the 'Kapis', stood silently before him as they were so overwhelmed with emotions that they could not decide what to say, and how to ask the Lord not to tell them to go back home. They kept quiet in deference to the Lord's presence and majesty, because answering the Lord would be impolite and bad in terms of observation of decorum. They could not even tell the Lord that they would rather prefer to settle down in Ayodhya permanently, and continue to serve him for the rest of their lives.]

They repeatedly glanced at the holy lotus-like feet of Lord Ram (as a subtle sign to indicate what they intended to say but dared not speak and let known in an articulate language—that they would prefer to serve the holy feet of Lord Ram instead of going back home)¹. (4)

Meanwhile, Lord Ram called for beautiful ornaments and clothes (ceremonial robes of honour) of different colours and designs (which he would give as gifts to his friends before saying good bye to them). (5)

[Note—¹The Kapis stood silently because they were in a dilemma. To speak before the Lord and say that they don't wish to go back would be tantamount to disobedience and in-courteous behaviour. But at the same time they sincerely wished that Lord Ram would allow them to stay in Ayodhya and serve him. So they repeatedly glanced at the feet of the Lord to convey a silent message that they would rather stay, and that they wished to serve him.

²But since it was not feasible and practical to allow them to stay in Ayodhya as discussed earlier, the Lord got gifts of clothes and ornaments brought in so that a clear hint is given to them that they must go back to their homes.]

सुग्रीवहि प्रथमहिं पहिराए । बसन भरत निज हाथ बनाए ॥ ६ ॥
 प्रभु प्रेरित लछिमन पहिराए । लंकापति रघुपति मन भाए ॥ ७ ॥
 अंगद बैठ रहा नहिं डोला । प्रीति देखि प्रभु ताहि न बोला ॥ ८ ॥ sugrīvahi prathamahim pahirā'ē. basana bharata nija hātha banā'ē. 6.

 prabhu prērita lachimana pahirā'ē. laṅkāpati raghupati mana bhā'ē. 7.
 aṅgada baiṭha rahā nahim ḍolā. prīti dēkhi prabhu tāhi na bōlā. 8.

Lord Ram adorned Sugriv with robes of honour first (because the latter was the king of the monkey race and the senior-most amongst the Lord's guests). These ceremonial robes were tailored by Bharat with his own hands (during the time of the 14 years of self-imposed isolation that he spent while Lord Ram was in the forest). (6)

At the same time (as Lord Ram made Sugriv wear robes of honour), Laxman, on behest of Lord Ram, adorned Vibhishan, the king of Lanka, with matching robes of honour; this pleased the Lord much¹. (7)

Meanwhile, Angad (the crown prince of Kishkindha and Sugriv's nephew, being the son of the latter's elder brother Baali) kept on sitting; he did not move. Lord Ram observed it closely, and realizing the exemplarily high level of Angad's loyalty and devotion for him, the Lord did not ask him to come forward to accept the ceremonial robes². (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram, being the sovereign of Ayodhya, adorned Sugriv, who was also a sovereign of Kishkindha and the senior-most in the rank of commanders, while at the same time Laxman, the second in rank, adorned Vibhishan, who was a notch junior to Sugriv in the hierarchy of things. Why? It is simple: Sugriv led the conquering army as its king and commander, while Vibhishan got his throne after victory of this army. So although both were presently kings in their own rights, but Sugriv obviously had a more right of way as compared to Vibhishan, entitling him to get honour first.

²Lord Ram perceived that Angad was unwilling to leave him and go back. The Lord could see the sadness in Angad's face and plea for exemption from going back by the looks of his eyes. So the Lord kept quiet and did not ask Angad to step forward to be honoured along with Sugriv and Vibhishan.]

दो०. जामवंत नीलादि सब पहिराए रघुनाथ । हियँ धरि राम रूप सब चले नाइ पद माथ ॥ १७ (क) ॥
 dōhā.

jāmavanta nīlādi saba pahirā'ē raghunātha.
 hiyaṁ dhari rāma rūpa saba calē nā'i pada mātha. 17 (a).

Lord Ram himself clothed Jamvant (the chief of the bears), Neela (one of the chief commanders of the Lord's army from Kishkindha), and all the others (who had come with Lord Ram aboard the plane from Lanka) with robes of honour.

Then all of them bowed their heads reverentially at Lord Ram's feet, and enshrining the Lord's image in their hearts, they departed for their homeland. (Doha no. 17-a)

तब अंगद उठि नाइ सिरु सजल नयन कर जोरि ।
अति बिनीत बोलेउ बचन मनहुँ प्रेम रस बोरि ॥ १७ (ख) ॥

taba aṅgada uṭhi nā'i siru sajala nayana kara jōri.
ati binīta bōlē'u bacana manahum̐ prēma rasa bōri. 17 (b).

When everybody else had departed, Angad got up and bowed his head before Lord Ram with his eyes filled with tears and the palms of his hands joined together in a prayerful mode.

Angad spoke most politely and humbly, beseeching the Lord by using words that seemed to be soaked in emotions of love and affection for the Lord¹. (Doha no. 17-b)

[Note—¹Angad kept sitting quietly while all others were being honoured by Lord Ram by offering ceremonial robes to them and then given a warm send-off.

We have read earlier (in Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes this Doha) that when it had become evident that Lord Ram intended to send his guests back from Ayodhya to their respective homes in Kishkindha and Lanka, Angad did not like the idea of going back. So he kept sitting quietly and did not join others to receive gifts and robes of honour from Lord Ram as parting gifts before departure.

Now when he found Lord Ram alone, he got up to plead his case, with tears in his eyes, most humble looks, and prayerful words infused with devotion and love for the Lord in as best a manner as he possibly could.]

चौ०. सुनु सर्वग्य कृपा सुख सिंधो । दीन दयाकर आरत बंधो ॥ १ ॥
मरती बेर नाथ मोहि बाली । गयउ तुम्हारेहि कोछें घाली ॥ २ ॥ असरन सरन बिरदु संभारी । मोहि जनि तजहु भगत हितकारी ॥ ३ ॥
caupāī.

sunu sarbagya kṛpā sukha sindhō. dīna dayākara ārata bandhō. 1.
maratī bēra nātha mōhi bālī. gaya'u tumhārēhi kōñchēm̐ ghālī. 2.
asarana sarana biradu sambhārī. mōhi jani tajahu bhagata hitakārī. 3.

[Angad submitted most humbly and pleadingly—]

'Listen oh Lord who is all-knowing (sarbagya) as well as an ocean of happiness, grace, compassion and mercy (kṛpā sukha sindhō).

You show mercy to the lowly and the humble (dīna dayākara), and are a friend of those who are distressed and looking for solace and succour (ārata bandhō). (1)

At the time of his death, Baali (my father) had put me in your care and safe custody¹. (2)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.

At the time of his death, Baali had prayed to Lord Ram to take care of his son Angad, requesting the Lord to hold him by his arm and look after his welfare by treating Angad as his own servant and dependant. Angad now invokes that request to ask Lord Ram to keep his father's last wishes and let him stay in Ayodhya to serve the Lord.

It ought to be noted carefully here that at that time Lord Ram had kept quiet; the Lord had not expressly accepted Baali's request asking him "to keep Angad as his servant". The word used by Baali was "dāsa"—which literally means a servant, but by extension it also means someone who depends upon his lord.

What Baali actually wished from Lord Ram was to protect Angad after his death. Baali was apprehensive of Angad's safety and future because Sugriv, Baali's younger brother and Angad's uncle, would be probably tormenting Angad and may even go further to kill him on some pretext as he would see the orphaned Angad as a rival claimant to the throne of Kishkindha. Lord Ram recognized this possibility, that Sugriv would usurp the hereditary right of Angad over the crown of Kishkindha which he was lawfully entitled to by the virtue of being the son of Baali.

To pre-empt Sugriv from completely disenfranchising Angad and throwing him out of the kingdom of Kishkindha, Lord Ram had declared Angad as the heir-apparent and a crown prince of Kishkindha at the time of Sugriv's own appointment as the king in place of his dead brother Baali.

Not only this, Lord Ram had always shown a soft corner for Angad, and treated him as one of his most trusted lieutenants, at par with Hanuman. We must have observed presently that while others were being given a send-off by Lord Ram, the Lord did not insist on Angad too leaving with them. Surely, all others who went away must have noticed this crucial point. Privately Sugriv must have felt very happy, thinking of Angad staying back as good riddance. But at the same time, all must have realized that Lord Ram surely loved Angad more as the Lord did not insist his going back with others.

We shall soon read that, by-and-by, Lord Ram prevailed upon Angad to return home to Kishkindha, although the Lord could have as well accepted his plea to remain in Ayodhya. The reason for the Lord's decision to send Angad back to his kingdom is this: The Lord had to keep his promise made to his father Baali that he would take care of Angad and ensure he lives a honourable life—and that is why Angad was made the heir-apparent and a crown prince of Kishkindha. Now, if Angad was allowed to stay back in Ayodhya to serve the Lord, then he would have forfeited this right and privilege. Besides this, it would have given a chance to Sugriv to fill the vacancy by appointing someone of his own choice. Should this actually happen, Angad would permanently lose his right.

Angad was a 'prince' of a great kingdom of Kishkindha; keeping a 'prince' as a servant, or a courtier or any junior functionary in the kingdom of Ayodhya would be absolutely wrong for Lord Ram; it would have not only been insulting for Angad but would have surely lowered the Lord's own image and reputation in the world. And it would have given Sugriv a fodder to spread bad words for the Lord behind his back—that Lord Ram has kept Angad with him in order to symbolically subjugate the monkey race because Angad was not an ordinary member of this race but their 'prince and an heir-apparent to the throne, who would one day become the king of Kishkindha'.

To wit, Lord Ram's keeping Angad in Ayodhya to serve him would be a humiliating thing for the entire monkey race, because he was their prince and a rightful claimant to the throne of their kingdom, which in turn would not go down well in terms of long-time friendship.

Many such factors came into play when Lord Ram decided to send Angad back home instead of accepting his request to allow him to stay in Ayodhya.

As for Angad, besides his love for Lord Ram, there were other considerations why he did not wish to go back. His uncle Sugriv had killed his father Baali to grab the crown, so Angad was sure he would be ill-treated if he went to Kishkindha. But this fear of Angad was taken care when Lord Ram showed special treatment to him by allowing him to stay back for sometime after all others have left.

Eventually, when Angad did return to Kishkindha after some time, everyone was sure that Lord Ram has sent him as his own ambassador in disguise, so all those who might harbour ill design against him must be ware of severe repercussions should Lord Ram get a hint that Angad is in danger.

It was not hidden from anyone that Angad shared a special bond of affection with Lord Ram, that he was dear to the Lord and close to his heart, that there was an affinity between the two. This meant that everyone in Kishkindha treated Angad kindly and with great respect. Sugriv, even if he had some secret agenda against Angad in the beginning, had by now decided to forget it and treat him with affection.]

मोरें तुम्ह प्रभु गुर पितु माता । जाउँ कहाँ तजि पद जलजाता ॥ ४ ॥

तुम्हहि बिचारि कहहु नरनाहा । प्रभु तजि भवन काज मम काहा ॥ ५ ॥

बालक ग्यान बुद्धि बल हीना । राखहु सरन नाथ जन दीना ॥ ६ ॥ mōrēm tumha prabhu gura pitu mātā. jā'uṁ kahāṁ taji pada jalajātā. 4.

tumhahi bicāri kahahu naranāhā. prabhu taji bhavana kāja mama kāhā. 5.
bālaka gyāna bud'dhi bala hīnā. rākhahu sarana nātha jana dīnā. 6.

Oh dear Lord; for me you are my guru (revered teacher and guide) as well as my parent, my father and mother, and protector.

Tell me Lord, this being the truthful case, where can I go except your lotus-like feet? [To wit, I have no place to go; I have no other destination; I have no home where I can find rest, peace, solace and succour except you and your holy feet.] (4)

Oh Lord; think yourself and tell me what work do I have at home if I leave (serving) you? [Verily indeed, in all sooth and without gainsay, I have no work anywhere else, I have nothing to do at home. If I leave you, I will be lost and lonely; I have no kith and kin except you.] (5)

Treat me as a child who is humble, innocent, lowly, and devoid of all skills and intelligence (making him unfit for the world, useless, not liked by anyone, and who has to taken special care by his parent because of his shortcomings and inabilities).

Oh gracious and merciful Lord! Considering me to be humble and lowly, and one who is utterly distressed and overcome with grief, please be kind to keep me as your refugee, and let me stay with you. [Truly Lord, I don't want to go home; I wish to stay with you.] (6)

नीचि टहल गृह कै सब करिहउँ । पद पंकज बिलोकि भव तरिहउँ ॥ ७ ॥ अस कहि चरन परेउ प्रभु पाही । अब जनि नाथ कहहु गृह जाही ॥ ८ ॥ nīci ṭahala gr̥ha kai saba kariha'uṁ. pada paṅkaja bilōki bhava tariha'uṁ. 7.

asa kahi carana parē'u prabhu pāhī. aba jani nātha kahahu gr̥ha jāhī. 8.

[I will not be a burden or problem for either you or anyone else in your household, because—] I will serve you like an ordinary servant, and do all the most humble of menial jobs of your household that you assign me to do.

While doing so, I shall always be privileged to see and serve your holy lotus-like feet, which in turn will help me obtain liberation and deliverance from this mundane existence in this gross world, and thereby attain emancipation and salvation for my soul.' (7)

Saying this and pleading most earnestly to Lord Ram, Angad fell down at the feet of the Lord and prayed: 'Oh my dear and merciful Lord; please don't tell me again to go back home.' (8)

दो०. अंगद बचन बिनीत सुनि रघुपति करुना सींव ।
प्रभु उठाइ उर लायउ सजल नयन राजीव ॥ १८ (क) ॥ निज उर माल बसन मनि बालितनय पहिराइ ।
बिदा कीन्हि भगवान तब बहु प्रकार समुझाइ ॥ १८ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

aṅgada bacana binīta suni raghupati karunā sīnva.
prabhu uṭhā'i ura lāya'u sajala nayana rājīva. 18 (a).
nija ura māla basana mani bālitanaya pahirā'i.
bidā kīnhi bhagavāna taba bahu prakāra samujhā'i. 18 (b).

Hearing Angad's pitiful prayer, Lord Raghupati (i.e. Lord Ram), who is an embodiment of mercy and compassion, was overwhelmed with love and affection for him.

The Lord picked him up and clasped him to his bosom, with tears welling up in his lotus-like eyes. (Doha no. 18-a)

Lord Ram took his own garland that hung over his chest and put it around Angad's neck. The Lord also adorned Angad, the son of Baali (bālitanaya), with clothes and jewels that he himself wore¹.

Then the Lord (bhagavāna) reassured him in a variety of ways, explaining the pros and cons of the situation, the necessity of his going back, the practical reasons of the Lord's decision to send him back to Kishkindha instead of keeping him in Ayodhya, and then blessing him profusely, the Lord send him off with a heavy heart². (Doha no. 18-b)

[Note—¹It ought to be noted here all others too were given clothes, ornaments and other gifts, but the difference is that Lord Ram gave Angad his personal items of clothes and ornaments, and even the garland that he wore himself.

This was surely a very special gesture and had a special meaning: these gift items would make Angad feel like touching the Lord personally whenever he touched them when at home. They were the personal things of Lord Ram, and therefore they would remind Angad that the Lord held him very close and dear to his heart.

When someone gives another person any item of his personal use as a token of remembrance at the time of seeing him off, it obviously means that the latter is shown special treatment by the former, to remind the latter that he is very close to the former and has a special place in his heart.

When Angad returned to Kishkindha, everyone could see that he has been shown special treatment and honour by Lord Ram, that Angad is closer to the Lord than anyone of them.

²We have already discussed in the note appended to Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede this Doha why Lord Ram was compelled to send Angad back inspite of the latter's so earnest a request to let him stay in Ayodhya to serve the Lord. So when Lord Ram explained to Angad the situation from different angles, the necessity and the prudence of his going back home, Angad finally agreed, though he did so most reluctantly and with a heavy and sad heart.

Now, let us briefly see why Lord Ram insisted that Angad ought to go back home to Kishkindha.

(a) At the time of appointing Sugriv, uncle of Angad, as a king of Kishkindha, Lord Ram had anointed Angad as the heir-apparent, the crown prince, and the next in line to the throne. The Lord ensured by this step that after Sugriv's stepping down from kingdom of Kishkindha for any reason whatsoever, Angad would rightfully become the next king, and not Sugriv's son or anyone selected by him. This choice of Angad as the next king was definitely correct, as Angad was the son of Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv, whom the latter got killed due to some personal feud. Had Baali lived, it was normal that after him his son Angad would have ascended the throne, and not Sugriv. Hence, Lord Ram did nothing else but restore this traditional right to Angad.

But surely Sugriv must have been jealous of Angad, seeing him as a contender to the throne, and therefore he didn't like Angad. Angad understood this sticky situation and had explicitly said so to his companions on the shore of the ocean in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 26. Angad had a serious apprehension that Sugriv would have him killed on one excuse or another. His only safety was in the hands of Lord Ram, for Sugriv dared not oppose the Lord.

This was the primary reason why Angad wished to stay with Lord Ram in Ayodhya instead of going back to Kishkindha.

But this fear of Angad was taken well care of by the Lord. When Lord Ram adorned him with personal royal clothes, ornaments and garland, it was a clear-as-daylight sign to one and all that Angad was very close to the Lord, and nobody ever dare raise an evil eye against him.

When Angad went back to Kishkindha attired in such fine regalia, unique to Lord Ram, and bearing the signature royal emblems, motifs, signs, and court-of-arms of the kingdom of Ayodhya, he represented Lord Ram in Kishkindha; he was the Lord's ambassador, his emissary, his representative.

So, this served many purposes: One, it kept Sugriv under leash; he knew that if he committed any mischief on any front, Angad would report back to Lord Ram, and then Sugriv would be punished. Second, it ensured that Angad got respect and honour due to him as a crown prince and heir apparent of the kingdom; he would not have to live at Sugriv's mercy. Third, Lord Ram could monitor things in Kishkindha.

(b) Lord Ram was a most gracious, compassionate, kind, magnanimous and courteous king the world had and has ever known. The Lord had made Sugriv, who was the king of Kishkindha, as one of his friends, and Angad as the crown prince of the same kingdom. This being the case, it would seem very bad if Lord Ram kept Angad as his courtier; the world would say that the Lord has made Kishkindha a vassal state by allowing its crown prince to serve him as an ordinary courtier. It would undermine the Lord's immaculate reputation and scar his glory.

Those in Kishkindha would have special reason to feel affected negatively, because all loved Angad as he was an orphan, and a nice person, almost similar to Hanuman in his nature.

(c) If Angad was allowed to stay in Ayodhya, Sugriv would get what he wanted without any trouble, for if the crown prince was absent for a long time, he would find an excuse to appoint his son or anyone else on that post, saying he needed help in running the day-to-day administration affairs of the kingdom. And once someone was appointed, Angad would be disinherited forever, and most importantly, the blame for this unfortunate development would fall squarely at Lord Ram's door.

(e) Further, Lord Ram was apprehensive of Sugriv. He feared that in the future there were good chances that Sugriv might eye the territory of Lanka, and use his powerful army to launch a military campaign on Lanka to usurp the throne from Vibhishan on one pretext or another. Lord Ram had given his personal word of honour to Vibhishan that he would always protect him as his devotee and friend; so what would happen then?

Even if Sugriv did not think in these terms, who can say Vibhishan won't? Couldn't Vibhishan launch a vicious attack on Kishkindha to settle old scores against Sugriv, for the sack of Lanka was done by the army of Kishkindha led by Sugriv?

By keeping Angad in Kishkindha, the Lord felt that both these unfortunate developments could be pre-empted and avoided, because Angad would step in and rein the warring parties in straight away, before the situation went out of hand.

(f) The Lord had decided to keep Hanuman with him. If he kept Angad too, there were chances that in due course of time these two would start quarreling amongst themselves over petty matters, causing unnecessary intrigue and ill-will. So it was prudent and wiser to keep them separate.

Lord Ram decided that since Hanuman and Angad were close friends, had good affinity with each other, and had always stayed together during the war too, it would be easier for the Lord to keep the communication channels with Kishkindha open and well-oiled by employing their services. Since both of them were loyal to the Lord, the matter would be so much the easier and information reliable.

(g) Angad had not observed rules of protocol: for it was, and still is, an established custom that when two states or kingdoms or countries are on friendly terms, such as Ayodhya and Kishkindha in our present case, and a citizen of one country wishes to go and live in the other, then he must first obtain permission from the king or governing authority of his own country before applying to stay in the other country. Angad ought to have first taken Sugriv, the king of his native country as well as his uncle, into confidence, telling him that he wished to stay for a while with Lord Ram before approaching the Lord with this request. It is obvious Sugriv wouldn't have denied this permission, and then all decks would have been clear for Angad, because after he had formally obtained Sugriv's permission, it would have been a lot difficult for even Lord Ram to deny it to him; Lord Ram couldn't have insisted that Angad go back to his home country as that would have seemed defying Sugriv himself whose permission Angad had already obtained. In that eventuality, if Lord Ram sent Angad back, it would have soured relationships between two good friends, Lord Ram and Sugriv, both of whom were, at that point of time, independent Kings in their own rights.

But then, why didn't Angad request Sugriv's permission, and instead approached Lord Ram directly? What may have been the probable reason? Well, the answer is this: Angad both feared and hated Sugriv. Why? Angad feared that his uncle would deny him this permission to stay in Ayodhya under Lord Ram's protection because he would prefer that Angad remains within his reach so that one day or the other he would surely kill him*¹, on one pretext or another, to get him out of the way, for Angad thought that his uncle, who had killed his father Baali to grab the crown, will see Angad as a contender to the throne of Kishkindha, especially when Lord Ram had himself got Angad appointed as the heir-apparent and the crown prince*². Angad hated Sugriv obviously because the latter taken the help of Lord Ram to have his father Baali killed*³.

So Angad did not wish to see Sugriv's face and talk with him. On the other hand, he saw in Lord Ram his only succour, guardian and protector in this world, and he has expressly mentioned this fact to the Lord while pleading with him to let him stay in Ayodhya*⁴ as a sort of insurance against his uncle.

{*¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 26.

*²Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 11.

*³Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 26 that precedes Doha no. 7—to Doha no. 8.

*⁴Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.}

Lord Ram had to take many such factors, small and big, into consideration while deciding on Angad's plea, and everything weighed in favour of the decision to send him back home, though it meant an extremely painful parting for both, Lord Ram as well as Angad.

So the Lord took him aside and explained everything to him in detail, telling him: "Look son! Thou art very dear to me, but we have to take many things into view as both of us are responsible persons; we can't behave like a naïve child. Look: you are always, anytime and in any situation, welcome here; you need no permission from either me or anyone else for it. Listen: thou art not going back to Kishkindha out of thine free will, but on my express orders. Hence, even whilst being there, thou art carrying out my wishes just as thou wouldst have done it if thou hadst lived here. Suppose I command thee to go to some place on an errand, tell me, wouldst thou not go? So take it this way—thou art going to Kishkindha on my command. So be cheerful and happy; don't feel hard at all. Thou art mine, and so wilt thou ever remain for eternity!”

As far as Angad was concerned, after all it would have been wrong on his part to defy the Lord and go against his wishes; being a true devotee and a loyal follower of Lord Ram, it was obligatory on Angad, and expected of him as well, that he would pay heed to the Lord and keep his wishes before his own.

So therefore, since Lord Ram desired that Angad should go back, the latter had no choice but to obey.]

चौ०. भरत अनुज सौमित्रि समेता । पठवन चले भगत कृत चेता ॥ १ ॥

अंगद हृदयं प्रेम नहिं थोरा । फिरि फिरि चितव राम कीं ओरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bharata anuja saumitri samētā. paṭhavana calē bhagata kṛta cētā. 1.

aṅgada hṛdayaṁ prēma nahim thōrā. phiri phiri citava rāma kīm ōrā. 2.

Lord Ram, who always keeps the good of his devotees in view¹, went out of his way to give an emotional and warm send-off to Angad by taking along with him all his three younger brothers, Bharat, Shatrughan and Laxman (bharata anuja saumitri samētā). (1)

Angad's heart lacked no affection for Lord Ram; in fact it overwhelmed him and overflowed from his heart as was evident when he repeatedly looked back at the Lord (with tears in his sad eyes and pain in his grief-stricken heart)². (2)

[Note—¹This fact, that “Lord Ram always keeps the good of his devotees in view” vis-à-vis Angad, has been explained in detail in the notes appended to previous verses.

²Angad was torn between emotions. He sobbed and sighed silently; he glanced back over his shoulders; he stopped in his path and turned around to directly look back as if expecting that the Lord would call him back at the last moment (as will be clear in the next verse), to have a last glimpse of his dear Lord whose sight he would be dearly missing for a long time to come, a prospect that grieved him more than anything else.

Angad did not know what to do and what not to; should he defy the Lord and turn back at all costs, or should he proceed to his destination; should he go to the forest and become a recluse somewhere near Ayodhya. Poor Angad felt forlorn, pensive, lonely and extremely sad. He literally dragged his legs that felt heavy-as-lead to move forward, but he had no choice: he could not disobey the Lord. He could see that Lord Ram's face was as sad as his own; they too had tears in their eyes as his did; the Lord took deep breaths and stood forlorn and lonely and grieving in the same way as Angad felt.

This reassured Angad that Lord Ram truly loved him, perhaps more than he imagines; to some extent he felt comforted, realizing that the Lord would miss him as much as he would miss the Lord. He thought that perhaps the Lord thought it was in Angad's own interest to go back, and so in spite of the emotional sufferings the Lord insisted on it.]

बार बार कर दंड प्रनामा । मन अस रहन कहहिं मोहि रामा ॥ ३ ॥ राम बिलोकनि बोलनि चलनी । सुमिरि सुमिरि सोचत हँसि मिलनी ॥ ४ ॥ bāra bāra kara daṇḍa pranāmā. mana asa rahana kahahim mōhi rāmā. 3.

rāma bilōkani bōlani calanī. sumiri sumiri sōcata haṁsi milanī. 4.

He (Angad) turned back and repeatedly fell down prostrate on the ground in the direction of Lord Ram, to pay his homage to the Lord, expecting that may be at the last moment the Lord would ask him to stay back. (3)

Angad remembered all those pleasant moments of the past that recalled to his memory how Lord Ram used to look at him, how the Lord talked with him, how the Lord walked alongside with him, how the Lord would smile and laugh at his little deeds and naughty acts! These memories filled his mind and buffeted his emotions relentlessly; they overwhelmed him and overpowered him with grief and sadness¹. (4)

[Note—¹Indeed it was a very sad and heart-breaking parting. To speak the truth, the author of the current Book has himself wept bitterly while typing out this episode on the computer, as well as the one where Angad takes his leave from Hanuman a little while later.]

प्रभु रुख देखि बिनय बहु भाषी । चलेउ हृदयँ पद पंकज राखी ॥ ५ ॥ अति आदर सब कपि पहुँचाए । भाइन्ह सहित भरत पुनि आए ॥ ६ ॥ prabhu rukha dēkhi binaya bahu bhāṣī. calē'u hṛdayaṁ pada paṅkaja rākhi. 5.

ati ādara saba kapi pahuṁcā'ē. bhā'inha sahita bharata puni ā'ē. 6.

But Angad by-and-by realized that it was Lord Ram's desire that he should go back to his home in Kishkindha.

So finally he prayed to Lord Ram most humbly and politely, and enshrining the Lord's lotus-like holy feet in his heart, Angad departed from there. (5)

[Other Kapis were waiting at a distance. Angad went and joined them.]

All the Kapis (who had collected outside the gates of the royal palace) were respectfully taken to the borders of the city of Ayodhya, from where they were given an affectionate and ceremonial send-off. After this, Bharat and his other brothers returned back¹. (6)

[Note—¹It is to be carefully noted here that it is 'Bharat' who is mentioned in the verse as having returned back with his brothers after the departure of the Kapis, and Lord Ram isn't mentioned.

It clearly means that Lord Ram, being the sovereign, desisted from going much further away from the gates of the fort or palace ground beyond a certain limit to maintain decorum and dignity of the Crown. On his behalf he deputed his three brothers, led by Bharat, to accompany his Kapi friends till the borders of the city and send them off from there.

Perhaps Lord Ram would have gone himself, but he was surely so emotionally upset at the sight of the sad Angad departing with pain on his face and deep sadness reflecting from his demeanours that the Lord thought that he would not be able to restrain his own emotions if he saw Angad lamenting in the same way again, for it was too unbearable a sight for the merciful Lord Ram to cope with. So it was prudent and wise for the Lord to stay away and allow his brothers to go with his friends to the periphery of the city to see them off and bid them farewell from there.

Remember: Lord Ram was not alone; he was a King, and therefore a large retinue of courtiers and citizens were there to watch the proceedings. Then there were his Kapi friends. Imagine what a delicate and sensitive and piquant situation would arise in case Angad started wailing and weeping and falling at the Lord's feet in front of everyone's eyes just prior to departure, pleading with the Lord to let him stay back? It would be a doleful scene and an extremely painful situation that had to be avoided at all costs.]

तब सुग्रीव चरन गहि नाना । भाँति बिनय कीन्हे हनुमाना ॥ ७ ॥
 दिन दस करि रघुपति पद सेवा । पुनि तव चरन देखिहउँ देवा ॥ ८ ॥
 पुन्य पुंज तुम्ह पवनकुमारा । सेवहु जाइ कृपा आगारा ॥ ९ ॥ अस कहि कपि सब चले तुरन्ता । अंगद कहइ सुनहु हनुमन्ता ॥ १० ॥ taba sugrīva carana gahi nānā. bhāṁti binaya kīnhē hanumānā. 7.

 dina dasa kari raghupati pada sēvā. puni tava carana dēkhiha'uṁ dēvā. 8.
 pun'ya puñja tumha pavanakumārā. sēvahu jā'i krpā āgārā. 9.
 asa kahi kapi saba calē turantā. aṅgada kaha'i sunahu hanumantā. 10.

Then (when final good-byes were being said on the borders of Ayodhya), Hanuman approached Sugriv and fell at his feet, praying to him in different ways (so that his request is accepted)¹. (7)

Hanuman pleaded before Sugriv, 'Oh Lord! Let me serve Lord Ram's feet for some ten days more (i.e. for some more time), and then oh Lord, I shall come back to you see your feet (and serve you)².' (8)

Sugriv (and all others present there^{3*}) lauded Hanuman's initiative. They said: 'Oh Hanuman, the son of the wind god (pavanakumārā)! Indeed and in all sooth, you are a fountainhead of everything that is considered meritorious and auspicious (pun'ya puñja tumha). Blessed are you truly. Go, cheerfully go, and serve the Lord (Ram) who is an abode of, an embodiment of grace, compassion, kindness, mercy and magnanimity (krpā āgārā)!' (9)

Blessing Hanuman in this way, all the Kapis^{3*}, immediately departed from there on their journey back home.

Angad, however, fell back from the rest of the group, and pulled Hanuman aside to have a last minute chat with him. He said, ‘Listen Hanuman. ---- (10)

[Note—¹A remarkable thing has happened here. While Angad was pleading his case before Lord Ram, Hanuman stood quietly and observed. He was also there when Lord Ram explained to Angad the various reasons why he could not allow him to stay back in Ayodhya, and amongst them one was that it was against norms to allow a citizen of a friendly country to live in one’s own country without his having obtained a prior permission from the ruler of his native country, which Angad had not done.

Wise and intelligent as he was, Hanuman caught the point straight on, and so he decided to approach Sugriv first, because the latter was the king of Hanuman’s native country Kishkindha. Hanuman had rightly guessed that it would be impossible for Sugriv to deny this permission to him—because of the simple fact that Sugriv and Lord Ram were fast friends, and it would be a courteous gesture for Sugriv to allow one of his fellow citizens to remain in Ayodhya for some time more, especially when that citizen himself requests for such a permission. To deny it would be un-courteous and offending for the friendly king.

So when it is said in these verses that Hanuman prayed to Sugriv in different ways, it is simply meant that he explained to Sugriv the pros and cons of the matter while persuading the latter to accept his request and grant him the desired permission.

²What could have Sugriv possibly said when Hanuman made his request? Sugriv replied: “Well my dear Hanuman, thou art indeed very fortunate to have this privilege; I am with thee, and bless thee. Yes, definitely, thou hast my full permission without any reservations. Listen mine dear: ‘Ten days’ thou sayest—well, what are the numbers of days that matter; it’s a rare honour to be able to serve Lord Ram. So therefore, stay and serve the Lord as long as thou wish. I canst ever have a trace of an objection in it; rather I wilt be the gladdest soul alive and the happiest one if one of my countrymen is able to offer his services to Lord Ram. Look dear, hark to my advice: carry out Lord Ram’s command dutifully, diligently, faithfully, honestly, and loyally. Don’t let down the Lord ever; I don’t want to hear, mind thee, that whilst Hanuman was in the service of Lord Ram, the Lord had to face this or that problem. Thou art able in all respects; thine virtues art legendary; no one in our race is as fortunate as thou art. So put this opportunity to good use in the service of our common Lord. It will bring glory to all of us. Remember: through thee, I, on my own behalf as well as on the behalf of our entire race, wilt be serving the Lord himself! So, Go and fulfill thine wishes. Glory be to thee; all praises and honours be thine; thou art indeed the jewel of the Kapi race without doubt!”

Armed with permission from Sugriv, Hanuman returned to Lord Ram to offer himself and his services. Lord Ram must have surely smiled at Hanuman’s clever wisdom, for now the Lord was left with no choice but to allow him to remain in Ayodhya and keep serving him. Any refusal would be insulting to Sugriv, something surely Lord Ram would never wish.

³*The place and time where Hanuman prayed to Sugriv to allow him to serve Lord Ram for a few days more was just at the time of the departure of the group. Everyone was present there; it could not have been a private meeting between the two. Hence, whatever Hanuman said to Sugriv, and whatever Sugriv replied, was heard and endorsed by all the Kapis as is explicitly clear in verse no. 10.

Therefore, the permission which Hanuman got to remain in Lord Ram's service was an unanimous decision taken by all the Kapi chiefs, and not only Sugriv.

And the whole scene was witnessed by Lord Ram's three brothers who had come to bid goodbye to the guests—i.e. Bharat, Laxman and Shatrughan. So, when Hanuman returned triumphantly to present himself in the service of the Lord, the Lord glanced at his three brothers to have their opinion. And obviously all of them smiled and nodded assent, saying that Hanuman has the permission of not only Sugriv but the whole group, and so the Lord must keep him in his service.

Wonderful and remarkable! What Angad could not get directly from Lord Ram, Hanuman got the same thing with wit and wisdom!]

दो०. कहेहु दंडवत प्रभु सैं तुम्हहि कहउँ कर जोरि ।
 बार बार रघुनायकहि सुरति कराएहु मोरि ॥ १९ (क) ॥
 अस कहि चलेउ बालिसुत फिरि आयउ हनुमंत ।
 तासु प्रीति प्रभु सन कही मगन भए भगवंत ॥ १९ (ख) ॥
 कुलिसहु चाहि कठोर अति कोमल कुसुमहु चाहि । चित खगेस राम कर समुझि परइ कहु काहि ॥ १९ (ग) ॥

dōhā.

kahehu daṇḍavata prabhu saim tumhahi kaha'um kara jōri.
 bāra bāra raghunāyakahi surati karā'ēhu mōri. 19 (a).
 asa kahi calē'u bālisuta phiri āya'u hanumanta.
 tāsu prīti prabhu sana kahī magana bha'ē bhagavanta. 19 (b).
 kulisahu cāhi kaṭhōra ati kōmala kusumahu cāhi.
 citta khagēsa rāma kara samujhi para'i kahu kāhi. 19 (c).

Angad pleaded with Hanuman, 'I join the palms of my hands to request you most earnestly and humbly (oh Hanuman) that when you go back to Lord Ram, tell him that I have bowed before him by prostrating myself at his feet (in a symbolic way from a distance).

My dear, remind Lord Ram of me repeatedly, over and over again (now, as well as later on, whenever you get an opportunity to do so).¹' (Doha no. 19-a)

Saying this, Angad, the son of Baali (bālisuta) departed for his journey home, while Hanuman returned back (to Ayodhya).

On his return, Hanuman went straight to the Lord and told him about Angad's deep love and intensity of affection for him, which deeply moved the Lord and affected him so much that he lost awareness of himself and became ecstatic in delight (magana bha'ē bhagavanta)#.

[#This is an extremely heart-wrenching Doha. Angad's final moments with Hanuman, who was his closest buddy, before he departed for home were extremely sorrowful, poignant and painful. Now, let us pause for a while to visualize the heart-touching scene of those few moments in the eyes of our mind as follows:

“Saying this (as narrated in Doha no. 19-a), and embracing Hanuman for one last time, Angad firmed himself for the final parting: he bit his lips, clenched his fists to collect courage, took a deep breath, and tearing himself away from his dear friend, Angad turned abruptly to go away on his long journey back home to Kishkindha, with a heavy heart, numbed mind, wet eyes, drooping head, sagging shoulders that shook intermittently as he sobbed, and virtually dragging his un-cooperating legs behind him. He didn't look back again as Hanuman stood dumb and numb, gazing at the fading image of Angad lumbering away and gradually vanishing into the distant horizon.

After standing motionless for quite a while and feeling crestfallen, Hanuman slowly turned back himself to go back to Ayodhya and report to Lord Ram. Once back, he went straight to the Lord and told him about Angad's deep love and intensity of affection for him, recounting Angad's last words and the state of his mind, his anguished countenance and sorrowful demeanours, his final parting with him (Hanuman) and his painful departure, all of which so deeply moved the Lord and affected him so intensely that he lost awareness of himself and became benumbed as he heard the narrative, even though a subtle sense of ecstasy filled the Lord's mind because he felt delighted in the reaffirmation of his belief that Angad's devotion and love for him was deep-rooted and abiding, and not something superficial (magana bha'ē bhagavanta)."]² (Doha no. 19-b)

[The saintly crow Kaagbhusund, who was narrating this Story to Garud, the king of birds, told him—] 'Oh king of birds (khagēsa)! Indeed it is true that Lord Ram's heart shows two contradictory virtues which are mysterious enough for anyone to comprehend—for on one instance the Lord's emotions (or his heart) can turn as strong, rigid and uncompromising as Bajra (which literally is the weapon of Indra, but generally applied to anything which is extremely hard and un-malleable—such as diamond or rock) (kulisahu cāhi kaṭhōra ati), and on another occasion it can transform into something as soft as a flower (ati kōmala kusumahu cāhi)³.' (Doha no. 19-c)

[Note—¹Hanuman and Angad were fast friends. When Angad observed how Hanuman managed things and got his wishes—to serve Lord Ram—fulfilled, he was all praises for the latter. Now Angad must have realized his error; he regretted that he didn't do what his friend had done—i.e. to seek permission from their king Sugriv. But it was too late now to make amends.

The two close friends came together to bid each other good-bye. Angad was choked in his throat; his eyes were misty with tears; he was doing his best to suppress his sobs; he could barely speak. He took Hanuman's hands in his own, pressed them affectionately, looked deep into his friend's eyes, and breathing heavily he said a few words over his sobs as follows:-

"My dearest Pal! Glory be to thee! How lucky art thou indeed! I suffer doubly from the pangs of separation—first it is from my beloved Lord Ram, and then it is from my beloved friend Hanuman. Today I feel that I am deserted and orphaned, am the most cursed of creatures in the Creator's creation. Anyhow, be it may as it is because no one can go against the fiat of fate. However, will thou do me a favour? Promise me? Just convey to Lord Ram my last obeisance to him; tell him that—'Angad fell down on the ground and imagined that you were standing before him; he clasped your feet and wept bitterly. Then he quietly got up, turned, and went his way sobbing.'

[Angad continued—] My dear Hanuman; later on, whenever you find Lord Ram free and alone, quietly remind him of me. You are intelligent, so find an excuse to do so. Perhaps you could start some conversation pertaining to Kishkindha or Lanka, and then mention my name innocuously. I am confident that you will observe that the Lord would become sad and pensive as he remembers me. Should this happen, I will consider myself well-born. Thank you and good-bye. Take care of yourself; remain cheerful and happy. Remember: In case you need to come to me, you are welcome warmly in Kishkindha, anytime and any day.”

²When Hanuman returned to Lord Ram, he presented a fate accompli to him, i.e. he told the Lord that he has been permitted, or rather mandated, by all the Kapis that he should stay back to serve the Lord. Now, Lord Ram had no option but to accept Hanuman and allow him to stay as long as he wished. Hanuman even told the Lord that in case he doubted him, then he could verify his claim from his three brothers who had gone to the borders to see-off the Lord’s guests from Kishkindha and Lanka, and hence were sure to have witnessed his falling at the feet of Sugriv and then all his companions unanimously telling him to keep serving the Lord. {Apropos: Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede Doha no. 19.}

The twin developments—of Hanuman remaining in the service of Lord Ram, and Angad being sent back to Kishkindha—had great diplomatic and political import. It meant that both the kingdoms had exchanged ambassadors: Hanuman was Sugriv’s representative in Ayodhya, and Angad was Lord Ram’s in Kishkindha. Remember: Lord Ram had adorned Angad with his personal royal robes, ornaments and garland. {Apropos: Doha no. 18-b.} This implied that Angad would be the Lord’s representative in the court of Sugriv.

Another interesting and pertinent thing to note is this: Lord Ram was too happy to keep Hanuman with him because the Lord was well aware of his abilities. Hanuman was exceptionally intelligent, wise and prudent in his mind; he was astoundingly agile, strong, powerful, bold, valiant and courageous physically; he could fly; he could, should the situation so demand, deal with an enemy single-handedly, and not only that, he could even lift his entire camp and bring it to Ayodhya.

In the same vein, Angad would be bound to remain loyal to Lord Ram as he knew that his life-time safety and security and honour were ensured only till the time the Lord had his hand over his head, for his uncle Sugriv, the king of Kishkindha, could never be his well-wisher as, first, he was the one who got his father Baali killed, and second, he was sure to harbour a secret jealousy for Angad as he saw the latter as a contender to the throne of the kingdom by the virtue of Angad being appointed a crown prince by Lord Ram.

³We have noted two opposing natures of Lord Ram which seem to contradict each other. First we notice that the Lord acts as if he is of a very stern heart when he refuses to yield to Angad’s pitiful prayers to allow him to stay in Ayodhya. Then we have also noticed how the Lord had been deeply moved and emotionally affected by Angad’s sadness and distress at not being allowed to do so. Angad’s devotion and love for Lord Ram was exemplary and deep; no one else in the whole Story of the Ramayan has wept so much when he was told that he will have to go away from the Lord. Perhaps the only other two characters that can be said to equal Angad in exhibiting their emotions for Lord Ram when told of the prospect of their separation from the Lord are Laxman and Bharat, the Lord’s two brothers.

When Lord Ram was going to the forest, Laxman had staked his life and said that he can’t live without the Lord if he is not allowed to accompany him. Similarly,

Bharat too was thoroughly devastated on learning that the Lord had gone to the forest. He not only sternly abused his own mother Kaikeyi for being an instrument in this development, but had refused to accept the crown, had even gone to the forest in an effort to bring the Lord back, and finally lived like a recluse for the entire period of 14 long years that Lord Ram spent in the forest attired as a hermit.

When we read the Story of the Ramayana we discover that inspite of all the most humble and pitiful prayers of Bharat asking Lord Ram to return home from the forest, the Lord did not oblige him, like he has not obliged Angad in the present case. And like Angad's case, there were sound reasons why Lord Ram did not oblige Bharat, though the reasons were different and the context was different. Like Lord Ram explaining all the aspects to Angad when he prevailed upon the latter to return to Kishkindha, he had also explained all the many aspects to his brother Bharat when he prevailed upon him to return to Ayodhya without him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 313—to Doha no. 316.}

To wit, Lord Ram is inherently extremely loving, affectionate, soft-hearted, kind, compassionate, merciful, gracious, forgiving, magnanimous, benevolent and sweet by nature, but there are situations when he has to hold his ground, because being the Supreme Lord of the world, he has to act wisely and with prudence, and not driven by crude emotions, for he has to consider many more numbers of factors before arriving at a decision, than those who have a limited view of the world and try to judge him by his single act.

To wit, at one time Lord Ram seems to be of a stern heart, and at other times extremely affable and loving.]

चौ०. पुनि कृपाल लियो बोलि निषादा । दीन्हे भूषन बसन प्रसादा ॥ १ ॥
 जाहु भवन मम सुमिरन करेहू । मन क्रम बचन धर्म अनुसरेहू ॥ २ ॥
 तुम्ह मम सखा भरत सम भ्राता । सदा रहेहु पुर आवत जाता ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

puni krpāla liyō bōli niṣādā. dīnhē bhūṣana basana prasādā. 1.
 jāhu bhavana mama sumirana karēhū. mana krama bacana dharma anusarēhū. 2.
 tumha mama sakhā bharata sama bhrātā. sadā rahēhu pura āvata jātā. 3.

After the guests from Kishkindha and Lanka had left for their respective homes, Lord Ram called Nishad (the chief of the boatman community who was also one of the Lord's friends). The Lord gave him ornaments, robes and food items. (1)

Then Lord Ram said to Nishad, 'Now please go home and remember me. Live an honourable and good life in accordance with the laws of Dharma (righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety, and nobility in conduct and thought) by all your means, such as by employing your mind, your deeds, as well as your words that would help you to comply with such norms. (2)

My dear, you are my friend as well as a brother like Bharat is¹. Keep visiting us as and when it is convenient to you². ' (3)

[Note—¹This verse can be read in another way as follows: “My dear friend! You are like a brother to me in the same way as Bharat is. So don’t hesitate to come here any time you wish.”

²This is very interesting. Nishad lived near the outer fringes of the kingdom of Ayodhya, on the banks of river Ganges. Lord Ram had met him and befriended him on his way to the forest. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 87—to Doha no. 88.}

At that time, Nishad had shown warm hospitality to the Lord, and had accompanied the Lord all the way to Chitrakoot. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 142.}

He had also accompanied Bharat when he was going to meet Lord Ram there. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 193—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 195; (ii) Doha no. 237 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it; and (iii) Doha no. 241 to cite some of the specific verses.}

To wit, Nishad had, by this time, established a great rapport with the whole family of Lord Ram; nay, he was like a family member. Being close to the capital city of Ayodhya, he could easily come and go. So Lord Ram invited him to pay frequent visits.

On the other hand, Lord Ram’s other friends, from Kishkindha and Lanka, lived far away. Sugriv and Vibhishan were both great kings of great kingdoms, and normally kings don’t pay visits to other kings unless it is absolutely essential; they send their ambassadors instead. Hence, it was not practically feasible to expect them to pay visits too often to Ayodhya as Nishad could do because he lived nearby, and also because he was not a king of any large kingdom but a mere chieftain of the boatman community. Therefore, there was not much of a problem in Nishad’s frequent visits to Ayodhya as compared to Sugriv and Vibhishan.]

बचन सुनत उपजा सुख भारी । परेउ चरन भरि लोचन बारी ॥ ४ ॥

चरन नलिन उर धरि गृह आवा । प्रभु सुभाउ परिजनन्हि सुनावा ॥ ५ ॥

रघुपति चरित देखि पुरबासी । पुनि पुनि कहहिं धन्य सुखरासी ॥ ६ ॥ bacana sunata upajā sukha bhārī. parē'u carana bhari lōcana bārī. 4.

carana nalina ura dhari gr̥ha āvā. prabhu subhā'u parijananhi sunāvā. 5.
raghupati carita dēkhi purabāsī. puni puni kahahim̐ dhan'ya sukhārāsī. 6.

Hearing these pleasant words of Lord Ram, Nishad felt very delighted in his heart. He fell down at the feet of the Lord with tears filling his eyes. (4)

Then, enshrining the Lord’s lotus-like feet in his heart, Nishad came back home. He narrated all the events to his kith and kin who listened to him very affectionately. (5)

When the inhabitants of his place (i.e. the members of the boatman community of which he was the chief) heard of what Nishad had to narrate, and when they perceived the nature of Lord Ram (as being extremely graceful, compassionate, kind, merciful, loving and friendly), they repeatedly praised the Lord and affirmed that he is indeed an embodiment of all joy and happiness, someone who grants joy, delight and happiness to everyone around him. (6)

-----**-----

Section 21.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Now, in accordance with the format we have been following in our narration, let us read this episode—of what happened immediately after Lord Ram’s victory in the War of Lanka, and Sita being reunited with him. We shall be reading in this Section no. 21.2 about the revival of all the dead monkey warriors, and the Lord’s return home to Ayodhya aboard the Puspak Plane along with his friends, the warm welcome he was accorded in the city, and his ascension to the throne of the kingdom of Ayodhya with all ceremony—as narrated in sage Veda Vyas’ classic ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’.

For this purpose, we shall divide this Section no. 21.2 into the following Sub-sections:

- (i) Sub-section 21.2.1: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 37-60.
- (ii) Sub-section 21.2.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 14, verse nos. 1-20, 36-100.
- (iii) Sub-section 21.2.3: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 15, verse nos. 1-50, 70-75.

Now, let us commence our narrative as follows:

(i) Sub-section 21.2.1: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 13, verse nos. 37-60:

रामोऽपि देवराजं तं दृष्ट्वा प्राह कृताञ्जलिम् ॥ ३७॥
 मत्कृते निहतान् सङ्ख्ये वानरान् पतितान् भुवि । जीवयाशु सुधावृष्ट्या सहस्राक्ष ममाज्ञया ॥ ३८॥ rāmo'pi devarājaṃ taṃ dr̥ṣṭvā prāha kṛtāñjalim ॥ 37॥ matkṛte nihatān saṅkhye vānarān patitān bhuvi । jīvayāśu sudhāvṛṣṭyā sahasrākṣa mamājñayā ॥ 38॥

[After Sita was reunited with Lord Ram, he saw that Indra, the king of gods, was standing there with the palms of his hands touching each others as a token of showing respect to the Lord, and silently asking the Lord to give him a chance to serve him in some way (37).

Lord Sri Ram said to Indra 'Oh the one with a thousand eyes'¹ (सहस्राक्ष)! By my orders, you must rain Amrit (elixir of life) from the heaven so that all the monkeys and bears who have laid down their lives for my sake and are lying unconscious on the ground are brought back to life.' (38).

[Note—¹Indra was cursed by sage Gautam to have his entire body covered by holes, resembling chicken pox, because of some mischief he had done with the sage's wife Ahilya.

²Indra is also the god of rain; so he is asked by the Lord to shower Amrit from the sky so that the fallen warriors who had laid down their lives for him are immediately revived.]

तथेत्यमृतवृष्ट्या तान् जीवयामास वानरान् ।
 ये ये मृता मृधे पूर्वं ते ते सुप्तोत्थिता इव ।
 पूर्ववद्बालिनो हृष्टा रामपार्श्वमुपाययुः ॥ ३९॥
 नोत्थिता रक्षसास्तत्र पीयूषस्पर्शनादपि ।
 विभीषणस्तु साष्टाङ्गं प्रणिपत्याब्रवीद्वचः ॥ ४०॥ tathetyamṛtavṛṣṭyā tān jīvayāmāsa vānarān । ye ye mṛtā mṛdhe pūrvaṃ te te suptotthitā iva । pūrvavadbalino hrṣṭā rāmapārśvamupāyayuh ॥ 39॥ notthitā rākṣasāstatra pīyūṣasparśanādapi । vibhīṣaṇastu sāṣṭāṅgaṃ praṇipatyābravīdvacaḥ ॥ 40॥

39-40. Hearing this command from Sri Ram, Indra said 'alright' and poured Amrit as rain from the sky to revive all the monkeys and bears back to life.

All the monkey and bear warriors who had either been killed in the battle, or were lying wounded and unconscious, were brought back to life as if they had just woken up from deep sleep. They were as strong and fresh, and as happy and jubilant as they had been prior to the commencement of the war.

Then they all came to where Sri Ram was (39), but the demons who had fallen to the ground on being killed in the war were not revived back inspite of coming in contact with the Amrit. About that time, Vibhishan prostrated himself before Lord Ram and said prayerfully (40)—

[Note :- A very interesting thing has happened here. The rain of Amrit fell on both the monkeys and the bears, as well as the demons. While the former were brought back to life, the latter weren't. Why? Well, the demons died at the hands of Sri Ram, Laxman, Angad and Hanuman etc., whereas the monkeys died at the hands of demons Ravana, Kumbhakarn, Meghnad etc. Having been slayed by the Lord himself or by his devotees, the demons had attained emancipation and salvation for their souls; they had crossed the world-like ocean of birth and death. There was no coming back for them. From the spiritual point of view, they had attained Moksha.

In this context, the author of this current Book would submit that the demons were more lucky and privileged than the monkeys and bears in this aspect. Even Ravana was thousand times luckier than Vibhishan for he had attained oneness with the Lord at the time of his physical death when his soul or spirit emerged from his gross mortal body to go straight and enter the holy and divine body of Lord Ram who personified the Supreme Being, the cosmic Soul. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 78-82.}

It is a great privilege and a rare opportunity to die facing the Lord himself or his true devotees, thinking of the Lord during the last days and moments of one's life. Ravana was indeed very fortunate and had a powerful soul that forced even the Supreme Being to come down from his exalted abode in the heavens right up to his doorstep to grant deliverance to him.

On the other hand, the monkeys and bears could not attain the same destiny of emancipation and salvation because they had been killed by the demons. So when Amrit rained down on the battle-field, only the monkeys and bears were revived, but the demons weren't because the latter had already attained emancipation and salvation, and had gone to the heaven from where there is no return.]

देव मामनुगृहीष्व मयि भक्तिर्यदा तव ।
मङ्गलस्नानमद्य त्वं कुरु सीतासमन्वितः ॥ ४१॥
अलङ्कृत्य सह भ्रात्रा श्वो गमिष्यामहे वयम् । विभीषणवचः श्रुत्वा प्रत्युवाच रघूत्तमः ॥ ४२॥ deva māmanugrṇīṣva mayi bhaktiryadā tava । maṅgalasnānamadya tvaṃ kuru sītāsamanvitaḥ ॥ 41॥ alaṅkṛtya saha bhrātrā śvo gamiṣyāmahe vayam । vibhīṣaṇavacaḥ śrutvā pratyuvāca raghūttamaḥ ॥ 42॥

41-42. 'Oh Lord! You are very benevolent, graceful, kind and munificent towards me. Now, I pray to you most respectfully to have a formal bath yourself (to wash and refresh yourself) and ask Sita too to have it (41).

Then tomorrow, you must adorn yourself along with your brother (Laxman) with the best of clothes, robes and ornaments that I can offer you. After that, we shall all proceed to Ayodhya'. Hearing these kind words of Vibhishan, the best amongst the Raghus (Sri Ram) replied (42)—

सुकुमारोऽतिभक्तो मे भरतो मामवेक्षते ।
जटावल्कलधारी स शब्दब्रह्मसमाहितः ॥ ४३॥ कथं तेन विना स्नानमलङ्कारादिकं मम । अतः सुग्रीवमुख्यांस्त्वं पूजयाशु विशेषतः ॥ ४४॥ sukumāro'tibhakto me bharato māmavekṣate । jaṭāvalkaladhārī sa śabdabrahmasamāhitaḥ ॥ 43॥ kathaṃ tena vinā snānamalaṅkāradikaṃ mama । ataḥ sugrīvamukhyāṁstvāṃ pūjayāśu viśeṣataḥ ॥ 44॥

43-44. 'My brother Bharat, who is very gentle and tender at heart, as well as my ardent devotee and follower, must be eagerly waiting for me. He has been wearing clothes made of bark of the birch tree, and has his hairs matted on the head, all the while engaged in remembering me and chanting my name which he uses as Mantra (a divine formula with which to do meditation on the Supreme Being) (43).

Say, how can I bathe or adorn myself with rich clothes and ornaments without first meeting him? Hence, you should show special respect and honour to Sugriv and other chief monkeys and bears if you do wish to express your thanks to me (44).

[Note—Bharat had been remembering Lord Ram and repeating his name as a sort of Mantra that a recluse would use during his meditative practices. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Ayodhya, Canto 9, verse nos. 70-75.]

पूजितेषु कपीन्द्रेषु पूजितोऽहं न संशयः ।
इत्युक्तो राघवेणाशु स्वर्णरत्नाम्बराणि च ॥ ४५॥
ववर्ष राक्षसश्रेष्ठो यथाकामं यथारुचि ।
ततस्तान् पूजितान् दृष्ट्वा रामो रत्नैश्च यूथपान् ॥ ४६॥ pūjiteṣu kapīndreṣu pūjito'haṃ na saṃśayaḥ । ityukto rāghaveṇāśu svarṇaratnāmbarāṇi ca ॥ 45॥ vavarṣa rākṣasaśreṣṭho yathākāmaṃ yathāruci । tatastān pūjitān drṣṭvā rāmo ratnaiśca yūthapān ॥ 46॥

45-46. Honour and respect shown to those monkey and bear warriors will be equivalent to showing honour and respect to me; there is no doubt about it'.

When Raghav (Sri Ram) had said so, a lot of gems, jewels, clothes and ornaments (45) were liberally given to the monkeys and bears Vibhishan, the illustrious member of the demon race, according to their desires, choices and tastes.

Lord Sri Ram (felt very satisfied and contented) when he saw that the monkey and bear warriors, and their chief commanders, were being duly honoured and rewarded by liberal gifts in the form of priceless gems, jewels, clothes etc. (and the Lord could discern from their facial expression that they too were happy) (46).

अभिनन्द्य यथान्यायं विससर्ज हरीश्वरान् ।
विभीषणसमानीतं पुष्पकं सूर्यवर्चसम् ॥ ४७॥
आरुरोह ततो रामस्तद्विमानमनुत्तमम् । अङ्के निधाय वैदेहीं लज्जमानां यशस्विनीम् ॥ ४८॥ abhinandya yathānyāyaṃ visasarja harīśvarān । vibhīṣaṇasamānītaṃ puṣpakam sūryavarcaśam ॥ 47॥ āruroha tato rāmastadvimānamanuttamam । aṅke nidhāya vaidehīm lajjamānāṃ yaśasvinīm ॥ 48॥

47-48. He (Sri Ram) praised the chief commanders of the monkeys and bears by showing them all respect and credit that was due to them. He then told them to go home, back to Kishkindha.

Then Vibhishan brought an airplane called Pushpak which was glowing brilliantly like the sun (47).

He (Sri Ram) boarded that plane which was most excellent in every respect (i.e. was the best aerial vehicle available at the time). The Lord was accompanied by the celebrated and virtuous Vaidehi (the daughter of king of Videha; i.e. his wife Sita) who sat shyly by the side of her husband, Lord Sri Ram, in the plane (48).

लक्ष्मणेन सह भ्रात्रा विक्रान्तेन धनुष्मता ।
अब्रवीत्त्व विमानस्थः श्रीरामः सर्ववानरान् ॥ ४९॥
सुग्रीवं हरिराजं च अङ्गदं च विभीषणम् । मित्रकार्यं कृतं सर्वं भवद्भिः सह वानरैः ॥ ५०॥

lakṣmaṇena saha bhrātrā vikrāntena dhanuṣmatā । abravicca vimānasthaḥ śrīrāmaḥ sarvavānarān ॥ 49॥ sugrīvaṃ harirājaṃ ca aṅgadaṃ ca vibhīṣaṇam । mitrakāryaṃ kṛtaṃ sarvaṃ bhavadbhiḥ saha vānaraiḥ ॥ 50॥

49-50. The Lord was joined on the plane by his brother Laxman who was an expert in the use of the bow, a great archer, most valorous, valiant, brave, courageous and strong.

Once seated on the plane, Sri Ram addressed all the monkeys and bears and said (49), 'Oh Sugriv, the king of monkeys, Angad and Vibhishan! All of you, along with all other monkeys, have well lived up to the reputation of a good friend, and all of you have done your duty as a trusted friend (and I am grateful to all of you) (50).

अनुज्ञाता मया सर्वे यथेष्टं गन्तुमर्हथ ।
सुग्रीव प्रतियाह्याशु किष्किन्धां सर्वसैनिकैः ॥ ५१॥
स्वराज्ये वस लङ्कायां मम भक्तो विभीषण ।
न त्वां धर्षयितुं शक्ताः सेन्द्रा अपि दिवौकसः ॥ ५२॥ anujñātā mayā sarve yatheṣṭaṃ gantumarhatha । sugrīva pratiyāhyāśu kiṣkindhāṃ sarvasainikaiḥ ॥ 51॥ svarājye vasa laṅkāyāṃ mama bhakto vibhīṣaṇa । na tvāṃ dharṣayitum śaktāḥ sendrā api divaukaśaḥ ॥ 52॥

51-52. Now by my orders, all of you must go back to the places you wish to go. Sugriv, you should go back to Kishkindha soon with all your soldiers (51).

Vibhishan, be devoted towards me (and continue to be friendly and faithful to me) and stay in your kingdom here at Lanka.

Now (I bless you that) even Indra or any other Gods would never harm you in any way¹ (52).

[Note—¹Why did Lord Ram have to make a special mention of this protection for Vibhishan? The Lord feared the nature of the gods; he was apprehensive that after he was gone from Lanka, these selfish gods would take turns to torment Vibhishan to take revenge for what his brother Ravana had done to these gods.

Lord Ram could perceive distinct fear in the countenance of Vibhishan, because once he was gone the latter would be all alone, open to revolt or a secret plan to take revenge against him from amongst his own countrymen who were loyal to Ravana, as well as the gods who would vent all their ire on him to avenge for the horrors his brother Ravana had subjected them to earlier.

So, in order to prevent any such thing happening, the Lord publicly declared that Vibhishan has his promise of protection, telling the malicious gods as well as the demons to be careful of their actions, telling them effectively:

“Don’t try your dirty tricks on this friend of mine whom I have granted refuge and bond of friendship. Mind all of you; I know your malicious nature more than anybody else. So beware. Listen, if I can win this war while fighting it on foot, and with no support from any well-trained army except the monkey and bear friends of mine, who themselves fought with primitive weapons, think what would be your fate when the mighty and valorous army of the kingdom of Ayodhya comes to intercede in favour of my friend Vibhishan. So please keep your hands off him!”]

अयोध्यां गन्तुमिच्छामि राजधानीं पितुर्मम ।
 एवमुक्तास्तु रामेण वानरास्ते महाबलाः ॥ ५३॥
 ऊचुः प्रान्जलयः सर्वे राक्षसश्च विभीषणः । अयोध्यां गन्तुमिच्छामस्त्वया सह स्यूतम् ॥ ५४॥ ayodhyāṃ gantumicchāmi rājadhānīṃ piturmama । evamuktāstu rāmeṇa vānarāste mahābalāḥ ॥ 53॥ ūcuḥ prāñjalayaḥ sarve rākṣasaśca vibhīṣaṇaḥ । ayodhyāṃ gantumicchāmastvayā saha raghūttama ॥ 54॥

53-54. Now, I want to proceed to the capital of my father at Ayodhya'.

When Sri Ram had said so, all those brave monkey warriors (53), and the demon king Vibhishan, said in unison as each of them brought together his hands and joined the palms: 'Oh the most exalted of the Raghus (Sri Ram)! All of us want to accompany you to Ayodhya (and as this is our prayerful request, so please grant it to us if you really call us your friends) (54).

दृष्ट्वा त्वामभिषिक्तं तु कौसल्यामभिवाद्य च ।
 पश्चाद्दृणीमहे राज्यमनुज्ञां देहि नः प्रभो ॥ ५५॥
 रामस्तथेति सुग्रीव वानरैः सविभीषणः । पुष्पकं सहनूमांश्च शीघ्रमारोह साम्प्रतम् ॥ ५६॥

dr̥ṣṭvā tvāmabhiṣiktaṃ tu kausalyāmabhivādya ca । paścādvṛṇīmahe rājyamanujñāṃ dehi naḥ prabho ॥ 55॥ rāmastatheti sugrīva vānaraiḥ savibhīṣaṇaḥ । puṣpakaṃ sahanūmāṃśca śīghramāroha sāmpratam ॥ 56॥

55-56. Oh Lord! We shall first see you crowned on the throne of Ayodhya as a great King, pay our obeisance and respects to mother Kaushalya, and only thereafter shall accept our own kingdoms. So please permit us to accompany you' (55).

Then Sri Ram said, 'Alright. Sugriv, get aboard this plane quickly with your monkeys. Vibhishan and Hanuman too should come aboard.' (56).

ततस्तु पुष्पकं दिव्यं सुग्रीवः सह सेनया ।
विभीषणश्च सामात्यः सर्वे चारुरुहर्दुतम् ॥ ५७॥
तेष्वारूढेषु सर्वेषु कौबेरं परमासनम् ।
राघवेणाभ्यनुज्ञातमुत्पपात विहायसा ॥ ५८॥
बभौ तेन विमानेन हंसयुक्तेन भास्वता । प्रहृष्टश्च तदा रामश्चतुर्मुख इवापरः ॥ ५९॥ tatastu puṣpakam divyam sugrīvaḥ saha senayā । vibhīṣaṇaśca sāmātyaḥ sarve cārururhurdutam ॥ 57॥ teṣvārūḍheṣu sarveṣu kauberam paramāsanam । rāghavenābhyanujñātamutpapāta vihāyasā ॥ 58॥ babhau tena vimānena haṁsayuktena bhāsvatā । prahrṣṭaśca tadā rāmaścaturmukha ivāparaḥ ॥ 59॥

57-59. On getting his permission, Sugriv along with the chief commanders of his army¹, and Vibhishan with his ministers, hastily boarded the magnificent Pushpak plane (57).

When all of them had boarded that plane belonging to Kuber, it became airborne on the instructions of Raghav (Sri Ram) (58).

Sri Ram was most exhilarated; he felt happy and contented as he flew towards his native city on that elegant and majestic plane. The Lord, at that time, resembled the 4-headed Lord Brahma, the creator, flying away majestically on his Swan² (59).

[Note—¹A very important observation is to be made here. Only the name of Sugriv is mentioned here, but Tulsidas has clearly listed other names as well—viz. Angad, Nala, Neela, Hanuman and Jamvant (the chief of the bears). {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 118-b.}

Why is it so? Well, the answer is this: Sugriv was the king of the monkey race, and all others were his subordinates. So when Sugriv has been named, it was deemed that all who were his senior ministers and commanders too had joined him in boarding the plane.

²The mount of Lord Brahma is a divine Swan. By invoking this imagery, the wise sage Veda Vyas wishes to convey the basic idea about the beauty and grandeur of the Pushpak plane: like a swan, which is considered the most beautiful of birds, this plane too was one of the most magnificent aerial vehicle in existence at that time.]

ततो बभौ भास्करबिम्बतुल्यं कुबेरानं तपसानुलब्धम् ।
रामेण शोभां नितरां प्रपेदे सीतासमेतेन सहानुजेन ॥ ६०॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे
त्रयोदशः सर्गः ॥ १३॥

tato babhau bhāskarabimbatulyaṃ kuberayānaṃ tapasānulabdham । rāmeṇa śobhāṃ nitarāṃ prapede sītāsametena sahānujena ॥ 60॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
trayodaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 13॥

60. At that time, the plane—which was acquired by Kuber after doing severe austerities and penances—imitated/mimicked the sun (i.e. it looked like or resembled a splendorous and dazzling image of the sun itself); it appeared all the more elegant, glamorous, stupendous and magnificent with Lord Sri Ram, Sita and Laxman sitting in it (60).

Thus ends Canto 13 of Adhyatma Ramayan that describes the discourse that Lord Shiva gave for the benefit of goddess Uma, his divine consort.

(ii) Sub-section 21.2.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 14, verse nos. 1-20, 36-100:

॥चतुर्दशः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।
पातयित्वा ततश्चक्षुः सर्वतो रघुनन्दनः ।
अब्रवीन्मैथिलीं सीतां रामः शशिनिभाननाम् ॥ १॥
त्रिकूटशिखराग्रस्थां पश्य लङ्कां महाप्रभाम् ।
एतां रणभुवं पश्य मांसकर्दमपङ्क्तिलाम् ॥ २॥

॥caturdaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।
pātayitvā tataścakṣuḥ sarvato raghunandanaḥ । abravīnmaithilīm sītāṃ rāmaḥ śāsinibhānanām ॥ 1॥ trikūṭaśikharāgrasthāṃ paśya laṅkāṃ mahāprabhām । etāṃ raṇabhuvam paśya māṃsakardamapaṅkilām ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Glancing around from the air, Raghunandan (Sri Ram) said to the princes of Mithila, the moon-faced Sita (1), 'Oh dear! Look at this glorious and famed city of Lanka which is established on the summit of mount Trikoot. And look here at the battle-field which is rendered into a thick pasty slush of flesh and blood (of those killed or wounded in the war) (2).

असुराणां प्लवङ्गानामत्र वैशसनं महत् ।
 अत्र मे निहतः शेते रावणो राक्षसेश्वरः ॥ ३॥
 कुम्भकर्णेन्द्रजिन्मुख्याः सर्वे चात्र निपातिताः । एष सेतुर्मया बद्धः सागरे सलिलाशये ॥ ४॥ asurāṇaṃ plavaṅgānāmatra vaiśasanaṃ mahat । atra me nihataḥ śete rāvaṇo rākṣaseśvaraḥ ॥ 3॥ kumbhakarṇendrajinmukhyāḥ sarve cātra nipātītāḥ । eṣa seturmayā baddhaḥ sāgare salilāśaye ॥ 4॥

3-4. Here, there has been a frighteningly horrifying massacre of demons and monkeys. It was here that the king of demons Ravana fell dead at my hands (3).

And it was here that Kumbhakarn, Indrjeet (Ravana's son Meghanad) and other great demon warriors were killed.

Look down there; this is the bridge that I got constructed over the vast ocean that is full to the brim with water.

[It is not an ordinary calm body of water as it seems from high up here in the sky, but the ocean we faced on the ground roared and heaved violently, it splashed, swirled and whirled so wildly that it would have sent those with meeker hearts cowering for cover. We braved its ferocity and violence first at the time when the bridge was being built across it, and then again at the time when we actually crossed it.] (4)

एतच्च दृश्यते तीर्थं सागरस्य महात्मनः ।
 सेतुबन्धमिति ख्यातं त्रैलोक्येन च पूजितम् ॥ ५॥
 एतत्पवित्त्वं परमं दर्शनात्पातकापहम् ।
 अत्र रामेश्वरो देवो मया शम्भुः प्रतिष्ठितः ॥ ६॥ etacca dṛśyate tīrthaṃ sāgarasya mahātmanah । setubandhamiti khyātaṃ trailokyena ca pūjitam ॥ 5॥ etatpavitraṃ paramaṃ darśanātpātakāpaham । atra rāmeśvaro devo mayā śambhuḥ pratiṣṭhitaḥ ॥ 6॥

5-6. Look, this famous pilgrim sight called 'Setubandh' (literally the spot where the ocean was stopped, bound or tamed; here meaning the place where the construction of the bridge was commenced). It is to be revered and worshipped by all in the three divisions of the world¹ (5).

It is a very holy and divine place, and it has the mystical potential to destroy all the sins and evils of those who come for pilgrimage here. I have established (consecrated) Lord Shiva here in the form of Rameshwar Mahadev² (6).

[Note—¹The three divisions of the world mean the heaven, the earth, and the nether world.

²The word "rāmeśvaro devo" means the "Lord of Ram"; "the Lord whom Ram worships". It also means "The Lord who worships Ram". It refers to Lord Shiva. The consecrated image of Shiva that Lord Ram established there is in the form of a ‘Shiva Lingam’, the universal icon of Shiva.]

अत्र मां शरणं प्राप्तो मन्त्रिभिश्च विभीषणः ।
 एषा सुग्रीवनगरी किष्किन्धा चित्रकानना ॥ ७॥
 तत्र रामाज्ञया ताराप्रमुखा हरियोषितः । आनयामास सुग्रीवः सीतायाः प्रियकाम्यया ॥ ८॥ atra mām śaraṇaṁ prāpto mantribhiśca vibhīṣaṇaḥ । eṣā sugrīvanagarī kiṣkindhā citrakānanā ॥ 7॥ tatra rāmājñayā tārapramukhā hariyoṣitaḥ । ānayāmāsa sugrīvaḥ sitāyāḥ priyakāmyayā ॥ 8॥

7-8. This is the place where Vibhishan had come with his ministers to seek refuge with me.

And look, that marvellous place down there is called Kishkindha; it consists of beautiful gardens and mini forests, and it is the capital of Sugriv (the king of the monkey race)' (7).

On reaching Kishkindha, on the instructions of Sri Ram, Sugriv brought his women-folk, led by Tara (the widow of his brother Baali), to meet Sita; this meeting made Sita feel very happy¹ (8).

[Note—¹This shows that the Pushpak plane had come down to stop for a while at Kishkindha before proceeding further on its journey towards Ayodhya. It is in stark contrast with Tulsidas' version in 'Ram Charit Manas' where the plane had made no stop-over at Kishkindha.

Lord Ram made this a way of courtesy call so that his wife Sita could meet the ladies of his friend Sugriv's household. Since the Lord has openly declared his friendship with Sugriv, it is quite normal that he would want his wife to meet and get acquainted with her counterparts in the family of her husband's friend.]

ताभिः सहोत्थितं शीघ्रं विमानं प्रेक्ष्य राघवः ।
 प्राह चाद्रिमृष्यमूकं पश्य वात्यत्र मे हतः ॥ ९॥
 एषा पञ्चवटी नाम राक्षसा यत्र मे हताः ।
 अगस्त्यस्य सुतीक्ष्णस्य पश्याश्रमपदे शुभे ॥ १०॥

tābhiḥ sahotthitaṁ śīghraṁ vimānaṁ prekṣya rāghavaḥ । prāha cādrimṛṣyamūkaṁ paśya vālyatra me hataḥ ॥ 9॥ eṣā pañcavaṭī nāma rākṣasā yatra me hatāḥ । agastyasya sutīkṣṇasya paśyāśramapade śubhe ॥ 10॥

9-10. After this brief stop-over, the plane became air-borne once again. Then Lord Ram resumed his narrative, pointing out to Sita the important places that he had visited and even stayed for a while during his journey to Lanka. The Lord told Sita: 'This is the Rishymook mountain where I had slayed Baali'¹ (9).

Here, this is Panchvati where I had killed the demons (Khar, Dushan and others)². There, down there, are the most pure, auspicious and venerable hermitages of sages Agastya and Sutikshan³ (10).

[Note—¹Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 1-70.

²Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 32-35.

¹Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, (i) Canto 2, verse nos. 25-41 (sage Sutikshan); and (ii) Canto 3, verse nos. 2-16.]

एते ते तापसाः सर्वे दृश्यन्ते वरवर्णिनि ।
असौ शैलवरो देवि चित्रकूटः प्रकाशते ॥ ११॥
अत्र मां कैकयीपुत्रः प्रसादयितुमागतः । भरद्वाजाश्रमं पश्य दृश्यते यमुनातटे ॥ १२॥ ete te tāpasāḥ sarve dr̥śyante varavarṇini । asau śailavaro devi citrakūṭaḥ prakāśate ॥ 11॥ atra māṃ kaikayīputraḥ prasādayitumāgataḥ । bharadvājāśramaṃ paśya dr̥śyate yamunātaṭe ॥ 12॥

11-12. Oh charming lady with a beautiful form (i.e. Sita)! Look, those are the different hermits and ascetics that are visible everywhere, and oh goddess, this is Chitrakoot which is the best among the hills¹ (11).

It is here that Kaikeyi's son (Bharat) had come to plead with me (to go back to Ayodhya)².

Look down there; it is the hermitage of sage Bharadwaj³ visible on the banks of river Yamuna (12).

[Note—¹Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Ayodhya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 89-92 (Lord Ram started living in a thatched hut in Chitrakoot).

²Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Ayodhya Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 60-66 (Bharat's arrival at Chitrakoot).

³Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Ayodhya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 28-33 (arrival of Lord Ram in sage Bharadwaj's hermitage).]

एषा भगीरथी गङ्गा दृश्यते लोकपावनी ।
एषा सा दृश्यते सीते सरयूपमालिनी ॥ १३॥
एषा सा दृश्यतेऽयोध्या प्रणामं कुरु भामिनि ।
एवं क्रमेण सम्प्राप्तो भरद्वाजाश्रमं हरिः ॥ १४॥ eṣā bhāgīrathī gaṅgā dr̥śyate lokapāvanī । eṣā sā dr̥śyate sīte sarayūyūpamālīnī ॥ 13॥

eṣā sā dr̥śyate'yodhyā praṇāmaṃ kuru bhāmini । evaṃ krameṇa samprāpto bharadvājāśramaṃ hariḥ ॥ 14॥

13-14. The river Ganges—which is the purifier of the three divisions of the world¹—is visible there. And, oh Sita, there we can see Saryu which has pillars placed in it during the various fire sacrifices (done by the great kings of Raghu's race) (13).

Oh graceful lady! Look, there is Ayodhya visible from here. Bow before it to show respect to the revered city.'

In this way, having reached the periphery of the city, Sri Ram (Hari) then turned the plane back and reached the hermitage of sage Bharadwaj² (14).

[Note—¹The three divisions of the world are: heaven, earth and the nether world.

²Lord Ram wished to make sure that he reached Ayodhya punctually, just before the 14 years marked for his living in the forest expired. Now as it turned out, he still had some time in his hands, and so he decided to use the extra time judiciously by paying a courtesy visit to sage Bharadwaj who lived in Prayag, a pilgrim city not very far away from Ayodhya. Travelling by air, it was possible to go to Prayag and return to Ayodhya within a short span of time. Hence, the Lord decided to pay his respects to sage Bharadwaj before actually landing in Ayodhya.]

पूर्णे चतुर्दशे वर्षे पञ्चम्यां रघुनन्दनः ।
 भरद्वाजं मुनिं दृष्ट्वा ववन्दे सानुजः प्रभुः ॥ १५॥
 पप्रच्छ मुनिमासीनं विनयेन रघूत्तमः । शृणोषि कच्चिद्भरतः कुशल्यास्ते सहानुजः ॥ १६॥

pūrṇe caturdaśe varṣe pañcamyāṃ raghunandanah । bharadvājaṃ muniṃ dr̥ṣṭvā vavande sānujaḥ prabhuḥ ॥ 15॥ papraccha munimāsīnaṃ vinayena raghūttamaḥ । śr̥ṇoṣi kaccidbharataḥ kuśalyāste sahānujaḥ ॥ 16॥

15-16. At the end of 14 years, on the 5th day of the new lunar fortnight (pūrṇe caturdaśe varṣe pañcamyāṃ)¹, Raghunandan (Sri Ram) met sage Bharadwaj and bowed before him with his younger brother (Laxman) (15).

Then the most exalted of the Raghus (Sri Ram) said to the sage, with great respect and most politely, 'Oh sage! Do you have any news; is Bharat well with his younger brother (Shatrughan)²? (16).

[Note—¹From this verse we can infer that the day Lord Ram went to the forest—which was exactly 14 years ago—was also the 5th day of the new lunar fortnight.

²This explains why the Lord decided to turn the plane and go back to meet sage Bharadwaj—he wished to ascertain that everything was okay in Ayodhya before actually going there. Should there be any bad news, such as some hint of a conspiracy or political coup being planned against him by Bharat or someone else, the Lord would quietly go to live somewhere else. Sage Bharadwaj was sure to tell him the truth about the ground realities in Ayodhya and Bharat's attitude. The Lord wished to avoid an unsavoury situation that would be embarrassing for him in front of his foreign guests.]

सुभिक्षा वर्ततेऽयोध्या जीवन्ति च हि मातरः ।
 श्रुत्वा रामस्य वचनं भरद्वाजः प्रहृष्टधीः ॥ १७॥
 प्राह सर्वे कुशलिनो भरतस्तु महामनाः । फलमूलकृताहारो जटावल्कलधारकः ॥ १८॥

subhikṣā vartate'yodhyā jīvanti ca hi mātaraḥ । śrutvā rāmasya vacanam̐ bharadvājaḥ prahr̥ṣṭadhīḥ ॥ 17॥ prāha sarve kuśalino bharatastu mahāmanāḥ । phalamūlakṛtāhāro jaṭāvalkaladhārakaḥ ॥ 18॥

17-18. Is everything fine and in order in Ayodhya? Are our mothers all alive now?' Hearing these words of Lord Sri Ram seeking information about the welfare of his beloved city and well-being of his kith and kin, sage Bharadwaj replied cheerfully (17), 'Everything is fine at your place. Bharat, who is a thorough gentleman and noble in heart, has sustained himself and survived these long years by eating fruits and edible roots (like you had done in the forest), wears a crown of matted hairs on his head, and wraps his body by clothes made from the bark of the birch tree¹ (18).

[Note—¹Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Ayodhya Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 70-73.]

पादुके सकलं न्यस्य राज्यं त्वां सुप्रीक्षते ।
 यद्यत्कृतं त्वया कर्म दण्डके रघुनन्दन ॥ १९॥
 राक्षसानां विनाशं च सीताहरणपूर्वकम् । सर्वं ज्ञातं मया राम तपसा ते प्रसादतः ॥ २०॥

pāduke sakalam̐ nyasya rājyam̐ tvām̐ supratīkṣate । yadyatkṛtam̐ tvayā karma daṇḍake raghunandana ॥ 19॥ rākṣasānām̐ vināśam̐ ca sītāharaṇapūrvakam̐ । sarvam̐ jñātam̐ mayā rāma tapasā te prasādataḥ ॥ 20॥

19-20. He has put the burden of the day to day administration of the kingdom on your sandals (which he has respectfully consecrated as the virtual ruler of Ayodhya during the period of your physical absence), and himself he is waiting eagerly and anxiously for your auspicious and most welcome arrival.

Oh Raghunandan (Sri Ram)! All the deeds that you had done in the Dandakaranya forest (such as the slaying of demons, meeting with sages and providing them with fearlessness and liberation from this mundane world), as well as the way you have killed the great demons after Sita was abducted (this refers to the epic war at Lanka)—I have come to know all about it with the powers that I have acquired by doing austerities, penances and spiritual practices, but these powers that I possess are due to your grace (19-20).

प्रार्थयामि जगन्नाथ पवित्रं कुरु मे गृहम् ।
 स्थित्वाद्य भुक्त्वा सबलः श्वो गमिष्यसि पत्तनम् ॥ ३६॥
 तथेति राघवोऽतिष्ठतस्मिन्नाश्रम उत्तमे । ससैन्यः पूजितस्तेन सीतया लक्ष्मणेन च ॥ ३७॥ prārthayāmi jagannātha pavitraṁ kuru me gr̥ham । sthityādya bhuktvā sabalaḥ śvo gamiṣyasi pattanam ॥ 36॥ tatheti rāghavo'tiṣṭhattasminnāśrama uttame । sasainyaḥ pūjitastena sītayā lakṣmaṇena ca ॥ 37॥

36-37. Oh the Lord of the world (jagannātha)! It is my prayer and an earnest request that you make a stopover here (in my hermitage) with your army (i.e. the large number of your warrior friends you have come with you from Lanka), have your meals here, and in this manner purify my hermitage (by giving me the chance to serve you and your friends). Then (after a night's halt here, you can proceed ahead and go to your capital tomorrow (morning) (36).

Then Raghav (Sri Ram) replied 'alright sage, let it be as you wish', and accepted his invitation. Lord Sri Ram made a night's halt in sage Bharadwaj's hermitage, which was an excellent one, along with his army (warrior friends from Lanka and Kishkindha), Sita and Laxman after he was formally welcomed, honoured and worshipped by the sage¹ (37).

[Note—¹Sage Bharadwaj had some excellent mystical powers in his possession, whereby he could lavishly entertain and provide the best of food, refreshments and lodging even for a large army. This ability of his is clearly on display when he had entertained Bharat while he was going to Chitrakoot in an effort to make reconciliation with Lord Ram and prevail upon him to return to Ayodhya. This marvelous magical feat has been described in (a) Adhyatma Ramayan, Ayodhya Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 54-58; and (b) Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 212—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 215.]

ततो रामश्चिन्तयित्वा मुहूर्तं प्राह मारुतिम् ।
 इतो गच्छ हनूमंस्त्वमयोध्यां प्रति सत्वरः ॥ ३८॥
 जानीहि कुशली कच्चिज्जनो नृपतिमन्दिरे । शृङ्गवेरपुरं गत्वा ब्रूहि मित्रं गुहं मम ॥ ३९॥ tato rāmaścintayitvā muhūrtaṁ prāha mārutim । ito gaccha hanūmaṁstvamayodhyāṁ prati satvaraḥ ॥ 38॥ jānihi kuśalī kaccijjano nr̥patimandire । śṛṅgaverapuraṁ gatvā brūhi mitraṁ guhaṁ mama ॥ 39॥

38-39. Sri Ram thought for a Muhurt (i.e. he pondered over the matter of 'what to do next' for a short while; precisely 48 minutes, but in practice it means for roughly three-quarters of an hour) and then said to Maruti (son of the wind god), 'Oh Hanuman! Listen; from here you first go straight to Ayodhya (38). Find out if everything is in order in the royal household. Then proceed to Srīngverpur and talk with my friend Guha (the head of the boatman community) (39).

जानकीलक्ष्मणोपेतमागतं मां निवेदय ।
नन्दिग्रामं ततो गत्वा भ्रातरं भरतं मम ॥ ४०॥
दृष्ट्वा ब्रूहि सभार्यस्य सभ्रातुः कुशलं मम । सीतापहरणादीनि रावणस्य वधादिकम् ॥ ४१॥ jānakīlakṣmaṇopetamāgataṁ mām nivedaya । nandigrāmaṁ tato gatvā bhrātaraṁ bharataṁ mama ॥ 40॥ drṣṭvā brūhi sabhāryasya sabhrātuḥ kuśalaṁ mama । sītāpaharaṇādīni rāvaṇasya vadhādikam ॥ 41॥

40-41. Inform him (Guha) about my arrival along with Janki (Sita) and Laxman.

After that, go to Nandigram and meet my brother Bharat (40).

Tell him about my well-being along with that of my wife and brother. Brief him about all the events from the abduction of Sita right up to the slaying of Ravana and her liberation. [Mention also that after victory in the war of Lanka, I had boarded a plane along with Sita and Laxman that is bringing us home. Tell him also that my friends who had helped me in winning this ferocious war, the friendly demons of Lanka headed by Vibhishan, and the monkey and bears of Kishkindha lead by Sugriv, are also accompanying me on the Pushpak plane which is bringing me back to Ayodhya. Tell him that currently I am spending the night at sage Bharadwaj's hermitage, shall meet Guha tomorrow, and then head straight to Ayodhya.]¹ (41).

[Note—¹After everyone retired for the day and went to rest, Lord Ram sat alone to plan for what to do next. This is why it is said that “the Lord pondered over the matter for a Muhurt” in verse nos. 38-39 herein above.

He decided to inform Bharat in advance about his arrival. The Lord wished to ascertain whether his arrival in Ayodhya was welcome or not; he wished to know how Bharat took this news. Though Lord Ram was confident of Bharat's integrity and good nature, yet the lure of kingdom of a prosperous kingdom may have corrupted Bharat's mind during the long period of Lord's absence when he was the de-facto ruler of the kingdom. So, Lord Ram wanted to be certain.

He knew that Hanuman was exceptionally intelligent and skilled in such matters as were at hand; he would immediately pick up the subtlest signs of any adverse reaction from Bharat to the news of the Lord's arrival, and then convey it faithfully and honestly to the Lord, without distorting facts, thereby enabling him to decide the next course of action. If it turned out that he was not welcomed, then the Lord decided to quietly go away to some other place and live there for the rest of his life, sparing Bharat the embarrassment of having to rely on some kind of dirty scheme to grab the crown of Ayodhya if he intends to actually do it. In case it is not so—and the Lord sincerely did hope that his apprehensions are proved wrong, thanks God—then an advance information would give Bharat ample time to make preparations to welcome the Lord and his party in a proper way.

Lord Ram wanted to inform Bharat of his arrival by plane also because it was a most unexpected and a dramatic way to return home from the forest for the Lord. He had gone on foot, and no one could expect a sudden arrival by the path of the sky, aboard a magnificent plane. It would be such a sight that no one would believe it to be true, thinking it to be some kind of delusion created by some magician to mislead the citizens of Ayodhya. Advance information would therefore alert Bharat, who would not then be caught unawares and think that some enemy has come to attack him and the kingdom from the air. There were good chances of this misjudgment actually happening, because the Lord was accompanied by a large number of strangers from Lanka and Kishkindha, with whom none in Ayodhya was acquainted. This wrong perception may precipitate into a battle, if by some mischance Bharat should think it was an alien invasion, and it would create a hilarious situation which might spin quickly out of control.]

ब्रूहि क्रमेण मे भ्रातुः सर्वं तत् विचेष्टितम् ।
 हत्वा शत्रुगणान् सर्वान् सभार्यः सहलक्ष्मणः ॥ ४२॥
 उपयाति समृद्धार्थः सह ऋक्षहरीश्वरैः ।
 इत्युक्त्वा तत् वृत्तान्तं भरतस्य विचेष्टितम् ॥ ४३॥
 सर्वं ज्ञात्वा पुनः शीघ्रमागच्छ मम सन्निधिम् ।
 तथेति हनुमांस्तत् मानुषं वपुरास्थितः ॥ ४४॥
 नन्दिग्रामं ययौ तूर्णं वायुवेगेन मारुतिः । गरुत्मानिव वेगेन जिघृक्षन् भुजगोत्तमम् ॥ ४५॥

brūhi krameṇa me bhrātuḥ sarvaṃ tatra viceṣṭitam । hatvā śatrugaṇān sarvān sabhāryaḥ sahalakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 42॥ upayāti samṛddhārthaḥ saha ṛkṣaharīśvaraiḥ । ityuktvā tatra vṛttāntaṃ bharatasya viceṣṭitam ॥ 43॥ sarvaṃ jñātvā punaḥ śīghramāgaccha mama sannidhim । tatheti hanumāṃstatra mānuṣaṃ vapurāsthitaḥ ॥ 44॥ nandigrāmaṃ yayau tūrṇaṃ vāyuvegena mārutiḥ । garutmāniva vegena jighr̥kṣan bhujagottamam ॥ 45॥

42-45. Tell my brother (Bharat) everything in a chronological order, and tell him that having successfully killed (or having vanquished) all his enemies, Sri Ram is coming here with his wife (Sita), Laxman, bears and monkeys. Tell him all this and find out his response. [To wit, observe how these bits of information are received by him, which will help you to understand his inner feelings and attitude. Carefully observe his face and body language for some subtle hint, both negative and positive ones. In brief, you have to judge whether or not we should go to Ayodhya.]

After that, come back to me here as soon as you can'.

Then Hanuman said 'alright Lord', and assumed a human form (42-44).

He proceeded to Nandigram with the speed of wind (i.e. he went there swiftly). At that time, Maruti (Hanuman) resembled Garuda (the Eagle—the mount of Vishnu) who was swooping down from the sky to catch hold of a snake. [To wit, Hanuman flew with great speed and stealth to reach Nandigram where Bharat dwelt. Once there, he descended very quickly and approached the hermitage of Bharat.] (45).

[Note—Hanuman had assumed a human form, most probably of a Brahmin, when he went to meet Bharat. Remember: At that time Lord Ram was in Prayag, which was situated at a distance from Ayodhya, and it was night time. Hanuman had to go to Srīngverpur to meet Guha first, and then proceed to Nandigram to meet Bharat. He had then to return to Prayag to report to Lord Ram before day break. It is not possible for a human being to walk this distance in such a short span of time; but Hanuman accomplished this miraculous feat.

How did he do it? Because he knew how to fly, being the ‘son of the wind god’. So, Hanuman used this skill to fly like the wind, that he had inherited from his father, the wind god, to reach his two destinations, first Srīngverpur to meet Guha, and then to Ayodhya to meet Bharat, by the aerial route like a bird would fly. Once he reached there, he descended on the ground and assumed a human form to meet Guha and Bharat respectively.]

शृङ्गवेरपुरं प्राप्य गुहमासाद्य मारुतिः ।
 उवाचा मधुरं वाक्यं प्रहृष्टेनान्तरात्मना ॥ ४६॥
 रामो दाशरथिः श्रीमान् सखा ते सह सीतया ।
 सलक्ष्मणस्त्वां धर्मात्मा क्षेमी कुशलमब्रवीत् ॥ ४७॥
 अनुज्ञातोऽद्य मुनिना भरद्वाजेन राघवः ।
 आगमिष्यति तं देवं द्रक्ष्यसि त्वं रघूत्तमम् ॥ ४८॥ śṛṅgaverapuram prāpya guhamāsādyā mārutiḥ । uvācā madhuraṁ vākyaṁ prahr̥ṣṭenāntarātmanā ॥ 46॥ rāmo dāśarathiḥ śrīmān sakhā te saha sītayā । salakṣmaṇastvām dharmātmā kṣemī kuśalamabravīt ॥ 47॥ anujñāto'dya muninā bharadvājaena rāghavaḥ । āgamiṣyati taṁ devaṁ drakṣyasi tvaṁ raghūttamam ॥ 48॥

46-48. When he reached Srīngverpur, Maruti (Hanuman) went to Guha and said most cheerfully, in a friendly manner and a sweet voice (46), 'Your friend Sri Ram—who is most righteous and noble, one who protects and takes care of all, and who is a son of king Dasrath—has conveyed to you about his own well-being, as well as that of his wife Sita and brother Laxman (47).

Today Raghav (Sri Ram) will take permission from sage Bharadwaj and come here to meet you. Then you shall have the privilege to have a Darshan (august sight; divine viewing) of the most exalted of the Raghus.' (48).

एवमुक्त्वा महातेजाः सम्प्रहृष्टतनूरुहम् ।
 उत्पपात महावेगो वायुवेगेन मारुतिः ॥ ४९॥
 सोऽपश्यद्रामतीर्थं च सरयूं च महानदीम् । तामतिक्रम्य हनुमान्नन्दिग्रामं ययौ मुदा ॥ ५०॥ evamuktvā mahātejāḥ samprahr̥ṣṭatanūruham । utpapāta mahāvego vāyuvegena mārutiḥ ॥ 49॥

so'paśyadrāmatīrthaṃ ca sarayūṃ ca mahānadīm । tāmatikramya hanumānnandigrāmaṃ yayau mudā ॥ 50॥

49-50. Having said this to Guha, who was very thrilled to hear this pleasant and exhilarating news, the most glorious Maruti (Hanuman) proceeded ahead, flying in the sky with the speed of wind¹ (49).

After some time, he sighted 'Ram Tirtha' (literally, a pilgrim site associated with Sri Ram; here it means the holy city of Ayodhya), and the great river Saryu (that flanked it on the northern side). He crossed them and proceeded straight to Nandigram with a most cheerful mind (50).

[Note—¹Hanuman did not waste any time with Guha; after informing him of Lord Ram's arrival, he immediately departed from there and headed straight to Ayodhya. From the air he could see the river Saryu; he crossed it and headed to a village called Nandigram on the outskirts of the city of Ayodhya where Bharat had his hermitage.]

क्रोशमात्रे त्वयोध्यायाश्चीरकृष्णाजिनाम्बरम् ।
ददर्श भरतं दीनं कृशमाश्रमवासिनम् ॥ ५१॥
मलपङ्कविदिग्धाङ्गं जटिलं वल्कलाम्बरम् ।
फलमूलकृताहारं रामचिन्तापरायणम् ॥ ५२॥
पादुके ते पुरस्कृत्य शासयन्तं वसुन्धराम् ।
मन्त्रिभिः पौरमुख्यैश्च काषायाम्बरधारिभिः ॥ ५३॥
वृत्तदेहं मूर्तिमन्तं साक्षाद्धर्ममिव स्थितम् ।
उवाच प्राञ्जलिर्वाक्यं हनूमान्मारुतात्मजः ॥ ५४॥ krośamātre tvayodhyāyāścīrakṛṣṇājīnāmbaram । dadarśa bharataṃ dīnaṃ kṛśamāśramavāsinam ॥ 51॥ malapaṅkavidigdhāṅgaṃ jaṭilaṃ valkalāmbaram । phalamūlakṛtāhāraṃ rāmacintāparāyaṇam ॥ 52॥ pāduke te puraskṛtya śāsayantaṃ vasundharām । mantribhiḥ pauramukhyaiśca kāṣāyāmbaradhāribhiḥ ॥ 53॥ vṛtadehaṃ mūrtimantaṃ sākṣāddharmamiva sthitam । uvāca prāñjalirvākyaṃ hanūmānmārutātmajaḥ ॥ 54॥

51-54. At a distance of approximately 1 Kosa from Ayodhya (which means roughly at a distance of 2 miles from the limits of the city), he saw Bharat attired in clothes made from bark of the birch tree, and wearing a dark deer skin. He was very distressed, miserable, lean and emaciated while living a life of a recluse in that hermitage (at Nandigram) (51).

He had smeared ash on his body, had matted hairs on his head, wore clothes made of bark of trees, ate (and survived on) fruits and edible roots, and was constantly thinking of Sri Ram (52).

He kept the two sandals (of Sri Ram, that he had brought with him from Chitrakoot) in the front (as a token of the Lord's physical presence), and worshipped it most reverentially and with great honour. In this way, he ruled over the land on behalf of Lord Ram.

[To wit, Bharat presided over the functioning and day to day administration of the kingdom on behalf of Lord Sri Ram, but only as a caretaker and not as the de-facto king. Placing Sri Ram's footwear on the throne was a symbolic gesture to tell everyone that the Lord was the real King of Ayodhya, and Bharat was merely a caretaker who governs the kingdom on behalf of the King who has gone out on some mission, but will soon return.]

He was surrounded by ministers wearing orange clothes, and also by other chief citizens of the city (53).

Bharat appeared to be a personified form of Dharma (principles of righteousness, probity, propriety, ethics and morality; of noble and virtuous conduct). Seeing him in this state, the son of the wind god, Hanuman, stood before Bharat with the palms of his hands touching each other as a sign of offering his obeisance to Bharat. Hanuman spoke reverentially as follows (54)—

[Note—The above description of Bharat shows that he had led a very simple, austere and humble life like that of a hermit and a recluse living in the forest. It was to the eternal credit of Bharat that he lived a life of penance and austerity inspite of being the ruler of a kingdom renowned for its prosperity and wealth. Had Bharat wanted, he could have lived a life of comfort and pleasure without committing anything wrong in doing so, but no, he was a different sort of man, and the ‘life of austerity and penance that he led inspite of being eligible for all kingly comforts and pleasures’ is what set him apart from others, making him so famous, so honourable, so glorious, so praiseworthy and so immortal in the annals of history. Bharat became a legend, a hero who exemplified remarkable good virtues and most excellent characters that are so much lauded and applauded in folklore.]

यं त्वं चिन्तयसे रामं तापसं दण्डके स्थितम् ।
 अनुशोचसि काकुत्स्थः स त्वां कुशलमब्रवीत् ॥ ५५॥
 प्रियमाख्यामि ते देव शोकं त्यज सुदारुणम् ।
 अस्मिन्मुहूर्ते भ्रात्रा त्वं रामेण सह सङ्गतः ॥ ५६॥
 समरे रावणं हत्वा रामः सीतामवाप्य च । उपयाति समृद्धार्थः ससीतः सहलक्ष्मणः ॥ ५७॥

yaṃ tvam cintayase rāmaṃ tāpasam daṇḍake sthitam । anuśocasi kākutsthaḥ sa tvāṃ kuśalamabravīt ॥ 55॥ priyamākhyāmi te deva śokaṃ tyaja sudāruṇam । asminmuhūrte bhrātrā tvam rāmeṇa saha saṅgataḥ ॥ 56॥ samare rāvaṇaṃ hatvā rāmaḥ sītā mavāpya ca । upayāti samṛddhārthaḥ sasītaḥ sahalakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 57॥

55-57. (Hanuman said to Bharat—) 'Sri Ram, whose image as a hermit residing in the Dandakaranya forest, is being constantly remembered by you, for whom you have suffered so much hardship, mental agonies, regret, contrition and remorse, and who is a son in the illustrious family of Kukustha, has sent the word of his welfare and well-being to you (55).

Oh Lord, leave this greatly contrite, sorrowful and remorseful mood of yours. I shall tell you very pleasing news. You shall meet your beloved brother Sri Ram during this Muhurt itself (i.e. within a short span of time; within the next few hours, before the number of the day changes in the calendar) (56).

Listen carefully. Lord Sri Ram has killed Ravana in the war of Lanka; he has retrieved Sita from the clutches of Ravana, and being successful in his endeavours (of fulfilling the words of his father to stay in exile in the forest for 14 years), the Lord is coming back home with Sita and Laxman.' (57).

एवमुक्तो महातेजा भरतो हर्षमूर्च्छितः ।
पपात भुवि चास्वस्थः कैकयीप्रियनन्दनः ॥ ५८॥
आलिङ्ग्य भरतः शीघ्रं मारुतिं प्रियवादिनम् । आनन्दजैरश्रुजलैः सिषेच भरतः कपिम् ॥ ५९॥ evamukto mahātejā bharato harṣamūrcchitaḥ । papāta bhuvi cāsvasthaḥ kaikayīpriyanandanah ॥ 58॥ āliṅgya bharataḥ śīghraṁ mārutiṁ priyavādinam । ānandajairāśrujalaiḥ siṣeca bharataḥ kapim ॥ 59॥

58-59. When he (Hanuman) had said so, the most glorious and radiant Bharat, who was the dear son of Kaikeyi, became so ecstatic and overcome with joy that he became unconscious with excess of happiness, and fell to the ground (58).

When Bharat had recovered himself, he stood up and embraced Maruti (Hanuman) who had said these most pleasing and endearing words to him, and drenched the latter with tears of delight and extreme joy (59).

देवो वा मानुषो वा त्वमनुक्रीशादिहागतः ।
प्रियाख्यानस्य ते सौम्य ददामि ब्रुवतः प्रियम् ॥ ६०॥
गवां शतसहस्रं च ग्रामाणां च शतं वरम् । सर्वाभरणसम्पन्ना मुग्धाः कन्यास्तु षोडश ॥ ६१॥ devo vā mānuṣo vā tvamanukrośādihāgataḥ । priyākhyānasya te saumya dadāmi bruvataḥ priyam ॥ 60॥ gavāṁ śatasahasraṁ ca grāmāṇāṁ ca śataṁ varam । sarvābharaṇasampannā mugdhāḥ kanyāstu ṣoḍaśa ॥ 61॥

60-61. (Bharat said—) 'Are you some god or some extraordinary man who has shown his grace upon me by coming here with this excellent news that I had so long been eager to hear? Oh the polite, courteous, sober and pleasant soul (saumya)! In return for the most welcome, most endearing and the most pleasing news which you have conveyed to me (60), I am giving you (i.e. gifting you as a reward) one lakh cows (gavāṁ śatasahasraṁ), one-hundred good villages (grāmāṇāṁ ca śataṁ varam), and sixteen beautiful maidens fully decorated with all possible ornaments (sarvābharaṇasampannā mugdhāḥ kanyāstu ṣoḍaśa).' (61).

एवमुक्त्वा पुनः प्राह भरतो मारुतात्मजम् ।
 बहूनीमानि वर्षाणि गतस्य सुमहद्वनम् ॥ ६२॥
 शृणोम्यहं प्रीतिकरं मम नाथस्य कीर्तनम् ।
 कल्याणी बत गाथेयं लौकिकी प्रतिभाति मे ॥ ६३॥
 एति जीवन्तमानन्दो नरं वर्षशतादपि । राघवस्य हरीणां च कथमासीत्समागमः ॥ ६४॥ evamuktvā punaḥ prāha bharato mārutātmajam । bahūnīmāni varṣāṇi gatasya sumahadvanam ॥ 62॥ śṛṇomyaḥam prītikaram mama nāthasya kīrtanam । kalyāṇī bata gātheyaṁ laukikī pratibhāti me ॥ 63॥ eti jīvantamānando naraṁ varṣaśatādapi । rāghavasya harīṇāṁ ca kathamāsītsamāgamah ॥ 64॥

62-64. Saying this, Bharat paused for a moment and once again said to the son of the wind-god (Hanuman), 'After so many long years since he (Lord Sri Ram) had gone to the formidable and wild forest (62), I have at last heard the good news of my dearest Lord whom I have been constantly remembering for all this long. Today it appears that the popular adage providing hope and light to those in despair, to those who are hapless and helpless (63), that 'if one stays alive, then there are chances that one might get happiness some day, even if it may be in a hundred years' is true. Tell me, how did Raghav (Sri Ram) come in contact with you and befriended the monkeys? (64).

तत्त्वमाख्याहि भद्रं ते विश्वसेयं वचस्तव ।
 एवमुक्तोऽथ हनुमान् भरतेन महात्मना ॥ ६५॥
 आचक्षेऽथ रामस्य चरितं कृत्स्नशः क्रमात् । श्रुत्वा तु परमानन्दं भरतो मारुतात्मजात् ॥ ६६॥

tattvamākhyāhi bhadraṁ te viśvaseyaṁ vacastava । evamukto'tha hanumān bharatena mahātmanā ॥ 65॥ ācacakṣe'tha rāmasya caritaṁ kṛtsnaśaḥ kramāt । śrutvā tu paramānandaṁ bharato mārutātmajāt ॥ 66॥

65-66. Gentleman (bhadraṁ)! Tell me the truth so that I can believe your words.'

When the noble and great Bharat said so, Hanuman narrated to him the entire story of Lord Sri Ram in a chronological order. Hearing this narration from the son of the wind-god (Hanuman), Bharat felt extremely exhilarant and glad¹ (65-66).

[Note—¹When Hanuman narrated the details of the life and time of Lord Ram in the forest, especially after Bharat had met him in Chitrakoot, answered Bharat's query about how the Lord met Hanuman and befriended the monkeys. The rest of the Lord's account, from Sita's abduction by Ravana till her deliverance after victory of Lord Ram over the demons, filled Bharat with excess of joy and astonishment. He listened to the story very attentively, and was overjoyed to hear that the Lord was hale and hearty after the tribulations and troubles he had to face in the forest.]

आज्ञापयच्छत्रुहणं मुदा युक्तं मुदान्वितः ।
 दैवतानि च यावन्ति नगरे रघुनन्दन ॥ ६७॥
 नानोपहारबलिभिः पूजयन्तु महाधियः ।
 सूता वैतालिकाश्चैव वन्दिनः स्तुतिपाठकाः ॥ ६८॥
 वारमुख्याश्च शतशो निर्यान्त्वद्यैव सङ्घशः ।
 राजदारस्तथामात्याः सेना हस्त्यश्वपत्तयः ॥ ६९॥
 ब्राह्मणाश्च तथा पौरा राजानो ये समागताः । निर्यान्तु राघवस्याद्य द्रष्टुं शशिनिभाननम् ॥ ७०॥ ājñāpayacchatruhaṇaṁ mudā yuktaṁ mudānvitaḥ । daivatāni ca yāvanti nagare raghunandana ॥ 67॥ nānopahārabalibhiḥ pūjayantu mahādhiyaḥ । sūtā vaiṭālikāścaiva vandinaḥ stutipāṭhakāḥ ॥ 68॥ vāramukhyāśca śataśo niryāntvadyaiva saṅghaśaḥ । rājadārāstathāmātyāḥ senā hastyāśvapattayaḥ ॥ 69॥ brāhmaṇāśca tathā paura rājāno ye samāgatāḥ । niryāntu rāghavasyādya draṣṭuṁ śaśinibhānanam ॥ 70॥

67-70. He (Bharat) cheerfully ordered the delighted Shatrughan (his younger brother), 'Oh Raghunandan (a son in the family of king Raghu)! Let the wise Pandits (expert Brahmins) worship all the Gods and patron Deities of the city with different types and varieties of offerings and make sacrifices to them. Suts (professional singers), Vaitaliks (those minstrels who wake up the king early in the morning by singing devotional hymns), Bandijans (royal bards who chant hymns) (67-68), and chief Varangnayyas (professional royal courtesans) should come out of the city in groups of hundreds (i.e. in large numbers) and assemble at the gate of the city to welcome Sri Ram. Besides them, royal household women-folk, ministers, the three wings of the army, consisting of elephants, horses and foot soldiers (69), Brahmins, citizens, and all other kings, knights and subordinate rulers and vassals who are present here at the moment, should also come out of the city to have a glimpse of the moon-like (i.e. attractive, charming, soothing, most sought after, pleasing, pleasantly welcome and auspicious looking) face of Raghav (Sri Ram).' (70).

[Note—Shatrughan had been looking after the day-to-day administrative affairs of the kingdom on behalf of Bharat. While Bharat lived in Nandigram, Shatrughan held court in the city itself. So therefore, Bharat called his younger brother and instructed him to make arrangements to accord a warm welcome to Lord Ram, who was about to arrive back home, at the gates of the city.]

भरतस्य वचः श्रुत्वा शत्रुघ्नपरिचोदिताः । अलञ्चकुश्व नगरिं मुक्तारत्नमयोज्ज्वलैः ॥ ७१॥
 तोरणैश्च पताकाभिर्विचित्राभिरनेकधा । अलङ्कुर्वन्ति वेश्मानि नानाबलिविचक्षणाः ॥ ७२॥ bharatasya vacaḥ śrutvā śatrughnaparicoditāḥ । alañcakruśca nagarīm muktāratnamayojjvalaiḥ ॥ 71॥ toraṇaiśca patākābhirvicitrābhiranekadhā । alaṅkurvanti veśmāni nānābalivicakṣaṇāḥ ॥ 72॥

71-72. Hearing the words of Bharat, and on instructions of Shatrughan, all the denizens of the city who were experts in beautification and organising decorations, festivities and celebrations of various kinds, got down to their task. They decked up the city elegantly with festoons and buntings studded with bright pearls, gems and jewels, as well as colourful of flags and banners of all kinds. These decorations made the city bear a festive look, and most magnificent to behold (71-72).

निर्यान्ति वृन्दशः सर्वे रामदर्शनलालसाः ।
 हयानां शतसाहस्रं गजानामयुतं तथा ॥ ७३॥
 रथानां दशसाहस्रं स्वर्णसूत्रविभूषितम् ।
 पारमेष्ठीन्युपादाय द्रव्याण्युत्त्वावचानि च ॥ ७४॥ niryānti vṛndaśaḥ sarve rāmadarśanalālasāḥ । hayānām śatasāhasraṁ gajānāmayutaṁ tathā ॥ 73॥ rathānām daśasāhasraṁ svarṇasūtravibhūṣitam । pārameṣṭhīnyupādāya dravyāṇyuccāvacāni ca ॥ 74॥

73-74. Then all the people began coming out of the city in hordes and assembling on its outskirts with a desire to have a glimpse of Lord Ram as he arrives in the city. They brought with them one lakh horses, ten thousand elephants, and an equal number of chariots decorated with golden reins and harnesses, as well as many other accouterments and paraphernalia indicating that all was fine in the city, and its people were happy and prosperous during the time of the Lord's absence¹ (73-74).

[Note—¹The people turned up in large numbers, in their finest of dresses and brought with them things that would tell Lord Ram that everything was fine in the city as well as its citizens. It was a gesture to accord a warm welcome to the beloved Lord of the people of Ayodhya, to make the Lord feel glad that his subjects are happy and well cared for while he was away. It is like the case when the whole family assembles to greet and welcome a son who had gone out to a foreign country on some work long ago; the welcoming ceremony is arranged as a grand affair to signal to the returning member that not only he is welcome but that everyone is happy at his return.

The pomp and ceremony of the reception accorded to Lord Ram and his companions was not done to show-off the wealth of the city—it is absurd, incredulous and incongruous to even think so because Sri Ram was not an outsider or a guest on a visit, but the King of Ayodhya and the dearest Lord of its citizens. He was not an outsider king who needed to be impressed by the wealth and prosperity of the city and its inhabitants. It was a token or a symbolic gesture to tell Sri Ram that the city was well-off and did not have to suffer any calamitous event during the period of his absence, and that everything was fine there.

Imagine how sad and heart-broken a king would feel if he returns to his kingdom after a long absence on a campaign to find it gloomy and depressed, with signs that his beloved capital was uncared for during his absence, its citizens poor and deprived of happiness, and the city and the kingdom which he had left so prosperous and booming was now under a cloud of depression and crisis.

Bharat, Shatrughan and the rest of the citizens of Ayodhya made all-out efforts to ensure that the impression which Lord Ram gets upon arrival would be such as to cheer his heart and lift his spirits. Lord Sri Ram must have been worried about Ayodhya, its people, and how they had fared under Bharat. By seeing all those signs from high up in the sky from his Pushpak plane in which he was arriving, these signs of prosperity, jubilation and happiness that accompanied the ceremonial welcome arranged for him must have been most reassuring and heart-warming for the Lord. It was necessary to do this—because Bharat feared that any hint to the contrary might make Sri Ram change his mind, and he might not land in the city at all but go back from the sky itself to some other destination of his choice if he thought that he was not welcome in Ayodhya. If that happened, Bharat would be helplessly watching the plane turn around, and there was nothing that he could do to stop it, and then it would be impossible to know where the Lord goes. Should this unfortunate thing happen, then it would be most disastrous for the kingdom of Aydhya. So therefore, all preparations were made in such a way that the Lord would get a positive signal when he looks down from his plane.

The signs of well-being, prosperity, pomp, circumstance, grandeur and majesty indicating a flourishing and prosperous city which has come out to welcome its monarch with a warm heart and bubbling enthusiasm would ensure that Lord Ram descends to the ground and does not turn away.]

ततस्तु शिबिकारूढा निर्ययू राजयोषितः । भरतः पादुके न्यस्य शिरस्येव कृताञ्जलिः ॥ ७५॥
शत्रुघ्नसहितो रामं पादचारेण निर्ययौ ।
तदैव दृश्यते दूरद्विमानं चन्द्रसन्निभम् ॥ ७६॥
पुष्पकं सूर्यसङ्काशं मनसा ब्रह्मनिर्मितम् ।
एतस्मिन् भ्रातरौ वीरौ वैदेह्या रामलक्ष्मणौ ॥ ७७॥
सुग्रीवश्च कपिश्रेष्ठो मन्त्रिभिश्च विभीषणः । दृश्यते पश्यत जना इत्याह पवनात्मजः ॥ ७८॥ tatastu śibikārūḍhā nirayayū rājayoṣitaḥ । bharataḥ pāduke nyasya śirasyeva kṛtāñjaliḥ ॥ 75॥ śatrughnasahito rāmaṃ pādacāreṇa nirayau । tadaiva drśyate dūrādvimānaṃ candrasannibham ॥ 76॥ puṣpakam sūryasaṅkāśaṃ manasā brahmanirmitam । etasmin bhrātarau vīrau vaidehyā rāmalakṣmaṇau ॥ 77॥ sugrīvaśca kapiśreṣṭho mantribhiśca vibhīṣaṇaḥ ।

drśyate paśyata janā ityāha pavanātmajah ॥ 78॥

75-78. Behind the citizens followed the ladies of the royal household on palanquins (shoulder carried carriage); then followed Bharat with Sri Ram's sandals placed on his head and the palms of his hands touching each other (in humility and prayerful mode) (75).

Bharat was accompanied by Shatrughan. They went barefoot to meet and welcome Sri Ram. Just about that time, from far away and shining like a full moon (76), the Pushpak plane was sighted in the sky; it dazzled in the sky and resembled a sun in all its splendour. The magnificent Pushpak plane was the brainchild of Brahma, the creator. Seeing it, the son of the wind-god (Hanuman) said, 'Oh look! The two brave brothers Sri Ram and Laxman, along with Vaidehi (Sita), Sugriv, who is the best among the monkeys, and Vibhishan along with his ministers, are seen aboard that plane!' (77-78).

ततो हर्षसमुद्भूतो निःस्वनो दिवमस्पृशत् ।
 स्त्रीबालयुववृद्धानां रामोऽयमिति कीर्तनात् ॥ ७९॥
 रथकुञ्जरवाजिस्था अवतीर्य महीं गताः । ददृशुस्ते विमानस्थं जनाः सोममिवाम्बरे ॥ ८०॥ tato harṣasamudbhūto niḥsvano divamasprśat । strībālayuvavṛddhānāṃ rāmo'yamiti kīrtanāt ॥ 79॥ rathakuñjaravājisthā avatīrya mahīm gatāḥ । dadṛśuste vimānasthaṃ janāḥ somamivāmbare ॥ 80॥

79-80. Once the plane was sighted in the sky, there was such a thunderous outburst of spontaneous emotions of joy and ecstasy, with everyone, women, children, youths and elderly, shouting euphorically 'this is Sri Ram' all at once in all the directions that the sky reverberated with tumultuous exclamations of applause (79).

Those who were astride chariots, elephants and horses got down and stood on the ground. All of them watched him (Sri Ram) seated in the plane as if they were watching the full moon in the sky, gazing at the Lord, awestruck and enthralled (80).

[Note—Verse nos. 67-80 describe the arrangements made to welcome Lord Ram warmly and enthusiastically in the fields outside the gates of the city of Ayodhya.]

प्राञ्जलिर्भरतो भूत्वा प्रहृष्टो राघवोन्मुखः ।
 ततो विमानाग्रगतं भरतो राघवं मुदा ॥ ८१॥
 ववन्दे प्राणतो रामं मेरुस्थमिव भास्करम् । ततो रामाभ्यनुज्ञातं विमानमपतद्भुवि ॥ ८२॥ prāñjalirbharato bhūtvā prahr̥ṣṭo rāghavonmukhaḥ । tato vimānāgragataṃ bharato rāghavaṃ mudā ॥ 81॥ vavande praṇato rāmaṃ merusthamiva bhāskaram ।

tato rāmābhyanuññātaṃ vimānamapatadbhuvi ॥ 82॥

81-82. Then Bharat looked up at Raghav (Sri Ram) sitting in the plane, and with an exhilarant and cheerful heart, he bowed to the latter by bringing his hands together so that the palms touched each other as if paying his obeisance to the rising sun on the Sumeru mountain. When Sri Ram observed all this development from the sky, he ordered the plane to land on the ground¹ (81-82).

[Note—¹With reference to verse no. 44 in which Sri Ram had instructed Hanuman to find out how Bharat responds to the news of his arrival, the meaning of verse nos. 81-82 will be clear. Sri Ram stayed up in the sky till the moment Bharat showed clear physical signs of his warmth and readiness to welcome the Lord cheerfully—by bowing his head and holding his hands together so that their palms touch each other. For, if there would have been any hint to the contrary, Sri Ram would have turned away from the sky itself. See note to verse nos. 73-74.

Again, Lord Ram's subtle apprehensions and doubts about the type of reception he would get by Bharat and the citizens of Ayodhya were quite dispelled when sage Bharadwaj had assured him that everything was fine in Ayodhya—apropos: verse nos. 15-19.

Further, it must be noted that though Sri Ram had instructed Hanuman to quickly come back with the news of developments at Ayodhya, the latter was still on the ground with Bharat as is evident from verse nos. 77-78. Perhaps Sri Ram was himself so eager and anxious to meet Bharat and the citizens of Ayodhya that he could not wait till the time Hanuman went back to him at Bharadwaj's hermitage.

From high up in the sky, Lord Ram looked at Hanuman for a signal if everything was okay. Hanuman waved and signaled back to the Lord that there is no cause of any fear or doubt, that there was nothing amiss, and that the Lord should land immediately. As soon as the decks were cleared by Hanuman, and the Lord himself could clearly see that everyone on the ground was cheerfully awaiting his arrival, the Lord instructed the Pushpak plane to descend and land in the field where the citizens had assembled to receive him.]

आरोपितो विमानं तद्भरतः सानुजस्तदा ।

राममासाद्य मुदितः पुनरेवाभ्यवादयत् ॥ ८३॥

समुत्थाय चिराद्दृष्टं भरतं रघुनन्दनः ।

भ्रातरं स्वाङ्कमारोप्य मुदा तं परिष्वजे ॥ ८४॥ āropito vimānaṃ tadbharataḥ sānujastadā । rāmamāsādyā muditaḥ punarevābhyavādayat ॥ 83॥

samutthāya cirāddṛṣṭaṃ bharataṃ raghunandanaḥ ।

bhrātaraṃ svāṅkamāropya mudā taṃ pariśvasvaje ॥ 84॥

83-84. Thence, Sri Ram invited both Bharat and his younger brother (Shatrughan) to come on board the plane. Once near Sri Ram, Bharat once again bowed reverentially before him (83).

Seeing Bharat after a long time, Raghunandan (Sri Ram) picked him up in his arms most cheerfully, and embraced him most affectionately (84).

ततो लक्ष्मणमासाद्य वैदेहीं नाम कीर्तयन् ।
 अभ्यवादयत प्रीतो भरतः प्रेमविह्वलः ॥ ८५॥
 सुग्रीवं जाम्बवन्तं च युवराजं तथाङ्गदम् ।
 मैन्दद्विविदनीलांश्च ऋषभं चैव सस्वजे ॥ ८६॥
 सुषेणं च नलं चैव गवाक्षं गन्धमादनम् । शरभं पनसं चैव भरतः परिषस्वजे ॥ ८७॥ tato lakṣmaṇamāsādyā vaidehīm nāma kīrtayan । abhyavādayata prīto bharataḥ premavihvalaḥ ॥ 85॥ sugrīvaṃ jāmbavantaṃ ca yuvarājaṃ tathāṅgadam । maindadividanīlāṃśca ṛṣabhaṃ caiva sasvaje ॥ 86॥ suṣeṇaṃ ca nalaṃ caiva gavākṣaṃ gandhamādanam । śarabhaṃ panasaṃ caiva bharataḥ pariśasvaje ॥ 87॥

85-87. Then Bharat—who was overcome and overwhelmed with surging emotions associated with reunion with those who were dearest to his heart, emotions of affection, endearment and love—met Laxman, and then bowed affectionately before Sita while pronouncing his name as a gesture to draw her attention towards him and also to tell her that he is personally welcoming all of them back home (85).

After that, Bharat embraced all those who came with Sri Ram on the plane, such as Sugriv, Jamvant, prince Angad, Maind, Dwivid, Neel, Rishav (86), Sushen, Nal, Gawaksha, Gandhamadan, Sharabh and Panas (87).

[Note—This fact that Bharat had to announce to Sita who he was shows that she was not looking directly at him. More than Sri Ram, it was she who had to suffer such a lot because of him. She also did not look at him because it was an honoured tradition amongst the higher echelons of noble society that chaste ladies kept their eyes low in public. Being surrounded by tens of thousands of eager eyes riveted on the couple, Sita was feeling very shy and bashful under the glare of attention. She was also reluctant and uncertain about Bharat's internal feelings and secret aspects of his mind—she wasn't sure whether he really welcomed them or was he just pretending to be courteous outwardly while being sly and mischievous internally.

Take note that if Sri Ram was even suspicious and wanted to be certain about Bharat's real intentions—as is very obvious from the fact that he invited Bharat on the plane instead of stepping down from it on the ground—then she was after all Bharat's sister-in-law, who would be doubly suspicious of him and his intentions.]

सर्वे ते मानुषं रूपं कृत्वा भरतमाहताः ।
 पप्रच्छुः कुशलं सौम्याः प्रहृष्टाश्च प्लवङ्गमाः ॥ ८८॥
 ततः सुग्रीवमालिङ्ग्य भरतः प्रह भक्तिः । त्वत्सहायेन रामस्य जयोऽभूद्भावणो हतः ॥ ८९॥ sarve te mānuṣaṃ rūpaṃ kṛtvā bharatamāhṛtāḥ । papracchuḥ kuśalaṃ saumyāḥ prahr̥ṣṭāśca plavaṅgamāḥ ॥ 88॥ tataḥ sugrīvamāliṅgya bharataḥ prāha bhaktitaḥ । tvatsahāyena rāmasya jayo'bhūdrāvaṇo hataḥ ॥ 89॥

88-89. All the monkeys had assumed a gentlemanly human form. When they were duly honoured and welcomed by Bharat, they asked about his welfare (88).

Then Bharat embraced Sugriv once again and said to him most thankfully, gratefully and affectionately, 'It is because of your help that Sri Ram has attained victory (in the war) and could get rid of Ravana (89).

त्वमस्माकं चतुर्णां तु भ्राता सुग्रीव पञ्चमः ।
 शत्रुघ्नश्च तदा राममभिवाद्य सलक्ष्मणम् ॥ ९०॥
 सीतायाश्चरणौ पश्चाद्वन्दे विनयान्वितः ।
 रामो मातरमासाद्य विवर्णां शोकविह्वलाम् ॥ ९१॥
 जग्राह पूणतः पादौ मनो मातुः पूसादयन् । कैकेयीं च सुमित्रां च ननामेतरमातरौ ॥ ९२॥ tvamasmākaṃ caturṇāṃ tu bhrātā sugrīva pañcamah । śatrughnaśca tadā rāmamabhivādyā salakṣmaṇam ॥ 90॥ sītāyāścaraṇau paścādvavande vinayānvitaḥ । rāmo mātaramāsādyā vivarṇāṃ śokavihvalām ॥ 91॥ jagrāha praṇataḥ pādaū mano mātūḥ prasādayan । kaikeyīṃ ca sumitrāṃ ca nanāmetaramātarau ॥ 92॥

90-92. Hence, you are the fifth brother of the four of us (and I don't have words to thank you enough for your kindness)'.
 After that, Shatrughan bowed before Sri Ram and Laxman (90), and then paid his homage with the greatest of humility and politeness at the feet of Sita.

Then Sri Ram (stepped down from the plane and) went to mother Kaushalya who was very weak, emaciated and confounded due to sorrows, anguish and distress (of separation from the Lord for a long period of fourteen years) (91).

He touched her feet with great humility and politeness which pleased her heart (i.e. the Lord's gestures provided comfort to her tormented heart and mind).

He also bowed before his step mothers Kaikeyi (mother of Bharat) and Sumitra (mother of Laxman) (92).

भरतः पादुके ते तु राघवस्य सुपूजिते ।
 योजयामास रामस्य पादयोर्भक्तिसंयुतः ॥ ९३॥
 राज्यमेतन्न्यासभूतं मया निर्यातितं तव ।
 अद्य मे सफलं जन्म फलितो मे मनोरथः ॥ ९४॥
 यत्पश्यामि समायातमयोध्यां त्वामहं पूजो । कोष्ठागारं बलं कोशं कृतं दशगुणं मया ॥ ९५॥ bharataḥ pāduke te tu rāghavasya supūjite । yojayāmāsa rāmasya pādayorbhaktisaṃyutaḥ ॥ 93॥ rājyametanñyāsabhūtaṃ mayā niryātitaṃ tava । adya me saphalaṃ janma phalito me manorathaḥ ॥ 94॥ yatpāśyāmi samāyātamayodhyāṃ tvāmahaṃ prabho । koṣṭhāgāraṃ balaṃ kośaṃ kṛtaṃ daśaguṇaṃ mayā ॥ 95॥

93-95. After that, Bharat returned those sandals, which had been duly worshipped by him (all along these 14 years of exile), back to Sri Ram with the greatest of devotion, respect, honour and humility, and put them back on the Lord's feet (93).

(Then Bharat submitted before Sri Ram—) 'I am handing back to you your kingdom which you had kept with me for safe keeping. I feel that my birth has been successful, and all my desires and wishes have borne fruits.

[To wit, I am glad that I have been successful in living up to my reputation of a good and virtuous brother; I am also happy that I have looked after the kingdom well during your long absence. I am fortunate that no misfortunes befell us, and that no mischance occurred to derail my noble intentions. I thank my Stars and the Creator that they stood by me during the testing times of my life, and I could stand up and welcome you back home with a proud and cheerful face.] (94).

Oh Lord, during your absence from Ayodhya, by your grace, glory and majesty, I have been able to increase by ten times the stock of food-grains, the army, and the treasury¹ (95).

[Note—¹Bharat told Lord Ram that he has lived up to his expectations by taking good care of the kingdom. Here he is briefing the Lord about the overall good picture of the kingdom's economy and defense preparedness.]

त्वत्तेजसा जगन्नाथ पालयस्व पुरं स्वकम् ।
 इति ब्रुवाणं भरतं दृष्ट्वा सर्वे कपीश्वराः ॥ ९६॥
 मुमुचुर्नेत्रजं तोयं प्रशंसुर्मुदान्विताः ।
 ततो रामः प्रहृष्टात्मा भरतं स्वाङ्कगं मुदा ॥ ९७॥
 ययौ तेन विमानेन भरतस्याश्रमं तदा ।
 अवरुह्य तदा रामो विमानाग्र्यान्महीतलम् ॥ ९८॥
 अब्रवीत्पुष्पकं देवो गच्छ वैश्रवणं वह । अनुगच्छानुजानामि कुबेरं धनपालकम् ॥ ९९॥ tvattejasā jagannātha pālayasva puram svakam । iti bruvāṇaṃ bharataṃ dr̥ṣṭvā sarve kapīśvarāḥ ॥ 96॥ mumucurnetrajam toyam praśaśamsurmudānvitāḥ । tato rāmaḥ prahr̥ṣṭātmā bharataṃ svāṅkagaṃ mudā ॥ 97॥ yayau tena vimānena bharatasyāśramaṃ tadā । avaruhya tadā rāmo vimānāgr̥yānmahītalam ॥ 98॥ abravītpuṣpakam devo gaccha vaiśravaṇaṃ vaha । anugacchānujānāmi kuberaṃ dhanapālakam ॥ 99॥

96-99. Oh Lord of the world (jagannātha)! Now take care of your city yourself (and relieve me of my responsibilities).'

When the chief amongst the monkeys heard and saw Bharat say this (96), they praised him with tears of joy rolling down their eyes¹.

Then Sri Ram, most cheerfully and with a delighted heart, seated Bharat on his lap (i.e. by his side) (97), and went to his hermitage (at Nandigram) in the plane. There, he got down from Pushpak which was the best amongst the aerial vehicles (98).

Then he said to Pushpak, 'Go, I order you, go back to your master Kuber, the patron god of wealth (and the treasurer of the god's treasury), and resume your duties to him by being his vehicle. Now onwards, you must follow his instructions.'² (99).

[Note—¹One just needs to close one's eyes and imagine the touching scene of that moment to properly enjoy the heart warming moments of reunion between two loving, affectionate and inseparable brothers whose affections for each other stood unscarred against the acid test of time that was imposed upon them by the merciless nature of fate. It was such a poignant moment soaked in love and affection brimming over from the heart of Bharat that it made all the companions of Lord Ram weep and become overwhelmed with emotions.

²The Pushpak plane had first landed in the field where the citizens had assembled to welcome the Lord. Then Lord Ram took Bharat and Shatrughan on board and instructed the plane to go to Nandigram, the place a little away from the gates of the city, where Bharat had established his hermitage. It was here that the Lord ordered Pushpak to retire home to Kuber.

The obvious implication of this is that Lord Ram and his party would enter Ayodhya on foot, albeit on chariots and horses, in a formal ceremonial procession leading out from Nandigram. This was a gesture by Lord Ram to retrace the footsteps of his dear brother Bharat from his symbolic exile there, and accompany him home walking together, literally hand-in-hand.]

रामो वसिष्ठस्य गुरोः पदाम्बुजं नत्वा यथा देवगुरोः शतक्रतुः ।
दत्त्वा महार्हासनमुत्तमं गुरोरुपाविवेशाथ गुरोः समीपतः ॥ १००॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे
चतुर्दशः सर्गः ॥ १४॥

rāmo vasiṣṭhasya guroḥ padāmbujam natvā yathā devaguroḥ śatakratuḥ । dattvā mahārḥāsanamuttamaṁ gurorupāviveśātha guroḥ samīpataḥ ॥ 100॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmaramāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
caturdaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 14॥

100. Lord Sri Ram bowed his head at the lotus-like feet of his Guru, sage Vashistha, just like Indra does to the Guru of Gods (Brihaspati). He offered the Guru a most excellent seat (that was reserved for senior moral preceptor of the royal family, a seat which was better than that reserved for the king himself), and himself sat besides him (100).

Thus ends Canto 14 of Yuddha Kand, narrating the discourse Lord Shiva gave to his divine consort goddess Uma.

(iii) Sub-section 21.2.3: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 15, verse nos. 1-50, 70-75:

॥पञ्चदशः सर्गः ॥
 श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।
 ततस्तु कैकयीपुत्रो भरतो भक्तिसंयुतः ।
 शिरस्यञ्जलिमाधाय ज्येष्ठं भ्रातरमब्रवीत् ॥ १॥
 माता मे सत्कृता राम दत्तं राज्यं त्वया मम ।
 ददामि तत्ते च पुनर्यथा त्वमददा मम ॥ २॥

॥pañcadaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥
 śrīmahādeva uvāca ।
 tatastu kaikayīputro bharato bhaktisaṃyutaḥ । śirasyañjalimādhāya jyeṣṭhaṃ bhrātaramabravīt ॥ 1॥ mātā me satkṛtā rāma dattaṃ rājyaṃ tvayā mama । dadāmi tatte ca punaryathā tvamadadā mama ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Then Kaikeyi's son Bharat said submissively and most respectfully, with a bowed head and palms of the hands touching each other, to his elder brother (Sri Ram): 'Oh Lord Sri Ram! By giving the reign of the kingdom to me, the word of my mother has been honoured by you (i.e. her wishes have been fulfilled inasmuch as you have made me rule the kingdom for so long as its de-facto king).

Now, the way you had given it to me, I am giving it back to you with the same honour.' (2).

इत्युक्त्वा पादयोर्भक्त्या साष्टाङ्गं प्रणिपत्य च ।
 बहुधा प्रार्थयामास कैकेय्या गुरुणा सह ॥ ३॥
 तथेति प्रतिजग्राह भरताद्राज्यमीश्वरः । मायामाश्रित्य सकलां नरचेष्टामुपागतः ॥ ४॥ ityuktvā pādayorbhaktyā sāṣṭāṅgaṃ praṇipatya ca । bahudhā prārthayāmāsa kaikeyyā guruṇā saha ॥ 3॥ tatheti pratijagrāha bharatādrājyamiśvaraḥ । māyāmāśritya sakalāṃ naraceṣṭāmupāgataḥ ॥ 4॥

3-4. Saying this, Bharat showed respects to Sri Ram by prostrating himself before the latter's feet and pleaded before him (or requested him again and again), accompanied by Kaikeyi¹ and his Guru (Vashistha), to accept the crown (3).

Then, saying 'alright', he (Sri Ram) accepted the kingdom from Bharat in order to live up to the role of a good human being, a form which he had willingly assumed using the medium (or tool) of his Maya (i.e. the powers of creating delusions that the Supreme Being possesses)¹ (4).

[Note—¹Verse no. 3 clearly shows that Kaikeyi had joined her son to request Sri Ram to accept the crown, thereby formally removing any doubts and misgivings in his mind.

²The idea here is that though the primary purpose of eliminating the scourge of the evil demons had been achieved, Lord Ram, the Supreme Being in a human form, decided however to continue to act in his role of a good human being by accepting the crown of Ayodhya and staying back on earth for some more time till death would help him to wind up his acts as a human being in the normal course of time, and in accordance with the Laws of Nature. The Lord did not show any haste in making his exit from the mortal gross world once his main objective was accomplished, which he could have done if he had so wished.]

स्वाराज्यानुभवो यस्य सुखज्ञानैकरूपिणः ।
निरस्तातिशयानन्दरूपिणः परमात्मनः ॥ ५॥
मानुषेण तु राज्येन किं तस्य जगदीशितुः ।
यस्य भ्रूभङ्गमात्रेण त्रिलोकी नश्यति क्षणात् ॥ ६॥ svārājyānubhavo yasya sukhajñānaikarūpiṇaḥ । nirastātīśayānandarūpiṇaḥ paramātmanaḥ ॥ 5॥ mānuṣeṇa tu rājyena kiṃ tasya jagadīśituḥ । yasya bhrūbhaṅgamātreṇa trilokī naśyati kṣaṇāt ॥ 6॥

5-6. He (Sri Ram as the supreme Brahman) enjoys the eternal kingdom of the heavens; he is an embodiment of bliss, peace and tranquility as well as of enlightenment, wisdom and pure and truthful knowledge; he is free from any having any sort of desire or yearning for pleasure pertaining to the gratification of the sense organs and of the materialistic world; he is an image of supreme bliss, happiness, joy, contentedness, peace and tranquility; he is the supreme Soul (the all-pervading, macrocosmic Soul and pure cosmic Consciousness) personified (5); and he is the Lord of the entire creation.

This said, what has he to do with an ordinary kingdom in this gross and perishable world when he is the Lord of the heaven and the whole creation? The Lord whose mere glance can destroy all the three divisions of the world (such as heavens or the celestial world, the terrestrial or the mundane gross world on earth, and the nether world)—indeed it is a matter of great wonder that the same Lord would willingly consent to accept to rule a humble kingdom of mortal creatures (i.e. the kingdom of Ayodhya)! (6).

यस्यानुग्रहमात्रेण भवन्त्याखण्डलाश्रियः ।
 लीलासृष्टमहासृष्टेः कियदेतद्रमापतेः ॥ ७॥
 तथापि भजतां नित्यं कामपूरविधित्सया । लीलामानुषदेहेन सर्वमप्यनुवर्तते ॥ ८॥ yasyānugrahamātreṇa bhavantyākhaṇḍalaśriyaḥ । līlāsṛṣṭamahāsrṣṭeḥ kiyadetadramāpateḥ ॥ 7॥ tathāpi bhajatām nityam kāmāpūravīdhitsayā । līlāmānuṣadehena sarvamāpyanuvartate ॥ 8॥

7-8. The king of Gods (Indra) acquires and retains his control over wealth, fame, majesty, grandeur and glory of the whole world by virtue of his (the Lord Sri Ram's) grace, benevolence, beneficence, benediction and munificence. He (Sri Ram) has created this massive and marvellous creation as if it were a game, i.e. without any trouble, any exertion or any effort, almost playful as if it was for the sake of his enjoyment by using his cosmic powers to create massive delusions and creativity.

This being the case, what importance does this worldly kingdom of Ayodhya has for him (that he would long to rule it by becoming its king)? (7).

Still, just to satisfy or fulfill the desires and wishes of his ardent devotees and to do their tasks for them (which they are unable to do themselves—such as killing their tormentor demons), he acts like an ordinary human being by assuming an illusionary form of a man (which is not his real form, for his real form is that of the Cosmic Consciousness that is revealed in the form of the Supreme Being) (8).

[Note—The main idea of these two verses is to stress that Lord Ram accepted the crown of the kingdom of Ayodhya not because he liked to become a king and enjoy all the privileges and pleasures that accompany it, for he was the Supreme Lord of the whole world, the ruler of the Cosmos, yet he decided to accept it in order to satisfy the wishes of his devotees who liked him to stay amongst them for some time more before going back to his kingdom in the heaven.

Remember: Lord Ram was a human manifestation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord of the heavens. All the gods were junior to him. Compared to the majestic kingdom of heaven, the worldly kingdom of Ayodhya was nothing but a speck of sand on the beach of the vast ocean symbolizing this creation.]

ततः शत्रुघ्नवचनान्निपुणः श्मश्रुकृन्तकः
 सम्भाराश्चाभिषेकार्थमानीता राघवस्य हि ॥ ९॥
 पूर्वं तु भरते स्नाते लक्ष्मणे च महात्मनि ।
 सुग्रीवे वानरेन्द्रे च राक्षसेन्द्रे विभीषणे ॥ १०॥

tataḥ śatrughnavacanānnipuṇaḥ śmaśrukṛntakaḥ sambhārāścābhiṣekārthamānītā rāghavasya hi ॥ 9॥ pūrvaṁ tu bharate snāte lakṣmaṇe ca mahātmani । sugrīve vānarendre ca rākṣasendre vibhīṣaṇe ॥ 10॥

9-10. Then, on the instructions of Shatrughan, an expert barber was summoned, and all the required paraphernalia and accoutrements needed for Raghav's (Sri Ram's) coronation were collected (9).

First Bharat and then the great soul Laxman had a bath, followed by the king of monkeys, Sugriv, and king of demons, Vibhishan (10).

विशोधितजटः स्नातश्चित्माल्यानुलेपनः ।
महार्हवसनोपेतस्तस्थौ तत्र श्रिया ज्वलन् ॥ ११॥
प्रतिकर्म च रामस्य लक्ष्मणश्च महामतिः । काश्यामास भरतः सीताया राजयोषितः ॥ १२॥ viśodhitajaṭaḥ snātaścitraṁmālyānulepanaḥ । mahārhasanopetastasthau tatra śriyā jvalan ॥ 11॥ pratikarma ca rāmasya lakṣmaṇaśca mahāmatih । kārayāmāsa bharataḥ sītāyā rājayoṣitaḥ ॥ 12॥

11-12. When his matted hairs were cut and trimmed, he (Lord Sri Ram) took his formal bath and adorned himself with multi-coloured garlands and necklaces; he smeared his body with fragrances and scented ointments, and put on excellent garments and ceremonial robes. [To wit, Lord Ram prepared himself for the ceremony to anoint him as the King of Ayodhya by taking a bath, applying fragrances on his body, and adorning himself with necessary garments and jewelry that are suitable for such occasions of state.]

He presented a most magnificent view, a sight that was glorious, elegant and majestic, marked by his divine beauty, his matchless glamour and his enchanting presence (that effused radiance and splendour no less than that of a sun) (11).

The great Laxman and Bharat helped Sri Ram deck himself up, while the royal women of the household helped Sita to decorate herself (12).

महार्हवस्तूभरणैरलञ्चकुः सुमध्यमाम् ।
ततो वानरपत्नीनां सर्वासामेव शोभना ॥ १३॥
अकाशयत कौसल्या प्रहृष्टा पुत्रवत्सला ।
ततः स्यन्दनमादाय शत्रुघ्नवचनात्सुधीः ॥ १४॥
सुमन्त्रः सूर्यसङ्काशं योजयित्वाग्रतः स्थितः । आरुरोह रथं रामः सत्यधर्मपरायणः ॥ १५॥ mahārhasastrābharaṇairalañcakruḥ sumadhyamām । tato vānarapatnīnāṁ sarvāsāmeva śobhanā ॥ 13॥ akārayata kausalyā prahrṣṭā putravatsalā । tataḥ syandanamādāya śatrughnavacanātsudhīḥ ॥ 14॥ sumantraḥ sūryasaṅkāśaṁ yojayitvāgrataḥ sthitaḥ । āruroha rathaṁ rāmaḥ satyadharmaparāyaṇaḥ ॥ 15॥

13-15. They decorated that auspicious and charming lady (Sita) with different types of priceless and magnificent clothes and royal robes, as well as ornaments studded with gems and jewels of all kinds.

After that, the cheerfully delighted Kaushalya (mother of Lord Ram), who was affectionate and fond of her son, decorated and honoured all the wives of the monkeys (who had come with their husbands in the plane)¹.

Just about that time, at the instructions of Shatrughan, a wonderful royal chariot (13-14), which was as dazzling, spectacular and splendid as the sun, was harnessed and brought by the most wise Sumantra (the chief minister of the kingdom) and placed in front of them. The most honourable, truthful, righteous and virtuous Lord Sri Ram got onto it (15).

[Note—¹This statement clearly means that when the Pushpak plane made a brief stopover at Kishkindha, Lord Ram allowed Sugriv to take on board some selected ladies of his royal household—apropos: verse no. 8 of Canto 14. These female monkeys were the wives of those chief commanders of the monkey army who were already on the plane, and their names have been mentioned in verse nos. 86-86 of Canto 14 hereinbefore.]

सुग्रीवो युवराजश्च हनुमांश्च विभीषणः ।
स्नात्वा दिव्याम्बरधरा दिव्याभरणभूषिताः ॥ १६॥
राममन्वीयुरग्रे च रथाश्वगजवाहनाः ।
सुग्रीवपत्न्यः सीता च ययुर्यानैः पुरं महत् ॥ १७॥ sugrīvo yuvarājaśca hanumāṁśca vibhīṣaṇaḥ । snātvā divyāambaradharā divyābharaṇabhūṣitāḥ ॥ 16॥ rāmamanvīyuragre ca rathāśvagajavāhanāḥ । sugrīvapatnyaḥ sītā ca yayuryānaih puram mahat ॥ 17॥

16-17. Sugriv, the crown prince (Angad), Hanuman and Vibhishan—all had a bath, adorned themselves with beautiful clothes, robes and ornaments (16), got on board chariots, or rode horses and elephants, and went alongside Sri Ram in the procession that formed. Sugriv's wives and Sita rode shoulder mounted carriages (palanquins). The group went towards the large city (of Ayodhya) from Nandigram¹ (17).

[Note—These preparations were done at Nandigram, the place where Bharat had been living for the last fourteen years. So therefore, when Lord Ram entered the gates of the city of Ayodhya, he did not do so as an exiled prince returning home on foot, tired, weary, haggard and unkempt, but as a great king returning triumphantly after some successful campaign. An uproarious and tumultuous formal form of ceremonial welcome was accorded to this royal procession as it neared and then entered the city gates.]

वज्रपाणिर्यथा देवैर्हरिताश्वरथे स्थितः ।
पूययौ रथमास्थाय तथा रामो महत्पुरम् ॥ १८॥
सारथ्यं भरतश्चक्रे रत्नदण्डं महाद्युतिः ।

श्वेतातपत्रं शत्रुघ्नो लक्ष्मणो व्यजनं दधे ॥ १९॥

vajrapāṇiriyathā devairharitāśvarathe sthitaḥ । prayayau rathamāsthāya tathā rāmo mahatpuram ॥ 18॥ sārathyaṃ bharataścakre ratnadaṇḍaṃ mahādyutiḥ । śvetātapatram śatrughno lakṣmaṇo vyajanaṃ dadhe ॥ 19॥

18-19. Just like the Lord who holds the Bajra (i.e. Indra, the king of Gods) rides a chariot with green horses and goes somewhere in the company of Gods, Lord Sri Ram too proceeded to his great and renowned city surrounded by his retinue of attendants that constituted his friends, the monkeys and the demon ministers, his own brothers (Laxman, Bharat and Shatrughan), the ministers and courtiers of the kingdom, as well his Guru Vasistha) (18).

The most glorious, cheerful and radiant Bharat became his charioteer; Shatrughan held the ceremonial white umbrella with its rod studded with gems and jewels; while Laxman held the hand-held fan¹ (19).

[Note—¹These verses describe the scene wherein Lord Ram is sitting on a high seat on the royal chariot taking him into the city. Bharat assumed the role of the charioteer, Shatrughan held the royal umbrella over the Lord's head, and Laxman waved the fan before the Lord. The last two, the umbrella and the fan, are marks of royalty.

Just as a king is surrounded by his courtiers and knights, the chariot of Lord Ram was flanked by his friends from Lanka and Kishkindha, as well as by ministers, courtiers and the chief priest of his own kingdom.]

चामरं च समीपस्थो न्यवीजयदरिन्दमः ।
शशिपूकाशं त्वपरं जग्राहासुरनायकः ॥ २०॥
दिविजैः सिद्धसङ्घैश्च ऋषिभिर्दिव्यदर्शनैः । स्तूयमानस्य रामस्य शुश्रुवे मधुरध्वनिः ॥ २१॥ cāmaraṃ ca samīpastho nyavījayadarindamaḥ । śaśiprakāśaṃ tvaparaṃ jagrāhāsuranāyakaḥ ॥ 20॥ divijaiḥ siddhasaṅghaiśca ṛṣibhirdivyadarśanaiḥ । stūyamānasya rāmasya śuśruve madhuradhvaniḥ ॥ 21॥

20-21. The vanquisher of enemies (Sugriv) on one side, and the king of demons (Vibhishan) on the other side of Sri Ram, swayed the royal whisk which was beautiful, attractive and radiant like a full magnificent moon (20).

At that time a cacophony of sweet and pleasant voices of the Gods, as well as of the many Siddhas (mystics), sages, seers and hermits who had assembled there, were heard; they were all singing the majestic glories and praising the virtues of Lord Ram aloud in adulatory terms. They had all assembled to have a divine and august view of Sri Ram (as well as to attend his coronation ceremony) (21).

मानुषं रूपमास्थाय वानरा गजवाहनाः ।

भरीशङ्खनिनादैश्च मृदङ्गपणवानकैः ॥ २२॥
 प्रययौ राघवश्रेष्ठस्तां पुरीं समलङ्कृताम् । ददृशुस्ते समायान्तं राघवं पुखासिनः ॥ २३॥ mānuṣaṃ rūpamāsthāya vānarā gajavāhanāḥ । bherīśaṅkhaninādaiśca mṛdaṅgapaṇavānakaiḥ ॥ 22॥ prayayau rāghavaśreṣṭhastāṃ purīm samalaṅkṛtām । dadṛśuste samāyāntaṃ rāghavaṃ puravāsinaḥ ॥ 23॥

22-23. The monkeys assumed a human form and rode astride elephants. Amidst the clamour of various musical instruments, such as kettledrums, conch shells, drums and tumbrels, and different types of small drums called Panawa¹ etc. (22), Sri Ram—who is the best in the illustrious family of king Raghu of Ayodhya—made his auspicious entry into the city which resonated with thunderous sounds made by these musical instruments played enthusiastically to welcome him.

The denizens of the city watched enthralled and in ecstasy as Raghav (Sri Ram) entered the city triumphantly (23).

[Note—¹A “Panawa” is a two sided oblong drum which is hung from the neck of the singer with light strings and is beaten on both its sides by either the fingers of the player of the drum, or by short, light sticks to play the sound of music.]

दूर्वादलश्यामतनुं महार्हकिरीटरत्नाभरणाञ्चिताङ्गम् ।
 आरक्तकञ्जायतलोचनान्तं दृष्ट्वा ययुर्मोदमतीव पुण्याः ॥ २४॥
 विचित्ररत्नाञ्चितसूत्रनद्धपीताम्बरं पीनभुजान्तरालम् ।
 अनर्घ्यमुक्ताफलदिव्यहारैः विरोचमानं रघुनन्दनं प्रजाः ॥ २५॥
 सुग्रीवमुख्यैर्हरिभिः प्रशान्तैः निषेव्यमाणं रवितुल्यभासम् ।
 कस्तूरिकाचन्दनलिप्तागात्रं निवीतकल्पद्रुमपुष्पमालम् ॥ २६॥ dūrvādalaśyāmatanuṃ mahārhakirīṭaratnābharaṇāñcitāṅgam । āraktakañjāyatalocanāntaṃ drṣṭvā yayurmodamatīva puṇyāḥ ॥ 24॥ vicitraratnāñcitasūtranaddhapītāmbaraṃ pīnabhujāntarālam । anarghyamuktāphaladivyaḥaraiḥ virocamaṇaṃ raghunandanaṃ prajāḥ ॥ 25॥ sugrīvamukhyairharibhiḥ praśāntaiḥ niṣevyamāṇaṃ ravitulyabhāsam । kastūrikācandanaliptagātraṃ nivītakalpadrūmapuṣṣamālam ॥ 26॥

24-26. The righteous and noble citizens watched the dark complexion of Lord Sri Ram's body which resembled the colour of Durba (a kind of dark green grass called Agrostis Linearis). The Lord had a very precious crown on his head; he wore ornaments studded with priceless gems; he had broad eyes with a light pink shade that resembled pink-coloured petals of a lotus flower (24).

The Lord was attired in a magnificent Pitambar (a yellow body-wrapping garment made of silk that is worn by Lord Vishnu); this Pitambar was decorated with multi-coloured jewels and gems, and it was embroidered by threads made of gold.

The Lord had a broad chest which was decorated with garlands and necklaces made of beautiful pearls.

He was served by Sugriv and other chief monkeys who were all calm and poised.

The Lord looked as splendid, majestic, radiant and majestic as the sun. His body was rubbed by a fragrant paste made from sandalwood and musk. He wore a magnificent garland made of the flowers of the Kalpa tree (Nyctanthes Arbortristis; the Kalpa tree is the celestial tree of the Gods).

The subjects of the kingdom were exceptionally jubilant, exhilarated and euphoric on seeing Raghunandan (Sri Ram) back in Ayodhya (25-26).

श्रुत्वा स्त्रियो राममुपागतं मुदा प्रहर्षवेगोत्कलिताननश्रियः । अपास्य सर्वं गृहकार्यमाहितं हर्म्याणि चैवारुरुहुः स्वलङ्कृताः ॥ २७॥ śrutvā striyo rāmamupāgataṁ mudā praharṣavegotkalitānanaśriyaḥ । apāsyā sarvaṁ gṛhakāryamāhitaṁ harmyāṇi caivāruruhuḥ svalaṅkṛtāḥ ॥ 27॥

27. When the women folk heard of the arrival of Sri Ram, they were very happy and extremely delighted so much so that their faces lit up with joy. They immediately left their routine household chores, decorated themselves in all their finery, and climbed to the terrace and attics of their homes (to have a glimpse of the Lord as he rode inside the city in the ceremonial procession described herein above) (27).

दृष्ट्वा हरिं सर्वदृगुत्सवाकृतिं पुष्पैः किरन्त्यः स्मितशोभिताननाः ।
दृग्भिः पुनर्नेत्रमनोरसायनं स्वानन्दमूर्तिं मनसाभिरेभिरे ॥ २८॥

dr̥ṣṭvā hariṁ sarvadr̥gutsavākṛtiṁ puṣpaiḥ kirantyaḥ smitaśobhitānanāḥ । dṛgbhiḥ punarnetramanorasāyanam svānandamūrtiṁ manasābhirebhire ॥ 28॥

28. Seeing Hari (Sri Ram), who provided happiness, bliss, peace and joy to all those present on the occasion, they (the women folk of the city) showered flowers on him as they smiled cheerfully at the sight of their beloved Lord. Then they took that image (i.e. the magnificently charming, bewitching and elegant view of Sri Ram)—which provided happiness, contentedness and bliss to the eyes and heart of all who saw him—inside their hearts through the path of their eyes, and then repeatedly embraced that image internally in a symbolic manner. [That is, they enshrined the image of Sri Ram in their hearts and worshipped the Lord there as their deity.]¹ (28).

[Note—¹The women folk were so charmed and enthralled by the lovable image of their beloved Lord Ram that though they could not go out on the streets to embrace him as their male counterparts were free to do, yet they did the next best thing—they had their view of the charming image of Lord Ram till their eyes were full of it, and then closing the eyes they etched this magnificent image permanently inside their hearts so that they could view it whenever they wished by simply closing their eyes and shutting out all other images of the external world. If they had their way, they would have rushed out to actually embrace Lord Ram, but since this would be too immodest a thing to do and impractical also, so this was the best alternative idea they devised to compensate for it.]

रामः स्मितस्निग्धदृशा पूजास्तथा पश्यन् पूजानाथ इवापरः प्रभुः ।
शनैर्जगामाथ पितुः स्वलङ्कृतं गृहं महेन्द्रालयसन्निभं हरिः ॥ २९॥

rāmaḥ smitasnigdhadr̥śā prajāstathā paśyan prajānātha ivāparaḥ prabhuḥ । śanairjagāmātha pituḥ svalaṅkṛtaṁ gr̥haṁ mahendrālayasannibhaṁ hariḥ ॥ 29॥

29. Sri Ram smiled most sweetly and enchantingly, and watched his subjects with pleasant bewitching glances to extend his grace and charm over all of them, and make them feel happy and joyful that their Lord loves them all, individually and collectively.

Lord Ram now was like an image of Lord Vishnu himself; he resembled the Prajapati (here meaning the Lord who takes care of his subjects, a reference to the Creator Brahma).

He slowly moved towards the palace of his father (king Dasrath) which was like the palace of Indra, and was magnificently decorated for this auspicious occasion (29).

प्रविश्य वेश्मान्तरसंस्थितो मुदा रामो ववन्दे चरणौ स्वमातुः । क्रमेण सर्वाः पितृयोषितः प्रभुः ननाम भक्त्या रघुवंशकेतुः ॥ ३०॥

praviśya veśmāntarasamsthito mudā rāmo vavande caraṇau svamātuḥ । krameṇa sarvāḥ pitryōṣitaḥ prabhuḥ nanāma bhaktyā raghuvaṁśaketuḥ ॥ 30॥

30. Once inside the palace, Sri Ram showed respect to his own mother (Kaushalya) by bowing at her feet. Then the most exalted of the illustrious family of King Raghu (i.e. Sri Ram) showed similar respects to his other step-mothers (Kaikeyi and Sumitra) with due honour, politeness and humility (30).

ततो भरतमाहेदं रामः सत्यपराक्रमः ।
सर्वसम्पत्समायुक्तं मम मन्दिरमुत्तमम् ॥ ३१॥
मित्राय वानरेन्द्राय सुग्रीवाय प्रदीयताम् । सर्वेभ्यः सुखवासार्थं मन्दिराणि प्रकल्पय ॥ ३२॥ tato bharatamāhedam rāmaḥ satyaparākramaḥ । sarvasampatsamayuktaṁ mama mandiramuttamam ॥ 31॥ mitrāya vānarendrāya sugrīvāya pradīyatām । sarvebhyaḥ sukhavāsārthaṁ mandirāṇi prakalpaya ॥ 32॥

31-32. Then Sri Ram, who was most righteous, truthful, glorious and victorious, said to Bharat, 'Allot my personal palace, which is well furnished and provided for (31), to my friend Sugriv, the king of monkeys.

Likewise, show comfortable palaces to others as well.' (32).

रामेणैवं समादिष्टो भरतश्च तथाकरोत् ।
 उवाच च महातेजाः सुग्रीवं राघवानुजः ॥ ३३॥
 राघवस्याभिषेकार्थं चतुःसिन्धुजलं शुभम् ।
 आनेतुं प्रेषयस्वाशु दूतांस्त्वरितविक्रमान् ॥ ३४॥ rāmeṇaivam samādiṣṭo bharataśca tathākarot । uvāca ca mahātejāḥ sugrīvaṁ rāghavānujaḥ ॥ 33॥ rāghavasyābhiṣekārthaṁ catuḥsindhujalaṁ śubham । ānetuṁ preṣayasvāśu dūtāṁstvaritavikramān ॥ 34॥

33-34. Bharat did as Sri Ram had instructed him. Then the most glorious and radiant younger brother of Raghav (i.e. Bharat) said to Sugriv (33): 'Send swift messengers to bring the holy, sanctified and auspicious waters from the four oceans for the purpose of coronation ceremony of Raghav (Sri Ram)'¹. (34).

Note—¹Why did Bharat ask Sugriv to send messengers to bring holy waters from far away oceans instead of sending his own messengers of the kingdom for this errand?

Well, the answer is simple and obvious: Bharat knew that the members of the monkey race were very swift and agile as far as going to far away places was concerned, as compared to human beings. These monkeys could traverse through dense forests and climb mountains and hills easily; they could jump, hop, skip and swing across trees, rivers, ravines, valleys and other obstacles with the greatest of ease as they were accustomed to it as forest dwellers, something humans couldn't do.

There were some especially talented members in the group, one obvious example was Hanuman, who could even fly in the sky and perform other formidable deeds that no human would be able to do. Further, by this time Bharat had been acquainted of the way these monkeys and bears had been dispatched by Sugriv to all corners of the world to search for Sita, and how they had managed to successfully find her in the far away island kingdom of Lanka.

Besides this, the monkeys were all well acquainted with far away places and their geography because they lived in forests and the wild spread all over the world, something that would make it easier for them to go and bring water from these rare places, most of them unknown and inaccessible to the messengers of Ayodhya.

All these factors added up in favour of the monkeys, and so Bharat requested Sugriv to dispatch some competent fellow to bring the waters.]

प्रेषयामास सुग्रीवो जाम्बवन्तं मरुत्सुतम् ।
 अङ्गदं च सुषेणं च ते गत्वा वायुवेगतः ॥ ३५॥
 जलपूर्णान् शातकुम्भकलशांश्च समानयन् ।
 आनीतं तीर्थसलिलं शत्रुघ्नो मन्त्रिभिः सह ॥ ३६॥

राघवस्याभिषेकार्थं वसिष्ठाय न्यवेदयत् ।
 ततस्तु प्रयतो वृद्धो वसिष्ठो ब्राह्मणैः सह ॥ ३७॥
 रामं रत्नमये पीठे ससीतं संन्यवेशयत् ।
 वसिष्ठो वामदेवश्च जाबालिर्गौतमस्तथा ॥ ३८॥
 वाल्मीकिश्च तथा चक्रुः सर्वे रामाभिषेचनम् । कुशाग्रतुलसीयुक्तपुण्यगन्धजलैर्मुदा ॥ ३९॥ preṣayāmāsa sugrīvo jāmbavantam marutsutam । aṅgadam ca suṣeṇam ca te gatvā vāyuvegataḥ ॥ 35॥ jalapūrṇān śātakumbhakalaśāṃśca samānayan । ānītam tīrthasalilam śatrughno mantribhiḥ saha ॥ 36॥ rāghavasyābhiṣekārtham vasiṣṭhāya nyavedayat । tatastu prayato vṛddho vasiṣṭho brāhmaṇaiḥ saha ॥ 37॥ rāmaṃ ratnamaye pīṭhe sasītam saṃnyaveśayat । vasiṣṭho vāmadevaśca jābāligautamastathā ॥ 38॥ vālmīkiśca tathā cakruḥ sarve rāmābhiṣecanam । kuśāgratulasīyuktapūṇyagandhajalairmudā ॥ 39॥

35-39. Then Sugriv sent Jamvant, Maruti (Hanuman), Angad and Sushen for this purpose. They went thither with the speed and great swiftness, like that of the wind (35), and brought the requisitioned water in golden pots.

Shatrughan, accompanied by the ministers, gave that sanctified water brought from different holy places (36) to Vashistha (the royal priest) for the purpose of performance of the ritual for Lord Sri Ram's coronation.

Then, accompanied by Brahmins, the self restrained and aged Vashistha (37) seated Sri Ram and Sita on a gem-studded throne.

Sages Vashistha, Vamdeo, Jabali, Gautam, Valmiki, and all other sages and seers who had assembled on the auspicious occasion, most cheerfully and delightedly anointed Lord Sri Ram on the throne of Ayodhya as its King by sprinkling the sanctified, holy and perfumed water, in which floated the leaves of the holy Tulsi (Basil) plant, on him with the help of a brush made of soft blades of the Kush grass (amid chanting of holy Mantras from the scriptures) (39).

अभ्यषिञ्चन् रघुश्रेष्ठं वासवं वसवो यथा ।
 ऋत्विग्भिर्ब्राह्मणैः श्रेष्ठैः कन्याभिः सह मन्त्रिभिः ॥ ४०॥
 सर्वोषधिरसैश्चैव दैवतैर्नभसि स्थितैः । चतुर्भिर्लोकपालैश्च स्तुवद्भिः सगणैस्तथा ॥ ४१॥

abhyaṣiñcan raghuśreṣṭham vāsavam vasavo yathā । ṛtvigbhirbrāhmaṇaiḥ śreṣṭhaiḥ kanyābhiḥ saha mantribhiḥ ॥ 40॥ sarvauṣadhirasaiścaiva daivatairnabhasi sthitaiḥ । caturbhirlokapālaiśca stuvadbhiḥ sagaṇaistathā ॥ 41॥

40-41. Then those great sages, accompanied by Ritwiks (who are a special category of Brahmins amongst the priestly class, who are experts in performance of religious sacrifices), other Brahmins (i.e. those Brahmins who are not Ritwiks), the best of damsels, and all the ministers prayed to and paid their obeisance to the different Gods who had assembled in the sky to witness this auspicious occasion.

Likewise, all the senior custodians of the world, called the ‘Lokpals’, and their juniors were also honoured simultaneously.

Thereafter, the sages once again anointed Sri Ram, who was the best in the illustrious family of King Raghu, by sprinkling the essence (juice, extract) of all the medicinal herbs (which are used during religious ceremonies) over him, just like Indra had been anointed by the Vasus¹ at the time of his coronation as the king of gods in heaven (40-41).

[Note—¹The “Vasus” are demi-Gods numbering eight in number. They are equivalent to the Ritwiks of the terrestrial world.]

छत्रं च तस्य जग्राह शत्रुघ्नः पाण्डुरं शुभम् ।
सुग्रीवरक्षसेन्द्रौ तौ दधतुः श्वेतचामरे ॥ ४२॥
मालां च काञ्चनीं वायुर्ददौ वासवचोदितः ।
सर्वरत्नसमायुक्तं मणिकाञ्चनभूषितम् ॥ ४३॥
ददौ हारं नरेन्द्राय स्वयं शक्रस्तु भक्तिः । प्रजगुर्देवगन्धर्वा ननृतुश्चाप्सरोगणाः ॥ ४४॥

chatraṃ ca tasya jagrāha śatrughnaḥ pāṇḍuraṃ śubham । sugrīvarākṣasendrau tau dadhatuḥ śvetacāmare ॥ 42॥ mālāṃ ca kāñcanīṃ vāyurdadau vāsavacoditaḥ । sarvaratnasamāyuktaṃ maṇikāñcanabhūṣitaṃ ॥ 43॥ dadau hāraṃ narendrāya svayaṃ śakrastu bhaktiḥ । prajagurdevagandharvā nanṛtuścāpsarogaṇāḥ ॥ 44॥

42-44. At this time, Shatrughan—who is the vanquisher of enemies—installed (held, placed) a most magnificent, auspicious and beautiful light yellow ceremonial umbrella over the head of Lord Sri Ram, while Sugriv and Vibhishan held white whisks in their hands (as they stood on either side of the Lord) (42).

At the request of Indra, the wind-god (Maruti) offered a golden garland to the Lord, while Indra himself devotionally offered him a golden necklace that was richly studded with all the gems and jewels that he could select from the treasury of the gods.

Thereafter, the Gods and Gandharvas (celestial musicians) began singing ceremonial songs of adulation and felicitation in honour of Lord Ram, while the Apsaras (female dancers and singers of heaven) began dancing in merry abundance (43-44).

देवदुन्दुभयो नेदुः पुष्पवृष्टिः पपात खात् । नवदूर्वादलश्यामं पद्मपत्रायतेक्षणम् ॥ ४५॥

रविकोटिप्रभायुक्तकिरीटेन विराजितम् ।
 कोटिकन्दर्पलावण्यं पीताम्बरसमावृतम् ॥ ४६॥
 दिव्याभरणसम्पन्नं दिव्यचन्दनलेपनम् । अयुतादित्यसङ्काशं द्विभुजं रघुनन्दनम् ॥ ४७॥ devadundubhayo neduḥ puṣpavrṣṭiḥ papāta khāt । navadūrvādalaśyāmaṁ padmapatrāyatekṣaṇam ॥ 45॥ ravikoṭiprabhāyuktakirīṭena virājitaṁ । koṭikandarpalāvaṇyaṁ pītāambarasamāvṛtaṁ ॥ 46॥ divyābharaṇasampannaṁ divyacandanalepanam । ayutādityasaṅkāśaṁ dvibhujaṁ raghunandanam ॥ 47॥

45-47. There was a rapturous cacophony and tumultuous din of kettledrums played by the Gods in the sky, while flowers rained down everywhere.

[The following lines describe the magnificent image of Lord Sri Ram and Sita as they sat on the throne at that time—]

Lord Sri Ram was dark complexioned like the colour of newly plucked Durba grass. He had broad eyes like the petals of a lotus flower (45); he was adorned with a crown which was as splendid, bright and dazzling as millions of suns shining together; he was beautiful, attractive and charming to behold as if millions of Kamdeo-cupids have revealed themselves in his beauteous form.

The Lord wore a Pitambar (46); he was adorned with magnificent ornaments and divine garments and ceremonial robes; he had a paste of sandalwood rubbed all over his body; he was as splendid and radiant as a thousand suns put together.

To wit, Lord Ram, the illustrious son in the great family of King Raghu (Raghunandan), looked most majestic, dignified, honourable and adorable in his two-armed human form¹ (47).

[Note—¹A special mention of the ‘two arms’ of Lord Ram here is to remind the observer, as well as the reader of this magnificent Story, that this form of Lord Ram was a human manifestation of Lord Vishnu who has ‘four arms’. This fact being understood, all other things become easily understandable. It is because Lord Vishnu is the Lord of the world, the Supreme Being, and hence all the glories, virtues and honours that are shown to belong to Lord Ram are natural to him inasmuch as his primary form is that of Lord Vishnu, and not a human being.]

वामभागे समासीनां सीतां काञ्चनसन्निभाम् ।
 सर्वाभरणसम्पन्नां वामाङ्के समुपस्थिताम् ॥ ४८॥
 रक्तोत्पलकराम्भोजां वामेनालिङ्ग्य संस्थिताम् ।
 सर्वातिशयशोभाढ्यं दृष्ट्वा भक्तिसमन्वितः ॥ ४९॥
 उमया सहितो देवः शङ्करो रघुनन्दनम् । सर्वदेवगणैर्युक्तः स्तोतुं समुपचक्रे ॥ ५०॥ vāmabhāge samāsināṁ sītāṁ kāñcanasannibhām । sarvābharaṇasampannāṁ vāmāṅke samupasthitām ॥ 48॥ raktotpalakarāmbhojāṃ vāmenāliṅgya samsthitam । sarvātiśayaśobhāḍhyaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā bhaktisamanvitaḥ ॥ 49॥ umayā sahito devaḥ śaṅkaro raghunandanam । sarvadevagaṇairyuktaḥ stotuṃ samupacakrame ॥ 50॥

48-50. To the left of him (Sri Ram) was seated Sita; she had a complexion resembling the colour of gold. She was fully decorated with ornaments and ceremonial clothes befitting the occasion (48), and held a red lotus in her lotus-like hands.

Sri Ram had placed his left arm on her shoulders. Seeing them seated in this posture, Lord Shiva, along with Uma (his consort, goddess Parvati), was full of devotion and affection for the Lord.

Then he (Shiva), along with all other Gods, praised Lord Ram and offered his obeisance to him (49-50).

[Note—Verse nos. 9-50 describe the preparation and the actual coronation ceremony of Lord Sri Ram as the King of Ayodhya.]

एवं महोरगाः सिद्धाः किन्नरा मरुतस्तथा ॥ ७०॥
 वसवो मुनयो गावो गुह्यकाश्च पतत्रिणः ।
 अपूजापतयश्चैते तथा चाप्सरसां गणाः ॥ ७१॥
 सर्वे रामं समासाद्य दृष्ट्वा नेत्रमहोत्सवम् ।
 स्तुत्वा पृथक् पृथक् सर्वे राघवेणाभिवन्दिताः ॥ ७२॥

evaṃ mahoragāḥ siddhāḥ kinnarā marutastathā ॥ 70॥ vasavo munayo gāvo guhyakāśca patattriṇaḥ । saprajāpatayaścaite tathā cāpsarasāṃ gaṇāḥ ॥ 71॥ sarve rāmaṃ samāsādyā dr̥ṣṭvā netramahotsavam । stutvā pr̥thak pr̥thak sarve rāghaveṇābhivanditāḥ ॥ 72॥

70-72. In a similar manner, the great legendary serpent (Sheshnath), Siddhas (mystics), the Kinnars (celestial dancers and singers), Marut (the wind-god) (70), Vasu (one of the demi-Gods who has eight subordinates under him; see also verse no. 41), sages/seers/hermits, holy cows (representing all the peaceful and docile animals), cave dwellers (such as lions, bears etc., as well as ascetics), birds, Prajapati (the guardians or custodians of the subjects created by Brahma), and groups of Apsaras (celestial courtesans) (71)—all of them came to visit Lord Sri Ram and had an auspicious view of the Lord whose sight is so rewarding that it enhances the pleasures and privileges that a creature has of being able to see with his eyes¹.

They prayed to him collectively as well as individually, and went back to their respective abodes after being duly honoured and shown respect by the Lord (72).

[Note—¹To wit, the Lord's charming and auspicious form delights the beholder so much that he thanks his creator that the latter has given him eyes with which he could enjoy this privilege, because no other organ would enable a creature to derive this pleasure except the eye. Thus, the visitors were extremely ecstatic and thrilled with joy as they viewed Lord Ram sitting on the throne, as this sight was so divine and sublime to behold, and so ethereal to experience, that it was a virtual treat and literally a feast for the eye of all those who beheld him as they stood mesmerized and enthralled before the Lord. Even while they said their prayers, their eyes were riveted on the bewitchingly beauteous form of Lord Ram, a form that embodied all the beauty and charm of Mother Nature by which she has captivated and enthralled the mind of poets and the heart of painters from time immemorial.]

ययुः स्वं स्वं पदं सर्वे ब्रह्मरुद्रादयस्तथा ।
प्राशंसन्तो मुदा रामं गायन्तस्तस्य चेष्टितम् ॥ ७३॥
ध्यायन्तस्त्वभिषेकार्द्रं सीतालक्ष्मणसंयुतम् ।
सिंहासनस्थं राजेन्द्रं ययुः सर्वे हृदि स्थितम् ॥ ७४॥

yayuh svam svam padam sarve brahmarudrādayastathā । praśamsanto mudā rāmaṁ gāyantastasya ceṣṭitam ॥ 73॥ dhyāyantastvabhiṣekārdraṁ sītālakṣmaṇasaṁyutam । siṁhāsanasthaṁ rājendraṁ yayuh sarve hṛdi sthitam ॥ 74॥

73-74. After that, Brahma (the creator), Shiva (Rudra; the concluder) and others (including the great sages and seers who had come to attend Lord Ram's coronation ceremony) also went back to their respective abodes, all the while praising the glories of Lord Sri Ram and admiring the Lord's virtues very fondly, cheerfully and happily on their way back home. They cheerfully sang verses in honour of the Lord and the deeds done by him (73), remembering the glorious, divine and majestic view of the Lord, who was a King amongst Kings, as they saw him seated on the throne at the time of his coronation, along with Sita to his left and Laxman to his right.

Having enshrined that stupendously beautiful and enchanting image of the Lord in their hearts, the illustrious guests of honour took leave of the Lord to go their way (74).

खे वाद्येषु ध्वनत्सु प्रमुदितहृदयैर्देववृन्दैः स्तुवद्भिः
वर्षद्भिः पुष्पवृष्टिं दिवि मुनिनिकरैरीड्यमानः समन्तात् ।
रामः श्यामः प्रसन्नस्मितरुचिरमुखः सूर्यकोटिप्रकाशः
सीतासौमित्रिवातात्मजमुनिहरिभिः सेव्यमानो विभाति ॥ ७५॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे
पञ्चदशः सर्गः ॥ १५॥

khe vādyeṣu dhvanatsu pramuditahṛdayairdevavṛndaiḥ stuvadbhiḥ varṣadbhiḥ puṣpavṛṣṭiṁ divi muninikarairīḍyamānaḥ samantāt । rāmaḥ śyāmaḥ prasannasmitaruciramukhaḥ sūryakoṭiprakāśaḥ sītāsaumitrivātātmajamuniharibhiḥ sevyamāno vibhāti ॥ 75॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
pañcadaśaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 15॥

75. At the time when there was a rapturous and tumultuous cacophony of various musical instruments in the sky (heavens), the Gods jubilantly showered flowers from the sky as they were overwhelmed with ecstasy and joy; they joined to chant adulatory hymns in honour of Lord Ram with extreme devotion.

Meanwhile on the ground, large groups of learned sages, hermits and seers stood everywhere and sang praises in honour of the Lord.

Lord Sri Ram—who had a dark complexion, smiled pleasantly with a cheerful face, looked as splendid, radiant and glorious as countless of suns shining together—was being served (attended) by Sita (his wife), Laxman (son of Sumitra, his younger brother), Hanuman (the son of the wind-god and his faithful devotee), many sages, seers and hermits, as well as the monkeys (who had come with the Lord on the plane).

The Lord looked most charming and radiant, adorable and magnificent, elegant and stupendous (as he sat on the throne during the coronation ceremony, symbolizing his anointment as the Lord of all his subjects)¹ (75).

[Note—¹The symbolism of Lord Ram’s coronation as the King of Ayodhya is very clearly remarked in this verse—Lord Ram was now not only made a King of Ayodhya and charged with the responsibility of taking care of his subjects in this kingdom, but also as an Emperor of the world at large, both the mortal world on earth as well as the immortal world of the heaven. Nay, not only this, the Lord was anointed as the Supreme Lord of the entire creation of which the heavens and the earth and the nether worlds are the three divisions. Indeed it was so, as Lord Ram was none but Lord Vishnu in a human form, and Lord Vishnu is called the ‘Viraat Purush’, the form of the Supreme Lord that has a cosmic dimension, as his rule extends to the farthest corners of this creation.]

Thus ends Canto 15 of Yuddha / Lanka Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the discourse that Lord Shiva gave to his divine consort, goddess Uma.

-----**-----

Section 21.3: Geetawali Ramayan

Lanka Kand, verse nos. 17-23; Uttar Kand, verse no. 20

This beautiful and concluding episode of the present Book titled ‘The Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka’, which narrates Lord Ram’s triumphant return to Ayodhya, his warm and enthusiastic reception by Bharat and all the citizens, the festivities in the city to celebrate this happy occasion, and the Lord’s coronation as the King of Ayodhya, has been wonderfully narrated in Tulsidas’ classic version of the story of the Ramayana, viz. the ‘Geetawali Ramayan’.

As the reader is well acquainted, we have been reading extensively from this classic all throughout our narrative, and so let us wind up this wonderful Story by reading how these events are narrated in some selected verses of Geetawali Ramayan, for example, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 17-23, and Uttar Kand, verse no. 20.

Sub-section 21.3.1: Geetawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos.17-23:

अयोध्यामें प्रतीक्षा
राग आसावरी
(6 / 17)

अवधि आजु किधौं औरो दिन हैहै ।
चढ़ि धौरहर बिलोकि दखिन दिसि, बूझ धौं पथिक कहाँते आये वै हैं ॥ 1 ॥
बहुरि बिचारि हारि हिय सोचति, पुलकि गात लागे लोचन चैहैं ।
निज बासरनि बरष पुरवैगो बिधि, मेरे तहाँ करत कठिन कृत क्यैहैं ॥ 2 ॥
बन रघुबीर, मातु गृह जीवति, निलज प्रान सुनि सुनि सुख स्वैहैं ।
तुलसिदास मो—सी कठोर—चित कुलिस सालभंजनि को है है ॥ 3 ॥

ayōdhyāmēm pratīkṣā
rāga āsāvarī
(6/17)

avadhi āju kidhauṁ aurō dina hvaihai.
caḍhi dhaurahara bilōki dakhina disi, būjha dhauṁ pathika kahāmtē āyē vai haim..1..
bahuri bicāri hāri hiya sōcati, pulaki gāta lāgē lōcana cvaihaim.
nija bāsarani baraṣa puravaigō bidhi, mērē tahām karata kaṭhina kṛta vkaihaim.. 2..
bana raghubīra, mātu gr̥ha jīvati, nilaja prāna suni suni sukha svaihaim.
tulasidāsa mō-sī kaṭhōra-cita kulisa sālabhañjani kō hvaihai.. 3..

The Wait in Ayodhya for Lord Ram's return -I

Verse no. 6/17—When the days of exile were almost over, mother Kaushalya became very anxious about Lord Ram's return. She broods and became pensive. She wonders: 'Why, does the period of exile end today, or are some more days left?'

Then going to the roof of her palace and looking southwards, she sights some pedestrians approaching the city. Seeing them, she orders one of her attendants to find out from where those people are coming (1).

Then realising that the last day of the exile period is yet to come, her heart fills with gloom and despair, her body is thrilled, tears roll down her eyes, she feels distraught and speaks poignantly to herself, 'It appears that the Vidhata (the Creator Brahma) shall count those fourteen years according to his own calculations (because, Brahma's days are equivalent to hundreds of thousands of earth days, and so it appears that the days are getting longer and longer, and the wait for Lord Ram seems not to come to an end).

Verily, it's a very long time for me to wait any longer (2).

Oh, "Ram is in the forest and his mother enjoys the comforts of home"—now this shameless life of mine has to bear this ignominy for the rest of my life! Well, where else can there be a heartless and emotionless statue like that of me?' (3).

(6 / 18)

आली, अब राम—लषन कित है हैं।
चित्रकूट तज्यौ तबतें न लही सुधि, बधू—समेत कुसल सुत द्वै हैं॥ 1॥
बारि बयारि, बिषम हिम—आतप सहि बिनु बसन भूमितल स्वै हैं।
कंद—मूल, फल—फूल असन बन, भोजन समय मिलत कैसे वैहैं॥ 2॥
जिन्हहि बिलोकि सोचिहैं लता—द्रुम, खग—मृग—मुनि लोचन जल चैहैं।
तुलसिदास तिन्हकी जननी हौं, मो—सी निठुर—चित औरो कहूँ हैहैं॥ 3॥

(6/18)

ālī, aba rāma-laṣana kita hvai hairm.
citrakūṭa tajyau tabatēm na lahī sudhi, badhū-samēta kusala suta dvai hairm..
1..
bāri bayāri, biṣama hima-ātapa sahi binu basana bhūmitala svai hairm.
kanda-mūla, phala-phūla asana bana, bhōjana samaya milata kaisē vaihairm..
2..
jinhahi bilōki sōcihairm latā-druma, khaga-mṛga-muni lōcana jala cvaihairm.
tulasidāsa tinhakī janani haurm, mō-sī niṭhura-cita aurō kahum hvaihairm.. 3..

The Wait in Ayodhya for Lord Ram's return -II

Verse no. 6/18—[Kaushalya addresses one of her close confidantes—] 'Oh Friend! Where would Ram and Laxman be at this moment (do you have any idea about it)? Ever since they left Chitrakoot, there is no news or information about them. Are my two sons alright with my daughter-in-law (Sita)'¹? (1).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Ayodhya Kand, verse no. 2/41—2/42.]

They must be coping (bearing) with the vagaries of Nature: rain, wind, and extremes of cold and heat; they have no proper clothes to wear, and would be compelled to lie down on the bare ground without any cover.

In the forest, only roots, stems, fruits and some varieties of edible flowers are available to eat, and that too are not available at all times (and easily), do they? (2).

Even creepers and trees would be anguished and remorseful seeing their pathetic condition, while the birds, the animals, the sages and the hermits shed tears at their miseries and woes. But the greatest irony is this: I am their mother! Alas! Is there anyone as stone-hearted as me? [To wit, even trees, animals and birds feel their pain; even sages and hermits shed tears for them. And here I am, their unfortunate mother—my eyes are dry of tears (because all have dried up), and my heart has turned into a stone (as it is benumbed with grief) so much so that I can't even wail and weep).]' (3).

राग सोरठ
(6/19)

बैठी सगुन मनावति माता ।
कब ऐहैं मेरे बाल कुसल घर, कहहु, काग ! फुरि बाता ॥ 1 ॥
दूध-भातकी दोनी दैहौं, सोने चोंच मढ़ैहौं ।
जब सिय-सहित बिलोकि नयन भरि राम-लषन उर लैहौं ॥ 2 ॥
अवधि समीप जानि जननी जिय अति आतुर अकुलानी ।
गनक बोलाइ, पाँय परि पूछति प्रेम मगन मृदु बानी ॥ 3 ॥
तेहि अवसर कोउ भरत निकटतें समाचार लै आयो ।
प्रभु-आगमन सुनत तुलसी मनो मीन मरत जल पायो ॥ 4 ॥

rāga sōraṭha

(6/19)

baiṭhī saguna manāvati mātā.
kaba aihairṁ mērē bāla kusala ghara, kahahu, kāga! phuri bātā.. 1..
dūdha-bhātākī dōnī daihaurṁ, sōnē cōñca maṛhaihaurṁ.
jaba siya-sahita bilōki nayana bhari rāma-laṣana ura laihaurṁ.. 2..
avadhi samīpa jāni janani jiya ati ātura akulānī.
ganaka bōlā'i, pāñya pari pūchatī prēma magana mṛdu bānī.. 3..
tēhi avasara kō'u bharata nikaṭatēm samācāra lai āyō.
prabhu-āgamana sunata tulasī manō mīna marata jala pāyō.. 4..

The Wait in Ayodhya for Lord Ram's return -III

Verse no. 6/19—[Mother Kaushalya sights a crow and talks with it. It is believed that when one eagerly awaits some news about a dear person and a crow comes to call and begins to crow, there is surely some good news coming in. It is an auspicious omen.]

The mother looks for good omens. She says, 'Oh crow! Tell me the truth: when shall my children come back home safely? (1).

When I embrace my beloved Ram-Sita and Laxman and see them till my eyes are satisfied (i.e. see them to my heart's content), I shall feed you milk and rice, and get your beak decorated (plated) with gold.' (2).

Then as the final days of exile draw nearer, she summons a soothsayer (an astrologer), and falling at his feet, overwhelmed as she was with sadness and emotions, she asks him to prophesize when Lord Ram is going to come back (3).

Just at that time a messenger arrived from Bharat's place with the news of Lord Ram's arrival.

Tulsidas says that as soon as she heard about Ram's arrival from his mouth, her condition was like a fish, on the verge of dying, but being restored to water just at the last moment (4).

राग गौरी
(6 / 20)

छेमकरी ! बलि, बोलि सुबानी ।
कुसल छेम सिय राम—लषन कब ऐहैं, अंब ! अवध राजधानी ॥ 1 ॥
ससिमुखि, कुंकुम—बरनि, सुलोचनि, मोचनि सोचनि बेद बखानी ।
देवि ! दया करि देहि दरसफल, जोरि पानि बिनवहिं सब रानी ॥ 2 ॥
सुनि सनेहमय बचन, निकट है, मंजुल मंडल कै मड़रानी ।
सुभ मंगल आनंद गगन—धुनि अकनि—अकनि उर—जरनि जुड़ानी ॥ 3 ॥
फरकन लगे सुअंग बिदिसि दिसि, मन प्रसन्न, दुख—दसा सिरानी ।
करहिं प्रनाम सप्रेम पुलकि तनु, मानि बिबिध बलि सगुन सयानी ॥ 4 ॥
तेहि अवसर हनुमान भरतसों कही सकल कल्याण—कहानी ।
तुलसिदास सोइ चाह सजीवनि बिषम बियोग ब्यथा बड़ि भानी ॥ 5 ॥

rāga gaurī

(6/20)

chēmakarī! bali, bōli subānī.
kusala chēma siya rāma-laṣana kaba aihairī, amba! avadha rājadhānī.. 1..
sasimukhi, kuṅkuma-barani, sulōcani, mōcani sōcani bēda bakhānī.
dēvi! dayā kari dēhi darasaphala, jōri pāni binavahirī saba rānī.. 2..
suni sanēhamaya bacana, nikaṭa hvai, mañjula maṇḍala kai maṛarānī.
subha maṅgala ānanda gagana-dhuni akani-akani ura-jarani juṛānī.. 3..
pharakana lagē su'aṅga bidisi disī, mana prasanna, dukha-dasā sirānī.
karaḥirī pranāma saprēma pulaki tanu, māni bibidha bali saguna sayānī.. 4..
tēhi avasara hanumāna bharatasōm kahī sakala kalyāna-kahānī.
tulasidāsa sō'i cāha sajīvani biṣama biyōga byathā baḍi bhānī.. 5..

The Wait in Ayodhya for Lord Ram's return –IV
(Good Omen of the Red-faced Kite)

Verse no. 6/20—‘Oh Chēmakarī (a red faced kite)! I sacrifice myself on you! Oh mother (“amba”)! Tell me with your auspicious and sweet voice when will Sita, Ram and Laxman come back hale and hearty to their capital city of Ayodhya¹! (1).

[¹Chēmakarī is a bird which when sighted and heard is considered very auspicious, a portender of good fortunes and happy tidings, and its sighting is a good omen.]

Oh Goddess (dēvi)! Your face is like the moon (i.e. beautiful, charming, attractive), your countenance is red like ‘Sindoor’ (red colour put by women on the head between parted hairs and as a dot on the forehead as a sign of auspiciousness), and you have beautiful eyes.

The Vedas have described you as the one who can give relief (freedom, succour) from all sorts of sorrows, agonies, worries and troubles). So please be kind and gracious to give us the benefit of your ‘Darshan’ (auspicious sighting) and its attendant rewards (in the form of our seeing Ram, Sita and Laxman once again).’

All the queens pray to the bird in this manner (2).

Hearing their affectionate prayers (or earnest words), that Kite came nearer and began circulating overhead in an auspicious circle. Hearing its auspicious, joyful voice which portended good omens, the heat of torments and woes in the heart of the queens subsided (3).

Everyone in Ayodhya observed the Kite flying in a circle above the city. This kindled hope and joy amongst all the people. Everywhere, in all the directions, people experienced that parts of their bodies fluttered as an auspicious sign of some good that was about to happen. This filled their hearts and minds with joy and renewed hope, ending their sense of gloom and distress.

Meanwhile, Kaushalya and other clever women like her grabbed on the hope that the auspicious signs provided them, and they made liberal vows and abundant promises of doing meritorious deeds (such as making sacrifices, charities, giving alms and donations etc.) if these signs actually fructify and bear results. They became thrilled, and prayed and bowed their heads to their respective deities and gods. (4).

Just about this time, Hanuman came and conveyed all the good, happy and auspicious news (about Lord Ram’s arrival).

Tulsidas says that this ‘Sanjivani herb’ (in the shape of the good news of arrival of Lord Ram with Laxman and Sita) proved to be the rejuvenator of Bharat, and it destroyed all the terrible agonies, sorrows, anguish and torments caused by his separation from Lord Sri Ram² (5).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, all the verses that precede Doha no. 3.]

अयोध्यामें आनन्द राग धनाश्री
(6 / 21)

सुनियत सागर सेतु बँधायो।
कोसलपतिकी कुसल सकल सुधि कोउ इक दूत भरत पहुँ ल्यायो॥ 1॥

बध्यो बिराध, त्रिसिर, खर—दूषन सूर्पनखाको रूप नसायो ।
 हति कबंध, बल—अंध बालि दलि, कृपासिंधु सुग्रीव बसायो ॥ 2 ॥
 सरनागत अपनाइ बिभीषन, रावन सकुल समूल बहायो ।
 बिबुध—समाज निवाजि, बाँह दै, बंदिछोर बर बिरद कहायो ॥ 3 ॥
 एक—एकसौं समाचार सुनि नगर लोग जहँ तहँ सब धायो ।
 घन—धुनि अकनि मुदित मयूर—ज्यों, बूड़त जलधि पार—सो पायो ॥ 4 ॥
 'अवधि आजु' यौ कहत परसपर, बेगि बिमान निकट पुर आयो ।
 उत्तरि अनुज—अनुगनि समेत प्रभु गुर—द्विजगन सिर नायो ॥ 5 ॥
 जो जेहि जोग राम तेहि बिधि मिलि, सबके मन अति मोद बढ़ायो ।
 भेंटी मातु, भरत भरतानुज, क्यों कहौ प्रेम अमित अनमायो ॥ 6 ॥
 तेहि दिन मृनिबुंद अनंदित तुरत तिलकको साज सजायो ।
 महाराज रघुबंस—नाथको सादर तुलसिदास गुन गयो ॥ 7 ॥

ayōdhyāmēm ānanda

rāga dhanāśrī

(6/21)

suniyata sāgara sētu baṁdhāyō.
 kōsalapatikī kusala sakala sudhi kō'u ika dūta bharata pahaṁ lyāyō.. 1..
 badhyō birādha, trisira, khara-dūṣana sūrpanakhākō rūpa nasāyō.
 hati kabandha, bala-andha bāli dali, kṛpāsindhu sugrīva basāyō.. 2.. saranāgata apanā'i bibhīṣana, rāvana sakula samūla bahāyō.
 bibudha-samāja nivāji, bāṁha dai, bandichōra bara birada kahāyō.. 3..
 ēka-ēkasōṁ samācāra suni nagara lōga jahaṁ tahaṁ saba dhāyō.
 ghana-dhuni akani mudita mayūra-jyōm, būrata jaladhi pāra-sō pāyō.. 4..
 'avadhi āju' yaum kahata parasapara, bēgi bimāna nikaṭa pura āyō.
 utari anuja-anugani samēta prabhu gura-dvijagana sira nāyō.. 5..
 jō jēhi jōga rāma tēhi bidhi mili, sabakē mana ati mōda barhāyō.
 bhēṇṭī mātu, bharata bharatānuja, kyōm kahauṁ prēma amita anamāyō.. 6..
 tēhi dina mṛnibr̥nda anandita turata tilakakō sāja sajāyō.
 mahārāja raghubansa-nāthakō sādara tulasidāsa guna gayō.. 7..

Rejoicing & Celebrations in Ayodhya when Lord Ram returned

Verse no. 6/21—Hearing the various events and stories related to the period of Lord Ram's sojourn in the forest, the citizens of Ayodhya said, 'Why, it is heard that Lord Ram had constructed a bridge across the ocean! Some messenger had brought the news of Lord Ram's safety and welfare to Bharat (1).

It is said that Lord Ram had slayed the demons Viraadh, Khar, Dushan and Trishira; deformed or mutilated Supernakha, killed Kabandh, and subjugating the proud Baali, he has made Sugriv the king of Kiskindha (2).

Then accepting Vibhishan, who had come to seek his refuge and protection, he had destroyed Ravana (the demon king) along with his kinsmen, thereby liberating the Gods from their eternal fear of Ravana, and proved his fame as ‘the liberator and protector of all’ (3).’

This news spread like wildfire, and the citizens ran happily, exhilarated and joyous like a peacock is when it hears the rumbling of the rain-bearing dark clouds, or a drowning man when he find the sea-shore (4).

‘Today is the last day of exile’, they said, and almost as on cue, the plane¹ appeared over the sky near the city.

Disembarking from it, Lord Ram and Laxman bowed their heads to their guru Vasistha and other Brahmins² (5).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 4.

The ‘plane’ referred to here was called “Pushpak”. It belonged to Kuber, the Gods’ treasurer. Ravana had snatched it from him and kept it at Lanka. When it was time to come back from Lanka, Lord Ram had requested Vibhishan to bring this air-plane so that they can quickly return to Ayodhya by the path of the sky. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 116—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 119.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 5.]

Lord Ram met all according to their standing and status and filled their heart with joy³. Then he met Bharat, Shatrughan and mothers⁴.

Tulsidas finds no words to describe the flood of emotions, love, affections and unfathomable joy that flowed at that moment (6).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-75 that precede Doha no. 6.

Here, ‘standing and status in the society’ not only means the hierarchical position of a particular person in society, but also the level of his love and devotion for the Lord as well as the depth of sorrow on separation from Lord Ram that he had experienced. However, the point to note is that the Lord met everyone with affection, and he did not discriminate between them based on their caste, creed or clan. Albeit, he showed a little bit of more affection by exchanging pleasantries with those whom the Lord felt had suffered the agony of his separation more than others.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6 that precede Doha no. 5—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precede Doha no. 7.]

The community of saints, sages and holy men immediately made arrangement for Lord Ram's coronation.

Tulsidas also sings the song of Lord Ram's glories, and praises him according to his ability (7).

रन जीति राम राउ आए।
 सानुज सदल ससीय कुसल आजु, अवध आनंद-बधाए॥ 1॥
 अरिपुर जारि, उजारि, मारि रिपु, बिबुध सुबास बसाए। धरनि-धेनु, महिदेव-साधु, सबके सब सोच नसाए॥ 2॥
 दई लंक, थिर थपे बिभीषन, बचन-पियूष पिआए।
 सुधा सींचि कपि, कृपा नगर-नर-नारि निहारि जिआए॥ 3॥
 मिलि गुर, बंधु, मातु, जन, परिजन, भए सकल मन भाए। दरस-हरस दसचारि बरसके दुख पलमें बिसराए॥ 4॥
 बोलि सचिव सुचि, सोधि सुदिन, मुनि मंगल-साज सजाए।
 महाराज-अभिषेक बरषि सुर सुमन निसान बजाए॥ 5॥
 लै लै भेंट नृप-अहिप-लोकपति अति सनेह सिर नाए।
 पूजि, प्रीति पहिचानि राम आदरे अधिक, अपनाए॥ 6॥
 दान मान सनमानि जानि रुचि, जाचक जन पहिराए।
 गए सोक-सर सूखि, मोद-सरिता-समुद्र गड़िराए॥ 7॥
 प्रभु-प्रताप-रबि अहित-अमंगल-अघ-उलूक-तम ताए।
 किये बिसोक हित-कोक-कोकनद लोक सुजस सुभ छाए॥ 8॥
 रामराज कुलकाज सुमंगल, सबनि सबै सुख पाए।
 देहिं असीस भूमिसुर प्रमुदित, प्रजा प्रमोद बढ़ायो॥ 9॥
 आस्रम-धरम-बिभाग बेदपथ पावन लोग चलाए।
 धरम-निरत, सिय-राम-चरन-रत, मनहु राम-सिय-जाए॥ 10॥ कामधेनु महि, बिटप कामतरु, कोउ बिधि बाम न लाये।
 ते तब, अब तुलसी तेउ जिन्ह हित सहित राम-गुन गाये॥ 11॥

rājyābhiṣēka

rāga jaitaśrī

(6/22)

rana jīti rāmā rā'u ā'ē.
 sānuja sadala sasiya kusala āju, avadha ānanda-badhā'ē.. 1.. aripura jāri, ujāri, māri ripu, bibudha subāsa basā'ē.
 dharani-dhēnu, mahidēva-sādhu, sabakē saba sōca nasā'ē.. 2..
 da'ī laṅka, thira thapē bibhīṣana, bacana-piyūṣa pi'ā'ē.
 sudhā sīñci kapi, kṛpā nagara-nara-nāri nihāri ji'ā'ē.. 3..
 mili gura, bandhu, mātu, jana, parijana, bha'ē sakala mana bhā'ē.
 darasa-harasa dasacāri barasakē dukha palamēm bisarā'ē.. 4..
 bōli saciva suci, sōdhi sudina, muni maṅgala-sāja sajā'ē.
 mahārāja-abhiṣēka baraṣi sura sumana nisāna bajā'ē.. 5..
 lai lai bhēṇṭa nṛpa-ahipa-lōkapati ati sanēha sira nā'ē.
 pūji, prīti pahicāni rāma ādarē adhika, apanā'ē.. 6..
 dāna māna sanamāni jāni ruci, jācaka jana pahirā'ē.
 ga'ē sōka-sara sūkhi, mōda-sarītā-samudra gaiirā'ē.. 7..
 prabhu-pratāpa-rabi ahita-amaṅgala-agha-ulūka-tama tā'ē.
 kiyē bisōka hita-kōka-kōkanada lōka sujasa subha chā'ē.. 8..

rāmarāja kulakāja suman̄gala, sabani sabai sukha pā'ē.
 dēhim̄ asīsa bhūmisura pramudita, prajā pramōda bar̄hāyō.. 9..
 āsrama-dharama-bibhāga bēdapatha pāvana lōga calā'ē.
 dharama-nirata, siya-rāma-carana-rata, manahu rāma-siya-jā'ē..10..
 kāmādhēnu mahi, biṭapa kāmataru, kō'u bidhi bāma na lāyē.
 tē taba, aba tulasī tē'u jinha hita sahita rāma-guna gāyē..11..

Coronation of Lord Sri Ram as the Monarch of Ayodhya-I

Verse no. 6/22—[Verse nos. 6/22—6/23 describe the celebrations in Ayodhya when Lord Ram returned at the end of his fourteen years of forest exile period and achieving victory in his Lanka campaign. Preparations were made to crown him as the Monarch of the great kingdom of Ayodhya.

The present verse no. 6/22, however, briefly describes these events: of the Lord's victory at Lanka and its effects (stanza nos. 1-3), his warm welcome in Ayodhya, the celebrations that marked his arrival and his coronation as the kingdom's Monarch (stanza nos. 3-8), and the glory of the great kingdom over which he ruled, its prosperity, its lawful citizens, the general happiness and well-being that prevailed on the earth during his time (stanza nos. 9-11).

The same narration has been elaborately done in Tulsidas' epic Ram Charit Manas, in its Uttar Kand, (i) from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 3—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 20 that describe the Lord's warm welcome at Ayodhya, the celebrations and his coronation; and (ii) from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 24 that describe the glory of the kingdom of Ayodhya, its prosperity, the excellent characters of its citizens, and the general sense of happiness and well-being that pervaded on the surface of the earth.]

The Great King Ram has returned to Ayodhya after being victorious in the war (of Lanka). He is accompanied by his brother (Laxman), the army (of monkeys and bears), and Sita. That is why there are celebrations in Ayodhya¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/23, stanza no. 1.]

He (Lord Ram) has laid to waste and burnt to the ground the enemy's city (Lanka), thereby rehabilitating the Gods.

All the distress, torments, horrors and agonies of earth (created by the cruelty of the demons), the cows (who represented harmless and docile creatures who were tyrannized by the demons), the Brahmins (the elderly human beings and the wise ones) and Sadhus (pious and saintly people who were the object of cruelty unleashed by the demons) have been dispelled² (2).

[²Refer: (a) Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/16, stanza no. 4; (b) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 103.]

He has given the kingdom of Lanka to Vibhishan, installing him as a permanent king of that place³, and after reviving the dead monkeys (in the battle-field) by the rain of life-giving divine nectar (Amrit)⁴, he has come and given a new lease of life by glancing lovingly, mercifully and benevolently at the men and women of Ayodhya⁵ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 106.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 114.

⁵Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 6.]

Guru (Vasistha) brothers (Bharat, Shatrughan), mothers (Kaushalya, Sumitra and Kaikeyi), servants and kinsman met Lord Ram and all their wishes were fulfilled⁶—they forgot the sufferings of fourteen years of separation on seeing their Lord once again (4).

[⁶Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 5—to Doha no. 8 that describe Lord Ram meeting everyone at Ayodhya, viz. his Guru, brothers and mothers; and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 10 that specifically says that Lord Ram went and met Kaikeyi to remove traces of ill-will and help mutual rapprochement and reconciliation.]

Sage Vasistha summoned Sumantra and other ministers who had wisdom and noble thoughts, and ordered them to find out an auspicious day and time, as well as collect all the needed materials that are required for the auspicious occasion of the coronation ceremony of Lord Ram⁷.

At the time of Lord Ram's coronation, Gods showered flowers and sounded trumpets and other musical instruments to celebrate this happy occasion⁸ (5).

[⁷Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 10 and Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede it.

⁸Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 12.]

All the invited kings, knights, land-lords, nobles, grandees and lok-patis (a title similar to a king) had assembled on the auspicious occasion of the coronation of Lord Ram. They offered various gifts on the occasion, and bowed their heads. Lord Ram gave them full due respect, and accepted their offerings⁹ (6).

[⁹Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/23, stanza no. 3 herein below.]

Then he donated liberally and respectfully to alms-seekers and Brahmins according to their wishes and desires, satisfying them to the full¹⁰. This dried up their pond of distress, as it were, (i.e. all their wants and desires were removed), and the river and ocean of happiness became deep (i.e. they all became deeply contented) (7).

[¹⁰Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 12; (ii) Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 15.]

The owl of sins, vices and darkness representing malevolence and un-holiness, disappeared. The Chakva-Chakvi (a pair of birds symbolising pure quality of love) and the Lotus (symbolising pureness and detachment) became free of distress.

The fame of Lord Ram spread throughout the world¹¹ (8).

[¹¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 22.]

{The following stanzas, nos. 9-11, describe in brief the glory and the majesty of the reign of Lord Ram. Refer also to: (a) Geetawali, Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/1; and (b) Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 24.}

In the reign of Lord Ram, the entire world remained holy and incorrupt. All the living beings enjoyed all possible types of joy, happiness and comfort. And the Brahmins used to give their blessings for the prosperity of the citizens (9).

Lord Ram divided the society according to the sanctions of the Vedas into various 'Ashrams' (segments of life), and made the people follow this sanctified way of life¹². All the people were righteous and noble in their conduct¹³ as if they were all born from Lord Ram himself (10).

[¹²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 20; Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 21.

There are four "Ashrams" in Hindu society. The life of a Hindu man is divided into four segments or sections of roughly twenty-five years each. These are called the 'Ashrams'. They are the following—(a) Brahmacharya—this is the 1st phase of life in which a person studies the scriptures under the tutelage of a wise teacher. This phase of life is marked by austerities, keeping of vows, observing celibacy, abstinence and continence as well as leading a regimental life style of a boarding school. (b) Grihasta—when a person has studied and prepared himself to face the world, he comes back to his house and enters the 2nd phase called Grihasta Ashram which is a householder's life. He marries, raises a family, produces wealth and helps to carry forward the cycle of creation. This is the most important and enjoyable phase as well as the most tough one because on the one hand there are the comforts and pleasure of the world to be enjoyed, and on the other hand there are the various tribulations and miseries of a family life alongside the dealings with this deceptive world with all its accompanying horrifying problems. (c) Vanprastha—this is the 3rd phase when a man hands over the responsibilities of the world to his heirs and renounces his attachments to the house as well as the world, and heads for the forest, leaving the home for his next generation. It is now that he goes on pilgrimage and prepares for the final stage of his life, and (d) Sanyas—this is the 4th and last stage of life when there is complete cutting-off of all the ties with the world, spending time in contemplation and meditation, living a life of total renunciation, and begging for food for survival while single mindedly endeavouring for emancipation and salvation. This phase of Sanyas also has many stages depending upon the spiritual elevation and accomplishments of the aspirant, viz. Kutichak, Bahudak, Hansa, Paramhans, Turiyatit and Avadhut.

¹³Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 21.]

The earth became like the mythical Kamdhenu cow¹⁴ (i.e. the earth provided all the necessities of life and there was an abundance of everything), and the trees were like the mythical Kalpa Tree (the all wishful-filling tree of the Gods that gave abundance of fruits, flowers, seeds, vegetables, shade, wood for buildings, and firewood). The Creator was benevolent towards all¹⁵.

Tulsidas says this was (with respect to stanza nos. 7-10) true not only then, but even today—all those who devote themselves selflessly to Lord Ram, get the same happiness as that prevailed in the time of Lord Ram himself (11).

[¹⁴Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/23, stanza no. 5; verse no. 6/23, stanza no. 5; Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/1, stanza no. 3.

¹⁵Refer: (a) Geetawali, Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/1, stanza no. 3; (b) Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 23 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede it.]

राग टोड़ी
(6 / 23)

आजु अवध आनंद-बधावन, रिपु रन जीति राम आए।
सजि सुबिमान निसान बजावत मुदित देव देखन धाए॥ 1॥
घर-घर चारु चौक, चंदन-मनि, मंगल-कलस सबनि साजे।
ध्वज-पताक, तोरन, बितानबर, बिबिध भौंति बाजन बाजे॥ 2॥
राम-तिलक सुनि दीप दीपके नृप आए उपहार लिये। सीयसहित आसीन सिंहासन निरखि जोहारत हरष हिये॥ 3॥
मंगलगान, बेदधुनि, जयधुनि, मुनि-असीस-धुनि भुवन भरे।
बरषि सुमन सुर-सिद्ध प्रसंसत, सबके सब संताप हरे॥ 4॥
राम-राज भइ कामधेनु महि, सुख संपदा लोक छाए। जनम जनम जानकीनाथके गुनगन तुलसिदास गाये॥ 5॥

rāga ṭōṛī
(6/23)

āju avadha ānanda-badhāvana, ripu rana jīti rāma ā'ē.
saji subimāna nisāna bajāvata mudita dēva dēkhana dhā'ē.. 1..
ghara-ghara cāru cauka, candana-mani, maṅgala-kalasa sabani sājē.
dhvaja-patāka, tōrana, bitānabara, bibidha bhāṁti bājana bājē.. 2..
rāma-tilaka suni dīpa dīpakē nṛpa ā'ē upahāra liyē.
sīyasahita āsīna sinhāsana nirakhi jōhārata haraṣa hiyē.. 3.. maṅgalagāna, bēdadhuni, jayadhuni, muni-asīsa-dhuni bhuvana bharē.
baraṣi sumana sura-sid'dha prasansata, sabakē saba santāpa harē.. 4..
rāma-rāja bha'i kāmadhēnu mahi, sukha sampadā lōka chā'ē.
janama janama jānakīnāthakē gunagana tulasidāsa gāyē.. 5..

Coronation of Lord Sri Ram as the Monarch of Ayodhya-II

Verse no. 6/23—The Great King Lord Sri Ram has won victory over the enemy and has come back. This is why there is rejoicing, merriment, festivities and celebrations in Ayodhya¹.

The Gods have decorated their beautiful aerial vehicles, and playing their musical instruments, they are rushing forward, happily and cheerfully as they are exhilarated to see him (Sri Ram) back in Ayodhya and become its King-Emperor² (1).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/22, stanza no. 1; Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/23.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 11, ga.]

In every household of the city, attractive ritualistic designs shaped like squares and rectangles have been painted on the ground with a paste made out of sandal-wood, and these have been decorated with gems to enhance their beauty.

Everyone has put up auspicious and colourful flags, banners, buntings, arches and other celebratory paraphernalia, while various types of musical instruments are being played here and there, everywhere, in the city³ (2).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 9.]

Hearing about the coronation of Lord Sri Ram, kings, knights, nobles and grandees from far-off and nearby continents and islands have come, carrying with them gifts for the Lord⁴.

Seeing him (Sri Ram) on throne alongside Sita, they pay their respects to him in a most delightful and cheerful manner. All of them are exhilarated in their hearts upon seeing the Lord on the throne (of Ayodhya) (3).

[⁴Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/22, stanza no. 6.]

All the abodes of the city, and by extension, all the corners of the realm and the world, are reverberating with auspicious and delightful songs, chanting of the Vedic hymns, and the applause and blessings of sages, hermits and seers⁵.

The Gods and Siddhas (mystics, those who possess special powers) shower flowers and praise the Lord⁶.

The Lord, on his part, has removed all the sorrows and miseries of everyone⁷. (4).

[⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 12.

⁶Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 and Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 12; and (b) Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/22, stanza no. 5.

⁷Lord Ram ensured that everyone was happy and contented. No sorrow or grief of any kind was allowed to survive in Ayodhya once the Lord ascended the throne. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Doha no. 21 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.]

The earth has become like a Kamdhenu cow⁸ (i.e. it gives all the desired yields in the form of crops, fruits, flowers, rainfall, minerals, gems, wealth and prosperity) in the reign of Sri Ram, and happiness and prosperity has spread over all the Lokas (worlds)⁹.

Tulsidas says that he has been singing the glories, the virtues, the great fame and the great deeds of the Lord of Sita (i.e. Sri Ram) in all the births he has taken (5).

[⁸Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/22, stanza no. 11; verse no. 6/23, stanza no. 5; Uttar Kand, stanza no. 3.

⁹Refer: (a) Geetawali, Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/1, stanza no. 1; (b) Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 24.]

Sub-section 21.3.2: Geetawali Ramayan, Uttar Kand, verse no. 20:

दीपमालिका
राग आसावरी
(7 / 20)

साँझ समय रघुबीर—पुरीकी सोभा आजु बनी।
ललित दीपमालिका बिलोकहिं हित करि अवधधनी॥ 1॥
फटिक—भीत—सिखरन—पर राजति कंचन—दीप—अनी।
जनु अहिनाथ मिलन आयो मनि—सोभित सहसफनी॥ 2॥
प्रति मंदिर कलसनिपर भ्राजहिं मनिगन दुति अपनी।
मानहुँ प्रगटि बिपुल लोहितपुर पठइ दिये अवनी॥ 3॥
घर घर मंगलचार एकरस हरषित रंक—गनी। तुलसिदास कल कीरति गावहिं, जो कलिमल—समनी॥ 4॥ dīpamālikā

rāga āsāvārī
(7/20)

sām̐jha samaya raghubīra-purīkī sōbhā āju banī.
lalita dīpamālikā bilōkahim hita kari avadhadhanī.. 1..
phaṭika-bhīta-sikharana-para rājati kañcana-dīpa-anī.
janu ahinātha milana āyō mani-sōbhita sahasaphanī.. 2..
prati mandira kalasanipara bhrājahim manigana duti apanī.
mānahuṁ pragaṭi bipula lōhitapura paṭha'i diyē avanī.. 3..
ghara ghara maṅgalacāra ēkarasa haraṣita rañka-ganī.
tulasidāsa kala kīrati gāvahim, jō kalimala-samanī.. 4..

Ayodhya Decorated with Lights to Welcome Lord Ram Back Home.

Verse no. 7/20—[It is a generally held traditional view that the festival of Diwali has its origin in Lord Sri Ram's victorious return to Ayodhya. In days when there was no electricity, earthen lamps were used to decorate and lighten up the city. Diwali is held roughly sometimes during late October till November. This current verse no. 7/20 describes the occasion when the city of Ayodhya was brightly illuminate and decorated wonderfully with variety of lamps for the first time after Lord Ram returned to the city at the end of his fourteen years sojourn in the forest during which period he had overcome the cruel demons.

Lord Ram's arrival and the subsequent illumination of Ayodhya in a magnificent way to celebrate this joyous occasion coincided with the time this “Festival of Diwali” (or the ‘Festival of Lights’) is traditionally observed today, and ever since that time it has become a national festival of India. It signifies that ‘light always overcomes darkness’, for this festival is centered on the lighting of lamps in every home as well as at public places during the night: the ‘darkness of the night’ symbolizes all that is negative and evil, and the cause of fear in the minds of people about imaginary ghosts that stand for spiritual and temporal problems, that albeit have no substance but still seem real, and the ‘bright light of the lamps’ that eliminate this darkness to illuminate each single individual’s home, symbolizing his or her individual inner self, to help remove all fears arising out of evil and sins and gloomy thoughts, and instead infuse hope and cheer and enlightenment in life.

The title of this verse is “Deep-Malika” (dīpamālikā) which means ‘a garland of lighted earthen lamps’. It is because hundreds of lighted lamps are placed on roof-tops and in front of homes and everywhere else in rows that surround any given place, giving the impression of a string of lighted lamps that resemble garlands. In fact, the whole city of Ayodhya looked, from the sky during the night, as if it was draped in uncountable numbers of large and small garlands consisting of beads of glittering gems that illuminated the whole place like hundreds and thousands of glow-worms arranged in systematic rows.]

Today evening, there are lot of grand festivities and joyous celebrations marked with grandeur, pomp, pageantry, magnificence and euphoria in the capital city (Ayodhya) of Raghubir (Lord Sri Ram).

The Lord of Ayodhya (avadhadhanī) is enjoying the sights of Dipawali celebrations (called ‘the Festival of Lights’.] (1).

Golden lamps made of crystal, that have been arranged on walls of individual homes and public buildings, look so majestic and fantastic as if a thousand hooded legendary serpent called Sheshnath, who has a Mani (gem) on each of his hoods, has come to meet Lord Sri Ram (and offer his tributes to the Lord) (2).

Glittering gems on the top of spires (steeple and domes) of every palace (or household) look so radiant and splendid as if many ‘Mars’ (or auspicious worlds) have been created and sent (by the Creator) to the earth (to adorn the city by their magnificence and light to celebrate Lord Ram’s coming back to Ayodhya, and the restoration of peace and happiness in the world after the elimination of the demons and their tyranny) (3).

There are auspicious hymns being sung in every household of the city, while the rich and the poor are equally euphoric and participating in the celebrations.

Tulsidas says that he sings the auspicious and holy deeds, the glories, the great virtues and famed legend of Lord Sri Ram which is capable of destroying (eliminating) all the sins, evils and vices, along with their effects, during the era of Kaliyug (the present times that are rife with these spiritual problems) (4).

-----**-----

Chapter 22

The Whole Story of the “Ramayana”

Recapitulated and Told Quickly in a ‘Fast Motion’ mode

We have finished our reading of this most marvelous, wonderful and fascinating “Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka”; it’s enchanting as well as enthralling.

Now, before we ring the curtain down on this absorbing and mesmerizing classical Story, let us quickly read the epic, the classical, and the universally acclaimed “Story of the Ramayana”, which actually is the “Story of the Life and Time of Lord Ram”, in its entirety, but here we shall adopt a ‘Brisk’ and a ‘Fast-Forward Mode’ to do so, which would be in sharp contrast with the general ‘Slow Motion’ style adopted while going through our narrative in the main body of this Book.

For this purpose, once again, we shall rely on an authentic book, a reliable source, where we can find a brisk narration of the wonderful Story of Lord Ram, also known as the Story of the Ramayana, and nowhere else has this glorious Story been narrated in a more beautiful and succinct style than in Goswami Tulsidas’ renowned classic “Ram Charit Manas”, the book that we have primarily relied upon in our main Text.

Hence, let us now quote verbatim from Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 64—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 68 as follows:

प्रथमहिं अति अनुराग भवानी । रामचरित सर कहेसि बखानी ॥ ७ ॥
पुनि नारद कर मोह अपारा । कहेसि बहुरि रावन अवतारा ॥ ८ ॥ prathamahim ati anurāga bhavānī. rāmacarita sara kahēsi bakhānī. 7.

puni nārada kara mōha apārā. kahēsi bahuri rāvana avatārā. 8.

[Lord Shiva, who is the original narrator of this divine story pertaining to sage Kaagbhusund’s narration for the benefit of Garud as indicated earlier from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 52—to Doha no. 55, told Parvati, his divine consort who was also known by the name of Uma, as follows:-]

‘Oh Bhavani (one of the many names of Parvati, the divine consort of Shiva)! Kaagbhusund thus began his narration of the sacred story of Lord Ram with great reverence. In the beginning he most affectionately described the symbolic lake that contains the nectar of the divine story of Lord Ram that narrates the Lord’s many deeds and the sportly activities that he undertook during his manifestation as a human being (rāmacarita sara)¹. (7)

Then he described the way Narad was deluded under the influence of the Lord's Maya (delusion-creating powers)², and this was followed by the story of the birth of Ravana (the king of the demon race and the ruler of their capital Lanka)³. (8)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 40.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 124—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 139.

Narad was very proud of his pedigree as he was the son of the Creator Brahma, was a great, learned and wise saint and sage, was very close to Lord Vishnu, and was one of the most trusted devotees of the Lord. The Lord wished to remove his sense of pride and ego, and make him realise that all the virtues he possesses are due to the Lord's grace upon him. So the Lord spread his maverick Maya, delusion and the funny tricks that it plays, on him. Narad, who had always prided himself for his self-control and restraint over his sensual organs, fell in the trap of loving a girl and deciding to marry her at all costs. Lord Vishnu stage-managed the entire episode in such a way that when Narad could not fulfil his dreams he cursed Lord Vishnu, the very Lord who was his revered God and to whom he had vowed submission and devotion for life. Finally, when the Lord withdrew the shadow of his Maya, Narad realised his horrible mistake and begged the Lord for forgiveness.

³Refer: The story of Ravana and the birth of the demon race have been described in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 153—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 184.]

प्रभु अवतार कथा पुनि गाई । तब सिसु चरित कहेसि मन लाई ॥ ९ ॥ prabhu avatāra kathā puni gāī. taba sisu carita kahēsi mana lāī. 9.

After explaining the cause for the Supreme Lord's decision to assume a human form as Lord Ram (to eliminate the horrors caused to earth and all living beings by the demons led by Ravana)¹, Kaagbhusund sang the story of the Lord's incarnation (descent upon the earth), and then he devoted his mind to recount cheerfully and with great interest the joy and the fun of the time when the Lord was a child, and the many happy events of that period associated with the childhood days in the life of the Lord². (9)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Doha no. 192—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 206.

Ravana spread terror in the entire universe—he spared neither the Gods in heaven nor the creatures on earth. Finally, fed-up and tormented endlessly, Mother Earth and all other Gods prayed to Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, to provide them help and succour. The Lord promised them that he would come down to earth himself to eliminate this scourage.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 191—to Doha no. 205.

See Doha no. 64 herein below.

Kaagbhusund was deeply absorbed in the narration so much so that his body was thrilled, his heart was filled with joy and affection for the Lord, and his mind was exhilarated.]

दो०. बालचरित कहि बिबिधि बिधि मन महुँ परम उछाह । रिषि आगवन कहेसि पुनि श्रीरघुबीर बिबाह ॥ ६४ ॥

dōhā.

bālacarita kahi bibidhi bidhi mana maham̐ parama uchāha.
riṣi āgavana kahēsi puni śrīraghubīra bibāha. 64.

As Kaagbhusund narrated the many events associated with the childhood days of Lord Ram, he was exceedingly ecstatic in his Mana (heart and mind). He narrated the various pranks, joys and episodes during the childhood days of Lord Ram.

Then he narrated the story of sage Vishwamitra's arrival (at Ayodhya and taking Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman with him to his hermitage with the aim of getting rid of the demons who were defiling his fire sacrifice)¹.

This was followed by the narration of the events that culminated in Lord Ram's marriage (with Sita at Janakpur)². (Doha no. 64)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 206—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 210.

Sage Vishwamitra's fire sacrifice was repeatedly defiled by the demons. Though the sage could have destroyed these demons himself but he desisted from doing so as becoming angry and killing someone during the progress of a fire sacrifice would have disrupted it and nullified its good effects. So he decided to go to Ayodhya and bring Lord Ram and Laxman to protect his rituals and punish the demons.

King Dasrath was initially reluctant, but his chief priest, sage Vashistha, prevailed upon him and advised him to do what sage Vishwamitra wished. At the sage's hermitage, the Lord slayed the army of demons and helped Vishwamitra to successfully complete his sacrifice.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 210—to Doha no. 353.

The sage was very obliged and happy. He wanted to express his thanks to king Dasrath as well as reward Lord Ram and establish his fame in the whole world. So he took the two brothers to Janakpur where a bow-breaking ceremony was being held. It was to be attended by all the mighty kings and princes on earth at that time, and its objective was to marry Sita, the beautiful princess of the kingdom, to anyone who was able to break a 'bow'. This 'bow' was not an ordinary one; it was extremely heavy and strong as it belonged to Lord Shiva some time in the past. So it was not a joke to even lift it from its place in the ground, forget about bending it and breaking it!

All the assembled competitors failed—individually as well as in huge groups—to as much as move the bow by an inch. It was then that Lord Ram, on the instructions of sage Vishwamitra, lifted and broke the bow easily in front of the whole assembly. He thus became eligible to marry Sita. Later on, all the three brothers of Lord Ram, i.e. Laxman, Bharat and Shatrughan, too were married to other sisters of Sita at the same venue.]

चौ०. बहुरि राम अभिषेक प्रसंगा । पुनि नृप बचन राज रस भंगा ॥ १ ॥
पुरबासिन्ह कर बिरह बिषादा । कहेसि राम लछिमन संबादा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bahuri rāma abhiṣēka prasaṅgā. puni nr̥pa bacana rāja rasa bhaṅgā. 1.
purabāsinha kara biraha biṣādā. kahēsi rāma lachimana sambādā. 2.

Then Kaagbhusund narrated the plans for anointing Lord Ram as Prince-Regent of the kingdom of Ayodhya by his father Dasrath, and the sudden interruption of the ceremonies due to his father's pledges given to his step mother Kaikeyi¹. (1)

Then he described the profound sorrows and agonies of the residents of Ayodhya when they learnt that their beloved Lord Ram is being exiled for fourteen years².

This was followed by the conversation between Lord Ram and his brother Laxman (who refused to stay back and insisted that he would accompany the Lord to the forest)³. (2) [¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 2—to Doha no. 40.

King Dasrath of Ayodhya wanted to crown Lord Ram on the throne of the kingdom. But if that happened, the main purpose of the Lord coming down to earth as a human being, viz. to eliminate the cruel demons and to bless the countless sages and hermits who had been doing severe Tapa, i.e. enduring so much hardship in order to attain the Lord, would be in doldrums. Because to achieve this objective it was necessary for Lord Ram to wonder in the forest so that he could go and mingle with the sages and hermits and ascetics who lived isolated lives in secluded places strewn all over the countless forests. Then he had to eliminate Ravana keeping in mind the parameters of the boon that Brahma had granted him—and one implied immunity was that he could not be killed by an army of humans.

As a king of Ayodhya, even if Lord Ram wanted to fight Ravana to eliminate him it would not have been possible for him to do it alone, for he would be obliged to take an army along. That would defeat the very purpose as it would be against Brahma's boon for Ravana, and so the latter would have survived no matter how invincible Lord Ram's army might have been. The Lord must do it single-handedly to comply with the restrictions imposed by Brahma's boon for Ravana's death.

Hence, it was absolutely essential that some sort of obstacle is created and the Lord would be free to go to the forest to bless the many sages, hermits and ascetics who were waiting for him, and to move ahead to eliminate the demons in their own fort. This is the reason why the Lord used his famous Maya to create a situation where he was forced to a fourteen year exile.

Kaikeyi agreed to bear the ignominy for the rest of her life by becoming instrumental in the great Game that the Lord of the World decided to play, if that served the Lord's purpose! So she prevailed upon her husband, king Dasrath, to send the Lord to the forest. No one ever realised the immense personal sacrifice that Kaikeyi had made in this connection; everyone blamed her, even her own son Bharat never talked with her for the rest of his life. This is clearly said in Tulsidas' book "Geetawali", Uttar Kand, verse no. 37.

Only Lord Ram had known and acknowledged this secret of Kaikeyi's personal sacrifice, and he had always shown her the same respect that he had for her prior to the event of his being sent to the forest exile at her behest. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, line no. 4 of Doha no. 6; and Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 244 where the Lord made it a point to especially meet Kaikeyi and show his respect to her.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 46—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 51.

The subjects of Ayodhya loved Lord Ram very dearly. And so when the news spread that he was going to the forest, the whole city plunged in gloom and grief.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 70—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 76.

When Laxman, the Lord's younger brother, heard about the entire episode, he decided firmly that he would accompany him to the forest. The Lord initially tried to reason with him and persuade him to stay at home, but when he saw his determination he gave his consent.]

बिपिन गवन केवट अनुरागा । सुरसरि उतरि निवास प्रयागा ॥ ३ ॥
बालमीक प्रभु मिलन बखाना । चित्रकूट जिमि बसे भगवाना ॥ ४ ॥ bipina gavana kēvaṭa anurāgā. surasari utari nivāsa prayāgā. 3.

bālamīka prabhu milana bakhānā. citrakūṭa jimi basē bhagavānā. 4.

Then Kaagbhusund narrated how Lord Ram departed for the forest (for fourteen years)¹.

This was followed by the narration of the Lord meeting the boatman known as Kevat, and the latter's devotion and honour for the Lord. Then the Lord crossed the river Ganges on a boat rowed by the boatman².

After crossing river Ganges, the Lord stopped at many places till he reached a place called Prayag (which is situated on the confluence of the three holy rivers, Ganges, Jamuna and Saraswati) where he stayed for some time (in the hermitage of sage Bharadwaj) before resuming his journey onwards³. (3)

Thereafter, Kaagbhusund described the meeting between sage Valmiki and Lord Ram⁴, and how the Lord stayed at Chitrakoot⁵. (4)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Doha no. 79—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 100.

King Dasrath sent his chief minister, named Sumantra, with a chariot to pick up Lord Ram, Sita and Laxman as they walked towards the gate of the city to embark on their onwards journey to the forest. The three boarded this chariot in order to make a quick exit, but the grieving and weeping citizens thronged it and ran behind it from all sides, slowing its speed to a slow crawl. The Lord felt extremely pitiful and was overwhelmed with sadness, but did not know what to do. Eventually he had to tell Sumantra to take him out quietly in the darkness of the night when the tired citizens were sleeping on the ground. When they all woke up the next morning and found that the Lord had gone, they lamented grievously but had no choice except to return home and wait for the Lord's coming back at the end of the exile period.

Later on, Lord Ram asked Sumantra to return as well because they had reached the banks of the river Ganges, and the Lord had to cross it to the other side.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 100—to Doha no. 102.

To cross the river Ganges, Lord Ram asked the boatman to bring his boat, but the latter insisted that he be allowed to first wash the holy feet of the Lord before he took him on board his boat. The Lord obliged him, and the most fortunate boatman had the privilege of washing the Lord's holy feet and distributing this sanctified water to his entire clan that would help them all to attain liberation from their humdrum existence.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Doha no. 104—to Doha no. 109.

Lord Ram reached Prayag, the holy place where three sacred rivers Ganga, Yamuna and Saraswati meet. He bathed there and went to the hermitage of sage Bharadwaj before moving ahead and going to the next hermitage, that of sage Valmiki.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 124—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 132.

Sage Valmiki was one of the greatest sages of the time. It was he who would pen the divine story of Lord Ram in his epic known world-wide as the famous "Ramayana". It was at his hermitage that Sita spent her last days and where Lord Ram's twin sons Lava and Kush were born.

During Lord Ram's communion with Valmiki, the sage had described some symbolic places where Lord Ram should reside. These places have immense spiritual significance as they advise a person to know how to attain the Lord in an easy and accessible way. Valmiki then advised Lord Ram to go to Chitrakoot and live there for some time before resuming his onwards journey.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Doha no. 132—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 142.

Chitrakoot was the first place where Lord Ram abided for some time in peace with his wife Sita and brother Laxman after leaving his capital Ayodhya. It was here that Bharat would come to try to persuade the Lord to return. This place was very beautiful with green forests and a river with its streams with sparkling clean waters. The place was inhabited by many sages, hermits and ascetics who benefited spiritually by the Lord's residence amidst them.]

सचिवागवन नगर नृप मरना । भरतागवन प्रेम बहु बरना ॥ ५ ॥

करि नृप क्रिया संग पुरबासी । भरत गए जहँ प्रभु सुख रासी ॥ ६ ॥ sacivāgavana nagara nṛpa maranā. bharatāgavana prēma bahu baranā. 5.

kari nṛpa kriyā saṅga purabāsī. bharata ga'e jahaṁ prabhu sukha rāsī. 6.

The chief minister of the kingdom (named Sumantra, who was sent by King Dasrath to accompany Lord Ram on a chariot during his departure from Ayodhya, with a mandate to try to persuade the Lord to return) came back to the capital (empty-handed, after dropping Lord Ram, his wife Sita and brother Laxman in the forest at a place where the borders of the kingdom of Ayodhya ended)¹.

When the King (Dasrath, the father of Lord Ram) heard that the minister has come back alone (which implied that Lord Ram, Laxman and Sita hadn't returned), he died out of shock and grief².

Then Kaagbhusund narrated Bharat's arrival back home (as he had been away at his maternal grandfather's place during the entire episode of Lord Ram being sent to exile by his crooked mother Kaikeyi)³, and described in different ways about Bharat's expression of undiluted and abundant feeling of love and affection for Lord Ram⁴. (5)

Bharat performed his father's last rites⁵, and accompanied by the residents of Ayodhya he went to Chitrakoot where Lord Ram resided at that time (to bring him back)⁶. (6)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 94—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 100; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 142—to Doha no. 147.

King Dasrath had sent his most trusted minister named Sumantra on a chariot to pick up the Lord from the outskirts of the city and take him to a far corner of the kingdom so that his words given to Kaikeyi could be fulfilled to some extent. Then, when they reach some far corner of the kingdom or some natural boundary such as a river or a mountain range, Sumantra was instructed to try to persuade the Lord to return home. But it so happened that the Lord refused, and he sent Sumantra back to Ayodhya. He returned with a heavy heart and a shamed face.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 148—to Doha no. 155.

When the king learnt that Sumantra has returned empty-handed, he grieved and died of agony of separation from Lord Ram.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 157—to Doha no. 158.

The throne of Ayodhya now lay vacant. So the chief priest named Vashistha sent a messenger and summoned Bharat and his younger brother Shatrughan who were at their maternal grandfather's place at that time. When the news reached Bharat and he saw the sombre face of the messengers, he became apprehensive that something was surely wrong. He packed up and came back to Ayodhya immediately, only to discover a city plunged in gloom and grieving gravely.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 160—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 169; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 177—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 184.

Back home, Bharat came to know all about the nasty things that had unfolded in the household: his beloved brothers Ram and Laxman along with his sister-in-law Sita were sent to exile at the behest of his crooked mother Kaikeyi, and his father Dasrath was dead. Stunned and flummoxed beyond measure, he vehemently cursed his mother and wailed and grieved for the loss of Lord Ram, Laxman, Sita and Dasrath.

By all his words and actions Bharat made it amply clear to all that he had no role in this sad development, and that no one should ever question his integrity, and his loyalty and love for Lord Ram.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 170—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 171.

However, many things had to be done now. First was the necessity of performing the last rites of king Dasrath whose body had been embalmed earlier. So Bharat did this ritual himself.

⁶Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 183—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 241.

Then a royal court was held to decide the next course of action: who would sit on the throne? Though everyone felt that Bharat should fill the gap and accept the crown at least as a temporary measure till the time Lord Ram came back at the end of his fourteen years of exile, but he flatly refused, saying that the crown and the throne rightly belonged to Lord Ram and he has nothing to do with it. He declared his intention of going to the forest and bringing the Lord back. This decision by him made him dear of the masses and removed all doubts in the mind of the citizens about Bharat's integrity. A huge party was assembled and the procession went to Chitrakoot in the forest where Lord Ram abided at that time.]

पुनि रघुपति बहुबिधि समुझाए । लै पादुका अवधपुर आए ॥ ७ ॥
भरत रहनि सुरपति सुत करनी । प्रभु अरु अत्रि भेंट पुनि बरनी ॥ ८ ॥ puni raghupati bahubidhi samujhā'ē. lai pādukā avadhapura ā'ē. 7.

bharata rahani surapati suta karani. prabhu aru atri bhēṇṭa puni barani. 8.

Lord Ram consoled Bharat and explained the complexities of the situation to him in all possible ways (and finally managed to convince Bharat that it is in the best of interests of all that the Lord be allowed to complete his term of fourteen years in the forest, and in the meantime Bharat could use Lord Ram's footwear as his symbolic presence in Ayodhya)¹.

Thereafter, Bharat returned to Ayodhya bringing with him Lord Ram's sandals (a wooden footwear)². (7)

Kaagbhusund described the way Bharat lived at Ayodhya. [Bharat had put these sandals on the throne of Ayodhya, and he himself retired to a place on the outskirts of the city to lead an austere life like that of a hermit.]³

He then continued with his narration, describing the episode involving the son of the King of Gods (Indra; the son's name was Jayant)⁴.

He then described the meeting between Lord Ram and sage Atri⁵. (8)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 304—to Doha no. 308; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 313—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 316.

Bharat tried his level best to try to persuade Lord Ram to return. The Lord explained the complexity of the situation and somehow made Bharat relent. Bharat agreed and said that if it is the Lord's wish, so be it.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 316—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 322.

As a token of the Lord's return and be crowned on the throne, Bharat brought the Lord's wooden sandals and put them on the throne of Ayodhya.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 323—to Sortha/Doha no. 326.

After that, Bharat retired to a place on the outskirts of the city and lived there an exemplary life of a hermit for the entire duration of the period of fourteen years while Lord Ram stayed in the forest.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 2.

Indra's son, named Jayant, was very crooked, unruly and mischievous like his father, and behaved like a prince of a king who himself is of an evil and jealous mind. He wanted to tease Sita and test the powers of Lord Ram. So he disguised himself as a crow and went and pricked Sita. Lord Ram was angry, but the Lord is so merciful that instead of immediately killing Jayant he shot a reed at him so that he is inflicted some injury as a punishment, but not killed. Jayant ran for his life everywhere in the universe, but this arrow-like reed followed him in hot pursuit. Finally he met sage Narad who advised him to go and ask for forgiveness from the Lord himself, for no one in this creation can give shelter to someone who opposes the Lord.

Jayant came and pleaded for his life with the Lord who obviously excused him, but the Lord decided that such evil persons need to be punished. So he made Jayant 'one-eyed' so that he would be recognised and scorned by everyone for his evil nature.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 3—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 7.

Realising that his presence in Chitrakoot will not serve his purpose any more as this location had been known by all by this time and the Lord could not live incognito any more, he decided to move ahead.

He reached the hermitage of sage Atri who lovingly welcomed the Lord and paid his obeisance to him. It was here that the sage's wife Anusuiya had preached Sita, Lord Ram's wife, about the principles that ought to be followed by a righteous wife. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 5 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-19 that precede it.]

दो०. कहि बिराध बध जेहि बिधि देह तजी सरभंग ।

बरनि सुतीछन प्रीति पुनि प्रभु अगस्ति सतसंग ॥ ६५ ॥

dōhā.

kahi birādha badha jēhi bidhi dēha tajī sarabhaṅga.
barani sūtīchana prīti puni prabhu agasti satasaṅga. 65.

After giving an account of the death of Viradha (a demon who was slayed by Lord Ram in the forest)¹ and the way sage Sarbhanga left his mortal coil (i.e. the way the sage left his body by a self-kindled fire of Yoga after meeting the Lord)², he (Kaagbhusund) proceeded to describe the love and devotion of sage Sutikchhan for the Lord³, and then the holy communion sage Agasta had with the Lord⁴. (Doha no. 65)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 7.

Moving ahead from Atri's hermitage, the Lord met a demon named Viradha. He killed the demon, and finding that he was sorrowful the Lord provided him deliverance.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 7—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 9.

Sage Sarbhanga was spiritually overwhelmed by his meeting with Lord Ram. He felt ecstatic and lovingly prayed to the Lord before leaving his gross body by burning it in a self-kindled fire of Yoga, thereby attaining emancipation and salvation.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 10—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 12.

The next sage the Lord met was Sutikshan. When he heard that his beloved Lord Ram was coming that way where he lived, the sage was totally exhilarated with joy unbound, and he ran thither to meet the Lord in a state of trance, tears spilling from his eyes and body utterly thrilled and beyond his control. He began to dance and sing in ecstasy and jubilation. Then when the climax was reached he went into a 'Samadhi', a trance-like state of meditation and deep reflection, when he sat motionless on the ground, lost in thoughts of the Lord. The Lord thoroughly enjoyed this scene and did not wish to disturb the sage. So for quite some time the Lord hid himself behind a tree, watching Sutikchhan's extremely blissful state of spiritual exultation. Eventually, the Lord woke him up, and the sage fell down at his feet. After praying to the Lord and submitting himself to him, the sage accompanied him to the hermitage of sage Agastya.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 12—to Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Doha no. 13.

It was sage Agastya who advised Lord Ram to move on in the direction of the 'Dandak' forest and live there at a place called 'Panchavati' where many other sages and hermits abided. It is narrated herein below.]

चौ०. कहि दंडक बन पावनताई । गीध मइत्री पुनि तेहि गाई ॥ १ ॥

पुनि प्रभु पंचवटीं कृत बासा । भंजी सकल मुनिन्ह की त्रासा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kahi daṇḍaka bana pāvanatā'ī. gīdha ma'itrī puni tēhiṁ gā'ī. 1.
puni prabhu pañcabaṭiṁ kṛta bāsā. bhañjī sakala muninha kī trāsā. 2.

After telling Garud about the purification of Dandak-forest by the Lord by the virtue of his staying there for some time¹, Kaagbhusund narrated the friendship between Lord Ram and the Vulture (known as Jatau)². (1)

Thereafter, he narrated the way the Lord stayed at the Panchavati forest and freed all the sages who abided there from their agonies and torments³# (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 16 that precedes Doha no. 13.

This forest was earlier cursed, and as a result it was un-inhabited. The Lord's passage through it and his stay at a Panchavati cured this place of the curse and made it vibrant with life once again.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, line no. 1 of Doha no. 13.

This vulture would later on sacrifice his life to protect Sita while she was being abducted by the demon king Ravana. To honour his friendship with Jatau who was old like the Lord's own father, the Lord performed his last rite with his own hands. See Chaupai line no. 7 herein below.

Thus, Jatau managed to get that rarest of rare end which not even the greatest of sages and hermits, and not even king Dasrath, the Lord's worldly father, had the privilege to get. This is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 29—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 33.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, 2nd line of Doha no. 13 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 15, 17-18, and Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that follow this Doha.

#It ought to be noted that 'Panchavati' was a pleasant place surrounded by greenery in the middle of the dense forest known as 'Dandak' which was uninhabitable in general. The word 'Panchavati' means a cluster of 'five trees'. These trees were on the banks of the river Godavari; they were huge and provided a perfect place for rest. Here, Lord Ram and his wife Sita and brother Laxman lived in a thatched hut under the combined shade of these five trees.

When sage Agastya had advised Lord Ram to go to the Dandak forest and stay at Panchavati, he had told the Lord that many sages who lived there would also benefit by having a rare chance to meet the Lord and find redemption for their souls. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 15-17 that precede Doha no. 13.]

पुनि लछिमन उपदेस अनूपा । सूपनखा जिमि कीन्हि कुरूपा ॥ ३ ॥

खर दूषन बध बहुरि बखाना । जिमि सब मरमु दसानन जाना ॥ ४ ॥

puni lachimana upadēsa anūpā. sūpanakhā jimi kīnhi kurūpā. 3.

khara dūṣana badha bahuri bakhānā. jimi saba maramu dasānana jānā. 4.

Then, Kaagbhusund described the way Lord Ram taught his brother Laxman on some wonderful metaphysical concepts in a comprehensive but simple way¹. This was followed by the narration of the event when the demoness known as Supernakha (meaning a female demon who had nails and ears extremely large) was mutilated². (3)

He went on to narrate the slaying of the demons known as Khar and Dushan (along with their armies) by the Lord³, and the way the demon king Ravana (of Lanka) came to learn about all these developments⁴. (4)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 114—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 17.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18.

Supernakha was a sister of Ravana, the demon king of Lanka. She was a very lustful female demon, and when she saw the charming form of Lord Ram she was overcome by passion. She assumed a form of a beautiful damsel and approached the Lord with a proposal of marriage, which obviously the Lord refused. Being spurned and rebuked, Supernakha became violent and wished to kill Sita, the Lord's wife. So he asked Laxman to chop-off her ears and nose as a symbolic warning to other such lascivious ladies to mind their own business and leave upright males alone. This incident was the spark that lit the fire that culminated in the ferocious war of Lanka that finally led to the killing of the cruel demons and their king Ravana.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20.

Khar and Dushan were the commanders of the demon army and cousins of Supernakha. This army was ordained to look after the interest of the demons in the area where the Dandak forest was situated to ensure that no sage or hermit successfully performed any fire sacrifice that would empower them to kill the demons. When mutilated, Supernakha rushed to these two and complained. Taking this as an open insult and challenge, they rushed to attack the Lord with a vicious blood-thirsty demon army. In the end, all of them were killed by Lord Ram alone.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 21—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 23.

When the entire demon army was decimated, Supernakha dashed to Lanka and reported the events to her brother Ravana. He was stunned and became pensive. He began to wonder who this gentleman was who would be powerful, strong, bold and courageous enough to rebuff Supernakha and provoke the demons. Surely everything was not fine. He had his strong reservations in the beginning and did not want to pick up a fight. But Supernakha applied all her tricks and persuaded Ravana to save the face of the demon race: say, what will the world say, that Ravana could not even protect the dignity and respect of his own sister? This would certainly undermine his fame and authority in the world, and especially in the demon race; it will be a loss of face like no other event. Thus instigated, Ravana decided to face the challenge.]

दसकंधर मारीच बतकही । जेहि बिधि भई सो सब तेहिं कही ॥ ५ ॥

पुनि माया सीता कर हरना । श्रीरघुबीर बिरह कछु बरना ॥ ६ ॥ dasakandhara mārīca batakahī. jēhi bidhi bha'ī sō saba tēhim kahī. 5.

puni māyā sītā kara haranā. śrīraghubīra biraha kachu baranā. 6.

Then, Kaagbhusund described in detail the conversation between Ravana and Marich as it took place¹. (5)

Then he went on to narrate how an illusionary form or a shadowy image of Sita was abducted (by Ravana)², and a little of Lord Ram's grief, desolation and lamentations at her loss was also described by him³. (6)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 23—to Doha no. 26.

Ravana went to one of his close confidantes, a demon named Marich. He lived on an island in the middle of the ocean ever since he was flung there by Lord Ram with a headless arrow at the time Marich was trying to defile the fire sacrifice of sage Vishwamitra. Marich lived in awe of the Lord and repeated his holy name out of fear ever since. But the mystery of this holy name of the Lord is such that though Marich repeated it out of fear but it made him eligible for salvation and emancipation. Ravana using him as a tool to kidnap Sita was merely an excuse whereby Marich would have a second divine glimpse of Lord Ram before leaving his mortal coil to obtain deliverance at the hands of the Lord himself when he would be shot by the latter.

So, as it happened, Marich tried his best to dissuade Ravana from antagonising Lord Ram, but fate had other things planned. Ravana threatened to kill Marich if he did not comply with his request to become a deer with a golden skin so that the former could abduct Sita, Lord Ram's wife, to avenge Supernakha's mutilation. Dangled between the devil and the deep sea, Marich decided that it was better to die at the hands of the Lord than being tortured and killed by this evil fellow Ravana. So he agreed.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 29.

When Sita saw the golden-skinned deer roaming near her hermitage, she asked Lord Ram to bring it to her so that she could keep it in hermitage. The all-knowing Lord knew the Divine Plan: he knew that this was the beginning of the end of the ferocious demon Ravana for which he had descended from the heaven at the request of the Gods. To ensure that the chastity of Sita would not be compromised, the Lord created, out of his Maya, i.e. his delusion creating powers, a shadow-like Sita that was exactly a replica of her original self. The original Sita was hidden in the fiery glow of Yoga, the stupendous dazzling fire that is generated by meditation. In practical terms, it is believed that she assumed a disembodied body as her soul left her gross body and reverted to its original subtle form as the 'pure consciousness' that has no physical identity and is invisible. This is clearly mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 24.

So in effect, what Ravana took away was only a 'shadow' of Sita.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-17 that precede Doha no. 30.

Lord Ram had to make a great show of ignorance and act like a perfect human being so that Ravana did not get a wind of who actually he was. This is because Ravana was a highly learned soul, and he knew that one day he too would have to die like all living beings irrespective of the boons he had extracted from Brahma, the creator, that no ordinary person would be able to kill him. Besides this, he had control over the entire universe at that point of time, so it is reasonable to assume that he was also aware of the promise Lord Vishnu had made to the Gods—i.e. that the Lord would himself come down to earth to get rid of the menace of Ravana. This thing—whether or not this man known as Ram is Lord Vishnu himself who has come to kill Ravana—was weighing very heavily on the mind of Ravana, though he was not certain what the reality was. This is clear in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23.

Therefore it was the need of the hour for Lord Ram to keep his identity secret and Ravana confused. Otherwise, if Ravana got the wind that Ram is Lord Vishnu, he would either surrender unconditionally before the Lord or flee and hide somewhere to become untraceable. In the former case, i.e. if he surrendered, Lord Ram would be duty-bound to forgive him, as it would be totally dishonourable to kill someone who has surrendered. Should this happen, the very purpose of the Lord's entire journey to earth would be nullified and made void. Who knows that after escaping death and when the Lord goes away, Ravana would not revert back to his old ugly ways? It was not a chance that could be taken by the Lord.

So, Lord Ram decided to act like an ordinary man whose wife was kidnapped by someone in the forest: he wailed and grieved and wept and lamented profusely so that any spy of the demons who was put on watch, would go and report to Ravana that Sita's husband is an ordinary man like any other. And therefore, there was no cause of bother or worry for the demon king on that count.]

पुनि प्रभु गीध क्रिया जिमि कीन्ही । बधि कबंध सबरिहि गति दीन्ही ॥ ७ ॥ बहुरि बिरह बरनत रघुबीरा । जेहि बिधि गए सरोबर तीरा ॥ ८ ॥

puni prabhu gīdha kriyā jimi kīnhī. badhi kabandha sabarihi gati dīnhī. 7.
bahuri biraha baranata raghubīrā. jēhi bidhi ga'ē sarōbara tīrā. 8.

Thereafter, Kaagbhusund described the way Lord Ram performed the last rites of the Vulture king (Jatau)¹, and then how he slayed the demon named Kabandha³ and went ahead on his way to the hermitage of Sabari (the old tribal woman) where the Lord provided her salvation and emancipation³. (7)

Then Kaagbhusund described the way Lord Ram wailed and grieved for Sita as he wended his way onwards in the forest⁴. The Lord finally went to a pleasant lake called Pampa which abounded in natural beauty, and where he took rest for some time under the shade of a leafy tree⁵. (8)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 29 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-26 that precede it, and from Chaupai line no. 18 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 33.

As has been said earlier in Chaupai line no. 1 herein above, Jatau, the Vulture, was promised friendship by Lord Ram. Jatau kept his part of the bargain by laying down his life in a valiant attempt to save Sita from being kidnapped by Ravana. When Lord Ram came that way where Jatau lay writhing in pain and murmuring the holy name of the Lord, the Lord showered his love on him by picking him up in his arms, cleaning his wounds with his own hands, and showing great respect and gratitude to him. But Jatau's wounds were so serious that he could not survive. When he died, Lord Ram performed his last rites in the same way he would have done for his own father. This at once catapulted Jatau to an exalted position and gave him a privilege that not even the greatest of sages and hermits obtained any time in history.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 33—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34.

Kabandha was a Gandharva, a sort of demi-God, who was turned into a demon by the curse of sage Durbasa. Lord Ram liberated him from this curse and his soul went to the heaven in accordance with his destiny.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Doha no. 36.

Sabari was an old tribal woman who had great devotion for Lord Ram. She had been living alone in the forest in the hope that one day she would be able to have a communion with her beloved Lord before discarding her mortal coil. As the word spread in the forest that Lord Ram has arrived and was moving around blessing and interacting with the many sages and hermits who lived there, Sabari's spirit lifted and she longed for the moment when the Lord would come visiting her. So when he did come, Sabari was extremely excited. Her love and devotion for the Lord knew no bounds; she offered him plums she had carefully picked up and stored for this moment. At the time of his departure, Sabari left her mortal coil by burning her gross body in a self-lit fire of Yoga and thereby allowing her soul to find emancipation and salvation. Like in the case of Jatau, Lord Ram performed her last rites with his own hands like the way he would have done for his own mother.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 37—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 39.

After providing liberation and deliverance to Sabari, Lord Ram moved ahead in the direction of the Pampa lake as advised by her. His mental state of grief and sadness at the loss of his wife Sita has been described in the verses referred to herein above.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 39—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 41.

By-and-by, the Lord arrived at the lake called Pampa. It was a fascinating place with verdant greenery all around and a fresh-water lake on one side. The tired Lord Ram and his brother Laxman took a bath here and rested under the shade of tree for some time. It was here that sage Narad came to meet the Lord as described herein below.]

दो०. प्रभु नारद संबाद कहि मारुति मिलन प्रसंग ।

पुनि सुग्रीव मिताई बालि प्रान कर भंग ॥ ६६ (क) ॥

dōhā.

prabhu nārada sambāda kahi māruti milana prasaṅga.
puni sugrīva mitā'ī bālī prāna kara bhaṅga. 66 (a).

Then Kaagbhusund narrated Lord Ram's conversation with sage Narad¹, his meeting with Sri Hanuman, son of Wind-God², his friendship with Sugriv (the exiled prince of the monkey kingdom)³, and the slaying of (Sugriv's brother) Bali⁴. (Doha no. 66-a) [¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 41—to Chanda line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 46.

When Lord Ram and Laxman were resting under the shade of a tree on the banks of the Pampa lake, all the Gods came and prayed to the Lord. After all of them went to their respective abodes and the Lord was alone, sage Narad came to meet him. The sage was very sorry that the Lord has had to suffer so much because of his curse. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 136—to Doha no. 137.}

Sage Narad came to Lord Ram, paid his respects and prayed to him, and then asked the Lord to tell him why he had not allowed him (Narad) to marry when he had a desire to do so. After that, the sage asked the Lord to outline the characters and qualities of true saints. The Lord's answer satisfied him and he went his way.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4.

Moving ahead in the direction of Lanka, Lord Ram and Laxman arrived near Mt. Rishyamook where Sugriv lived on its summit with his few trusted companions after he was ejected from the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha by his elder brother Baali due to some misunderstanding between the two.

When Sugriv saw two strangers wondering below, he wondered who they were; are they spies sent by Baali? So he sent his trusted friend Hanuman, who was the son of the Wind-God, to go and investigate. Hanuman came to Lord Ram disguised as a Brahmin, and discovered to his joy that the stranger was none else but his true Lord Ram for whose arrival he had been waiting for so long. He fell at the feet of the Lord and the two embraced each other. Later on it would turn out that Hanuman would be the most trusted and dearest of devotees of the Lord in future.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Doha no. 4 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede it.

Hanuman took Lord Ram and Laxman to the top of the mountain and forged a friendship between Sugriv and Lord Ram. Both empathised with each other as both had suffered the same fate: they were exiled from their respective kingdoms, and were suffering the agony of separation from their wives. Sugriv's wife was kept by his brother Baali when he threw him out of the kingdom.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11.

When Lord Ram heard the story of Sugriv and found that grave injustice was done to him, then like a true friend should do, the Lord decided to help Sugriv by eliminating his jealous brother and restoring his right to the throne of Kishkindha. This eventually led to the killing of Baali. Since Baali had prayed to Lord Ram and asked for mercy and forgiveness at the time of his death, the Lord provided him deliverance and sent him to his own abode in the heaven.]

कपिहि तिलक करि प्रभु कृत सैल प्रबरषन बास । बरनन बर्षा सरद अरु राम रोष कपि त्रास ॥ ६६ (ख) ॥ kapihi tilaka kari prabhu kṛta saila prabaraṣana bāsa.

baranana barṣā sarada aru rāma rōṣa kapi trāsa. 66 (b).

Lord Ram anointed Sugriv as King of Kishkindha¹ and himself took up residence on the summit of a mountain known as Prabarshan². Then followed an account of the rainy and autumn seasons during which the Lord lived on this mountain³, and Lord Ram's anger at Sugriv (when the Lord observed that the latter had done nothing to search for the whereabouts of Sita as promised in the beginning of their friendship)⁴. (Doha no. 66-b) [¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Doha no. 11 along with Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede it.

Lord Ram kept his promise and appointed Sugriv on the throne of Kishkindha.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Doha no. 12 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede it.

After that, the Lord spent the rainy and the autumn seasons on Mt. Prabarshan. He kept his vows of living like a hermit in a forest environment for fourteen years by refusing to enter the city of Kishkindha though Sugriv would have cheerfully hosted him.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 13—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18.

These verses excellently describe in poetic finery the beauty of Nature during the two seasons: the rainy and the autumn.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 21.

Lord Ram was annoyed that once Sugriv got back his kingdom he had all but forgotten the promises he had made to the Lord—that he would do his best to find where Sita was. So the Lord sent Laxman to reprimand Sugriv and make him come to his senses. Sugriv realised his mistake, said he was sorry, asked for forgiveness, and assembled a huge army of messengers and spies to go and trace Sita. This is narrated below.]

चौ०. जेहि बिधि कपिपति कीस पठाए । सीता खोज सकल दिसि धाए ॥ १ ॥
बिबर प्रबेस कीन्ह जेहि भाँती । कपिन्ह बहोरि मिला संपाती ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jēhi bidhi kapipati kīsa paṭhā'ē. sītā khōja sakala disi dhā'ē. 1.
bibara prabēsa kīnha jēhi bhāmtī. kapinha bahōri milā sampātī. 2.

Kaagbhusund then continued his narration, describing how the monkey king sent his messengers or scouts in all directions in search of Sita¹ [1], and how the group sent towards the south entered a cave² and emerged from there to meet Sampati (vulture Jatau's brother)³ [2]. (1-2) [¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Doha no. 21—to Doha no. 23.

Hundreds of thousands of monkeys and bears assembled for the purpose. They were directed to go in every direction of the earth and search for Sita. It is to be noted here especially that these messengers or scouts were most suitable for the job as the extended forested areas of the earth were a part of their natural habitat and they were well acquainted with the geography and topography of these places. Natural obstacles such as mountains, rivers and forests and their wild animals and intractable paths were no problems for them. Obviously, they were far better qualified in this search than humans would have been.

One such group led by Angad, Hanuman and Jamvant, the bear king, headed towards the south. Eventually, this group would reach the edge of the ocean across which lay the fort of Lanka in the middle of the vast ocean that stretched beyond.

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Doha no. 25.

Exhausted, hungry and thirsty, this latter group was searching for water to drink. Hanuman located a cave from which emerged playful swans, herons and chirping birds with wet wings; many were hovering over the mouth of the cave ready to enter it, and many others were emerging from it.

The thirst group deduced that surely there was a fresh water source inside. So they gingerly picked their way in it and at its end saw a wonderful garden where they met a hermitress who told them the way out of the cave which would take them straight to the shore of the ocean across which lay Lanka. Meanwhile, the group refreshed itself by drinking and bathing in the fresh water-body inside the cave and eating sweet fruits that were there in abundance. The hermitress herself went to Lord Ram, prayed to the Lord, and on his instructions went to the northern mountains to do meditation and austerities at a holy place called Badrinath.

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 29.

The hermitress had told the group of monkeys and bears to close their eyes so that she could transport them by her transcendental powers to the edge of the ocean. When the group opened its eyes they found themselves there, with the ocean spreading like a formidable obstacle before them. All of them sat down in dismay and gloom, and an abject sense of hopelessness and failure overcame them. Meanwhile, Sampati, who was an old vulture and the elder brother of Jatau, saw the dejected group of monkeys and bears and thought that when they died he would have a great feast.

The terrified group loudly invoked Jatau's sacrifices for the cause of Lord Ram even as they implored Sampati to spare them as they were also on the Lord's mission. When Sampati heard the full story, he felt sorry for them, and in order to do his bit to help in the Lord's mission, he told them about the location of Sita in Lanka.

This was made possible as vultures have the uncanny ability to see long distances. Then Sampati went his way where the king of birds Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, resided—i.e. to the heaven.]

सुनि सब कथा समीरकुमारा । नाघत भयउ पयोधि अपारा ॥ ३ ॥ लंकाँ कपि प्रबेस जिमि कीन्हा । पुनि सीतहि धीरजु जिमि दीन्हा ॥ ४ ॥ sunī saba kathā samīrakumārā. nāghata bhaya'u payōdhi apārā. 3.

laṅkāṁ kapi prabēsa jimi kīnhā. puni sītahi dhīraju jimi dīnhā. 4.

Upon hearing all the news (from Sampati, about Sita's location at Lanka), the son of the Wind God (i.e. Hanuman) jumped over the vast ocean¹. (3)

Kaagbhusund then described how he entered Lanka², and then, how he met and re-assured Sita³. (4)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kiskindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 3.

No one in the group of monkeys and bears had the ability to cross the vast gap of the ocean between its northern edge where they were currently seated and the place where the island of Lanka was situated—a distance of roughly 100 Yojans, which means approximately 800 miles. {Refer: Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 29.}

Jamvant, the old king of bears, knew who actually Hanuman was, i.e. that he was the son of the Wind-God, and therefore he had, for one, the ability to fly in the air like a bird, and secondly, he possessed an incomparable strength that the powerful forces of wind possess. So Jamvant requested Hanuman to pick up the challenge and do his might to serve the purpose of the Lord. This way he would get unparalleled fame and glory in the world personally, and bring laurels to the group in general.

The brave Hanuman recalled the purpose of his descent on earth, and immediately embarked on this sacred venture by assuming a huge form and launching himself from a high hill like a modern-day missile. He sailed across the sky over the choppy waters of the mighty ocean. On the way to Lanka however, he met and easily overcame some obstacles that were created by the demon commanders who had posted guards in the ocean to prevent any intruder from entering the city of Lanka.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 3—to Doha no. 5.

Finally, Hanuman landed on the soil of Lanka. There he met Lankini, a female demon who was tasked to guard the main entrance to the fort. A single blow from Hanuman's clenched fist made her vomit blood. She realised that he was not an ordinary intruder but someone with an extraordinary authority and power to fulfil the mandate of the Creator. So she blessed him and quietly allowed him in.

Then the wise Hanuman assumed a form of a small mosquito to avoid detection, and freely roamed in the city of Lanka, looking at all its nooks and corners to find where Sita might be. It was night time, and everyone was asleep. He peered in all the houses of the demons, and even in the royal palace of Ravana to investigate Sita's whereabouts, but failed.

When it was nearly dawn, he located a small house that bore the name of Lord Ram on its walls, and from inside it he heard someone muttering the holy name. He marvelled at this astonishing sight which was an incongruity in the middle of the city of demons, and determined to explore further. He knocked at the door and to his amazement he discovered that it was the home of a devotee of Lord Ram whose name was Vibhishan, and who happened to be a younger brother of Ravana, the demon king. The two were mutually astonished at this meeting, and thanked the Lord for this coincidence. After preliminary exchange of greetings and pleasantries, Vibhishan asked Hanuman the purpose of his visit, and when he was told about it he disclosed the exact location of Sita to Hanuman: that she was confined to a garden called 'Ashok Van'.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 17.

Hanuman took his leave from Vibhishan and went and hid himself on a huge leafy tree under the shade of which sat Sita, forlorn, distressed, emaciated and grieving. She was surrounded by female guards. Just at that time Ravana came and threatened Sita with death if she remained stubborn and refused to surrender herself before him. Hanuman watched silently, seething with anger, and his determination to eliminate the scourge of the demons became all the more firm.

When Ravana left fretting and fuming, Hanuman dropped the signet ring that the Lord had given him as a token for recognition by Sita, that he was a genuine messenger from the Lord himself and not some imposter. Sita was apprehensive in the beginning, but in due course of time she realised that Hanuman was indeed the Lord's faithful devotee, and then she profusely blessed him. Hanuman assured her that the Lord is coming soon with a huge army of monkeys and bears to free her from her captivity. But she would have to have patience and courage, and bear with some more sufferings till the Lord arrives.]

बन उजारि रावनहि प्रबोधी । पुर दहि नाघेउ बहुरि पयोधी ॥ ५ ॥
आए कपि सब जहँ रघुराई । बैदेही की कुसल सुनाई ॥ ६ ॥

bana ujāri rāvanahi prabōdhī. pura dahi nāghē'u bahuri payōdhī. 5.
ā'ē kapi saba jahaṁ raghurā'ī. baidēhī kī kusala sunā'ī. 6.

Then Kaagbhusund narrated how Hanuman ruined and laid to waste the magnificent garden of fruit trees where Sita was confined by Ravana¹, and how he exhorted Ravana to abandon his arrogance and evil wishes, and to ensure his own welfare as well of his clan he should free Sita and make truce with Lord Ram². [But having failed to persuade Ravana to come to his senses—] Then Hanuman burnt the city and reduced it to ashes³, and once again crossed the ocean to reach the other side (where his friends were eagerly waiting for his arrival)⁴. (5)

All the monkeys came back to where Lord Ram was waiting for them⁵, and they told Lord Ram the good news about Sita (that she has been traced and is still alive)⁶. (6)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 18.

Hanuman was very hungry, so he sought Sita's permission to eat the ripe sweet fruits from the trees that were abundant in the garden. Hanuman needed an excuse to punish Ravana and warn him of the fate that stared him in his face now onwards. He also wished to show-case his individual strength and valour to Sita in order to assure her of the combined might of the monkey army in case she had some reservations about the effectiveness of the Lord making a decision of facing a formidable enemy such as the demons with their king Ravana with a rag-tag army of humble monkeys and bears.

Once Sita granted her permission, Hanuman virtually went berserk in the garden and the orchard—uprooting trees, demolishing buildings, littering the place with ruins, and beating the guards black and blue. Terrified and at their wits end, the survivors rushed to report to Ravana about the havoc caused by a strange 'monkey'.

Ravana sent his son Akshakumar with his army of demons who were all killed by Hanuman. Stunned and angry, Ravana sent his other son Meghanad who, after taking a severe beating in the beginning, somehow managed to trap Hanuman in a snare and bring him to the court of Ravana.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 24.

There in the court of Ravana, Hanuman tried his best to persuade the demon king to abandon his reckless behaviour and to be sensible enough to free Sita and make peace with Lord Ram so that the demon race is saved from annihilation. But Ravana was arrogant and stubborn to the hilt. He would not listen.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Doha no. 26.

After a heated argument with Hanuman, Ravana ordered that his tail be wrapped in cloth dipped in oil and set on fire.

As the fire flared up, Hanuman made his body so small that it slipped out of the wrappings of cloth but only a tip of his tail remained stuck to one end of the blazing cloth so that he could drag it behind him. Then he leapt across the city, from building to building, market place to market place, from public squares to gardens to surrounding forests etc. that eventually ignited a huge fire across the length and breadth of the great city of Lanka that reduced it to a smouldering heap of blackened rubble.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 28.

Finally, Hanuman jumped into the ocean to douse the remaining part of the wrapped cloth that still clung to the end of his tail, cooled his body, and stood before Sita to take leave of her. Then he jumped over the waters of the roaring ocean with the same zeal and ease with which he had come to Lanka sometimes back, to reach the other side where his friends were anxiously waiting for him.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 28—to Doha no. 29.

The ecstatic group had a celebration, and then they came back jubilantly to Kishkindha to report the good news to Sugriv, the king of the monkeys. Then they all went to Mt. Parbarshan where Lord Ram was staying at that time to report to him.

⁶Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 34.

The group's leader Jamvant, the bear king, briefed Lord Ram about the grand success of the mission, and that Sita had been found by Hanuman. Then the overwhelmed and grateful Lord thanked them all and affectionately embraced Hanuman, telling him that he would be indebted to him for the rest of his life. Hanuman briefly told him everything he had seen at Lanka and about the precarious condition of Sita, that though she was alive but she is living a life of hell. He urged the Lord not to waste any more time to start the final mission to free her and punish her tormentors.]

सेन समेति जथा रघुबीरा । उतरे जाइ बारिनिधि तीरा ॥ ७ ॥

मिला बिभीषन जेहि बिधि आई । सागर निग्रह कथा सुनाई ॥ ८ ॥ sēna samēti jathā raghubīrā. utarē jā'i bārinidhi tīrā. 7.

milā bibhīṣana jēhi bidhi ā'ī. sāgara nigrāha kathā sunā'ī. 8.

Kaagbhusund then narrated how Lord Ram collected and assembled the huge army (of monkeys and bears)¹ and went to pitch a camp on the ocean's shore². (7)

Then he described why and how Ravana's brother Vibhishan came to take refuge with the Lord³, and then proceeded to narrate why and how Lord Ram subjugated the mighty ocean⁴ (8).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 35.

Lord Ram instructed Sugriv to assemble an army so that they can start for Lanka immediately. A huge and formidable army was collected at short notice, and it consisted of fierce monkeys and bears of all denominations from all the corners of the earth. The army was so huge that it stretched till the horizon.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 35 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 8-10 and Chanda line nos. 1-8.

As the Lord's army moved along the surface of the earth, a huge storm of dust was raised that blanketed the sky. The monkeys and bears roared and yelled defeaningly. The earth shook; the mountains swayed; the ocean swirled; the celestial holders of the earth, such as the Tortoise which is said to hold the earth on its back, the Diggajas (elephants) who hold the earth from its corners, and the Serpent who holds the earth on its hood, all of them squirmed and turned on their backs.

The Lord arrived on the northern edge of the ocean and pitched his camp there. The monkey and bear warriors roamed around eating fruits from the trees that existed anywhere in the vicinity.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 50.

Meanwhile at Lanka, there was panic ever since Hanuman had set it on fire and destroyed a substantial part of the demon army. The omens were not good. Amongst those who tried to convince Ravana that the line he had adopted would be ruinous for all of them was his brother Vibhishan. He tried to persuade Ravana to make peace with Lord Ram and return Sita to him. Ravana got provoked, accused Vibhishan of treachery and sedition, and kicked him out of Lanka. Fearing for his life, Vibhishan fled and came to seek refuge with Lord Ram, which was granted immediately and with a lot of warmth. The Lord went to the extent of symbolically anointing him on the throne of Lanka as its next king. This was a strategic move by the Lord to ensure Vibhishan's loyalty as well as a gesture to reward him for his services to the Lord.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 50 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede it, and then from Doha no. 57—to Doha no. 59.

The next big hurdle was the ocean: the question was how to cross it and reach Lanka. Lord Ram did not want to insult the 'King of Water' as the ocean was known, and therefore tried to request him to give him passage through it. The Lord offered prayers to the ocean, but the latter was stubborn. So finally the Lord drew his arrow to dry it up forever. The marine creatures panicked and there was a huge turmoil in the waters of the ocean, forcing their Lord, the 'King of the Waters', to gather some gifts as a tribute and pray to Lord Ram to excuse him. Of course the Lord forgave him, and the Lord of the Ocean advised Lord Ram to construct a bridge across the surface of the water to connect to Lanka. He promised to Lord Ram that he would not wipe it away.]

दो०. सेतु बाँधि कपि सेन जिमि उतरी सागर पार।

गयउ बसीठी बीरबर जेहि बिधि बालिकुमार ॥ ६७ (क) ॥

dōhā.

sētu bāṁdhi kapi sēna jimi utarī sāgara pāra.

gaya'u basīṭhī bīrabara jēhi bidhi bālikumāra. 67 (a).

Kaagbhusund then narrated how the monkey army built a sturdy bridge and landed on the other side of the mighty ocean¹.

Then he narrated how the heroic son of Baali (i.e. Angad, the crown prince of Kishkindha) went as an envoy to the court of Ravana (because Lord Ram sent him as a last minute attempt to avoid a bloody war)². (Doha no. 67-a) [¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 60; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 5; (iii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11.

When the King of the Waters, i.e. the ocean in a personified form, appeared before Lord Ram to surrender and pay his tributes, the Lord asked him for a practical solution by which the vast army of monkeys would easily be able to cross the formidable stretch of fathomless and heaving body of water that spread before them. The ocean advised the Lord that there were two monkey brothers named Nal and Neel in the army who were blessed by a boon during their childhood days that even huge boulders as large as entire hills would float on the surface of water if they touched them. This boon should now be used to construct a bridge over the surface of the water of the ocean.

Thereafter, the army of hundreds and thousands of monkeys and bears got on the job in right earnest, bringing rocks, boulders and hills of all sizes and contours and throwing them on the surface of the water of the ocean. By the touch of Nal and Neel these rocks and boulders floated on the surface. It is also believed that Hanuman had scribbled the holy name of Lord Ram on each of these pieces of rocks and boulders so that they did not sink—because Hanuman knew about the glory and the stupendous mystical powers of the holy name of the Lord, that it is so powerful that it enables a creature to cross over this huge and most intractable ocean-like world of mundane existence without any effort and provides the creature's with deliverance, so he guessed that it would be no wonder if these inconsequential rocks and boulders too floated and allowed the army to cross over this physical ocean.

By-and-by, the bridge spanning the distance of 100 Yojans (roughly 800 miles or so) between the northern shore of the ocean and where it touched the soil of Lanka was established. Then Lord Ram offered his obeisance to Lord Shiva, his revered deity, before the army jubilantly advanced across this bridge. All the marine creatures emerged from the bottom of the ocean to marvel at this spectacle. The army finally landed on the other side and pitched camp on the slopes and summit of a hill by the name of Subel (refer: Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11).

As promised, the ocean did not break the bridge.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 35.

The always merciful, compassionate and forgiving Lord Ram was not interested in shedding blood unnecessarily. So he wished to explore the chances of avoiding the forthcoming ruinous war. A meeting was called and it was decided to send Angad as an emissary of the Lord to the court of Ravana in a last-ditch attempt to make a workable truce.

When Angad entered the city, the demon citizens of Lanka were scared out of their wits because they had not forgotten their bitter experience of a little while ago when Hanuman had gone berserk and wreaked havoc on them. So Angad got an easy right-of-way to the palace of the demon king Ravana where there was a heated and acrimonious exchange of angry words between him and Ravana. Each used insulting language for each other, and when Angad ultimately found that Ravana is not amenable and is overcome by the shadow of death, he was so enraged that he put his foot firmly down on the ground in the name of Lord Ram with a challenge to Ravana that if he managed to move his leg it would be deemed that the latter has won the war!

One must be in awe of Angad's confidence in the 'self' as well as in the glory and divinity of Lord Ram that he did not think twice before making this vow. One must praise Angad for the fact that since he was on the side of the 'truth and righteousness' he was self-confident and convinced that no evil force would be ever able to as much as move his single hair, what to talk of moving his leg. It surely proves Angad's strong faith and firm belief in the supremacy of Lord Ram, in the power of the Lord's holy name, and in his personal devotion and dedication for the Lord that made him sure that whatever decision he would make would be accepted by the Lord without raising an eyebrow! Such is indeed the power that a devotee and a faithful follower of the Lord possesses that whatever actions and decisions he would take in the name of the Lord would never go wrong, and the Lord would endorse it.

Meanwhile, Ravana failed to move Angad's foot, and as he bowed down to touch Angad's foot, his crown fell on the ground. Angad kicked this crown so fiercely that it flew like a ball and landed at the place Lord Ram was seated. This single incidence of Ravana not being able to move Angad's foot and his crown falling to the ground was the proverbial last straw that broke the camel's back by demoralising the entire demon army and forewarning them of the impending disaster. Refer: Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 32 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 1-10; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 35.

In all sooth and without gainsay, this was a great moral victory for the whole of the monkey and bear army, and the most humiliating experience that the demons and Ravana had ever since they began ruling over the world.]

निसिचर कीस लराई बरनिसि बिबिधि प्रकार ।

कुंभकरन घननाद कर बल पौरुष संघार ॥ ६७ (ख) ॥ nisicara kīsa larā'ī baranisi bibidhi prakāra.

kumbhakarana ghananāda kara bala pauruṣa saṅghāra. 67 (b).

Thereafter the war between the demons (Ravana's army) and monkeys (Ram's army) was described in detail and in different ways¹.

Kumbhakaran (the brother of Ravana)² and Meghnad (his son)³ were eventually killed in battle. (Doha no. 67-b).

[¹The no-holds-barred ferocious and blood-curdling war between the two sides has been extensively described in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 39—to Doha no. 103.

²The death of Kumbhakaran has been described in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 71.

Kumbhakaran was a younger brother of Ravana, and elder to Vibhishan. When Laxman was revived after being severely wounded by Meghanad, Ravana was alarmed. He went and woke up Kumbhakaran from his slumber and briefed him about the events. It so happened that Kumbhakaran was unaware of the whole thing till that point of time as he was accustomed to eating and drinking heavily and sleeping for long periods at a stretch. When he came to know about the developments, he admonished Ravana and told him that whatever he had done was wrong. However, Kumbhakaran said that he would be loyal to the demon race and fight on its behalf although it was wrong to do so. Then followed a fierce battle between him and Lord Ram and it culminated in his death. At the time of his death, Kumbhakaran's soul emerged from inside his body and entered the body of Lord Ram in the form of a bright shaft of light (refer: Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 71 of Lanka Kand).

The only other demon that had this privilege whereby his soul merged with the Supreme Soul of this creation in a visible way was Ravana himself (refer: Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103 of Lanka Kand).

³The death of Meghanad has been described in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 72—to Doha no. 76.

Meghanad was the son of Ravana. He was a valorous and virtually invincible demon warrior who had even captured Indra, the king of gods. He got his name from the fact that when he roared or yelled it was so deafening that it sounded like the clap of thunder. It was he who had shot and wounded Laxman. After the latter was revived he once again challenged Meghanad, and in the ensuing battle that saw Meghanad employing magical tricks, the final victory was won by Laxman who shot and killed his enemy Meghanad.

चौ०. निसिचर निकर मरन बिधि नाना । रघुपति रावन समर बखाना ॥ १ ॥
रावन बध मंदोदरि सोका । राज बिभीषन देव असोका ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

nisicara nikara marana bidhi nānā. raghupati rāvana samara bakhānā. 1.
rāvana badha mandōdari sōkā. rāja bibhīṣana dēva asōkā. 2.

Continuing with his narration, Kaagbhusund then described the extermination of the army of demons, and the battle between Lord Ram & Ravana¹. (1)

This battle and the war in general ended with the slaying of Ravana². Then he narrated how Mandodari, the queen of the demon race and the wife of Ravana, lamented, wailed and grieved upon learning of the demise of her husband³.

The crown and the throne of Lanka was given to Vibhishan who was made the King (as promised earlier by Lord Ram)⁴, and then Kaagbhusund described the scene of celebration and jubilation that followed the Lord's victory which made the Gods fearless from the terror of their arch enemy Ravana and his kith and kin and army⁵. (2)

[¹The slaying of the demon army is described throughout the narration of the war that spreads across verses in Lanka Kand of the epic Ram Charit Manas. However, since the focus here is on the part of the war that followed Meghanad's death when Ravana directly led the battle himself and died in the end, one can refer specially to Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 78—to Doha no. 101.

²Ravana's death has been described in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 102—to Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 103.

As has been noted earlier in regard to Kumbhakaran's death, Ravana's soul emerged from his body and entered Lord Ram's body in a symbolic development that showed that his individual 'self' merged with the Supreme Self to become one with the Supreme Being who was in the form of Lord Ram. The fact that this happened shows that in spite of all the external things that Ravana did and said, internally he was pure at heart, was self-realised and enlightened, and his was a holy soul—because otherwise this supreme form of destiny would not have been possible for him. To be able to become one with the Lord is the ultimate objective of all spiritual endeavours, but rarely one succeeds in attaining it.

It also shows the great purity and spiritual welfare that come automatically to a person by remembering Lord Ram—for even a vile demon such as Ravana found deliverance and emancipation for his soul by just remembering Lord Ram day and night, though he did it out of enmity and ill-will for the Lord.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-11 that precede Doha no. 104, and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows this Doha.

Mandodari was a wise wife; she had on several occasions tried to bring Ravana to his senses, but his arrogance and ego prevented him from heeding her advice. When her husband died, she grieved sorely but acknowledged publicly that Ravana himself is to be blamed for the calamity that befell the clan. She even praised Lord Ram to have provided a glorious death to her evil husband by destroying his gross evil body of a demon and liberating his soul so that it could merge with the Lord's own Supreme Soul (refer: Doha no. 104). All the gods and holy spirits that had assembled on the occasion lauded Mandodari for her wisdom.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 106.

Like in the case of Sugriv, Lord Ram did not himself enter the city of Lanka but sent his brother Laxman to represent him and anoint Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka as its future king. The Lord thus kept his promise to Vibhishan that was made when he had come to seek refuge with him (refer: Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede Doha no. 49).

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-11 and Chanda line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 103.

The Gods had been watching the entire proceedings from the sky. When the final victory was Lord Ram's, all of them joined in chorus to pray to the Lord and honour him.]

सीता रघुपति मिलन बहोरी । सुरन्ह कीन्हि अस्तुति कर जोरी ॥ ३ ॥ पुनि पुष्पक चढ़ि कपिन्ह समेता । अवध चले प्रभु कृपा निकेता ॥ ४ ॥ sītā raghupati milana bahōrī. suranha kīnhi astuti kara jōrī. 3.

puni puṣpaka caḍhi kapinha samētā. avadha calē prabhu kṛpā nikētā. 4.

Then he (Kaagbhusund) described the meeting of Sita with Lord Ram¹, and how the Gods sang Lord Ram's glories and praised him with each of them joining the palms of his hands as a gesture of showing reverence and respect to the Lord². (3)

Thereafter, Lord Ram mounted the air-plane called "Pushpak" with other monkeys and proceeded towards his capital of Ayodhya³. (4)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 107—to Doha no. 109.

After the victory in the war and the coronation of Vibhishan as the king of Lanka, Lord Ram sent Hanuman to Lanka to bring Sita back to him. She was escorted with full royal honours by the guards of Vibhishan. When the Lord saw the ceremonial procession, he asked them to bring Sita in an ordinary way and not to show any favour to her. This was in line with the Lord's view that till the exact end of the fourteen year period, they—the Lord himself, his wife Sita and brother Laxman—were to live like a hermit. No special treatment should be shown to any of them.

The meeting of Sita with Lord Ram, however, was clouded by some bitter moments. The Lord wished to ensure that no aspersions are cast at a later date on his or Sita's purity and immaculacy of character or their integrity by an evil world which is ever eager to jump to scandalous conclusions by explicitly proving to the world that Sita was uncorrupt and as chaste and immaculate as she was prior to her abduction by Ravana. He did not want tongues wagging and suspicions aroused for no rhyme or reason. So it is better to nip the dirty gossiping in the bud right then and there.

Hence, Lord Ram asked Sita to prove her integrity by the 'fire test', which means she was to enter a blazing fire and emerge unscathed to prove that she was not touched by any evil hands, and was pure and chaste. Of course she did this willingly, and the Lord and Sita were united.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 110—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 116.

All the Gods, including the senior ones amongst them such as Brahma the creator, Shiva the concluder, Indra the king of Gods, as well as the great sages and seers and mystics, who had been following the war on the ground from their stations in the sky, revealed themselves to offer their obeisance and prayers to Lord Ram.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 118—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 119.

Vibhishan filled the air-plane called 'Pushpak' with gems and jewels and brought it to Lord Ram to pay tribute and to gift it to the Lord. The Lord asked him to go to the sky and overturn its contents—i.e. the gems and the jewels—so that the monkeys and bears could take what they wanted.

Then the Lord assembled them and thanked them all for helping him. He asked the monkeys and bears to go back home as their own kith and kin would be waiting for them. The Lord then expressed his desire to return to his own capital of Ayodhya as the time was running out and the period of fourteen years was coming to an end. He was worried about Bharat, that if he delayed for even one day Bharat would lay down his life as he had vowed in Chitrakoot. Taking the land route back home would take a long time; so the only way out was to travel by air on the Pushpak plane.

The chief commanders of the monkey-and-bear army, such as Sugriv, Angad, Nal, Neel, Jamvant and Hanuman, as well as Vibhishan, who was the demon king, requested the Lord to accompany him. They all boarded the air-plane, and it lifted into the sky amidst thunderous applause.]

जेहि बिधि राम नगर निज आए । बायस बिसद चरित सब गाए ॥ ५ ॥

कहेसि बहोरि राम अभिषेका । पुर बरनत नृपनीति अनेका ॥ ६ ॥

jēhi bidhi rāma nagara nija ā'ē. bāyasa bisada carita saba gā'ē. 5.

kahēsi bahōri rāma abhiṣēkā. pura baranata nrpanīti anēkā. 6.

Kaagbhusund then described how Lord Ram reached Ayodhya¹, and sang all other mystical and respectful deeds done by the Lord². (5)

After that he described Lord Ram's coronation as the King of Ayodhya³, and his rules of polity and ideology as he ruled the kingdom with great righteousness, probity and propriety⁴. (6)

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 119—to Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 121; and (ii) Uttar Kand, Doha no. 4 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

As the air-plane moved towards Ayodhya, Lord Ram showed Sita and all his other companions the landmarks on the ground that marked important places during the Lord's journey from Ayodhya to Lanka.

Once he was over the sky of Ayodhya, he asked Hanuman to assume the form of a Brahmin and go to the city to inform Bharat about the Lord's arrival. Meanwhile, as soon as the word spread of the sighting of the plane and the arrival of a messenger of the Lord, celebrations broke out in the city. Every citizen rushed out to the outskirts of the city where the plane landed on the ground.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 5—to Doha no. 11.

The Lord met his brothers Bharat and Shatrughan, as well as his teacher and chief priest of the kingdom, sage Vashistha. Then he met each single citizen of the city individually, embraced each one of them and asked for his welfare—which was a wonderous and a miraculous feat because hundreds and thousands of them had assembled to greet the Lord. Then he entered the city and met his mothers and other members of the household. He paid special attention to Kaikeyi and paid his respects to her to assuage her feelings and tell her that he harbours no ill-will against her at all.

The Lord introduced all his companions who had accompanied him from Lanka to his brothers and other family members, to sage Vashistha as well as to all his ministers, emphasising his gratitude for them and telling them all that it was due to them that he had defeated his enemy and come back home alive. This noble gesture of thanks-giving and expression of gratitude for monkeys, bears and demons whom the Lord called his 'dear friends' was appreciated by one and all.

The city was decorated and lighted up. The gloom and despair of the past fourteen years was replaced with joy, merriment, exhilaration, jubilation and celebration in great abundance.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 12—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 20.

Lord Ram was crowned as the Sovereign of the vast empire of Ayodhya. All the great sages and seers of the time had assembled there to bless the Lord, as did the Gods including the creator Brahma, the concluder Shiva, and the Vedas, the scriptures, in a personified form, to pay their obeisance and reverence to the Lord.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Doha no. 31.

Lord Ram ruled the realm in an exemplarily righteous, proper and rightful manner in accordance to the principles of Dharma (the laws and regulations that govern right action, right deed, right behaviour, right thought and right life). There was peace, happiness and prosperity everywhere; no one suffered from diseases or want of any thing. All were given justice, treated alike, and all loved their Lord and led a righteous life like him.]

कथा समस्त भुसुंड बखानी । जो मैं तुम्ह सन कही भवानी ॥ ७ ॥
 सुनि सब राम कथा खगनाहा । कहत बचन मन परम उछाहा ॥ ८ ॥ kathā samasta bhusuṇḍa bakhānī. jō mair̥ tumha sana kahī bhavānī.

 suni saba rāma kathā khaganāhā. kahata bacana mana parama uchāhā. 4.

This is how Kaagbhusund narrated the whole sacred life-story of Lord Ram to Garud, the king of birds.

Then Lord Shiva told his consort Parvati, who was also known by the name of Bhavani, ‘Oh Bhavani! It was the same story that I have told you¹.’ (7)

When the king of birds Garud heard the entire story of Lord Ram, he was filled with exhilaration and felt very ecstatic. He said to the crow-saint Kaagbhusund as follows—(8)

[Note—¹The divine and sacred story of Lord Ram was first conceived in the heart of Lord Shiva, and when his consort Parvati approached him to narrate this story to her then Lord Shiva described it to her from the beginning to the end.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 11-12 that precede Doha no. 35, and later on at various other places such as (ii) Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 106—to Doha no. 111, and (iii) Baal Kand, Doha no. 119—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 121 where this fact is explicitly mentioned.]

-----**-----

Appendix

About the Author

Ajai Kumar Chhawchharia left home when he was approximately 29 years of age due to an inner call of his heart that told him to devote his life in the service of his beloved Lord God, Sri Ram. Worldly attractions did not enchant him at all. So, he didn't marry, and after his father's death he came and settled permanently in Ayodhya, the holy town in India associated with Lord Ram.

Presently he works as an honorary manager of a world famous Kanak Bhavan Temple at Ayodhya, and spends his time writing in English so that the world can access the wonderful nectar of metaphysical, spiritual and devotional philosophy that is contained in Indian scriptures for which they are so renowned.

His English Books published separately by a reputed publisher of India, the details of whom can be had by contacting the author on his email given below, include: (i) The series on '108 Upanishads' in five volumes having eighteen parts, (ii) Veda Vyas' 'Adhyatma Ramayan' in two parts, (iii) 'Devi Puran Ramayan', (iv) Valmiki's 'Adbhut Ramayan', and (v) 'Biography of Lord Ram' based on Tulsidas' books.

Genre of Writing: Spiritualism, Philosophy, Metaphysics, Religious, Devotional and Theological.

The author's Books are available for order online both in 'e-book' format and 'paper-back book' format at following websites—

- (a) www.amazon.com (in their 'kindle' + 'paper-back book' versions),
- (b) www.pothi.com (in 'paper-back book' + 'e-book' versions),
- (c) www.draft2digital.com (in 'e-book' version) through the following platforms: (i) Apple (ibooks), (ii) Barnes & Noble (nook), (iii) Kobo, (iv) Page Foundry, (v) Scribd, (vi) Tolino etc.:-

(A) List of Books that are currently available as mentioned above :-

(A-1) (1) The Chariot of God: Dharma Rath; (2) OM and Naad; (3) YOGA—Its Practice and Philosophy according to the Upanishads; (4) Ram Geeta; (5) The Revelation of Creation—as envisioned in the Upanishads; (6) The Pentagon of Creation: As Expounded in the Upanishads; (7) The Triumvirate of Creation; (8) Maya: The Whirlpool of Delusions in Creation; (9) Surdas-Ram Charitawali; (10-a) The legend of Lord Shiva: Book 1 'Lord Shiva's marriage with Parvati'; (10-b) Book 2 'Lord Shiva's Sacred Hymns'; (10-c) Book 3 'Shiva's different names & their significance, Shiva Puran, Upanishads'; (11) the Mahavakyas of the Upanishads; (13) Lord Ram's marriage with Sita (based on Tulsidas' books "Ram Charit Manas", "Janki Mangal", "Ram Lala Nahachu" & "Geetawali", and sage Veda Vyas' book "Adhyatma Ramayan"; (14) "Anthology of Sacred Hymns, Stotras & Mantras of Lord Ram"; (15) "Vairagya Shatkam" of king-sage Bhartrihari; (16) An Anthology of the Sanyas Upanishads-Parts 1 and 2; (17) "Kaag-Bhusund Ramayan" or the "Aadi Ramayan” based on Tulsidas’ Ram Charit Manas; (18) The Legendary Glory of Hanuman; (19) “Narad Bhakti Sutra”—Aphorisms for Devotion for God and the Principles of Love for the Lord; (20) “Shandilya Bhakti Sutra”—Aphorisms for Devotion for God and the Principles of Love for the Lord according to the illustrious sage Shandilya; (21) “Bhakti Sutra Mala”—A Garland of Spiritual Wisdom in the form of an Anthology of Aphorisms pertaining to Bhakti or devotion, love and affection for Lord God; (22) Glory of Lord Ram’s Holy Name, Sacred Mantras, Stotras & Hymns; (23) Saints and Non-Saints: Their Distinguishing Characters and Qualities; (24) A True Guru (Qualities, Importance and Need of a True Teacher, Preceptor, Guide and Advisor); (25) “Sundar Kand” of Ram Charit Manas; (26) The Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka—Told in Slow Motion (based on, and will have the full relevant Text of, Ram Charit Manas, Adhyatma Ramayan, Anand Ramayan, Geetawali Ramayan, and Kavitalawali Ramayan); (27) The Great Ancient Sages, Seers, Saints and Enlightened Kings of India; (28) The Metaphor of the Hansa in the Upanishads: The symbolism of a Grand Swan used to explain the wisdom of spiritual and metaphysical principles by the Upanishads.

(A-2) Goswami Tulsidas Series: (1) Book 1- ‘Dohawali’; (2) Book 2- ‘Parvati Mangal’; (3) Book 3- ‘Kavitalawali’; (4) Book 4- ‘Janki Mangal’; (5) Book 5- ‘Ram Lala Nahachu’; (6) Book 6- ‘Geetawali Ramayan’; (7) Book 7- ‘Vairagya Sandipani’; (8) Book 8- ‘Vinai Patrika’; (9) ‘Barvai Ramayan’.

(B) The following Books have been published in ‘Printed-Book Deluxe Editions’ by a reputed Indian Publisher (details given below) :

1. Detailed English renderings, with explanatory notes and commentaries of the 108 Upanishads classified according to the Vedic tradition = 6 volumes; 18 parts. [Vol. 1=Rig Veda Upanishads; Vol. 2= Sam Veda Upanishads; Vol. 3= Shukla Yajur Veda Upanishads; Vol. 4= Krishna Yajur Veda Upanishads; Vol. 5= Atharva Veda Upanishads; Vol. 6= Vedanta Concepts explained with specific references to the relevant Upanishads.]

2. English rendering of Adbhut Ramayan by sage Valmiki.

3. English rendering of Adhyatma Ramayan by sage Veda Vyas.

4. English rendering of Devi Puran’s Ramayan by sage Veda Vyas.

5. A Divine Biography of Lord Ram & Glory of Lord’s Holy Name.

Name and contact of Publisher of above Printed Books listed under (C):

Chaukhamba Publishing House, Delhi. [Sri Neeraj Gupta.]

Email < chaukhambapublishinghouse@gmail.com >

< chaukhamba_neerj@yahoo.com >

Postal Address: 4697/2, Street no. 21-A, (HDFC Bank wali Gali), Ansari Road, Darayaganj, Delhi—110002.

Phone: Mobile (Neeraj Gupta)—+919811133683

Office: 011-23286537; 011-32996391

(C) Book under preparation:

A full-blown English rendering of Tulsidas’ epic ‘Ram Charit Manas’ is under preparation. It will be a unique Book and an elaborate one, as it would run into many thousands of pages that would endeavour to explain each single verse of Ram Charit Manas in detail from different perspectives, with the aid of explanatory notes and references.

Contact details of Ajai Kumar Chhawchharia—

Postal address:-36-A, Rajghat Colony, Parikrama Marg, P.O.—Ayodhya, Pin—224123, Distt. Ayodhya (Faizabad), U.P. India.

Phone:—(India) +919451290400; +919935613060.

Website: < www.tulsidas-ram-books.weebly.com >

Email of Author: (i) < ajaichhawchharia@gmail.com >

(ii) < ajaikumarbooks@gmail.com >

Archive.org: < https://archive.org/details/@ajai_kumar_chhawchharia >

Facebook ID < www.facebook.com/ajaikumarchhawchharia8 >

Linkedin: < www.linkedin.com/AjaiKumarChhawchharia >

Goodreads:

https://www.goodreads.com/author/show/991710.Ajai_Kumar_Chhawchharia